"Shall shame the promise of this bold design,
Come weal, come woe. One boon alone I prize
Beyond all gifts. A mother dear is mine,
A mother, sprung from Priam's ancient line.
Troy nor the walls of King Acestes e'er
Stayed her from following, when I crossed the brine.
Her of this risk — whate'er the risk I dare — 316
Weetless, I left behind, nor breathed a parting prayer.

XXXVII . "Night bear me witness; by thy hand I swear,
I cannot bear a parent's tears. But O!
Be thou her solace, comfort her despair;
This hope permit, and bolder will I go,
To face all hazards and confront the foe."
Grief smote the Dardans, and the tears ran down,
And young Iulus, pierced with kindred woe,
Outweeps them all; in filial love thus shown, 325
Touched to the heart, he traced the likeness of his own.

XXXVIII . "All, all," he cries, "that such a deed can claim,
I promise for thy guerdon. Mine shall be Thy mother, — mine, Creusa save in name;
Nor small her praise to bear a son like thee.
Howe'er shall Fortune the event decree,
I swear — so swore my father — by my head,
What gifts I pledge, if thou return, to thee,
These, if thou fall, thy mother in thy stead, 334
These shall thy kinsmen keep, the heirlooms of the dead."

XXXIX . Weeping, the gilded falchion he untied,

Lycaon's work, with sheath of ivory fair.
To Nisus Mnestheus gave a lion's hide,
His helmet changed Aletes. Forth they fare,
And round them to the gates, with vows and prayer,
The band of chiefs their parting steps attend;
And, manlier than his years, Iulus fair
Full many a message to his sire would send. 343
Vain wish! his fruitless words the scattering breezes rend.

XL . So past the trench, upon the shadowy plain Forth issuing, to the foemen's tents they creep,
Fatal to many, ere the camp they gain.
Warriors they see, who drank the wine-bowl deep,
Beside their tilted chariots stretched in sleep,
And reins, and wheels and wine-jars tost away,
And arms and men in many a mingled heap.
Then Nisus: "Up, Euryalus, and slay! 352
Haste, for the hour is ripe, and yonder lies the way.

XLI . "Watch thou, lest hand be lifted in the rear.
There, flanked with swaths of corpses, will I reap
Thy pathway; broad shall be the lane and clear."
So saying, he checks his voice, and, aiming steep, Drives at proud Rhamnes. On a piled-up heap
Of carpets lay the warrior, and his breast
Heaved with hard breathing and the sounds of sleep:
Augur and king, whom Turnus loved the best. 361
Not all his augur's craft could now his doom arrest.

XLII . Three slaves beside him, lying heedless here
Amidst their arms, he numbers with the slain,
Then Remus' page, and Remus' charioteer,
Caught by their steeds. The weapon, urged amain, Swoops down, and cleaves their drooping necks in twain.
Their master's head he severs with a blow,
And leaves the trunk, still heaving, on the plain,
And o'er the cushions and the ground below, 370

Wet with the warm, black gore, the spouting streams outflow.

XLIII . Lamus and Lamyras he slew outright,
And fair Serranus, as asleep he lay,
Tamed by the God; for long and late that night
The youth had gamed. Ah! happier, had his play
Outlived the night, and lasted till the day.
Like some starved lion, that on the teeming fold
Springs, mad with hunger, and the feeble prey,
All mute with terror, in his clutch doth hold, 379
And rends with bloody mouth, and riots uncontrolled,

XLIV . Such havoc wrought Euryalus, so flamed
His fury. Fadus and Herbesus died,
And Abaris, and many a wight unnamed,
Caught unaware. But Rhoetus woke, and tried
In fear behind a massive bowl to hide.
Full in the breast, or e'er the wretch upstood,
The shining sword-blade to the hilt he plied,
Then drew it back death-laden. Wine and blood 388
Gush out, the dying lips disgorge the crimson flood.

XLV . Thence, burning, to Messapus' camp he speeds,
Where faint the watch-fires flicker far away,
And tethered on the herbage graze the steeds,
When briefly thus speaks Nisus, fain to stay
The lust of battle and mad thirst to slay:
"Cease we; the light, our enemy, is near.
Vengeance is glutted; we have hewn our way."
Bowls, solid silver armour here and there 397
They leave behind untouched, and arras rich and rare.

XLVI . The arms and belt of Rhamnes, bossed with gold,
Which Cædicus, his friendship to attest,
Sent to Tiburtine Remulus of old,
Whose grandson took it, as a last bequest (Rutulians thence these spoils of war possessed) —

These trophies seized Euryalus, and braced
The useless trappings on his valorous breast,
And on his head Messapus' helm he placed, 406
Light and with graceful plumes; and from the camp they haste.

XLVII . Meanwhile from out Laurentum rides a train
With news of Turnus, while the main array
With marshalled ranks is lingering on the plain,
Three hundred shieldsmen Volscens' lead obey.
Now to the ramparts they have found their way,
When lo, to leftward, hurrying from their raid,
They mark the youths amid the twilight grey.
His glittering helm Euryalus betrayed, 415
That flashed the moonbeams back, and pierced the glimmering shade.

XLVIII . Nor passed the sight unheeded. Shrill and loud
"Stand, who are ye in armour dight, and why?
What make ye there?" cries Volscens from the crowd,
"And whither wend ye?" Naught the youths reply,
But swiftly to the bordering forest fly,
And trust to darkness. Then around each way
The horsemen ride, all outlet to deny;
Circling, like huntsmen, closely as they may, 424
They watch the well-known turns, and wait the expected prey.

XLIX . Shagg'd with rough brakes and sable ilex, spread
The wood, and, glimmering in the twilight grey,
Through broken tracks a narrow pathway led.
The shadowy boughs, the cumbrous spoils delay
Euryalus, and fear mistakes the way.
Nisus, unheeding, through the foemen flies,
And gains the place, — called Alba now — where lay
Latinus' pastures; then with back-turned eyes 433
Stands still, and seeks in vain his absent friend, and cries:

L . "Where, in what quarter, have I left thee? Where,

Euryalus, shall I follow thee? What clue
Shall trace the mazes of this silvan snare,
The tangled path unravelling?" Back he flew,
Picking his footsteps with observant view,
And roamed the silent brushwood. Steeds he hears,
The noise, the signs of foemen who pursue.
A moment more, and, bursting on his ears, 442
There came a shout, and lo, Euryalus appears.

LI . Him, in false ways, amid the darkness, ta'en,
The gathering band with sudden rush o'erbear.
Poor Nisus sees him struggling, but in vain.
What should he do? By force of arms how dare
His friend to rescue? Shall he face them there,
And rush upon the foemen's swords, to die,
And welcome wounds that win a death so fair?
His spear he poises, and with upturned eye 451
And stalwart arm drawn back, invokes the Moon on high:

LII . "Come thou, Latonia, succour my distress!
Guardian of groves, bright glory of the sky,
If e'er with offerings for his son's success
My sire thine altars hath adorned, or I
Enriched them from the chase, and hung on high
Spoils in thy deep-domed temple, or arrayed
Thy roof with plunder; make this troop to fly,
And guide my weapons through the air." He prayed, 460
And, winged with strength, the steel went whistling through the shade.

LIII . It struck the shield of Sulmo at his side;
There broke the shaft and splintered. Down he rolled Pierced through the midriff, and his life's warm tide
Poured from his bosom, and the long sobs told
Its heavings, ere the stiffening limbs grew cold.
All look around and tremble, when again
The youth another javelin, waxing bold,

Aimed from his ear-tip. Through the temples twain 469
Of Tagus whizzed the steel, and warmed within the brain.

LIV . Fierce Volscens raves with anger, nor espies
The wielder of the weapon, nor which way
To rush, aflame with fury. “Thou,” he cries,
“Thy blood meanwhile the penalty shall pay
For both,” and with his falchion bared to slay Springs at Euryalus. Then, wild with fear,
Poor Nisus shouts, in frenzy of dismay,
Nor longer in the dark can hide, nor bear 478
A pang of grief so keen — to lose a friend so dear,

LV . “Me — me, behold the doer! mine the deed!
Kill me, Rutulians. By this hand they fell.
He could not — durst not. By the skies I plead,
By yon bright stars, that witnessed what befell,
He only loved his hapless friend too well.”
Vain was his prayer; the weapon, urged amain,
Pierced through his ribs and snowy breast. Out swell
Dark streams of gore his lovely limbs to stain; 487
The sinking neck weighs o’er the shoulders of the slain.

LVI . So doth the purple floweret, dying, droop,
Smit by the ploughshare. So the poppy frail
On stricken stalk its languid head doth stoop,
And bows o’erladen with the drenching hail.
But onward now, through thickest ranks of mail,
Rushed Nisus. Volscens only will he slay;
He waits for none but Volscens. They assail
From right and left, and crowd his steps to stay. 496
He whirls his lightning brand, and presses to his prey.

LVII . Ere long he meets him clamouring, and down
His throat he drives the griding sword amain,
And takes his life, ere laying down his own.
Then, pierced he sinks upon his comrade slain,

And death's long slumber puts an end to pain.
O happy pair! if aught my verse ensure,
No length of time shall make your memory wane,
While, throned upon the Capitol secure, 505
The Æneian house shall reign, and Roman rule endure.

LVIII . Weeping, the victors took the spoils and prey,
And back dead Volscens to their camp they bore.
Nor less the wailing in the camp that day,
Brave Rhamnes found, and many a captive more,
Numa, Serranus, weltering in their gore.
Thick round the dead and dying, where the plain
Reeks freshly with the frothing blood, they pour.
Sadly they know Messapus' spoils again, 514
The trappings saved with sweat, the helmet of the slain.

LIX . Now, rising from Tithonus' saffron couch,
The Goddess of the dawn with orient ray
Sprinkled the earth, and 'neath the wakening touch
Of sunlight, all things stand revealed to-day.
Turnus himself, accoutred for the fray,
Wakes up his warriors with the morning light.
At once each captain marshals in array
His company, in brazen arms bedight, 523
And rumours whet their rage, and prick them to the fight.

LX . Nay more, aloft upon the javelin's end,
With shouts they bear — a miserable sight! —
The heads, the heads of Nisus and his friend.
On the walls' left — the river flanked their right —
The sturdy Trojans stand arrayed for fight,
And line the trenches and each lofty tower,
Sad, while the foemen, clamorous with delight,
March onward, with the heroes' heads before, 532
Well known — alas! too well — and dropping loathly gore.

LXI . Now Fame, winged herald, through the wildered town

Swift to Euryalus' mother speeds her way.
Life's heat forsakes her; from her hand drops down
The shuttle, and the task-work rolls away.
Forth with a shriek, like women in dismay,
Rending her hair, in frantic haste she flies,
And seeks the ramparts and the war's array,
Heedless of darts and dangers and surprise, 541
Heedless of armed men, and fills the heaven with cries.

LXII . "Thou — is it thou, Euryalus, my own?
Thou, the late solace of my age? Ah, why
So cruel? Could'st thou leave me here alone,
Nor let thy mother bid a last good-bye?
Now left a prey on Latin soil to lie
Of dogs and birds, nor I, thy mother, there
To wash thy wounds, and close thy lightless eye,
And shroud thee in the robe I wrought so fair, 550
Fain with the busy loom to soothe an old wife's care!

LXIII . "Where shall I follow thee? Thy corpse defiled,
Thy mangled limbs — where are they? Woe is me!
Is this then all of what was once my child?
Was it for this I roamed the land and sea?
Pierce me, Rutulians; hurl your darts at me,
Me first, if ye a mother's love can know.
Great Sire of Heaven, have pity! set me free.
Hurl with thy bolt to Tartarus below 559
This hateful head, that longs to quit a world of woe!"

LXIV . So wails the mother, weeping and undone,
And sorrow smites each warrior, as he hears,
Each groaning, as a father for his son.
Grief runs, like wildfire, through the Trojan peers,
And numbs their courage, and augments their fears.
Then, fain the spreading sorrow to allay,
Ilioneus and Iulus, bathed in tears
Call Actor and Idæus; gently they 568

The aged dame lift up, and to her home convey.

LXV . Now terribly the brazen trumpet pealed
Its summons, and the war-shout rent the air.
On press the Volscians, locking shield to shield,
And fill the trenches, and the breastwork tear.
These plant their ladders for assault, where'er
A gap, just glimmering, shows the line less dense.
Vain hope! the Teucrians with their darts are there.
Stout poles they ply, and thrust them from the fence, 577
Trained by a lingering siege, and tutored to defence.

LXVI . Stones, too, they roll, to crush the serried shields:
Blithely the warriors bear the storm below,
Yet not for long; for, see, the penthouse yields.
Down on the midst, where thickest press the foe,
The Teucrians, rolling, with a crash let go
A ponderous mass, that opens to the light
The jointed shields, and lays the warriors low.
Nor care they longer in the dark to fight, 586
But vie with distant darts to sweep the rampart's height.

LXVII . Pine-stock in hand, Mezentius hurls the flame;
There, fierce Messapus rends the palisade, —
Tamer of steeds, from Neptune's loins he came, —
And shouts aloud for ladders to invade.
Aid me, Calliope; ye Muses, aid
To sing of Turnus and his deeds that day,
The deaths he wrought, the havoc that he made,
And whom each warrior singled for his prey; 595
Roll back the war's great scroll, the mighty leaves display.

LXVIII . Built high, with lofty gangways, stood a tower,
Fit post of vantage, which the Latins vied,
With utmost effort and with all their power,
To capture and destroy, while armed inside
With stones, the Trojans through the loopholes plied

Their missiles. Turnus, 'mid the foremost, cast
A blazing brand, and, fastening to the side,
Up went the flame; from floor to floor it passed, 604
Clung to and licked the posts, and maddened with the blast.

LXIX . Within 'twas hurrying and tumultuous fright,
As, crowding backward, they retreat before
The advancing flames, and vainly long for flight.
Lo! toppling suddenly, the tower went o'er,
And shook the wide air with reverberant roar.
Half-dead, the huge mass following amain,
They come to earth, stabbed by the darts they bore,
Or pierced by splinters through the breast. Scarce twain 613
Escape — Helenor one, and Lycus — from the slain.

LXX . Of these Helenor, — whom to Lydia's lord
By stealth his slave, the fair Licymnia, bore,
And sent to Ilium, where a simple sword
And plain, white shield, yet unrenowned, he wore, —
He, when he sees, around him and before,
The Latin hosts, as when in fierce disdain,
Hemmed round by huntsmen, in his rage the boar
O'erleaps the spears, so, where the thickest rain 622
The foemen's darts, springs forth Helenor to be slain.

LXXI . But fleeter far, young Lycus hastes to slip Through swords, through foes, and gains the walls, and tries
To climb them, and a comrade's hand to grip.
With foot and spear behind him, as he flies,
Comes Turnus. Scornfully the victor cries,
"Mad fool! to fly, whom I have doomed to fall;
Think'st thou to baffle Turnus of his prize?"
Therewith he grasps him hanging, and withal 631
Down with his victim drags huge fragments of the wall.

LXXII . E'en so some snowy swan, or timorous hare Jove's armour-bearer, swooping from the sky,

Grips in his talons, and aloft doth bear.
So, where apart the folded weanlings lie,
Swift at some lamb the warrior-wolf doth fly,
And leaves the mother, bleating in her woe.
Loud rings the noise of battle. With a cry
The foe press on; these fill the trench below, 640
These to the topmost towers the blazing firebrands throw.

LXXIII . Ilioneus with a rock's huge fragment quelled Lucetius, creeping to the gate below
With fire. Asylas Corynæus felled, Liger Emathion, one skilled to throw
The flying dart, one famous with the bow.
Cænus — brief triumph! — made Ortygius fall,
With Dioxippus, Turnus lays him low,
Then Itys, Clonius, Promolus withal, 649
Sagaris, and Idas last, the warder of the wall.

LXXIV . There, slain by Capys, poor Privernus lay,
Grazed by Themilla's javelin; with a start
The madman flung his trusty shield away,
And clapped his left hand to the wounded part,
Fain, as he thought, to ease him of the smart.
Thereat, a light-winged arrow, unespied,
Whirred on the wind. It missed the warrior's heart,
But pierced his hand, and pinned it to his side, 658
And, entering, clave the lung, and with a gasp he died.

LXXV . With broidered scarf of Spanish crimson, stood
A comely youth, young Arcens was his name,
Sent by his father, from Symæthus' flood,
And nurtured in his mother's grove, he came,
Where, rich and kind, Palicus' altars flame.
His lance laid by, thrice whirling round his head
The whistling thong, Mezentius took his aim.
Clean through his temples hissed the molten lead, 667
And prostrate in the dust, the gallant youth lay dead.

LXXVI . Then first, 'tis said, in war Ascanius drew
His bow, wherewith in boyish days he plied
The flying game. His hand Numanus slew, Called Remulus, to Turnus late allied,
For Turnus' youngest sister was his bride.
He, puffed with new-won royalty and proud,
Stalked in the forefront of the fight, and cried
With random clamour and big words and loud, 676
Fain by his noise to show his grandeur to the crowd.

LXXVII . “Think ye no shame, poor cowards, thus again
Behind your sheltering battlements to stand,
Twice-captured Phrygians! and to plant in vain
These walls, to shield you from the foemen's hand?
Lo, these the varlets who our wives demand!
What God, what madness blinded you, that e'er
Ye thought to venture to Italia's land?
No wily-worded Ithacan is near; 685
Far other foes than he or Atreus' sons are here.

LXXVIII . “Our babes are hardened in the frost and flood,
Strong is the stock and sturdy whence we came.
Our boys from morn till evening scour the wood,
Their joy is hunting, and the steed to tame,
To bend the bow, the flying shaft to aim.
Patient of toil, and used to scanty cheer,
Our youths with rakes the stubborn glebe reclaim,
Or storm the town. Through life we grasp the spear. 694
In war it strikes the foe, in peace it goads the steer.

LXXIX . “Age cannot stale, nor creeping years impair Stout hearts as ours, nor make our strength decay.
Our hoary heads the heavy helmet bear.
Our joy is in the foray, day by day
To reap fresh plunder, and to live by prey.
Ye love to dance, and dally with the fair,

In saffron robes with purple flounces gay.
Your toil is ease, and indolence your care, 703
And tunics hung with sleeves, and ribboned coifs ye wear.

LXXX . “Go Phrygian women, for ye are not men!
Hence, to your Dindymus, and roam her heights
With Corybantian eunuchs! Get ye, then,
And hear the flute, harsh-grating, that invites
With twy-mouthed music to her lewd delights,
Where boxen pipe and timbrel from afar
Shriek forth the summons to her sacred rites.
Put by the sword, poor dotards as ye are, 712
Leave arms to men, like us, nor meddle with the war.”

LXXXI . Such taunts Ascanius brooked not. Stung with pride,
A shaft he fitted to the horse-hair twine,
And, turning, stood with outstretched arms, and cried:
“Bless, Jove omnipotent, this bold design:
Aid me, and yearly offerings shall be thine.
A milk-white steer — I bind me to the vow —
Myself will lead, the choicest, to thy shrine,
Tall as his mother, and with gilded brow, 721
And butting horns, and hoofs, that spurn the sand e’en now.”

LXXXII . Jove heard, and leftward, where the sky was blue, Thundered aloud. At once the fateful bow
Twanged; with a whirr the fateful arrow flew,
And pierced the head of Remulus. “Now go,
And teach thy proud tongue to insult a foe,
And scoff at Trojan valour. This reply
Twice-captured Phrygians to thy taunts bestow.”
Ascanius spoke; the Teucrians with a cry, 730
Press on, their joyous hearts uplifting to the sky.

LXXXIII . Meanwhile, Apollo from his cloudy car
The Ausonian host, and leaguered town describes,
And calls the youthful conqueror from afar:

“Hail to thy maiden prowess; yonder lies
Thy path, brave boy, to glory and the skies.
O sons of Gods, and sire of Gods to be,
All wars shall cease beneath the race to rise
From great Assaracus. Nor thine, nor thee 739 Shall narrow Troy contain; so stands the Fate’s decree.”

LXXXIV . He spake, and through the breathing air shot down,
And sought Ascanius, now a god no more,
But shaped like aged Butes, whilom known
The servant of the Dardan king, who bore
Anchises’ shield, and waited at his door,
Then left to guard Ascanius. Such in view Apollo seemed; such clanging arms he wore;
Such were his hoary tresses, voice, and hue, 748
And these his words, as near the fiery youth he drew:

LXXXV . “Enough, to live, and see Numanus bleed,
Child of Æneas! This, thy valour’s due,
Great Phoebus grants, nor stints a rival’s meed.
Now cease.” — He spake, and vanished from their view.
His arms divine the Dardan chieftains knew,
And heard the quiver rattle in his flight.
So, warned by Phoebus’ presence, back they drew
The fiery youth, then plunged into the fight. 757
Death seems a welcome risk, and danger a delight.

LXXXVI . Shouts fill the walls and outworks; casque and shield
Clash; bows are bent, and javelins hurled amain:
Fierce grows the fight, and weapons strew the field.
So fierce what time the Kid-star brings the rain,
The storm, from westward rising, beats the plain:
So thick with hail, the clouds, asunder riven,
Pour down a deluge on the darkened main,
When Jove, upon his dreaded south-wind driven 766
Stirs up the watery storm, and rends the clouds of heaven.

LXXXVII . Pandarus and Bitias, whom in Ida's grove
The nymph Iæra to Alcanor bare,
Tall as their mountains or the pines of Jove,
Fling back the gate committed to their care,
And bid the foemen enter, if they dare.
With waving plumes, and armed from top to toe,
In front, beside the gateway, stand the pair,
Tall as twin oaks, with nodding crests, that grow 775
Where Athesis' sweet stream or Padus' waters flow.

LXXXVIII . Up rush the foemen to the open gate, Quercens, Aquicolus, in armour bright,
Brave Hæmon, Tmarus, eager and elate,
In troops they come, in troops they turn in flight,
Or fall upon the threshold, slain outright.
Now fiercer swells the discord, louder grows
The noise of strife, as, hastening to unite,
The sons of Troy their banded ranks oppose, 784
And battle hand to hand and, sallying, charge the foes.

LXXXIX . Elsewhere to Turnus, as he raged, and marred
The ranks, came tidings of the foe, elate
With new-wrought carnage, and the gates unbarred.
Forth from his work he rushes, grim with hate,
To seek the brothers, and the Dardan gate.
Here brave Antiphates, the first in view
(The bastard offspring of Sarpedon great, Borne by a Theban) with his dart he slew; 793
Swift through the yielding air the Italian cornel flew.

XC . Down through his throat into the chest it passed.
Out from the dark pit gushed a foaming tide;
The cold steel, warming in the lung, stood fast.
Then Merops, Erymas, Aphidnus died,
And Bitias, fierce with flaming eyes of pride.
No dart for him; no dart his life had ta'en.
A spear phalaric, thundering, pierced his side.

Nor bulls' tough hides, nor corselet's twisted chain, 802
Twice linked with golden scales the monstrous blow sustain.

XCI . Prone falls the giant in a heap. Earth groans,
His shield above him thunders. Such the roar,
When falls the solid pile of quarried stones,
Sunk in the sea off Baïæ's echoing shore;
So vast the ruin, when the waves close o'er,
And the black sands mount upward, as the block,
Dashed headlong, settles on the deep-sea floor,
And Prochyta and Arime's steep rock, 811
Piled o'er Typhoeus, quake and tremble with the shock.

XCII . Now Mars armipotent the Latins lends
Fresh heart and strength, but Fear and black Dismay
And Flight upon the Teucrian troops he sends.
From right and left they hurry to the fray,
And o'er each spirit comes the War-God's sway.
But when brave Pandarus saw his brother's fate,
And marked the swerving fortune of the day,
He set his broad-built shoulders to the gate; 820
The groaning hinges yield, and backward rolls the weight.

XCIII . Full many a friend without the camp he leaves,
Sore straitened in the combat; these, the rest,
Saved like himself, he rescues and receives.
Madman! who, blind to Turnus, as he pressed
Among them, made the dreaded foe his guest.
Fierce as a tiger in the fold, he preys.
Loud ring his arms; his helmet's blood-red crest
Waves wide; strange terrors from his eyes outblaze, 829
And on his dazzling shield the living lightning plays.

XCIV . That hated form, those giant limbs too plain
The Trojans see, and stand aghast with fear.
Then, fired with fury for his brother slain,
Forth leaping, shouts huge Pandarus with a jeer,

“No Queen Amata’s bridal halls are here;
No Ardea this; around the camps the foe.
No flight for thee.” He, smiling, calm of cheer, “Come, if thou durst; full soon shall Priam know 838
Thou too hast found a new Achilles to thy woe.”

XCV . He spake. Then Pandarus a javelin threw,
Cased in its bark, with hardened knots and dried.
The breezes caught the missile as it flew;
Saturnian Juno turned the point aside,
And fixed it in the gate. “Ha! bravely tried!
Not so this dart shalt thou escape; not so Send I the weapon and the wound.” He cried,
And, sword in hand, uprising to the blow, 847
Between the temples clave the forehead of his foe.

XCVI . The beardless cheeks, so fearful was the gash, Gape wide. Aloud his clanging arms resound.
Earth groans beneath, as prone, amid the splash
Of blood and brains, he sprawls upon the ground,
And right and left hangs, severed by the wound,
His dying head. In terror, strewn afar,
The Trojans fly. Then, then had Turnus found
Time and the thought to burst the town-gate’s bar, 856
That day had seen the last of Trojans and the war.

XCVII . But lust of death, and vengeance unappeased Urged on the conqueror. Phalaris he slew,
Then hamstrung Gyges, and their javelins seized,
And hurled them at their comrades, as they flew,
For Juno nerved and strengthened him anew.
Here Halys fell, and hardy Phlegeus there,
Pierced through his shield. Alcander down he threw,
Prytanis, Noëmon, Halius unaware, 865
As on the walls they stood, and roused the battle’s blare.

XCVIII . Slain, too, was Lynceus, as he ran for aid,

Cheering his friends. Back-handed, with fierce sway,
His right knee bent, he swung the sweeping blade,
And head and helmet tumbled far away.
Fell Clytius, Amycus expert to slay
The wood-deer, and the venom'd barb to wing,
And Creteus, too, who loved the minstrel's lay,
The Muses' friend, whose joy it was to sing 874
Of steeds, and arms and men, and wake the lyre's sweet string.

XCIX . Then meet at length, their kinsmen's slaughter known,
Brave Mnestheus, and Serestus fierce, and see
Their friends in flight, and foemen in the town.
Then Mnestheus cries: "Friends, whither would ye flee?
What other walls, what further town have we?
Shame on the thought, shall then a single foe,
One man alone, O townsmen! ay, and he Cooped thus within your ramparts, work such woe, 883
Such deaths — and unavenged? and lay your choicest low?

C . "Is yours no pity, sluggard souls? no shame
For Troy's old gods, and for your native land,
And for the great Æneas, and his name?"
Fired by his words, they gather heart, and stand,
Shoulder to shoulder, rallying in a band.
Backward, but slowly he retreats, too proud
To turn, and seeks the ramparts hard at hand,
Girt by the stream; while, clamouring aloud, 892
Fiercer the foe press on, and larger grows the crowd.

CI . As when an angry lion, held at bay,
And pressed with galling javelins, half in fright,
But grim and glaring, step by step gives way,
Too wroth to turn, too valorous for flight,
And fain, but impotent, to wreak his spite
Against his armed assailants; even so,
Slowly and wavering, Turnus quits the fight,
Boiling with rage; yet twice he charged the foe, 901

Twice round the walls in rout they fled before his blow.

CII . But now new hosts come swarming from the town,
Nor Juno dares his failing force to stay,
For Jove in wrath sent heavenly Iris down,
Stern threats to bear, should Turnus disobey,
And longer in the Trojan camp delay.
No more his shield, nor strength of hand avail
To ward the storm; so thick the javelins play.
Loud rings his helmet with the driving hail; 910
Rent with the volleyed stones, the solid brass-plates fail.

CIII . Reft are his plumes, and shattered by the blows
The shield-boss. Faster still the darts they pour,
And thundering Mnestheus towers amid his foes.
Trembling with pain, exhausted, sick, and sore,
He gasps for breath. Sweat streams from every pore,
And, black with dust, from all his limbs descends.
Headlong, at length, he plunges from the shore,
Clad all in arms. The yellow river bends, 919
And bears him, cleansed from blood, triumphant to his friends.

BOOK TEN

ARGUMENT

The gods meet in council. Venus pleads for the Trojans, Juno for the Latins. Jupiter as a compromise leaves the arbitrament to Fate (1-153). The siege of the Trojan camp continues. Æneas meanwhile is sailing with his Arcadian and Tuscan allies down the Tiber (154-207). Catalogue of the helpers of Æneas, who is presently warned by the nymphs in what peril Ascanius stands: comes in sight of the camp and with difficulty lands his men (208-369). A hard-fought battle by the river follows, of which Pallas and Lausus are the heroes (370-531). Pallas is killed by Turnus in single combat (532-603). Æneas in revenge gives no quarter, but slays and slays, until Juno, warned by Jupiter that if she would save Turnus even for a time she must act at once, goes down into the battle and fashions in the form of Æneas a phantom, which flees before Turnus and lures him into a ship, by which he is miraculously carried away to his father's city (604-838). Mezentius takes up the command, but after performing prodigies of valour is wounded by Æneas (839-954). Mezentius withdraws, and his son Lausus is killed while covering his retreat. Thereupon Mezentius gets to horse and rides back to die in a vain endeavour to avenge his son. Æneas exults over Mezentius (955-1089).

I. Meanwhile, at bidding of almighty Jove,
His palace, as Olympus' gates unfold,
Stands open. To his starry halls above
The Sire of Gods and men, whose eyes behold
The wide-wayed earth, the Dardans' leaguered hold,
And Latium's peoples, from his throne of state
Convokes the council. Ranged on seats of gold
Around the halls, in silence they await. 1
Himself, in measured speech, begins the grand debate.

II . “Heaven’s great inhabitants, what change hath brewed
Rebellious thoughts, my purpose thus to mar?
‘Twixt Troy and Italy I banned the feud;
My nod forbade it. Whence this impious jar?
What fear hath stirred them to provoke the war?
Fate in due course shall bring the destined hour, —
Foredate it not — when Carthage from afar
Her barbarous hordes through riven Alps shall pour, 10
To storm the towers of Rome, to ravage and devour.

III . “Then may ye rend, and ravage and destroy,
Then may ye glut your vengeance. Now forbear,
And plight this peaceful covenant with joy.”
Thus Jove; but Venus of the golden hair,
Less brief, made answer: “Lord of earth and air!
O Father! Power eternal! whom beside
We know none other, to approach with prayer,
See the Rutulians, how they swell with pride; 19
See Turnus, puffed with triumph, borne upon the tide.

IV . “Their very walls the Teucrians shield no more.
Within the gates, amid the mounds the fray
Is raging, and the trenches float with gore,
While, ignorant, Æneas is away.
Is theirs no rest from leaguer — not a day?
Again a threatening enemy hangs o’er
A new-born Troy! New foemen in array Swarm from Ætolian Arpi, and once more 28
A son of Tydeus comes, as dreadful as before.

V . “Ay, wounds are waiting for thine offspring still,
And mortal arms must vex her. List to me:
If maugre thee, and careless of thy will,
The Trojans sought Italia, let them be,
Nor aid them; let their folly reap its fee.
But if, oft called by many a warning sign

From Heaven and Hell, they followed thy decree,
Who then shall tamper with the doom divine, 37
Or dare to forge new Fates, or alter words of thine?

VI . “Why tell of grievances in days forepast,
The vessels burnt on Eryx’ distant shore,
The tempest’s monarch, and the raging blast
Stirred in Æolia, and the winds’ uproar,
And Iris, heaven-sent messenger? Nay more,
From Hell’s dark depths she summons her allies,
The ghosts of Hades, overlooked before.
Through Latin towns, sent sudden from the skies, 46
Alecto wings her flight, and riots as she flies.

VII . “I reckon not, I, of empire; once, indeed,
While fortune smiled, I hoped for it; but now
Theirs, whom thou chooseth, be the victor’s meed.
But if no land thy ruthless spouse allow
To Teucrian outcasts, hearken to me now:
O Father! by the latest hour of Troy,
By Ilion’s smoking ruins, deign to show
Thy pity for Ascanius; spare my boy; 55
Safe let him cease from arms, my darling and my joy.

VIII . “Let brave Æneas follow, as he may,
Where future leads, and wander on the brine.
Him shield, and let me snatch him from the fray.
Paphos, Cythera, Amathus are mine,
And on Idalium is my home and shrine:
There let him live, forgetful of renown,
And, deaf to fame, these warlike weeds resign;
Then let fierce Carthage press Ausonia down, 64
For he and his no more shall vex the Tyrian town.

IX . “Ah, what availed to ‘scape the fight and flame,
And drain all dangers of the land and main,
If Teucrians seek on Latin soil to frame

Troy's towers anew? Far better to remain
There, on their country's ashes, on the plain Where Troy once stood. Give, Father, I implore,
To wretched men their native streams again;
Their Xanthus and their Simois restore; 73
There let them toil and faint, as Trojans toiled of yore."

X . Then, roused with rage, spake Juno: "Wherefore make My lips break silence and lay bare my woe?
What God or man Æneas forced to take
The sword, and make the Latin King his foe?
Fate to Italia called him: be it so:
Driven by the frenzied prophetess of Troy.
Did we then bid him leave the camp, and throw
His life to fortune, ay, and leave a boy 82
To rule the war, and Tuscan loyalty destroy,

XI . "And harass peaceful nations? Who was there
The God, and whose the tyranny to blame
For fraud like that? Where then was Juno? where Was cloud-sent Iris? Sooth, ye count it shame
That Latins hedge the new-born Troy with flame,
And Turnus dares his native land possess,
Albeit from Pilumnus' seed he came,
And nymph Venilia. Is the shame then less, 91
That Troy with foreign yoke should Latin fields oppress,

XII . "And rob their maidens of the love they vow,
And lift, and burn and ravage as they list,
Then plead for peace, with arms upon the prow?
Thy sheltering power Æneas can assist,
And cheat his foemen with an empty mist,
The warrior's counterfeit. At thy command
Ships change to sea-nymphs, and the flames desist.
And now, that we should stretch a friendly hand, 100
And lend Rutulians aid, an infamy ye brand.

XIII . “Thy chief is absent, absent let him be.
He knows not: let him know not. Do I care?
What is Æneas’ ignorance to me?
Thou hast thy Paphos, and Idalium fair,
And bowers of high Cythera; get thee there.
Why seek for towns with battle in their womb,
And beard a savage foeman in his lair?
Wrought we the wreck, when Ilion sank in gloom, 109
We, or the hands that urged poor Trojans to their doom?

XIV . “Was I the robber, who the war begun,
Whose theft in arms two continents arrayed,
When Europe clashed with Asia? I the one,
Who led the Dardan leman on his raid,
To storm the chamber of the Spartan maid?
Did I with lust the fatal strife sustain,
And fan the feud, and lend the Dardans aid?
Then had thy fears been fitting; now in vain 118
Thy taunts are hurled; too late thou risest to complain.”

XV . So pleaded Juno: the immortals all
On this and that side murmured their assent,
As new-born gales, that tell the coming squall,
Caught in the woods, their mingled moanings vent.
Then thus began the Sire omnipotent,
Who rules the universe, and as he rose,
Hush’d was the hall; Earth shook; the firmament
Was silent; whist was every wind that blows, 127
And o’er the calm deep spread the stillness of repose.

XVI . “Now hearken all, and to my words give heed.
Since naught avails this discord to allay,
And peace is hopeless, let the war proceed.
Trojans, Rutulians — each alike this day
Must carve his hopes and fortune as he may.
Fate, blindness, crooked counsels — whatso’er Holds Troy in leaguer, equally I weigh

The chance of all, nor would Rutulians spare. 136
For each must toil and try, till Fate the doom declare.”

XVII . He spake, and straightway, to confirm his word,
Invoked his brother, and the Stygian flood,
The pitchy whirlpool, and the banks abhorr’d,
Then bent his brow, and with his awful nod
Made all Olympus tremble at the god.
So ceased the council. From his throne of state,
All golden, he arose, and slowly trod
The courts of Heaven. The powers celestial wait 145
Around their sovereign Lord, and lead him to the gate.

XVIII . Now, fire in hand, and burning to destroy,
The fierce Rutulians still the siege maintain.
Pent in their ramparts stay the sons of Troy,
Hopeless of flight, and line the walls in vain,
A little band, but all that now remain.
Thymoetes, son of Hicetaon bold,
Asius, the son of Imbrasmus, the twain
Assaraci, Castor and Thymbris old, 154
These, battling in the van, the desperate strife uphold.

XIX . Next stand the brethren of Sarpedon slain, Claros and Themon, — braver Lycians none.
There, with a rock’s huge fragment toils amain
Lyrnessian Acmon, famous Clytius’ son,
Menestheus’ brother, nor less fame he won.
Hot fares the combat; from the walls these fling
The stones, and those the javelins. Each one Toils to defend; these blazing firebrands bring, 163
And fetch the flying shafts, and fit them to the string.

XX . There too, bare-headed, in the midst is seen Fair Venus’ care, the Dardan youth divine,
Bright as a diamond, or the lustrous sheen
Of gems, that, set in yellow gold, entwine

The neck, or sparkling on the temples shine.
So gleams the ivory, inlaid with care
In chest of terebinth, or boxwood shrine;
And o'er his milk-white neck and shoulders fair, 172
Twined with the pliant gold, streams down the warrior's hair.

XXI . There, too, brave Ismarus, the nations see,
Scattering the poisoned arrows from thy hands;
A gallant knight, and born of high degree
In far Mæonia, where his golden sands
Pactolus rolls along the fruitful lands.
There he, whom yesterday the voice of fame
Raised to the stars, the valiant Mnestheus stands,
Who drove fierce Turnus from the camp with shame; 181
There, Capys, he who gave the Capuan town its name.

XXII . Thus all day long both armies toiled and fought.
And now, at midnight, o'er the deep sea fares
Æneas. By Evander sent, he sought
The Tuscan camp. To Tarchon he declares
His name and race, the aid he asks and bears,
The friends Mezentius gathers to the fray,
And Turnus' violence; then warns, with prayers,
Of Fortune's fickleness. No more delay: 190
Brave Tarchon joins his power, and strikes a league straightway.

XXIII . So, free of Fate, Heaven's mandate they obey,
And Lydians, with a foreign leader, plough
The deep; Æneas' vessel leads the way.
Sweet Ida forms the figure-head; below,
The Phrygian lions ramp upon the prow.
Here sits Æneas, thoughtful, on the stern,
For war's dark chances cloud the chieftain's brow.
There, on his left, sits Pallas, and in turn 199
Now cons the stars, now seeks the wanderer's woes to learn.

XXIV . Now open Helicon; unlock the springs,

Ye Goddesses. Strike up the noble stave,
And sing what hosts from Tuscan shores he brings,
What ships he arms, and how they cross the wave.
First, Massicus with brazen Tiger clave
The watery plain. With him from Clusium go,
And Cosæ's town, a hundred, tried and brave;
Deft archers, well the deadly craft they know. 208
Light from their shoulders hang the quiver and the bow.

XXV . With blazoned troops came Abas, gaunt and grim.
Golden Apollo on the stern he bore.
Six hundred Populonia gave to him,
All trained to battle, and three hundred more
Sent Ilva, rich in unexhausted ore.
Third came Asylas, who the voice divine
Expounds to man, and kens, with prescient lore,
The starry sky, the hearts of slaughtered kine, 217
The voices of the birds, the lightning's warning sign.

XXVI . A thousand from Alphæus' Tuscan town
Of Pisa, with him to the war proceed,
In bristling ranks, all spearmen of renown.
Next, Astur — comeliest Astur — clad in weed
Of divers hues, and glorying in his steed:
Three hundred men from ancient Pyrgos fare,
From Cære's home, from Minio's fruitful mead,
And they who breathe Gravisca's tainted air. 226
One purpose fills them all, to follow and to dare.

XXVII . Nor would I leave thee, Cinyras, untold, Liguria's chief, nor, though a few were thine,
Cupavo. Emblem of his sire of old,
The swan's white feathers on his helmet shine,
Thy fault, O Love. When Cynus, left to pine
For Phaëthon, the poplar shades among,
Soothed his sad passion with the Muse divine,
Old age with hoary plumage round him clung; 235

Starward he soared from earth and, soaring up, still sung.

XXVIII . Now comes his son, with his Ligurian bands, Oaring their bark. A Centaur from the prow
Looms o'er the waves a-tiptoe, with his hands
A vast rock heaving, as in act to throw;
The long keel ploughs the furrowed deep below.
Next, from his home the gallant Ocnus came,
The son of Manto, who the Fates doth know,
Brave child of Tiber. He his mother's name 244
And walls to Mantua gave, — great Mantua, rich in fame,

XXIX . And rich in heroes, though diversely bred.
Three separate stems four-fold the state compose,
Herself, of Tuscan origin, the head.
Five hundred warriors, all Mezentius' foes,
And armed for vengeance, from her walls arose.
Mincius in front, veiled in his sedges grey (Fair stream, whose birth from sire Benacus flows), Shines on the poop, and seaward points the way; 253
Swift speeds the bark of pine, with foemen for the fray.

XXX . Last, huge Aulestes, rising with his row
Of hundred oarsmen, beats the watery lea.
The lashed deeps boil; big Triton from the prow
Sounds his loud shell, that frights the sky-blue sea.
Waist-high, a man with human face is he;
All else, a fish; beneath his savage breast
The white foam roars before him. — Such to see,
Such, and so numerous was the host that pressed, 262
Borne in their thirty ships, to succour Troy distress.

XXXI . Daylight had failed; to mid Olympus' gate
Bright Phoebe drove her nightly-wandering wain.
Tiller in hand, the good Æneas sate
And trimmed the sails, while trouble tossed his brain.
When lo! around him thronged the Sea-nymphs' train,

Whom kind Cybele changed from ships of wood
To rule, as goddesses, the watery main.
As many as late, with brazen beaks, had stood 271
Linked to the shore, now swim in even line the flood.

XXXII . Far off, their king the goddesses beheld
And danced around him joyously, and lo,
Cymodocea, who in speech excelled,
Clings to the stern; breast-high the nymph doth show;
Her left hand oars the placid deep below.
Then, "Watchest thou, Æneas, child divine?
Watch on," she cries, "and let the canvas go.
Behold us, sea-nymphs, once a grove of pine 280
On Ida's sacred crest, the Trojans' ships and thine.

XXXIII . "When on us late the false Rutulian pressed
With sword and flame, perforce, sweet life to save,
We broke our chains, and wander in thy quest.
Our shape the Mother, pitying, changed and gave Immortal life, to spend beneath the wave.
Thy son, he stays in Latin leaguer pent;
Arcadian horsemen, with the Tuscans brave,
Hold tryst to aid. His troops hath Turnus sent, 289
Charged, with opposing arms, their succour to prevent.

XXXIV . "Now rise, and when to-morrow's dawn shall shine,
Bid forth thy followers to arms. Be bold,
And take this shield, the Fire-King's gift divine,
Invincible, immortal, rimm'd with gold.
Next morn — so truly as the word is told —
Huge heaps of dead Rutulian foes shall view."
She spake; her hand, departing, loosed its hold,
And pushed the vessel; well the way she knew; 298
Swift as a dart it flies; the rest its flight pursue.

XXXV . Wondering, Æneas pauses in amaze,
Yet hails the sign, and gladdens at the sight,

And, gazing on the vaulted skies, he prays,
“Mother of Heaven, whom Dindymus’ famed height,
And tower-girt towns, and lions yoked delight,
Assist the Phrygians, and direct the fray.
Kind Goddess, prosper us, and speed aright
This augury.” He ended, and the day 307
Returning, climbed the sky, and chased the night away.

XXXVI . Forthwith he calls his comrades to arise
And take fresh heart, and for the fight prepare.
Now, from the stern, the Dardans he espies,
Hemmed in their camp. Aloft his hands upbear
The burning shield. With shouts his Dardans tear Heaven’s concave. Hope with fury fires their veins.
Fast fly their darts, as when through darkened air
With clang and clamour the Strymonian cranes 316
Stream forth, the signal given, from winter’s winds and rains.

XXXVII . Then lost in wonderment, the foemen stand,
Till, looking round, they see the watery ways
A sea of ships, all crowding to the land,
The flaming crest, the helmet all ablaze,
The golden shield-boss, with its lightning rays.
As when a comet, bright with blazing hair,
Its blood-red beams athwart the night displays,
Or Sirius, rising, with its baleful glare 325
Brings pestilence and drought, and saddens all the air.

XXXVIII . Yet quails not Turnus; still his hopes are high
To seize the shore, and keep them from the land.
Now cheering, and now chiding, rings his cry
“Lo, here— ’tis here, the battle ye demand.
Up, crush them; war is in the warrior’s hand.
Think of your fathers and their deeds of old,
Your homes, your wives. Forestall them on the strand,
Now, while they totter, while the foot’s faint hold 334
Slips on the shelving beach. Fair Fortune aids the bold.”

XXXIX . So saying, he ponders inly, whom to choose
To mind the siege, and whom the foe to meet.
By planks meanwhile Æneas lands his crews.
Some wait until the languid waves retreat,
Then, leaping, to the shallows trust their feet;
Some vault with oars. Brave Tarchon marks, quick-eyed,
A sheltered spot, where neither surf doth beat,
Nor breakers roar, but smooth the waters glide, 343
And up the sloping shore unbroken swells the tide.

XL . Here suddenly he bids them turn the prow,
And shouts aloud, "Now, now, my chosen band,
Lean to your oars; strive lustily and row.
Lift the keel onward, till it cleaves the strand,
And ploughs its furrow in the foeman's land.
Let the bark break, with such a haven here
What harm, if once upon the shore we stand?"
So Tarchon spake; his comrades, with a cheer, 352
Rise on the smooth-shaved thwarts, and sweep the foaming mere.

XLI . So, one by one, they gain the land, and, whole
And scatheless, on the Latin shore abide.
All safe but Tarchon. Dashed upon a shoal,
Long on a rock's unequal ridge astride,
In doubtful balance swayed from side to side,
His vessel hangs, and back the waves doth beat,
Then breaks, and leaves them tangled in the tide
'Twixt planks and oars, while, ebbing to retreat, 361
The shrinking waves draw back, and wash them from their feet.

XLII . Nor loiters Turnus; eager to attack,
Along the shore he marshals his array,
To meet the foe, and drive the Teucrians back.
The trumpet sounds: the Latin churls straightway
Æneas routs, first omen of the day,
Huge Theron slain, their mightiest, who in pride

Of strength, rushed forth and dared him to the fray.
Through quilted brass the Dardan sword he plied, 370
Through tunic stiff with gold, and pierced th' unguarded side.

XLIII . Lichas he smites, who vowed his infant life,
Ripped from his mother, dying in her pain,
To Phoebus, freed from perils of the knife.
Huge Gyas, brawny Cisseus press the plain,
As, club in hand, they strew the Tuscan train.
Naught now avail those stalwart arms, that plied
The weapons of Alcides; all in vain
They boast their sire Melampus, comrade tried 379
Of Hercules, while earth his toilsome tasks supplied.

XLIV . Lo, full at Pharus, in his bawling mouth
He plants a dart. Thou, Cydon, too, in quest
Of Clytius, blooming with the down of youth,
Thy latest joy, had'st laid thy loves to rest,
Slain by the Dardan; but around thee pressed
Old Phorcus' sons. Seven brethren bold are there,
Seven darts they throw. These helm and shield arrest,
Those, turned aside by Venus' gentle care 388
Just graze the Dardan's frame, and, grazing, glance in air.

XLV . Then cried Æneas to Achates true,
"Quick, hand me store of weapons; none in vain
This arm shall hurl at yon Rutulian crew,
Not one of all that whilom knew the stain
Of Argive blood upon the Trojan plain."
So saying, he snatched, and in a moment threw
His mighty spear, that, hurtling, rent in twain
The brazen plates of Mæon's shield, and through 397
The breastplate pierced the breast, nor faltered as it flew.

XLVI . Up ran, and raised his brother, as he lay,
Alcanor. Shrill another javelin sung,
And pierced his arm, and, reddening, held its way,

And from his shoulders by the sinews hung
The dying hand. Then straight, the dart outwung,
His brother Numitor the barb let fly
Full at Æneas. In his face he flung,
But failed to smite. The weapon, turned awry, 406
Missed the intended mark, and grazed Achates' thigh.

XLVII . Up Clausus came, of Cures, in the pride
Of youth. His stark spear, urged with forceful sway,
Through Dryops' throat, beneath the chin, he plied,
And voice and life forsook him, as he lay,
Spewing thick gore, his forehead in the clay.
Three Thracians next, three sons of Idas bleed.
Ismarians these. Halæsus to the fray
Brings his Auruncan bands, and Neptune's seed, 415
Messapus, too, comes up, the tamer of the steed.

XLVIII . Each side strives hard the other's ground to win.
E'en on Ausonia's threshold raves the fray.
As in the broad air warring winds begin
The battle, matched in strength and rage, nor they,
The winds themselves, nor clouds nor sea give way,
All locked in strife, and struggling as they can,
And long in doubtful balance hangs the day,
So meet the ranks, and mingle in the van, 424
And foot clings close to foot, and man is massed with man.

XLIX . Where, in another quarter, stones and trees,
Torn from its banks, a torrent at its height
Had strewn with wide-wrought ravage, Pallas sees
His brave Arcadians break the ranks of fight,
And turn before their Latin foes in flight.
Strange to foot-combat, from his trusty horse
The rough ground lured each rider to alight.
Now with entreaties— 'tis his last resource — 433
And now with bitter words he fires their flagging force.

L . “Shame on ye, comrades! whither do ye run?
By your brave deeds, and by the name ye bear,
And great Evander’s, by the wars ye won,
By these my hopes, which even now bid fair
E’en with my father’s honours to compare.
Trust not your feet; the sword, the sword must hew
A pathway through the foemen. See, ’tis there,
Where foes press thickest, and our friends are few, 442
Our noble country calls for Pallas and for you.

LI . “No gods assail us; mortals fight to-day
With mortals. Lives as many as theirs have we,
As many hands, to match them in the fray.
Earth fails for flight, and yonder lies the sea.
Seaward or Troyward — whither shall we flee?”
So saying, he plunged amid the throng. First foe,
Fell Lagus, doomed an evil fate to dree.
Him, toiling hard a ponderous stone to throw, 451
Between the ribs and spine a whistling dart laid low.

LII . Scarce from his marrow could the victor tear
The steel, so tightly clung it to the bone.
Forth Hisbo leaped, to smite him unaware.
Rash hope! brave Pallas caught him, rushing on,
And through the lung his sword a passage won.
Then Sthenius he slew; beside him bled
Anchemolus, of Rhoetus’ stock the son,
The lewd defiler of his stepdame’s bed. 460
Fate stopped his lewdness now, and stretched him with the dead.

LIII . Ye, too, young ThyMBER and Larides fair,
Twin sons of Daucus, did the victor quell.
So like in form and features were the pair,
That e’en their doting parents failed to tell
This one from that. Alas! the sword too well Divides them now. Here, tumbled on the sward,
At one fierce swoop, the head of ThyMBER fell.

Thy severed hand, Larides, seeks its lord; 469
The fingers, half alive and quivering, clutch the sword.

LIV . Fired by his words, his deeds the Arcadians view,
And shame and anger arm them to the fray.
Rhoeteus, as past his two-horsed chariot flew
He pierced,— 'twas Ilus Pallas meant to slay,
And Ilus gained that moment of delay.
Rhoeteus, in flight from Teuthras and from thee,
His brother Tyres, met the spear midway.
Down from his chariot in the dust rolled he, 478
And, dying, with his heels beat the Rutulian lea.

LV . As when a shepherd, on a summer's day,
The wished-for winds arising, hastes to cast
The flames amid the stubble: far away,
The mid space seized, the line of fire runs fast
From field to field, and broadens with the blast:
And, sitting down, the victor from a height
Surveys the triumph, as the flames rush past.
So all Arcadia's chivalry unite, 487
And round thee, Pallas, throng, and aid thee in the fight.

LVI . But lo, from out the foemen's ranks, athirst
For battle, fierce Halesus charged, and drew
His covering shield before him. Ladon first,
Then Pheres, then Demodocus he slew.
Next, at his throat as bold Strymonius flew,
The glittering falchion severed at a blow
The lifted hand. At Thoas' face he threw
A stone, that smashed the forehead of his foe, 496
And bones, and blood, and brains the spattered earth bestrow.

LVII . Halesus, when a boy, in woods concealed,
His sire, a seer, had reared with tender care.
But soon as death the old man's eyes had sealed,
Fate marked the son for the Evandrian spear.

Him Pallas sought; "O Tiber!" was his prayer,
"True to Halesus let this javelin go.
His arms and spoils thy sacred oak shall bear."
'Twas heard: Halesus, shielding from the foe 505
Imaon, leaves his breast unguarded to the blow.

LVIII . Firm Lausus stands, bearing the battle's brunt,
Nor lets Halesus' death his friends dismay.
Dead falls the first who meets him front to front,
Brave Abas, knot and holdfast of the fray.
Down go Arcadia's chivalry that day,
Down go the Etruscans, and the Teucrians, those Whom Grecian conquerors had failed to slay.
Man locked with man, amid the conflict's throes, 514
With strength and leaders matched, the rival armies close.

LIX . On press the rearmost, crowding on the van,
So thick, that neither hand can stir, nor spear
Be wielded; each one struggles as he can.
Here Pallas, there brave Lausus, charge and cheer,
Two foes, in age scarce differing by a year.
Both fair of form. Stern Fate to each forbade
His home return. But Jove allowed not here
A meeting; he who great Olympus swayed, 523
Awhile for mightier foes their destined doom delayed.

LX . Warned by his gracious sister, Turnus flies
To take the place of Lausus. Driving through The ranks, "Stand off," he shouts to his allies,
"I fight with Pallas; Pallas is my due.
Would that his sire were here himself to view!"
All clear the field. Then, pondering with surprise
The proud command, as back the crowd withdrew,
The youth, amazed at Turnus, rolls his eyes 532
And scans his giant foe, and thus in scorn replies:

LXI . "Or kingly spoils shall make me famed to-day,

Or glorious death. Whatever end remain,
My sire can bear it. Put thy threats away.”
Then forth he stepped; cold horror chills his train.
Down from his car, close combat to darraïn,
Leapt Turnus. As a lion, who far away
Has marked a bull, that butts the sandy plain
For battle, springs to grapple with his prey; 541
So dreadful Turnus looks, advancing to the fray.

LXII . Him, deemed within his spear-throw, undismayed
The youth prevents, if chance the odds should square,
And aid his daring. To the skies he prayed,
“O thou, my father’s guest-friend, wont whilere
A stranger’s welcome at his board to share,
Aid me, Alcides, prosper my emprise;
Let Turnus fall, and, falling, see me tear
His blood-stained arms, and may his swooning eyes 550
Meet mine, and bear the victor’s image, when he dies.”

LXIII . Alcides heard, and, stifling in his breast
A deep groan, poured his unavailing grief.
Whom thus the Sire with kindly words addressed:
“Each hath his day; irreparably brief
Is mortal life, and fading as the leaf.
'Tis valour’s part to bid it bloom anew
By deeds of fame. Dead many a godlike chief,
Dead lies my son Sarpedon. Turnus too 559
His proper Fates demand; his destined hour is due.”

LXIV . So saying, he turned, and shunned the scene of death.
Forth Pallas hurled the spear with all his might,
And snatched the glittering falchion from the sheath.
Where the shield’s top just matched the shoulders’ height,
Clean through the rim, the javelin winged its flight,
And grazed the flesh. Then Turnus, poising slow
His oakbeam, tipt with iron sharp and bright,
Took aim, and, hurling, shouted to his foe, 568

“See, now, if this my lance can deal a deadlier blow.”

LXV . He spake, and through the midmost shield, o’erlaid
With bull-hide, brass, and iron, welded hard,
Whizzed the keen javelin, nor its course delayed,
But pierced the broad breast through the corslet’s guard.
He the warm weapon, in the wound embarred,
Wrenched, writhing in his agony; in vain;
Out gushed the life and life-blood. O’er him jarred
His clanging armour, as he rolled in pain. 577
Dying, with bloody mouth he bites the hostile plain.

LXVI . Then Turnus, standing o’er the dead, “Go to,
Arcadians, hear and let Evander know,
I send back Pallas, handled as was due.
If aught of honour can a tomb bestow,
If earth’s cold lap yield solace to his woe,
I grant it. Dearly will his Dardan guest Cost him, I trow.” Then, trampling on the foe,
His left foot on the lifeless corpse he pressed, 586
And tore the ponderous belt in triumph from his breast;

LXVII . The belt, whereon the tale of guilt was told, —
The wedding night, the couches smeared with gore,
The bridegrooms slain — which Clonus in the gold,
The son of Eurytus, had grav’n of yore,
And Turnus now, exulting, seized and wore.
Vain mortals! triumphing past bounds to-day,
Blind to to-morrow’s destiny. The hour
Shall come, when gold in plenty would he pay 595
Ne’er Pallas to have touched, and curse the costly prey.

LXVIII . With tears his comrades lifted from the ground
Dead Pallas; groaning, on his shield they bore
Him homeward, and the bitter wail went round.
“O grief! O glory! fall’n to rise no more!
Thus back we bring thee, thus the son restore!

One day to battle gave thee, one hath ta'en,
Victor and vanquished in the self-same hour!
Yet fall'n with honour, for behind thee slain, 604
Heaps of Rutulian foes thou leavest on the plain!"

LXIX . Sure tidings to Æneas came apace, —
'Twas no mere rumour — of his friends in flight;
Time pressed for help, death stared them in the face.
Sweeping his foes before him, left and right
He mows a passage through the ranks of fight.
Thee, haughty Turnus, thee he burns to find,
Hot with new blood, and glorying in thy might.
The sire, the son, the welcome warm and kind, 613
The feast, the parting grasp — all crowd upon his mind.

LXX . Eight youths alive he seizes for the pyre,
Four, sons of Sulmo, four, whom Ufens bred,
Poor victims, doomed to feed the funeral fire,
And pour their blood in quittance for the dead.
Then from afar a bitter shaft he sped
At Magus. Warily he stoops below
The quivering steel, that whistles o'er his head,
And, like a suppliant, crouching to his foe, 622
Clings to Æneas' knees, and cries in words of woe:

LXXI . "O by the promise of thy youthful heir,
By dead Anchises, pity, I implore,
My son, my father; for their sakes forbear.
Rich is my house, its cellars heaped with store
Of gold, and silver talents by the score.
'Tis not my doom, that shall the day decide.
If Trojans win, one foeman's life the more Mars not the triumph, nor can turn the tide." 631
Thus he, and thus in scorn the Dardan chief replied:

LXXII . "The treasures that thou vauntest, let them be.
Thy gold, thy silver, and thy hoarded gain

Spare for thy children, for they bribe not me.
Since Pallas fell by Turnus' hand, 'twere vain
To think thy pelf will traffic for the slain,
So deems my son, so deems Anchises' shade."
He spake, and with his left hand grasped amain
His helmet. Even as the suppliant prayed, 640
Hilt-deep, the neck bent back, he drove the shining blade.

LXXIII . Hard by, the son of Hæmon there was seen,
Apollo's priest and Trivia's, all aglow
In robe and armour of resplendent sheen,
The holy ribboned chaplet on his brow.
Him, met, afield he chases, lays him low,
And o'er him, like a storm-cloud, dark as night,
Stands, hugely shadowing the fallen foe:
And back Serestus bears his armour bright, 649
A trophy, vowed to thee, Gradivus, lord of fight.

LXXIV . Then Cæculus, to Vulcan's race allied,
And Marsian Umbro, rally 'gainst the foe
The wavering ranks. The Dardan on his side
Still rages. First from Anxur with a blow
His sword the shield-arm and the shield laid low.
Big things had Anxur boasted, empty jeers,
And deemed his valour with his vaunts would grow:
Perchance, with spirit lifted to the spheres, 658
Hoar hairs he looked to see, and length of peaceful years.

LXXV . Sheathed in bright arms, proud Tarquitus in scorn,
Whom Dryope the nymph, if fame be true,
To Faunus, ranger of the woods, had borne,
Leaped forth, and at the fiery Dardan flew.
He, drawing back his javelin, aimed and threw.
And through the cuirass and the ponderous shield
Pinned him. Then, vainly as he strove to sue,
Much pleading, even while the suppliant kneeled. 667
Lopt off, the lifeless head went rolling on the field.

LXXVI . His reeking trunk the victor in disdain Spurns with his foot, and cries aloud, "Lie there,
Proud youth, and tell thy terrors to the slain.
No tender mother shall thy shroud prepare,
No father's sepulchre be thine to share.
Thy carrion corpse shall be the vultures' food,
And birds that batten on the dead shall tear
Thee piecemeal, and the fishes lick thy blood, 676
Drowned in the deep sea-gulfs, or drifting on the flood."

LXXVII . Lucas, Antæus in the van were slain.
Here Numa, there the fair-haired Camers lay,
Great Volskens' son; full many a wide domain
Was his, and mute Amyclæ owned his sway.
As when Ægeon, hundred-armed, they say,
And hundred-handed, would the Sire withstand,
And fifty mouths, and fifty maws each way
Shot flames against Jove's thunder, and each hand 685
Clashed on a sounding shield, or bared a glittering brand,

LXXVIII . So raves Æneas, victor of the war,
His sword now warmed, and many a foeman dies.
Now at Niphæus, in his four-horse car
Breasting the battle, in hot haste he flies.
Scared stand the steeds, in terror and surprise,
So dire his gestures, as he strides amain,
So fierce his looks, so terrible his cries;
Then, turning, from his chariot on the plain 694
Fling their ill-fated lord, and gallop to the main.

LXXIX . With two white steeds into the midmost dashed Bold Lucagus and Liger, brethren twain.
Around him Lucagus his broad sword flashed
His brother wheeled the horses with the rein.
Fired at the sight, Æneas in disdain
Rushed on them, towering with uplifted spear.

“No steeds of Diomede, nor Phrygian plain,” Cries Liger, “nor Achilles’ car are here. 703
This field shall end the war, thy fatal hour is near.”

LXXX . So fly his words, but not in words the foe Makes answer, but his javelin hurls with might.
As o’er the lash proud Lucagus bends low
To prick the steeds, and planting for the fight
His left foot forward, stands in act to smite,
Clean through the nether margin of his shield
The Dardan shaft goes whistling in its flight,
And thrills his groin upon the left. He reeled, 712
And from the chariot fell half-lifeless on the field.

LXXXI . Then bitterly Æneas mocked him: “Lo,
Proud Lucagus! no lagging steeds have played
Thy chariot false, nor shadows of the foe
Deceived thy horses, and their hearts dismayed.
’Tis thou — thy leap has lost the car!” He said
And snatched the reins. The brother in despair
Slipped down, and spread his hapless hands, and prayed:
“O by thyself, great son of Troy, forbear; 721
By those who bore thee such, have pity on my prayer.”

LXXXII . More would he, but Æneas: “Nay, not so Thou spak’st erewhile. Die now, and take thy way,
And join thy brother, brotherlike, below.”
Deep in the breast he stabbed him as he lay,
And bared the life’s recesses to the day.
Such deaths the Dardan dealt upon the plain,
Like storm or torrent, full of rage to slay.
And now at length Ascanius and his train 730
Burst forth, and leave their camp, long leaguered, but in vain.

LXXXIII . Great Jove meanwhile to Juno spake and said, “Sweet spouse and sister, thou hast deemed aright,
’Tis Venus, sure, who doth the Trojans aid,

Not courage, strength and patience in the fight.”
Then Juno meekly: “Dearest, why delight
With cruel words to vex me, sad with fear
And sick at heart? Had still my love the might
It had and should have; were I still so dear, 739
Not thou, with all thy power, should’st then refuse to hear,

LXXXIV . “But safe should Turnus from the fight once more Return to greet old Daunus. Be it so,
And let him die, and shed his righteous gore
To glut the vengeance of his Teucrian foe,
Albeit his name celestial birth doth show,
Fourth in succession from Pilumnus, yea,
Though oft his hand thy sacred shrines below
Hath heaped his gifts.” She ended, and straightway 748
Brief answer made the Sire, who doth Olympus sway:

LXXXV . “If but a respite for the youth be sought,
A little time of tarrying, ere he die,
And thus thou read’st the purport of my thought,
Take then awhile thy Turnus; let him fly
And ‘scape his present fates; thus far may I Indulge thee. But if aught beneath thy prayer
Lie veiled of purpose or of hopes more high,
To change the war’s whole aspect, then beware, 757
For idle hopes thou feed’st, as empty as the air.”

LXXXVI . Then She with tears: “What if thy heart should give
The pledge and promise, that thy lips disdain,
And Turnus by thy warrant still should live?
Now death awaits him guiltless, or in vain
I read the Fates. Ah! may I merely feign
An empty fear, and better thoughts advise Thee — for thou can’st — to spare him and refrain!”
So saying, arrayed in storm-clouds, through the skies 766
Down to Laurentum’s camp and Ilian lines she flies.

LXXXVII . Then straight the Goddess from a hollow cloud —
Strange sight to see! — a thin and strengthless shade
Shaped like the great Æneas, and endowed
With Dardan arms, and fixed the shield, and spread
The plume and crest as on his godlike head.
And empty words, a soulless sound, she gave,
And feigned the fashion of the warrior's tread.
Thus ghosts are said to glide above the grave; 775
Thus oft delusive dreams the slumbering sense enslave.

LXXXVIII . Proud stalks the phantom, gladdening in the van,
With darts provokes him, and with words defies.
Forth rushed fierce Turnus, hurling as he ran
His whistling spear. The shadow turns and flies.
Then Turnus, glorying in his fancied prize,
“Where now, Æneas, from thy plighted bride?
The land thou soughtest o'er the deep, it lies
Here, and this hand shall give it thee.” He cried, 784
And waved his glittering sword, and chased him, nor espied

LXXXIX . The winds bear off his triumph. — Hard at hand,
With steps let down and gangway ready laid,
Moored by the rocks, a vessel chanced to stand,
Which brave Osinius, Clusium's king, conveyed.
Here, as in haste, for shelter plunged the shade.
On Turnus pressed, and with a bound ascends
The lofty gangways, dauntless nor delayed.
The bows scarce reached, the rope Saturnia rends, 793
And down the refluent tide the loosened ship descends.

XC . Loud calls Æneas for his absent foe,
And many a hero-body — all who dare
To meet him — hurries to the shades below.
No more the phantom lingers in his lair,
But, soaring, melts into the misty air.
Turnus a storm-wind o'er the deep sea blows.
Backward he looks, and of events unaware,

And all unthankful to escape his foes. 802
Up to the stars of heaven his hand and voice he throws.

XCI . “Great Sire, was I so guilty in thy sight,
To make thee deem such punishment my due?
Whence came I? Whither am I borne? What flight
Is this? and how do I return, and who?
Again Laurentum’s city shall I view?
What of that band, who followed me, whom I —
Shame on me — left a shameful death to rue?
E’en now I see them scattered, — see them fly, — 811
And see them fall; and hear the groans of those that die.

XCII . “What am I doing? Where can Earth for me
Gape deep enough? Ye winds that round me roar, Pity I crave, on rocks amid the sea —
’Tis Turnus, I, a willing prayer who pour — Dash me this ship, or drive it on the shore,
‘Mid ruthless shoals, where no Rutulian eyes
May see my shame, nor prying Fame explore.”
Thus he, and, tost in spirit, as he cries, 820
This plan and that in turn his wavering thoughts devise:

XCIII . Madly to grasp the dagger in his hand,
And through his ribs drive home the naked blade,
Or plunge into the deep, and swim to land,
And, armed, once more the Teucrian foes invade.
Thrice, but in vain, each venture he essayed.
Thrice Heaven’s high queen, in pity fain to save,
Held back the youth, and from his purpose stayed.
And borne along by favouring tide and wave, 829
On to his father’s town the level deep he clave.

XCIV . Jove prompting, fierce Mezentius now the fight Takes up, and charges at the Teucrian foes.
And, hurrying up, the Tuscan troops unite.
All against one — one only — these and those

Their gathered hate and crowding darts oppose.
Unmoved he stands, as when a rocky steep
In ocean, bare to every blast that blows,
Around whose base the savage waves upheap, 838
Braves all the threats of heaven, and buffets of the deep.

XCV . Hebrus he slew, from Dolichaon sprung,
Then Latagus, then Palmus, as he fled.
Full in the face of Latagus he flung
A monstrous stone, that stretched him with the dead.
Palmus, with severed hamstring, next he sped,
And rolled him helpless. Lausus takes his gear;
The shining crest he fits upon his head,
And dons the breastplate. 'Neath the conqueror's spear 847
Phrygian Evanthes falls, and Paris' friend and peer,

XCVI . Young Mimas, whom to Amycus that night
Theano bore, when, big with Ilion's bane,
Queen Hecuba brought Paris forth to light.
Now Paris sleeps upon his native plain,
But Mimas on a foreign shore is slain.
As when a wild-boar, hounded from the hill,
Who long on pine-clad Venulus hath lain,
Or in Laurentum's marish fed his fill, 856
Now in the toils caught fast, before his foes stands still,

XCVII . And snorts with rage, and rears his bristling back;
None dares approach him, but aloof they wait,
Safe-shouting, and with distant darts attack;
E'en so, of those who burn with righteous hate,
None dares against Mezentius try his fate.
But cries are hurled, and distant missiles plied,
While he, undaunted, but in desperate strait,
Gnashes his teeth, and from his shield's tough hide 865
Shakes off the darts in showers, and shifts from side to side.

XCVIII . From ancient Corythus came Acron there,

A Greek, in exile from his half-won bride.
Him, dealing havoc in the ranks, elsewhere
Mezentius marked; the purple plumes he eyed,
The robe his loved one for her lord had dyed.
As when a lion, prowling to and fro,
Sore pinched with hunger, round the fold, hath spied
A stag tall-antlered, or a timorous roe, 874
Ghastly he grins, erect his horrid mane doth show;

XCIX . Prone o'er his victim, to the flesh he clings,
And laps the gore; so, burning in his zeal,
The fierce Mezentius at his foemen springs.
Poor Acron falls, and earth with dying heel
Spurns, and the red blood stains the splintered steel.
Orodes fled; Mezentius marks his flight,
And scorns with lance a covert wound to deal,
But face to face confronts him in the fight, 883
Courage, not craft, prevails, and might o'ermatches might.

C . With foot and spear upon him, "See," he cries,
"Their champion; see the great Orodes slain!"
All shout applause, but, dying, he replies,
"Strange foe, not long thy triumph shall remain;
Like fate awaits thee, on the self-same plain."
"Die!" said Mezentius, with a smile of spite,
"Jove cares for me," and plucked the shaft again.
Grim rest and iron slumber seal his sight; 892
The drooping eyelids close on everlasting night.

CI . Now Cædicus made great Alcathous fall, Sacrator killed Hydaspes; Rapo too
Parthenius and Orses, strong and tall;
Messapus Clonius, whom his steed o'erthrew,
And, foot to foot, Lycaon's son he slew,
Brave Ericetes. Valerus with a blow
Felled Agis, Lycia's warrior. Salius flew
At Thronius, but Nealces lays him low, 901

Skilled with the flying dart and far-deceiving bow.

CII . Stern Mars, impartial, weighs in equal scale
The mutual slaughter, and the ghastly fight
Raves, as in turn they perish or prevail,
Vanquished or victor, for none dreams of flight.
From Heaven the gods look pitying on the sight,
Such fruitless hate, such scenes of mortal woe.
Here Venus, there great Juno, filled with spite,
Sits watching. Pale Tisiphone below 910
Fierce amid thousands raves, and bids the discord grow.

CIII . His massive spear Mezentius, flown with pride,
Shakes in his fury, as he towers amain,
Like huge Orion, when with ample stride
He cleaves the deep-sea, where the Nereids reign,
And lifts his lofty shoulders o'er the main,
Or when, uprooting from the mountain head
An aged ash, he stalks along the plain,
And hides his forehead in the clouds; so dread 919
Mezentius clangs his arms, so terrible his tread.

CIV . Æneas marks him in the files of fight
Far off, and hastes to meet him in advance.
Dauntless he waits, collected in his might,
The noble foe, then, measuring at a glance
The space his arm can cover with the lance;
“May this right hand, my deity,” cried he,
“And this poised javelin aid the doubtful chance.
The spoils, from this false pirate stript, to thee 928
My Lausus, I devote; his trophy shalt thou be.”

CV . So saying, from far his whistling shaft he threw.
Wide glanced the missile, by the tough shield bent,
And finding famed Antores, as it flew,
‘Twixt flank and bowels pierced a deadly rent.
He, friend of Hercules, from Argos sent,

With king Evander, 'neath Italian skies,
Had fixed his home. Alas! a wound unmeant
Hath laid him low. To heaven he lifts his eyes, 937
And of sweet Argos dreams, his native land, and dies.

CVI . His javelin then the good Æneas cast;
Flying it pierced the hollow disk, and through
The plates of brass, thrice welded firm and fast,
And linen folds, and triple bull-hides flew,
And in the groin, with failing force but true,
Lodged deep. At once Æneas, for his eye
Glistens with joy, the Tuscan's blood to view,
His trusty sword unfastening from his thigh, 946
Springs at the faltering foe, and bids Mezentius die.

CVII . Love for his sire stirred Lausus, and the tears Rolled down, and heavily he groaned. Thy fate,
Brave youth! thy prowess, if the far-off years
Shall give due credence to a deed so great,
My verse at least shall spare not to relate.
While backward limped Mezentius, spent and slow,
His shield still cumbered with the javelin's weight,
Forth sprang the youth, and grappled with the foe, 955
And 'neath Æneas' sword, uplifted for the blow,

CVIII . Slipped in, and checked him. Onward press the train
With shouts, to shelter the retreating sire,
And distant arrows on the foeman rain.
Safe-covered stands Æneas, thrilled with ire.
As when the storm-clouds in a deluge dire
Pour down the hail, and all the ploughmen fly,
And scattered hinds from off the fields retire,
And rock or stream-side shields the passer-by, 964
Till sunshine calls to toil, and reawakes the sky;

CIX . So, whelmed with darts, the Trojan chief defies
The cloud of war, till all its storms abate,

And chides and threatens Lausus. "Fool," he cries,
"Why rush to death, and dare a deed too great?
Rash youth! thy love betrays thee." 'Twas too late;
Rage blinds poor Lausus, and he scorns to stay.
Then fiercer waxed the Dardan's wrath, and Fate
The threads had gathered, for their forceful sway 973
Hilt-deep within his breast the falchion urged its way.

CX . It pierced the shield, light armour and the vest,
Wrought by his mother with fine golden thread,
And drenched with gore the tunic and the breast.
Sweet life, departing, left the limbs outspread,
And the sad spirit to the ghost-world fled.
But when the son of great Anchises scanned
The face, the pallid features of the dead,
Deeply he groaned, and stretched a pitying hand. 982
Grief for his own dear sire his noble soul unmanned.

CXI . "Alas! what meed, to match such worth divine,
Can good Æneas give thee? Take to-day
The arms wherein thou joyed'st; they are thine.
Thy corpse — if aught can please the senseless clay —
Back to thy parents' ashes I repay.
Poor youth! thy solace be it to be slain
By great Æneas." Then his friends' delay
He chides, and lifts young Lausus from the plain, 991
Dead, and with dainty locks fouled by the crimson stain.

CXII . Meanwhile the sire Mezentius, faint with pain,
In Tiber's waters bathes the bleeding wound.
Against a trunk he leans; the boughs sustain
His brazen helm; his arms upon the ground
Rest idly, and his comrades stand around.
Sick, gasping, spent, his weary neck he tends;
Loose o'er his bosom floats the beard unbound.
Oft of his son he questions, oft he sends 1000
To bid him quit the field, and seek his sire and friends.

CXIII . But, sad and sorrowful, the Tuscan train
Bear back the lifeless Lausus from the field,
Weeping — the mighty by a mightier slain,
And laid in death upon the warrior's shield.
Far off, their wailing to the sire revealed
The grief, that made his boding heart mistrust.
In agony of vanquish, down he kneeled,
His hoary hairs disfiguring with the dust, 1009
And, grovelling, clasped the corpse, and both his hands outthrust.

CXIV . “Dear son, was life so tempting to the sire,
To let thee face the foemen in my room,
Whom I begot? Shalt thou, my son, expire,
And I live on, my darling in the tomb,
Saved by thy wounds, and living by thy doom?
Ah! woe is me; too well at length I own
The pangs of exile, and the wound strikes home.
'Twas I, thy name who tarnished, I alone, 1018
Whom just resentment thrust from sceptre and from throne.

CXV . “Due to my country was the forfeit; yea,
All deaths Mezentius had deserved to die.
Yet still I leave, and leave not man and day,
But leave I will, — the fatal hour is nigh.”
Then, slowly leaning on his crippled thigh (Deep was the wound, but dauntless was his breast),
He rose, and calling for his steed hard by,
The steed, that oft in victory's hour he pressed, 1027
His solace and his pride, the sorrowing beast addressed:

CXVI . “Rhæbus, full long, if aught of earth be long,
We two have lived. Æneas' head to-day,
And spoils, blood-crimsoned to avenge this wrong,
Back shalt thou bring, or, failing in the fray,
Bite earth with me, and be the Dardan's prey.
Not thou would'st brook a foreign lord, I weet,

Brave heart, or deign a Teucrian to obey.”
He spoke, and, mounting to his well-known seat, 1036
Swift at the ranks spurred forth, his dreaded foe to meet.

CXVII . Each hand a keen dart brandished; o’er his head
Gleamed the brass helmet with its horse-hair crest.
Shame for himself, and sorrow for the dead,
The parent’s anguish, and the warrior’s zest,
Thrilled through his veins, and kindled in his breast,
And thrice he called Æneas. With delight
Æneas heard him, and his vows addressed:
“So help me Jove, so Phoebus lend his might, 1045
Come on,” and couched his spear, advancing to the fight.

CXVIII . “Wretch,” cries Mezentius, “having robbed my son,
Why scare me now? Thy terrors I defy.
Only through Lausus were his sire undone.
I heed not death nor deities, not I;
Forbear thy taunting; I am here to die,
But send this gift to greet thee, ere I go.”
He spake, and quickly let a javelin fly,
Another — and another, as round the foe 1054
In widening orbs he wheels; the good shield bides the blow.

CXIX . Thrice round Æneas leftward he careers,
Raining his darts. Thrice, shifting round, each way
The Trojan bears the forest of his spears.
At length, impatient of the long delay,
And tired with plucking all the shafts away,
Pondering awhile, and by the ceaseless blows
Hard pressed, and chafing at the unequal fray,
Forth springs Æneas, and betwixt the brows 1063
Full at the warrior-steed a fatal javelin throws.

CXX . Up rears the steed, and paws the air in pain,
Then, following on his falling rider, lies
And pins him with his shoulder to the plain.

Shouts from each host run kindling through the skies.
Forth springs Æneas, glorying in his prize,
And plucks the glittering falchion from his thigh,
“Where now is fierce Mezentius? where,” he cries,
“That fiery spirit?” Then, with upturned eye, 1072
Gasping, with gathered sense, the Tuscan made reply:

CXXI . “Stern foe! why taunt and threaten? ‘twere no shame
To slay me. No such covenant to save His sire made Lausus; nor for this I came.
One boon I ask — if vanquished men may crave
The victor’s grace — a burial for the brave.
My people hate me; I have lived abhorred;
Shield me from them with Lausus in the grave.”
This said, his throat he offered to the sword, 1081
And o’er his shining arms life’s purple stream was poured.

BOOK ELEVEN

ARGUMENT

Æneas erects a trophy of Mezentius' arms, and sends the body of Pallas with tears and lamentations to Evander (1-108). A truce for the burial of the dead is asked by the Latins, and sympathy with the Trojan cause finds a spokesman in Drances (109-144). The sorrow of Evander and the funeral rites of Trojans and Latins (145-262). The ambassadors return from the city of Diomedes and report that he praises Æneas and counsels submission (263-336). An anxious debate follows: Latinus suggests terms of peace: Drances inveighs against Turnus, who replies, protesting his readiness to meet Æneas in single combat, and presently seizes the opportunity afforded by a false alarm of impending attack to break up the council. The Latin mothers and maidens offer gifts and litanies to Pallas. Turnus arms for battle (337-576). Camilla and Messapus command the Latin horse; Turnus prepares an ambush (577-612). Diana tells the story of Camilla and charges Opis, one of her nymphs, to avenge her should she fall (613-684). Opis watches the battle before the city of Latinus (685-738). The deeds and death of Camilla are recounted: Aruns, her slayer, is slain by Opis (739-972). The Latins are routed, and Turnus, learning the news, abandons the ambush and hurries to the city, closely followed by Æneas (973-1026).

I. Meanwhile from Ocean peeps the dawning day.
The Dardan chief, though fain his friends to mourn,
And pressed with thoughts of burial, hastes to pay
His vows, as victor, with the rising morn.
A towering oak-tree, of its branches shorn,
He plants upon a mound. Aloft, in sight,
The glittering armour from Mezentius torn,
His spoils, he hangs, — a trophy to thy might, 1
Great Mars, the Lord of war, the Ruler of the fight.

II . Thereon he sets the helmet and the crest,
Bedewed with gore, the javelins snapt in twain,
And fits the corslet on the warrior's breast,
Pierced in twelve places through the twisted chain.
The left arm, as for battle, bears again
The brazen shield, and from the neck depends
The ivory-hilted falchion of the slain.
Around, with shouts of triumph, crowd his friends, 10
Whom thus the Dardan chief with gladdening words commends:

III . "Comrades, great deeds have been achieved to-day;
Let not the morrow trouble you. See there
The tyrant's spoils, the first-fruits of the fray.
And this my work, Mezentius. Now prepare
To king Latinus and his walls to fare.
Let hope forestall, and courage hail the fray,
So, when the gods shall summon us to bear
The standards forth, and muster our array, 19
No fears shall breed dull sloth, nor ignorance delay.

IV . "Our co-mates now commit we to the ground,
Sole honour that in Acheron below
Awaits them. Go ye, on these souls renowned,
Who poured their blood, to purchase from the foe
This country for our fatherland, bestow
The last, sad gift, the tribute of a tomb.
First to Evander's city, welmed in woe,
Send Pallas back, whom Death's relentless doom 28
Hath reft ere manhood's prime, and plunged in early gloom."

V . He spake, and sought the threshold, weeping sore,
Where by dead Pallas watched with pious care
Acoetes; once Evander's arms he bore,
His squire; since then, with auspices less fair,
The trusted guardian of his dear-loved heir.
A crowd of sorrowing menials stand around,
And Troy's sad matrons, with their streaming hair.

These, when Æneas at the door is found, 37
Shriek out, and beat their breasts, and bitter wails resound.

VI . He marked the pillowed head, the snow-white face,
The smooth breast, gaping with the wound, and cried
In anguish, while the tears burst forth apace,
“Poor boy; hath Fortune, in her hour of pride,
To me thy triumph and return denied?
Not such my promise to thy sire; not so
My pledge to him, who, ere I left his side
In quest of empire, clasped me, boding woe, 46
And warned the race was fierce, and terrible the foe.

VII . “He haply now, by empty hope betrayed,
With prayer and presents doth the gods constrain.
We to the dead, whose debt to Heaven is paid,
The rites of mourners render, but in vain.
Unhappy! doomed to see thy darling slain.
Is this the triumph? this the promise sworn?
This the return? Yet never thine the pain
A coward’s flight, a coward’s scars to mourn; 55
Not thine to long for death, thy loved one saved with scorn.

VIII . “Ah, weep, Ausonia! thou hast lost to-day
Thy champion. Weep, Iulus; he is ta’en,
Thy heart’s delight, the bulwark of the fray!”
Thus he with tears, and bids them lift the slain.
A thousand men, the choicest of his train,
He sends as mourners, with the corpse to go,
And stand between the parent and his pain,
A scanty solace for so huge a woe, 64
But such as pity claims, and piety doth owe.

IX . Of oaken twigs and arbutus they wove
A wattled bier. Soft leaves beneath him made
His pillow, and with leafy boughs above
They twined a verdurous canopy of shade.

There, on his rustic couch the youth is laid,
Fair as the hyacinth, with drooping head,
Cropped by the careless fingers of a maid,
Or tender violet, when life has fled, 73
That, torn from earth, still blooms, unfaded but unfed.

X . Two purple mantles, stiff with golden braid,
Æneas brings, which erst, in loving care,
Sidonian Dido with her hands had made,
And pranked with golden tissue, for his wear.
One, wound in sorrow round the corpse so fair,
The last, sad honour, shrouds the senseless clay;
One, ere the burning, veils the warrior's hair.
Rich spoils, the trophies of Laurentum's fray, 82
Stript arms and steeds he brings, and bids them pile the prey.

XI . Here march the captives, doomed to feed the flames;
There, staff in hand, each Dardan chief uprears
The spoil-decked ensigns, marked with foemen's names.
There, too, they lead Acoetes, bowed with years,
He smites his breast, his haggard cheeks he tears,
Then flings his full length prostrate. There, again,
The blood-stained chariot, and with big, round tears,
Stript of his trappings, in the mournful train, 91
Æthon, the warrior's steed, comes sorrowing for the slain.

XII . These bear the dead man's helmet and his spear;
All else the victor for his spoils hath ta'en.
A melancholy phalanx close the rear,
Teucrians, and Tuscans, and Arcadia's train,
With arms reversed, and mourning for the slain.
So passed the pomp, and, while the tear-drops fell,
Æneas stopped, and, groaning, cried again,
"Hail, mighty Pallas! us the fates compel 100 Yet other tears to shed. Farewell! a long farewell!"

XIII . He spake, then, turning, to the camp doth fare.

Thither Laurentum's envoys found their way.
Branches of olive in their hands they bear,
And beg a truce, — a respite from the fray,
Their slaughtered comrades in the ground to lay,
And glean the war's sad harvest. Brave men ne'er Warred with the dead and vanquished. Once were they
His hosts and kinsmen; he would surely spare. 109
Their plea Æneas owns, and thus accosts them fair:

XIV . “What mischief, Latins, hath your minds misled,
To shun our friendship in the hour of need,
And rush to arms? Peace ask ye for the dead,
The War-God's prey, whom folly doomed to bleed?
Peace to the living would I fain concede.
I came not hither, but with Heaven to guide.
Fate chose this country, and this home decreed;
Nor war I with the race. Your king denied 118
Our proffered league; 'twas he on Turnus' arms relied.

XV . “‘Twere juster then that Turnus hand to hand
His life had ventured. Dreams he in his pride
To end the war, and drive us from the land?
He should have met me; he or I had died,
As Fate or prowess might the day decide.
Go, take your dead, and let the bale-fires blaze:
Ye have your answer.” Thus the prince replied,
And each on each the wondering heralds gaze, 127
Mute with admiring awe, and wildered with amaze.

XVI . Then Drances, ever fain with gibes and hate
To vex young Turnus, takes the word and cries, “O Trojan, great in fame, in arms more great,
What praise of mine shall match thee with the skies?
What most — thy deeds or justice — shall I prize?
Grateful, this answer to our friends we bear,
And thee (let Turnus seek his own allies),
Thee King Latinus shall his friend declare, 136

And Latium's sons with joy Troy's destined walls prepare."

XVII . He spake; as one, all murmur their assent.
For twice six days a solemn truce they plight,
And Teucrians, now, with Latins, freely blent
In peaceful fellowship, as friends unite,
And roam the wooded hills. Sharp axes smite
The sounding ash; these with keen wedges cleave
Tall oak and scented cedar; those with might
The pine-tree, soaring to the stars, upheave, 145
And wains, with groaning wheels, the giant elms receive.

XVIII . Now Rumour, harbinger of woe so great,
That told of Pallas victor, fills again
Evander's town. All hurry to the gate,
With torches snatched, as ancient rites ordain.
A line of fire, that parts the dusky plain,
The long road gleams before them, as they go
To meet the mourners. Soon the wailing train
The Phrygians join. With shrieks the matrons know 154
Far off the funeral throng, and fill the town with woe.

XIX . Naught stays Evander; through the midst he springs,
And falling on the bier, as down they lay
Dead Pallas, groaning to his child he clings,
And hangs with tears upon the senseless clay,
Till speech, half-choked with sorrow, finds a way.
"Pallas, not such thy promise to thy sire,
Warily to trust the War-God in the fray.
I knew what ardour would thy soul inspire, 163
The charms of new-won fame, and battle's fierce desire.

XX . "O bitter first-fruits of a youth so fair!
O war's stern prelude! promise dashed to scorn!
Unheeded vows, and unavailing prayer!
O happy spouse! not left, like me, to mourn
A son thus slaughtered, and a life outworn.

I have o'erlived my destiny; life fled
When Pallas left me childless and forlorn.
O, had I fall'n with Trojans in his stead, 172
And me this pomp brought home, and not my Pallas, dead!

XXI . "Yet, Trojans, you I blame not, nor the hands
We joined in friendship, nor the league we swore.
Old age — too old — this cruel lot demands.
Ah, sweet to think, though falling in his flower,
He fell, where thousand Volscians fell before,
Leading Troy's sons to Latium. Thou shalt have A Trojan's funeral — can I wish thee more? —
What rites Æneas offers to the brave, 181
And all Etruria's hosts shall bear thee to the grave.

XXII . "Proud trophies those who perish by thy hand
Bear thee, and slaughtered foemen speak thy fame.
Thou, Turnus, too, an effigy should'st stand,
Hung round with arms, and Pallas' praise proclaim,
Had but thine age and Pallas' been the same,
Like thine the vigour of his years. But O!
Why, Teucrians, do I keep you? wherefore claim
An old man's privilege of empty woe? 190
This message bear your king, and con it as ye go.

XXIII . "If yet I linger on, with Pallas slain, Loathing the light, and longing to expire,
'Tis thy right hand that tempts me to remain,
That hand from which — thou see'st it — son and sire
The penalty of Turnus' blood require.
This niche of fame,— 'tis all the Fates bestow —
Awaits thee still. For me, all life's desire —
'Twere vain — hath fled; but gladly would I go, 199
And bear the welcome news to Pallas' shade below."

XXIV . Meanwhile to weary mortals fresh and fair
Upsprings the Dawn, and reawakes the land

To toil and labour. Reared with pious care
By Tarchon and the good Æneas, stand
The funeral pyres along the winding strand.
Here brings each warrior, as in days gone by,
His comrade's corpse, and holds the lighted brand.
The dusk flames burn beneath them, and on high 208
The clouds of smoke roll up, and shroud the lofty sky.

XXV . Three times the Trojans, sheathed in shining mail,
Pace round the piles; three times they ride around
The funeral fire, and raise the warrior's wail.
Tears bathe their arms, and tears bedew the ground,
And, mixt with clamour, comes the clarion's sound.
Spoils of dead Latins on the flames are thrown,
Bits, bridles, glowing wheels and helmets crown'd
With glittering plumes, and, last, the gifts well-known, 217
The luckless spear and shield, the weapons of their own.

XXVI . Oxen in numbers round the pyres are slain
To Death's dread power, and herds of bristly swine;
And cattle, snatched from all the neighbouring plain,
And sheep they slaughter for the flames divine.
Far down the sea-coast, where the bale-fires shine,
They guard and gaze upon the pyres, where lie
Their burning comrades, nor their watch resign,
Nor leave the spot, till dewy night on high 226
Rolls round the circling heavens, and starlight gilds the sky.

XXVII . Nor less the sorrowing Latins build elsewhere
Their countless piles. These burying they bemoan;
Those to the town or neighbouring fields they bear.
The rest, untold, unhonoured and unknown,
A mass of carnage, on the flames are thrown.
Thick blaze the fires, and light the plains around,
And on the third dawn, when the mists have flown,
The bones and dust, still smouldering on the ground, 235
Mourning, they rake in heaps, and cover with a mound.

XXVIII . But loudest in Laurentum rose the noise
Of woe and wailing for their friends who died.
Here, mothers, wives, sad sisters, orphaned boys
Curse the dire war, and Turnus and his bride.
“Let him, let Turnus fight it out,” they cried;
“Who claims chief honours and Italia’s throne,
And caused the quarrel, let his sword decide”;
And spiteful Drances: “Ay, ’tis he alone 244
Whom Latium’s foes demand; the challenge is his own.”

XXIX . And voices, too, with various reasons, plead
For Turnus, sheltered by the queen’s great name,
And spoils that speak for many a glorious deed.
Lo, in the midst, the tumult still aflame,
With doleful news from Diomedes, back came
The envoys. All was useless, — gifts, and prayer,
And proffered gold; his answer was the same:
Let Latins look for other arms elsewhere, 253
Or beg the Trojan king in clemency to spare.

XXX . Grief bowed Latinus, and his heart sank low.
The wrath of Heaven, the recent funerals,
The graves before them — all Æneas show
The god’s true choice. A council straight he calls,
And Latium’s chiefs convenes within his walls.
All meet; along the crowded ways the peers
Stream at the summons. In his palace-halls
Amidst them sits Latinus, first in years, 262
And first in sceptred state, but filled with anxious fears.

XXXI . Forthwith the envoys he invites, each man
To tell his message, and the terms expound,
Then, silence made, thus Venulus began:
“Friends, we have seen great Diomedes, and found
The Argive camp, and, safe from peril, crowned
Our journey’s end, and pressed the mighty hand

That razed old Troy. On Iapygian ground
By Garganus the conqueror hath planned 271
Argyripa's new town, named from his native land.

XXXII . “There, audience gained and liberty to speak,
The gifts we tender, and our names declare
And country, who our foemen, what we seek,
And why to Arpi and his court we fare.
He hears, and gently thus bespeaks us fair:
‘O happy nations, once by Saturn blest,
Time-old Ausonians, what sad misfare,
What evil fortune mars your ancient rest 280
And tempts to wage strange wars, and dare the doubtful test?

XXXIII . ““All we, whoever with the steel profaned Troy's fields (I leave the wasting siege alone,
The dead, who lie in Simois), all have drained
Evils past utterance, o'er the wide world blown,
And, suffering, learned our trespass to atone,
A hapless band! E'en Priam's self might weep
For woes like ours, as Pallas well hath known,
Whose baleful star once wrecked us on the deep, 289
And grim Euboea's rocks, Caphareus' vengeful steep.

XXXIV . ““Freed from that war, to distant shores we stray.
To Proteus' Pillars, far remote from men
An exile, Menelaus wends his way;
Ulysses shudders at the Cyclops' den;
Why speak of Pyrrhus, by Orestes slain?
Or poor Idomeneus, expelled his state?
Of Locrians, cast upon the Libyan plain?
Of Agamemnon, greatest of the great, 298
Mycenæ's valiant lord, slain by his faithless mate,

XXXV . ““E'en on his threshold, when the adulterer lay
In wait for Asia's conqueror? Me, too,
Hath envious Heaven in exile doomed to stay,

Nor home, nor wife, nor Calydon to view.
Nay, ghastly prodigies my flight pursue.
Transformed to birds, my comrades wing the skies, —
Ah! cruel punishment for friends so true! —
Or skim the streams; from all the shores arise 307
Their piteous shrieks, the cliffs re-echo with their cries.

XXXVI . “Such woes had I to look for, from the day
I dared a goddess, and my javelin tore
The hand of Venus. To such fights, I pray, Persuade me not. Troy fall’n, I fight no more
With Trojans, nor those evil days of yore
Now care to dwell on. To Æneas go,
And take these gifts. Once, hand to hand, we bore
The shock of battle; to my cost I know 316
How to his shield he towers, the whirlwind of his throw.

XXXVII . “‘Had Ida’s land two others borne as great,
To Argos Dardanus had found his way,
And Greece were mourning now a different fate.
The stubborn siege, the conquerors kept at bay,
For ten whole years, the triumph’s long delay
Were his and Hector’s doing, each in might Renowned, and each the foremost in the fray,
Æneas first in piety. Go, plight 325
What peace ye may, but shun to meet him in the fight.’

XXXVIII . “Thou hast, great king, the answer of the king,
And this, his sentence on the war.” So they,
And diverse murmurs in the crowd upspring;
As when big rocks a rushing torrent stay,
The prisoned waters, chafing with delay,
Boil, and the banks in many a foaming crest
Fling back with echoes the tumultuous spray.
Now from his throne, their murmurs laid to rest, 334
The King, first offering prayer, his listening folk addressed:

XXXIX . “I would, ye peers, and better it had been
An earlier hour had called us to debate,
Than thus in haste a council to convene,
And meet, while foemen battle at the gate.
A war ill-omened, with disastrous fate,
We wage with men unconquered in the field,
A race of gods, whose force nor toils abate,
Nor wounds can tire; who, driven back, still wield 343
The sword and shake the spear, and, beaten, scorn to yield.

XL . “What hope ye had in Diomedes, give o’er;
Each for himself must be his hope and stay.
This hope how slender, and our straits how sore,
Ye see; the general ruin and decay
Is open, palpable and clear as day.
Yet blame I none; what valour could, was done.
Our country’s strength, our souls were in the fray.
Hear then in brief, and ponder every one, 352
What wavering thoughts have shaped, our present fate to shun.

XLI . “Far-stretching westward, past Sicania’s bound,
By Tiber’s stream, an ancient tract is mine.
Auruncans and Rutulians till the ground;
Their ploughshares cleave the stubborn slopes, their kine
Graze on the rocks. This tract, these hills of pine Let Latins yield the Trojans for their own,
And both, as friends, in equal league combine
And share the realm. Here let them settle down, 361
If so they love the land, and build the wished-for town.

XLII . “But if new frontiers, and another folk,
They fain would look for, and can leave our shore,
Then twice ten ships of tough Italian oak
Build we, nor only let us build a score
Can they but man them (by the stream good store
Of timber is at hand); let them decide
The form, the number, and the size. What more

Is wanting, we will grudge not to provide, 370
Gold, labour, brass, and docks, and naval gear beside.

XLIII . “Nay more, to strike the proffered league, ‘twere good
That chosen envoys to their camp should fare,
A hundred Latins of the noblest blood,
The peaceful olive in their hands to bear,
With gifts, the choicest that the realm can spare,
Talents of gold and ivory, just in weight,
The royal mantle, and the curule chair,
The marks of rule. With freedom now debate, 379
Consult the common weal, and help the sickly state.”

XLIV . Up rose then Drances, with indignant mien,
Whom, spiteful still, the fame of Turnus stung
With carping envy, and malignant spleen;
Lavish of wealth, and fluent with his tongue,
No mean adviser in debate, and strong
In faction, but in battle cold and tame.
From royal seed his mother’s race was sprung,
His sire’s unknown. He thus with words of blame 388
Piles up the general wrath, and fans resentment’s flame.

XLV . “Good king, the matter — it is plain, for each
Knows well our needs, but hesitates to say.
Let him cease blustering, and allow free speech,
Him, for whose pride and sullen temper, yea,
I say it, let him threaten as he may —
Quenched is the light of many a chief, that lies
In earth’s cold lap, and mourning and dismay
Have filled the town, while, sure of flight, he tries 397
To storm the Trojan camp, and idly flouts the skies.

XLVI . “One gift, O best of monarchs, add, to crown Thy bounty to the Dardans, — one, beside
These many, nor let bluster bear thee down.
A worthy husband for thy child provide,

And peace shall with the lasting pact abide.
Else, if such terror doth our souls enslave,
Him now, in hope to turn away his pride,
Him let us pray his proper right to waive, 406
And, pitying, deign to yield what king and country crave.

XLVII . “O Turnus, cause of all our ills to-day,
Why make the land these miseries endure?
The war is desperate; for peace we pray,
And that one pledge, inviolably sure,
Naught else but which can make the peace secure.
Thy foeman, I — nor be the fact concealed,
For so thou deem’st — entreat thee and adjure.
Blood flows enough on many a wasted field. 415
Relent, and spare thine own, and, beaten, learn to yield.

XLVIII . “Or, if fame tempt, and in thy bosom glow
Such fire, and so thou hankerest to gain
A kingdom’s dower, take heart and face the foe.
Must we, poor souls, that Turnus may obtain
A royal bride, like carrion strew the plain,
Unwept, unburied? If thine arm hath might,
If but a spark of native worth remain,
Go forth this hour; in arms assert thy right, 424
And meet him, face to face, who calls thee to the fight.”

XLIX . Fierce blazed the wrath of Turnus, and he wrung Speech from his breast, deep groaning in his gall.
“Glib art thou, Drances, voluble of tongue,
When hands are needed, and the trumpets call.
The council summoned, thou art first of all.
Not this the hour thy vapouring to outpour,
Though big thy talk, and brave the words, that fall
From craven lips, while ramparts stand before, 433
To guard thee safe from foes, nor trenches swim with gore.

L . “Rave on, and thunder in thy wonted strain,

And brand me coward, thou whose hands can slay
Such Trojan hosts, whose trophies grace the plain.
What worth can do, and manhood can essay,
We twain may venture. Sooth, not far away
Need foes be sought; around the walls they throng.
March we to meet them! Dotard, why delay?
Still dwells thy War-God in a windy tongue, 442
And flying feet, and knees all feeble and unstrung?

LI . “I beaten? Who, foul spawn of earth, shall call Me beaten? who, that saw swoln Tiber flow
Red with the blood of Trojans, ay, and all Evander’s house and progeny laid low,
And fierce Arcadians vanquished at a blow?
Not such dead Pandarus and Bitias found
This right hand, nor those thousands hurled below
In one short day, when battlement and mound 451
Hemmed me in hostile walls, and foemen swarmed around.

LII . “No hope from war? — Go, fool, to Dardan ears
These bodings whisper, to thy new ally.
Go, swell the panic, spread the coward’s fears.
Puff up the foemen’s prowess to the sky, —
Twice-conquered churls, — and Latin arms decry.
See now, forsooth, the Myrmidons afraid
Of Phrygian arms, Tydides fain to fly,
Achilles trembling, Aufidus in dread 460
Shrunk from the Hadrian deep, and cowering in his bed.

LIII . “Or mark the trickster’s cunning when he feigns
To fear my vengeance, whom his taunts revile!
Nay, Drances, be at ease; this hand disdains
To take the forfeit of a soul so vile.
Keep it, fit inmate of that breast of guile,
And now, good Sire, if, beaten, we despair,
If never Fate on Latin arms shall smile,
And naught our ruined fortunes can repair, 469

Stretch we our craven hands, and beg the foe to spare.

LIV . “Yet oh! if aught of ancient worth remain,
Him deem I noblest, and his end renowned,
Brave soul! who sooner than behold such stain,
Fell once for all, and, dying, bit the ground.
But, if fit men and martial means abound,
And towns and tribes, to muster at our call,
Hath Italy; if Trojans, too, have found
Fame dearly bought with many a brave man’s fall 478
(For they have, too, their deaths; the storm hath swept o’er all),

LV . “Why fail we on the threshold, faint with fears,
And sick knees tremble ere the trumpets bray?
Time — healing Time — and long, laborious years
Oft raise the humble; Fortune in her play
Lifts those to-morrow, whom she lowers to-day.
What though no aid Ætolian Arpi lends,
Ours is Messapus, ours Tolumnius, yea,
And all whom Latium or Laurentum sends, 487
Nor scanty fame, nor slow Italia’s hosts attends.

LVI . “Ours, too, is brave Camilla, noble maid,
The pride of Volscians, and she leads a band
Of horsemen fierce, in brazen arms arrayed.
If me the foe to single fight demand,
And so ye will, and I alone withstand
The common good, come danger as it may,
Not so hath victory fled this hated hand,
Not yet so weak is Turnus, as to stay 496
With such a prize unsnatched, and falter from the fray.

LVII . “Though greater than the great Achilles he,
Though, like Achilles, Vulcan’s arms he wear,
Fain will I meet him. Lo, to you, to thee,
Latinus, father of the bride so fair,
I, Turnus, I, in prowess past compare,

Devote this life. Æneas calls but me,
So let him, rather than that Drances bear
The smart, if death the wrathful gods decree, 505
Or, if 'tis glory's field, usurp the victor's fee."

LVIII . While thus, with wrangling and contentious doubt,
They urged debate, Æneas his array
Moved from the camp. Behold, a trusty scout
Back, through Latinus' palace, speeds his way,
And fills the town with tumult and dismay.
The Trojans — see! — the Trojans, — down they swarm
From Tiber. See the meadows far away
Alive with foes! Rage, turmoil and alarm 514
In turns distract the town. "Arm," cry the young men, "arm!"

LIX . The old men weep and mutter. Clamours rend
The startled skies, and discord reigns supreme,
E'en as when birds on lofty woods descend
In flocks, or in Padusa's fishful stream
The swans sing hoarsely, and the wild-fowl scream
Along the babbling waters. Turnus straight
The moment snatched. "Ah! townsmen, sooth, ye deem
This hour an hour to chatter and debate; 523
Sit on, and praise sweet peace, while foemen storm the gate."

LX . He spake, and from the council dashed with speed.
"Go, Volusus," he cries, "and arm amain
The Volscians; hither the Rutulians lead.
Messapus, go, with horsemen in thy train,
And Coras, with thy brother scour the plain.
Let these all entrance at the gate forestall,
And man the turrets; let the rest remain
In arms, and wait my bidding." One and all, 532
The townsmen throng the streets, and hurry to the wall.

LXI . Then, sore distrest, the aged king proclaims
The council closed, and for a happier tide

Puts off debate; and oft himself he blames,
Who welcomed not Æneas to his side,
Nor graced his city with a Dardan's bride.
But hark! to battle peals the clarion's call.
These by the gate dig trenches, those provide Sharp stakes and stones. Along the girdling wall 541
Pale boys and matrons stand: the last hour cries for all.

LXII . To Pallas' rock-built temple rides the queen, Bearing her gifts. The matrons march in line,
And by her side is fair Lavinia seen,
The war's sad authoress, with down-dropt eyne.
They, entering in, with incense fume the shrine,
And from the threshold pour the mournful strain:
"O strong in arms, Tritonian maid divine!
Break thou the Phrygian robber's spear in twain, 550
And 'neath the gates strike down and stretch him on the plain."

LXIII . Now in hot haste fierce Turnus dons the mail,
Eager for battle. On his breast he laced
The corselet, rough with many a brazen scale.
Around his legs the golden greaves he placed,
His brow yet bare, and at his side he braced,
The trusty sword. All golden is the glow
Of burnished arms, as down the height in haste
He flies exulting to the field below. 559
High leaps his heart, and hope anticipates the foe.

LXIV . So, free at length, his tether snapt in twain,
Swift from his stall, in eager joy, the steed
Bounds forth and, master of the open plain,
Now seeks the mares that in the pastures feed,
Now towards the well-known river scours the mead,
Wont there to cool his glowing sides, and neighs
With head erect and glories in his speed,
While o'er his collar and his shoulders plays 568
The waving mane, flung loose in many a wandering maze.

LXV . Him meets Camilla, with her Volscian train,
And by the gate dismounting then and there
(Down likewise leap her followers to the plain),
“Turnus,” she cries, “if confidence can e’er
Befit the brave, I venture and I swear
Singly to face yon Trojans in the fray,
And stem the Tuscan cavalry. My care
Shall be the war’s first hazards to essay; 577
Thou guard the walls afoot, and by the ramparts stay.”

LXVI . Then he, with eyes fixt on the wondrous maid, “O glory of Italia, virgin bright!
What praise can match thee? how shall thanks be paid?
But now, since naught can daunt thee nor affright,
Share thou my labour, and divide the fight.
Yonder Æneas, so the news hath flown,
So spies report, hath sent his horsemen light
To scour the fields, while o’er the mountains’ crown 586
Himself through devious ways is marching to the town.

LXVII . “Deep in a hollow, where the wood’s dark shade
Two cross-ways hides, an ambush I prepare,
And armed men shall the double pass blockade.
Thou take the shock of battle, and o’erbear
The Tuscan horse. Messapus shall be there,
Tiburtus’ band, and Latins in array
To aid, and thine shall be the leader’s care.”
He spake, and cheered Messapus to the fray, 595
And Latium’s federate chiefs, and spurred upon his way.

LXVIII . There lies a winding valley, fit for snares
And stratagems, shut in on either hand
By wooded slopes. A narrow pathway fares
Along the gorge, and on the hill-tops, planned
For safety, flat but hidden spreads the land.
Rightward or leftward there is room to bear

The shock of arms, or on the ridge to stand,
And roll down rocks upon the foe. 'Twas there 604
Young Turnus, screened by woods, lies crouching in his lair.

LXIX . Meanwhile Latonia in the realms of air
Fleet Opis, sister of her sacred train,
Addressed in sorrowing accents, "Maiden fair,
See how Camilla to the fatal plain
Goes forth, in quest of battle. See, in vain
Our arms she wears, the quiver and the bow.
Dearest is she of all that own my reign,
Nor new-born is Diana's love, I trow; 613
No fit of fondness this, or fancy known but now

LXX . "When tyrant Metabus his people's hate
Drove from Privernum, for his deeds of shame.
His babe he bore, the partner of his fate,
Through war and battle, and, her mother's name
Casmilla changed, Camilla she became.
To lonely woods and hill-tops fain to fly,
Fierce swords and Volscians all around, he came
Where Amasenus, with its waves bank-high, 622
Athwart him foamed; so vast a deluge rent the sky.

LXXI . "Prepared to plunge, he pauses, sore assailed
By love, and terror for a charge so dear.
All means revolving, this at last prevailed.
Fire-dried and knotted, an enormous spear
Of seasoned oak the warrior chanced to bear.
To the mid shaft the tender babe he ties,
Swathed in the covering of a cork-tree near,
Then lifts the load, and, poisoning, ere it flies, 631
The ponderous lance, looks up, and thus invokes the skies:

LXXII . "O Queen of woods, Latonia, virgin fair!
To thee my daughter I devote this day,
Thy handmaid. See, thus early through the air

She bears thy weapons. Make her thine, I pray,
And safely through the doubtful air convey.’
So prayed the sire, and nerved him for the throw,
Then aimed, and launched the missile on its way.
The babe forlorn, while roars the stream below, 640
Link’d to the shaft, is borne across the current’s flow.

LXXIII . “In plunges Metabus, the foemen near,
And Trivia’s gift, safe landing from the wave,
Plucks from the grass, — the maiden and the spear.
No town is his, to shelter and to save,
His savage mood no shelter deigns to crave.
A shepherd’s life on lonely hills he leads,
In tangled covert, or in woodland cave.
The milk of beasts supplies his daughter’s needs, 649
And from the wild-mare’s teats her tender lips he feeds.

LXXIV . “And when the tottering infant first essayed
To plant her footsteps, to her hands he strung
A lance, and o’er the shoulders of the maid
The light-wing’d arrows and the bow he slung.
For golden coif and trailing mantle, hung
A tiger’s spoils. Her tiny hand e’en then Hurled childish darts; e’en then the tough hide, swung Around her temples, as she roamed the plain, 658
Brought down the snowy swan, or swift Strymonian crane.

LXXV . “Full many a Tuscan mother far and near
Has wooed Camilla for her son in vain.
Contented with Diana year by year,
She loves her silvan weapon, free and fain
To live a maiden-huntress, pure of stain.
And O! had battle, and the toils of fight
Not lured her thus to combat on the plain,
And match her prowess with the Teucrians’ might, 667
Mine were the maiden still, my darling and delight.

LXXVI . “Now, since well-nigh the fatal threads are spun,
Go, Nymph, to Latin frontiers wing thy way,
Where evil omens mark the fight begun.
Take, too, this quiver; who the maid shall slay, —
Trojan or Latin — with his blood shall pay
Myself the armour and the corpse will bear,
Wrapt in a cloud, and in her country lay.”
She spake, and, girt with whirlwind, and the blare 676
Of sounding arms, the Nymph glides down the yielding air.

LXXVII . Meanwhile, the Trojans and the Tuscan train,
In marshalled squadrons, to the walls draw near,
Steeds neigh, and chafe, and prance upon the plain,
And lances bristling o’er the field appear.
Messapus, too, and Latium’s hosts are here,
Coras, Catillus, and Camilla leads
Her troops to aid. All couch the levelled spear,
And whirl the dart. Hot waxes on the meads 685
The tramp of hurrying hosts, the snorting of the steeds.

LXXVIII . Each halts within a spear-cast of the foe,
Then, spurring, forward with a shout they dash,
And, darkening heaven, shower the darts like snow.
In front, Tyrrhenus and Aconteus rash
Cross spears, the first to grapple. With a crash, Steed against steed, went ruining. Breast and head Shocked and were shattered. Like the lightning’s flash,
And loud as missile from an engine sped, 694
Hurled far, Aconteus falls, and with a gasp lies dead.

LXXIX . This breaks the line; the Latins turn and fly,
Their shields behind them. On the Trojans go,
Asilas first. And now the gates are nigh;
Once more, with shouts, the Latins face the foe;
These, scared in turn, the slackened reins forego.
So shifts the fight, as on the winding strand
The swelling ocean, with alternate flow,

Foams on the rocks, and curls along the sand, 703
Now sucks the shingle back, and, ebbing, leaves the land.

LXXX . Twice the fierce Tuscans, spurring o'er the fields,
Drive the Rutulians to their walls in flight.
Twice, driven backward, from behind their shields
The victors see the rallying foes unite.
But when the third time, in the fangs of fight,
Man singling man, both armies met to close,
Loud were the groans, and fearful was the sight,
Arms splashed with gore, steeds, riders, friends and foes, 712
Blent in the deadly broil, and fierce the din uprose.

LXXXI . Lo, here, Orsilochns, too faint with fear
To meet fierce Remulus, a distant dart
Hurls at his steed. Beneath the charger's ear
The shaft stands fixt; the beast, with sudden start,
His breast erect, and maddened by the smart,
Rears up, and flings his rider to the ground.
Here brave Iolas, from his friends apart,
Catillus slew; Herminius next he found, 721
Large-hearted, large of limb, and eke in arms renowned.

LXXXII . Bare is his head, with auburn locks aglow,
And bare his shoulders. Wounds to him are vain;
Tower-like he stands, defenceless to the foe.
Through his broad chest the javelin, urged amain,
Pierced him, and quivered, and he writhed with pain,
His giant form bent double. Far and nigh
The dark blood pours in torrents on the plain,
As, dealing havoc with the sword, they vie, 730
And, courting wounds, rush on, a warrior's death to die.

LXXXIII . There, quiver-girt, the Amazonian maid,
One bosom bare, amidst the carnage wheeled,
Camilla, glorying in the war's grim trade.
Her limber darts she scatters o'er the field,

Her arms untired the ponderous axe can wield.
Diana's arrows and the golden bow
Sound at her back. She too, if forced to yield,
Fights as she flies, and well the maid doth know 739
With flying shafts hurled back to stay the following foe.

LXXXIV . Around her, Tulla and Larinia stand,
Tarpeia too, with brazen axe bedight,
Italians all, the choicest of her band,
In peace or war her glory and delight.
So, battling round Hippolyte, unite
Her Thracians, when Thermodon's banks afar Ring with their arms. So rides the maid of might,
Penthesilea, in her conquering car, 748
And hosts, with moon-shaped shields, exulting hail the war.

LXXXV . Whom first, dread maiden, did thy javelin quell?
Whom last? how many in the dust lay low?
Eunæus first, the son of Clytius, fell.
Sheer through his breast, left naked to the blow,
Ploughed the long fir-shaft, as he faced his foe.
Prone falls the warrior, and in deadly stound
Gaspes out his life-blood, and the crimson flow
Spouts forth in torrents, as he bites the ground, 757
And, dying, grasps the spear, and writhes upon the wound.

LXXXVI . Liris anon and Pagasus she slew,
One, flung to earth, and gathering up the rein,
His charger stabbed, the other, as he flew
To aid, and reached his helpless hands in vain,
Amastrus, son of Hippotas, was slain;
Harpalycus, Demophoon, as they fled,
The dread spear caught, and stretched upon the plain,
Tereus and Chromis. For each shaft that sped, 766
Launched from her maiden hand, a Phrygian foe lay dead.

LXXXVII . On Iapygian steed, in arms unknown,

Rode Ornytus, the huntsman. A rough hide,
Stript from a bullock, o'er his back was thrown.
A wolf's huge jaws, with glittering teeth, supplied
His helmet, and a rustic pike he plied.
Him, as he towered, the tallest in the fray,
Wheeling his steed, Camilla unespied
Caught — in the rout 'twas easy — and her prey 775
Pinned, with unpitying spear, and jeered him as he lay.

LXXXVIII . “Ha, Tuscan! thought'st thou 'twas the chase? Thy day
Hath come; a woman shall thy vaunts belie.
Yet take this glory to the grave, and say
'Twas I, the great Camilla, made thee die.”
She spake, and smote Orsilochnus close by,
And Butes, hugest of the Trojan crew.
First Butes falls; just where the neck doth lie,
'Twixt casque and corslet, naked to the view, 784
And leftward droops the shield, the fatal barb goes through.

LXXXIX . Chased by Orsilochnus, afar she wheels
Her seeming flight, wide-circling to and fro,
Till, doubling in a narrower ring, she steals
Inside, and follows on the following foe.
Then, rising steep, while vainly in his woe
He pleads for pity, and entreats her grace,
She swings the battle-axe, and blow on blow
On head and riven helmet heaps apace, 793
And the hot brains and blood are spattered o'er his face.

XC . Next crossed her path, but stood aghast to see,
The son of Aunus, from the mountain-seat
Of Apennine. No mean Ligurian he,
While Fate was kind, and prospered his deceit.
Fearful of death, and hopeless to retreat,
He tries if cunning can avail his need,
And cries aloud, “Good sooth, a wondrous feat!
A woman trusts for glory to her steed. 802

Come down; fight fair afoot, and take the braggart's meed!"

XCI . Down leaps the maid in fury, and her steed
Hands to a comrade, and with arms matched fair,
And dauntless heart, confronts him on the mead,
Her shield unblazoned, and her falchion bare.
He, vainly glorying in his fancied snare,
Reins round in haste, and, spurring, strives to flee.
"Fool," cries Camilla, "let thy pride beware.
Think not to palm thy father's tricks on me, 811
Nor hope with craft like this thy lying sire to see."

XCII . So spake she, and on flying feet afire
Outruns his steed, and stands athwart the way,
Then grasps the reins, and deals the wretch his hire,
Doomed with his life-blood for his craft to pay.
So on a dove, amid the clouds astray,
Down swoops the sacred falcon through the sky
From some tall cliff, and fastens on his prey,
And grips, and rends, and sucks the life-blood dry; 820
The feathers, foul with blood, come, fluttering down from high.

XCIII . Nor Jove meanwhile with unregarding ken,
Throned on Olympus, doth the scene survey.
Watchful of all, the Sire of gods and men
Stirs up the Tuscan Tarchon to the fray,
And plies the war-goad with no gentle sway.
He through the squadrons on his steed aflame
Rides 'mid the carnage, where the ranks give way;
Now chides, now cheers, and calling each by name, 829
Re-forms the broken lines, and reinspires the tame.

XCIV . "Cowards, why faint ye, Tuscans but in name?
Fie! shall a woman scatter you in flight?
O, slack! O, never to be stung to shame!
What use of weapons, if ye fear to fight?
No laggards ye for amorous jousts at night,

Or Bacchic revels, when the fife ye hear.
The feast and wine-cup — these are your delight;
For these ye linger, till the approving seer 838
Calls to the grove's deep shade, where bleeds the fattened steer.”

XCV . Then, spurring forth, himself prepared to die,
He dashed at Venulus, unhorsed his prize,
And bore him on his saddle-bow. A cry
Goes up, and all the Latins turn their eyes.
Swift with his prey the fiery Tarchon flies,
And, while the steel-head from his spear he rends,
Each chink and crevice in his armour tries,
To deal the death-blow. He, as fierce, contends, 847
And, countering force with force, his naked throat defends.

XCVI . As when a golden eagle, high in air,
Wreathed with a serpent, fastens, as she flies,
With feet that clutch, and taloned claws that tear.
Coil writhed in coil, the roughening scales uprise,
The crest points up, the hissing tongue defies.
She with sharp beak still rends the struggling prey,
And beats the air. So Tarchon with his prize
Through Tibur's host exulting speeds away. 856
With cheers the Tuscans charge, and hail their chief's essay.

XCVII . Now, due to fate, aloof with lifted lance,
The crafty Aruns round Camilla wheels,
And tries where fortune lends the readiest chance.
Oft as she charges, where the war-shout peals,
He slips unseen, and follows on her heels.
When back she runs, triumphant from the foe,
He shifts the rein, and from the conflict steals.
Now here, now there, he doubles to and fro, 865
And shakes his felon spear, but hesitates to throw.

XCVIII . Lo, Chloreus, priest of Cybele, aglow
In Phrygian armour, gorgeous to behold,

Urges his foaming charger at the foe,
All decked in feathered chain-work, linked with gold.
Cretan his shafts, his bow of Lycian mould.
Dark blue and foreign purple clothed his breast,
Golden his casque and bow; his mantle's fold
Of yellow saffron knots of gold compressed, 874
And buskins bound his knees, and broidered was his vest.

XCIX . Him the fierce huntress, whether fain the shrine
To deck with trophies, or with envious eyes
Wishful herself in Trojan arms to shine,
Marks in the strife; at him alone she flies,
Proud, like a woman, of her fancied prize.
Blindly she runs, uncautious of the snare,
When, darting from the ambush, where he lies,
The moment snatched, false Aruns shakes his spear, 883
And thus, with measured aim, invokes the Gods with prayer.

C . "O Phoebus, guardian of Soracte's steep,
Whom first we honour, to whose sacred name,
Thy votaries, we, the blazing pine-wood heap,
And, firm in faith, pass through the smouldering flame,
Grant that our arms may wipe away this shame.
Trophies, nor spoils, nor plunder from the prey
Be mine; I look to other deeds for fame.
If wound of mine this hateful pest shall slay, 892
Home will I gladly go, and fameless quit the fray."

CI . Apollo heard, and granted half his prayer,
And half he scattered to the winds. To slay
With sudden stroke Camilla unaware
He gave, but gave not his returning day;
The breezes puffed the bootless wish away.
Shrill sang the lance; each Volscian eye and heart
Turned to the queen. The weapon on its way, —
The rush of air she heeds not, till the dart 901
Strikes home, and, staying, draws the life-blood from her heart.

CII . Up run her friends, the fainting queen to aid,
More scared than all, in fear and joy amain,
False Aruns flies, nor dares to face the maid,
Or trust the venture of his spear again.
As guilty wolf, some steer or shepherd slain,
Slinks to the hills, ere hostile darts pursue,
And clasps his tail between his thighs, full fain
To seek the woods, so Aruns shrank from view, 910
Sore scared and glad to fly, and in the crowd withdrew.

CIII . With dying hand she strives to pluck the spear:
Deep 'twixt the rib-bones in the wound it lies.
Bloodless she faints; her features, late so fair,
Fade, as the crimson from the pale cheeks flies,
And cold and misty wax the drooping eyes.
Then, with quick gasps, and groaning from her breast,
She calls to faithful Acca, ere she dies, —
Acca, her truest comrade and her best, 919
The partner of her cares, — and breathes a last request.

CIV . “Sister, 'tis past; the bitter shaft apace Consumes me; all is growing dark. Go, tell
This news to Turnus; bid him take my place,
And keep these Trojans from the town. Farewell.”
So saying, she dropped the bridle, as she fell.
Death's creeping chills the loosened limbs o'erspread.
Down dropped the weapons she had borne so well,
The neck drooped, slackened; and she bowed her head, 928
And the disdainful soul went groaning to the dead.

CV . Up rose a shout, Camilla fall'n, that beat
The golden stars, and fiercer waxed the fray.
On press the host, in serried ranks complete,
Trojans, Arcadians, Tuscans in array.
High on a hill, fair Opis watched the day,
Set there by Trivia, undisturbed till now,

When, lo, amid the tumult far away
She sees Camilla, in the dust laid low, 937
Deep from her breast she sighs, and thus in words of woe:

CVI . “Cruel, too cruel, is thy forfeit paid,
Poor maiden, who the Trojan arms would’st dare;
Nor aught availed thee, in the woodland glade
To serve Diana, and her arms to wear.
Yet not unhonoured in thy death, nor bare
Of fame she leaves thee; nor in after day
Shall vengeance fail thy prowess to declare.
Whoso hath dared thy sacred form to slay, 946
His blood shall rue the deed, and fit atonement pay.”

CVII . Beneath the hill a barrow chanced to stand, Heaped there of old, and holm-oaks frowned beside Dercennus’ tomb, who ruled Laurentum’s land.
Here, lightning swift, the lovely Nymph espied,
In shining arms, and puffed with empty pride,
False Aruns. “Caitiff! dost thou think to flee?
Why keep aloof? Turn hitherward!” she cried, “Come here, and die! Camilla claims her fee. 955
Must Cynthia waste her shafts on worthless knaves like thee?”

CVIII . Plucking the arrow from her case, she drew
The bow, full-stretched, till both the horns unite.
Both arms raised level, ere the missile flew,
Her left hand touched the iron point, the right,
Pressed to her nipple, strained the bow-string tight.
He hears the arrow whistle as it flies,
And feels the wound. Sweeping on amain, [word missing]
Forsakes him. Groaning, with a gasp, he dies. 964
Upsoars the gladdening Nymph, and seeks the Olympian skies.

CIX . First flies Camilla’s troop, their mistress slain,
Then, routed, the Rutulian ranks give way,
And fierce Atinas gallops from the plain,

And scattered chiefs and squadrons in dismay
Spur towards the town for shelter from the fray.
None dares that murderous onset of the foe
To stem with javelins, nor their charge to stay.
Slack from their fainting shoulders hangs the bow, 973
The clattering horse-hoofs shake the crumbling ground below.

CX . Dark rolls the dust-cloud, to the town-walls driven,
And mothers on the watch-towers, pale with fear,
Smite on their breasts, and shriek aloud to heaven.
These, bursting in, their foemen in the rear
Crush in the crowd, and slaughter with the spear,
Slain in the gateway — miserably slain! —
Their walls in sight, their happy homes so near.
Those bar the gates, while comrades on the plain 982
Stretch their imploring hands, and call to them in vain.

CXI . Then piteous waxed the carnage by the gate,
Some storming, some defending. These without,
In sight of parents, weeping at their fate,
Roll down the moat, swept headlong by the rout,
Or charge the battered doorposts with a shout.
The very matrons, at their country's call,
Their javelins hurl. Charr'd stakes and oak-staves stout Serve them for swords. Forth rush they, one and all, 991
Fir'd by Camilla's deeds, to save the town or fall.

CXII . Meanwhile to Turnus, in the woods afar,
Came Acca, and the bitter news made plain,
And told the chief the tumult of the war, —
The panic and the rout — the Volscian train
Swept from the battle, and Camilla slain.
The foemen, flushed with conquest, far and near
In hot pursuit, and sweeping on amain,
And all the city now aghast with fear: — 1000
Such was the dolorous tale that filled the warrior's ear.

CXIII . Then, mad with fury, in revengeful mood
(For Jove is stern, and so the Fates ordain),
He quits his mountain-ambush and the wood.
Scarce, out of sight, had Turnus reached the plain,
When, issuing forth, Æneas hastes to gain
The pass, left open, climbs the neighbouring height,
And leaves the tangled forest. Thus the twain,
Each near to each, — the middle space is slight, — 1009
Townward their troops lead on, and hail the proffered fight.

CXIV . At once Æneas on the dusty plain Marks the Laurentine columns far away.
At once, in arms, fierce Turnus knows again
The dread Æneas, and he hears the neigh
Of steeds, and tramp of footmen in array.
Then each the fight had ventured, as they stood,
But rosy Phoebus, with declining day,
His steeds was bathing in the Iberian flood; 1018
So by the walls they camp, and make the ramparts good.

BOOK TWELVE

ARGUMENT

Turnus realises that he must now redeem his promise to meet Æneas in single combat, and refuses to be dissuaded either by Latinus or by Amata (1-90). The challenge is sent, and the two make ready. Lists are prepared and spectators gather (91-153). Juno warns the Nymph Juturna to aid her brother Turnus (154-180). After the terms of combat have been ratified by oath and sacrifice, Juturna, in disguise, by an opportune omen induces one of the assembled Latins to break the truce and kill a Trojan (181-310). Æneas is wounded while endeavouring to restrain his men from reprisals, and the fray becomes general. Turnus deals death among the Trojans (311-441). Æneas is miraculously healed, and at first pursues only Turnus — who is carried off by Juturna (442-561), but presently gives rein to his anger and slays indiscriminately, until by Venus' advice he attacks the city. Amata kills herself, believing Turnus dead (562-702). Turnus' eyes are opened. Seeing the city outworks in flames, he returns and proclaims himself ready to meet Æneas, who, welcoming the challenge, rushes forward. All eyes are riveted on the two, when Turnus' sword breaks, and once more he flees, pursued by Æneas. Juturna gives Turnus another sword, and Venus restores to Æneas his spear (703-918). Follows a colloquy between Jupiter and Juno. — Turnus must die. Æneas shall marry Lavinia and be king. But the new nation must keep the ancient rites and names of Latium, and be called not Trojans but Latins. Juno yields, and Jupiter warns Juturna to leave the battle (919-1026). Turnus, being beside himself, after a last superhuman effort, is struck down. Æneas is about to spare his life, when he sees upon his shoulder the spoils of Pallas, and kills him (1027-1107).

I . When Turnus saw the Latins faint and fly,
Crushed by the War-God, and his pledge reclaimed,
Himself the mark of every scornful eye,

Rage unappeasable his pride inflamed.
As when a lion, in the breast sore maimed
In Punic fields, uprousing, shakes his mane,
And snaps the shaft that felon hands had aimed,
His mouth all bloody, as he roars with pain, 1
So Turnus blazed with wrath, as thus in scornful strain

II . He hailed the king: “Not Turnus stops the way;
No cause have these their challenge to forego,
Poor Trojan cowards; I accept the fray,
Sire, be the compact hallowed; be it so.
Or I, while Latins sit and see the show,
Will hurl to Hell this Dardan thief abhorred,
This Asian runaway, and on the foe
Refute the common slander with the sword, 10
Or he, as victor, reign and be Lavinia’s lord.”

III . Then, calm of soul, Latinus made reply,
“O gallant youth, the more thy heart is fain
In fierceness to excel, the more should I Weigh well the risks and measure loss with gain.
To thee belong thy father Daunus’ reign
And captured towns. Good will have I and gold,
And other maids our Latin homes contain,
Of noble birth and lovely to behold. 19
Hear now, and let plain speech the thankless truth unfold.

IV . “To none of former suitors was I free
To wed my daughter, so the voice ordained
Of gods and men consenting. Love for thee,
And sympathy for kindred blood hath gained
The mastery, and a weeping wife constrained.
I robbed the husband of the bride he wooed,
Took impious arms, and plighted faith disdained.
Ah me! what wars, what bitter fates ensued, 28
Thou, Turnus, know’st too well, who first hast felt the feud.

V . “Scarce now, twice worsted in the desperate fray,
Our walls can guard what Latin hopes remain,
And, choked with Latin corpses, day by day,
Old Tiber’s stream runs purple to the main,
And Latin bones are whitening all the plain.
Why shifts my frenzied purpose to and fro?
Why change and change? If, maugre Turnus slain,
I deign to welcome as a friend his foe, 37
Why not, while Turnus lives, the needless strife forego?

VI . “What will Rutulian kinsmen, what will all Italia say, if (Chance the deed forefend!)
I leave thee, cheated of my care, to fall,
The daughter’s lover, and the father’s friend?
O, weigh the risks that on the war attend;
Pity the parent in his sad, old age,
Left at far Ardea to lament thine end.”
Thus he; but naught fierce Turnus can assuage; 46
The healing hand but chafes, and words augment his rage.

VII . Then he, scarce gathering utterance, spake again,
“Good Sire, thy trouble for my sake forego;
Leave me the price of glory — to be slain.
I too can hurl, nor feeble is my blow,
The whistling shaft, that lays the foeman low,
And drinks his life-blood. Vain shall be his prayer.
No goddess mother shall be there, to throw
Her mist around him, with a woman’s care, 55
And screen her darling son with empty shades of air.”

VIII . The Queen, with death before her, filled with fears, Wept sore and checked the fiery suitor’s way.
“O Turnus! if thou heed’st me, by these tears; —
Hope of my age, Latinus’ strength and stay,
Prop of our falling house! one boon I pray;
Forbear the fight. What fate awaiteth thee,
Awaits me too. If Trojans win the day,

With thee I'll leave the loathed light, nor see 64
Æneas wed my child, a captive slave, as she."

IX . With tears Lavinia heard her mother speak.
A crimson blush her glowing face o'erspread,
And hot fires kindled on her burning cheek.
As Indian ivory, when stained with red,
Or lilies, mixt with roses in a bed,
So flushed the maid, with varying thoughts distrest.
He, wild with love, upon Lavinia fed
His constant gaze, but maddening with unrest, 73
Burned for the fight still more, and thus the Queen addressed:

X . "Vex me not, mother, marching to the fray,
With these thy tears and bodings of despair.
'Tis not in me the fatal hour to stay.
Thou, Idmon, to the Phrygian tyrant bear
The unwelcome word: to-morrow let him spare
To lead his Teucrians to the fight. Each side
Shall rest awhile; when morning shines in air,
His blood or mine the quarrel shall decide, 82
And he or I shall win, whose prowess earns, the bride."

XI . Thus speaking, to his home the chieftain hies
And bids his steeds be harnessed for the fight:
Soon for the pleasure of their master's eyes
They stand before him, neighing in their might.
In days of old from Orithyia bright
To King Pylumus came those coursers twain,
Swifter than breezes and than snow more white;
His ready grooms attend, a nimble train, 91
And clap the sounding breast and comb the abundant mane.

XII . Himself the shining corselet, stiff with gold
And orichalcum, on his shoulders laid.
His sword and shield he fitted to his hold,
And donned the helm, with crimson plumes arrayed,

The sword the Fire-King for his sire had made,
And dipped still glowing in the Stygian flood,
Last, the strong spear-beam in his hand he swayed
(Against a pillar in the house it stood), 100
Auruncan Actor's spoils, and shook the quivering wood,

XIII . And shouted, "Now, O never known to fail
Thy master's call, my trusty spear, I throw
The hour is come. Once, mightiest under mail,
Did Actor wield thee; Turnus wields thee now.
Grant this strong hand to lay the foeman low,
This Phrygian eunuch of his arms to spoil,
And rend his shattered breastplate with a blow;
Dragged in the dust, his dainty curls to soil, 109
Hot from the crisping tongs, and wet with myrrh and oil."

XIV . Such furies urge him, and, ablaze with ire,
His hot face sparkles, and his eyes burn bright,
And from his eye-balls leaps the living fire;
As when a bull, in prelude for the fight,
Roars terribly, and fills the hinds with fright,
And, butting at a chance-met tree, would try
To vent his fury on his horns of might,
And with his fierce hoofs flings the sand on high, 118
And gores the empty air, and challenges the sky.

XV . Nor less, meanwhile, and terrible in arms, —
The arms that Venus to her son doth lend, — Æneas rages, and the War-God warms.
Pleased with the challenge, singly to contend,
And bring the weary warfare to an end,
His friends he cheers, and calms Iulus' care,
Unfolding Fate, then heralds hastes to send,
His answer to the Latin King to bear: 127
The challenge he accepts, the terms of peace are fair.

XVI . Scarce Morning glimmered on the mountains grey,

And Phoebus' steeds, uprising from the main,
With lifted nostrils breathed approaching day.
Mixt with the Trojans, the Rutulian train,
Beneath the lofty town-walls on the plain
Mark out the lists, and mid-way in the ring,
Their braziers set, as common rites ordain.
These, apron-girt and crowned with vervain, bring 136
Fire for the turf-piled hearths, and water from the spring.

XVII . Forth, as to war, Ausonia's spear-armed host,
Trojans and Tuscans, to the field proceed,
And to and fro, in gold and purple, post
Asilas brave, Assaracus's seed,
Mnestheus, Messapus, tamer of the steed.
Back step both armies at the trumpet's call,
Their spears in earth, their shields upon the mead.
An unarmed crowd, old men and matrons, all 145
Stand by the lofty gates, and throng the towers and wall.

XVIII . But Juno, seated on a neighbouring height,
Now Alban called, then nameless and unknown,
Gazed from its summit on the field of fight,
And, musing, on the marshalled hosts looked down
Of Troy and Latium, and Latinus' town,
Then straight — a goddess to a goddess — spake
To Turnus' sister, who the sway doth own
Of sounding river and of stagnant lake, 154
Raised by the King of air, as yielding for his sake.

XIX . "Nymph, pride of rivers, darling of my love,
Thou know'st, Juturna, how to all whoe'er
Of Latin maidens climbed the couch of Jove,
I thee preferred, and gave his courts to share.
Learn now thy woe, lest I the blame should bear.
While Fate and Fortune smiled on Latium's sway,
Thy walls I saved, and Turnus was my care.
Now in ill hour I see him tempt the fray; 163

Fate and the foe speed on the inevitable day.

XX . “Not I this fight, this wager can behold.
Thou, if thou durst, thy brother’s doom arrest.
Go; luck perchance may follow thee.” Fast rolled Juturna’s tears, and thrice she smote her breast.
“No time to weep,” said Juno, “speed thy quest,
And save thy brother, if thou canst, ere dead,
Or wake the war, and rend the league unblest;
'Tis I who bid thee to be bold.” She said, 172
And left her, tost with doubt, and full of wildering dread.

XXI . Forth come the Kings; Latinus, proudly borne High in his four-horse chariot, shines afar.
Twelve gilded rays the monarch’s brows adorn,
His Sire’s, the Sun-God’s. Wielding as for war
Two spears, comes Turnus in his two-horse car.
There, Rome’s great founder, doth Æneas ride,
With dazzling shield, bright-shining as a star,
And arms divine, and at his father’s side 181
Ascanius takes his place, Rome’s second hope and pride.

XXII . And clad in robes of purest white, the priest
Leads forth the youngling of a bristly swine,
And two-year sheep, by shearer’s hands unfleec’d.
And they, with eyes turned to the dawn divine,
Bared the bright steel, the victim’s brow to sign,
And strewed the cakes of salted meal, and poured
On blazing altars bowls of sacred wine;
And good Æneas drew his glittering sword, 190
And thus, with pious prayer, the immortal gods adored:

XXIII . “Witness, O Sun, thou Earth attest my prayer,
For whom I toil. Thou, Jove, supreme in sway,
And thou, great Juno, pleased at length to spare.
O mighty Mars, whose nod directs the fray;
Springs, Streams, and Powers whom Air and Sea obey.

If Turnus win — O let the vow remain —
Humbly to King Evander, as they may,
Troy's sons shall fly, Iulus quit the reign, 199
Nor seed of mine e'er vex the Latin field again.

XXIV . “But else, if victory smile upon my sword
(As rather deem I, and may Heaven decree),
I wish not Troy to be Italia's lord,
Nor claim the crown; let each, unquelled and free,
In deathless league on equal terms agree.
Arms, empire let Latinus keep; I claim
To bring our rites and deities. For me
My Teucrian friends another town shall frame, 208
And bless the rising towers with fair Lavinia's name.”

XXV . Thus first Æneas; then with uplift eyes,
His right hand stretching to the stars in prayer,
“Hear me, Æneas,” old Latinus cries,
“By the same Earth, and Sea and Stars I swear,
By the twin offering of Latona fair,
And two-faced Janus, and Hell's powers malign,
And Dis unpitying; let Jove give ear,
The Sire whose bolt the solemn league doth sign, 217
Witness these fires and gods, — my hand is on the shrine, —

XXVI . “No time with Latins shall this league unbind,
Whate'er the issue, or the peace confound,
No force shall shake the purpose of my mind.
Nay — though the circling Ocean burst its bound,
And all the Earth were in a deluge drowned,
And Heaven with Hell should mingle. Sure as now
This sceptre” (haply in his hand was found
The Royal sceptre) “nevermore, I trow, 226
Shall bourgeon with fresh leaves, or spread a shadowing bough,

XXVII . “Since once in forests, from its parent tree
Lopped clean away, the woodman stripped it bare

Of boughs and leaves, now fashioned, as ye see,
And cased in brass by cunning craftsman's care,
For fathers of the Latin realm to bear.”
So they, amid their chiefest, Sire with Sire, Confirm the league. These o'er the flames prepare
To slay the victims, and, as rites require, 235
The living entrails tear, and feed the sacred fire.

XXVIII . Long while unequal to Rutulian eyes
The combat seemed, and trouble tossed them sore,
Now more, beholding nearer, how in size
And strength the champions differed, yea, and more,
Beholding Turnus, as he moved before
The altars, sad and silently, and seeks
With downcast eyes Heaven's favour to implore,
The wanness of his youthful frame, that speaks 244
Of health and hope now fled, the pallor of his cheeks.

XXIX . Soon as Juturna saw the whispers grow
From tongue to tongue, and marked the changing tone,
The hearts of people wavering to and fro,
Amidst them, — now in form of Camers known,
Great Camers, sprung from grandsires of renown,
His father famed for many a brave emprise,
Himself as famed for exploits of his own, —
Amidst them, mistress of her part, she flies, 253
And scatters words of doubt, and many a dark surmise.

XXX . “Shame, will ye risk, Rutulians, for his host
The life of one? In number, strength and show
Do we not match them? Those are all they boast, Trojans, Arcadians and Etruscans. Lo,
Fight we by turns, each scarce can find a foe.
He to his gods, whose shrines he dies to shield,
Will rise, and praised will be his name below.
We, reft of home, to tyrant lords shall yield, 262
And toil as slaves, who sit so slackly on the field.”

XXXI . So saying, Juturna to the youths imparts
Fresh rage, and murmurs through the concourse run,
And changed are Latin and Laurentian hearts,
And they, who lately sought the strife to shun,
And longed for rest, now wish the league undone,
And, pitying Turnus, wrongly doomed to die,
Call out for arms. And now, her work begun,
Juturna shows a lying sign on high, 271
That shakes Italian hearts, and cheats the wondering eye.

XXXII . Jove's golden eagle through the crimson skies
In chase of clanging marsh-fowl, swooped in flight
Down on a swan, and trussed the noble prize.
The Latins gaze, when lo, a wondrous sight!
Back wheels the flock, and all with screams unite,
And darkening, as a cloud, in dense array
Press on the foe, till, overborne by might,
And yielding to sheer weight, he drops the prey 280
Into the stream below, and cloudward soars away.

XXXIII . With shouts the glad Rutulians hail the sign,
And lift their hands. Then spake the seer straightway, Tolumnius: "Welcome, welcome, powers divine!
'Twas this— 'twas this I longed for, day by day.
To arms! 'Tis I, Tolumnius, lead the way.
Poor souls! whom yon strange pirate would enslave,
Like feeble birds, and make your coast a prey.
He too shall fly, and vanish o'er the wave. 289
Stand close and fight as one, your captive king to save."

XXXIV . He spake and hurled his javelin at the foes, Advancing. Shrill the cornel hissed, and flew True to its quarry. Then a shout uprose,
And the ranks wavered, and hearts throbbed anew
With ardour, as the gathering tumult grew.
On went the missile to where, side by side,

Nine brethren stood, of comely form, whom, true
To her Gylippus, bare a Tuscan bride, 298
Nine tall Arcadian sons, in bloom of youthful pride.

XXXV . One, where the belt chafes, and the strong clasp bites
The brodered edges, — comeliest of the band,
And sheathed in shining mail — the steel-head smites,
And rives the ribs, and rolls him on the sand.
Blind with hot rage, his brethren, sword in hand,
Or snatching missiles, to avenge the slain,
Rush to the charge. Laurentum's ranks withstand
Their onset, and a deluge sweeps the plain, 307
Trojans, Agylla's bands, Arcadia's glittering train.

XXXVI . One passion burns, — to let the sword decide.
Strip stand the altars, and the shrines are bare;
Dark drives the storm of javelins far and wide,
The iron tempest hurtles in the air,
And bowls and censers from the hearths they tear.
Himself Latinus, flying, bears afar
His home-gods, outraged by the league's misfare.
Some leap to horse, and others yoke the car, 316
Or bare the glittering sword, and hurry to the war.

XXXVII . Aulestes first, a king with kingly crown, Messapus scares, and, spurring forward, fain
To break the treaty, rides the Tuscan down.
He, bating ground, falls back, and hurled amain
Against the altars, pitches on the plain.
Up comes Messapus, with his beam-like spear,
And smites him, pleading sorely but in vain,
Steep-rising heavily smites him, with a jeer, 325
“He hath it; Heaven hath gained a better victim here.”

XXXVIII . Up Latins rush, and strip the limbs yet warm,
A brand half-burnt fierce Corynoeus there
Flings full at Ebusus, as with lifted arm

He nears him, and the long beard, all aflare,
Shines crackling, with a smell of burning hair.
He with his left hand, following up the throw,
Grasps the long locks, and, planting firm and fair
His knee, beneath him pins the prostrate foe, 334
And drives the stark sword home, so deadly is the blow.

XXXIX . Then, fired with fury, Podalirius flew
At shepherd Alsus, as he rushed among
The foremost. With his naked sword he drew Behind him close, and o'er his foeman hung.
He turning round his broad axe backward swung,
And clave the chin and forehead. Left and right
The dark blood o'er the spattered arms outsprung.
Hard rest and iron slumber seal his sight, 343
The drooping eyelids close on everlasting night.

XL . Unarmed, Æneas, with uncovered brow,
Stretched out his hands, and shouted to his train:
“Where rush ye, men? what sudden discord now
Is this? Be calm; your idle wrath refrain.
The truce is struck; the treaty's terms are plain.
To me belongs the battle, not to you.
Give way to me, nor fret and fume in vain.
This hand shall make the treaty firm and true. 352
These rites, this solemn pact give Turnus for my due.”

XLI . So spake he, fain the tumult to allay,
And scarce had ceased, when, whistling as it flew,
A feathered shaft came hurtling on its way,
And smote the good Æneas; whose, and who
That shaft had sped, what wind had borne it true,
What chance with fame Ausonia's host had crowned,
What God, perhaps, had aided them — none knew.
The glory of that noble deed was drowned, 361
And none was found to boast of great Æneas' wound.

XLII . When Turnus saw the Trojan prince retire,
The chiefs bewildered, and their hearts unstrung,
Hope unexpected set his soul on fire,
And, calling for his steeds and arms, he sprung
Upon his chariot, and the reins outflung.
On drives he; many a hero of renown
Sinks, crushed to death; the dying roll among
The dead; whole ranks beneath his wheels go down, 370
And fast at flying hosts the fliers' spears are thrown.

XLIII . As when grim Mars, by Hebrus' icy flood,
Clashing his brazen buckler, drives apace
His fierce steeds, maddening with the lust of blood;
They o'er the plain the flying winds outrace,
And with their trampling groan the fields of Thrace;
And round the War-God his attendants throng,
Hatred, and Treachery and Fear's dark face;
So Turnus drove the battling ranks among, 379
And lashed his smoking steeds, and waved the whistling thong.

XLIV . In piteous sort he tramples on the slain;
The flying horse-hoofs spirt the crimson dew,
And tread the gore down in the sandy plain.
Now, man to man, at Thamyris he flew,
And Pholus. Sthenelus aloof he slew;
Aloof the two Imbracidæ lay dead,
Glaucus and Lades, of the Lycian crew,
Both armed alike, whom Imbracus had bred 388
To fight, or on swift steeds the flying winds to head.

XLV . Elsewhere afield, amid the foremost, fought
The brave Eumedes. (From the loins he came
Of noble Dolon, and to war he brought
The borrowed lustre of his grandsire's name,
The strength and spirit of his sire of fame,
Who for his meed, when offering to explore
The Danaan camp, Pelides' car would claim.

Poor fool! Tydides paid the boaster's score, 397
And for Achilles' steeds he hankers now no more.)

XLVI . Him Turnus sees, and through the void afar
Speeds a light lance, then bids the coursers stand,
And, lightly leaping from his two-horsed car,
Stamps on his neck, fall'n breathless on the sand,
And wrests the shining dagger from his hand.
Deep in his throat he deals a deadly wound,
And cries, "Now, Trojan, take the wished-for land.
Lie there, and measure the Hesperian ground; 406
Their meed, who tempt my sword; thus city-walls they found."

XLVII . Asbutes, Sybaris and Chloerus bleed,
Dares the bold, Orsilochus the brave,
Thymoetes, pitched from off his plunging steed.
As on the Ægean when the North-winds rave,
And the fierce gale rolls shoreward wave on wave,
And drives the cloud-rack through the sky; so these Shrank back from Turnus, as his path he clave,
Urged by his impulse, and each turns and flees; 415
Loose streams his horsehair crest, blown backward by the breeze.

XLVIII . His fiery onset, and his shouts of pride
Bold Phlegeus brooked not, but himself he flung
Before the car, and caught and turned aside
The foaming steeds. But while, thus dragged along,
Grasping the bridle, on the yoke he hung,
His shieldless side the broad-tipt javelin found,
And pierced, and, staying, to the corslet clung,
With linen folds and brazen links twice bound. 424
And lightly scored the skin, and grazed him with the wound.

XLIX . His shield before him, at the foe he made,
And drew his short sword, turning sharply round,
And trusted to the naked steel for aid,
When wheel and axle, urged with onward bound,

Struck down and dashed him headlong to the ground,
And Turnus, reaching forward, sword in hand,
Room 'twixt the hauberk and the helmet found
And lopped the head with his avenging brand, 433
And left the bleeding trunk to welter on the sand.

L . While Turnus thus dealt havoc as he flew,
Back with Æneas from the combat went Ascanius, Mnestheus, and Achates true,
And helped the bleeding hero to his tent.
Faltering and pale, as on the spear he leant,
Fretting, and tugging at the shaft in vain,
Quick help he summons, — with the broadsword's rent
The wound to widen, and the lurking bane 442
Cut out, and send him back to battle on the plain.

LI . Iapis, son of Iasus, was there,
The best-beloved of Phoebus. Long ago
Apollo, fired to see a youth so fair,
His arts and gifts had offered to bestow,
His augury, his lyre, his sounding bow.
But he, in hope a bed-ridden parent's days
To lengthen, sought the leech's craft to know,
The power of simples, and the silent praise 451
Of healing arts, and scorned the great Apollo's bays.

LII . Dark-frowning stands, still propt upon his spear,
Æneas, heedless of his friends around
And young Iulus, weeping in his fear.
Tight-girt like Pæon, with the robes upbound,
Beside him kneels the aged leech renowned.
With busy haste Apollo's salves he tries,
In vain, in vain he coaxes in the wound
The stubborn steel, the pincer's teeth he plies: 460
Fate bides averse, his help the healing god denies;

LIII . And more and more, along the echoing wold,

The war's wild horror thickens on the ear,
And storm-like, in the darkened skies uprolled,
The driving dust-clouds show the danger near.
Now horsemen, galloping in haste, appear,
And darts and arrows, as the foe draw nigh,
Fall in the tents, and fill the camp with fear,
And a grim clamour mounts the vaulted sky, 469
The shouts of those that fight, the groans of those that die.

LIV . Then, Venus, for her darling filled with grief,
A stalk of dittany on Ida's crown
Seeks out, and gathers, for his wound's relief,
The flower of purple and the leaves of down.
(To wounded wild-goats 'twas a plant well-known)
This brings the Goddess, veiled in mist, and brews
In a bright bowl a mixture of her own,
And, steeped in water from the stream, she strews 478
Soft balm of fragrant scent, and sweet ambrosial dews.

LV . Therewith the leech, unwitting, rinsed the wound,
And the pain fled, and all the blood was stayed.
Out came the dart, and he again was sound.
"Arms! bring his arms! Why stand ye thus afraid?"
Iapis cries, and, foremost to upbraid,
Inflames them to the fight. "No hand of mine,
No power of leech-craft, nor a mortal's aid
This healing wrought; a greater power divine, 487
Æneas, sends thee back, by greater deeds to shine."

LVI . He, hot for fight, the golden cuishes bound,
And shook the spear, then put his corslet on,
And strung the shield, and in his arms enwound,
And gently through the helmet kissed his son.
"Learn, boy, of me, how gallant deeds are done,
Fortune of others. I will guard thee now,
And lead to fame. Let riper manhood con
Thy kinsmen's deeds. Remember, and be thou 496

What uncle Hector was, and what thy sire is now.”

LVII . He spake, and swinging his tremendous spear,
Swept through the gate; then Antheus, with his train,
Rushed forth, and Mnestheus. With a general cheer
Forth pours the host; a dust-cloud hides the plain;
Earth, startled by their trampling, throbs in pain.
Pale Turnus saw them from a distant height,
The Ausonians saw, and terror chilled each vein.
Juturna heard, and knew the noise of fight, 505
And from the van drew back, and shuddered with affright.

LVIII . On swept he, and the blackening host behind.
As when from sea a storm-cloud sweeps to shore,
The weather breaking, and the trembling hind
Foresees afar the ruin and the roar,
The shattered orchards, and the crops no more,
While, landward borne, the muttering winds betray
The coming storm; so down the Trojan bore
Against the foemen, and in firm array 514
All knit their serried ranks, and gladden at the fray.

LIX . Thymbræus smites Osiris, Mnestheus fells Archetius; by Achates smitten sheer, Falls Epulo, and Gyas Ufens quells.
Falls, too, Tolumnius, the sacred seer,
Who first against the foemen hurled his spear.
Uprose a shout, and the Rutulians reeled
And fled. Æneas, on the dusty rear
Close-trampling, scorns to follow them afield, 523
Or fight with those that stand, or slaughter those that yield.

LX . Turnus alone, amid the blinding gloom,
He tracks and traces, searching far and near,
Turnus alone he summons to his doom.
Juturna sees, and smit with sudden fear,
Unseats Metiscus, Turnus’ charioteer,

And flings him down, and leaves him on the plain,
Then takes his place, and, urging their career,
Loose o'er the coursers shakes the waving rein; 532
Metiscus' voice and form, Metiscus' arms remain.

LXI . Like a black swallow, as she flies among
A rich man's halls, or in the courts is found
In quest of dainties for her twittering young.
And now in empty cloisters, now around
The fishpools circles, while the shrill notes sound.
So now Juturna, through the midmost foes,
Whirled in the rapid chariot, scours the ground;
Now here, now there triumphant Turnus shows, 541
Now, flying, wheels aloof, nor suffers him to close.

LXII . So wheels in turn Æneas to and fro,
And tracks his man, and through the war's wild tide
Calls him aloud. Oft as he marks his foe,
And, running, tries to match the coursers' stride,
So oft Juturna wheels the team aside.
What shall he do? While wavering thus in vain,
As diverse thoughts his doubtful mind divide,
A steel-tipt dart Messapus — one of twain — 550
Aims true, and hurls it forth, uprunning on the plain.

LXIII . Æneas paused, behind his buckler bent.
On came the javelin, and the cone was shorn
From off his helmet, and the plume was rent.
Foiled by this treachery, as he marked with scorn
The steeds and chariot from the combat borne,
He blazed with ire, and, calling on again
Jove and the altars of the truce forsworn,
Rushed on, thrice terrible, and o'er the plain 559
Dealt indiscriminate death, and gave his wrath the rein.

LXIV . What heavenly muse can sing, what god can say
The scenes of horror wrought on either side,

The varied slaughter of that fatal day,
What chiefs were chased along the field, and died,
As Turnus now, and now the Trojan plied
His murderous sword? Jove, could'st thou deem it right
So dire a broil such peoples should divide,
Two jarring nations met in deadly fight, 568
Whom leagues of lasting love were destined to unite?

LXV . Æneas first (that fight 'twas first that stayed
The Teucrian rout) caught Suero on the side.
Where death is quickest, 'twixt the ribs his blade,
Deep in the framework of the breast, he plied.
Then Turnus slew Diores; close beside,
His brother Amycus from his steed he tore;
One by the spear, one by the sword-cut died.
Their severed heads the ruthless victor bore, 577
Fixt to his flying car, and dripping with the gore.

LXVI . Talus, and Tanais, and Cethegus there
Æneas smote, and poor Onytes slew,
Whom Peridia to Echion bare.
Turnus two Lycian brethren next o'erthrew
From Phoebus' fields, and young Menoetes too
From Arcady, who loathed the war in vain.
Poor was his home, nor rich men's doors he knew.
By fishful Lerna he had earned his gain, 586
Hired was the scanty glebe his father sowed with grain.

Through woodlands parched and groves of crackling bay,
As sweep impetuous from a mountain height
Loud, foaming torrents, that withouten stay
Cleave to the sea their devastating way:
So, while in each full tides of anger flow,
Rush Turnus and Æneas to the fray:
Their tameless breasts with bursting valour glow, 595
On, on they speed amain, nor fear the opposing blow.

LXVIII . There stands Murranus, vaunting in vain joy
His sires, and grandsires, he the princely son
Of Latin monarchs. Him the chief of Troy
Smites with the whirlwind of a monstrous stone,
Huge as a rock. Down from his chariot thrown,
‘Twixt reins and yoke, he tumbles on the sward.
The fierce wheels, thundering onward, beat him down;
His starting steeds, to shun the victor’s sword, 604
Tread on his trampled limbs, unmindful of their lord.

LXIX . Here, fronting Hyllus, as he rushed amain,
Fierce Turnus stood; his levelled spear-head clave
The golden casque, and quivered in his brain.
Nor thee, poor Creteus, though of Greeks most brave,
From Turnus had thy prowess power to save.
Nor aught availed Cupencus’ gods to aid
Against the dread Æneas, as he drave.
Squaring his breast, he met the glittering blade, 613
Nor long his brazen shield the mortal stroke delayed.

LXX . Thee, too, great Æolus, Laurentum’s plain Saw trampled down by Turnus, as he flew,
And stretched at length among the Trojan slain.
Thou diest, whom ne’er could Argive bands subdue,
Nor Peleus’ son, who Priam’s realm o’erthrew.
Thy goal is here; beyond the distant wave,
Beneath the mount where Ida’s fir-trees grew,
High house was thine; high house Lyrnessus gave, 622
Thy home; Laurentum’s soil hath given thee a grave.

LXXI . So met the ranks, and mingled, man with man,
Latins and Dardans in promiscuous throng,
Mnestheus and fierce Serestus in the van,
Messapus, tamer of the steed, and strong Asylas. There in tumult swept along Arcadian horsemen, and the Tuscan train.

No rest is theirs, no respite; loud and long
The conflict rages, as with might and main, 631
Each for his own dear life, the warriors strive and strain.

LXXII . Now lovely Venus doth her son persuade
To seek the walls, and townward turn his train,
And deal swift havoc on the foe dismayed.
While here and there Æneas scans the plain,
Still tracking Turnus through the ranks in vain,
Far off the peaceful city he espies,
Unscathed, unstirred, and in his restless brain
The vision of a greater war doth rise; 640
Larger the War-God looms, and to his chiefs he cries.

LXXIII . Mnestheus, Sergestus and Serestus strong
He calls, and on a hillock takes his stand.
There, mustering round him, all the Teucrians throng,
Each armed with buckler, and his spear in hand,
And from the mound he thus exhorts the band:
“Hear, sons of Teucer, and let none be slack.
Jove fights for us, so hearken my command.
Though strange the venture, sudden the attack, 649
Let none for that cause faint, none loiter and hang back.

LXXIV . “This town — unless they yield them and obey —
This town, the centre of Latinus’ reign,
The cause of war, will I uproot this day,
And raze her smoking roof-tops to the plain.
What! shall I wait, and wait, till Turnus deign
To take fresh heart, and tempt the war’s rough game,
And, conquered, face his conqueror again?
See there the fount of all this blood! For shame; 658
Bring quick the torch; let fire the perjured pact reclaim!”

LXXV . So spake he, and one purpose nerves them all.
They form a wedge, and forward with a cheer
The close-knit column charges at the wall.

Here scaling ladders in a trice they rear,
And firebrands suddenly and flames appear.
These seek the gates, and lay the foremost dead;
Those flash the sword, or shake the shining spear.
Darts cloud the skies. Æneas, at their head, 667
Stands by the lofty walls, and with his hands outspread,

LXXVI . Upbraids aloud Latinus, twice untrue,
And bids heaven witness and his wrongs regard,
Thus forced reluctant to the fight anew;
How loth again with Latin foes he warred,
How twice the truce the Latin crimes had marred.
Upsprings wild discord in the town; some call
To cede the city, and have the gates unbarred,
And drag the aged monarch to the wall; 676
Some rush to arms, and strive their entrance to forestall.

LXXVII . As when within a crannied rock some hind,
Returning home, a swarm of bees hath found,
And all the nest with bitter smoke doth blind:
They, in their waxen citadel fast bound,
Post to and fro, the narrow cells around,
And whet their stings in fury and despair:
With stifled hum the caverned crags resound,
The black fumes search the windings of their lair, 685
And the dark smoke rolls up, and mingles with the air.

LXXVIII . A new mischance now smote with further woe
The Latin town, and fainting hearts dismayed.
As queen Amata sees the coming foe,
The ramparts stormed, their flames the roofs invade,
And nowhere Turnus nor his troops to aid,
Him dead she deems, herself the cause declares,
Herself alone she spares not to upbraid.
She wails, — she raves, — her purple robe she tears, 694
And from a lofty beam the hideous noose prepares.

LXXIX . The women heard; Lavinia first of all,
Her golden locks, her rosy cheeks doth tear.
All rave around, and wailings fill the hall.
Fast flies the news, and shakes the town with fear.
Then rends his robes Latinus in despair,
His town in ruins and his consort dead,
And, scattering dust upon his hoary hair,
Himself he blames, that ne'er in Turnus' stead 703
The Dardan prince he chose, his dear-lov'd child to wed.

LXXX . Meanwhile, in chase of distant stragglers, speeds Fierce Turnus. Slacker is his car's career,
And less he glories in his conquering steeds,
When lo, the breezes from Laurentum bear
The sound of shouting, and the shrieks of fear,
And a dull murmur, as of men that groan, —
The city's roar — strikes on his listening ear.
“Ah me! what clamour on the winds is blown? 712
What noise of grief,” he cries, “comes rolling from the town?”

LXXXI . He spake, and madly pulled the rein. Then she,
His sister, like Metiscus changed in view,
Who ruled the chariot, “Forward, Turnus! See
The path that victory points thee to pursue.
This way — this way to chase the Trojan crew!
Others there are, who can the walls defend,
See here Æneas, how he storms. We, too,
Our foes, Troy's varlets, to their graves can send, 721
Nor thee less tale of slain, nor scantier praise attend.”

LXXXII . Then quickly answered Turnus, glancing round, “Sister, long since I knew thee — knew thee plain,
When first thy cunning did the league confound,
And sent thee forth, fierce battle to darrain;
And now thou think'st to cheat me, but in vain,
Albeit a goddess. But what power on high
Hath willed thee, sent from the Olympian reign,

Such toils to suffer, and such tasks to try? 730
Cam'st thou, forsooth, to see thy wretched brother die?

LXXXIII . “What can I do? What pledge of safety more Doth Fortune give? what better hopes remain?
Myself beheld, these very eyes before,
Murranus die, the dearest of our train,
Stretched by a huge wound hugely on the plain.
I saw, how, backward as his comrades reeled,
Poor Ufens, sooner than behold such stain,
Sank low in death; himself, his sword and shield 739
The Teucrian victors hold, their trophies of the field.

LXXXIV . “What, shall I see our houses wrapt in flame, —
Last wrong of all — and coward-like, stand by,
Nor make this arm put Drances' taunts to shame?
Shall Turnus run, and Latins see him fly?
And is it then so terrible to die?
Be kind, dread spirits of the world below!
To you, since envious are the powers on high,
Worthy my ancestors of long ago, 748
Free from the coward's blame, a sacred shade I go.”

LXXXV . Scarce spake he; through the midmost foes apace
Comes Saces, borne upon his foaming steed,
A flying shaft had scored him in the face.
“Turnus,” he cries, “sole champion in our need,
Help us, have pity on thy friends who bleed.
See there, Æneas threatens in his ire
To raze our towers, and with a storm-cloud's speed
Thunders in arms, and roofward flies the fire, 757
To thee the Latins turn, thee Latin hopes require.

LXXXVI . “Himself, the king, is wavering, whom to call
His new allies, and whom his kingdom's heir.
Dead is the queen, thy faithfulest of all,
Self-plunged from light, in terror and despair.

Scarce fierce Atinas and Messapus there,
Beside the town-gates standing, hold their own.
Dense hosts surround them, and with falchions bare,
War's harvest bristles, by the walls upgrown; 766
Thou on the empty sward art charioting alone."

LXXXVII . Stunned and bewildered by the changeful scene Stood Turnus, gazing speechless and oppressed.
Shame, rage, and sorrow, and revengeful spleen,
And frenzied love, and conscious worth confessed
Boil from the depths of his tumultuous breast.
Now, when the shadows from his mind withdrew,
And light, returning, to his thoughts gave rest,
Back from his chariot towards the walls he threw 775
His eyes, aflame with wrath, and grasped the town in view.

LXXXVIII . From floor to floor, behold, a tower upblazed, —
The tower, with bridge above and wheels below,
Himself with beams and mortised planks had raised.
"Sister," he cries, "Fate conquers; let us go
The way which Heaven and cruel fortune show.
I stand to meet Æneas in the fray,
And die; if death be bitter, be it so.
No more dishonoured shalt thou see me, nay, 784
O sister, let me vent this fury, while I may."

LXXXIX . He spake, and quickly vaulting from his car,
Through foes, through darts, his sister left to mourn,
Rushed headlong forth, and broke the ranks of war.
As when a boulder, from a hill-top borne,
Which rains have washed, or blustering winds have torn,
Or creeping years have loosened, down the steep,
From crag to crag, leaps headlong, and in scorn
Goes bounding on, and with resistless sweep 793
Lays waste the woods, and whelms the shepherd and his sheep;

XC . So Turnus through the broken ranks doth fly

On to the town-walls, where the crimson plain
Is soaked, and shrill with javelins shrieks the sky,
Then shouts, with hand uplifted, to his train, “Rutulians, hold! Ye Latin men refrain!
Mine are the risks of Fortune, mine of right,
The truce thus torn, to expiate the stain,
And let the sword give judgment.” At the sight 802
The hostile ranks divide, and clear the lists of fight.

XCI . But when the Sire Æneas heard the name
Of Turnus, and his foeman’s form espied,
Down from the ramparts and the towers he came,
And scorned delay, and put all else aside,
Thundering in arms, and glorying in his pride.
As Athos huge, as Eryx huge he shows,
Or huge as Father Apennine, whose side
Roars with his nodding oaks, when drifted snows 811
Shine on his joyous crest, and lighten on his brows.

XCII . Rutulians, Trojans, Latins, — each and all
Look wondering on, both they who man the height,
And they who batter at the base. Down fall
Their arms. Amazed Latinus views the sight,
Two chiefs from distant countries, matched in might.
The lists set wide, they dash into the fray.
Each hurls a spear, then, hand to hand, they fight.
Loud ring the shields, and quick the broadswords play. 820
Earth groans, and chance contends with courage for the day.

XCIII . As on Taburnus, or in Sila’s shade
Two bulls, with butting foreheads, mix in fray:
Pale fly the hinds, mute stands the herd dismayed:
The heifers low, unknowing who shall sway
The grove, what lord and leader to obey;
They, with horns locked, their mutual rage outpour,
And thrust for thrust, and wound for wound repay,
Fast from their necks and dewlaps streams the gore, 829

And all the neighbouring wood rebellows to the roar;

XCIV . So, when both champions on the listed field,
The Trojan and the Daunian, eye to eye,
Met in the deadly conflict, shield to shield
Clanged, and a loud crash shattered through the sky.
And now great Jove, the Sire of gods on high,
Holds up the scales, and sets the long beam straight,
And in the balance lays their fates, to try
Each champion's fortune in the stern debate, 838
Whom battle's toil shall doom, where sinks the deathful weight.

XCV . Forth springs, in fancied safety, at his foe
Fierce Turnus, rising to his utmost height,
And planting all his body in the blow,
Strikes. A loud shout, of terror and delight
Goes up from Troy and Latium at the sight.
When lo, the falchion, as the stroke he plies,
Snaps short, and leaves him helpless. Naught but flight
Can aid him; swifter than the wind he flies, 847
As in his hand disarmed an unknown hilt he spies.

XCVI . When first his steeds were harnessed for the war,
In haste he snatched Metiscus' sword, 'tis said,
His sire's forgotten, as he climbed the car,
And well enough that weapon served his stead,
To smite the stragglers, while the Trojans fled;
But when it met, and countered in the fray
The arms of Vulcan, then the mortal blade,
Found faithless, like the brittle ice, gave way, 856
And in the yellow sand the sparkling fragments lay.

XCVII . So Turnus flies, and, doubling, but in vain,
Now here, now there, weaves many an aimless round;
For all about him, as he scours the plain,
The swarming legions of the foe are found,
And here the marsh, and there the bulwarks bound.

Nor less Æneas, though his stiff knee feels
The rankling arrow, and the hampering wound
Retards his pace, pursues him, as he wheels, 865
And dogs the flying foe, and presses on his heels.

XCVIII . As when some stag, a river in his face,
Or toils with scarlet feathers, set to scare,
A huntsman with his braying hounds doth chase.
Awed by the steep bank and the threatening snare,
A thousand ways he doubles here and there;
But the keen Umbrian, all agape, is by,
Now grasps, — now holds him, — and now thinks to tear,
And snaps his teeth on nothing; and a cry 874
Rings back from shore and stream, and rolls along the sky.

XCIX . Chiding by name his comrades, as he flies,
Fierce Turnus for his trusty sword doth cry.
Nor less Æneas with his threat defies,
“Stand off,” he shouts, “who ventures to draw nigh,
His town shall perish, and himself shall die.”
Onward, though maimed, he presses to his prey.
Twice five times circling round the field they fly;
For no mean stake or sportive prize they play, 883
Lo, Turnus’ life and blood are wagered in the fray.

C . A wilding olive on the sward had stood,
Sacred to Faunus. Mariners of yore
In worship held the venerable bough,
When to Laurentum’s guardian, safe on shore
Their votive raiment and their gifts they bore.
That sacred tree, the lists of fight to clear,
Troy’s sons had lopped. There, in the trunk’s deep core,
The Dardan javelin, urged with impulse sheer, 892
Stuck fast; the stubborn root, retentive, grasped the spear.

CI . Stooping, Æneas with his hands essayed
To pluck the steel, and follow with the spear

The foe his feet o'ertook not. Sore dismayed
Then Turnus cried, "O Faunus, heed and hear,
And thou, kind Earth, hold fast the steel, if dear
I held the plant, which Trojan hands profaned."
He prayed, nor Heaven refused a kindly ear.
Long while Æneas at the tough root strained; 901
Vain was his utmost strength; the biting shaft remained.

CII . While thus he stooped and struggled, prompt to aid,
Juturna, to Metiscus changed anew,
Ran forth, and to her brother reached his blade.
Then Venus, wroth the daring Nymph to view,
Came, and the javelin from the stem withdrew,
Thus, armed afresh, each eager for his chance,
The Daunian trusting to his falchion true,
The Dardan towering with uplifted lance, 910
High-hearted, face to face, the breathless chiefs advance.

CIII . Then Jove, as from a saffron cloud above Looked Juno, pleased the doubtful strife to view,
"When shall this end, sweet partner of my love?
What more? Thou know'st it, and hast owned it too,
Divine Æneas to the skies is due.
What wilt thou, chill in cloudland? Was it right
A god with mortal weapons to pursue?
Or give — for thine was all Juturna's might — 919
Lost Turnus back his sword, and renovate the fight?

CIV . "Desist at length, and hearken to my prayer.
Feed not in silence on a grief so sore,
Nor spoil those sweet lips with unlovely care.
The end is come; 'twas thine on sea and shore
Troy's sons to vex, to wake the war's uproar,
To cloud a home, a marriage-league untie,
And mar with grief a bridal. Cease, and more Attempt not." Thus the ruler of the sky, 928
And thus, with down-cast look, Saturnia made reply.

CV . “E’en so, great Jove, because thy will was known,
I left, reluctant, Turnus and his land.
Else ne’er should’st thou behold me here alone,
Thus shamed and suffering, but, torch in hand,
To smite these hateful Teucrians would I stand.
I made Juturna rescue from the foe
Her hapless brother, — mine was the command, —
Approved her daring for his sake, yet so 937
As not to wield the spear, or meddle with the bow.

CVI . “Nay, that I swear, and a dread oath will take (The only oath that doth the high gods bind),
By that grim fount that feeds the Stygian lake.
And now, great Jove, reluctant, but resigned,
I yield, and leave the loathed fight behind.
One boon I ask, nor that in Fate’s despite,
For Latium, for the honour of thy kind.
When — be it so — blest Hymen’s pact they plight, 946
And laws and lasting league the warring folks unite,

CVII . “Ne’er let the children of the soil disown
The name of Latins; turn them not, I pray,
To Trojan folk, to be as Teucrians known.
Ne’er let Italia’s children put away
The garb they wear, the language of to-day
Let Latium flourish, and abide the same,
And Alban kings through distant ages sway.
Let Rome through Latin prowess wax in fame; 955
But fall’n is Troy, and fall’n for ever be her name.”

CVIII . Smiling, the founder of the world replied:
“Thou, second child of Saturn, born to reign
In heaven Jove’s sister, and his spouse beside.
Such floods of passion can thy breast contain?
But come, and from thy fruitless rage refrain.
I yield, and gladly; be thy will obeyed.

Speech, customs, name Ausonia shall retain Unchanged for ever, as thy lips have prayed. 964
And in the Latin race Troy's mingled blood shall fade.

CIX . "All Latins will I make them, of one tongue,
And sacred rites, as common good, assign.
Hence shalt thou see, from blood Ausonian sprung,
A blended race, whose piety shall shine
Excelling man's, and equalling divine;
And ne'er shall other nation tell so loud
Thy praise, or pay such homage to thy shrine."
Well-pleased was Juno, and assenting bowed, 973
And straight with altered mind ascended from the cloud.

CX . New schemes the Sire, from Turnus to repel Juturna's aid, now ponders in his mind.
Two fiends there are, called Furies. Night with fell Megæra bore them at one birth, and twined
Their serpent spires, and winged them like the wind.
These at Jove's threshold, and beside his throne
Await his summons, to afflict mankind,
When death or pestilence the Sire sends down, 982
Or shakes the world with war, and scares the guilty town.

CXI . One, for an omen, from the skies he sends,
To front Juturna. Down, with sudden spring,
To earth, as in a whirlwind, she descends.
As when a poisoned arrow from the string
Through clouds a Parthian launches on the wing, —
Parthian or Cretan — and in darkling flight
The shaft, with cureless venom in its sting,
Screams through the shadows; so, arrayed in might, 991
Swift to the earth came down the daughter of the Night.

CXII . But when Troy's host and Turnus' ranks were known,
Shrunk to the semblance of a bird in size,
Which oft on tombs or ruined roofs alone

Sits late at night, and with ill-omened cries
Vexes the darkness; so in dwarfed disguise
The foul fiend, shrieking around Turnus' head,
Flaps on his shield, and flutters o'er his eyes.
Strange torpor numbs the Daunian's limbs with dread; 1000
The stiffening hair stands up, and all his voice is dead.

CXIII . The rustling wings Juturna knew, and tore
Her comely face, and rent her scattered hair,
And smote her breast: "O cruel me! what more
For Turnus can a sister now? What care
Or craft thy days can lengthen? Can I dare
To face this fiend? At last, at last I go,
And quit the field. Foul birds, avaunt, nor scare
My fluttering soul. Too well the sounds of woe, 1009
Those beating wings, — too well great Jove's behest I know.

CXIV . "This for my robbed virginity? Ah, why Did immortality the Sire bestow,
And grudge a mortal's privilege — to die?
Else, sure this moment could I end my woe,
And with my hapless brother pass below.
Immortal I? What joy hath aught beside,
Thou, Turnus, dead? Gape, Earth, and let me go,
A Goddess, to the shades!" She spake, and sighed, 1018
And, veiled in azure mantle, plunged beneath the tide.

CXV . But fierce Æneas on his foeman pressed.
His tree-like spear he poises for the fray,
And pours the pent-up fury of his breast.
"Why stay'st thou, Turnus? Wherefore this delay?
Fierce arms, not swiftness, must decide the day.
Shift as thou wilt, and every shape assume;
Exhaust thy courage and thy craft, and pray
For wings to soar with, or in earth's dark womb 1027
Sink low thy recreant head, and hide thee from thy doom."

CXVI . Thus he; but Turnus shook his head, and said, “Ruffian! thy threats are but as empty sound;
They daunt not Turnus; ’tis the gods I dread,
And Jove my enemy.” Then, glancing round,
He marked a chance-met boulder on the ground,
Huge, grey with age, set there in ancient days
To clear disputes, — a barrier and a bound.
Scarce twelve picked men the ponderous mass could raise, 1036
Such men as Earth brings forth in these degenerate days.

CXVII . That stone the Daunian lifted, straining hard
With hurrying hand, and all his height updrew,
And at Æneas hurled the monstrous shard;
So heaving, and so running, scarce he knew
His running, or how huge a weight he threw.
Cold froze his blood; beneath his trembling frame
The weak knees tottered. Through the void air flew
The stone, nor all the middle space o’ercame, 1045
Short of its mark it fell, nor answered to its aim.

CXVIII . As oft in dreams, when drowsy night doth load
The slumbering eyes, still eager, but in vain,
We strive to race along a lengthening road,
And faint and fall, amidmost of the strain;
The feeble limbs their wonted aid disdain,
Mute is the tongue, nor doth the voice obey,
Nor words find utterance; so with fruitless pain
Poor Turnus strives; but, struggle as he may, 1054
The baffling fiend is there, and mocks the vain essay.

CXIX . Then, tost with diverse passions, dazed with fear,
Towards friends and town he throws an anxious glance.
No car he sees, no sister-charioteer.
Desperate of flight, nor daring to advance,
Aghast, and shuddering at the lifted lance,
He falters. Then Æneas poised at last
His spear, and hurled it, as he marked his chance.

Less loud the stone from battering engine cast, 1063
Less loud through ether bursts the levin-bolt's dread blast.

CXX . Like a black whirlwind flew the deadly spear,
Right thro' the rim the sevenfold shield it rent
And breastplate's edge, nor stayed its onset ere Deep in the thigh its hissing course was spent.
Down on the earth, his knees beneath him bent,
Great Turnus sank: Rutulia's host around
Sprang up with wailing and with wild lament:
From neighbouring hills their piercing cries rebound, 1072
And every wooded steep re-echoes to the sound.

CXXI . Then, looking up, his pleading hands he rears:
"Death I deserve, nor death would I delay.
Use, then, thy fortune. If a father's tears
Move thee, for old Anchises' sake, I pray,
Pity old Daunus. Me, or else my clay,
If so thou wilt, to home and kin restore.
Thine is the victory. Latium's land to-day
Hath seen her prince the victor's grace implore. 1081
Lavinia now is thine; the bitter feud give o'er."

CXXII . Wrathful in arms, with rolling eyeballs, stood Æneas, and his lifted arm withdrew;
And more and more now melts his wavering mood,
When lo, on Turnus' shoulder — known too true —
The luckless sword-belt flashed upon his view;
And bright with gold studs shone the glittering prey,
Which ruthless Turnus, when the youth he slew,
Stripped from the lifeless Pallas, as he lay, 1090
And on his shoulders wore, in token of the day.

CXXIII . Then terribly Æneas' wrath upboils,
His fierce eyes fixt upon the sign of woe.
"Shalt thou go hence, and with the loved one's spoils?
'Tis Pallas — Pallas deals the deadly blow.

And claims this victim for his ghost below.”
He spake, and mad with fury, as he said,
Drove the keen falchion through his prostrate foe.
The stalwart limbs grew stiff with cold and dead, 1099
And, groaning, to the shades the scornful spirit fled.

PRONOUNCING LATIN

Here is a brief guide to pronouncing Ancient Latin, allowing you to voice aloud Virgil's original text.

Vowels

Each vowel is pronounced as either a short or long sound. A Latin dictionary will need to be consulted to find out whether a particular vowel is a long or short syllable.

short a – cat
long a – father
short e – let
long e – late
short i – lick
long i – weep
short o – hot
long o – only
short u – loot

Diphthongs

ae – pronounced like eye
au – ow!
oe – oi!

Consonants

v is always pronounced as w
c is always hard like cat and kill
i before a vowel is a consonant, pronounced as y – you
b before t or s is pronounced as p in pink
r is rolled, like a Spanish r
g is hard like great

Combined Consonants

ch makes a k sound and never like ch in church

ph is hard like the ph in uphill and never f as in philosophy

th is hard and separate like the th in hot house, never soft like the

I. MELIBOEUS, TITYRUS

M. TITYRE, tu patulae recubans sub tegmine fagi silvestrem tenui Musam meditaris avena;
nos patriae fines et dulcia linquimus arva:
nos patriam fugimus; tu, Tityre, lentus in umbra
formosam resonare doces Amaryllida silvas.

T. O Meliboe, deus nobis haec otia fecit:
namque erit ille mihi semper deus; illius aram
saepe tener nostris ab ovilibus imbuet agnus.
Ille meas errare boves, ut cernis, et ipsum
ludere, quae vellem, calamo permisit agresti

M. Non equidem invideo; miror magis: undique totis usque adeo turbatur agris. En, ipse capellas protinus aeger ago; hanc etiam vix, Tityre, duco:
hic inter densas corylos modo namque gemellos,
spem gregis, ah, silice in nuda conixa reliquit.
Saepe malum hoc nobis, si mens non laeva fuisset,
de caelo tactas memini praedicere quercus: — [saepe sinistra cava praedixit ab ilice cornix.]
Sed tamen, iste deus qui sit, da, Tityre, nobis.

T. Urbem, quam dicunt Romam, Meliboe, putavi stultus ego huic nostrae similem, quo saepe solemus
pastores ovium teneros depellere fetus:
sic canibus catulos similis, sic matribus haedos
noram, sic parvis componere magna solebam:
verum haec tantum alias inter caput extulit urbes,
quantum lenta solent inter viburna cupressi.

M. Et quae tanta fuit Romam tibi causa videndi?

T. Libertas; quae sera, tamen respexit inertem, candidior postquam tondenti barba cadebat;

respexit tamen, et longo post tempore venit,
postquam nos Amaryllis habet, Galatea reliquit:
namque, fatebor enim, dum me Galatea tenebat,
nec spes libertatis erat, nec cura peculi:
quamvis multa meis exiret victima saeptis,
pinguis et ingratae premeretur caseus urbi,
non umquam gravis aere domum mihi dextra redibat.

M. Mirabar, quid maesta deos, Amarylli, vocares, cui pendere sua patereris in arbore poma:
Tityrus hinc aberat. Ipsae te, Tityre, pinus, ipsi te fontes, ipsa haec arbusta vocabant.

T. Quid facerem? Neque servitio me exire licebat,
nec tam praesentis alibi cognoscere divos.
hic illum vidi iuvenem, Meliboeae, quot annis bis senos cui nostra dies altaria fumant;
hic mihi responsum primus dedit ille petenti:
'pascite, ut ante, boves, pueri, submittite tauros.'

M. Fortunate senex, ergo tua rura manebunt, et tibi magna satis, quamvis lapis omnia nudus
limosoque palus obducat pascua iunco!
Non insueta gravis temptabunt pabula fetas,
nec mala vicini pecoris contagia laedent.
Fortunate senex, hic, inter flumina nota
et fontis sacros, frigus captabis opacum!
hinc tibi, quae semper, vicino ab limite, saepes
Hyblaeis apibus florem depasta salicti
saepe levi somnum suadebit inire susurro;
hinc alta sub rupe canet frondator ad auras;
nec tamen interea raucae, tua cura, palumbes,
nec gemere aerea cessabit turtur ab ulmo.

T. Ante leves ergo pascentur in aequore cervi,
et freta destituent nudos in litore pisces,

ante pererratis amborum finibus exsul
aut Ararim Parthus bibet, aut Germania Tigrim,
quam nostro illius labatur pectore voltus.

M. At nos hinc alii sitientis ibimus Afros, pars Scythiam et rapidum Cretae veniemus Oaxen,
pauperis toto divisos orbe Britannos.

En umquam patrios longo post tempore finis,
pauperis et tuguri congestum caespite culmen,
post aliquot mea regna videns mirabor aristas?
Impius haec tam culta novalia miles habebit,
barbarus has segetes? En, quo discordia civis
produxit miseros! His nos consevimus agros!
Insere nunc, Meliboe, piro, pone ordine vitis.
Ite meae, felix quondam pecus, ite capellae.
Non ego vos posthac, viridi proiectus in antro,
dumosa pendere procul de rupe videbo;
carmina nulla canam; non, me pascente, capellae,
florentem cytisum et salices carpetis amaras.

T. Hic tamen hanc mecum poteras requiescere noctem fronde super viridi: sunt nobis mitia poma,
castaneae molles, et pressi copia lactis;
et iam summa procul villarum culmina fumant,
maioresque cadunt altis de montibus umbrae.

II.

FORMOSUM pastor Corydon ardebat Alexim,
delicias domini, nec quid speraret habebat;
tantum inter densas, umbrosa cacumina, fagos
adsidue veniebat. Ibi haec incondita solus
montibus et silvis studio iactabat inani:
O crudelis Alexi, nihil mea carmina curas?
Nil nostri miserere? Mori me denique coges.
nunc etiam pecudes umbras et frigora captant;
nunc viridis etiam occultant spineta lacertos,
Thestylis et rapido fessis messoribus aestu
alia serpyllumque herbas contundit olentis.
at mecum raucis, tua dum vestigia lustris,
sole sub ardenti resonant arbusta cicadis.
Nonne fuit satius tristis Amaryllidis iras
atque superba pati fastidia, nonne Menalcan,
quam vis ille niger, quamvis tu candidus esses?
o formose puer, nimium ne crede colori!
alba ligustra cadunt, vaccinia nigra leguntur.
Despectus tibi sum, nec qui sim quaeris, Alexi,
quam dives pecoris, nivei quam lactis abundans.
mille meae Siculis errant in montibus agnae;
lac mihi non aestate novum, non frigore deficit;
canto quae solitus, si quando armenta vocabat,
Amphion Dircaeus in Actaeo Aracimtho.
Nec sum adeo informis: nuper me in litore vidi,
cum placidum ventis staret mare; non ego Daphnim
iudice te metuam, si numquam fallit imago.
O tantum libeat mecum tibi sordida rura
atque humilis habitare casas, et figere cervos,
haedorumque gregem viridi compellere hibisco!
Mecum una in silvis imitabere Pana canendo.
Pan primus calamos cera coniungere pluris
instituit; Pan curat ovis oviumque magistros.
Nec te paeniteat calamo trivisse labellum:

haec eadem ut sciret, quid non faciebat Amyntas?
est mihi disparibus septem compacta cicutis
fistula, Damoetas dono mihi quam dedit olim,
et dixit moriens: 'Te nunc habet ista secundum.'
dixit Damoetas, invidit stultus Amyntas.
Praeterea duo, nec tuta mihi valle reperti,
capreoli, sparsis etiam nunc pellibus albo,
bina die siccant ovis ubera; quos tibi servo:
iam pridem a me illos abducere Thestylis orat;
et faciet, quoniam sordent tibi munera nostra.
Huc ades, O formose puer: tibi lilia plenis
ecce ferunt Nymphae calathis; tibi candida Nais, pallentis violas et summa papavera carpens,
narcissum et florem iungit bene olentis anethi;
tum casia atque aliis intexens suavis herbis,
mollia luteola pingit vaccinia calta.
Ipse ego cana legam tenera lanugine mala,
castaneasque nuces, mea quas Amaryllis amabat;
addam cerea pruna: honos erit huic quoque pomo;
et vos, O lauri, carpam, et te, proxima myrte,
sic positae quoniam suavis miscetis odores.
Rusticus es, Corydon: nec munera curat Alexis,
nec, si muneribus certes, concedat Iollas.
Heu, heu, quid volui misero mihi! Floribus austrum perditus et liquidis inmisit fontibus apros.
Quem fugis, ah, demens? Habitarunt di quoque silvas, Dardaniusque Paris. Pallas, quas condidit arces,
ipsa colat; nobis placeant ante omnia silvae.
Torva leaena lupum sequitur; lupus ipse capellam;
florentem cytisum sequitur lasciva capella;
te Corydon, o Alexi: trahit sua quemque voluptas.
Aspice, aratra iugo referunt suspensa iuvenci,
et sol crescentis decedens duplicat umbras:
me tamen urit amor; quis enim modus adsit amor?
Ah, Corydon, Corydon, quae te dementia cepit!
Semiputata tibi frondosa vitis in ulmo est;
quin tu aliquid saltem potius, quorum indiget usus,

viminibus mollique paras detexere iunco?
Invenies alium, si te hic fastidit, Alexim.

III. MENALCAS, DAMOETAS, PALAEMON

M. DIC mihi, Damoeta, cuium pecus, an Meliboei?

D. Non, verum Aegonis; nuper mihi tradidit Aegon.

M. Infelix o semper, ovis, pecus, ipse Neaeram dum foveat, ac ne me sibi praeferat illa veretur,
hic alienus ovis custos bis mulget in hora,
et sucus pecori et lac subducitur agnis.

D. Parcius ista viris tamen obicienda memento:
novimus et qui te, transversa tuentibus hircis,
et quo — sed faciles Nymphae risere — sacello.

M. Tum, credo, cum me arbustum videre Miconis atque mala vitis incidere falce novellas.

D. Aut hic ad veteres fagos cum Daphnidis arcum fregisti et calamos quae tu, perverse Menalca,
et cum vidisti puero donata, dolebas,
et si non aliqua nocuisses, mortuus esses.

M. Quid domini faciant, audent cum talia fures!
non ego te vidi Damonis, pessime, caprum
excipere insidiis, multum latrante Lycisca?
et cum clamarem: ‘Quo nunc se proripit ille?
Tityre, coge pecus,’ tu post carecta latebas.

D. An mihi cantando victus non redderet ille quem mea carminibus meruisset fistula caprum?
Si nescis, meus ille caper fuit; et mihi Damon
ipse fatebatur, sed reddere posse negabat.

M. Cantando tu illum, aut umquam tibi fistula cera iuncta fuit? Non tu in triviis, indocte, solebas stridenti miserum stipula disperdere carmen?

D. Vis ergo inter nos quid possit uterque vicissim experiamur? Ego hanc vitulam — ne forte recuses, bis venit ad mulctram, binos alit ubere fetus — depono: tu dic, mecum quo pignore certes.

M. De grege non ausim quicquam deponere tecum.
Est mihi namque domi pater, est iniusta noverca;
bisque die numerant ambo pecus, alter et haedos.
Verum, id quod multo tute ipse fatebere maius,
insanire libet quoniam tibi, pocula ponam
fagina, caelatum divini opus Alcimedontis;
lenta quibus torno facili superaddita vitis
diffusos hedera vestit pallente corymbos:
in medio duo signa, Conon, et — quis fuit alter,
descripsit radio totum qui gentibus orbem,
tempora quae messor, quae curvus arator haberet?
Necdum illis labra admovi, sed condita servo.

D. Et nobis idem Alcimedon duo pocula fecit,
et molli circum est ansas amplexus acantho,
Orpheaque in medio posuit silvasque sequentis.
Necdum illis labra admovi, sed condita servo:
si ad vitulam spectas, nihil est quod pocula laudes.

M. Nunquam hodie effugies; veniam, quocumque vocari audiat haec tantum — vel qui venit ecce Palaemon
efficiam posthac ne quemquam voce lacessas.

D. Quin age, si quid habes, in me mora non erit ulla,
nec quemquam fugio: tantum, vicine Palaemon,
sensibus haec imis, res est non parva, reponas.

P. Dicite, quandoquidem in molli consedimus herba:
et nunc omnis ager, nunc omnis parturit arbos,
nunc frondent silvae, nunc formosissimus annus.

Incipe, Darmoeta; tu deinde sequere Menalca:
alternis dicetis; amant alterna Camenae.

D. Ab Iove principium, Musae; Iovis omnia plena:
ille colit terras, illi mea carmina curae.

M. Et me Phoebus amat; Phoebos sua semper apud me munera sunt, lauri et suave rubens hyacinthus.

D. Malo me Galatea petit, lasciva puella,
et fugit ad salices, et se cupit ante videri.

M. At mihi sese offert ultro, meus ignis, Amyntas, notior ut iam sit canibus non Delia nostris.

D. Parta meae Veneri sunt munera: namque notavi ipse locum, aerae quo congessere palumbes.

M. Quod potui, puero silvestri ex arbore lecta aurea mala decem misi; cras altera mittam.

D. O quotiens et quae nobis Galatea locuta est!
partem aliquam, venti, divom referatis ad auris!

M. Quid prodest, quod me ipse animo non spernis, Amynta.
si, dum tu sectaris apros, ego retia servo?

D. Phyllida mitte mihi: meus est natalis, Iolla;
cum faciam vitula pro frugibus, ipse venito.

M. Phyllida amo ante alias; nam me discedere flevit, et longum ‘formose, vale, vale,’ inquit, ‘Iolla.’

D. Triste lupus stabulis, maturis frugibus imbres.
arboribus venti, nobis Amaryllidis irae.

M. Dulce satis umor, depulsis arbutus haedis, lenta salix feto pecori, mihi solus Amyntas.

D. Pollio amat nostram, quamvis est rustica, Musam:
Pierides vitulam lectori pascite vestro.

M. Pollio et ipse facit nova carmina: pascite taurum,
iam cornu petat et pedibus qui spargat arenam.

D. Qui te, Pollio, amat, veniat quo te quoque gaudet:
mella fluant illi, ferat et rubus asper amomum.

M. Qui Bavium non odit, amet tua carmina, Maevi, atque idem iungat vulpes et mulgeat hircos.

D. Qui legitis flores et humi nascentia fraga,
frigidus, O pueri, fugite hinc, latet anguis in herba.

M. Parcite, oves, nimium procedere; non bene ripae creditur; ipse aries etiam nunc vellera siccet.

D. Tityre, pascentes a flumine reice capellas:
ipse ubi tempus erit, omnis in fonte lavabo.

M. Cogite ovis, pueri; si lac praeceperit aestus,
ut nuper, frustra pressabimus ubera palmis.

D. Heu, heu, quam pingui macer est mihi taurus in ervo!
Idem amor exitium est pecori pecorisque magistro.

M. His certe neque amor causa est; vix ossibus haerent.
nescio quis teneros oculus mihi fascinat agnos.

D. Dic, quibus in terris — et eris mihi magnus Apollo —
tris pateat caeli spatium non amplius ulnas.

M. Dic, quibus in terris inscripti nomina regum nascantur flores, et Phyllida solus habeto.

P. Non nostrum inter vos tantas componere lites.
Et vitula tu dignus, et hic, et quisquis amores
aut metuet dulces, aut experietur amaros.

Claudite iam rivos, pueri, sat prata biberunt.

IV.

SICELIDES Musae, paulo maiora canamus!
Non omnis arbusta iuvant humilesque myricae;
si canimus silvas, silvae sint consule dignae.
Ultima Cumaei venit iam carminis aetas;
magnus ab integro saeculorum nascitur ordo:
iam redit et Virgo, redeunt Saturnia regna;
iam nova progenies caelo demittitur alto.
Tu modo nascenti puero, quo ferrea primum
desinet ac toto surget gens aurea mundo,
casta fave Lucina: tuus iam regnat Apollo.

Teque adeo decus hoc aevi te consule inibit,
Pollio, et incipient magni procedere menses.
te duce, si qua manent sceleris vestigia nostri,
inrita perpetua solvent formidine terras.
ille deum vitam accipiet, divisque videbit
permixtos heroas, et ipse videbitur illis,
pacatumque reget patriis virtutibus orbem.

At tibi prima, puer, nullo munuscula cultu
errantis hederas passim cum baccare tellus
mixtaque ridenti colocasia fundet acantho.
Ipsae lacte domum referent distenta capellae
ubera, nec magnos metuent armenta leones;
ipsa tibi blandos fundent cunabula flores,
occidet et serpens, et fallax herba veneni
occidet, Assyrium volgo nascetur amomum.
at simul heroum laudes et facta parentis
iam legere et quae sit poteris cognoscere virtus,
molli paulatim flavescet campus arista,
incultisque rubens pendebit sentibus uva,
et durae quercus sudabunt roscida mella
Pauca tamen suberunt priscae vestigia fraudis,

quae temptare Thetim ratibus, quae cingere muris oppida, quae iubeant telluri infindere sulcos:
alter erit tum Tiphys, et altera quae vehat Argo
delectos Heroas; erunt etiam altera bella,
atque iterum ad Troiam magnus mittetur Achilles.
Hinc, ubi iam firmata virum te fecerit aetas,
cedet et ipse mari vector, nec nautica pinus
mutabit merces: omnis feret omnia tellus:
non rastros patietur humus, non vinea falcem;
robustus quoque iam tauris iuga solvet arator;
nec varios discet mentiri lana colores:
ipse sed in pratis aries iam suave rubenti
murice, iam croceo mutabit vellera luto;
sponte sua sandyx pascentis vestiet agnos.

Talia saecla, suis dixerunt, currite, fusis
concordes stabili fatorum numine Parcae.
Adgrederere o magnos — aderit iam tempus — honores,
cara deum suboles, magnum Iovis incrementum!
Aspice convexo nutantem pondere mundum,
terrasque tractusque maris caelumque profundum!
Aspice, venturo laetentur ut omnia saeclo!
O mihi tam longae maneat pars ultima vitae,
spiritus et quantum sat erit tua dicere facta!
Non me carminibus vincet nec Thracius Orpheus,
nec Linus, huic mater quamvis atque huic pater adsit,
Orphei Calliopea, Lino formosus Apollo,
Pan etiam, Arcadia mecum si iudice certet,
Pan etiam Arcadia dicat se iudice victum.
Incipe, parve puer, risu cognoscere matrem,
matri longa decem tulerunt fastidia menses.
Incipe, parve puer, cui non risere parentes,
nec deus hunc mensa, dea nec dignata cubili est.

V. MENALCAS, MOPSUS

Me. CUR non, Mopse, boni quoniam convenimus ambo,
tu calamos inflare levis, ego dicere versus,
hic corylis mixtas inter consedimus ulmos?

Mo. Tu maior; tibi me est aequum parere, Menalca,
sive sub incertas zephyris motantibus umbras,
sive antro potius succedimus: aspice, ut antrum
silvestris raris sparsit labrusca racemis.

Me. Montibus in nostris solus tibi certat Amyntas.

Mo. Quid, si idem certet Phoebum superare canendo?

Me. Incipe, Mopse, prior, si quos aut Phyllidis ignes,
aut Alconis habes laudes, aut iurgia Codri:
incipere, pascentis servabit Tityrus haedos.

Mo. Immo haec, in viridi nuper quae cortice fagi carmina descripsi et modulans alterna notavi,
experiar, tu deinde iubeto ut certet Amyntas.

Me. Lenta salix quantum pallenti cedit olivae,
puniceis humilis quantum saliunca rosetis,
iudicio nostro tantum tibi cedit Amyntas.
sed tu desine plura, puer; successimus antro.

Mo. Extinctum nymphae crudeli funere Daphnim flebant; vos coryli testes et flumina nymphis;
cum complexa sui corpus miserabile nati,
atque deos atque astra vocat crudelia mater.
Non ulli pastos illis egere diebus
frigida, Daphni, boves ad flumina; nulla neque amnem
libavit quadrupes, nec graminis attigit herbam.

Daphni, tuum Poenos etiam ingemuisse leones
interitum montesque feri silvaeque loquuntur.
Daphnis et Armenias curru subiungere tigres
instituit; Daphnis thiasos inducere Bacchi,
et foliis lentas intexere mollibus hastas.
Vitis ut arboribus decori est, ut vitibus uvae,
ut gregibus tauri, segetes ut pinguibus arvis,
tu decus omne tuis. Postquam te fata tulerunt,
ipsa Pales agros atque ipse reliquit Apollo.
Grandia saepe quibus mandavimus hordea sulcis,
infelix lolium et steriles nascuntur avenae;
pro molli viola, pro purpureo narcisso,
carduus et spinis surgit paliurus acutis.
Spargite humum foliis, inducite fontibus umbras,
pastores, mandat fieri sibi talia Daphnis;
et tumulum facite, et tumulo superaddite carmen:
DAPHNIS EGO IN SILVIS HINC VSQUE AD SIDERA NOTVS

FORMONSI PECORIS CVSTOS FORMONSIOR IPSE.

Me. Tale tuum carmen nobis, divine poeta,
quale sopor fessis in gramine, quale per aestum
dulcis aquae saliente sitim restinguere rivo:
nec calamis solum aequiparas, sed voce magistrum.
[Fortunate puer, tu nunc eris alter ab illo.]
Nos tamen haec quocumque modo tibi nostra vicissim
dicemus, Daphnimque tuum tollemus ad astra;
Daphnin ad astra feremus: amavit nos quoque Daphnis.

Mo. An quicquam nobis tali sit munere maius
Et puer ipse fuit cantari dignus, et ista
iam pridem Stimichon laudavit carmina nobis.

Me. Candidus insuetum miratur limen Olympi,
sub pedibusque videt nubes et sidera Daphnis.
ergo alacris silvas et cetera rura voluptas
Panaque pastoresque tenet, Dryadasque puellas;

nec lupus insidias pecori, nec retia cervis
ulla dolum meditantur: amat bonus otia Daphnis.
ipsi laetitia voces ad sidera iactant
intonsi montes; ipsae iam carmina rupes,
ipsa sonant arbusta: 'Deus, deus ille, Menalca.' Sis bonus O felixque tuis! En quattuor aras:
ecce duas tibi, Daphni, duas altaria Phoebo.
pocula bina novo spumantia lacte quotannis,
craterasque duo statuam tibi pinguis olivi,
et multo in primis hilarans convivium Baccho, —
ante focum, si frigus erit, si messis, in umbra, —
vina novum fundam calathis Ariusia nectar.
cantabunt mihi Damoetas et Lyctius Aegon;
saltantis satyros imitabitur Alpheisiboeus.
Haec tibi semper erunt, et cum solemnia vota
reddemus Nymphis, et cum lustrabimus agros.
Dum iuga montis aper, fluvios dum piscis amabit,
dumque thymo pascentur apes, dum rore cicadae,
semper honos nomenque tuum laudesque manebunt;
ut Baccho Cererique, tibi sic vota quotannis
agricolae facient: damnabis tu quoque votis.

Mo. Quae tibi, quae tali reddam pro carmine dona?
Nam neque me tantum venientis sibilus austri,
nec percussa iuvant fluctu tam litora, nec quae
saxosas inter decurrunt flumina valles.

Me. Hac te nos fragili donabimus ante cicuta:
haec nos, 'Formosum Corydon ardebat Alexim,'
haec eadem docuit, 'Cuium pecus, an Meliboei?'

Mo. At tu sume pedum, quod, me cum saepe rogaret, non tulit Antigenes — -et erat tum dignus amari —
formosum paribus nodis atque aere, Menalca.

VI.

PRIMA Syracosio dignata est ludere versu,
nostra nec erubuit silvas habitare Thalia.
Cum canerem reges et proelia, Cynthius aurem
vellit, et admonuit: 'Pastorem, Tityre, pinguis pascere oportet ovis, deductum dicere carmen.'
Nunc ego — namque super tibi erunt, qui dicere laudes, Vare, tuas cupiant, et tristia condere bella —
agrestem tenui meditabor arundine Musam.
Non iniussa cano: si quis tamen haec quoque, si quis
captus amore leget, te nostrae, Vare, myricae,
te nemus omne canet; nec Phoebus gravior ulla est,
quam sibi quae Vari praescripsit pagina nomen.
Pergite, Pierides! Chromis et Mnasyllus in antro Silenus pueri somno videre iacentem,
inflatum hesterno venas, ut semper, Iaccho:
serta procul tantum capiti delapsa iacebant,
et gravis attrita pendebat cantharus ansa.
Adgressi — nam saepe senex spe carminis ambo
luserat — iniciunt ipsis ex vincula sertis:
addit se sociam, timidisque supervenit Aegle, —
Aegle, Naiadum pulcherrima, — iamque videnti
sanguineis frontem moris et tempora pingit.
Ille dolum ridens, 'Quo vincula nectitis?' inquit;
'solvite me, pueri; satis est potuisse videri:
carmina, quae voltis, cognoscite; carmina vobis,
huic aliud mercedis erit.' Simul incipit ipse.
Tum vero in numerum Faunosque ferasque videres ludere, tum rigidas motare cacumina quercus;
nec tantum Phoebus gaudet Parnasia rupes,
nec tantum Rhodope miratur et Ismarus Orphea.

Namque canebat, uti magnum per inane coacta
semina terrarumque animaeque marisque fuissent,

et liquidi simul ignis; ut his exordia primis
omnia et ipse tener mundi concreverit orbis;
tum durare solum et discludere Nerea ponto
coeperit, et rerum paulatim sumere formas;
iamque novum terrae stupeant lucescere solem,
altius atque cadant submotis nubibus imbres;
incipiant silvae cum primum surgere, cumque
rara per ignaros errent animalia montis.

Hinc lapides Pyrrhae iactos, Saturnia regna, Caucasiasque refert volucres, furtumque Promethei:
his adiungit, Hylan nautae quo fonte relictum
clamassent, ut litus 'Hyla, Hyla!' omne sonaret.
et fortunatam, si numquam armenta fuissent,
Pasiphaen nivei solatur amore iuvenci.
ah, virgo infelix, quae te dementia cepit!
Proetides inplerunt falsis mugitibus agros:
at non tam turpis pecudum tamen ulla secuta est
concubitus, quamvis collo timuisset aratrum,
et saepe in levi quaesisset cornua fronte.
ah, virgo infelix, tu nunc in montibus erras:
ille, latus niveum molli fultus hyacintho,
ilice sub nigra pallentis ruminat herbas,
aut aliquam in magno sequitur grege. 'Claudite, nymphae, Dictaeae nymphae, nemorum iam claudite saltus,
si qua forte ferant oculis sese obvia nostris
errabunda bovis vestigia; forsitan illum,
aut herba captum viridi, aut armenta secutum,
perducant aliquae stabula ad Gortynia vaccae.
Tum canit Hesperidum miratam mala puellam;
tum Phaethontides musco circumdat amaro
corticis, atque solo proceras erigit alnos.
Tum canit, errantem Permessi ad flumina Gallum
Aonas in montis ut duxerit una sororum,
utque viro Phoebi chorus adsurrexerit omnis;
ut Linus haec illi, divino carmine pastor,
floribus atque apio crinis ornatus amaro,

dixerit: 'Hos tibi dant calamos, en accipe, Musae, Ascraeo quos ante seni, quibus ille solebat
cantando rigidas deducere montibus ornos:
his tibi Grynei nemoris dicatur origo,
ne quis sit lucus, quo se plus iactet Apollo.'
Quid loquar aut Scyllam Nisi, quam fama secuta est candida succinctam latrantibus inguina monstros Dulichias vexasse rates, et gurgite in alto,
ah, timidos nautas canibus lacerasse marinis,
aut ut mutatos Terei narraverit artus;
quas illi Philomela dapes, quae dona pararit,
quo cursu deserta petiverit, et quibus ante
infelix sua tecta supervolitaverit alis?
Omnia, quae Phoebus quondam meditante, beatus
audiit Eurotas, iussitque ediscere laurus,
ille canit: pulsae referunt ad sidera valles;
cogere donec ovis stabulis numerumque referri
iussit, et invito processit Vesper Olympo.

VII. MELIBOEUS, CORYDON, THYRSIS

M. FORTE sub arguta consederat ilice Daphnis, compulerantque greges Corydon et Thyrsis in unum, Thyrsis ovis, Corydon distentas lacte capellas,
ambo florentes aetatibus, Arcades ambo,
et cantare pares, et respondere parati.

Huc mihi, dum teneras defendo a frigore myrtos,
vir gregis ipse caper deerraverat; atque ego Daphnim
aspicio. Ille ubi me contra videt: 'Ocius' inquit
'huc ades, O Meliboe, caper tibi salvus et haedi;
et, si quid cessare potes, requiesce sub umbra.
huc ipsi potum venient per prata iuvenci,
hic viridis tenera praetexit arundine ripas
Mincius, eque sacra resonant examina quercu.'
Quid facerem? Neque ego Alcippen, nec Phyllida habebam, depulsos a lacte domi quae clauderet agnos,
et certamen erat, Corydon cum Thyrside, magnum.
posthabui tamen illorum mea seria ludo:
alternis igitur contendere versibus ambo
coepere; alternos Musae meminisse volebant.
hos Corydon, illos referebat in ordine Thyrsis.

C. Nymphae, noster amor, Libethrides, aut mihi carmen, quale meo Codro, concedite: proxima Phoebi
versibus ille facit; aut, si non possumus omnes,
hic arguta sacra pendebit fistula pinu.

T. Pastores, hedera crescentem ornate poetam,
Arcades, invidia rumpantur ut ilia Codro;
aut si ultra placitum laudarit, baccare frontem
cingite, ne vati noceat mala lingua futuro.

C. Saetosi caput hoc apri tibi, Delia, parvus et ramosa Micon vivacis cornua cervi.

Si proprium hoc fuerit, levi de marmore tota
puniceo stabis suras evincta coturno.

T. Sinum lactis et haec te liba, Priape, quotannis exspectare sat est: custos es pauperis horti.
Nunc te marmoreum pro tempore fecimus; at tu,
si fetura gregem suppleverit, aureus esto.

C. Nerine Galatea, thymo mihi dulcior Hyblae, candidior cynnis, hedera formosior alba,
cum primum pasti repetent praesepia tauri,
si qua tui Corydonis habet te cura, venito.

T. Immo ego Sardoniis videar tibi amarior herbis, horridior rusco, proiecta vilior alga,
si mihi non haec lux toto iam longior anno est.
Ite domum pasti, si quis pudor, ite iuvenci.

C. Muscosi fontes et somno mollior herba,
et quae vos rara viridis tegit arbutus umbra,
solstitium pecori defendite; iam venit aestas
torrida, iam lento turgent in palmite gemmae.

T. Hic focus et taedae pingues, hic plurimus ignis semper, et adsidua postes fuligine nigri;
hic tantum Boreae curamus frigora, quantum
aut numerum lupus, aut torrentia flumina ripas.

C. Stant et iuniperi, et castaneae hirsutae;
strata iacent passim sua quaque sub arbore poma;
omnia nunc rident: at si formosus Alexis
montibus his abeat, videas et flumina sicca.

T. Aret ager; vitio moriens sitit aeris herba;
Liber pampineas invidit collibus umbras:
Phyllidis adventu nostrae nemus omne virebit,

Iuppiter et laeto descendet plurimus imbri.
Populus Alcidae gratissima, vitis Iaccho,
formosae myrtus Veneri, sua laurea Phoebō;
Phyllis amat corylos: illas dum Phyllis amabit,
nec myrtus vincet corylos, nec laurea Phoebi.

T. Fraxinus in silvis pulcherrima, pinus in hortis, populus in fluviis, abies in montibus altis:
saepius at si me, Lycida formose, revisas,
fraxinus in silvis cedat tibi, pinus in hortis.
Haec memini, et victum frustra contendere Thyrsim:
ex illo Corydon Corydon est tempore nobis.

VIII. DAMON, ALPHESIBOEUS

PASTORUM Musam Damonis et Alphisiboei — immemor herbarum quos est mirata iuvenca
certantis, quorum stupefactae carmine lynces,
et mutata suos requierunt flumina cursus —
Illonis Musam dicemus et Alphisiboei.

Tu mihi seu magni superas iam saxa Timavi,
sive oram Illyrici legis aequoris, en erit umquam
ille dies, mihi cum liceat tua dicere facta?
en erit ut liceat totum mihi ferre per orbem
sola Sophocleo tua carmina digna coturno?
A te principium, tibi desinam: accipe iussis
carmina coepta tuis, atque hanc sine tempora circum
inter victrices hederam tibi serpere laurus.

Frigida vix caelo noctis decesserat umbra,
cum ros in tenera pecori gratissimus herba;
incumbens tereti Damon sic coepit olivae.

D. Nascere, praeque diem veniens age, Lucifer, alnum, coniugis indigno Nisae deceptus amore
dum queror, et divos, quamquam nil testibus illis
profeci, extrema moriens tamen adloquor hora.
Incipe Maenalios mecum, mea tibia, versus.
Maenalus argutumque nemus pinosque loquentis
semper habet; semper pastorum ille audit amores,
Panaque, qui primus calaunos non passus inertis.
Incipe Maenalios mecum, mea tibia, versus.
Mopso Nisa datur: quid non speremus amantes?
Iungentur iam grypes equis, aevoque sequenti
cum canibus timidi venient ad pocula dammae.
Mopse, novas incide faces: tibi ducitur uxor;
sparge, marite, nuces: tibi deserit Hesperus Oetam.

Incipe Maenalios mecum, mea tibia, versus.

O digno coniuncta viro, dum despicias omnes,
dumque tibi est odio mea fistula, dumque capellae,
hirsutumque supercilium promissaque barba,
nec curare deum credis mortalia quemquam!

Incipe Maenalios mecum, mea tibia, versus.

Saepibus in nostris parvam te roscida mala —
dux ego vester eram — vidi cum matre legentem.

Alter ab undecimo tum me iam acceperat annus;
iam fragilis poteram ab terra contingere ramos.

Ut vidi, ut perii! Ut me malus abstulit error!

Incipe Maenalios mecum, mea tibia, versus.

Nunc scio, quid sit Amor: duris in cotibus illum
aut Tmaros, aut Rhodope, aut extremum Garamantes,
nec generis nostri puerum nec sanguinis edunt.

Incipe Maenalios mecum, mea tibia, versus.

saevus Amor docuit natorum sanguine matrem
commaculare manus; crudelis tu quoque, mater:
crudelis mater magis, an puer improbus ille?
improbus ille puer; crudelis tu quoque, mater.

Incipe Maenalios mecum, mea tibia, versus.

nunc et ovis ultro fugiat lupo; aurea durae
mala ferant quercus; narcisso floreat alnus;
pinguia corticibus sudent electra myricae;
certent et cygnis ululae; sit Tityrus Orpheus,
Orpheus in silvis, inter delphinas Arion.

Incipe Maenalios mecum, mea tibia, versus.

Omnia vel medium fiant mare: vivite, silvae!
praeceps aëri specula de montis in undas
deferar; extremum hoc munus morientis habeto.
desine Maenalios, iam desine, tibia, versus.

Haec Damon: vos, quae responderit Alpheisiboeus,
dicite, Pierides; non omnia possumus omnes.

A. Effer aquam, et molli cinge haec altaria vitta, verbenasque adole pinguis et mascula tura,
coniugis ut magicis sanos avertere sacris
experiar sensus nihil hic nisi carmina desunt.

Ducite ab urbe domum, mea carmina, ducite Daphnim.
Carmina vel caelo possunt deducere Lunam;
carminibus Circe socios mutavit Ulixi;
frigidus in pratia cantando rumpitur anguis.

Ducite ab urbe domum, mea carmina, ducite Daphnim.
terna tibi haec primum triplici diversa colore
licia circumdo, terque haec altaria circum
effigiem duco: numero deus impare gaudet.

Ducite ab urbe domum, mea carmina, ducite Daphnim.
Necte tribus nodis ternos, Amarylli, colores,
necte, Amarylli, modo, et 'Veneris' dic 'vincula necto.'

Ducite ab urbe domum, mea carmina, ducite Daphnim.
Limus ut hic durescit et haec ut cera liquescit
uno eodemque igni, sic nostro Daphnis amore.
Sparge molam, et fragilis incende bitumine laurus.
Daphnis me malus urit, ego hanc in Daphnide laurum.

Ducite ab urbe domum, mea carmina, ducite Daphnim.
Talis amor Daphnim, qualis cum fessa iuvenum
per nemora atque altos quaerendo bucula lucos
propter aquae rivum viridi procumbit in ulva,
perdita, nec serae meminit decedere nocti,
talis amor teneat, nec sit mihi cura mederi.

Ducite ab urbe domum, mea carmina, ducite Daphnim.
Has olim exuvias mihi perfidus ille reliquit,
pignora cara sui, quae nunc ego limine in ipso,
terra, tibi mando; debent haec pignora Daphnim.

Ducite ab urbe domum, mea carmina, ducite Daphnim.
Has herbas atque haec Ponto mihi lecta venena
ipse dedit Moeris; nascuntur plurima Ponto.
His ego saepe lupum fieri et se condere silvis
Moerim, saepe animas imis excire sepulcris,
atque satas alio vidi traducere messis.

Ducite ab urbe domum, mea carmina, ducite Daphnim.
Fer cineres, Amarylli, foras, rivoque fluenti
transque caput iace, nec respexeris: his ego Daphnim
adgrediar, nihil ille deos, nil carmina curat.

Ducite ab urbe domum, mea carmina, ducite Daphnim.
Aspice, corripuit tremulis altaria flammis
sponte sua, dum ferre moror, cinis ipse: bonum sit!
Nescio quid certe est, et Hylas in limine latrat.
Credimus, an, qui amant, ipsi sibi somnia fingunt?
Parcite, ab urbe venit, iam carmina, parcite, Daphnis.

IX. LYCIDAS, MOERIS

L. QUO te, Moeri, pedes? an, quo via ducit, in urbem?

M. O Lycida, vivi pervenimus, advena nostri (quod numquam veriti sumus) ut possessor agelli
diceret: 'Haec mea sunt; veteres migrate coloni!'
nunc victi, tristes, quoniam Fors omnia versat,
hos illi — quod nec vertat bene — mittimus haedos.

L. Certe equidem audieram, qua se subducere colles
incipiunt, mollique iugum demittere clivo,
usque ad aquam et veteres (iam fracta cacumina) fagos
omnia carminibus vestrum servasse Menalcan.

M. Audieras, et fama fuit; sed carmina tantum nostra valent, Lycida, tela inter Martia, quantum Chaonias dicunt aquila veniente columbas.
quod nisi me quacumque novas incidere lites
ante Sinistra cava monuisset ab ilice cornix,
nec tuus hic Moeris, nec viveret ipse Menalcas.

L. Heu, cadit in quemquam tantum scelus? Heu, tua nobis paene simul tecum solatia rapta, Menalca?
quis caneret nymphas; quis humum florentibus herbis
spargeret, aut viridi fontes induceret umbra?
vel quae sublegi tacitus tibi carmina nuper,
cum te ad delicias ferres, Amaryllida, nostras?
Tityre, dum redeo — brevis est via — pasce capellas,
et potum pastas age, Tityre, et inter agendum
occursare capro, cornu ferit ille, caveto.

M. Immo haec, quae Varo necdum perfecta canebat:
'Vare, tuum nomen, superet modo Mantua nobis —
Mantua, vae miserae nimium vicina Cremonae —

cantantes sublime ferent ad sidera cynci.’

L. Sic tua Cyrneas fugiant examina taxos;
sic cytiso pastae distendant ubera vaccae!
Incipe, si quid habes: et me fecere poetam
Pierides; sunt et mihi carmina; me quoque dicunt
vatem pastores, sed non ego credulus illis.
Nam neque adhuc Vario videor, nec dicere Cinna
digna, sed argutos inter strepere anser olores.

M. Id quidem ago et tacitus, Lycida, mecum ipse voluto,
si valeam meminisse; neque est ignobile carmen:
‘huc ades, O Galatea; quis est nam ludus in undis
hic ver purpureum; varios hic flumina circum
fundit humus flores; hic candida populus antro
imminet, et lentae texunt umbracula vites.
huc ades: insani feriant sine litora fluctus.

L. Quid, quae te pura solum sub nocte canentem audieram? Numeros memini, si verba tenerem.
‘Daphni, quid antiquos signorum suspicis ortus?
Ecce Dionaei processit Caesaris astrum,
astrum, quo segetes gauderent frugibus, et quo
duceret apricis in collibus uva colorem.
insere, Daphni, piros: carpent tua poma nepotes.’

M. Omnia fert aetas, animum quoque: saepe ego longos
cantando puerum memini me condere soles:
nunc oblita mihi tot carmina; vox quoque Moerim
iam fugit ipsa; lupi Moerim videre priores.
Sed tamen ista satis referet tibi saepe Menalcas.

L. Causando nostros in longum ducis amores:
et nunc omne tibi stratum silet aequor, et omnes,
aspice, ventosi ceciderunt murmuris aerae.
hinc adeo media est nobis via; namque sepulcrum
incipit adparere Bianoris: hic ubi densas

agricolae stringunt frondes, hic, Moeri, canamus;
hic haedos depone: tamen veniemus in urbem.
aut si, nox pluviam ne colligat ante, veremur,
cantantes licet usque (minus via laedit) eamus;
cantantes ut eamus, ego hoc te fasce levabo.

M. Desine plura, puer, et quod nunc instat agamus:
carmina tum melius, cum venerit ipse, canemus.

X.

EXTREMUM hunc, Arethusa, mihi concede laborem:
pauca meo Gallo, sed quae legat ipsa Lycoris,
carmina sunt dicenda neget quis carmina Gallo?
sic tibi, cum fluctus subterlabere Sicanos,
Doris amara suam non intermisceat undam.
incipere; sollicitos Galli dicamus amores,
dum tenera attendent simae virgulta capellae.
non canimus surdis; respondent omnia silvae.

Quae nemora, aut qui vos saltus habuere, puellae
Naides, indigno cum Gallus amore peribat?
nam neque Parnasi vobis iuga, nam neque Pindi
ulla moram fecere, neque Aoniae Aganippe.
Illum etiam lauri, etiam flevare myricae.
Pinifer illum etiam sola sub rupe iacentem
Maenalus, et gelidi fleverunt saxa Lycæi.
Stant et oves circum; — nostri nec paenitet illas,
nec te poeniteat pecoris, divine poeta; —
et formosus ovis ad flumina pavit Adonis;
venit et upilio; tardi venere subulci;
uvidus hiberna venit de glande Menalcas.
Omnes ‘Unde amor iste’ rogant ‘tibi?’ Venit Apollo:
‘Galle, quid insanis?’ inquit; ‘tua cura Lycoris
perque nives alium perque horrida castra secuta est.’
Venit et agresti capitis Silvanus honore,
floreantis ferulas et grandia lilia quassans.
Pan deus Arcadiae venit, quem vidimus ipsi
sanguineis ebuli bacis minioque rubentem.
‘Ecquis erit modus?’ inquit; ‘Amor non talia curat;
nec lacrimis crudelis Amor, nec gramina rivis,
nec cytiso saturantur apes, nec fronde capellae.’
Tristis at ille: ‘Tamen cantabitis, Arcades,’ inquit
‘montibus haec vestris: soli cantare periti

Arcades. O mihi tum quam molliter ossa quiescant, vestra meos olim si fistula dicat amores!
Atque utinam ex vobis unus, vestrique fuisset
aut custos gregis, aut maturae vinitor uvae!
Certe, sive mihi Phillis, sive esset Amyntas,
seu quicumque furor — quid tum, si fuscus Amyntas;
et nigrae violae sunt et vaccinia nigra —
mecum inter salices lenta sub vite iaceret;
serta mihi Phyllis legeret, cantaret Amyntas.
Hic gelidi fontes, hic mollia prata, Lycori,
hic nemus; hic ipso tecum consumerer aevo.
Nunc insanus amor duri me Martis in armis
tela inter media atque adversos detinet hostes:
tu procul a patria (nec sit mihi credere tantum!)
Alpinas, ah dura, nives et frigora Rheni
me sine sola vides: ah, te ne frigora laedant!
ah, tibi ne teneras glacies secet aspera plantas!
Ibo, et, Chalcidico quae sunt mihi condita versu
carmina, pastoris Siculi modulabor avena.
certum est in silvis, inter spelaea ferarum
malle pati, tenerisque meos incidere amores
arboribus; crescent illae, crescetis, amores.
Interea mixtis lustrabo Maenala nymphis,
aut acris venabor apros: non me ulla vetabunt
frigora Parthenios canibus circumdare saltus.
iam mihi per rupes videor lucosque sonantis
ire; libet Partho torquere Cydonia cornu spicula: — tamquam haec sit nostri medicina furoris, ut deus ille malis hominum mitescere discat!
Iam neque hamadryades rursus nec carmina nobis
ipsa placent; ipsae rursus concedite silvae.
non illum nostri possunt mutare labores,
nec si frigoribus mediis Hebrumque bibamus,
Sithoniasque nives hiemis subeamus aquosae,
nec si, cum moriens alta liber aret in ulmo,
Aethiopum versemus ovis sub sidere Cancri.
omnia vincit Amor; et nos cedamus Amori.'

Haec sat erit, divae, vestrum cecinisse poetam,
dum sedet et gracili fiscellam texit hibisco,
Pierides; vos haec facietis maxima Gallo —
Gallo, cuius amor tantum mihi crescit in horas,
quantum vere novo viridis se subicit alnus.
Surgamus; solet esse gravis cantantibus umbra;
iuniperi gravis umbra; nocent et frugibus umbrae.
te domum saturae, venit Hesperus, ite capellae.

Quid faciat laetas segetes, quo sidere terram
vertere, Maecenas, ulmisque adiungere vitis
conveniat, quae cura boum, qui cultus habendo
sit pecori, apibus quanta experientia parcis, hinc canere incipiam. Vos, o clarissima mundi
lumina, labentem caelo quae ducitis annum,
Liber et alma Ceres, vestro si munere tellus
Chaoniam pingui glandem mutavit arista,
poculaque inventis Acheloia miscuit uvis;
et vos, agrestum praesentia numina, Fauni,
ferite simul Faunisque pedem Dryadesque puellae:
Munera vestra cano. Tuque o, cui prima frementem fudit equum magno tellus percussa tridenti,
Neptune; et cultor nemorum, cui pingua Caeae
ter centum nivei tondent dumeta iuvenci;
ipse nemus linquens patrium saltusque Lycaeï,
Pan, ovium custos, tua si tibi Maenala curae,
adsis, o Tegeae, favens, oleaeque Minerva
inventrix, uncique puer monstrator aratri,
et teneram ab radice ferens, Silvane, cupressum, dique deaeque omnes, studium quibus arva tueri,
quique novas alitis non ullo semine fruges,
quique satis largum caelo demittitis imbrem;
tuque adeo, quem mox quae sint habitura deorum
concilia, incertum est, urbisne invisere, Caesar,
terrarumque velis curam et te maximus orbis
auctorem frugum tempestatumque potentem
accipiat, cingens materna tempora myrto,
an deus inmensi venias maris ac tua nautae
numina sola colant, tibi serviat ultima Thule
teque sibi generum Tethys emat omnibus undis,
anne novum tardis sidus te mensibus addas,
qua locus Erigonen inter Chelasque sequentis
panditur — ipse tibi iam bracchia contrahit ardens

Scorpius et caeli iusta plus parte reliquit — - quidquid eris, — -nam te nec sperant Tartara regem
nec tibi regnandi veniat tam dira cupido,
quamvis Elysios miretur Graecia campos
nec repetita sequi curet Proserpina matrem — - da facilem cursum atque audacibus adnue coeptis
ignarosque viae mecum miseratus agrestis
ingredere et votis iam nunc adsuesce vocari.

Vere novo, gelidus canis cum montibus humor
liquitur et Zephyro putris se glaeba resolvit,
depresso incipiat iam tum mihi taurus aratro
ingemere et sulco attritus splendescere vomer.
Illa seges demum votis respondet avari
agricolae, bis quae solem, bis frigora sensit;
illius inmensae ruperunt horrea messes.
At prius ignotum ferro quam scindimus aequor,
ventos et varium caeli praediscere morem
cura sit ac patrios cultusque habitusque locorum
et quid quaeque ferat regio et quid quaeque recuset.
Hic segetes, illic veniunt felicius uvae,
arborei fetus alibi, atque iniussa virescunt
gramina. Nonne vides, croceos ut Tmolus odores, India mittit ebur, molles sua tura Sabaei,
at Chalybes nudi ferrum, virosaque Pontus
castorea, Eliadum palmas Epiros equarum.
Continuo has leges aeternaque foedera certis
inposuit natura locis, quo tempore primum Deucalion vacuum lapides iactavit in orbem, unde homines nati, durum genus. Ergo age, terrae pingue solum primis extemplo a mensibus anni
fortes invertant tauri glaebasque iacentis
pulverulenta coquat maturis solibus aestas;
at si non fuerit tellus fecunda, sub ipsum
Arcturum tenui sat erit suspendere sulco:
illic, officiant laetis ne frugibus herbae,
hic, sterilem exiguus ne deserat humor harenam.

Alternis idem tonsas cessare novalis
et segnem patiere situ durescere campum;
aut ibi flava seres mutato sidere farra,
unde prius laetum siliqua quassante legumen
aut tenuis fetus viciae tristisque lupini
sustuleris fragilis calamos silvamque sonantem.
Urit enim lini campum seges, urit avenae,
urunt Lethaeo perfusa papavera somno:
sed tamen alternis facilis labor, arida tantum
ne saturare fimo pingui pudeat sola neve
effetos cinerem inmundum iactare per agros.
Sic quoque mutatis requiescunt fetibus arva;
nec nulla interea est inaratae gratia terrae.
Saepe etiam sterilis incendere profuit agros
atque levem stipulam crepitantibus urere flammis:
sive inde occultas viris et pabula terrae
pinguia concipiunt, sive illis omne per ignem
excoquitur vitium atque exsudat inutilis humor,
seu pluris calor ille vias et caeca relaxat
spiramenta, novas veniat qua sucus in herbas,
seu durat magis et venas adstringit hiantis,
ne tenues pluviae rapidive potentia solis
acrior aut Boreae penetrabile frigus adurat.
Multum adeo, rastris glaebas qui frangit inertis
vimineasque trahit cratis, iuvat arva, neque illum
flava Ceres alto nequiquam spectat Olympo;
et qui, proscisso quae suscitatur aequore terga,
rursus in obliquum verso perrumpit aratro,
exercetque frequens tellurem atque imperat arvis.
Humida solstitia atque hiemes orate serenas,
agricolae; hiberno laetissima pulvere farra,
laetus ager: nullo tantum se Mysia cultu
iactat et ipsa suas mirantur Gargara messis.
Quid dicam, iacto qui semine comminus arva
insequitur cumulosque ruit male pinguis harenae
deinde satis fluvium inducit rivosque sequentis
et, cum exustus ager morientibus aestuat herbis,

ecce supercilio clivosi tramitis undam elicit. illa cadens raucum per levia murmur
saxa ciet, scatebrisque arentia temperat arva.
Quid qui, ne gravidis procumbat culmus aristis,
luxuriem segetum tenera depascit in herba,
cum primum sulcos aequant sata. quique paludis
collectum humorem bibula deducit harena.
Praesertim incertis si mensibus amnis abundans
exit et obducto late tenet omnia limo,
unde cavae tepido sudant humore lacunae.

Nec tamen, haec cum sint hominumque boumque labores
versando terram experti, nihil improbus anser Strymoniaeque grues et amaris intiba fibris officiunt aut umbra nocet. Pater ipse colendi haud facilem esse viam voluit, primusque per artem
movit agros curis acuens mortalia corda
nec torpere gravi passus sua regna veterno.
Ante Iovem nulli subigebant arva coloni;
ne signare quidem aut partiri limite campum
fas erat: in medium quaerebant ipsaque tellus
omnia liberius nullo poscente ferebat.
Ille malum virus serpentibus addidit atris
praedarique lupos iussit pontumque moveri,
mellaque decussit foliis ignemque removit
et passim rivis currentia vina repressit,
ut varias usus meditando extunderet artis
paulatim et sulcis frumenti quaereret herbam.
[Ut silicis venis abstrusum excuderet ignem.]
Tunc alnos primum fluvii sensere cavatas;
navita tum stellis numeros et nomina fecit, Pleiadas, Hyadas, claramque Lycaonis Arcton;
tum laqueis captare feras et fallere visco
inventum et magnos canibus circumdare saltus;
atque alius latum funda iam verberat amnem
alta petens, pelagoque alius trahit humida lina;
tum ferri rigor atque argutae lamina serrae, — -

nam primi cuneis scindebant fissile lignum tum variae venere artes. Labor omnia vicit inprobus et duris urgens in rebus egestas.
Prima Ceres ferro mortalis vertere terram
instituit, cum iam glandes atque arbuta sacrae
deficerent silvae et victum Dodona negaret.
Mox et frumentis labor additus, ut mala culmos
esset robigo segnisque horreret in arvis
carduus; intereunt segetes, subit aspera silva,
lappaeque tribolique, interque nitentia culta
infelix lolium et steriles dominantur avenae.
Quod nisi et adsiduis herbam insectabere rastris,
et sonitu terrebis aves, et ruris opaci
falce premes umbras votisque vocaveris imbrem,
heu magnum alterius frustra spectabis acervum,
concussaque famem in silvis solabere quercu.

Dicendum et, quae sint duris agrestibus arma,
quis sine nec potuere seri nec surgere messes:
vomis et inflexi primum grave robur aratri
tardaque Eleusinae matris volventia plaustra
tribulaque traheaeque et iniquo pondere rastri;
virgea praeterea Celei vilisque supellex,
arbutae crates et mystica vannus Iacchi.
Omnia quae multo ante memor provisa repones,
si te digna manet divini gloria ruris.
Continuo in silvis magna vi flexa domatur
in burim et curvi formam accipit ulmus aratri.
Huic a stirpe pedes temo protentus in octo,
binae aures, duplici aptantur dentalia dorso
caeditur et tilia ante iugo levis altaque fagus,
stivaque, quae currus a tergo torqueat imos,
et suspensa focus explorat robora fumus.

Possum multa tibi veterum praecepta referre,
ni refugis tenuisque piget cognoscere curas.
Area cum primis ingenti aequanda cylindro

et vertenda manu et creta solidanda tenaci,
ne subeant herbae neu pulvere victa fatiscat,
tum variae inludant pestes: saepe exiguus mus
sub terris posuitque domos atque horrea fecit,
aut oculis capti fodere cubilia talpae,
inventusque cavis bufo et quae plurima terrae
monstra ferunt, populatque ingentem farris acervum
curculio atque inopi metuens formica senectae.
Contemplator item, cum se nux plurima silvis
induet in florem et ramos curvabit olentis.
Si superant fetus, pariter frumenta sequentur
magnaque cum magno veniet tritura calore;
at si luxuria foliorum exuberat umbra,
nequiquam pinguis palea teret area culmos.
Semina vidi equidem multos medicare serentis
et nitro prius et nigra perfundere amurca,
grandior ut fetus siliquis fallacibus esset,
et, quamvis igni exiguo, properata maderent.
Vidi lecta diu et multo spectata labore
degenerare tamen, ni vis humana quot annis maxima quaeque manu legeret. Sic omnia fatis
in peius ruere ac retro sublapsa referri,
non aliter, quam qui adverso vix flumine lembum
remigiis subigit, si bracchia forte remisit,
atque illum in praeceps pronos rapit alveus amni.

Praeterea tam sunt Arcturi sidera nobis
Haedorumque dies servandi et lucidus Anguis,
quam quibus in patriam ventosa per aequora vectis
pontus et ostriferi fauces temptantur Abydi.
Libra die somnique pares ubi fecerit horas
et medium luci atque umbris iam dividit orbem,
exercete, viri, tauros, serite hordea campis
usque sub extremum brumae intractabilis imbrem;
nec non et lini segetem et Cereale papaver
tempus humo tegere et iamdudum incumbere aratris,
dum sicca tellure licet, dum nubila pendent.

Vere fabis satio; tum te quoque, Medica, putres
accipiunt sulci et milio venit annua cura,
candidus auratis aperit cum cornibus annum
Taurus et averso cedens Canis occidit astro.
At si triticeam in messem robustaque farra
exercebis humum solisque instabis aristis,
ante tibi Eoae Atlantides abscondantur Gnosiaque ardentis decedat stella Coronae,
debita quam sulcis committas semina quamque
invitae properes anni spem credere terrae.
Multi ante occasum Maiiae coepere; sed illos
exspectata seges vanis elusit avenis.
Si vero viciamque seres vilemque phaselum
nec Pelusiacaе curam aspernabere lentis,
haud obscura cadens mittet tibi signa Bootes:
incipi et ad medias sementem extende pruinas.

Idcirco certis dimensum partibus orbem
per duodena regit mundi Sol aureus astra.
Quinque tenent caelum zonae; quarum una corusco
semper sole rubens et torrida semper ab igni;
quam circum extremae dextra laevaue trahuntur
caeruleae, glacie concretae atque imbribus atris;
has inter mediamque duae mortalibus aegris
munere concessae divom, et via secta per ambas,
obliquus qua se signorum verteret ordo.
Mundus, ut ad Scythiam Rhipaeasque arduus arces
consurgit, premitur Libyae devexus in austros.
Hic vertex nobis semper sublimis; at illum
sub pedibus Styx atra videt Manesque profundi.
Maximus hic flexu sinuoso elabitur Anguis
circum perque duas in morem fluminis Arctos,
Arctos Oceani metuentis aequore tingui.
Illic, ut perhibent, aut intempesta silet nox,
semper et obtenta densentur nocte tenebrae,
aut redit a nobis Aurora diemque reducit;
nosque ubi primus equis Oriens adflavit anhelis,

illic, sera rubens accendit lumina Vesper.
Hinc tempestates dubio praediscere caelo
possumus, hinc messisque diem tempusque serendi,
et quando infidum remis inpellere marmor
conveniat, quando armatas deducere classis,
aut tempestivam silvis evertere pinum.

Nec frustra signorum obitus speculamur et ortus,
temporibusque parem diversis quattuor annum.
Frigidus agricolam si quando continet imber,
multa, forent quae mox caelo properanda sereno,
maturare datur: durum procudit arator
vomeris obtunsi dentem, cavat arbore lintres,
aut pecori signum aut numeros inpressit acervis.
Exacuunt alii vallos furcasque bicornis
atque Amerina parant lentae retinacula viti.
Nunc facilis rubea texatur fiscina virga,
nunc torrete igni fruges, nunc frangite saxo.
Quippe etiam festis quaedam exercere diebus
fas et iura sinunt; rivos deducere nulla
religio vetuit, segeti praetendere saepem,
insidias avibus moliri, incendere vepres,
balantumque gregem fluvio mersare salubri.
Saepe oleo tardi costas agitator aselli
vilibus aut onerat pomis, lapidemque revertens
incusum aut atrae massam picis urbe reportat.

Ipsa dies alios alio dedit ordine Luna
felicis operum. Quintam fuge: pallidus Orcus Eumenidesque satae; tum partu Terra nefando
Coeumque Iapetumque creat saevumque Typhoea
et coniuratos caelum rescindere fratres.
Ter sunt conati inponere Pelio Ossam
scilicet, atque Ossae frondosum involvere Olympum;
ter pater exstructos disiecit fulmine montis.
Septima post decimam felix et ponere vitem
et pressos domitare boves et licia telae

addere: nona fugae melior, contraria furtis.

Multa adeo gelida melius se nocte dedere,
aut cum sole novo terras inrorat Eous.
Nocte leves melius stipulae, nocte arida prata
tondentur, noctes lentus non deficit humor.
Et quidam seros hiberni ad luminis ignis
pervigilat ferroque faces inspicat acuto;
interea longum cantu solata laborem
arguto coniunx percurrit pectine telas,
aut dulcis musti Volcano decoquit humorem
et foliis undam trepidi despumat aeni.
At rubicunda Ceres medio succiditur aestu
et medio tostas aestu terit area fruges.
Nudus ara, sere nudus; hiems ignava colono.
Frigoribus parto agricolae plerumque fruuntur
mutuaque inter se laeti convivia curant.
Invitat genialis hiems curasque resolvit,
ceu pressae cum iam portum tetigere carinae,
puppibus et laeti nautae inposuere coronas.
Sed tamen et quernas glandes tum stringere tempus
et lauri bacas oleamque cruentaue myrta,
tum gruibus pedicas et retia ponere cervis
auritosque sequi lepores, tum figere dammas,
stuppea torquentem Balearis verbera fundae,
cum nix alta iacet, glaciem cum flumina trudent.

Quid tempestates autumnī et sidera dicam,
atque, ubi iam breviorque dies et mollior aestas,
quae vigilanda viris. vel cum ruit imbriferum ver,
spicea iam campis cum messis inhorruit et cum
frumenta in viridi stipula lactentia turgent.
Saepe ego, cum flavis messorum induceret arvis
agricola et fragili iam stringeret hordea culmo,
omnia ventorum concurrere proelia vidi,
quae gravidam late segetem ab radicibus imis
sublimem expulsam eruerent; ita turbine nigro

ferret hiems culmumque levem stipulasque volantis.
Saepe etiam immensum caelo venit agmen aquarum
et foedam glomerant tempestatem imbribus atris
collectae ex alto nubes; ruit arduus aether
et pluvia ingenti sata laeta boumque labores
diluuit; implentur fossae et cava flumina crescunt
cum sonitu fervetque fretis spirantibus aequor.
Ipse pater media nimborum in nocte corusca
fulmina molitur dextra; quo maxuma motu
terra tremit; fugere ferae et mortalia corda
per gentis humilis stravit pavor; ille flagranti
aut Athon aut Rhodopen aut alta Ceraunia telo deicit; ingeminant austri et densissimus imber;
nunc nemora ingenti vento, nunc litora plangunt.
Hoc metuens caeli menses et sidera serva,
frigida Saturni sese quo stella receptet,
quos ignis caelo Cyllenius erret in orbis.
In primis venerare deos atque annua magnae
sacra refer Cereri laetis operatus in herbis
extremae sub casum hiemis, iam vere sereno.
Tum pingues agni et tum mollissima vina,
tum somni dulces densaeque in montibus umbrae.
Cuncta tibi Cererem pubes agrestis adoret;
cui tu lacte favos et miti dilue Baccho,
terque novas circum felix eat hostia fruges,
omnis quam chorus et socii comitentur ovantes,
et Cererem clamore vocent in tecta; neque ante
falcem maturis quisquam supponat aristis,
quam Cereri torta redimitus tempora quercu
det motus incompositos et carmina dicat.

Atque haec ut certis possemus discere signis,
aestusque pluviasque et agentis frigora ventos,
ipse Pater statuit, quid menstrua Luna moneret,
quo signo caderent austri, quid saepe videntes
agricolae propius stabulis armenta tenerent.
Continuo ventis surgentibus aut freta ponti

incipiunt agitata tumescere et aridus altis
montibus audiri fragor aut resonantia longe
litora misceri et nemorum increbrescere murmur.
Iam sibi tum a curvis male temperat unda carinis,
cum medio celeres revolant ex aequore mergi
clamoremque ferunt ad litora, cumque marinae
in sicco ludunt fulicae notasque paludes
deserit atque altam supra volat ardea nubem.
Saepe etiam stellas vento inpendente videbis
praecipitis caelo labi noctisque per umbram
flammarum longos a tergo albescere tractus;
saepe levem paleam et frondes volitare caducas
aut summa nantis in aqua colludere plumas.
At Boreae de parte trucidis cum fulminat et cum Eurique Zephyrique tonat domus: omnia plenis
rura natant fossis atque omnis navita ponto humida vela legit. Numquam imprudentibus imber obfuit: aut illum surgentem vallibus imis
ariae fugere grues, aut bucula caelum
suspiciens patulis captavit naribus auras,
aut arguta lacus circumvolitavit hirundo
et veterem in limo ranae cecinere querelam.
Saepius et tectis penetralibus extulit ova
angustum formica terens iter et bibit ingens
arcus et e pastu decedens agmine magno
corvorum increpuit densis exercitus alis.
Iam variae pelagi volucres et quae Asia circum
dulcibus in stagnis rimantur prata Caystri,
certatim largos umeris infundere rores:
nunc caput obiectare fretis, nunc currere in undas
et studio incassum videas gestire lavandi.
Tum cornix plena pluviam vocat improba voce
et sola in sicca secum spatiatur harena.
Ne nocturna quidem carpentes pensa puellae
nescivere hiemem, testa cum ardente viderent
scintillare oleum et putris concrescere fungos.

Nec minus ex imbri soles et aperta serena
prospicere et certis poteris cognoscere signis:
nam neque tum stellis acies obtunsa videtur,
nec fratris radiis obnoxia surgere Luna,
tenuia nec lanae per caelum vellera ferri;
non tepidum ad solem pinnae in litore pandunt
dilectae Thetidi alcyones, non ore solutos
inmundi meminere sues iactare manipulos.
At nebulae magis ima petunt campoque recumbunt,
solis et occasum servans de culmine summo
nequiquam seros exercet noctua cantus.
Adparet liquido sublimis in aere Nisus
et pro purpureo poenas dat Scylla capillo:
quacumque illa levem fugiens secat aethera pinnis,
ecce inimicus, atrox, magno stridore per auras
insequitur Nisus; qua se fert Nisus ad auras,
illa levem fugiens raptim secat aethera pinnis
Tum liquidas corvi presso ter gutture voces
aut quater ingeminant, et saepe cubilibus altis
nescio qua praeter solitum dulcedine laeti
inter se in foliis strepitant; iuvat imbribus actis
progeniem parvam dulcisque revisere nidos;
haud equidem credo, quia sit divinitus illis
ingenium aut rerum fato prudentia maior;
verum ubi tempestas et caeli mobilis humor
mutavere vias et Iuppiter uvidus austris
denset, erant quae rara modo, et, quae densa, relaxat,
vertuntur species animorum et pectora motus
nunc alios, alios, dum nubila ventus agebat,
concipiunt: hinc ille avium concentus in agris
et laetae pecudes et ovantes gutture corvi.
Si vero solem ad rapidum lunasque sequentis
ordine respicies, numquam te crastina fallit
hora neque insidiis noctis capiere serena.
Luna, revertentis cum primum colligit ignis,
si nigrum obscuro conprenderit aera cornu,
maximus agricolis pelagoque parabitur imber;

at si virgineum suffuderit ore ruborem,
ventus erit; vento semper rubet aurea Phoebe.
Sin ortu quarto, namque is certissimus auctor,
pura neque obtunsis per caelum cornibus ibit,
totus et ille dies et qui nascentur ab illo
exactum ad mensem pluvia ventisque carebunt,
votaque servati solvent in litore nautae
Glaucō et Panopeae et Inoo Melicertae.
Sol quoque et exoriens et cum se condet in undas
signa dabit; solem certissima signa sequuntur,
et quae mane refert et quae surgentibus astris.
Ille ubi nascentem maculis variaverit ortum
conditus in nubem medioque refugerit orbe, suspecti tibi sint imbres; namque urget ab alto
arboribusque satisque Notus pecorique sinister.
Aut ubi sub lucem densa inter nubila sese
diversi rumpent radii aut ubi pallida surget
Tithoni croceum linquens Aurora cubile,
heu male tum mitis defendet pampinus uvas:
tam multa in tectis crepitans salit horrida grando.
Hoc etiam, emenso cum iam decedit Olympo,
profuerit meminisse magis; nam saepe videmus
ipsius in vultu varios errare colores:
caeruleus pluviam denuntiat, igneus Euros;
sin maculae incipient rutilo inmiscerier igni,
omnia tum pariter vento nimisque videbis
fervere. Non illa quisquam me nocte per altum ire, neque a terra moneat convellere funem.
At si, cum referetque diem condetque relatum,
lucidus orbis erit, frustra terrebere nimbis
et claro silvas cernes Aquilone moveri.
Denique quid vesper serus vehat, unde serenas
ventus agat nubes, quid cogitet humidus Auster, sol tibi signa dabit. Solem quis dicere falsum audeat. Ille etiam caecos instare tumultus saepe monet fraudemque et operta tumescere bella.
Ille etiam exstincto miseratus Caesare Romam,

cum caput obscura nitidum ferrugine textit
inpiaque aeternam timuerunt saecula noctem.
Tempore quamquam illo tellus quoque et aequora ponti
obscaeque canes inportunaeque volucres signa dabant. Quotiens Cyclopum effervere in agros vidimus undantem ruptis fornacibus Aetnam
flammarumque globos liquefactaque volvere saxa!
Armorum sonitum toto Germania caelo
audiit, insolitis tremuerunt motibus Alpes.
Vox quoque per lucos volgo exaudita silentis
ingens et simulacra modis pallentia miris visa sub obscurum noctis, pecudesque locutae,
infandum! sistunt amnes terraeque dehiscunt
et maestum inlacrimat templis ebur aeraque sudant.
Proluit insano contorquens vertice silvas
fluviorum rex Eridanus camposque per omnis cum stabulis armenta tulit. Nec tempore eodem tristibus aut extis fibrae adparere minaces
aut puteis manare cruor cessavit et altae
per noctem resonare lupis ululantibus urbes.
Non alias caelo ceciderunt plura sereno
fulgura nec diri totiens arsere cometae.
ergo inter sese paribus concurrere telis
Romanas acies iterum videre Philippi;
nec fuit indignum superis, bis sanguine nostro
Emathiam et latos Haemi pinguescere campos.
Scilicet et tempus veniet, cum finibus illis
agricola incurvo terram molitus aratro
exesa inveniet scabra robigine pila
aut gravibus rastris galeas pulsabit inanis
grandiaque effossis mirabitur ossa sepulchris.
Di patrii, Indigetes, et romule Vestaque mater,
quae Tuscum Tiberim et Romana Palatia servas,
hunc saltem everso iuvenem succurrere saeclo
ne prohibete! Satis iam pridem sanguine nostro Laomedontae luimus periuria Troiae;
iam pridem nobis caeli te regia, Caesar,

invidet atque hominum queritur curare triumphos;
quippe ubi fas versum atque nefas: tot bella per orbem,
tam multae scelerum facies; non ullus aratro
dignus honos, squalent abductis arva colonis
et curvae rigidum falces conflantur in ensem.
Hinc movet Euphrates, illinc Germania bellum;
vicinae ruptis inter se legibus urbes
arma ferunt; saevit toto Mars inpius orbe;
ut cum carceribus sese effudere quadrigae,
addunt in spatia et frustra retinacula tendens
fertur equis auriga neque audit currus habenas.

LIBER II

Hactenus arborum cultus et sidera caeli,
nunc te, Bacche, canam, nec non silvestria tecum
virgulta et prolem tarde crescentis olivae.
Huc, pater o Lenaeae — -tuis hic omnia plena
muneribus, tibi pampineo gravidus autumnno floret ager, spumat plenae vindemia labris — - huc, pater o Lenaeae, veni nudataque musto
tingue novo mecum direptis crura cothurnis.

Principio arboribus varia est natura creandis.
namque aliae nullis hominum cogentibus ipsae sponte sua veniunt camposque et flumina late curva tenent, ut molle siler lentaeque genestae,
populus et glauca canentia fronde salicta;
pars autem posito surgunt de semine, ut altae
castaneae nemorumque Iovi quae maxima frondet
aesculus atque habitae Graeis oracula quercus.
Pullulat ab radice aliis densissima silva,
ut cerasis ulmisque; etiam Parnasia laurus
parva sub ingenti matris se subicit umbra.
Hos natura modos primum dedit, his genus omne
silvarum fruticumque viret nemorumque sacrorum.

Sunt aliae, quas ipse via sibi repperit usus.
Hic plantas tenero abscindens de corpore matrum
deposuit sulcis, hic stirpes obruit arvo
quadrifidasque sudes et acuto robore vallos;
silvarumque aliae pressos propaginis arcus
exspectant et viva sua plantaria terra;
nil radicis egent aliae summumque putator
haud dubitat terrae referens mandare cacumen.
Quin et caudicibus sectis — -mirabile dictu — - truditur e sicco radix oleagina ligno.
Et saepe alterius ramos inpune videmus

vertere in alterius mutatamque insita mala
ferre pirum et prunis lapidosa rubescere corna.

Quare agite o proprios generatim discite cultus,
agricolae, fructusque feros mollite colendo,
neu segnes iaceant terrae. Iuvat Ismara Baccho conserere atque olea magnum vestire Taburnum.
Tuque ades inceptumque una decurre laborem,
O decus, o famae merito pars maxima nostrae,
Maecenas, pelagoque volans da vela patenti;
non ego cuncta meis amplecti versibus opto,
non, mihi si linguae centum sint oraue centum,
ferrea vox; ades et primi lege litoris oram.
In manibus terrae; non hic te carmine ficto
atque per ambages et longa exorsa tenebo.

Sponte sua quae se tollunt in luminis oras,
infecunda quidem, sed laeta et fortia surgunt;
quippe solo natura subest. Tamen haec quoque, si quis inserat aut scrobibus mandet mutata subactis,
exuerint silvestrem animum cultuque frequenti
in quascumque voles artis haud tarda sequentur.
Nec non et sterilis, quae stirpibus exit ab imis,
hoc faciat, vacuos si sit digesta per agros;
nunc altae frondes et rami matris opacant
crescentique adimunt fetus uruntque ferentem.
Iam quae seminibus iactis se sustulit arbos
tarda venit seris factura nepotibus umbram,
pomaque degenerant sucos oblita priores
et turpis avibus praedam fert uva racemos.
Scilicet omnibus est labor inpendendus et omnes
cogendae in sulcum ac multa mercede domandae.
Sed truncis oleae melius, propagine vites
respondent, solido Paphiae de robore myrtus;
plantis et durae coryli nascuntur et ingens
fraxinus Herculeaeque arbos umbrosa coronae Chaoniiue patris glandes, etiam ardua palma

nascitur et casus abies visura marinos.

Inseritur vero et fetu nucis arbutus horrida,
et steriles platani malos gessere valentis;
castaneae fagus, ornusque incanuit albo
flore piri glandemque sues fregere sub ulmis.
Nec modus inserere atque oculos inponere simplex.
Nam qua se medio trudunt de cortice gemmae
et tenuis rumpunt tunicas, angustus in ipso
fit nodo sinus: huc aliena ex arbore germen
includunt udoque docent inolescere libro.
Aut rursum enodes trunci resecantur et alte
finditur in solidum cuneis via, deinde feraces
plantae inmittuntur: nec longum tempus, et ingens
exsilit ad caelum ramis felicibus arbos
miraturque novas frondes et non sua poma.

Praeterea genus haud unum nec fortibus ulmis
nec salici lotoque neque Idaeis cyparissis,
nec pingues unam in faciem nascuntur olivae,
orchades et radii et amara pausia baca
pomaque et Alcinoi silvae, nec surculus idem
Crustumiiis Syriisque piris gravibusque volemis.
Non eadem arboribus pendet vindemia nostris,
quam Methymnaeo carpit de palmitibus Lesbos;
sunt Thasiae vites, sunt et Mareotides albae,
pinguibus hae terris habiles, levioribus illae,
et passo Psithia utilior tenuisque Lageos
temptatura pedes olim vincturaque linguam,
purpureae preciaeque, et quo te carmine dicam,
Rhaetica? Nec cellis ideo contende Falernis.
Sunt et Amineae vites, firmissima vina,
Tmolius adsurgit quibus et rex ipse Phanaeus;
Argitisque minor, cui non certaverit ulla
aut tantum fluere aut totidem durare per annos.
Non ego te, Dis et mensis accepta secundis,
transierim, Rhodia, et tumidis, Bumaste, racemis.

Sed neque quam multae species nec nomina quae sint,
est numerus; neque enim numero comprehendere refert;
quem qui scire velit, Libyci velit aequoris idem
discere quam multae Zephyro turbentur harenae,
aut ubi navigiis violentior incidit Eurus,
nosse, quot Ionii veniant ad litora fluctus.

Nec vero terrae ferre omnes omnia possunt.
fluminibus salices crassisque paludibus alni
nascuntur, steriles saxosis montibus orni;
litora myrtetis laetissima; denique apertos
Bacchus amat collis, aquilonem et frigora taxi.
Aspice et extremis domitum cultoribus orbem
Eoasque domos Arabum pictosque Gelonos:
divisae arboribus patriae. Sola India nigrum fert ebum, solis est turea virga Sabaeis.
Quid tibi odorato referam sudantia ligno
balsamaque et bacas semper frondentis acanthi?
Quid nemora Aethiopum molli canentia lana,
velleraque ut foliis depectant tenuia Seres;
aut quos Oceano propior gerit India lucos,
extremi sinus orbis, ubi aera vincere summum
arboris haud ullae iactu potuere sagittae?
Et gens illa quidem sumptis non tarda pharetris.
Media fert tristis sucos tardumque saporem
felicis mali, quo non praesentius ullum,
pocula si quando saevae infecere novercae,
miscueruntque herbas et non innoxia verba,
auxilium venit ac membris agit atra venena.
Ipsa ingens arbos faciemque simillima lauro;
et, si non alium late iactaret odorem,
laurus erat; folia haud ullis labentia ventis;
flos ad prima tenax; animas et olentia Medi
ora foveant illo et senibus medicantur anhelis.
sed neque Medorum, silvae ditissima, terra,
nec pulcher Ganges atque auro turbidus Hermus
laudibus Italiae certent, non Bactra neque Indi

totaque turiferis Panchaia pinguis harenis.
Haec loca non tauri spirantes naribus ignem
invertere satis inmanis dentibus hydri
nec galeis densisque virum seges horruit hastis;
sed gravidae fruges et Bacchi Massicus humor
inplevere; tenent oleae armentaque laeta.
Hinc bellator equus campo sese arduus infert;
hinc albi, Clitumne, greges et maxima taurus
victima, saepe tuo perfusi flumine sacro,
Romanos ad templa deum duxere triumphos.
Hic ver adsidium atque alienis mensibus aestas
bis gravidae pecudes, bis pomis utilis arbos.
At rabidae tigres absunt et saeva leonum
semina nec miseros fallunt aconita legis nec rapit immensos orbis per humum neque tanto
squameus in spiram tractu se colligit anguis.
Adde tot egregias urbes operumque laborem,
tot congesta manu praeruptis oppida saxis
fluminaque antiquos subter labentia muros.
An mare, quod supra, memorem, quodque adluit infra
anne lacus tantos? Te, Lari maxume, teque, fluctibus et fremitu adsurgens Benace marino
an memorem portus Lucrinoque addita claustra
atque indignatum magnis stridoribus aequor
Iulia qua ponto longe sonat unda refuso
Tyrrhenusque fretis inmittitur aestus Avernis?
Haec eadem argenti rivos aerisque metalla
ostendit venis atque auro plurima fluxit.
Haec genus acre virum, Marsos pubemque Sabellam
adsuetumque malo Ligurem Volscosque verutos
extulit, haec Decios, Marios, magnosque Camillos, Scipiadas duros bello et te, maxume Caesar,
qui nunc extremis Asiae iam victor in oris
inbellem avertis Romanis arcibus Indum.
Salve, magna parens frugum, Saturnia tellus,
magna virum; tibi res antiquae laudis et artem
ingredior, sanctos ausus recludere fontis,

Ascraeumque cano Romana per oppida carmen.

Nunc locus arborum ingeniis: quae robora cuique,
quis color et quae sit rebus natura ferendis.

Difficiles primum terrae collesque maligni,
tenuis ubi argilla et dumosis calculus arvis,
Palladia gaudent silva vivacis olivae.

Indicio est tractu surgens oleaster eodem
plurimus et strati bacis silvestribus agri.

At quae pinguis humus dulcique uligine laeta,
quique frequens herbis et fertilis ubere campus — -
qualem saepe cava montis convalle solemus
despicere; huc summis liquuntur rupibus amnes felicemque trahunt limum — -quique editus austro et filicem curvis invisam pascit aratris:

hic tibi praevalidas olim multoque fluentis
sufficiet Baccho vitis, hic fertilis uvae,
hic laticis, qualem pateris libamus et auro,
inflavit cum pinguis ebur Tyrrhenus ad aras,
lancibus et pandis fumantia reddimus exta.

Sin armenta magis studium vitulosque tueri
aut ovium fetum aut urentis culta capellas,
saltus et saturi petito longinqua Tarenti
et qualem infelix amisit Mantua campum,
pascentem niveos herboso flumine cycnos;
non liquidi gregibus fontes, non gramina deerunt;
et, quantum longis carpent armenta diebus,
exigua tantum gelidus ros nocte reponet.

Nigra fere et presso pinguis sub vomere terra
et cui putre solum, — -namque hoc imitatur arando — - optima frumentis; non ullo ex aequare cernes
plura domum tardis decedere plaustra iuvenicis;
aut unde iratus silvam devexit arator
et nemora evertit multos ignava per annos
antiquasque domos avium cum stirpibus imis
eruit; illae altum nidis petiere relictis,
at rudis enituit impulso vomere campus.

Nam ieiuna quidem clivosi glarea ruris
vix humilis apibus casias roremque ministrat;
et tophus scaber et nigris exesa chelydris
creta negant alios aequae serpentibus agros
dulcem ferre cibum et curvas praebere latebras.
Quae tenuem exhalat nebulam fumosque volucris
et bibit humorem et, cum volt, ex se ipsa remittit
quaeque suo semper viridi se gramine vestit
nec scabie et salsa laedit robigine ferrum:
illa tibi laetis intextet vitibus ulmos,
illa ferax oleo est, illam experiere colendo
et facilem pecori et patientem vomeris unci.
Talem dives arat Capua et vicina Vesevo
ora iugo et vacuis Clanius non aequus Acerris.

Nunc, quo quamque modo possis cognoscere, dicam.
Rara sit an supra morem si densa requires — - altera frumentis quoniam favet, altera Baccho, densa magis Cereri, rarissima quaeque Lyaeo — - ante locum capies oculis alteque iubebis
in solido puteum demitti omnemque repones
rursus humum et pedibus summas aequabis harenas.
Si deerunt, rarum pecorique et vitibus almis
aptius uber erit; sin in sua posse negabunt
ire loca et scrobibus superabit terra repletis,
spissus ager; glaebas cunctantis crassaque terga
expecta et validis terram proscinde iuvenis.
Salsa autem tellus et quae perhibetur amara,
frugibus infelix — -ea nec mansuescit arando
nec Baccho genus aut pomis sua nomina servat — - tale dabit specimen: tu spisso vimine qualos
colaque prelorum fumosis deripe tectis;
huc ager ille malus dulcesque a fontibus undae
ad plenum calcentur; aqua eluctabitur omnis
scilicet, et grandes ibunt per vimina guttae;
at sapor indicium faciet manifestus et ora
tristia temptantum sensu torquebit amaro.

Pinguis item quae sit tellus, hoc denique pacto
discimus: haud umquam manibus iactata fatiscit,
sed picis in morem ad digitos lentescit habendo.
Humida maiores herbas alit, ipsaque iusto laetior. Ah nimium ne sit mihi fertilis illa nec se praevalidam primis ostendat aristis!
Quae gravis est, ipso tacitam se pondere prodit,
quaeque levis. Promptum est oculis praediscere nigram, et quis cui color. At sceleratum exquirere frigus difficile est: piceae tantum taxique nocentes
interdum aut hederæ pandunt vestigia nigrae
his animadversis terram multo ante memento
excoquere et magnos scrobibus concidere montis,
ante supinatas aquiloni ostendere glaebas,
quam laetum infodias vitis genus. Optima putri arva solo: id venti curant gelidaeque pruinae
et labefacta movens robustus iugera fossor.
Ac si quos haud ulla viros vigilantia fugit,
ante locum similem exquirunt, ubi prima paretur
arboribus seges et quo mox digesta feratur,
mutatam ignorent subito ne semina matrem.
Quin etiam caeli regionem in cortice signant,
ut, quo quaeque modo steterit, qua parte calores
Austrinos tulerit, quae terga obverterit axi,
restituunt: adeo in teneris consuescere multum est.
Collibus an plano melius sit ponere vitem,
quaere prius. Si pinguis agros metabere campi,
densa sere; in denso non signior ubere Bacchus;
sin tumultis adclive solum collisque supinos,
indulge ordinibus, nec setius omnis in unguem
arboribus positis secto via limite quadret.
Ut saepe ingenti bello cum longa cohortis
explicuit legio et campo stetit agmen aperto,
directaeque acies, ac late fluctuat omnis
aere renidenti tellus, necdum horrida miscent
proelia, sed dubius mediis Mars errat in armis:
omnia sint paribus numeris dimensa viarum;

non animum modo uti pascat prospectus inanem,
sed quia non aliter viris dabit omnibus aequas
terra neque in vacuum poterunt se extendere rami.

Forsitan et scrobibus quae sint fastigia quaeras.
ausim vel tenui vitem committere sulco.
Altior ac penitus terrae defigitur arbos,
aesculus in primis, quae quantum vertice ad auras
aetherias, tantum radice in Tartara tendit.
Ergo non hiemes illam, non flabra neque imbres
convellunt; inmotam manet, multosque nepotes,
multa virum volvens durando saecula vincit.
Tum fortis late ramos et brachia pandens
huc illuc, media ipsa ingentem sustinet umbram.

Neve tibi ad solem vergant vineta cadentem,
Neve inter vitis corylum sere, neve flagella
summa pete aut summa defringe ex arbore plantas
tantus amor terrae — -neu ferro laede retunso
semina, neve oleae silvestris insere truncos:
nam saepe incautis pastoribus excidit ignis,
qui furtim pingui primum sub cortice tectus
roboram comprehendit frondesque elapsus in altas
ingentem caelo sonitum dedit; inde secutus
per ramos victor perque alta cacumina regnat
et totum involvit flammis nemus et ruit atram
ad caelum picea crassus caligine nubem,
praesertim si tempestas a vertice silvis
incubuit glomeratque ferens incendia ventus.
Hoc ubi, non a stirpe valent caesaeque reverti
possunt atque ima similes revirescere terra;
infelix superat foliis oleaster amaris.

Nec tibi tam prudens quisquam persuadeat auctor
tellurem Borea rigidam spirante movere.
Rura gelu tum claudit hiems nec semine iacto
concretam patitur radicem adfigere terrae.

Optima vinetis satio, cum vere rubenti
candida venit avis longis invisae colubris,
prima vel autumnus sub frigora, cum rapidus Sol
nondum hiemem contingit equis, iam praeterit aestas.
Ver adeo frondi nemorum, ver utile silvis;
vere tument terrae et genitalia semina poscunt.
Tum pater omnipotens fecundis imbribus Aether
coniugis in gremium laetae descendit et omnis
magnus alit magno commixtus corpore fetus.
Avia tum resonant avibus virgulta canoris
et Venerem certis repetunt armenta diebus;
parturit almus ager Zephyrique tepentibus auris
laxant arva sinus; superat tener omnibus humor;
inque novos soles audent se germina tuto
credere, nec metuit surgentis pampinus austros
aut actum caelo magnis aquilonibus imbrem, sed trudit gemmas et frondes explicat omnis.
Non alios prima crescentis origine mundi
inluxisse dies aliumve habuisse tenorem
crediderim: ver illud erat, ver magnus agebat
orbis et hibernis parcebant flatibus Euri,
cum primae lucem pecudes hausere virumque
terrea progenies duris caput extulit arvis,
inmissaeque ferae silvis et sidera caelo.
Nec res hunc tenerae possent perferre laborem,
si non tanta quies iret frigusque caloremque
inter, et exciperet caeli indulgentia terras.

Quod superest, quaecumque premes virgulta per agros,
sparge fimo pingui et multa memor occule terra,
aut lapidem bibulum aut squalentis infode conchas;
inter enim labentur aquae tenuisque subibit
halitus atque animos tollent sata; iamque reperti,
qui saxo super atque ingentis pondere testae
urgerent; hoc effusos munimen ad imbris,
hoc, ubi hiulca siti findit canis aestifer arva.

Seminibus positis superest diducere terram
saepius ad capita et duros iactare bidentis,
aut presso exercere solum sub vomere et ipsa
flectere luctantis inter vineta iuencos;
tum levis calamos et rasae hastilia virgae
fraxineasque aptare sudes furcasque valentis,
viribus eniti quarum et contemnere ventos
adsuescant summasque sequi tabulata per ulmos.

Ac dum prima novis adolescit frondibus aetas,
parcendum teneris, et dum se laetus ad auras
palmes agit laxis per purum inmissus habenis,
ipsa acie nondum falcis temptanda, sed uncis
carpendae manibus frondes interque legendae.
Inde ubi iam validis amplexae stirpibus ulmos
exierint, tum stringe comas, tum bracchia tonde —
ante reformidant ferrum — -tum denique dura
exerce imperia et ramos conpesce fluentis.

Texendae saepes etiam et pecus omne tenendum,
praecipue dum frons tenera inprudensque laborum;
cui super indignas hiemes solemque potentem
silvestres uri adsidue capraeque sequaces
inludunt, pascuntur oves avidaeque iuvencae.
Frigora nec tantum cana concreta pruina
aut gravis incumbens scopulis arentibus aestas,
quantum illi nocuere greges durique venenum
dentis et admorso signata in stirpe cicatrix.
Non aliam ob culpam Baccho caper omnibus aris
caeditur et veteres ineunt proscaenia ludi
praemiaque ingeniis pagos et compita circum
thesidae posuere atque inter pocula laeti mollibus in pratis unctos saluere per utres.
Nec non Ausonii, Troia gens missa, coloni
versibus incomptis ludunt risuque soluto
oraque corticibus sumunt horrenda cavatis
et te, Bacche, vocant per carmina laeta tibi

oscilla ex alta suspendunt mollia pinu.
Hinc omnis largo pubescit vinea fetu,
conplentur vallesque cavae saltusque profundi,
et quocumque deus circum caput egit honestum.
Ergo rite suum Baccho dicemus honorem
carminibus patriis lancesque et liba feremus
et ductus cornu stabit sacer hircus ad aram
pinguique in veribus torrebimus exta columnis.

Est etiam ille labor curandis vitibus alter,
cui numquam exhausti satis est: namque omne quot annis terque quaterque solum scindendum glebaque versis
aeternum frangenda bidentibus, omne levandum fronde nemus. Redit agricolis labor actus in orbem atque in se sua per vestigia volvitur annus.
Ac iam olim, seras posuit cum vinea frondes,
frigidus et silvis aquilo decussit honorem,
iam tum acer curas venientem extendit in annum
rusticus et curvo Saturni dente relictam persequitur vitem attondens fingitque putando.
Primus humum fodito, primus devecta cremato
sarmenta et vallos primus sub tecta referto;
postremus metito. Bis vitibus ingruit umbra,
bis segetem densis obducunt sentibus herbae;
durus uterque labor: laudato ingentia rura,
exiguum colito. Nec non etiam aspera rusci vimina per silvam et ripis fluvialis arundo
caeditur, incultique exercet cura salicti.
Iam vinctae vites, iam falcem arbusta reponunt,
iam canit effectos extremus vinitor antes:
sollicitanda tamen tellus pulvisque movendus
et iam maturis metuendus Iuppiter uvis.
Contra non ulla est oleis cultura; neque illae
procurvam exspectant falcem rastrosque tenacis,
cum semel haeserunt arvis aurasque tulerunt;
ipsa satis tellus, cum dente recluditur unco,
sufficit humorem et gravidas, cum vomere, fruges.

Hoc pinguem et placitam Paci nutritor olivam.

Poma quoque, ut primum truncos sensere valentis
et viris habuere suas, ad sidera raptim
vi propria nituntur opisque haud indiga nostrae.
Nec minus interea fetu nemus omne gravescit
sanguineisque inculta rubent aviaria baxis.
Tondentur cytisi, taedas silva alta ministrat,
pascunturque ignes nocturni et lumina fundunt.
Et dubitant homines serere atque inpendere curam
quid maiora sequar? — salices humilesque genestae
aut illae pecori frondem aut pastoribus umbram Sufficiunt saepemque satis et pabula melli —
et iuvat undantem buxo spectare Cytorum
naryciaeque picis lucos, iuvat arva videre
non rastris, hominum non ulli obnoxia curae.
Ipsae Caucasio steriles in vertice silvae,
quas animosi Euri adsidue franguntque feruntque,
dant alios aliae fetus, dant utile lignum
navigiis pinus, domibus cedrumque cupressosque.
Hinc radios trivere rotis, hinc tympana plaustis
agricolae et pandas ratibus posuere carinas,
viminibus salices fecundae, frondibus ulmi,
at myrtus validis hastilibus et bona bello
cornus, Ituraeos taxi torquentur in arcus.
Nec tiliae leves aut torno rasile buxum
non formam accipiunt ferroque cavantur acuto.
Nec non et torrentem undam levis innatat alnus,
missa Pado; nec non et apes examina condunt
corticibusque cavis vitiosaeque ilicis alvo.
Quid memorandum aeque Baccheia dona tulerunt Bacchus et ad culpam causas dedit; ille furentis
centauros leto domuit, Rhoetumque Pholumque
et magno Hylaeum Lapithis cratere minantem.

O fortunatos nimium, sua si bona norint, agricolas! quibus ipsa procul discordibus armis

fundit humo facilem victum iustissima tellus.
Si non ingentem foribus domus alta superbis
mane salutantum totis vomit aedibus undam,
nec varios inhiant pulchra testudine postis
inlusasque auro vestes Ephyreiaque aera,
alba neque Assyrio fucatur lana veneno
nec casia liquidi corrumpitur usus olivi:
at secura quies et nescia fallere vita,
dives opum variarum, at latis otia fundis — - speluncae vivique lacus et frigida Tempe mugitusque boum mollesque sub arbore somni — -
non absunt; illic saltus ac lustra ferarum
et patiens operum exiguoque adsueta iuventus, sacra deum sanctique patres; extrema per illos
iustitia excedens terris vestigia fecit.

Me vero primum dulces ante omnia Musae,
quarum sacra fero ingenti percussus amore,
accipiant caelique vias et sidera monstrent,
defectus solis varios lunaeque labores;
unde tremor terris, qua vi maria alta tumescant
obcibus ruptis rursusque in se ipsa residant,
quid tantum Oceano properent se tingere soles
hiberni, vel quae tardis mora noctibus obstet.
Sin, has ne possim naturae accedere partis,
frigidus obstiterit circum praecordia sanguis:
rura mihi et rigui placeant in vallibus amnes,
flumina amem silvasque inglorius. O ubi campi Spercheosque et virginibus bacchata Lacaenis Taygeta! O, qui me gelidis convallibus Haemi sistat et ingenti ramorum protegat umbra!
Felix, qui potuit rerum cognoscere causas,
atque metus omnis et inexorabile fatum
subiecit pedibus strepitumque Acherontis avari.
Fortunatus et ille, deos qui novit agrestis,
panaque Silvanumque senem Nymphasque sorores:
illum non populi fascēs, non purpura regum

flexit et infidos agitans discordia fratres
aut coniurato descendens Dacus ab Histro,
non res Romanae perituraque regna; neque ille
aut doluit miserans inopem aut invidit habenti
quos rami fructus, quos ipsa volentia rura
sponte tulere sua, carpsit; nec ferrea iura
insanumque forum aut populi tabularia vidit.
sollicitant alii remis freta caeca ruuntque
in ferrum, penetrant aulas et limina regum;
hic petit excidiis urbem miserosque Penatis,
ut gemma bibat et Sarrano dormiat ostro;
condit opes alius defossoque incubat auro;
hic stupet attonitus rostris; hunc plausus hiantem
per cuneos — -geminatus enim plebisque patrumque — - corripuit; gaudent perfusi sanguine fratrum,
exsilioque domos et dulcia limina mutant
atque alio patriam quaerunt sub sole iacentem.
Agricola incurvo terram dimovit aratro:
hinc anni labor, hinc patriam parvosque nepotes
sustinet, hinc armenta boum meritosque iuvencos.
Nec requies, quin aut pomis exuberet annus
aut fetu pecorum aut cerealis mergite culmi,
proventuque oneret sulcos atque horrea vincat.
Venit hiems: teritur Sicyonia baca trapetis,
glande sues laeti redeunt, dant arbuta silvae;
et varios ponit fetus autumnus et alte
mitis in apricis coquitur vindemia saxis.
Interea dulces pendent circum oscula nati,
casta pudicitiam servat domus, ubera vaccae
lactea demittunt pinguesque in gramine laeto
inter se adversis luctantur cornibus haedi.
Ipse dies agitat festos fususque per herbam,
ignis ubi in medio et socii cratera coronant,
te libans, Lenaeae, vocat pecorisque magistris
velocis iaculi certamina ponit in ulmo,
corporaque agresti nudant praedura palaestrae.
Hanc olim veteres vitam coluere Sabini,

hanc Remus et frater, sic fortis Etruria crevit
scilicet et rerum facta est pulcherrima Roma,
septemque una sibi muro circumdedit arces.
Ante etiam sceptrum Dictaei regis et ante
in pia quam caesis gens est epulata iuvcis,
aureus hanc vitam in terris Saturnus agebat;
necdum etiam audierant inflari classica, necdum
inpositos duris crepitare incudibus enses.
Sed nos immensum spatium confecimus aequor,
et iam tempus equum fumantia solvere colla.

LIBER III

Te quoque, magna Pales, et te memorande canemus
pastor ab Amphryso, vos, silvae amnesque Lycaeï.

Cetera, quae vacuas tenuissent carmine mentes,
omnia iam volgata: quis aut Eurysthea durum
aut inlaudati nescit Busiridis aras?

Cui non dictus Hylas puer et Latonia Delos Hippodameque umeroque Pelops insignis eburno, acer equis? Temptanda via est, qua me quoque possim
tollere humo victorque virum volitare per ora.

Primus ego in patriam mecum, modo vita supersit,
Aonio rediens deducam vertice Musas;
primus Idumaeas referam tibi, Mantua, palmas,
et viridi in campo templum de marmore ponam
propter aquam. Tardis ingens ubi flexibus errat Mincius et tenera praetexit arundine ripas.

In medio mihi Caesar erit templumque tenebit:
illi victor ego et Tyrio conspectus in ostro
centum quadriiugos agitabo ad flumina currus.
Cuncta mihi Alpheum linquens lucosque Molorchi
cursibus et crudo decernet Graecia caestu.

Ipsae caput tonsae foliis ornatus olivae
dona feram. Iam nunc sollemnis ducere pompas ad delubra iuvat caesosque videre iuencos,
vel scaena ut versis discedat frontibus utque
purpurea intexti tollant aulaea Britannii.

In foribus pugnam ex auro solidoque elephanto
Gangaridum faciam victorisque arma Quirini,
atque hic undantem bello magnumque fluentem
Nilum ac navali surgentis aere columnas.

Addam urbes Asiae domitas pulsumque Niphaten
fidentemque fuga Parthum versisque sagittis,
et duo rapta manu diverso ex hoste tropaea
bisque triumphatas utroque ab litore gentes.
Stabunt et Parii lapides, spirantia signa,

Assaraci proles demissaeque ab Iove gentis
nomina, Trosque parens et Troiae Cynthus auctor.
Invidia infelix Furias amnemque severum Cocyti metuet tortosque Ixionis anguis immanemque rotam et non exsuperabile saxum.
Interea Dryadum silvas saltusque sequamur
intactos, tua, Maecenas, haud mollia iussa.
Te sine nil altum mens incohat; en age segnis
rumpe moras; vocat ingenti clamore Cithaeron Taygetique canes domitrixque Epidaurus equorum
et vox adsensu nemorum ingeminata remugit.
Mox tamen ardentis accingar dicere pugnas
Caesaris et nomen fama tot ferre per annos,
Tithoni prima quot abest ab origine Caesar.

Seu quis Olympiacae miratus praemia palmae
pascit equos seu quis fortis ad aratra iuencos, corpora praecipue matrum legat. Optuma torvae forma bovis, cui turpe caput, cui plurima cervix,
et crurum tenuis a mento palearia pendent;
tum longo nullus lateri modus; omnia magna,
pes etiam; et camuris hirtae sub cornibus aures.
Nec mihi displiceat maculis insignis et albo,
aut iuga detractans interdumque aspera cornu
et faciem tauro propior, quaeque ardua tota,
et gradiens ima verit vestigia cauda,
Aetas Lucinam iustosque pati hymenaeos
desinit ante decem, post quattuor incipit annos;
cetera nec feturae habilis nec fortis aratris.
Interea, superat gregibus dum laeta iuventas,
solve mares; mitte in Venerem pecuaria primus,
atque aliam ex alia generando suffice prolem.
Optuma quaeque dies miseris mortalibus aevi
prima fugit; subeunt morbi tristisque senectus
et labor, et durae rapit inclementia mortis.
Semper erunt, quarum mutari corpora malis:
semper enim refice ac, ne post amissa requiras,

ante veni et subolem armento sortire quotannis.

Nec non et pecori est idem dilectus equino.
Tu modo, quos in spem statues submittere gentis,
praecipuum iam inde a teneris impende laborem.
Continuo pecoris generosi pullus in arvis
altius ingreditur et mollia crura reponit;
primus et ire viam et fluvios temptare minaces
audet et ignoto sese committere ponti nec vanos horret strepitus. Illi ardua cervix argutumque caput, brevis alvus obesaque terga, luxuriatque toris animosum pectus. Honesti spadices glaucique, color deterrimus albis
et gilvo. Tum, si qua sonum procul arma dedere stare loco nescit, micat auribus et tremit artus
collectumque premens volvit sub naribus ignem.
Densa iuba, et dextro iactata recumbit in armo;
at duplex agitur per lumbos spina, cavatque
tellurem et solido graviter sonat ungula cornu.
Talis Amyclaei domitus Pollucis habenis
Cyllarus et, quorum Grai meminere poetae,
Martis equi biiuges et magni currus Achilli.
Talis et ipse iubam cervice effundit equina
coniugis adventu pernix Saturnus et altum
Pelion hinnitu fugiens implevit acuto.

Hunc quoque, ubi aut morbo gravis aut iam segnior annis deficit, abde domo nec turpi ignosce senectae.
frigidus in Venerem senior, frustra que laborem
ingratum trahit, et, si quando ad proelia ventum est,
ut quondam in stipulis magnus sine viribus ignis, incassum furit. Ergo animos aevumque notabis praecipue; hinc alias artis prolemque parentum
et quis cuique dolor victo, quae gloria palmae.
Nonne vides, cum praecipiti certamine campum
corripuere ruuntque effusi carcere currus,
cum spes arrectae iuvenum, exsultantiaque haurit

corda pavor pulsans? Illi instant verbere torto et proni dant lora, volat vi fervidus axis;
iamque humiles, iamque elati sublime videntur
aera per vacuum ferri atque adsurgere in auras;
nec mora nec requies; at fulvae nimbus harenae
tollitur, umescunt spumis flatuque sequentum:
tantus amor laudum, tantae est victoria curae.
Primus Erichthonius currus et quattuor ausus
iungere equos rapidusque rotis insistere victor Frena Pelethronii Lapithae gyrosque dedere
impositi dorso atque equitem docuere sub armis
insultare solo et gressus glomerare superbos.
Aequus uterque labor, aequae iuvenemque magistri
exquirunt calidumque animis et cursibus acrem,
quamvis saepe fuga versos ille egerit hostis
et patriam Epirum referat fortisque Mycenae Neptunique ipsa deducat origine gentem.

His animadversis instant sub tempus et omnis
impendunt curas denso distendere pingui,
quem legere ducem et pecori dixere maritum;
florentisque secant herbas fluviosque ministrant
farraque, ne blando nequeat superesse labori
invalidique patrum referant ieiunia nati.
Ipsa autem macie tenuant armenta volentes,
atque, ubi concubitus primos iam nota voluptas
sollicitat, frondesque negant et fontibus arcent.
Saepe etiam cursu quatiunt et sole fatigant,
cum graviter tunsis gemit area frugibus et cum
surgentem ad Zephyrum paleae iactantur inanes.
Hoc faciunt, nimio ne luxu obtunsior usus
sit genitali arvo et sulcos oblimet inertis,
sed rapiat sitiens Venerem interiusque recondat.
Rursus cura patrum cadere et succedere matrum incipit. Exactis gravidae cum mensibus errant,
non illas gravibus quisquam iuga ducere plaustis,
non saltu superare viam sit passus et acri

carpere prata fuga fluviosque innare rapacis.
Saltibus in vacuis pascunt et plena secundum
flumina, muscus ubi et viridissima gramine ripa,
speluncaeque tegant et saxeae procubet umbra.
Est lucos Silari circa ilicibusque; virentem
plurimus Alburnum volitans, cui nomen asilo Romanum est, oestrum Grai vertere vocantes,
asper, acerba sonans, quo tota exterrita silvis
diffugiunt armenta; furit mugitibus aether
concussus silvaeque et sicci ripa Tanagri.
Hoc quondam monstro horribilis exercuit iras
Inachiae Iuno pestem meditata iuvencae.
Hunc quoque, nam mediis fervoribus acrior instat,
arcebis gravido pecori, armentaque pasces
sole recens orto aut noctem ducentibus astris.

Post partum cura in vitulos traducitur omnis,
continuoque notas et nomina gentis inurunt
et quos aut pecori malint submittere habendo
aut aris servare sacros aut scindere terram
et campum horrentem fractis invertere glaebis.
Cetera pascuntur viridis armenta per herbas:
Tu quos ad studium atque usum formabis agrestem,
iam vitulos hortare viamque insiste domandi,
dum faciles animi iuvenum, dum mobilis aetas.
Ac primum laxos tenui de vimine circlos
cervici subnecte; dehinc, ubi libera colla
servitio adsuerint, ipsis e torquibus aptos
iunge pares et coge gradum conferre iuencos;
atque illis iam saepe rotae ducantur inanes
per terram et summo vestigia pulvere signent;
post valido nitens sub pondere fagus axis
instrepat et iunctos temo trahat aereus orbes.
Interea pubi indomitae non gramina tantum
nec vascas salicum frondes ulvamque palustrem,
sed frumenta manu carpes sata; nec tibi fetae
more patrum nivea implebunt mulctraria vaccae,

sed tota in dulcis consument ubera natos.

Sin ad bella magis studium turmasque ferocis,
aut Alphea rotis praelabi flumina Pisae
et Iovis in luco currus agitare volantis:
primus equi labor est, animos atque arma videre
bellantum lituosque pati tractuque gementem
ferre rotam et stabulo frenos audire sonantis;
tum magis atque magis blandis gaudere magistri
laudibus et plausae sonitum cervicis amare.
Atque haec iam primo depulsus ab ubere matris
audeat, inque vicem det mollibus ora capistris
invalidus etiamque tremens, etiam inscius aevi.
At tribus exactis ubi quarta accesserit aestas,
carpere mox gyrum incipiat gradibusque sonare
compositis sinuetque alterna volumina crurum
sitque laboranti similis; tum cursibus auras,
tum vocet, ac per aperta volans ceu liber habenis
aequora vix summa vestigia ponat harena;
qualis Hyperboreis Aquilo cum densus ab oris
incubuit, Scythiaeque hiemes atque arida differt
nubila: tum segetes altae campique natantes
lenibus horrescunt flabris summaeque sonorem
dant silvae longique urgent ad litora fluctus;
ille volat simul arva fuga, simul aequora verrens
Hinc vel ad Elei metas et maxuma campi
sudabit spatia et spumas aget ore cruentas,
Belgica vel molli melius feret esseda collo.
Tum demum crassa magnum farragine corpus crescere iam domitis sinito: namque ante domandum
ingentis tollent animos prensique negabunt
verbera lenta pati et duris parere lupatis.

Sed non ulla magis viris industria firmat,
quam Venerem et caeci stimulos avertere amoris,
sive boum sive est cui gratior usus equorum.
Atque ideo tauros procul atque in sola relegant

pascua post montem oppositum et trans flumina lata,
aut intus clausos satura ad praesepia servant.

Carpit enim viris paulatim uritque videndo
femina nec nemorum patitur meminisse nec herbae
dulcibus illa quidem inlecebris, et saepe superbos
cornibus inter se subigit decernere amantis.

Pascitur in magna Sila formosa iuvenca:
illi alternantes multa vi proelia miscent
volneribus crebris, lavit ater corpora sanguis,
versaue in obnixos urguntur cornua vasto
cum gemitu, reboant silvaeque et longus Olympus
Nec mos bellantis una stabulare, sed alter
victus abit longeque ignotis exulat oris,
multa gemens ignominiam plagasque superbi
victoris, tum, quos amisit inultus, amores;
et stabula aspectans regnis excessit avertis.

Ergo omni cura viris exercet et inter dura iacet pernix instrato saxa cubili
frondibus hirsutis et carice pastus acuta,
et temptat sese atque irasci in cornua discit
arboris obnixus trunco ventosque lacessit
ictibus et sparsa ad pugnam proludit harena.
Post ubi collectum robur viresque reffectae
signa movet praecepsque oblitum fertur in hostem:
fluctus uti medio coepit cum albescere ponto
longius ex altoque sinum trahit, utque volutus
ad terras immane sonat per saxa neque ipso
monte minor procumbit, at ima exaestuatur unda
verticibus nigramque alte subiectat harenam.

Omne adeo genus in terris hominumque ferarumque,
et genus aequoreum, pecudes pictaeque volucres,
in furias. ignemque ruunt. Amor omnibus idem.
Tempore non alio catulorum oblita leaena
saevior erravit campis, nec funera volgo
tam multa informes ursi stragemque dedere
per silvas; tum saevus aper, tum pessima tigris;

heu male tum Libyae solis erratur in agris.
Nonne vides, ut tota tremor pertemptet equorum
corpora, si tantum notas odor attulit auras?
Ac neque eos iam frena virum neque verbera saeva
non scopuli rupesque cavae atque obiecta retardant
flumina correptosque unda torquentia montis.
Ipse ruit dentesque Sabellicus exacuit sus
et pede prosubigit terram, fricat arbore costas
atque hinc atque illinc umeros ad volnera durat.
Quid iuvenis, magnum cui versat in ossibus ignem
durus amor? Nempe abruptis turbata procellis nocte natat caeca serus freta; quem super ingens
porta tonat caeli et scopulis inlisa reclamant
aequora; nec miseri possunt revocare parentes
nec moritura super crudeli funere virgo.
Quid lynces Bacchi variae et genus acre luporum
atque canum? Quid, quae imbelles dant proelia cervi?
Scilicet ante omnis furor est insignis equarum;
et mentem Venus ipsa dedit, quo tempore Glauci
Potniades malis membra absumpsere quadrigae.
Illas ducit amor trans Gargara transque sonantem
Ascanium; superant montis et flumina tranant.
Continuoque avidis ubi subdita flamma medullis,
vere magis, quia vere calor redit ossibus: illae
ore omnes versae in Zephyrum stant rupibus altis, exceptantque levis auras et saepe sine ullis
coniugiis vento gravidae, mirabile dictu,
saxa per et scopulos et depressas convallis
diffugiunt, non, Eure, tuos, neque solis ad ortus,
in Borean caurumque, aut unde nigerrimus auster
nascitur et pluvio contristat frigore caelum.
Hic demum, hippomanes vero quod nomine dicunt
pastores, lentum destillat ab inguine virus,
hippomanes, quod saepe malae legere novercae
miscueruntque herbas et non innoxia verba.

Sed fugit interea, fugit inreparabile tempus,

singula dum capti circumvectamur amore.
Hoc satis armentis: superat pars altera curae,
lanigeros agitare greges hirtasque capellas.
Hic labor, hinc laudem fortes sperate coloni.
Nec sum animi dubius, verbis ea vincere magnum
quam sit, et angustis hunc addere rebus honorem;
sed me Parnasi deserta per ardua dulcis
raptat amor; iuvat ire iugis, qua nulla priorum
Castaliam molli devertitur orbita clivo.
Nunc, veneranda Pales, magno nunc ore sonandum

Incipiens stabulis edico in mollibus herbam
carpere ovis, dum mox frondosa reducitur aestas,
et multa duram stipula filicumque manipulis
sternere subter humum, glacies ne frigida laedat
molle pecus scabiemque ferat turpisque podagras.
Post hinc digressus iubeo frondentia capris
arbuta sufficere et fluvios praebere recentis
et stabula a ventis hiberno opponere soli
ad medium conversa diem, cum frigidus olim
iam cadit extremoque inrorat Aquarius anno.
Haec quoque non cura nobis levior tuendae,
nec minor usus erit, quamvis Miliesia magno
vellera mutantur Tyrios incocta rubores:
densior hinc suboles, hinc largi copia lactis;
quam magis exhausto spumaverit ubere mulctra,
laeta magis pressis manabunt flumina mammis.
Nec minus interea barbas incanaque menta
Cinyphii tondent hirci saetasque comantis
usum in castrorum et miseris velamina nautis.
Pascuntur vero silvas et summa Lycae
horrentisque rubos et amantis ardua dumos:
atque ipsae memores redeunt in tecta suosque
ducunt et gravido superant vix ubere limen.
Ergo omni studio glaciem ventosque nivalis
quo minor est illis curae mortalis egestas, avertes victumque feres et virgea laetus

pabula, nec tota claudes faenilia bruma.
At vero Zephyris cum laeta vocantibus aestas
in saltus utrumque gregem atque in pascua mittet, Luciferi primo cum sidere frigida rura
carpamus, dum mane novum, dum gramina canent,
et ros in tenera pecori gratissimus herba.
Inde ubi quarta sitim caeli collegerit hora
et cantu querulae rumpent arbusta cicadae,
ad puteos aut alta greges ad stagna iubebo
currentem ilignis potare canalibus undam;
aestibus at mediis umbrosam exquirere vallem,
sicubi magna Iovis antiquo robore quercus ingentis tendat ramos, aut sicubi nigrum
ilicibus crebris sacra nemus accubet umbra;
tum tenuis dare rursus aquas et pascere rursus
solis ad occasum, cum frigidus aera vesper temperat et saltus reficit iam roscida luna
litoraue alcyonem resonant, acalanthida dumi.

Quid tibi pastores Libyae, quid pascua versu
prosequar et raris habitata mapalia tectis?
Saepe diem noctemque et totum ex ordine mensem
pascitur itque pecus longa in deserta sine ullis hospitiis: tantum campi iacet. Omnia secum armentarius Afer agit, tectumque laremque
armaque Amyclaeumque canem Cressamque pharetram;
non secus ac patriis acer Romanus in armis
iniusto sub fasce viam cum carpit et hosti
ante expectatum positus stat in agmine castris.

At non, qua Scythiae gentes Maeotiaque unda,
turbidus et torquens flaventis Hister harenas,
quaque redit medium Rhodope porrecta sub axem.
Illic clausa tenent stabulis armenta, neque ullae
aut herbae campo apparent aut arbore frondes;
sed iacet aggeribus niveis informis et alto
terra gelu late septemque adsurgit in ulnas.

Semper hiemps, semper spirantes frigora cauri.
Tum Sol pallentis haud umquam discutit umbras,
nec cum invectus equis altum petit aethera, nec cum praecipitem Oceani rubro lavit aequore currum.
Concrescunt subitae currenti in flumine crustae
undaque iam tergo ferratos sustinet orbis,
puppibus illa prius, patulis nunc hospita plaustis;
aeraque dissiliunt vulgo vestesque rigescunt
indutae caeduntque securibus umida vina
et totae solidam in glaciem vertere lacunae
stiriaeque impexis induruit horrida barbis.
Interea toto non setius aere nunguit:
intereunt pecudes, stant circumfusa pruinis
corpora magna boum, confertoque agmine cervi
torpent mole nova et summis vix cornibus extant.
Hos non immissis canibus, non cassibus ullis
puniceaeve agitant pavidos formidine pennae,
sed frustra oppositum trudentis pectore montem
comminus obtruncant ferro graviterque rudentis
caedunt et magno laeti clamore reportant.
Ipsi in defossis specubus secura sub alta
otia agunt terra congestaque robora totasque
advolvere focus ulmos ignique dedere.
Hic noctem ludo ducunt et pocula laeti
fermento atque acidis imitantur vitea sorbis.
Talis Hyperboreo septem subiecta trioni
gens effrena virum Rhiphaeo tunditur euro
et pecudum fulvis velatur corpora saetis.

Si tibi lanitium curae, primum aspera silva,
lappaeque tribolique, absint; fuge pabula laeta;
Continuoque greges villis lege mollibus albos.
Illum autem, quamvis aries sit candidus ipse,
nigra subest udo tantum cui lingua palato,
reice, ne maculis infuscet vellera pullis
nascentum, plenoque alium circumspice campo.
Munere sic niveo lanae, si credere dignum est,

Pan deus Arcadiae captam te, Luna, fefellit
in nemora alta vocans; nec tu aspernata vocantem.

At cui lactis amor, cytisum lotosque frequentis
ipse manu salsasque ferat praesepibus herbas.
Hinc et amant fluvios magis et magis ubera tendunt
et salis occultum referunt in lacte saporem.
Multi iam excretos prohibent a matribus haedos
primaque ferratis praefigunt ora capistris.
Quod surgente die mulsero horisque diurnis,
nocte premunt; quod iam tenebris et sole cadente,
sub lucem exportant calathis adit oppida pastor;
aut parco sale contingunt hiemique reponunt.

Nec tibi cura canum fuerit postrema, sed una velocis Spartae catulos acremque Molossum pasce sero pingui. Numquam custodibus illis nocturnum stabulis furem incursusque luporum
aut impacatos a tergo horrebis Hiberos.
Saepe etiam cursu timidos agitabis onagros
et canibus leporem, canibus venabere dammas,
saepe volutabris pulsos silvestribus apros
latratu turbabis agens montisque per altos
ingentem clamore premes ad retia cervum.

Disce et odoratam stabulis accendere cedrum
galbaneoque agitare gravis nidore chelydros.
saepe sub immotis praesepibus aut mala tactu
vipera delituit caelumque exterrita fugit,
aut tecto adsuetus coluber succedere et umbrae,
pestis acerba boum, pecorique aspergere virus,
fovit humum. Cape saxa manu, cape robora, pastor, tollentemque minas et sibila colla tumentem
deice. Iamque fuga timidum caput abdidit alte, cum medii nexus extremaeque agmina caudae
solvuntur, tardosque trahit sinus ultimus orbis.
Est etiam ille malus Calabris in saltibus anguis,

squamea convolvens sublato pectore terga
atque notis longam maculosus grandibus alvum
qui, dum amnes ulli rumpuntur fontibus et dum
vere madent udo terrae ac pluvialibus austris
stagna colit, ripisque habitans hic piscibus atram
improbis ingluviem ranisque loquacibus explet;
postquam exusta palus, terraeque ardore dehiscunt,
exsilit in siccum et flammantia lumina torquens
saevit agris asperque siti atque exterritus aestu.
Ne mihi tum mollis sub divo carpere somnos
neu dorso nemoris libeat iacuisse per herbas,
cum positus novus exuviis nitidusque iuventa
volvitur, aut catulos tectis aut ova relinquens
arduus ad solem et linguis micat ore trisulcis.

Morborum quoque te causas et signa docebo.
Turpis ovis temptat scabies, ubi frigidus imber
altius ad vivum persedit et horrida cano
bruma gelu, vel cum tonsis inlotus adhaesit
sudor et hirsuti secuerunt corpora vepres.
Dulcibus idcirco fluviis pecus omne magistri
perfundunt, udisque aries in gurgite villis
mersatur missusque secundo defluit amni;
aut tonsum tristi contingunt corpus amurca
et spumas miscent argenti et sulfura viva Idaeasque pices et pinguis unguine ceras
scillamque elleborosque gravis nigrumque bitumen.
Non tamen ulla magis praesens fortuna laborum est,
quam si quis ferro potuit rescindere summum
ulceris os: alitur vitium vivitque tegendo,
dum medicas adhibere manus ad volnera pastor
abnegat et meliora deos sedet omnia poscens.
Quin etiam, ima dolor balantum lapsus ad ossa
cum furit atque artus depascitur arida febris,
profuit incensos aestus avertere et inter
ima ferire pedis salientem sanguine venam, Bisaltae quo more solent acerque Gelonus;

cum fugit in Rhodopen atque in deserta Getarum
et lac concretum cum sanguine potat equino.
Quam procul aut molli succedere saepius umbrae
videris aut summas carpentem ignavius herbas
extremamque sequi aut medio procumbere campo
pascentem et serae solam decedere nocti:
continuo culpam ferro compesce, prius quam
dira per incautum serpant contagia volgus.
Non tam creber agens hiemem ruit aequore turbo,
quam multae pecudum pestes. Nec singula morbi corpora corripiunt, sed tota aestiva repente,
spemque gregemque simul cunctamque ab origine gentem.
Tum sciat, aérias Alpīs et Norica si quis
castella in tumultis et Iapydis arva Timavi
nunc quoque post tanto videat desertaque regna
pastorum et longe saltus lateque vacantis.

Hic quondam morbo caeli miseranda coorta est
tempestas totoque autumnī incanduit aestu
et genus omne neci pecudum dedit, omne ferarum,
corrumpitque lacus, infecit pabula tabo.
Nec via mortis erat simplex, sed ubi ignea venis
omnibus acta sitis miseros adduxerat artus, rursus abundabat fluidus liquor omniaque in se
ossa minutatim morbo collapsa trahebat.
Saepe in honore deum medio stans hostia ad aram
lanea dum nivea circumdatur infula vitta,
inter cunctantis cecidit moribunda ministros.
Aut si quam ferro mactaverat ante sacerdos
inde neque impositis ardent altaria fibrīs
nec responsa potest consultus reddere vates, ac vix suppositi tinguntur sanguine cultri
summaque ieiuna sanie infusatur harena.
Hinc laetis vituli volgo moriuntur in herbis
et dulcis animas plena ad praesepia reddunt;
hinc canibus blandis rabies venit et quatit aegros
tussis anhela sues ac faucibus angit obesis.

Labitur infelix studiorum atque immemor herbae
victor equus fontisque avertitur et pede terram
crebra ferit; demissae aures, incertus ibidem
sudor et ille quidem moriturus frigidus, aret
pellis et ad tactum tractanti dura resistit.
Haec ante exitium primis dant signa diebus;
sin in processu coepit crudescere morbus,
tum vero ardentes oculi atque attractus ab alto
spiritus, interdum gemitu gravis, imaque longo
ilia singultu tendunt, it naribus ater
sanguis et obsessas fauces premit aspera lingua.
Profuit inserto latices infundere cornu Lenaeos; ea visa salus morientibus una;
mox erat hoc ipsum exitio, furiisque refecti
ardebant ipsique suos iam morte sub aegra,
di meliora piis erroremque hostibus illum,
discissos nudis laniabant dentibus artus.
Ecce autem duro fumans sub vomere taurus
concidit et mixtum spumis vomit ore cruorem extremosque ciet gemitus. It tristis arator maerentem abiungens fraterna morte iuvenum,
atque opere in medio defixa relinquit aratra.
Non umbrae altorum nemorum, non mollia possunt
prata movere animum, non qui per saxa volutus
purior electro campum petit amnis; at ima
solvuntur latera atque oculos stupor urguet inertis
ad terramque fluit devexo pondere cervix.
Quid labor aut benefacta iuvant? Quid vomere terras invertisse gravis? Atqui non Massica Bacchi munera, non illis epulae nocuere repostae:
frondibus et victu pascuntur simplicis herbae,
pocula sunt fontes liquidi atque exercita cursu
flumina, nec somnos abrumpit cura salubris.
Tempore non alio dicunt regionibus illis
quaesitas ad sacra boves Iunonis et uris
imparibus ductos alta ad donaria currus.
Ergo aegre rastris terram rimantur et ipsis

unguibus infodiunt fruges montisque per altos
contenta cervice trahunt stridentia plaustra.
Non lupus insidias explorat ovilia circum
nec gregibus nocturnus obambulat; acrior illum
cura domat; timidi dammae cervique fugaces
nunc interque canes et circum tecta vagantur.
Iam maris immensi prolem et genus omne natantum
litore in extremo, ceu naufraga corpora, fluctus
proluit; insolitae fugiunt in flumina phocae.
Interit et curvis frustra defensa latebris
vipera et attoniti squamis adstantibus hydri.
Ipsis est aer avibus non aequus et illae
praecipites alta vitam sub nube relinquunt.
Praeterea iam nec mutari pabula refert
artes nocent quaesitaeque; cessere magistri Phillyrides Chiron Amythaoniusque Melampus.
Saevit et in lucem Stygiis emissa tenebris
pallida Tisiphone Morbos agit ante Metumque, inque dies avidum surgens caput altius effert:
Balatu pecorum et crebris mugitibus amnes
arentesque sonant ripae collesque supini:
Iamque catervatim dat stragem atque aggerat ipsis
in stabulis turpi dilapsa cadavera tabo
donec humo tegere ac foveis abscondere discunt.
Nam neque erat coriis usus nec viscera quisquam
aut undis abolere potest aut vincere flamma;
ne tondere quidem morbo inluvieque peresa
vellera nec telas possunt attingere putris;
verum etiam invisos si quis temptarat amictus,
ardentes papulae atque immundus olentia sudor
membra sequebatur nec longo deinde moranti
tempore contactos artus sacer ignis edebat.

LIBER IV

Protinus aerii mellis caelestia dona
exsequar: hanc etiam, Maecenas, adspice partem.
Admiranda tibi levium spectacula rerum
magnanimosque duces totiusque ordine gentis
mores et studia et populos et proelia dicam.
In tenui labor; at tenuis non gloria, si quem
numina laeva sinunt auditque vocatus Apollo.

Principio sedes apibus statioque petenda,
quo neque sit ventis aditus — -nam pabula venti
ferre domum prohibent — -neque oves haedique petulci
floribus insultent aut errans bucula campo
decutiat rorem et surgentes atterat herbas.
Absint et picti squalentia terga lacerti
pinguibus a stabulis meropesque aliaeque volucres
et manibus Procne pectus signata cruentis;
omnia nam late vastant ipsasque volantes
ore ferunt dulcem nidis immitibus escam.
At liquidi fontes et stagna virentia musco adsint et tenuis fugiens per gramina rivus,
palmaque vestibulum aut ingens oleaster inumbret,
ut, cum prima novi ducent examina reges
vere suo ludetque favis emissa iuventus,
vicina invitet decedere ripa calori,
obviaque hospitiis teneat frondentibus arbos.
In medium, seu stabit iners seu profluet umor,
transversas salices et grandia conice saxa,
pontibus ut crebris possint consistere et alas
pandere ad aestivum solem, si forte morantes
sparserit aut praeceps Neptuno immerserit Euris.
Haec circum casiae virides et olentia late serpylla et graviter spirantis copia thymbrae
floreat inriguumque bibant violaria fontem.
Ipsa autem, seu corticibus tibi suta cavatis,

seu lento fuerint alvaria vimine texta,
angustos habeant aditus: nam frigore mella
cogit hiems, eademque calor liquefacta remittit.
Utraque vis apibus pariter metuenda; neque illae
nequiquam in tectis certatim tenuia cera
spiramenta linunt fucoque et floribus oras
explent collectumque haec ipsa ad munera gluten
et visco et Phrygiae servant pice lentius Idae.
Saepe etiam effossis, si vera est fama, latebris
sub terra fovere larem, penitusque reptatae
pumicibusque cavis exesaeque arboris antro.
Tu tamen et levi rimosa cubilia limo
ungue fovens circum et raras superinice frondes.
Neu propius tectis taxum sine, neve rubentes
ure foco canculos, altae neu crede paludi,
aut ubi odor caeni gravis aut ubi concava pulsu
saxa sonant vocisque offensa resultat imago.

Quod superest, ubi pulsam hiemem sol aureus egit
sub terras caelumque aestiva luce reclusit,
illae continuo saltus silvasque peragrant
purpureosque metunt flores et flumina libant summa leves. Hinc nescio qua dulcedine laetae progeniem nidosque foveant, hinc arte recentes
excudunt ceras et mella tenacia fingunt.
Hinc ubi iam emissum caveis ad sidera caeli
nare per aestatem liquidam suspexeris agmen
obscuramque trahi vento mirabere nubem,
contemplator: aquas dulces et frondea semper
tectata petunt. Huc tu iussos adsperge sapes, trita melisphylla et cerinthae ignobile gramen,
tinnitusque cie et Matris quate cymbala circum.
ipsae consident medicatis sedibus, ipsae
intima more suo sese in cunabula condent.

Sin autem ad pugnam exierint, nam saepe duobus
regibus incessit magno discordia motu,

continuoque animos vulgi et trepidantia bello
corda licet longe praesciscere; namque morantes Martius ille aeris rauci canor increpat et vox
auditur fractos sonitus imitata tubarum;
tum trepidae inter se coeunt pennisque coruscant
spiculaque exacuunt rostris aptantque lacertos
et circa regem atque ipsa ad praetoria densae
miscentur magnisque vocant clamoribus hostem.
Ergo ubi ver nactae sudum camposque patentes,
erumpunt portis; concurritur, aethere in alto
fit sonitus, magnum mixtae glomerantur in orbem
praecipitesque cadunt; non densior aere grando,
nec de concussa tantum pluit ilice glandis.
ipsi per medias acies insignibus alis
ingentes animos angusto in pectore versant,
usque adeo obnixa non cedere, dum gravis aut hos
aut hos versa fuga victor dare terga subegit.
Hi motus animorum atque haec certamina tanta
pulveris exigui iactu compressa quiescent.
Verum ubi ductores acie revocaveris ambo,
deterior qui visus, eum, ne prodigus obsit,
dede neci; melior vacua sine regnet in aula.
Alter erit maculis auro squalentibus ardens;
nam duo sunt genera: hic melior, insignis et ore
et rutilis clarus squamis, ille horridus alter
desidia latamque trahens inglorius alvum.

Ut binae regum facies, ita corpora plebis.
Namque aliae turpes horrent, ceu pulvere ab alto
cum venit et sicco terram sput ore viator
aridus; elucent aliae et fulgore coruscant
ardentes auro et paribus lita corpora guttis.
Haec potior suboles, hinc caeli tempore certo
dulcia mella premes, nec tantum dulcia, quantum
et liquida et durum Bacchi domitura saporem.

At cum incerta volant caeloque examina ludunt

contemnuntque favos et frigida tecta relinquunt,
instabiles animos ludo prohibebis inani.

Nec magnus prohibere labor: tu regibus alas
eripe; non illis quisquam cunctantibus altum
ire iter aut castris audebit vellere signa.

Invitent croceis halantes floribus horti
et custos furum atque avium cum falce saligna Hellespontiaci servet tutela Priapi.

Iipse thymum pinosque ferens de montibus altis
tecta serat late circum, cui talia curae;
ipse labore manum duro terat, ipse feraces
figat humo plantas et amicos inriget imbres.

Atque equidem, extremo ni iam sub fine laborum
vela traham et terris festinem advertere proram,
forsitan et, pingues hortos quae cura colendi
ornaret, canerem, biferique rosaria Paesti, quoque modo potis gauderent intiba rivis
et virides apio ripae, tortusque per herbam cresceret in ventrem cucumis; nec sera comantem
narcissum aut flexi tacuissem vimen acanthi
pallentesque hederas et amantes litora myrtos.
Namque sub Oebaliae memini me turribus arcis,
qua niger umectat flaventia culta Galaesus, Corycium vidisse senem, cui pauca relict
iugera ruris erant, nec fertilis illa iuvencis
nec pecori opportuna seges nec commoda Baccho.
Hic rarum tamen in dumis olus albaque circum
lilia verbenasque premens vescu
regum aequabat opes animis seraque revertens
nocte domum dapibus mensas onerabat inemptis.
Primus vere rosam atque autumn
et cum tristis hiems etiamnum frigore saxa
rumperet et glacie cursus frenaret aquarum,
ille comam mollis iam tondebat hyacinthi
aestatem increpitans seram Zephyrosque morantes.
Ergo apibus fetis idem atque examine multo

primus abundare et spumantia cogere pressis
mella favis; illi tiliae atque uberrima pinus,
quotque in flore novo pomis se fertilis arbos
induerat, totidem autumnu matura tenebat.
Ille etiam seras in versum distulit ulmos
eduramque pirum et spinos iam pruna ferentes
iamque ministrantem platanum potantibus umbras.
Verum haec ipse equidem spatiis exclusus iniquis
praetereo atque aliis post me memoranda relinquo.

Nunc age, naturas apibus quas Iuppiter ipse
addidit, expediam, pro qua mercede canoros
Curetum sonitus crepitantiaque aera secutae
Dictae caeli regem pavere sub antro.
Solae communes natos, consortia tecta
urbis habent magnisque agitant sub legibus aevum,
et patriam solae et certos novere penates,
venturaeque hiemis memores aestate laborem
experiuntur et in medium quaesita reponunt.
Namque aliae victu invigilant et foedere pacto
exercentur agris; pars intra saepta domorum Narcissi lacrimam et lentum de cortice gluten
prima favis ponunt fundamina, deinde tenaces
suspendunt ceras: aliae spem gentis adultos
educunt fetus, aliae purissima mella
stipant et liquido distendunt nectare cellas.
Sunt quibus ad portas cecidit custodia sorti,
inque vicem speculantur aquas et nubila caeli
aut onera accipiunt venientum aut agmine facto
ignavum fucos pecus a praeseptibus arcent.
Fervet opus, redolentque thymo fragrantia mella.
ac veluti lentis Cyclopes fulmina massis
cum properant, alii taurinis follibus auras
accipiunt redduntque, alii stridentia tingunt
aera lacu; gemit impositis incudibus Aetna;
illi inter sese magna vi brachia tollunt
in numerum versantque tenaci forcipe ferrum:

non aliter, si parva licet componere magnis,
Cecropias innatus apes amor urget habendi,
munere quamque suo. Grandaevus oppida curae et munire favos et daedala fingere tecta.
At fessae multa referunt se nocte minores,
crura thymo plenae; pascuntur et arbuta passim
et glaucas salices casiamque crocumque rubentem
et pinguem tiliam et ferrugineos hyacinthos.
Omnibus una quies operum, labor omnibus unus:
mane ruunt portis; nusquam mora; rursus easdem
vesper ubi e pastu tandem decedere campis
admonuit, tum tecta petunt, tum corpora curant;
fit sonitus, mussantque oras et limina circum.
Post, ubi iam thalamis se composuere, siletur
in noctem fessosque sopor suus occupat artus.
Nec vero a stabulis pluvia impendente recedunt
longius aut credunt caelo adventantibus Euris,
sed circum tutae sub moenibus urbis aquantur,
excursusque breves temptant et saepe lapillos,
ut cumbae instabiles fluctu iactante saburram,
tollunt, his sese per inania nubila librant.
Illum adeo placuisse apibus mirabere morem,
quod neque concubitu indulgent nec corpora segnes
in Venerem solvunt aut fetus nixibus edunt:
verum ipsae e foliis natos, e suavis herbis
ore legunt, ipsae regem parvosque Quirites
sufficiunt aulasque et cerea regna refigunt.
*Saepe etiam duris errando in cotibus alas
attrivere ultroque animam sub fasce dedere:
tantus amor florum et generandi gloria mellis.
Ergo ipsas quamvis angusti terminus aevi
excipiat, neque enim plus septima ducitur aestas,
at genus immortale manet multosque per annos
stat fortuna domus et avi numerantur avorum.
Praeterea regem non sic Aegyptus et ingens
Lydia nec populi Parthorum aut Medus Hydaspes observant. Rege incolumi mens omnibus una est;

amisso rupere fidem constructaque mella
diripuerunt ipsae et crates solvere favorum.
Ille operum custos, illum admirantur et omnes
circumstant fremitu denso stipantque frequentes et saepe attollunt umeris et corpora bello obiectant pulchramque petunt per vulnera mortem.

His quidam signis atque haec exempla secuti
esse apibus partem divinae mentis et haustus
aetherios dixere; deum namque ire per omnes
terrasque tractusque maris caelumque profundum.
Hinc pecudes, armenta, viros, genus omne ferarum,
quemque sibi tenues nascentem arcessere vitas;
scilicet huc reddi deinde ac resoluta referri
omnia nec morti esse locum, sed viva volare
sideris in numerum atque alto succedere caelo.

Siquando sedem angustam servataque mella
thesauris relines, prius haustu sparsus aquarum
ora fove fumosque manu praetende sequaces.
Bis gravidos cogunt fetus, duo tempora messis,
Taygete simul os terris ostendit honestum
Pleas et Oceani spretos pede reppulit amnes, aut eadem sidus fugiens ubi Piscis aquosi
tristior hibernas caelo descendit in undas.
Illis ira modum supra est, laesaeque venenum
morsibus inspirant et spicula caeca relinquunt
adfixae venis animasque in vulnere ponunt.
Sin duram metues hiemem parcesque futuro
contunsosque animos et res miserabere fractas,
at suffire thymo cerasque recidere inanes
quis dubitet? nam saepe favos ignotus adedit
stellio et lucifugis congesta cubilia blattis
immunisque sedens aliena ad pabula fucus
aut asper crabro imparibus se immiscuit armis,
aut dirum tiniae genus, aut invisa Minervae
laxos in foribus suspendit aranea casset.

Quo magis exhaustae fuerint, hoc acrius omnes incumbent generis lapsi sarcire ruinas
complebuntque foros et floribus horrea texent.

Si vero, quoniam casus apibus quoque nostros
vita tulit, tristi languebunt corpora morbo — -
quod iam non dubiis poteris cognoscere signis:
continuo est aegris alius color, horrida vultum
deformat macies, tum corpora luce carentum
exportant tectis et tristia funera ducunt;
aut illae pedibus conexae ad limina pendent,
aut intus clausis cunctantur in aedibus, omnes
ignavaeque fame et contracto frigore pigrae.
Tum sonus auditur gravior, tractimque susurrant,
frigidus ut quondam silvis immurmurat Auster,
ut mare sollicitum stridit refluentibus undis,
aestuat ut clausis rapidus fornacibus ignis:
hic iam galbaneos suadebo incendere odores
mellaque harundineis inferre canalibus, ultro
hortantem et fessas ad pabula nota vocantem.
Proderit et tunsum gallae admiscere saporem
Arentesque rosas aut igni pingua multo
defruta vel psithia passos de vite racemos
Cecropiumque thymum et grave olentia centaurea.
Est etiam flos in pratis, cui nomen amello
fecere agricolae, facilis quaerentibus herba;
namque uno ingentem tollit de caespite silvam,
aureus ipse, sed in foliis, quae plurima circum
funduntur, violae subluet purpura nigrae; [saepe deum nexis ornatae torquibus arae;]
asper in ore sapor; tonsis in vallibus illum
pastores et curva legunt prope flumina Mellae.
Huius odorato radices incoque Baccho
pabulaque in foribus plenis adpone canistris.
Sed siquem proles subito defecerit omnis,
nec genus unde novae stirpis revocetur habebit,
tempus et Arcadii memoranda inventa magistri

pandere, quoque modo caesis iam saepe iuvenis insincerus apes tulerit cruor. Altius omnem expediam prima repetens ab origine famam.
Nam qua Pellaei gens fortunata Canopi
accolit effuso stagnantem flumine Nilum
et circum pictis vehitur sua rura phaselis,
quaque pharetratae vicinia Persidis urget, [et viridem Aegyptum nigra fecundat harena,
et diversa ruens septem discurrit in ora
usque coloratis amnis devexus ab Indis]
omnis in hac certam regio iacit arte salutem.
Exiguus primum atque ipsos contractus in usus
eligitur locus; hunc angustique imbrice tecti
parietibusque premunt artis et quattuor addunt,
quattuor a ventis obliqua luce fenestras.
Tum vitulus bima curvans iam cornua fronte
quaeritur; huic geminae nares et spiritus oris
multa reluctanti obstruitur, plagisque perempto
tunsa per integram solvuntur viscera pellem.
Sic positum in clauso linquunt et ramea costis
subiciunt fragmenta, thymum casiasque recentes.
Hoc geritur Zephyris primum impellentibus undas,
ante novis rubeant quam prata coloribus, ante
garrula quam tignis nidum suspendat hirundo.
Interea teneris tepefactus in ossibus umor
aestuat et visenda modis animalia miris,
trunca pedum primo, mox et stridentia pennis,
miscentur tenuemque magis magis aera carpunt,
donec, ut aestivis effusus nubibus imber,
erupere aut ut nervo pulsante sagittae,
prima leves ineunt si quando proelia Parthi.

Quis deus hanc, Musae, quis nobis extudit artem?
Unde nova ingressus hominum experientia cepit?
Pastor Aristaeus fugiens Peneia Tempe,
amissis, ut fama, apibus morboque fameque,
tristis ad extremi sacrum caput adstitit amnis

multa querens atque hac adfatus voce parentem:
`Mater, Cyrene mater, quae gurgitis huius
ima tenes, quid me praeclara stirpe deorum,
si modo, quem perhibes, pater est Thymbraeus Apollo, invisum fatis genuisti? aut quo tibi nostri
pulsus amor? quid me caelum sperare iubebas?
En etiam hunc ipsum vitae mortalis honorem,
quem mihi vix frugum et pecudum custodia sollers
omnia temptanti extuderat, te matre relinquo.
Quin age et ipsa manu felices erue silvas,
fer stabulis inimicum ignem atque interface messes,
ure sata et validam in vites molire bipennem,
tanta meae si te ceperunt taedia laudis.’
At mater sonitum thalamo sub fluminis alti
sensit. Eam circum Milesia vellera Nymphae carpebant hyali saturo fucata colore,
drymoque Xanthoque Ligeaque Phyllodoceque,
caesariem effusae nitidam per candida colla,
Nesae Spioque Thaliaque Cymodoceque, Cydippeque et flava Lycorias, altera virgo,
altera tum primos Lucinae experta labores, Clioque et Beroe soror, Oceanitides ambae,
ambae auro, pictis incinctae pellibus ambae, atque Ephyre atque Opis et Asia Deiopea
et tandem positis velox Arethusa sagittis.
Inter quas curam Clymene narrabat inanem
Vulcani Martisque dolos et dulcia furta, aque Chao densos divum numerabat amores
carmine quo captae dum fuis mollia pensa
devolvunt, iterum maternas impulit aures
luctus Aristaei, vitreisque sedilibus omnes
obstipuerunt; sed ante alias Arethusa sorores
prospiciens summa flavum caput extulit unda
et procul: `O gemitu non frustra exterrita tanto, Cyrene soror, ipse tibi, tua maxima cura,
tristis Aristaeus Penei genitoris ad undam
stat lacrimans et te crudelem nomine dicit.’

Huic percussa nova mentem formidine mater, `duc, age, duc ad nos; fas illi limina divum tangere,' ait. Simul alta iubet discedere late flumina, qua iuvenis gressus inferret. At illum curvata in montis faciem circumstetit unda
accepitque sinu vasto misitque sub amnem.
Iamque domum mirans genetricis et umida regna
speluncisque lacus clausos lucosque sonantes
ibat et ingenti motu stupefactus aquarum
omnia sub magna labentia flumina terra
spectabat diversa locis, Phasimque Lycumque
et caput, unde altus primum se erumpit Enipeus
unde pater Tiberinus et unde Aniena fluenta saxosusque sonans Hypanis Mysusque Caicus,
et gemina auratus taurino cornua vultu
Eridanus, quo non alius per pingua culta
in mare purpureum violentior effluit amnis.
Postquam est in thalami pendentia pumice tecta
perventum et nati fletus cognovit inanes Cyrene, manibus liquidos dant ordine fontes
germanae tonsisque ferunt mantelia villis;
pars epulis onerant mensas et plena reponunt
pocula, Panchaeis adolescunt ignibus arae;
et mater, `Cape Maeonii carchesia Bacchi:
Oceano libemus,' ait. Simul ipsa precatur Oceanumque patrem rerum Nymphasque sorores
centum quae silvas, centum quae flumina servant.
Ter liquido ardentem perfundit nectare Vestam,
ter flamma ad summum tecti subiecta reluxit.
Omne quo firmans animum sic incipit ipsa:

`Est in Carphatio Neptuni gurgite vates
caeruleus Proteus, magnum qui piscibus aequor
et iuncto bipedum curru metitur equorum.
Hic nunc Emathiae portus patriamque revisit Pallenen, hunc et Nymphae veneramur et ipse grandaevus Nereus; novit namque omnia vates,

quae sint, quae fuerint, quae mox ventura trahantur;
quippe ita Neptuno visum est, immania cuius
armenta et turpes pascit sub gurgite phocas.
Hic tibi, nate, prius vinclis capiendus, ut omnem
expediat morbi causam eventusque secundet.
Nam sine vi non ulla dabit praecepta, neque illum
orando flectes; vim duram et vincula capto
tende; doli circum haec demum frangentur inanes.
Ipsa ego, te, medios cum sol accenderit aestus,
cum sitiunt herbae et pecori iam gravior umbra est,
in secreta senis ducam, quo fessus ab undis
se recipit, facile ut somno adgrediare iacentem.
Verum ubi correptum manibus vinclisque tenebis,
tum variae eludent species atque ora ferarum Fiet enim subito sus horridus atraque tigris
squamosusque draco et fulva cervice leaena,
aut acrem flammae sonitum dabit atque ita vinclis
excidet, aut in aquas tenues dilapsus abibit.
Sed quanto ille magis formas se vertet in omnes,
tanto, nate, magis contende tenacia vincla,
donec talis erit mutato corpore, qualem
videris, incepto tegeret cum lumina somno.

Haec ait et liquidum ambrosiae defundit odorem,
quo totum nati corpus perduxit; at illi
dulcis compositis spiravit crinibus aura atque habilis membris venit vigor. Est specus ingens exesi latere in montis, quo plurima vento
cogitur inque sinus scindit sese unda reductos,
deprendis olim statio tutissima nautis;
intus se vasti Proteus tegit obice saxi.
Hic iuvenem in latebris aversum a lumine Nympha
collocat; ipsa procul nebulis obscura resistit.
Iam rapidus torrens sitientes Sirius Indos
ardebat, caelo et medium sol igneus orbem
hauserat; arebant herbae et cava flumina siccis
faucibus ad limum radii tepefacta coquebant:

cum Proteus consueta petens e fluctibus antra
ibat; eum vasti circum gens umida ponti
exsultans rorem late dispergit amarum.
Sternunt se somno diversae in litore phocae.
Ipse, velut stabuli custos in montibus olim,
vesper ubi e pastu vitulos ad tecta reducit,
auditisque lupos acuunt balatibus agni,
considit scopulo medius numerumque recenset.
Cuius Aristaeo quoniam est oblata facultas,
vix defessa senem passus componere membra
cum clamore ruit magno manicisque iacentem occupat. Ille suae contra non immemor artis omnia transformat sese in miracula rerum,
ignemque horribilemque feram fluviumque liquentem.
Verum ubi nulla fugam reperit fallacia, victus
in sese redit atque hominis tandem ore locutus:
`Nam quis te, iuvenum confidentissime, nostras
iussit adire domos? Quidve hinc petis?' inquit. At ille:
`Scis, Proteu, scis ipse; neque est te fallere quicquam
sed tu desine velle. Deum praecepta secuti venimus hinc lapsis quaesitum oracula rebus.
Tantum effatus. Ad haec vates vi denique multa ardentes oculos intorsit lumine glauco
et graviter frendens sic fatis ora resolvit.

Non te nullius exercent numinis irae;
magna luis commissa: tibi has miserabilis Orpheus
haudquaquam ob meritum poenas, ni fata resistent,
suscitat et rapta graviter pro coniuge saevit.
Illa quidem, dum te fugeret per flumina praeceps,
immanem ante pedes hydram moritura puella
servantem ripas alta non vidit in herba.
At chorus aequalis Dryadum clamore supremos
implerunt montes; flerunt Rhodopeiae arces
altaque Pangaea et Rhesi mavortia tellus atque Getae atque Hebrus et Actias Orithyia.
Ipse cava solans aegrum testudine amorem

te, dulcis coniunx, te solo in litore secum,
te veniente die, te decedente canebat.
Taenarias etiam fauces, alta ostia Ditis,
et caligantem nigra formidine lucum
ingressus manesque adiit regemque tremendum
nesciaque humanis precibus mansuescere corda.
At cantu commotae Erebi de sedibus imis
umbrae ibant tenues simulacraque luce carentum,
quam multa in foliis avium se milia condunt
vesper ubi aut hibernus agit de montibus imber,
matres atque viri defunctaque corpora vita
magnanimum heroum, pueri innuptaeque puellae,
impositique rogis iuvenes ante ora parentum,
quos circum limus niger et deformis harundo
Cocyti tardaque palus inamabilis unda
alligat et noviens Styx interfusa coercet.
Quin ipsae stupuere domus atque intima Leti
tartara caeruleosque implexae crinibus angues Eumenides, tenuitque inhians tria Cerberus ora
atque Ixionii vento rota constitit orbis.
Iamque pedem referens casus evaserat omnes;
redditaque Eurydice superas veniebat ad auras,
pone sequens, namque hanc dederat Proserpina legem,
cum subita incautum dementia cepit amantem,
ignoscenda quidem, scirent si ignoscere manes.
Restitit Eurydicenque suam iam luce sub ipsa immemor heu! victusque animi respexit. Ibi omnis effusus labor atque immitis rupta tyranni
foedera, terque fragor stagnis auditus Avernis.
Illa, Quis et me, inquit, miseram et te perdidit, Orpheu, quis tantus furor? En iterum crudelia retro
Fata vocant, conditque natantia lumina somnus.
Iamque vale: feror ingenti circumdata nocte
invalidasque tibi tendens, heu non tua, palmas!
dixit et ex oculis subito, ceu fumus in auras
commixtus tenues, fugit diversa, neque illum,
prensantem nequiquam umbras et multa volentem

dicere, praeterea vidit, nec portitor Orci
amplius obiectam passus transire paludem.
Quid faceret? Quo se rapta bis coniuge ferret?
Quo fletu Manis, quae numina voce moveret?
Illa quidem Stygia nabat iam frigida cumba.
Septem illum totos perhibent ex ordine menses
rupe sub aeria deserti ad Strymonis undam
flesse sibi et gelidis haec evolvisse sub antris mulcentem tigres et agentem carmine quercus;
qualis populea maerens philomela sub umbra
amissos queritur fetus, quos durus arator
observans nido implumes detraxit; at illa
flet noctem ramoque sedens miserabile carmen
integrat et maestis late loca questibus implet.
Nulla Venus, non ulli animum flexere hymenaei.
Solut Hyperboreas glacies Tanaimque nivalem
arvaeque Rhipaeis numquam viduata pruinis
lustrabat raptam Eurydicen atque inrita Ditis
dona querens; spretae Ciconum quo munere matres
inter sacra deum nocturnique orgia Bacchi
discerptum latos iuvenem sparsere per agros.
Tum quoque marmorea caput a cervice revulsum gurgite cum medio portans Oeagrius Hebrus volveret, Eurydicen vox ipsa et frigida lingua
ah miseram Eurydicen! anima fugiente vocabat:
Eurydicen toto referebant flumine ripae.

Haec Proteus, et se iactu dedit aequor in altum, quaque dedit, spumantem undam sub vertice torsit.
At non Cyrene; namque ultro adfata timentem:

`Nate, licet tristes animo deponere curas.
Haec omnis morbi causa; hinc miserabile Nymphae,
cum quibus illa choros lucis agitabat in altis,
exitium misere apibus. Tu munera supplex tende petens pacem et faciles venerare Napaeas;
namque dabunt veniam votis irasque remittent.

Sed modus orandi qui sit, prius ordine dicam.
Quattuor eximios praestanti corpore tauros,
qui tibi nunc viridis depascunt summa Lycaeï,
delige et intacta totidem cervice iuencas.
Quattuor his aras alta ad delubra dearum
constitue et sacrum iugulis demitte cruorem,
corporaque ipsa boum frondoso desere luco.
Post, ubi nona suos Aurora ostenderit ortus,
inferias Orphei Lethaea papavera mittes
et nigram mactabis ovem lucumque revises:
placatam Eurydicen vitula venerabere caesa.

Haud mora; continuo matris praecepta facessit;
ad delubra venit, monstratas excitat aras,
quattuor eximios praestanti corpore tauros
ducit et intacta totidem cervice iuencas.
Post, ubi nona suos Aurora induxerat ortus,
inferias Orphei mittit lucumque revisit.
Hic vero subitum ac dictu mirabile monstrum
adspiciunt, liquefacta boum per viscera toto
stridere apes utero et ruptis effervere costis, immensasque trahi nubes, iamque arbore summa
confluere et lentis uvam demittere ramis.

Haec super arborum cultu pecorumque canebam
et super arboribus, Caesar dum magnus ad altum
fulminat Euphraten bello victorque volentes
per populos dat iura viamque adfectat Olympo.
Illo Vergilium me tempore dulcis alebat
Parthenope studiis florentem ignobilis oti,
carmina qui lusi pastorum audaxque iuventa,
Tityre, te patulae cecini sub tegmine fagi.

Arma virumque cano, Troiae qui primus ab oris
Italiam, fato profugus, Laviniaque venit
litora, multum ille et terris iactatus et alto
vi superum saevae memorem Iunonis ob iram;
multa quoque et bello passus, dum conderet urbem, 5
inferretque deos Latio, genus unde Latinum,
Albanique patres, atque altae moenia Romae.

Musa, mihi causas memora, quo numine laeso,
quidve dolens, regina deum tot volvere casus
insignem pietate virum, tot adire labores 10
impulerit. Tantaene animis caelestibus irae?

Urbs antiqua fuit, Tyrii tenuere coloni,
Karthago, Italiam contra Tiberinaque longe
ostia, dives opum studiisque asperrima belli;
quam Iuno fertur terris magis omnibus unam 15
posthabita coluisse Samo; hic illius arma,
hic currus fuit; hoc regnum dea gentibus esse,
si qua fata sinant, iam tum tenditque fovetque.
Progeniem sed enim Troiano a sanguine duci
audierat, Tyrias olim quae verteret arces; 20
hinc populum late regem belloque superbum
venturum excidio Libyae: sic volvere Parcas.
Id metuens, veterisque memor Saturnia belli,
prima quod ad Troiam pro caris gesserat Argis —
necdum etiam causae irarum saevique dolores 25
exciderant animo: manet alta mente repostum
iudicium Paridis spretaeque iniuria formae,
et genus invisum, et rapti Ganymedis honores.
His accensa super, iactatos aequore toto
Troas, reliquias Danaum atque immitis Achilli, 30
arcebat longe Latio, multosque per annos
errabant, acti fati, maria omnia circum.

Tantae molis erat Romanam condere gentem!

Vix e conspectu Siculae telluris in altum
vela dabant laeti, et spumas salis aere ruebant, 35
cum Iuno, aeternum servans sub pectore volnus,
haec secum: 'Mene incepto desistere victam,
nec posse Italia Teucrorum avertere regem?
Quippe vetor fati. Pallasne exurere classem Argivom atque ipsos potuit submergere ponto, 40
unius ob noxam et furias Aiakis Oilei?
Ipsa, Iovis rapidum iaculata e nubibus ignem,
disiecitque rates evertitque aequora ventis,
illum expirantem transfixo pectore flammas
turbine corripuit scopuloque infixit acuto. 45
Ast ego, quae divom incedo regina, Iovisque
et soror et coniunx, una cum gente tot annos
bella gero! Et quisquam numen Iunonis adoret
praeterea, aut supplex aris imponet honorem?'

Talia flammato secum dea corde volutans 50
nimborum in patriam, loca feta furentibus austris, Aeoliam venit. Hic vasto rex Aeolus antro
luctantes ventos tempestatesque sonoras
imperio premit ac vinclis et carcere frenat.
Illi indignantes magno cum murmure montis 55
circum claustra fremunt; celsa sedet Aeolus arce
sceptrata tenens, mollitque animos et temperat iras.
Ni faciat, maria ac terras caelumque profundum
quippe ferant rapidi secum verrantque per auras.
Sed pater omnipotens speluncis abdidit atris, 60
hoc metuens, molemque et montis insuper altos
imposuit, regemque dedit, qui foedere certo
et premere et laxas sciret dare iussus habenas.
Ad quem tum Iuno supplex his vocibus usa est:

'Aeole, namque tibi divom pater atque hominum rex 65
et mulcere dedit fluctus et tollere vento,

gens inimica mihi Tyrrhenum navigat aequor,
Ilium in Italiam portans victosque Penates:
incute vim ventis submersasque obrue puppes,
aut age diversos et disiice corpora ponto. 70
Sunt mihi bis septem praestanti corpore nymphae,
quarum quae forma pulcherrima Deiopea,
conubio iungam stabili propriamque dicabo,
omnis ut tecum meritis pro talibus annos
exigat, et pulchra faciat te prole parentem.’ 75

Aeolus haec contra: ‘Tuus, O regina, quid optes
explorare labor; mihi iussa capessere fas est.
Tu mihi, quodcumque hoc regni, tu scepra Iovemque
concilias, tu das epulis accumbere divom,
nimborumque facis tempestatumque potentem.’ 80

Haec ubi dicta, cavum conversa cuspide montem
impulit in latus: ac venti, velut agmine facto,
qua data porta, ruunt et terras turbine perflant.
Incubuerunt mari, totumque a sedibus imis
una Eurusque Notusque ruunt creberque procellis 85
Africus, et vastos volvunt ad litora fluctus.
Insequitur clamorque virum stridorque rudentum.
Eripiunt subito nubes caelumque diemque
Teucrorum ex oculis; ponto nox incubat atra.
Intonuere poli, et crebris micat ignibus aether, 90
praesentemque viris intentant omnia mortem.

Extemplo Aeneae solvuntur frigore membra:
ingemit, et duplicis tendens ad sidera palmas
taliter voce refert: ‘O terque quaterque beati,
quis ante ora patrum Troiae sub moenibus altis 95
contigit oppetere! O Danaum fortissime gentis
Tydide! Mene Iliacis occumbere campis
non potuisse, tuaque animam hanc effundere dextra,
saevus ubi Aeacidae telo iacet Hector, ubi ingens
Sarpedon, ubi tot Simois correpta sub undis 100

scuta virum galeasque et fortia corpora volvit?’

Talia iactanti stridens Aquilone procella
velum adversa ferit, fluctusque ad sidera tollit.
Franguntur remi; tum prora avertit, et undis
dat latus; insequitur cumulo praeruptus aquae mons. 105
Hi summo in flucta pendent; his unda dehiscens
terram inter fluctus aperit; furit aestus harenis.
Tris Notus abreptas in saxa latentia torquet —
saxa vocant Itali mediis quae in fluctibus aras —
dorsum immane mari summo; tris Euris ab alto 110
in brevia et Syrtis urguet, miserabile visu,
inluditque vadis atque aggere cingit harenae.
Unam, quae Lycios fidumque vehebat Oronten,
ipsius ante oculos ingens a vertice pontus
in puppim ferit: excutitur pronusque magister 115
volvitur in caput; ast illam ter fluctus ibidem
torquet agens circum, et rapidus vorat aequore vortex.
Adparent rari nantes in gurgite vasto,
arma virum, tabulaeque, et Troia gaza per undas.
Iam validam Ilionei navem, iam fortis Achatī, 120
et qua vectus Abas, et qua grandaevus Aletes,
vicit hiems; laxis laterum compagibus omnes
accipiunt inimicum imbrem, rimisque fatiscunt.

Interea magno misceri murmure pontum,
emissamque hiemem sensit Neptunus, et imis 125
stagna refusa vadis, graviter commotus; et alto
prospiciens, summa placidum caput extulit unda.
Disiectam Aeneae, toto videt aequore classem,
fluctibus oppressos Troas caelique ruina,
nec latuere doli fratrem Iunonis et irae. 130
Eurum ad se Zephyrumque vocat, dehinc talia fatur:
‘Tantane vos generis tenuit fiducia vestri?
Iam caelum terramque meo sine numine, venti,
miscere, et tantas audetis tollere moles?
Quos ego — sed motos praestat componere fluctus. 135

Post mihi non simili poena commissa luetis.
Maturate fugam, regique haec dicite vestro:
non illi imperium pelagi saevumque tridentem,
sed mihi sorte datum. Tenet ille immania saxa,
vestras, Eure, domos; illa se iactet in aula 140
Aeolus, et clauso ventorum carcere regnet.’

Sic ait, et dicto citius tumida aequora placat,
collectasque fugat nubes, solemque reducit.
Cymothoe simul et Triton adnexus acuto
detrudunt navis scopulo; levat ipse tridenti; 145
et vastas aperit syrtis, et temperat aequor,
atque rotis summas levibus perlabitur undas.
Ac veluti magno in populo cum saepe coorta est
seditio, saevitque animis ignobile volgus,
iamque faces et saxa volant — furor arma ministrat; 150
tum, pietate gravem ac meritis si forte virum quem
conspexere, silent, arrectisque auribus adstant;
ille regit dictis animos, et pectora mulcet, —
sic cunctus pelagi cecidit fragor, aequora postquam
prospiciens genitor caeloque invectus aperto 155
flectit equos, curruque volans dat lora secundo.

Defessi Aeneadae, quae proxima litora, cursu
contendunt petere, et Libyae vertuntur ad oras.
Est in secessu longo locus: insula portum
efficit obiectu laterum, quibus omnis ab alto 160
frangitur inque sinus scindit sese unda reductos.
Hinc atque hinc vastae rupes geminique minantur
in caelum scopuli, quorum sub vertice late
aequora tuta silent; tum silvis scaena coruscis
desuper horrentique atrum nemus imminet umbra. 165
Fronte sub adversa scopulis pendentibus antrum,
intus aquae dulces vivoque sedilia saxo,
nympharum domus: hic fessas non vincula navis
ulla tenent, unco non alligat ancora morsu.
Huc septem Aeneas collectis navibus omni 170

ex numero subit; ac magno telluris amore
egressi optata potiuntur Troes harena,
et sale tabentis artus in litore ponunt.
Ac primum silici scintillam excudit Achates,
succepitque ignem foliis, atque arida circum 175
nutrimenta dedit, rapuitque in fomite flammam.
Tum Cererem corruptam undis Cerealiaque arma
expediunt fessi rerum, frugesque receptas
et torrere parant flammis et frangere saxo.

Aeneas scopulum interea conscendit, et omnem 180
prospectum late pelago petit, Anthea si quem
iactatum vento videat Phrygiasque biremis,
aut Capyn, aut celsis in puppibus arma Caici.
Navem in conspectu nullam, tris litore cervos
prospicit errantis; hos tota armenta sequuntur 185
a tergo, et longum per vallis pascitur agmen.
Constitit hic, arcumque manu celerisque sagittas
corripuit, fidus quae tela gerebat Achates;
ductoresque ipsos primum, capita alta ferentis
cornibus arboreis, sternit, tum volgus, et omnem 190
miscet agens telis nemora inter frondea turbam;
nec prius absistit, quam septem ingentia victor
corpora fundat humi, et numerum cum navibus aequet.
Hinc portum petit, et socios partitur in omnes.
Vina bonus quae deinde cadis onerarat Acestes 195
litore Trinacrio dederatque abeuntibus heros,
dividit, et dictis maerentia pectora mulcet:

‘O socii — neque enim ignari sumus ante malorum —
O passi graviores, dabit deus his quoque finem.
Vos et Scyllaeam rabiem penitusque sonantis 200
accestis scopulos, vos et Cyclopea saxa
experti: revocate animos, maestumque timorem
mittite: forsitan et haec olim meminisse iuvabit.
Per varios casus, per tot discrimina rerum
tendimus in Latium; sedes ubi fata quietas 205

ostendunt; illic fas regna resurgere Troiae.
Durate, et vosmet rebus servate secundis.'

Talia voce refert, curisque ingentibus aeger
spem voltu simulat, premit altum corde dolorem.
Illi se praedae accingunt, dapibusque futuris; 210
tergora deripiunt costis et viscera nudant;
pars in frusta secant veribusque trementia figunt;
litore aena locant alii, flammasque ministrant.
Tum victu revocant vires, fusique per herbam
implentur veteris Bacchi pinguisque ferinae. 215
Postquam exempta fames epulis mensaeque remotae,
amissos longo socios sermone requirunt,
spemque metumque inter dubii, seu vivere credant,
sive extrema pati nec iam exaudire vocatos.
Praecipue pius Aeneas nunc acris Oronti, 220
nunc Amyci casum gemit et crudelia secum
fata Lyci, fortemque Gyan, fortemque Cloanthum.
Et iam finis erat, cum Iuppiter aethere summo
despiciens mare velivolum terrasque iacentis
litoraue et latos populos, sic vertice caeli 225
constitit, et Libyae defixit lumina regnis.
Atque illum talis iactantem pectore curas
tristior et lacrimis oculos suffusa nitentis
adloquitur Venus: 'O qui res hominumque deumque
aeternis regis imperiis, et fulmine terres, 230
quid meus Aeneas in te committere tantum,
quid Troes potuere, quibus, tot funera passis,
cunctus ob Italiam terrarum clauditur orbis?
Certe hinc Romanos olim, volventibus annis,
hinc fore ductores, revocato a sanguine Teucri, 235
qui mare, qui terras omni dictione tenerent,
pollicitus, quae te, genitor, sententia vertit?
Hoc equidem occasum Troiae tristisque ruinas
solabar, fatis contraria fata rependens;
nunc eadem fortuna viros tot casibus actos 240
insequitur. Quem das finem, rex magne, laborum?

Antenor potuit, mediis elapsus Achivis,
Illyricos penetrare sinus, atque intima tutus
regna Liburnorum, et fontem superare Timavi,
unde per ora novem vasto cum murmure montis 245
it mare proruptum et pelago premit arva sonanti.
Hic tamen ille urbem Patavi sedesque locavit
Teucrorum, et genti nomen dedit, armaque fixit
Troia; nunc placida compostus pace quiescit:
nos, tua progenies, caeli quibus adnuis arcem, 250
navibus (infandum!) amissis, unius ob iram
prodimur atque Italiam longe disiungimur oris.
Hic pietatis honos? Sic nos in sceptrum reponis?’

Olli subridens hominum sator atque deorum,
vultu, quo caelum tempestatesque serenat, 255
oscula libavit natae, dehinc talia fatur:
‘Parce metu, Cytherea: manent immota tuorum
fata tibi; cernes urbem et promissa Lavini
moenia, sublimemque feres ad sidera caeli
magnanimum Aenean; neque me sententia vertit. 260
Hic tibi (fabor enim, quando haec te cura remordet,
longius et volvens fatorum arcana movebo)
bellum ingens geret Italia, populosque feroces
contundet, moresque viris et moenia ponet,
tertia dum Latio regnantem viderit aestas, 265
ternaque transierint Rutulis hiberna subactis.
At puer Ascanius, cui nunc cognomen Iulo
additur, — Ilus erat, dum res stetit Ilia regno, —
triginta magnos volvendis mensibus orbis
imperio explebit, regnumque ab sede Lavini 270
transferet, et longam multa vi muniet Albam.
Hic iam ter centum totos regnabitur annos
gente sub Hectorea, donec regina sacerdos,
Marte gravis, geminam partu dabit Ilia prolem.
Inde lupae fulvo nutricis tegmine laetus 275
Romulus excipiet gentem, et Mavortia condet
moenia, Romanosque suo de nomine dicet.

His ego nec metas rerum nec tempora pono;
imperium sine fine dedi. Quin aspera Iuno,
quae mare nunc terrasque metu caelumque fatigat, 280
consilia in melius referet, mecumque fovebit
Romanos rerum dominos gentemque togatam:
sic placitum. Veniet lustris labentibus aetas,
cum domus Assaraci Phthiam clarasque Mycenae
servitio premet, ac victis dominabitur Argis. 285
Nascetur pulchra Troianus origine Caesar,
imperium oceano, famam qui terminet astris, —
Iulius, a magno demissum nomen Iulo.
Hunc tu olim caelo, spoliis Orientis onustum,
accipies securus; vocabitur hic quoque votis. 290
Aspera tum positae mitescent saecula bellis;
cana Fides, et Vesta, Remo cum fratre Quirinus,
iura dabunt; dirae ferro et compagibus artis
claudentur Belli portae; Furor impius intus,
saeva sedens super arma, et centum vinctus aenis 295
post tergum nodis, fremet horridus ore cruento.'

Haec ait, et Maia genitum demittit ab alto,
ut terrae, utque novae pateant Karthaginis arces
hospitio Teucris, ne fati nescia Dido
finibus arceret: volat ille per aera magnum 300
remigio alarum, ac Libyae citus adstitit oris.
Et iam iussa facit, ponuntque ferocia Poeni
corda volente deo; in primis regina quietum
accipit in Teucros animum mentemque benignam.

At pius Aeneas, per noctem plurima volvens, 305
ut primum lux alma data est, exire locosque
explorare novos, quas vento accesserit oras,
qui teneant, nam inculta videt, hominesne feraene,
quaerere constituit, sociisque exacta referre
Classem in convexo nemorum sub rupe cavata 310
arboribus clausam circum atque horrentibus umbris
occulit; ipse uno graditur comitatus Achate,

bina manu lato crispans hastilia ferro.

Cui mater media sese tulit obvia silva,
virginis os habitumque gerens, et virginis arma 315
Spartanae, vel qualis equos Threissa fatigat
Harpalyce, volucremque fuga praevertitur Hebrum.
Namque umeris de more habilem suspenderat arcum
venatrix, dederatque comam diffundere ventis,
nuda genu, nodoque sinus collecta fluentis. 320
Ac prior, 'Heus' inquit 'iuvenes, monstrate mearum
vidistis si quam hic errantem forte sororum,
succinctam pharetra et maculosae tegmine lyncis,
aut spumantis apri cursum clamore prementem.'

Sic Venus; et Veneris contra sic filius orsus: 325
'Nulla tuarum audita mihi neque visa sororum —
O quam te memorem, virgo? Namque haud tibi voltus
mortalis, nec vox hominem sonat: O, dea certe —
an Phoebi soror? an nympharum sanguinis una? —
sis felix, nostrumque leves, quaecumque, laborem, 330
et, quo sub caelo tandem, quibus orbis in oris
iactemur, doceas. Ignari hominumque locorumque
erramus, vento huc vastis et fluctibus acti:
multa tibi ante aras nostra cadet hostia dextra.'

Tum Venus: 'Haud equidem tali me dignor honore; 335
virginibus Tyriis mos est gestare pharetram,
purpureoque alte suras vincire cothurno.
Punica regna vides, Tyrios et Agenoris urbem;
sed fines Libyci, genus intractabile bello.
Imperium Dido Tyria regit urbe profecta, 340
germanum fugiens. Longa est iniuria, longae
ambages; sed summa sequar fastigia rerum.

'Huic coniunx Sychaeus erat, ditissimus agri
Phoenicum, et magno miserae dilectus amore,
cui pater intactam dederat, primisque iugarat 345

ominibus. Sed regna Tyri germanus habebat
Pygmalion, scelere ante alios immanior omnes.
Quos inter medius venit furor. Ille Sychaeum
impius ante aras, atque auri caecus amore,
clam ferro incautum superat, securus amorum 350
germanae; factumque diu celavit, et aegram,
multa malus simulans, vana spe lusit amantem.
Ipsa sed in somnis inhumati venit imago
coniugis, ora modis attollens pallida miris,
crudeles aras traiectaque pectora ferro 355
nudavit, caecumque domus scelus omne rexit.
Tum celerare fugam patriaque excedere suadet,
auxiliumque viae veteres tellure recludit
thesauros, ignotum argenti pondus et auri.
His commota fugam Dido sociosque parabat: 360
conveniunt, quibus aut odium crudele tyranni
aut metus acer erat; navis, quae forte paratae,
corripiunt, onerantque auro: portantur avari
Pygmalionis opes pelago; dux femina facti.
Devenere locos, ubi nunc ingentia cernis 365
moenia surgentemque novae Karthaginis arcem,
mercatique solum, facti de nomine Byrsam,
taurino quantum possent circumdare tergo.
Sed vos qui tandem, quibus aut venistis ab oris,
quove tenetis iter? ‘Quaerenti talibus ille 370
suspiciens, imoque trahens a pectore vocem:

‘O dea, si prima repetens ab origine pergam,
et vacet annalis nostrorum audire laborum,
ante diem clauso componat Vesper Olympo.
Nos Troia antiqua, si vestras forte per auris 375
Troiae nomen iit, diversa per aequora vectos
forte sua Libycis tempestas adpulit oris.
Sum pius Aeneas, raptos qui ex hoste Penates
classe veho mecum, fama super aethera notus.
Italiam quaero patriam et genus ab Iove summo. 380
Bis denis Phrygium conscendi navibus aequor,

matre dea monstrante viam, data fata secutus;
vix septem convolsae undis Euroque supersunt.
Ipse ignotus, egens, Libyae deserta peragro,
Europa atque Asia pulsus.' Nec plura querentem 385
passa Venus medio sic interfata dolore est:

'Quisquis es, haud, credo, invisus caelestibus auras
vitalis carpis, Tyriam qui adveneris urbem.
Perge modo, atque hinc te reginae ad limina perfer,
Namque tibi reduces socios classemque relatam 390
nuntio, et in tutum versis aquilonibus actam,
ni frustra augurium vani docuere parentes.
Aspice bis senos laetantis agmine cynnos,
aetheria quos lapsa plaga Iovis ales aperto
turbabat caelo; nunc terras ordine longo 395
aut capere, aut captas iam despectare videntur:
ut reduces illi ludunt stridentibus alis,
et coetu cinxere polum, cantusque dedere,
haud aliter puppesque tuae pubesque tuorum
aut portum tenet aut pleno subit ostia velo. 400
Perge modo, et, qua te ducit via, dirige gressum.'

Dixit, et avertens rosea cervice refulsit,
ambrosiaeque comae divinum vertice odorem
spiravere, pedes vestis defluxit ad imos,
et vera incessu patuit dea. Ille ubi matrem 405
adgnovit, tali fugientem est voce secutus:
'Quid natum totiens, crudelis tu quoque, falsis
ludis imaginibus? Cur dextrae iungere dextram
non datur, ac veras audire et reddere voces?'

Talibus incusat, gressumque ad moenia tendit: 410
at Venus obscuro gradientes aere saepsit,
et multo nebulae circum dea fudit amictu,
cernere ne quis eos, neu quis contingere posset,
molirive moram, aut veniendi poscere causas.
Ipsa Paphum sublimis abit, sedesque revisit 415

laeta suas, ubi templum illi, centumque Sabaeo
ture calent arae, sertisque recentibus halant.

Corripuere viam interea, qua semita monstrat.
Iamque ascendebant collem, qui plurimus urbi
imminet, adversasque adspectat desuper arces. 420
Miratur molem Aeneas, magalia quondam,
miratur portas strepitumque et strata viarum.
Instant ardentes Tyrii pars ducere muros,
molirique arcem et manibus subvolvere saxa,
pars optare locum tecto et concludere sulco. 425
[Iura magistratusque legunt sanctumque senatum;]
hic portus alii effodiunt; hic alta theatri
fundamenta locant alii, immanisque columnas
rupibus excidunt, scaenis decora alta futuris.
Qualis apes aestate nova per florea rura 430
exercet sub sole labor, cum gentis adultos
educunt fetus, aut cum liquentia mella
stipant et dulci distendunt nectare cellas,
aut onera accipiunt venientum, aut agmine facto
ignavom fucos pecus a praesepebus arcent: 435
fervet opus, redolentque thymo fragrantia mella.
‘O fortunati, quorum iam moenia surgunt!’
Aeneas ait, et fastigia suspicit urbis.
Infert se saeptus nebula, mirabile dictu,
per medios, miscetque viris, neque cernitur ulli. 440

Lucus in urbe fuit media, laetissimus umbra,
quo primum iactati undis et turbine Poeni
effodere loco signum, quod regia Iuno
monstrarat, caput acris equi; sic nam fore bello
egregiam et facilem victu per saecula gentem. 445
Hic templum Iunoni ingens Sidonia Dido
condebat, donis opulentum et numine divae,
aerea cui gradibus surgebant limina, nexaeque
aere trabes, foribus cardo stridebat aenis.
Hoc primum in luco nova res oblata timorem 450

leniit, hic primum Aeneas sperare salutem
ausus, et adflictis melius confidere rebus.
Namque sub ingenti lustrat dum singula templo,
reginam opperiens, dum, quae fortuna sit urbi,
artificumque manus inter se operumque laborem 455
miratur, videt Iliacas ex ordine pugas,
bellaque iam fama totum volgata per orbem,
Atridas, Priamumque, et saevum ambobus Achillem.
Constitit, et lacrimans, 'Quis iam locus' inquit 'Achate,
quae regio in terris nostri non plena laboris?' 460
En Priamus! Sunt hic etiam sua praemia laudi;
sunt lacrimae rerum et mentem mortalia tangunt.
Solve metus; feret haec aliquam tibi fama salutem.'
Sic ait, atque animum pictura pascit inani,
multa gemens, largoque umectat flumine voltum. 465

Namque videbat, uti bellantes Pergama circum
hac fugerent Graii, premeret Troiana iuventus,
hac Phryges, instaret curru cristatus Achilles.
Nec procul hinc Rhesi niveis tentoria velis
adgnoscat lacrimans, primo quae prodita somno 470
Tydides multa vastabat caede cruentus,
ardentisque avertit equos in castra, prius quam
pabula gustassent Troiae Xanthumque bibissent.
Parte alia fugiens amissis Troilus armis,
infelix puer atque impar congressus Achilli, 475
fertur equis, curruque haeret resupinus inani,
lora tenens tamen; huic cervixque comaeque trahuntur
per terram, et versa pulvis inscribitur hasta.
Interea ad templum non aequae Palladis ibant
crinibus Iliades passis peplumque ferebant, 480
suppliciter tristes et tunsae pectora palmis;
diva solo fixos oculos aversa tenebat.
Ter circum Iliacos raptaverat Hectora muros,
exanimumque auro corpus vendebat Achilles.
Tum vero ingentem gemitum dat pectore ab imo, 485
ut spolia, ut currus, utque ipsum corpus amici,

tendentemque manus Priamum conspexit inermis.
Se quoque principibus permixtum adgnovit Achivis,
Eoasque acies et nigri Memnonis arma.
Ducit Amazonidum lunatis agmina peltis 490
Penthesilea furens, mediisque in milibus ardet,
aurea subnectens exsertae cingula mammae,
bellatrix, audetque viris concurrere virgo.

Haec dum Dardanio Aeneae miranda videntur,
dum stupet, obtutuque haeret defixus in uno, 495
regina ad templum, forma pulcherrima Dido,
incessit magna iuvenum stipante caterva.
Qualis in Eurotae ripis aut per iuga Cynthi
exercet Diana choros, quam mille secutae
hinc atque hinc glomerantur oreades; illa pharetram 500
fert umero, gradiensque deas supereminet omnis:
Latonae tacitum pertemptant gaudia pectus:
talis erat Dido, talem se laeta ferebat
per medios, instans operi regnisque futuris.
Tum foribus divae, media testudine templi, 505
saepa armis, solioque alte subnixa resedit.
Iura dabat legesque viris, operumque laborem
partibus aequabat iustis, aut sorte trahebat:
cum subito Aeneas concursu accedere magno
Anthea Sergestumque videt fortemque Cloanthum, 510
Teucrorumque alios, ater quos aequore turbo
dispulerat penitusque alias avexerat oras.
Obstipuit simul ipse simul percussus Achates
laetitiaque metuque; avidi coniungere dexteras
ardebant; sed res animos incognita turbat. 515
Dissimulant, et nube cava speculantur amicti,
quae fortuna viris, classem quo litore linquant,
quid veniant; cunctis nam lecti navibus ibant,
orantes veniam, et templum clamore petebant.

Postquam introgressi et coram data copia fandi, 520
maximus Ilioneus placido sic pectore coepit:

‘O Regina, novam cui condere Iuppiter urbem
iustitiaque dedit gentis frenare superbas,
Troes te miseri, ventis maria omnia vecti,
oramus, prohibe infandos a navibus ignis, 525
parce pio generi, et propius res aspice nostras.
Non nos aut ferro Libycos populare Penatis
venimus, aut raptas ad litora vertere praedas;
non ea vis animo, nec tanta superbia victis.
Est locus, Hesperiam Grai cognomine dicunt, 530
terra antiqua, potens armis atque ubere glabrae;
Oenotri coluere viri; nunc fama minores
Italiam dixisse ducis de nomine gentem.
Hic cursus fuit:
cum subito adsurgens fluctu nimbosus Orion 535
in vada caeca tulit, penitusque procacibus austris
perque undas, superante salo, perque invia saxa
dispulit; huc pauci vestris adnavimus oris.
Quod genus hoc hominum? Quaeve hunc tam barbara morem permittit patria? Hospitio prohibemur harenae; 540
bella cient, primaque vetant consistere terra.
Si genus humanum et mortalia temnitis arma
at sperate deos memores fandi atque nefandi.

nec pietate fuit, nec bello maior et armis. 545
Quem si fata virum servant, si vescitur aura
aetheria, neque adhuc crudelibus occubat umbris,
non metus; officio nec te certasse priorem
poeniteat. Sunt et Siculis regionibus urbes
armaque, Troianoque a sanguine clarus Acestes. 550
Quassatam ventis liceat subducere classem,
et silvis aptare trabes et stringere remos:
si datur Italiam, sociis et rege recepto,
tendere, ut Italiam laeti Latiumque petamus;
sin absumpta salus, et te, pater optime Teucrum, 555
pontus habet Libyae, nec spes iam restat Iuli,
at freta Sicaniae saltem sedesque paratas,

unde huc advecti, regemque petamus Acesten.’

Talibus Ilioneus; cuncti simul ore fremebant
Dardanidae. 560

Tum breviter Dido, voltum demissa, profatur:
‘Solvite corde metum, Teucri, secludite curas.
Res dura et regni novitas me talia cogunt
moliri, et late finis custode tueri.
Quis genus Aeneadum, quis Troiae nesciat urbem, 565
virtutesque virosque, aut tanti incendia belli?
Non obtusa adeo gestamus pectora Poeni,
nec tam aversus equos Tyria Sol iungit ab urbe.
Seu vos Hesperiam magnam Saturniaque arva,
sive Erycis finis regemque optatis Acesten, 570
auxilio tutos dimittam, opibusque iuvabo.
Vultis et his mecum pariter considerare regnis;
urbem quam statuo vestra est, subducite navis;
Tros Tyriusque mihi nullo discrimine agetur.
Atque utinam rex ipse Noto compulsus eodem 575
adforet Aeneas! Equidem per litora certos
dimittam et Libyae lustrare extrema iubebo,
si quibus eiectus silvis aut urbibus errat.’

His animum arrecti dictis et fortis Achates
et pater Aeneas iamdudum erumpere nubem 580
ardebant. Prior Aenean compellat Achates:
‘Nate dea, quae nunc animo sententia surgit?
omnia tuta vides, classem sociosque receptos.
Unus abest, medio in fluctu quem vidimus ipsi
submersum; dictis respondent cetera matris.’ 585

Vix ea fatus erat, cum circumfusa repente
scindit se nubes et in aethera purgat apertum.
Restitit Aeneas claraque in luce refulsit,
os umerosque deo similis; namque ipsa decoram
caesariem nato genetrix lumenque iuventae 590

purpureum et laetos oculis adflarat honores:
quale manus addunt ebori decus, aut ubi flavo
argentum Pariusve lapis circumdatur auro.

Tum sic reginam adloquitur, cunctisque repente
improvisus ait: 'Coram, quem quaeritis, adsum, 595
Troius Aeneas, Libycis ereptus ab undis.
O sola infandos Troiae miserata labores,
quae nos, reliquias Danaum, terraeque marisque
omnibus exhaustos iam casibus, omnium egenos,
urbe, domo, socias, grates persolvere dignas 600
non opis est nostrae, Dido, nec quicquid ubique est
gentis Dardaniae, magnum quae sparsa per orbem.
Di tibi, si qua pios respectant numina, si quid
usquam iustitia est et mens sibi conscia recti,
praemia digna ferant. Quae te tam laeta tulerunt 605
saecula? Qui tanti talem genuere parentes?
In freta dum fluvii current, dum montibus umbrae
lustrabunt convexa, polus dum sidera pascet,
semper honos nomenque tuum laudesque manebunt,
quae me cumque vocant terrae.' Sic fatus, amicum 610
Ilionea petit dextra, laevaue Serestum,
post alios, fortemque Gyan fortemque Cloanthum.

Obstipuit primo aspectu Sidonia Dido,
casu deinde viri tanto, et sic ore locuta est:
'Quis te, nate dea, per tanta pericula casus 615
insequitur? Quae vis immanibus applicat oris?
Tunc ille Aeneas, quem Dardanio Anchisae
alma Venus Phrygii genuit Simoentis ad undam?
Atque equidem Teucrum memini Sidona venire
finibus expulsum patriis, nova regna petentem 620
auxilio Beli; genitor tum Belus opimam
vastabat Cyprum, et victor ditione tenebat.
Tempore iam ex illo casus mihi cognitus urbis
Troianae nomenque tuum regesque Pelasgi.
Ipse hostis Teucros insigni laude ferebat, 625

seque ortum antiqua Teucrorum ab stirpe volebat.
Quare agite, O tectis, iuvenes, succedite nostris.
Me quoque per multos similis fortuna labores
iactatam hac demum voluit consistere terra.
Non ignara mali, miseris succurrere disco.’ 630

Sic memorat; simul Aenean in regia ducit
tectis, simul divom templis indicit honorem.
Nec minus interea sociis ad litora mittit
viginti tauros, magnorum horrentia centum
terga suum, pinguis centum cum matribus agnos, 635
munera laetitiamque dii.
At domus interior regali splendida luxu
instruitur, mediisque parant convivia tectis:
arte laboratae vestes ostroque superbo,
ingens argentum mensis, caelataque in auro 640
fortia facta patrum, series longissima rerum
per tot ducta viros antiqua ab origine gentis.

Aeneas (neque enim patrius consistere mentem
passus amor) rapidum ad navis praemittit Achaten, Ascanio ferat haec, ipsumque ad moenia ducat; 645
omnis in Ascanio cari stat cura parentis.
Munera praeterea, Iliacis erepta ruinis,
ferre iubet, pallam signis auroque rigentem,
et circumtextum croceo velamen acantho,
ornatus Argivae Helenae, quos illa Mycenis, 650
Pergama cum peteret inconcessosque hymenaeos,
extulerat, matris Leda mirabile donum:
praeterea sceptrum, Ilione quod gesserat olim,
maxima natarum Priami, colloque monile
bacatum, et duplicem gemmis auroque coronam. 655
Haec celerans ita ad naves tendebat Achates.

At Cytherea novas artes, nova pectore versat
Consilia, ut faciem mutatus et ora Cupido
pro dulci Ascanio veniat, donisque furem

incendat reginam, atque ossibus implicet ignem; 660
quippe domum timet ambiguam Tyriosque bilinguis;
urit atrox Iuno, et sub noctem cura recursat.
Ergo his aligerum dictis adfatur Amorem:

‘Nate, meae vires, mea magna potentia solus,
nate, patris summi qui tela Typhoia temnis, 665
ad te confugio et supplex tua numina posco.
Frater ut Aeneas pelago tuus omnia circum
litora iactetur odiis Iunonis iniquae,
nota tibi, et nostro doluisti saepe dolore.
Hunc Phoenissa tenet Dido blandisque moratur 670
vocibus; et vereor, quo se Iunonia vertant
hospitia; haud tanto cessabit cardine rerum.
Quocirca capere ante dolis et cingere flamma
reginam meditor, ne quo se numine mutet,
sed magno Aeneae mecum teneatur amore. 675
Qua facere id possis, nostram nunc accipe mentem.
Regius accitu cari genitoris ad urbem
Sidoniam puer ire parat, mea maxima cura,
dona ferens, pelago et flammis restantia Troiae:
hunc ego sopitum somno super alta Cythera 680
aut super Idalium sacrata sede recondam,
ne qua scire dolos mediusve occurrere possit.
Tu faciem illius noctem non amplius unam
falle dolo, et notos pueri puer indue voltus,
ut, cum te gremio accipiet laetissima Dido 685
regalis inter mensas laticemque Lyaeum,
cum dabit amplexus atque oscula dulcia figet,
occultum inspires ignem fallasque veneno.’

Paret Amor dictis carae genetricis, et alas
exuit, et gressu gaudens incedit Iuli. 690
At Venus Ascanio placidam per membra quietem
inrigat, et fotum gremio dea tollit in altos
Idaliae lucos, ubi mollis amaracus illum
floribus et dulci adspirans complectitur umbra.

Iamque ibat dicto parens et dona Cupido 695
regia portabat Tyriis, duce laetus Achate.
Cum venit, aulaeis iam se regina superbis
aurea composuit sponda mediamque locavit.
Iam pater Aeneas et iam Troiana iuventus
conveniunt, stratoque super discumbitur ostro. 700
Dant famuli manibus lymphas, Cereremque canistris
expediunt, tonsisque ferunt mantelia villis.
Quinquaginta intus famulae, quibus ordine longam
cura penum struere, et flammis adolere Penatis;
centum aliae totidemque pares aetate ministri, 705
qui dapibus mensas onerent et pocula ponant.
Nec non et Tyrii per limina laeta frequentes
convenere, toris iussi discumbere pictis.
Mirantur dona Aeneae, mirantur Iulum
flagrantisque dei voltus simulataque verba, 710
[pallamque et pictum croceo velamen acantho.]
Praecipue infelix, pesti devota futurae,
expleri mentem nequit ardescitque tuendo
Phoenissa, et pariter puero donisque movetur.
Ille ubi complexu Aeneae colloque pependit 715
et magnum falsi implevit genitoris amorem,
reginam petit haec oculis, haec pectore toto
haeret et interdum gremio foveat, inscia Dido,
insidat quantus miserae deus; at memor ille
matris Acidaliae paulatim abolere Sychaeum 720
incipit, et vivo temptat praevertere amore
iam pridem resides animos desuetaque corda.

Postquam prima quies epulis, mensaeque remotae,
crateras magnos statuunt et vina coronant.
Fit strepitus tectis, vocemque per ampla volutant 725
atria; dependent lychni laquearibus aureis
incensi, et noctem flammis funalia vincunt.
Hic regina gravem gemmis auroque poposcit
implevitque mero pateram, quam Belus et omnes
a Belo soliti; tum facta silentia tectis: 730

‘Iuppiter, hospitibus nam te dare iura loquuntur,
hunc laetum Tyriisque diem Troiaque profectis
esse velis, nostrosque huius meminisse minores.
Adsit laetitiae Bacchus dator, et bona Iuno;
et vos, O, coetum, Tyrii, celebrate faventes.’ 735
Dixit, et in mensam laticum libavit honorem,
primaque, libato, summo tenus attigit ore,
tum Bitiae dedit increpitans; ille impiger hausit
spumantem pateram, et pleno se proluit auro
post alii proceres. Cithara crinitus Iopas 740
personat aurata, docuit quem maximus Atlas.
Hic canit errantem lunam solisque labores;
unde hominum genus et pecudes; unde imber et ignes;
Arcturum pluviasque Hyadas geminosque Triones;
quid tantum Oceano properent se tingere soles 745
hiberni, vel quae tardis mora noctibus obstet.
Ingeminant plausu Tyrii, Troesque sequuntur.
Nec non et vario noctem sermone trahebat
infelix Dido, longumque bibebat amorem,
multa super Priamo rogitans, super Hectore multa; 750
nunc quibus Aurorae venisset filius armis,
nunc quales Diomedis equi, nunc quantus Achilles.
‘Immo age, et a prima dic, hospes, origine nobis
insidias,’ inquit, ‘Danaum, casusque tuorum,
erroresque tuos; nam te iam septima portat 755
omnibus errantem terris et fluctibus aestas.’

LIBER II

Conticuere omnes intentique ora tenebant
inde toro pater Aeneas sic orsus ab alto:

Infandum, regina, iubes renouare dolorem,
Troianas ut opes et lamentabile regnum
eruerint Danaï, quaeque ipse miserrima uidi 5
et quorum pars magna fui. quis talia fando
Myrmidonum Dolopumue aut duri miles Vlixi
temperet a lacrimis? et iam nox umida caelo
praecipitat suadentque cadentia sidera somnos.
sed si tantus amor casus cognoscere nostros 10
et breuiter Troiae supremum audire laborem,
quamquam animus meminisse horret luctuque refugit,
incipiam. fracti bello fatisque repulsi
ductores Danaum tot iam labentibus annis
instar montis equum diuina Palladis arte 15
aedificant, sectaque intexunt abiete costas;
uotum pro reditu simulant; ea fama uagatur.
huc delecta uirum sortiti corpora furtim
includunt caeco lateri penitusque cauernas
ingentis utrumque armato milite complent. 20
est in conspectu Tenedos, notissima fama
insula, diues opum Priami dum regna manebant,
nunc tantum sinus et statio male fida carinis:
huc se prouecti deserto in litore condunt;
nos abiisse rati et uento petiisse Mycenae. 25
ergo omnis longo soluit se Teucra luctu;
panduntur portae, iuuat ire et Dorica castra
desertosque uidere locos litusque relictum:
hic Dolopum manus, hic saeuus tendebat Achilles;
classibus hic locus, hic acie certare solebant. 30
pars stupet innuptae donum exitiale Mineruae
et molem mirantur equi; primusque Thymoetes
duci intra muros hortatur et arce locari,

siue dolo seu iam Troiae sic fata ferebant.
at Capys, et quorum melior sententia menti, 35
aut pelago Danaum insidias suspectaque dona
praecipitare iubent subiectisque urere flammis,
aut terebrare cauas uteri et temptare latebras.
scinditur incertum studia in contraria uulgus.

Primus ibi ante omnis magna comitante caterua 40
Laocoon ardens summa decurrit ab arce,
et procul 'o miseri, quae tanta insania, ciues?
creditis auectos hostis? aut ulla putatis
dona carere dolis Danaum? sic notus Vlixes?
aut hoc inclusi ligno occultantur Achiui, 45
aut haec in nostros fabricata est machina muros,
inspectura domos uenturaque desuper urbi,
aut aliquis latet error; equo ne credite, Teucri.
quidquid id est, timeo Danaos et dona ferentis.'
sic fatus ualidis ingentem uiribus hastam 50
in latus inque feri curuam compagibus aluum
contorsit. stetit illa tremens, utroque recusso
insonuere cauae gemitumque dedere cauernae.
et, si fata deum, si mens non laeua fuisset,
impulerat ferro Argolicas foedare latebras, 55
Troiaque nunc staret, Priamique arx alta maneres.

Ecce, manus iuuenem interea post terga reuinctum
pastores magno ad regem clamore trahebant
Dardanidae, qui se ignotum uenientibus ultro,
hoc ipsum ut strueret Troiamque aperiret Achiuis, 60
obtulerat, fidens animi atque in utrumque paratus,
seu uersare dolos seu certae occumbere morti.
undique uisendi studio Troiana iuuentus
circumfusa ruit certantque inludere capto.
accipe nunc Danaum insidias et crimine ab uno 65
disce omnis.

namque ut conspectu in medio turbatus, inermis
constitit atque oculis Phrygia agmina circumspexit,

‘heu, quae nunc tellus,’ inquit, ‘quae me aequora possunt
accipere? aut quid iam misero mihi denique restat, 70
cui neque apud Danaos usquam locus, et super ipsi
Dardanidae infensi poenas cum sanguine poscunt?’
quo gemitu conuersi animi compressus et omnis
impetus. hortamur fari quo sanguine cretus,
quidue ferat; memoret quae sit fiducia capto. 75

‘Cuncta equidem tibi, rex, fuerit quodcumque, fatebor 77
uera,’ inquit; ‘neque me Argolica de gente negabo.
hoc primum; nec, si miserum Fortuna Sinonem
finxit, uanum etiam mendacemque improba finget. 80
fando aliquod si forte tuas peruenit ad auris
Belidae nomen Palamedis et incluta fama
gloria, quem falsa sub proditione Pelasgi
insontem infando indicio, quia bella uetabat,
demisere neci, nunc cassum lumine lugent: 85
illi me comitem et consanguinitate propinquum
pauper in arma pater primis huc misit ab annis.
dum stabat regno incolumis regumque uigebat
conciliis, et nos aliquod nomenque decusque
gessimus. inuidia postquam pellacis Vlixis 90 (haud ignota loquor) superis concessit ab oris,
adflctus uitam in tenebris luctuque trahebam
et casum insontis mecum indignabar amici.
nec tacui demens et me, fors si qua tulisset,
si patrios umquam remeassem uictor ad Argos, 95
promisi ultorem et uerbis odia aspera moui.
hinc mihi prima mali labes, hinc semper Vlixes
criminibus terrere nouis, hinc spargere uoces
in uulgum ambiguas et quaerere conscius arma.
nec requieuit enim, donec Calchante ministro — 100
sed quid ego haec autem nequiquam ingrata reuoluo,
quidue moror? si omnis uno ordine habetis Achiuos,
idque audire sat est, iamdudum sumite poenas:
hoc Ithacus uelit et magno mercentur Atridae.’

Tum uero ardemus scitari et quaerere causas, 105
ignari scelerum tantorum artisque Pelasgae.
prosequitur pauitans et ficto pectore fatur:

‘Saepe fugam Danaï Troia cupiere relictā
moliri et longo fessi discedere bello;
fecissentque utinam! saepe illos aspera ponti 110
interclusit hiems et terruit Auster euntis.
praecipue cum iam hic trabibus contextus acernis
staret equus, toto sonuerunt aethere nimbi.
suspensi Eurypylum scitatum oracula Phoebi
mittimus, isque adytis haec tristia dicta reportat: 115
“sanguine placastis uentos et uirgine caesa,
cum primum Iliacas, Danaï, uenistis ad oras;
sanguine quaerendi reditus animaque litandum
Argolica.” uulgi quae uox ut uenit ad auris,
obstipuerē animi gelidusque per ima cucurrit 120
ossa tremor, cui fata parent, quem poscat Apollo.
hic Ithacus uatem magno Calchanta tumultu
protrahit in medios; quae sint ea numina diuum
flagitat. et mihi iam multi crudele caneant
artificis scelus, et taciti uentura uidebant. 125
bis quinos silet ille dies tectusque recusat
prodere uoce sua quemquam aut opponere morti.
uix tandem, magnis Ithaci clamoribus actus,
composito rumpit uocem et me destinat arae.
adsensere omnes et, quae sibi quisque timebat, 130
unius in miseri exitium conuersa tulere.
iamque dies infanda aderat; mihi sacra parari
et salsae fruges et circum tempora uittae.
eripui, fateor, leto me et uincula rupi,
limosoque lacu per noctem obscurus in ulua 135
delitui dum uela darent, si forte dedissent.
nec mihi iam patriam antiquam spes ulla uidendi
nec dulcis natos exoptatumque parentem,
quos illi fors et poenas ob nostra reposcent
effugia, et culpam hanc miserorum morte piabunt. 140

quod te per superos et conscia numina ueri,
per si qua est quae restet adhuc mortalibus usquam
intemerata fides, oro, miserere laborum
tantorum, miserere animi non digna ferentis.’

His lacrimis uitam damus et miserescimus ultro. 145
ipse uiro primus manicas atque arta leuari
uincla iubet Priamus dictisque ita fatur amicis:
‘quisquis es, amissos hinc iam obliuiscere Graios
(noster eris) mihi quae haec edissere uera roganti:
quo molem hanc immanis equi statuere? quis auctor? 150
quidue petunt? quae religio? aut quae machina belli?’
dixerat. ille dolis instructus et arte Pelasga
sustulit exutas uinclis ad sidera palmas:
‘uos, aeterni ignes, et non uiolabile uestrum
testor numen,’ ait, ‘uos arae ensesque nefandi, 155
quos fugi, uitaeque deum, quas hostia gessi:
fas mihi Graiorum sacrata resolvere iura,
fas odisse uiros atque omnia ferre sub auras,
si qua tegunt, teneor patriae nec legibus ullis.
tu modo promissis maneat seruataque serues 160
Troia fidem, si uera feram, si magna rependam.
omnis spes Danaum et coepti fiducia belli
Palladis auxiliis semper stetit. impius ex quo
Tydides sed enim scelerumque inuentor Vlixes,
fatale adgressi sacrato auellere templo 165
Palladium caesis summae custodibus arcis,
corripuere sacram effigiem manibusque cruentis
uirgineas ausi diuinae contingere uitas,
ex illo fluere ac retro sublapsa referri
spes Danaum, fractae uires, auersa deae mens. 170
nec dubiis ea signa dedit Tritonia monstris.
uix positum castris simulacrum: arsere coruscae
luminibus flammae arrectis, salsusque per artus
sudor iit, terque ipsa solo (mirabile dictu)
emicuit parmamque ferens hastamque trementem. 175
extemplo temptanda fuga canit aequora Calchas,

nec posse Argolicis exscindi Pergama telis
omina ni repetant Argis numenque reducant
quod pelago et curuis secum auexere carinis.
et nunc quod patrias uento petiere Mycenae, 180
arma deosque parant comites pelagoque remenso
improvisi aderunt; ita digerit omina Calchas.
hanc pro Palladio moniti, pro numine laeso
effigiem statuere, nefas quae triste piaret.
hanc tamen immensam Calchas attollere molem 185
roboribus textis caeloque educere iussit,
ne recipi portis aut duci in moenia posset,
neu populum antiqua sub religione tueri.
nam si uestra manus uiolasset dona Mineruae,
tum magnum exitium (quod di prius omen in ipsum 190
conuertant!) Priami imperio Phrygibusque futurum;
sin manibus uestris uestram ascendisset in urbem,
ultro Asiam magno Pelopea ad moenia bello
uenturam, et nostros ea fata manere nepotes.'

Talibus insidiis periurique arte Sinonis 195
credita res, captique dolis lacrimisque coactis
quos neque Tydides nec Larisaeus Achilles,
non anni domuere decem, non mille carinae.

Hic aliud maius miseris multoque tremendum
obicitur magis atque improvida pectora turbat. 200
Laocoon, ductus Neptuno sorte sacerdos,
sollemnis taurum ingentem mactabat ad aras.
ecce autem gemini a Tenedo tranquilla per alta
(horresco referens) immensis orbibus angues
incumbunt pelago pariterque ad litora tendunt; 205
pectora quorum inter fluctus arrecta iubaeque
sanguineae superant undas, pars cetera pontum
pone legit sinuatque immensa uolumine terga.
fit sonitus spumante salo; iamque arua tenebant
ardentisque oculos suffecti sanguine et igni 210
sibila lambebant linguis uibrantibus ora.

diffugimus uisu exsanguis. illi agmine certo
Laocoonta petunt; et primum parua duorum
corpora natorum serpens amplexus uterque
implicat et miseros morsu depascitur artus; 215
post ipsum auxilio subeuntem ac tela ferentem
corripiunt spirisque ligant ingentibus; et iam
bis medium amplexi, bis collo squamea circum
terga dati superant capite et ceruicibus altis.
ille simul manibus tendit diuellere nodos 220
perfusus sanie uittas atroque ueneno,
clamores simul horrendos ad sidera tollit:
qualis mugitus, fugit cum saucius aram
taurus et incertam excussit ceruice securim.
at gemini lapsu delubra ad summa dracones 225
effugiunt saeuaeque petunt Tritonidis arcem,
sub pedibusque deae clipeique sub orbe teguntur.
tum uero tremefacta nouus per pectora cunctis
insinuat pauor, et scelus expendisse merentem Laocoonta ferunt, sacrum qui cuspide robur 230
laeserit et tergo sceleratam intorserit hastam.
ducendum ad sedes simulacrum orandaque diuae
numina conclamant.
diuidimus muros et moenia pandimus urbis.
accingunt omnes operi pedibusque rotarum 235
subiciunt lapsus, et stuppea uincula collo
intendunt; scandit fatalis machina muros
feta armis. pueri circum innuptaeque puellae
sacra canunt funemque manu contingere gaudent;
illa subit mediaeque minans inlabitur urbi. 240
o patria, o diuum domus Ilium et incluta bello
moenia Dardanidum! quater ipso in limine portae
substitit atque utero sonitum quater arma dedere;
instamus tamen immemores caecique furore
et monstrum infelix sacrata sistimus arce. 245
tunc etiam fatis aperit Cassandra futuris
ora dei iussu non umquam credita Teucris.
nos delubra deum miseri, quibus ultimus esset

ille dies, festa uelamus fronde per urbem.

Vertitur interea caelum et ruit Oceano nox 250
inuoluens umbra magna terramque polumque Myrmidonumque dolos; fusi per moenia Teucri
conticuere; sopor fessos complectitur artus.
et iam Argiua phalanx instructis nauibus ibat
a Tenedo tacitae per amica silentia lunae 255
litora nota petens, flammis cum regia puppis
extulerat, fatisque deum defensus iniquis
inclusos utero Danaos et pinea furtim
laxat claustra Sinon. illos patefactus ad auras
reddit equus laetique cauo se robore promunt 260
Thessandrus Sthenelusque duces et dirus Vlixes,
demissum lapsi per funem, Acamasque Thoasque
Pelidesque Neoptolemus primusque Machaon
et Menelaus et ipse doli fabricator Epeos.
inuadunt urbem somno uinoque sepultam; 265
caeduntur uigiles, portisque patentibus omnis
accipiunt socios atque agmina conscia iungunt.

Tempus erat quo prima quies mortalibus aegris
incipit et dono diuum gratissima serpit.
in somnis, ecce, ante oculos maestissimus Hector 270
uisus adesse mihi largosque effundere fletus,
raptatus bigis ut quondam, aterque cruento
puluere perque pedes traiectus lora tumentis.
ei mihi, qualis erat, quantum mutatus ab illo
Hectore qui redit exuuias indutus Achilli 275
uel Danaum Phrygios iaculatus puppibus ignis!
squalentem barbam et concretos sanguine crinis
uulneraque illa gerens, quae circum plurima muros
accepit patrios. ultro flens ipse uidebar
compellare uirum et maestas expromere uoces: 280
'o lux Dardaniae, spes o fidissima Teucrum,
quae tantae tenuere morae? quibus Hector ab oris
exspectate uenis? ut te post multa tuorum

funera, post uarios hominumque urbisque labores
defessi aspicimus! quae causa indigna serenos 285
foedauit uultus? aut cur haec uulnera cerno?’
ille nihil, nec me quaerentem uana moratur,
sed grauitur gemitus imo de pectore ducens,
‘heu fuge, nate dea, teque his’ ait ‘eripe flammis.
hostis habet muros; ruit alto a culmine Troia. 290
sat patriae Priamoque datum: si Pergama dextra
defendi possent, etiam hac defensa fuissent.
sacra suosque tibi commendat Troia penatis;
hos cape fatorum comites, his moenia quaere
magna pererrato statues quae denique ponto.’ 295
sic ait et manibus uittas Vestamque potentem
aeternumque adytis effert penetralibus ignem.

Diuerso interea miscentur moenia luctu,
et magis atque magis, quamquam secreta parentis
Anchisae domus arboribusque oblecta recessit, 300
clarescunt sonitus armorumque ingruit horror.
excitior somno et summi fastigia tecti
ascensu supero atque arrectis auribus asto:
in segetem ueluti cum flamma furentibus Austris
incidit, aut rapidus montano flumine torrens 305
sternit agros, sternit sata laeta boumque labores
praecipitisque trahit siluas; stupet inscius alto
accipiens sonitum saxi de uertice pastor.
tum uero manifesta fides, Danaumque patescunt
insidiae. iam Deiphobi dedit ampla ruinam 310
Volcano superante domus, iam proximus ardet
Vcalegon; Sigea igni freta lata relucet.
exoritur clamorque uirum clangorque tubarum.
arma amens capio; nec sat rationis in armis,
sed glomerare manum bello et concurrere in arcem 315
cum sociis ardent animi; furor iraque mentem
praecipitat, pulchrumque mori succurrit in armis.

Ecce autem telis Panthus elapsus Achium,

Panthus Othryades, arcis Phoebique sacerdos,
 sacra manu uictosque deos paruumque nepotem 320
 ipse trahit cursuque amens ad limina tendit.
 ‘quo res summa loco, Panthu? quam prendimus arcem?’
 uix ea fatus eram gemitu cum talia reddit:
 ‘uenit summa dies et ineluctabile tempus
 Dardaniae. fuimus Troes, fuit Ilium et ingens 325
 gloria Teucrorum; ferus omnia Iuppiter Argos
 transtulit; incensa Danaï dominantur in urbe.
 arduus armatos mediis in moenibus astans
 fundit equus uictorque Sinon incendia miscet
 insultans. portis alii bipatientibus adsunt, 330
 milia quot magnis umquam uenere Mycenis;
 obsedere alii telis angusta uiarum
 oppositis; stat ferri acies mucrone corusco
 stricta, parata neci; uix primi proelia temptant
 portarum uigiles et caeco Marte resistunt.’ 335
 talibus Othryadae dictis et numine diuum
 in flammis et in arma feror, quo tristis Erinys,
 quo fremitus uocat et sublatus ad aethera clamor.
 addunt se socios Rhipeus et maximus armis
 Epytus, oblatis per lunam, Hypanisque Dymasque 340
 et lateri adglomerant nostro, iuuenisque Coroeus Mygdonides — illis ad Troiam forte diebus
 uenerat insano Cassandrae incensus amore
 et gener auxilium Priamo Phrygibusque ferebat,
 infelix qui non sponsae praecepta furentis 345
 audierit!
 quos ubi confertos ardere in proelia uidi,
 incipio super his: ‘iuuenes, fortissima frustra
 pectora, si uobis audentem extrema cupido
 certa sequi, quae sit rebus fortuna uidetis: 350
 excessere omnes adytis arisque relictis
 di quibus imperium hoc steterat; succurritis urbi
 incensae. moriamur et in media arma ruamus.
 una salus uictis nullam sperare salutem.’
 sic animis iuuenum furor additus. inde, lupi ceu 355

raptores atra in nebula, quos improba uentris
exegit caecos rabies catulique relictī
faucibus exspectant siccis, per tela, per hostis
uadimus haud dubiam in mortem mediaeque tenemus
urbis iter; nox atra caua circumuolat umbra. 360
quis cladem illius noctis, quis funera fando
explicet aut possit lacrimis aequare labores?
urbs antiqua ruit multos dominata per annos;
plurima perque uias sternuntur inertia passim
corpora perque domos et religiosa deorum 365
limina. nec soli poenas dant sanguine Teucri;
quondam etiam uictis redit in praecordia uirtus
uictoresque cadunt Danaī. crudelis ubique
luctus, ubique pavor et plurima mortis imago.

Primus se Danaum magna comitante caterua 370
Androgeos offert nobis, socia agmina credens
inscius, atque ultro uerbis compellat amicis:
‘festinate, uiri! nam quae tam sera moratur
segnities? alii rapiunt incensa feruntque
Pergama: uos celsis nunc primum a nauibus itis?’ 375
dixit, et extemplo (neque enim responsa dabantur
fida satis) sensit medios delapsus in hostis.
obstupuit retroque pedem cum uoce repressit.
improvisum aspris ueluti qui sentibus anguem
pressit humi nitens trepidusque repente refugit 380
attollentem iras et caerula colla tumentem,
haud secus Androgeos uisu tremefactus abibat.
inruimus densis et circumfundimur armis,
ignarosque loci passim et formidine captos
sternimus; aspirat primo Fortuna labori. 385
atque hic successu exsultans animisque Coroeus
‘o socii, qua prima’ inquit ‘Fortuna salutis
monstrat iter, quaque ostendit se dextra, sequamur:
mutemus clipeos Danaumque insignia nobis
aptemus. dolus an uirtus, quis in hoste requirat? 390
arma dabunt ipsi.’ sic fatus deinde comantem

Androgei galeam clipeique insigne decorum
induitur laterique Argiuum accommodat ensem.
hoc Rhipeus, hoc ipse Dymas omnisque iuuentus
laeta facit: spoliis se quisque recentibus armat. 395
uadimus immixti Danaïs haud numine nostro
multaque per caecam congressi proelia noctem
conserimus, multos Danaum demittimus Orco.
diffugiunt alii ad nauis et litora cursu
fida petunt; pars ingentem formidine turpi 400
scandunt rursus equum et nota conduntur in aluo.

Heu nihil inuitis fas quemquam fidere diuis!
ecce trahebatur passis Priameia uirgo
crinibus a templo Cassandra adytisque Mineruae
ad caelum tendens ardentia lumina frustra, 405
lumina, nam teneras arcebant uincula palmas.
non tulit hanc speciem furiata mente Coroeus
et sese medium iniecit periturus in agmen;
consequimur cuncti et densis incurrimus armis.
hic primum ex alto delubri culmine telis 410
nostrorum obruimur oriturque miserrima caedes
armorum facie et Graiarum errore iubarum.
tum Danaï gemitu atque ereptae uirginis ira
undique collecti inuadunt, acerrimus Ajax
et gemini Atridae Dolopumque exercitus omnis: 415
aduersi rupto ceu quondam turbine uenti
confligunt, Zephyrusque Notusque et laetus Eois
Eurus equis; stridunt siluae saeuitque tridenti
spumeus atque imo Nereus ciet aequora fundo.
illi etiam, si quos obscura nocte per umbram 420
fudimus insidiis totaque agitauius urbe,
apparent; primi clipeos mentitaque tela
agnoscunt atque ora sono discordia signant.
ilicet obruimur numero, primusque Coroeus
Penelei dextra diuae armipotentis ad aram 425
procumbit; cadit et Rhipeus, iustissimus unus
qui fuit in Teucris et seruantissimus aequi

(dis aliter uisum); pereunt Hypanisque Dymasque
confixi a sociis; nec te tua plurima, Panthu,
labentem pietas nec Apollinis infula textit. 430
Iliaci cineres et flamma extrema meorum,
testor, in occasu uestro nec tela nec ullas
uitauisse uices, Danaum et, si fata fuissent
ut caderem, meruisse manu. diuellimur inde, Iphitus et Pelias mecum (quorum Iphitus aevo 435
iam grauior, Pelias et uulnere tardus Vlix),
protinus ad sedes Priami clamore uocati.
hic uero ingentem pugnam, ceu cetera nusquam
bella forent, nulli tota morerentur in urbe,
sic Martem indomitum Danaosque ad tecta ruentis 440
cernimus obsessumque acta testudine limen.
haerent parietibus scalae postisque sub ipsos
nituntur gradibus clipeosque ad tela sinistris
protecti obiciunt, prensant fastigia dextris.
Dardanidae contra turris ac tota domorum 445
culmina conuellunt; his se, quando ultima cernunt,
extrema iam in morte parant defendere telis,
auratasque trabes, ueterum decora alta parentum,
deuoluunt; alii strictis mucronibus imas
obsedere fores, has seruant agmine denso. 450
instaurati animi regis succurrere tectis
auxilioque leuare uiros uimque addere uictis.

Limen erat caecaeque fores et peruius usus
tectorum inter se Priami, postesque relict
a tergo, infelix qua se, dum regna manebant, 455
saepius Andromache ferre incommitata solebat
ad soceros et auo puerum Astyanacta trahebat.
euado ad summi fastigia culminis, unde
tela manu miseri iactabant inrita Teucri.
turrim in praecipiti stantem summisque sub astra 460
eductam tectis, unde omnis Troia uideri
et Danaum solitae naues et Achaica castra,
adgressi ferro circum, qua summa labantis

iuncturas tabulata dabant, conuellimus altis
sedibus impulimusque; ea lapsa repente ruinam 465
cum sonitu trahit et Danaum super agmina late
incidit. ast alii subeunt, nec saxa nec ullum
telorum interea cessat genus.

Vestibulum ante ipsum primoque in limine Pyrrhus
exsultat telis et luce coruscus aena: 470
qualis ubi in lucem coluber mala gramina pastus,
frigida sub terra tumidum quem bruma tegebat,
nunc, positis nouus exuuiis nitidusque iuuenta,
lubrica conuoluit sublato pectore terga
arduus ad solem, et linguis micat ore trisulcis. 475
una ingens Periphas et equorum agitator Achillis,
armiger Automedon, una omnis Scyria pubes
succedunt tecto et flammis ad culmina iactant.
ipse inter primos correpta dura bipenni
limina perrumpit postisque a cardine uellit 480
aeratos; iamque excisa trabe firma cauauit
robora et ingentem lato dedit ore fenestram.
apparet domus intus et atria longa patescunt;
apparent Priami et ueterum penetralia regum,
armatosque uident stantis in limine primo. 485
at domus interior gemitu miseroque tumultu
miscetur, penitusque cauae plangoribus aedes
femineis ululant; ferit aurea sidera clamor.
tum pauidae tectis matres ingentibus errant
amplexaeque tenent postis atque oscula figunt. 490
instat ui patria Pyrrhus; nec claustra nec ipsi
custodes sufferre ualent; labat ariete crebro
ianua, et emoti procumbunt cardine postes.
fit uia ui; rumpunt aditus primosque trucidant
immissi Danai et late loca milite complent. 495
non sic, aggeribus ruptis cum spumeus amnis
exiit oppositasque euicit gurgite moles,
fertur in arua furens cumulo camposque per omnis
cum stabulis armenta trahit. uidi ipse furem

caede Neoptolemum geminosque in limine Atridas, 500
uidi Hecubam centumque nurus Priamumque per aras
sanguine foedantem quos ipse sacrauerat ignis.
quinquaginta illi thalami, spes tanta nepotum,
barbarico postes auro spoliisque superbi
procubuere; tenent Danai qua deficit ignis. 505

Forsitan et Priami fuerint quae fata requiras.
urbis uti captae casum conuulsaque uidit
limina tectorum et medium in penetralibus hostem,
arma diu senior desueta trementibus aevo
circumdat nequiquam umeris et inutile ferrum 510
cingitur, ac densos fertur moriturus in hostis.
aedibus in mediis nudoque sub aetheris axe
ingens ara fuit iuxtaque ueterrima laurus
incumbens arae atque umbra complexa penatis.
hic Hecuba et natae nequiquam altaria circum, 515
praecipites atra ceu tempestate columbae,
condensae et diuum amplexae simulacra sedebant.
ipsum autem sumptis Priamum iuuenalibus armis
ut uidit, ‘quae mens tam dira, miserrime coniunx,
impulit his cingi telis? aut quo ruis?’ inquit. 520
‘non tali auxilio nec defensoribus istis
tempus eget; non, si ipse meus nunc adforet Hector.
huc tandem concede; haec ara tuebitur omnis,
aut moriere simul.’ sic ore effata recepit
ad sese et sacra longaeuum in sede locauit. 525

Ecce autem elapsus Pyrrhi de caede Polites,
unus natorum Priami, per tela, per hostis
porticibus longis fugit et uacua atria lustrat
saucius. illum ardens infesto uulnere Pyrrhus
insequitur, iam iamque manu tenet et premit hasta. 530
ut tandem ante oculos euasit et ora parentum,
concidit ac multo uitam cum sanguine fudit.
hic Priamus, quamquam in media iam morte tenetur,
non tamen abstinuit nec uoci iraeque pepercit:

‘at tibi pro scelere,’ exclamat, ‘pro talibus ausis 535
di, si qua est caelo pietas quae talia curet,
persoluant grates dignas et praemia reddant
debita, qui nati coram me cernere letum
fecisti et patrios foedasti funere uultus.
at non ille, satum quo te mentiris, Achilles 540
talis in hoste fuit Priamo; sed iura fidemque
supplicis erubuit corpusque exsanguie sepulcro
reddidit Hectoreum meque in mea regna remisit.’
sic fatus senior telumque imbelles sine ictu
coniecit, rauco quod protinus aere repulsum, 545
et summo clipei nequiquam umbone pependit.
cui Pyrrhus: ‘referes ergo haec et nuntius ibis
Pelidae genitori. illi mea tristia facta
degeneremque Neoptolemum narrare memento.
nunc morere.’ hoc dicens altaria ad ipsa trementem 550
traxit et in multo lapsantem sanguine nati,
implicuitque comam laeua, dextraque coruscum
extulit ac lateri capulo tenus abdidit ensem.
haec finis Priami factorum, hic exitus illum
sorte tulit Troiam incensam et prolapsa uidentem 555
Pergama, tot quondam populis terrisque superbum
regnatorem Asiae. iacet ingens litore truncus,
auulsumque umeris caput et sine nomine corpus.

At me tum primum saeuus circumstetit horror.
obstupui; subiit cari genitoris imago, 560
ut regem aequaeuum crudeli uulnere uidi
uitam exhalantem, subiit deserta Creusa
et direpta domus et parui casus Iuli.
respicio et quae sit me circum copia lustro.
deseruere omnes defessi, et corpora saltu 565
ad terram misere aut ignibus aegra dedere.

[Iamque adeo super unus eram, cum limina Vestae
seruantem et tacitam secreta in sede latentem
Tyndarida aspicio; dant claram incendia lucem

erranti passimque oculos per cuncta ferenti. 570
illa sibi infestos euersa ob Pergama Teucros
et Danaum poenam et deserti coniugis iras
praemetuens, Troiae et patriae communis Erinys,
abdiderat sese atque aris inuisa sedebat.
exarsere ignes animo; subit ira cadentem 575
ulcisci patriam et sceleratas sumere poenas.
‘scilicet haec Spartam incolumis patriasque Mycenae
aspiciet, partoque ibit regina triumpho?
coniugiumque domumque patris natosque uidebit
Iliadum turba et Phrygiis comitata ministris? 580
occiderit ferro Priamus? Troia arserit igni?
Dardanium totiens sudarit sanguine litus?
non ita. namque etsi nullum memorabile nomen
feminea in poena est, habet haec uictoria laudem;
exstinxisse nefas tamen et sumpsisse merentis 585
laudabor poenas, animumque explesse iuuabit
ultricis ~famam et cineres satiasse meorum.’
taliam iactabam et furiata mente ferebar,]
cum mihi se, non ante oculis tam clara, uidendam
obtulit et pura per noctem in luce refulsit 590
alma parens, confessa deam qualisque uideri
caelicolis et quanta solet, dextraque prehensum
continuit roseoque haec insuper addidit ore:
‘nate, quis indomitas tantus dolor excitat iras?
quid furis? aut quonam nostri tibi cura recessit? 595
non prius aspicias ubi fessum aetate parentem
liqueris Anchisen, superet coniunxne Creusa
Ascaniusque puer? quos omnis undique Graiae
circum errant acies et, ni mea cura resistat,
iam flammae tulerint inimicus et hauserit ensis. 600
non tibi Tyndaridis facies inuisa Lacaenae
culpatusue Paris, diuum inclementia, diuum
has euertit opes sternitque a culmine Troiam.
aspice (namque omnem, quae nunc obducta tuenti
mortalis hebetat uisus tibi et umida circum 605
caligat, nubem eripiam; tu ne qua parentis

iussa time neu praeceptis parere recusa):
hic, ubi disiectas moles auulsaque saxis
saxa uides, mixtoque undantem puluere fumum,
Neptunus muros magnoque emota tridenti 610
fundamenta quatit totamque a sedibus urbem
eruit. hic Iuno Scaeas saeuissima portas
prima tenet sociumque furens a nauibus agmen
ferro accincta uocat.
iam summas arces Tritonia, respice, Pallas 615
insedit nimbo effulgens et Gorgone saeua.
ipse pater Danais animos uirisque secundas
sufficit, ipse deos in Dardana suscitāt arma.
eripe, nate, fugam finemque impone labori;
nusquam abero et tutum patrio te limine sistam.’ 620
dixerat et spissis noctis se condidit umbris.
apparent dirae facies inimicae Troiae
numina magna deum.

Tum uero omne mihi uisum considerare in ignis
Ilium et ex imo uerti Neptunia Troia: 625
ac ueluti summis antiquam in montibus ornum
cum ferro accisam crebrisque bipennibus instant
eruere agricolae certatim, illa usque minatur
et tremefacta comam concusso uertice nutat,
uulneribus donec paulatim euicta supremum 630
congemuit traxitque iugis auulsa ruinam.
descendo ac ducente deo flammam inter et hostis
expedior: dant tela locum flammaeque recedunt.

Atque ubi iam patriae peruentum ad limina sedis
antiquasque domos, genitor, quem tollere in altos 635
optabam primum montis primumque petebam,
abnegat excisa uitam producere Troia
exsiliumque pati. ‘uos o, quibus integer aevi
sanguis,’ ait, ‘solidaeque suo stant robore uires,
uos agitate fugam. 640
me si caelicolae uoluissent ducere uitam,

has mihi seruassent sedes. satis una superque
uidimus excidia et captae superauimus urbi.
sic o sic positum adfati discedite corpus.
ipse manu mortem inueniam; miserebitur hostis 645
exuiuiasque petet. facilis iactura sepulcri.
iam pridem inuisus diuis et inutilis annos
demoror, ex quo me diuum pater atque hominum rex
fulminis adflauit uentis et contigit igni.’

Talia perstabat memorans fixusque manebat. 650
nos contra effusi lacrimis coniunxque Creusa
Ascaniusque omnisque domus, ne uertere secum
cuncta pater fatoque urgenti incumbere uellet.
abnegat inceptoque et sedibus haeret in isdem.
rursus in arma feror mortemque miserrimus opto. 655
nam quod consilium aut quae iam fortuna dabatur?
‘mene efferre pedem, genitor, te posse relicto
sperasti tantumque nefas patrio excidit ore?
si nihil ex tanta superis placet urbe relinqui,
et sedet hoc animo perituraeque addere Troiae 660
teque tuosque iuuat, patet isti ianua leto,
iamque aderit multo Priami de sanguine Pyrrhus,
natum ante ora patris, patrem qui obtruncat ad aras.
hoc erat, alma parens, quod me per tela, per ignis
eripis, ut mediis hostem in penetralibus utque 665
Ascanium patremque meum iuxtaque Creusam
alterum in alterius mactatos sanguine cernam?
arma, uiri, ferte arma; uocat lux ultima uictos.
reddite me Danaïs; sinite instaurata reuisam
proelia. numquam omnes hodie moriemur inulti.’ 670

Hinc ferro accingor rursus clipeoque sinistram
insertabam aptans meque extra tecta ferebam.
ecce autem complexa pedes in limine coniunx
haerebat, paruūque patri tendebat Iulum:
‘si periturus abis, et nos rape in omnia tecum; 675
sin aliquam expertus sumptis spem ponis in armis,

hanc primum tutare domum. cui paruus Iulus,
cui pater et coniunx quondam tua dicta relinquitur?’

Talia uociferans gemitu tectum omne replebat,
cum subitum dictuque oritur mirabile monstrum. 680
namque manus inter maestorumque ora parentum
ecce leuis summo de uertice uisus Iuli
fundere lumen apex, tactuque innoxia mollis
lambere flamma comas et circum tempora pasci.
nos pauidi trepidare metu crinemque flagrantem 685
excutere et sanctos restringere fontibus ignis.
at pater Anchises oculos ad sidera laetus
extulit et caelo palmas cum uoce tetendit:
‘Iuppiter omnipotens, precibus si flecteris ullis,
aspice nos, hoc tantum, et si pietate meremur, 690
da deinde auxilium, pater, atque haec omina firma.’

Vix ea fatus erat senior, subitoque fragore
intonuit laeuum, et de caelo lapsa per umbras
stella facem ducens multa cum luce cucurrit.
illam summa super labentem culmina tecti 695
cernimus Idaea claram se condere silua
signantemque uias; tum longo limite sulcus
dat lucem et late circum loca sulphure fumant.
hic uero uictus genitor se tollit ad auras
adfaturque deos et sanctum sidus adorat. 700
‘iam iam nulla mora est; sequor et qua ducitis adsum,
di patrii; seruate domum, seruate nepotem.
uestrum hoc augurium, uestroque in numine Troia est.
cedo equidem nec, nate, tibi comes ire recuso.’
dixerat ille, et iam per moenia clarior ignis 705
auditur, propiusque aestus incendia uoluunt.
‘ergo age, care pater, ceruici imponere nostrae;
ipse subibo umeris nec me labor iste grauabit;
quo res cumque cadent, unum et commune periculum,
una salus ambobus erit. mihi paruus Iulus 710
sit comes, et longe seruet uestigia coniunx.

uos, famuli, quae dicam animis aduertite uestris.
 est urbe egressis tumulus templumque uetustum
 desertae Cereris, iuxtaque antiqua cupressus
 religione patrum multos seruata per annos; 715
 hanc ex diuerso sedem ueniemus in unam.
 tu, genitor, cape sacra manu patriosque penatis;
 me bello e tanto digressum et caede recenti
 attrectare nefas, donec me flumine uiuo
 abluero.' 720
 haec fatus latos umeros subiectaque colla
 ueste super fuluique insternor pelle leonis,
 succedoque oneri; dextrae se paruus Iulus
 implicuit sequiturque patrem non passibus aequis;
 pone subit coniunx. ferimur per opaca locorum, 725
 et me, quem dudum non ulla iniecta mouebant
 tela neque aduerso glomerati examine Grai,
 nunc omnes terrent aerae, sonus excitat omnis
 suspensum et pariter comitique onerique timentem.
 iamque propinquabam portis omnemque uidebar 730
 euasisse uiam, subito cum creber ad auris
 uisus adesse pedum sonitus, genitorque per umbram
 prospiciens 'nate,' exclamat, 'fuge, nate; propinquant.
 ardentis clipeos atque aera micantia cerno.'
 hic mihi nescio quod trepido male numen amicum 735
 confusam eripuit mentem. namque auia cursu
 dum sequor et nota excedo regione uiarum,
 heu misero coniunx fatone erepta Creusa
 substitit, errauitne uia seu lapsa resedit,
 incertum; nec post oculis est reddita nostris. 740
 nec prius amissam respexi animumue reflexi
 quam tumulum antiquae Cereris sedemque sacratam
 uenimus: hic demum collectis omnibus una
 defuit, et comites natumque uirumque fefellit.
 quem non incusaui amens hominumque deorumque, 745
 aut quid in euersa uidi crudelius urbe?
 Ascanium Anchisenque patrem Teucrosque penatis
 commendo sociis et curua ualle recondo;

ipse urbem repeto et cingor fulgentibus armis.
stat casus renouare omnis omnemque reuerti 750
per Troiam et rursus caput obiectare periclis.
principio muros obscuraque limina portae,
qua gressum extuleram, repeto et uestigia retro
obseruata sequor per noctem et lumine lustrō:
horror ubique animo, simul ipsa silentia terrent. 755
inde domum, si forte pedem, si forte tulisset,
me refero: inruerant Danai et tectum omne tenebant.
ilicet ignis edax summa ad fastigia uento
uoluitur; exsuperant flammae, furit aestus ad auras.
procedo et Priami sedes arcemque reuiso: 760
et iam porticibus uacuis Iunonis asylo
custodes lecti Phoenix et dirus Vlixes
praedam adseruabant. huc undique Troia gaza
incensis erepta adytis, mensaeque deorum
crateresque auro solidi, captiuaque uestis 765
congeritur. pueri et pauidae longo ordine matres
stant circum.
ausus quin etiam uoces iactare per umbram
impleui clamore uias, maestusque Creusam
nequiquam ingeminans iterumque iterumque uocaui. 770
quaerenti et tectis urbis sine fine ruenti
infelix simulacrum atque ipsius umbra Creusae
uisa mihi ante oculos et nota maior imago.
obstipui, steteruntque comae et uox faucibus haesit.
tum sic adfari et curas his demere dictis: 775
‘quid tantum insano iuuat indulgere dolori,
o dulcis coniunx? non haec sine numine diuum
eueniunt; nec te comitem hinc portare Creusam
fas, aut ille sinit superi regnator Olympi.
longa tibi exsilia et uastum maris aequor arandum, 780
et terram Hesperiam uenies, ubi Lydius arua
inter opima uirum leni fluit agmine Thybris.
illic res laetae regnumque et regia coniunx
parta tibi; lacrimas dilectae pelle Creusae.
non ego Myrmidonum sedes Dolopumue superbas 785

aspiciam aut Graia seruitum matribus ibo, Dardanis et diuiae Veneris nurus;
sed me magna deum genetrix his detinet oris.
iamque uale et nati serua communis amorem.’
haec ubi dicta dedit, lacrimantem et multa uolentem 790
dicere deseruit, tenuisque recessit in auras.
ter conatus ibi collo dare bracchia circum;
ter frustra comprensa manus effugit imago,
par leuibus uentis uolucrique simillima somno.
sic demum socios consumpta nocte reuiso. 795

Atque hic ingentem comitum adfluxisse nouorum
inuenio admirans numerum, matresque uirosque,
collectam exsilio pubem, miserabile uulgus.
undique conuenere animis opibusque parati
in quascumque uelim pelago deducere terras. 800
iamque iugis summae surgebat Lucifer Idae
ducebatque diem, Danaique obsessa tenebant
limina portarum, nec spes opis ulla dabatur.
cessi et sublato montis genitore petiui.

LIBER III

Postquam res Asiae Priamique euertere gentem
immeritam uisum superis, ceciditque superbum
Ilium et omnis humo fumat Neptunia Troia,
diuersa exsilia et desertas quaerere terras
auguriis agimur diuum, classemque sub ipsa 5
Antandro et Phrygiae molimur montibus Idae,
incerti quo fata ferant, ubi sistere detur,
contrahimusque uiros. uix prima inceperat aestas
et pater Anchises dare fatis uela iubebat,
litora cum patriae lacrimans portusque relinquo 10
et campos ubi Troia fuit. feror exsul in altum
cum sociis natoque penatibus et magnis dis.

Terra procul uastis colitur Mauortia campis
(Thraces arant) acri quondam regnata Lycurgo,
hospitium antiquum Troiae sociique penates 15
dum fortuna fuit. feror huc et litore curuo
moenia prima loco fatis ingressus iniquis
Aeneadasque meo nomen de nomine fingo.
sacra Dionaee matri diuisque ferebam
auspiciis coeptorum operum, superoque nitentem 20
caelicolum regi mactabam in litore taurum.
forte fuit iuxta tumulus, quo cornea summo
uirgulta et densis hastilibus horrida myrtus.
accessi uiridemque ab humo conuellere siluam
conatus, ramis tegerem ut frondentibus aras, 25
horrendum et dictu uideo mirabile monstrum.
nam quae prima solo ruptis radicibus arbos
uellitur, huic atro liquuntur sanguine guttae
et terram tabo maculant. mihi frigidus horror
membra quatit gelidusque coit formidine sanguis. 30
rursus et alterius lentum conuellere uimen
insequor et causas penitus temptare latentis;
ater et alterius sequitur de cortice sanguis.

multa mouens animo Nymphas uenerabar agrestis
Gradiuumque patrem, Geticis qui praesidet aruis, 35
rite secundarent uisus omenque leuarent.
tertia sed postquam maiore hastilia nisu
adgredior genibusque aduersae obluctor harenae, (eloquar an sileam?) gemitus lacrimabilis imo
auditur tumulo et uox reddita fertur ad auris: 40
‘quid miserum, Aenea, laceras? iam parce sepulto,
parce pias scelerare manus. non me tibi Troia
externum tulit aut cruor hic de stipite manat.
heu fuge crudelis terras, fuge litus auarum:
nam Polydorus ego. hic confixum ferrea textit 45
telorum seges et iaculis increuit acutis.’
tum uero ancipiti mentem formidine pressus
obstupui steteruntque comae et uox faucibus haesit.

Hunc Polydorum auri quondam cum pondere magno
infelix Priamus furtim mandarat alendum 50
Threicio regi, cum iam diffideret armis
Dardaniae cingique urbem obsidione uideret.
ille, ut opes fractae Teucrum et Fortuna recessit,
res Agamemnonias uictriciaque arma secutus
fas omne abrumpit: Polydorum obtruncat, et auro 55
ui potitur. quid non mortalia pectora cogis,
auri sacra fames! postquam pauor ossa reliquit,
delectos populi ad proceres primumque parentem
monstra deum refero, et quae sit sententia posco.
omnibus idem animus, scelerata excedere terra, 60
linqui pollutum hospitium et dare classibus Austros.
ergo instauramus Polydoro funus, et ingens
aggeritur tumulo tellus; stant Manibus arae
caeruleis maestae uittis atraque cupresso,
et circum Iliades crinem de more solutae; 65
inferimus tepido spumantia cymbia lacte
sanguinis et sacri pateras, animamque sepulcro
condimus et magna supremum uoce ciemus.

Inde ubi prima fides pelago, placataque uenti
dant maria et lenis crepitans uocat Auster in altum, 70
deducunt socii nauis et litora complent;
prouehimur portu terraeque urbesque recedunt.
sacra mari colitur medio gratissima tellus
Nereidum matri et Neptuno Aegaeo,
quam pius arquiteuens oras et litora circum 75
errantem Mycono e celsa Gyaroque reuinxit,
immotamque coli dedit et contemnere uentos.
huc feror, haec fessos tuto placidissima portu
accipit; egressi ueneramur Apollinis urbem.
rex Anius, rex idem hominum Phoebique sacerdos, 80
uittis et sacra redimitus tempora lauro
occurrit; ueterem Anchisen agnouit amicum.
iungimus hospitio dextras et tecta subimus.

Templa dei saxo uenerabar structa uetusto:
‘da propriam, Thymbraee, domum; da moenia fessis 85
et genus et mansuram urbem; serua altera Troiae
Pergama, reliquias Danaum atque immitis Achilli.
quem sequimur? quoue ire iubes? ubi ponere sedes?
da, pater, augurium atque animis inlabere nostris.’
uix ea fatus eram: tremere omnia uisa repente, 90
liminaque laurusque dei, totusque moueri
mons circum et mugire adytis cortina reclusis.
summissi petimus terram et uox fertur ad auris:
‘Dardanidae duri, quae uos a stirpe parentum
prima tulit tellus, eadem uos ubere laeto 95
accipiet reduces. antiquam exquirite matrem.
hic domus Aeneae cunctis dominabitur oris
et nati natorum et qui nascentur ab illis.’
haec Phoebus; mixtoque ingens exorta tumultu
laetitia, et cuncti quae sint ea moenia quaerunt, 100
quo Phoebus uocet errantis iubeatque reuerti.
tum genitor ueterum uoluens monimenta uirorum
‘audite, o procures,’ ait ‘et spes discite uestras.
Creta Iouis magni medio iacet insula ponto,

mons Idaeus ubi et gentis cunabula nostrae. 105
centum urbes habitant magnas, uberrima regna,
maximus unde pater, si rite audita recordor,
Teucus Rhoeteas primum est aduectus in oras,
optauitque locum regno. nondum Ilium et arces
Pergameae steterant; habitabant uallibus imis. 110
hinc mater cultrix Cybeli Corybantiaque aera Idaeumque nemus, hinc fida silentia sacris,
et iuncti currum dominae subiere leones.
ergo agite et diuum ducunt qua iussa sequamur:
placemus uentos et Cnosia regna petamus. 115
nec longo distant cursu: modo Iuppiter adsit,
tertia lux classem Cretaeis sistet in oris.’
sic fatus meritos aris mactauit honores,
taurum Neptuno, taurum tibi, pulcher Apollo,
nigram Hiemi pecudem, Zephyris felicibus albam. 120

Fama uolat pulsum regnis cessisse paternis
Idomeneia ducem, desertaque litora Cretae,
hoste uacare domum sedesque astare relictas.
linquimus Ortygiae portus pelagoque uolamus
bacchatamque iugis Naxon uiridemque Donusam, 125
Olearon niueamque Paron sparsasque per aequor
Cycladas, et crebris legimus freta concita terris.
nauticus exoritur uario certamine clamor:
hortantur socii Cretam proauosque petamus.
prosequitur surgens a puppi uentus euntis, 130
et tandem antiquis Curetum adlabimur oris.
ergo audius muros optatae molior urbis
Pergameamque uoco, et laetam cognomine gentem
hortor amare focos arcemque attollere tectis.

Iamque fere sicco subductae litore puppes, 135
conubiis aruisque nouis operata iuuentus,
iura domosque dabam, subito cum tabida membris
corrupto caeli tractu miserandaque uenit
arboribusque satisque lues et letifer annus.

linquebant dulcis animas aut aegra trahebant 140
corpora; tum sterilis exurere Sirius agros,
arebant herbae et uictum seges aegra negabat.
rursus ad oraculum Ortygiae Phoebumque remenso
hortatur pater ire mari ueniamque precari,
quam fessis finem rebus ferat, unde laborum 145
temptare auxilium iubeat, quo uertere cursus.

Nox erat et terris animalia somnus habebat:
effigies sacrae diuum Phrygiique penates,
quos mecum a Troia mediisque ex ignibus urbis
extuleram, uisi ante oculos astare iacentis 150
in somnis multo manifesti lumine, qua se
plena per insertas fundebat luna fenestras;
tum sic adfari et curas his demere dictis:
‘quod tibi delato Ortygiam dicturus Apollo est,
hic canit et tua nos en ultro ad limina mittit. 155
nos te Dardania incensa tuaque arma secuti,
nos tumidum sub te permensi classibus aequor,
idem uenturos tollemus in astra nepotes
imperiumque urbi dabimus. tu moenia magnis
magna para longumque fugae ne linque laborem. 160
mutandae sedes. non haec tibi litora suasit
Delius aut Cretae iussit considerare Apollo.
est locus, Hesperiam Grai cognomine dicunt,
terra antiqua, potens armis atque ubere glaebae;
Oenotri coluere uiri; nunc fama minores 165
Italiam dixisse ducis de nomine gentem.
hae nobis propriae sedes, hinc Dardanus ortus
Iasiusque pater, genus a quo principe nostrum.
surge age et haec laetus longaeuo dicta parenti
haud dubitanda refer: Corythum terrasque requirat 170
Ausonias; Dictaea negat tibi Iuppiter arua.’
talibus attonitus uisis et uoce deorum
(nec sopor illud erat, sed coram agnoscere uultus
uelatasque comas praesentiaque ora uidebar;
tum gelidus toto manabat corpore sudor) 175

corripio e stratis corpus tendoque supinas
ad caelum cum uoce manus et munera libo
intemerata focis. perfecto laetus honore
Anchisen facio certum remque ordine pando.
agnouit prolem ambiguam geminosque parentis, 180
seque nouo ueterum deceptum errore locorum.
tum memorat: 'nate, Iliacis exercite fati,
sola mihi talis casus Cassandra canebat.
nunc repeto haec generi portendere debita nostro
et saepe Hesperiam, saepe Itala regna uocare. 185
sed quis ad Hesperiae uenturos litora Teucros
crederet? aut quem tum uates Cassandra moueret?
cedamus Phoebo et moniti meliora sequamur.'
sic ait, et cuncti dicto paremus ouantes.
hanc quoque deserimus sedem paucisque relictis 190
uela damus uastumque caua trabe currimus aequor.

Postquam altum tenuere rates nec iam amplius ullae
apparent terrae, caelum undique et undique pontus,
tum mihi caeruleus supra caput astitit imber
noctem hiememque ferens, et inhorruit unda tenebris. 195
continuo uenti uoluunt mare magnaue surgunt
aequora, dispersi iactamur gurgite uasto;
inuoluere diem nimbi et nox umida caelum
abstulit, ingeminant abruptis nubibus ignes,
excutimur cursu et caecis erramus in undis. 200
ipse diem noctemque negat discernere caelo
nec meminisse uiae media Palinurus in unda.
tris adeo incertos caeca caligine soles
erramus pelago, totidem sine sidere noctes.
quarto terra die primum se attollere tandem 205
uisa, aperire procul montis ac uoluere fumum.
uela cadunt, remis insurgimus; haud mora, nautae
adnixa torquent spumas et caerula uerrunt.
seruatum ex undis Strophadum me litora primum
excipiunt. Strophades Graio stant nomine dictae 210
insulae Ionio in magno, quas dira Celaeno

Harpyiaeque colunt aliae, Phineia postquam
clausa domus mensasque metu liquere priores.
tristius haud illis monstrum, nec saeuior ulla
pestis et ira deum Stygiis sese extulit undis. 215
uirginei uolucrum uultus, foedissima uentris
proluuius uncaeque manus et pallida semper
ora fame.
huc ubi delati portus intrauimus, ecce
laeta bouum passim campis armenta uidemus 220
caprigenumque pecus nullo custode per herbas.
inruimus ferro et diuos ipsumque uocamus
in partem praedamque Iouem; tum litore curuo
exstruimusque toros dapibusque epulamur opimis.
at subitae horrifico lapsu de montibus adsunt 225
Harpyiae et magnis quatiunt clangoribus alas,
diripiuntque dapes contactuque omnia foedant
immundo; tum uox taetrum dira inter odorem.
rursum in secessu longo sub rupe cauata
[arboribus clausam circum atque horrentibus umbris] 230
instruimus mensas arisque reponimus ignem;
rursum ex diuerso caeli caecisque latebris
turba sonans praedam pedibus circumuolat uncis,
polluit ore dapes. sociis tunc arma capessant
edico, et dira bellum cum gente gerendum. 235
haud secus ac iussi faciunt tectosque per herbam
disponunt ensis et scuta latentia condunt.
ergo ubi delapsae sonitum per curua dedere
litora, dat signum specula Misenus ab alta
aere cauo. inuadunt socii et noua proelia temptant, 240
obsceas pelagi ferro foedare uolucris.
sed neque uim plumis ullam nec uulnera tergo
accipiunt, celerique fuga sub sidera lapsae
semesam praedam et uestigia foeda relinquunt.
una in praecelsa consedit rupe Celaeno, 245
infelix uates, rumpitque hanc pectore uocem;
'bellum etiam pro caede bouum stratisque iuuencis,
Laomedontiadae, bellumne inferre paratis

et patrio Harpyias insontis pellere regno?
accipite ergo animis atque haec mea figite dicta, 250
quae Phoebus pater omnipotens, mihi Phoebus Apollo
praedixit, uobis Furiarum ego maxima pando.
Italiam cursu petitis uentisque uocatis:
ibitis Italiam portusque intrare licebit.
sed non ante datam cingetis moenibus urbem 255
quam uos dira fames nostraeque iniuria caedis
ambesas subigat malis absumere mensas.’
dixit, et in siluam pennis ablata refugit.
at sociis subita gelidus formidine sanguis
deriguit: cecidere animi, nec iam amplius armis, 260
sed uotis precibusque iubent exposcere pacem,
siue deae seu sint dirae obscenaeque uolucres.
et pater Anchises passis de litore palmis
numina magna uocat meritosque indicit honores:
‘di, prohibete minas; di, talem auertite casum 265
et placidi seruare pios.’ tum litore funem
deripere excussosque iubet laxare rudentis.
tendunt uela Noti: fugimus spumantibus undis
qua cursum uentusque gubernatorque uocabat.
iam medio apparet fluctu nemorosa Zacynthos 270
Dulichiumque Sameque et Neritos ardua saxis.
effugimus scopulos Ithacae, Laertia regna,
et terram altricem saeui exsecramur Vlixī.
mox et Leucatae nimbose cacumina montis
et formidatus nautis aperitur Apollo. 275
hunc petimus fessi et paruae succedimus urbi;
ancora de prora iacitur, stant litore puppes.

Ergo insperata tandem tellure potiti
lustramurque Ioui uotisque incendimus aras,
Actiaque Iliacis celebramus litora ludis. 280
exercent patrias oleo labente palaestras
nudati socii: iuuat euasisse tot urbes
Argolicas mediosque fugam tenuisse per hostis.
interea magnum sol circumuoluitur annum

et glacialis hiems Aquilonibus asperat undas. 285
aere cauo clipeum, magni gestamen Abantis,
postibus aduersis figo et rem carmine signo:
aeneas haec de danais victoribus arma;
linquere tum portus iubeo et considerare transtris.
certatim socii feriunt mare et aequora uerrunt: 290
protinus aerias Phaeacum abscondimus arces
litoraue Epiri legimus portuque subimus
Chaonio et celsam Buthroti accedimus urbem.

Hic incredibilis rerum fama occupat auris,
Priamiden Helenum Graias regnare per urbis 295
coniugio Aeacidae Pyrrhi sceptrisque potitum,
et patrio Andromachen iterum cessisse marito.
obstupui, miroque incensum pectus amore
compellare uirum et casus cognoscere tantos.
progredior portu classis et litora linquens, 300
sollemnis cum forte dapes et tristia dona
ante urbem in luco falsi Simoentis ad undam
libabat cineri Andromache manisque uocabat
Hectoreum ad tumulum, uiridi quem caespite inanem
et geminas, causam lacrimis, sacrauerat aras. 305
ut me conspexit uenientem et Troia circum
arma amens uidit, magnis exterrita monstis
deriguit uisu in medio, calor ossa reliquit,
labitur, et longo uix tandem tempore fatur:
‘uerane te facies, uerus mihi nuntius adfers, 310
nate dea? uiuisne? aut, si lux alma recessit,
Hector ubi est?’ dixit, lacrimasque effudit et omnem
impleuit clamore locum. uix pauca furenti
subicio et raris turbatus uocibus hisco:
‘uiuo equidem uitamque extrema per omnia duco; 315
ne dubita, nam uera uides.
heu! quis te casus deiectam coniuge tanto
excipit, aut quae digna satis fortuna reuisit,
Hectoris Andromache? Pyrrhin conubia seruas?’
deiecit uultum et demissa uoce locuta est: 320

‘o felix una ante alias Priameia uirgo,
hostilem ad tumulum Troiae sub moenibus altis
iussa mori, quae sortitus non pertulit ullos
nec uictoris heri tetigit captiua cubile!
nos patria incensa diuersa per aequora uectae 325
stirpis Achilleae fastus iuuenemque superbum
seruitio enixae tulimus; qui deinde secutus Ledaeam Hermionen Lacedaemoniosque hymenaeos
me famulo famulamque Heleno transmisit habendam.
ast illum ereptae magno flammatus amore 330
coniugis et scelerum furiis agitatus Orestes
excipit incautum patriasque obtruncat ad aras.
morte Neoptolemi regnorum reddita cessit
pars Heleno, qui Chaonios cognomine campos
Chaoniamque omnem Troiano a Chaone dixit, 335
Pergamaque Iliacamque iugis hanc addidit arcem.
sed tibi qui cursum uenti, quae fata dedere?
aut quisnam ignarum nostris deus appulit oris?
quid puer Ascanius? superatne et uescitur aura?
quem tibi iam Troia — 340
ecqua tamen puero est amissae cura parentis?
ecquid in antiquam uirtutem animosque uirilis
et pater Aeneas et auunculus excitat Hector?’
taliam fundebat lacrimans longosque ciebat
incassum fletus, cum sese a moenibus heros 345
Priamides multis Helenus comitantibus adfert,
agnoscitque suos laetusque ad limina ducit,
et multum lacrimas uerba inter singula fundit.
procedo et paruam Troiam simulataque magnis
Pergama et arentem Xanthi cognomine riuum 350
agnosco, Scaetaeque amplector limina portae;
nec non et Teucris socia simul urbe fruuntur.
illos porticibus rex accipiebat in amplis:
aulae medio libabant pocula Bacchi
impositis auro dapibus, paterasque tenebant. 355

Iamque dies alterque dies processit, et aurae

uela uocant tumidoque inflatur carbasus Austro:
his uatem adgredior dictis ac talia quaeso:
‘Troiugena, interpret diuum, qui numina Phoebi,
qui tripodas Clarii et laurus, qui sidera sentis 360
et uolucrum linguas et praepetis omina pennae,
fare age (namque omnis cursum mihi prospera dixit
religio, et cuncti suaserunt numine diui
Italiam petere et terras temptare repostas;
sola nouum dictuque nefas Harpyia Celaeno 365
prodigium canit et tristis denuntiat iras
obsceamque famem), quae prima pericula uito?
quidue sequens tantos possim superare labores?’
hic Helenus caesis primum de more iuuenis
exorat pacem diuum uittasque resoluit 370
sacra capitis, meque ad tua limina, Phoebe,
ipse manu multo suspensum numine ducit,
atque haec deinde canit diuino ex ore sacerdos:

‘Nate dea (nam te maioribus ire per altum
auspiciis manifesta fides; sic fata deum rex 375
sortitur uoluitque uices, is uertitur ordo),
pauca tibi e multis, quo tutior hospita lustres
aequora et Ausonio possis considerare portu,
expediam dictis; prohibent nam cetera Parcae
scire Helenum farique uetat Saturnia Iuno. 380
principio Italiam, quam tu iam rere propinquam
uicinosque, ignare, paras inuadere portus,
longa procul longis uia diuidit inuia terris.
ante et Trinacria lentandus remus in unda
et salis Ausonii lustrandum nauibus aequor 385
infernique lacus Aeaeaeque insula Circae,
quam tuta possis urbem componere terra.
signa tibi dicam, tu condita mente teneto:
cum tibi sollicito secreti ad fluminis undam
litoreis ingens inuenta sub ilicibus sus 390
triginta capitem fetus enixa iacebit,
alba solo recubans, albi circum ubera nati,

is locus urbis erit, requies ea certa laborum.
nec tu mensarum morsus horresce futuros:
fata uiam inuenient aderitque uocatus Apollo. 395
has autem terras Italique hanc litoris oram,
proxima quae nostri perfunditur aequoris aestu,
effuge; cuncta malis habitantur moenia Graeis.
hic et Narycii posuerunt moenia Locri,
et Sallentinos obsedit milite campos 400
Lyctius Idomeneus; hic illa ducis Meliboei
parua Philoctetae subnixa Petelia muro.
quin ubi transmissae steterint trans aequora classes
et positis aris iam uota in litore solues,
purpureo uelare comas adopertus amictu, 405
ne qua inter sanctos ignis in honore deorum
hostilis facies occurrat et omina turbet.
hunc socii morem sacrorum, hunc ipse teneto;
hac casti maneant in religione nepotes.
ast ubi digressum Siculae te admouerit orae 410
uentus, et angusti rarescent claustra Pelori,
laeua tibi tellus et longo laeua petantur
aequora circuitu; dextrum fuge litus et undas.
haec loca ui quondam et uasta conuulsa ruina
(tantum aeui longinqua ualet mutare uetustas) 415
dissiluisse ferunt, cum protinus utraque tellus
una foret: uenit medio ui pontus et undis
Hesperium Siculo latus abscidit, aruaque et urbes
litore diductas angusto interluit aestu.
dextrum Scylla latus, laeuum implacata Charybdis 420
obsidet, atque imo barathri ter gurgite uastos
sorbet in abruptum fluctus rursusque sub auras
erigit alternos, et sidera uerberat unda.
at Scyllam caecis cohibet spelunca latebris
ora exsertantem et nauis in saxa trahentem. 425
prima hominis facies et pulchro pectore uirgo
pube tenus, postrema immani corpore pistrix
delphinum caudas utero commissa luporum.
praestat Trinacrii metas lustrare Pachyni

cessantem, longos et circumflectere cursus, 430
quam semel informem uasto uidisse sub antro
Scyllam et caeruleis canibus resonantia saxa.
praeterea, si qua est Heleno prudentia uati,
si qua fides, animum si ueris implet Apollo,
unum illud tibi, nate dea, proque omnibus unum 435
praedicam et repetens iterumque iterumque monebo,
Iunonis magnae primum prece numen adora,
Iunoni cane uota libens dominamque potentem
supplicibus supera donis: sic denique uictor
Trinacria finis Italos mittere relicta. 440
huc ubi delatus Cumaeam accesseris urbem
diuinosque lacus et Auerna sonantia siluis,
insanam uatem aspicias, quae rupe sub ima
fata canit foliisque notas et nomina mandat.
quaecumque in foliis descripsit carmina uirgo 445
digerit in numerum atque antro seclusa relinquit:
illa manent immota locis neque ab ordine cedunt.
uerum eadem, uerso tenuis cum cardine uentus
impulit et teneras turbauit ianua frondes,
numquam deinde cauo uolitantia prendere saxo 450
nec reuocare situs aut iungere carmina curat:
inconsulti abeunt sedemque odere Sibyllae.
hic tibi ne qua morae fuerint dispendia tanti,
quamuis increpitent socii et ui cursus in altum
uela uocet, possisque sinus implere secundos, 455
quin adeas uatem precibusque oracula poscas
ipsa canat uocemque uolens atque ora resoluat.
illa tibi Italiae populos uenturaque bella
et quo quemque modo fugiasque ferasque laborem
expediet, cursusque dabit uenerata secundos. 460
haec sunt quae nostra liceat te uoce moneri.
uade age et ingentem factis fer ad aethera Troiam.’

Quae postquam uates sic ore effatus amico est,
dona dehinc auro grauia ac secto elephanto
imperat ad nauis ferri, stipatque carinis 465

ingens argentum Dodonaeosque lebetas,
loricam consertam hamis auroque trilicem,
et conum insignis galeae cristasque comantis,
arma Neoptolemi. sunt et sua dona parenti.
addit equos, additque duces, 470
remigium supplet, socios simul instruit armis.
Interea classem uelis aptare iubebat
Anchises, fieret uento mora ne qua ferenti.
quem Phoebi interpretis multo compellat honore:
'coniugio, Anchisa, Veneris dignate superbo, 475
cura deum, bis Pergameis erepte ruinis,
ecce tibi Ausoniae tellus: hanc arripe uelis.
et tamen hanc pelago praeterlabare necesse est:
Ausoniae pars illa procul quam pandit Apollo.
uade,' ait 'o felix nati pietate. quid ultra 480
prouehor et fando surgentis demoror Austros?'
nec minus Andromache digressu maesta supremo
fert picturatas auri subtemine uestis
et Phrygiam Ascanio chlamydem (nec cedit honore)
textilibusque onerat donis, ac talia fatur: 485
'accipe et haec, manuum tibi quae monimenta mearum
sint, puer, et longum Andromachae testentur amorem,
coniugis Hectoreae. cape dona extrema tuorum,
o mihi sola mei super Astyanactis imago.
sic oculos, sic ille manus, sic ora ferebat; 490
et nunc aequali tecum pubesceret aeuo.'
hos ego digrediens lacrimis adfabar obortis:
'uiuere felices, quibus est fortuna peracta
iam sua: nos alia ex aliis in fata uocamur.
uobis parta quies: nullum maris aequor arandum, 495
arua neque Ausoniae semper cedentia retro
quaerenda. effigiem Xanthi Troiamque uidetis
quam uestrae fecere manus, melioribus, opto,
auspiciis, et quae fuerit minus obuia Graeis.
si quando Thybrim uicinaque Thybridis arua 500
intraro gentique meae data moenia cernam,
cognatas urbes olim populosque propinquos,

Epiro Hesperiam (quibus idem Dardanus auctor
atque idem casus), unam faciemus utramque
Troiam animis: maneat nostros ea cura nepotes.’ 505

Prouehimur pelago uicina Ceraunia iuxta,
unde iter Italiam cursusque breuissimus undis.
sol ruit interea et montes umbrantur opaci;
sternimur optatae gremio telluris ad undam
sortiti remos passimque in litore sicco 510
corpora curamus, fessos sopor inrigat artus.
necdum orbem medium Nox Horis acta subibat:
haud segnis strato surgit Palinurus et omnis
explorat uentos atque auribus aera captat;
sidera cuncta notat tacito labentia caelo, 515
Arcturum pluuiasque Hyadas geminosque Triones,
armatumque auro circumspicit Oriona.
postquam cuncta uidet caelo constare sereno,
dat clarum e puppi signum; nos castra mouemus
temptamusque uiam et uelorum pandimus alas. 520

Iamque rubescebat stellis Aurora fugatis
cum procul obscuros collis humilemque uidemus
Italiam. Italiam primus conclamat Achates,
Italiam laeto socii clamore salutant.
tum pater Anchises magnum cratera corona 525
induit impleuitque mero, diuosque uocauit
stans celsa in puppi:
‘di maris et terrae tempestatumque potentes,
ferite uiam uento facilem et spirate secundi.’
crebrescunt optatae aerae portusque patescit 530
iam propior, templumque apparet in arce Mineruae;
uela legunt socii et proras ad litora torquent.
portus ab euroo fluctu curuatus in arcum,
obiectae salsa spumant aspergine cautes,
ipse latet: gemino demittunt brachia muro 535
turriti scopuli refugitque ab litore templum.
quattuor hic, primum omen, equos in gramine uidi

tondentis campum late, candore niuali.
et pater Anchises 'bellum, o terra hospita, portas:
bello armantur equi, bellum haec armenta minantur. 540
sed tamen idem olim curru succedere sueti
quadripedes et frena iugo concordia ferre:
spes et pacis' ait. tum numina sancta precamur
Palladis armisonae, quae prima accepit ouantis,
et capita ante aras Phrygio uelamur amictu, 545
praeceptisque Heleni, dederat quae maxima, rite
Iunoni Argiuae iussos adolemus honores.

Haud mora, continuo perfectis ordine uotis
cornua uelatarum obuertimus antemnarum,
Graiuenumque domos suspectaque linquimus arua. 550
hinc sinus Herculei (si uera est fama) Tarenti
cernitur, attollit se diua Lacinia contra,
Caulonisque arces et nauifragum Scylaceum.
tum procul e fluctu Trinacria cernitur Aetna,
et gemitum ingentem pelagi pulsataque saxa 555
audimus longe fractasque ad litora uoces,
exsultantque uada atque aestu miscentur harenae.
et pater Anchises 'nimirum hic illa Charybdis:
hos Helenus scopulos, haec saxa horrenda canebat.
eripite, o socii, pariterque insurgite remis.' 560
haud minus ac iussi faciunt, primusque rudentem
contorsit laeuas proram Palinurus ad undas;
laeuam cuncta cohors remis uentisque petiuit.
tollimur in caelum curuato gurgite, et idem
subducta ad Manis imos desedimus unda. 565
ter scopuli clamorem inter caua saxa dedere,
ter spumam elisam et rorantia uidimus astra.
interea fessos uentus cum sole reliquit,
ignarique uiae Cyclopum adlabimur oris.

Portus ab accessu uentorum immotus et ingens 570
ipse: sed horrificis iuxta tonat Aetna ruinis,
interdumque atram prorumpit ad aethera nubem

turbine fumantem piceo et candente fauilla,
attollitque globos flammarum et sidera lambit;
interdum scopulos auulsaque uiscera montis 575
erigit eructans, liquefactaque saxa sub auras
cum gemitu glomerat fundoque exaestuatur imo.
fama est Enceladi semustum fulmine corpus
urgeri mole hac, ingentemque insuper Aetnam
impositam ruptis flammam exspirare caminis, 580
et fessum quotiens mutet latus, intremere omnem
murmure Trinacriam et caelum subtexere fumo.
noctem illam tecti siluis immania monstra
perferimus, nec quae sonitum det causa uidemus.
nam neque erant astrorum ignes nec lucidus aethra 585
siderea polus, obscuro sed nubila caelo,
et lunam in nimbo nox intempesta tenebat.

Postera iamque dies primo surgebat Eo
umentemque Aurora polo dimouerat umbram,
cum subito e siluis macie confecta suprema 590
ignoti noua forma uiri miserandaque cultu
procedit supplexque manus ad litora tendit.
respicimus. dira inluuies immissaque barba,
consertum tegimen spinis: at cetera Graius,
et quondam patriis ad Troiam missus in armis. 595
isque ubi Dardanios habitus et Troia uidit
arma procul, paulum aspectu conterritus haesit
continuitque gradum; mox sese ad litora praeceps
cum fletu precibusque tulit: ‘per sidera testor,
per superos atque hoc caeli spirabile lumen, 600
tollite me, Teucri. quascumque abducite terras:
hoc sat erit. scio me Danais e classibus unum
et bello Iliacos fateor petiisse penatis.
pro quo, si sceleris tanta est iniuria nostri,
spargite me in fluctus uastoque immergite ponto; 605
si pereor, hominum manibus periisse iuuabit.’
dixerat et genua amplexus genibusque uolutans
haerebat. qui sit fari, quo sanguine cretus,

hortamur, quae deinde agitet fortuna fateri.
ipse pater dextram Anchises haud multa moratus 610
dat iuueni atque animum praesenti pignore firmat.
ille haec deposita tandem formidine fatur:
‘sum patria ex Ithaca, comes infelicis Vlixi,
nomine Achaemenides, Troiam genitore Adamasto
paupere (mansissetque utinam fortuna!) profectus. 615
hic me, dum trepidi crudelia limina linquunt,
immemores socii uasto Cyclopis in antro
deseruere. domus sanie dapibusque cruentis,
intus opaca, ingens. ipse arduus, altaque pulsat
sidera (di talem terris auertite pestem!) 620
nec uisu facilis nec dictu adfabilis ulli;
uisceribus miserorum et sanguine uescitur atro.
uidi egomet duo de numero cum corpora nostro
presa manu magna medio resupinus in antro
frangeret ad saxum, sanieque aspersa natarent 625
limina; uidi atro cum membra fluentia tabo
manderet et tepidi tremarent sub dentibus artus —
haud impune quidem, nec talia passus Vlixes
oblitusue sui est Ithacus discrimine tanto.
nam simul expletus dapibus uinoque sepultus 630
ceruicem inflexam posuit, iacuitque per antrum
immensus saniem eructans et frusta cruento
per somnum commixta mero, nos magna precati
numina sortitique uices una undique circum
fundimur, et telo lumen terebramus acuto 635
ingens quod torua solum sub fronte latebat,
Argolici clipei aut Phoebeae lampadis instar,
et tandem laeti sociorum ulciscimur umbras.
sed fugite, o miseri, fugite atque ab litore funem
rumpite. 640
nam qualis quantusque cauo Polyphemus in antro
lanigeras claudit pecudes atque ubera pressat,
centum alii curua haec habitant ad litora uulgo
infandi Cyclopes et altis montibus errant.
tertia iam lunae se cornua lumine complent 645

cum uitam in siluis inter deserta ferarum
lustra domosque traho uastosque ab rupe Cyclopas
prospicio sonitumque pedum uocemque tremesco.
uictum infelicem, bacas lapidosaque corna,
dant rami, et uulsis pascunt radicibus herbae. 650
omnia conlustrans hanc primum ad litora classem
conspexi uenientem. huic me, quaecumque fuisset,
addixi: satis est gentem effugisse nefandam.
uos animam hanc potius quocumque absumite leto.'

Vix ea fatus erat summo cum monte uidemus 655
ipsum inter pecudes uasta se mole mouentem
pastorem Polyphemum et litora nota petentem,
monstrum horrendum, informe, ingens, cui lumen ademptum.
trunca manum pinus regit et uestigia firmat;
lanigerae comitantur oues; ea sola uoluptas 660
solamenque mali.
postquam altos tetigit fluctus et ad aequora uenit,
luminis effossi fluidum lauit inde cruorem
dentibus infrendens gemitu, graditurque per aequor
iam medium, necdum fluctus latera ardua tinxit. 665
nos procul inde fugam trepidi celerare recepto
supplice sic merito tacitique incidere funem,
uertimus et proni certantibus aequora remis.
sensit, et ad sonitum uocis uestigia torsit.
uerum ubi nulla datur dextra adfectare potestas 670
nec potis Ionios fluctus aequare sequendo,
clamorem immensum tollit, quo pontus et omnes
intremuere undae, penitusque exterrita tellus
Italiae curuisque immugiit Aetna cauernis.
at genus e siluis Cyclopum et montibus altis 675
excitum ruit ad portus et litora complent.
cernimus astantis nequiquam lumine toruo
Aetnaeos fratres caelo capita alta ferentis,
concilium horrendum: quales cum uertice celso
ariae quercus aut coniferae cyparissi 680
constiterunt, silua alta Iouis lucusue Dianae.

praecipitis metus acer agit quocumque rudentis
excutere et uentis intendere uela secundis.
contra iussa monent Heleni, Scyllamque Charybdinque
inter, utrimque uiam leti discrimine paruo, 685
ni teneam cursus: certum est dare lintea retro.
ecce autem Boreas angusta ab sede Pelori
missus adest: uiuo praeteruehor ostia saxo
Pantagiae Megarosque sinus Thapsumque iacentem.
taliam monstrabat relegens errata retrorsus 690
litora Achaemenides, comes infelicis Vlixi.

Sicanio praetenta sinu iacet insula contra
Plemyrion undosum; nomen dixere priores
Ortygiam. Alpheum fama est huc Elidis amnem
occultas egisse uias subter mare, qui nunc 695
ore, Arethusa, tuo Siculis confunditur undis.
iussi numina magna loci ueneramur, et inde
exsupero praepingue solum stagnantis Helori.
hinc altas cautes proiectaque saxa Pachyni
radimus, et fatis numquam concessa moueri 700
apparet Camerina procul campique Geloi,
immanisque Gela fluuii cognomine dicta.
arduus inde Acragas ostentat maxima longe
moenia, magnanimum quondam generator equorum;
teque datis linquo uentis, palmosa Selinus, 705
et uada dura lego saxis Lilybeia caecis.
hinc Drepani me portus et inlaetabilis ora
accipit. hic pelagi tot tempestatibus actus
heu, genitorem, omnis curae casusque leuamen,
amitto Anchisen. hic me, pater optime, fessum 710
deseris, heu, tantis nequiquam erepte periclis!
nec uates Helenus, cum multa horrenda moneret,
hos mihi praedixit luctus, non dira Celaeno.
hic labor extremus, longarum haec meta uiarum,
hinc me digressum uestris deus appulit oris. 715

Sic pater Aeneas intentis omnibus unus

fata renarrabat diuum cursusque docebat.
conticuit tandem factoque hic fine quieuit.

LIBER IV

At regina graui iamdudum saucia cura
uulnus alit uenis et caeco carpitur igni.
multa uiri uirtus animo multusque recursat
gentis honos; haerent infixi pectore uultus
uerbaque nec placidam membris dat cura quietem. 5
postera Phoebea lustrabat lampade terras
umentemque Aurora polo dimouerat umbram,
cum sic unanimam adloquitur male sana sororem:
‘Anna soror, quae me suspensam insomnia terrent!
quis nouus hic nostris successit sedibus hospes, 10
quem sese ore ferens, quam forti pectore et armis!
credo equidem, nec uana fides, genus esse deorum.
degeneres animos timor arguit. heu, quibus ille
iactatus fatis! quae bella exhausta canebat!
si mihi non animo fixum immotumque sederet 15
ne cui me uinclo uellem sociare iugali,
postquam primus amor deceptam morte fefellit;
si non pertaesum thalami taedaeque fuisset,
huic uni forsán potui succumbere culpae.
Anna (fatebor enim) miseri post fata Sychaei 20
coniugis et sparsos fraterna caede penatis
solus hic inflexit sensus animumque labantem
impulit. agnosco ueteris uestigia flammae.
sed mihi uel tellus optem prius ima dehiscat
uel pater omnipotens adigat me fulmine ad umbras, 25
pallentis umbras Erebo noctemque profundam,
ante, pudor, quam te uiolo aut tua iura resoluo.
ille meos, primus qui me sibi iunxit, amores
abstulit; ille habeat secum seruetque sepulcro.’
sic effata sinum lacrimis impleuit obortis. 30

Anna refert: ‘o luce magis dilecta sorori,
solane perpetua maerens carpere iuuenta
nec dulcis natos Veneris nec praemia noris?

id cinerem aut manis credis curare sepultos?
esto: aegram nulli quondam flexere mariti, 35
non Libyae, non ante Tyro; despectus Iarbas
ductoresque alii, quos Africa terra triumphis
diues alit: placitone etiam pugnabis amori?
nec uenit in mentem quorum consederis aruis?
hinc Gaetulae urbes, genus insuperabile bello, 40
et Numidae infreni cingunt et inhospita Syrtis;
hinc deserta siti regio lateque furentes
Barcaei. quid bella Tyro surgentia dicam
germanique minas?
dis equidem auspiciis reor et Iunone secunda 45
hunc cursum Iliacas uento tenuisse carinas.
quam tu urbem, soror, hanc cernes, quae surgere regna
coniugio tali! Teucrum comitantibus armis
Punica se quantis attollet gloria rebus!
tu modo posce deos ueniam, sacrisque litatis 50
indulge hospitio causasque innecte morandi,
dum pelago desaeuit hiems et aquosus Orion,
quassataeque rates, dum non tractabile caelum.'

His dictis impenso animum flammauit amore
spemque dedit dubiae menti soluitque pudorem. 55
principio delubra adeunt pacemque per aras
exquirunt; mactant lectas de more bidentis
legiferae Cereri Phoeboque patrique Lyaeo,
Iunoni ante omnis, cui uincla iugalia curae.
ipsa tenens dextra pateram pulcherrima Dido 60
candentis uaccae media inter cornua fundit,
aut ante ora deum pinguis spatatur ad aras,
instauratque diem donis, pecudumque reclusis
pectoribus inhians spirantia consulit exta.
heu, uatum ignarae mentes! quid uota furem, 65
quid delubra iuuant? est mollis flamma medullas
interea et tacitum uiuit sub pectore uulnus.
uritur infelix Dido totaque uagatur
urbe furens, qualis coniecta cerua sagitta,

quam procul incautam nemora inter Cresia fixit 70
pastor agens telis liquitque uolatile ferrum
nescius: illa fuga siluas saltusque peragrat
Dictaeos; haeret lateri letalis harundo.
nunc media Aenean secum per moenia ducit
Sidoniasque ostentat opes urbemque paratam, 75
incipit effari mediaque in uoce resistit;
nunc eadem labente die conuiuia quaerit,
Iliacosque iterum demens audire labores
exposcit pendetque iterum narrantis ab ore.
post ubi digressi, lumenque obscura uicissim 80
luna premit suadentque cadentia sidera somnos,
sola domo maeret uacua stratisque relictis
incubat. illum absens absentem auditque uidetque,
aut gremio Ascanium genitoris imagine capta
detinet, infandum si fallere possit amorem. 85
non coeptae adsurgunt turres, non arma iuuentus
exercet portusue aut propugnacula bello
tuta parant: pendent opera interrupta minaeque
murorum ingentes aequataque machina caelo.

Quam simul ac tali persensit peste teneri 90
cara Iouis coniunx nec famam obstare furori,
talibus adgreditur Venerem Saturnia dictis:
‘egregiam uero laudem et spolia ampla refertis
tuque puerque tuus (magnum et memorabile numen),
una dolo diuum si femina uicta duorum est. 95
nec me adeo fallit ueritam te moenia nostra
suspectas habuisse domos Karthaginis altae.
sed quis erit modus, aut quo nunc certamine tanto?
quin potius pacem aeternam pactosque hymenaeos
exercemus? habes tota quod mente petisti: 100
ardet amans Dido traxitque per ossa furorem.
communem hunc ergo populum paribusque regamus
auspiciis; liceat Phrygio seruire marito
dotalisque tuae Tyrios permittere dextrae.’

Olli (sensit enim simulata mente locutam, 105
quo regnum Italiae Libycas auerteret oras)
sic contra est ingressa Venus: 'quis talia demens
abnuat aut tecum malit contendere bello?
si modo quod memoras factum fortuna sequatur.
sed fatis incerta feror, si Iuppiter unam 110
esse uelit Tyriis urbem Troiaque profectis,
misceriue probet populos aut foedera iungi.
tu coniunx, tibi fas animum temptare precando.
perge, sequar.' tum sic excepit regia Iuno:
'mecum erit iste labor. nunc qua ratione quod instat 115
confieri possit, paucis (aduerte) docebo.
uenatum Aeneas unaque miserrima Dido
in nemus ire parant, ubi primos crastinus ortus
extulerit Titan radiisque retexerit orbem.
his ego nigram commixta grandine nimbum, 120
dum trepidant alae saltusque indagine cingunt,
desuper infundam et tonitru caelum omne ciebo.
diffugient comites et nocte tegentur opaca:
speluncam Dido dux et Troianus eandem
deuenient. adero et, tua si mihi certa uoluntas, 125
conubio iungam stabili propriamque dicabo.
hic hymenaeus erit.' non aduersata petenti
adnuat atque dolis risit Cytherea repertis.

Oceanum interea surgens Aurora reliquit.
it portis iubare exorto delecta iuuentus, 130
retia rara, plagae, lato uenabula ferro,
Massylique ruunt equites et odora canum uis.
reginam thalamo cunctantem ad limina primi
Poenorum exspectant, ostroque insignis et auro
stat sonipes ac frena ferox spumantia mandit. 135
tandem progreditur magna stipante caterua
Sidoniam picto chlamydem circumdata limbo;
cui pharetra ex auro, crines nodantur in aurum,
aurea purpuream subnectit fibula uestem.
nec non et Phrygii comites et laetus Iulus 140

incedunt. ipse ante alios pulcherrimus omnis
infert se socium Aeneas atque agmina iungit.
qualis ubi hibernam Lyciam Xanthique fluenta
deserit ac Delum maternam inuisit Apollo
instauratque choros, mixtique altaria circum 145
Cretesque Dryopesque fremunt pictique Agathyrsi;
ipse iugis Cynthi graditur mollique fluentem
fronde premit crinem fingens atque implicat auro,
tela sonant umeris: haud illo segnior ibat
Aeneas, tantum egregio decus enitet ore. 150
postquam altos uentum in montis atque inuia lustra,
ecce ferae saxi deiectae uertice caprae
decurrere iugis; alia de parte patentis
transmittunt cursu campos atque agmina cerui
puluerulenta fuga glomerant montisque relinquunt. 155
at puer Ascanius mediis in uallibus acri
gaudet equo iamque hos cursu, iam praeterit illos,
spumantemque dari pecora inter inertia uotis
optat aprum, aut fuluum descendere monte leonem.

Interea magno misceri murmure caelum 160
incipit, insequitur commixta grandine nimbus,
et Tyrii comites passim et Troiana iuuentus
Dardaniusque nepos Veneris diuersa per agros
tectata metu petiere; ruunt de montibus amnes.
speluncam Dido dux et Troianus eandem 165
deueniunt. prima et Tellus et pronuba Iuno
dant signum; fulsere ignes et conscius aether
conubiis summoque ulularunt uertice Nymphae.
ille dies primus leti primusque malorum
causa fuit; neque enim specie famaue mouetur 170
nec iam furtiuum Dido meditatur amorem:
coniugium uocat, hoc praetexit nomine culpam.

Extemplo Libyae magnas it Fama per urbes,
Fama, malum qua non aliud uelocius ullum:
mobilitate uiget uirisque acquirit eundo, 175

parua metu primo, mox sese attollit in auras
ingrediturque solo et caput inter nubila condit.
illam Terra parens ira inritata deorum
extremam, ut perhibent, Coeo Enceladoque sororem
progeniuit pedibus celerem et perniciousis alis, 180
monstrum horrendum, ingens, cui quot sunt corpore plumae,
tot uigiles oculi subter (mirabile dictu),
tot linguae, totidem ora sonant, tot subrigit auris.
nocte uolat caeli medio terraeque per umbram
stridens, nec dulci declinat lumina somno; 185
luce sedet custos aut summi culmine tecti
turribus aut altis, et magnas territat urbes,
tam ficti prauique tenax quam nuntia ueri.
haec tum multiplici populos sermone replebat
gaudens, et pariter facta atque infecta canebat: 190
uenisse Aenean Troiano sanguine cretum,
cui se pulchra uiro dignetur iungere Dido;
nunc hiemem inter se luxu, quam longa, fouere
regnum immemores turpique cupidine captos.
haec passim dea foeda uirum diffundit in ora. 195
protinus ad regem cursus detorquet Iarban
incenditque animum dictis atque aggerat iras.

Hic Hammone satus rapta Garamantide nympha
templa Ioui centum latis immania regnis,
centum aras posuit uigilemque sacrauerat ignem, 200
excubias diuum aeternas, pecudumque cruore
pingue solum et uariis florentia limina sertis.
isque amens animi et rumore accensus amaro
dicitur ante aras media inter numina diuum
multa Iouem manibus supplex orasse supinis: 205
'Iuppiter omnipotens, cui nunc Maurusia pictis
gens epulata toris Lenaeum libat honorem,
aspicis haec? an te, genitor, cum fulmina torques
nequiquam horremus, caecique in nubibus ignes
terrificant animos et inania murmura miscent? 210
femina, quae nostris errans in finibus urbem

exiguam pretio posuit, cui litus arandum
cuique loci leges dedimus, conubia nostra
reppulit ac dominum Aenean in regna recepit.
et nunc ille Paris cum semiuiro comitatu, 215
Maeonia mentum mitra crinemque madentem
subnexus, raptu potitur: nos munera templis
quippe tuis ferimus famamque fouemus inanem.'

Talibus orantem dictis arasque tenentem
audiit Omnipotens, oculosque ad moenia torsit 220
regia et oblitos famae melioris amantis.
tum sic Mercurium adloquitur ac talia mandat:
'uade age, nate, uoca Zephyros et labere pennis
Dardaniumque ducem, Tyria Karthagine qui nunc
exspectat fatisque datas non respicit urbes, 225
adloquere et celeris defer mea dicta per auras.
non illum nobis genetrix pulcherrima talem
promisit Graiumque ideo bis uindicat armis;
sed fore qui grauidam imperiis belloque frementem
Italiam regeret, genus alto a sanguine Teucri 230
proderet, ac totum sub leges mitteret orbem.
si nulla accendit tantarum gloria rerum
nec super ipse sua molitur laude laborem,
Ascanione pater Romanas inuidet arces?
quid struit? aut qua spe inimica in gente moratur 235
nec prolem Ausoniam et Lauinia respicit arua?
nauiget! haec summa est, hic nostri nuntius esto.'

Dixerat. ille patris magni parere parabat
imperio; et primum pedibus talaria nectit
aurea, quae sublimem alis siue aequora supra 240
seu terram rapido pariter cum flamine portant.
tum uirgam capit: hac animas ille euocat Orco
pallentis, alias sub Tartara tristia mittit,
dat somnos adimitque, et lumina morte resignat.
illa fretus agit uentos et turbida tranat 245
nubila. iamque uolans apicem et latera ardua cernit

Atlantis duri caelum qui uertice fulcit,
Atlantis, cinctum adsidue cui nubibus atris
piniferum caput et uento pulsatur et imbri,
nix umeros infusa tegit, tum flumina mento 250
praecipitant senis, et glacie riget horrida barba.
hic primum paribus nitens Cyllenius alis
constitit; hinc toto praeceps se corpore ad undas
misit aui similis, quae circum litora, circum
piscosos scopulos humilis uolat aequora iuxta. 255
haud aliter terras inter caelumque uolabat
litus harenosum ad Libyae, uentosque secabat
materno ueniens ab auo Cyllenia proles.
ut primum alatis tetigit magalia plantis,
Aenean fundantem arces ac tecta nouantem 260
conspicit. atque illi stellatus iaspide fulua
ensis erat Tyrioque ardebat murice laena
demissa ex umeris, diues quae munera Dido
fecerat, et tenui telas discreuerat auro.
continuo inuadit: ‘tu nunc Karthaginis altae 265
fundamenta locas pulchramque uxorius urbem
exstruis? heu, regni rerumque oblite tuarum!
ipse deum tibi me claro demittit Olympo
regnator, caelum et terras qui numine torquet,
ipse haec ferre iubet celeris mandata per auras: 270
quid struis? aut qua spe Libycis teris otia terris?
si te nulla mouet tantarum gloria rerum
[nec super ipse tua moliris laude laborem,] Ascanium surgentem et spes heredis Iuli
respice, cui regnum Italiae Romanaque tellus 275
debetur.’ tali Cyllenius ore locutus
mortalis uisus medio sermone reliquit
et procul in tenuem ex oculis euauit auram.
At uero Aeneas aspectu obmutuit amens,
arrectaeque horrore comae et uox faucibus haesit. 280
ardet abire fuga dulcisque relinquere terras,
attonitus tanto monitu imperioque deorum.
heu quid agat? quo nunc reginam ambire furentem

audeat adfatu? quae prima exordia sumat?
atque animum nunc huc celerem nunc diuidit illuc 285
in partisque rapit uarias perque omnia uersat.
haec alternanti potior sententia uisa est:
Mnesthea Sergestumque uocat fortemque Serestum,
classem aptent taciti sociosque ad litora cogant,
arma parent et quae rebus sit causa nouandis 290
dissimulent; sese interea, quando optima Dido
nesciat et tantos rumpi non speret amores,
temptaturum aditus et quae mollissima fandi
tempora, quis rebus dexter modus. ocius omnes
imperio laeti parent et iussa facessunt. 295

At regina dolos (quis fallere possit amantem?)
praesensit, motusque exceptit prima futuros
omnia tuta timens. eadem impia Fama furenti
detulit armari classem cursumque parari.
saeuit inops animi totamque incensa per urbem 300
bacchatur, qualis commotis excita sacris
Thyias, ubi audito stimulant trieterica Baccho
orgia nocturnusque uocat clamore Cithaeron.
tandem his Aenean compellat uocibus ultro:
'dissimulare etiam sperasti, perfide, tantum 305
posse nefas tacitusque mea decedere terra?
nec te noster amor nec te data dextera quondam
nec moritura tenet crudeli funere Dido?
quin etiam hiberno moliri sidere classem
et mediis properas Aquilonibus ire per altum, 310
crudelis? quid, si non arua aliena domosque
ignotas peteres, et Troia antiqua maneret,
Troia per undosum peteretur classibus aequor?
mene fugis? per ego has lacrimas dextramque tuam te (quando aliud mihi iam miserae nihil ipsa reliqui), 315
per conubia nostra, per inceptos hymenaeos,
si bene quid de te merui, fuit aut tibi quicquam
dulce meum, miserere domus labentis et istam,
oro, si quis adhuc precibus locus, exue mentem.

te propter Libycae gentes Nomadumque tyranni 320
odere, infensi Tyrii; te propter eundem
exstinctus pudor et, qua sola sidera adibam,
fama prior. cui me moribundam deseris hospes
(hoc solum nomen quoniam de coniuge restat)?
quid moror? an mea Pygmalion dum moenia frater 325
destruat aut captam ducat Gaetulus Iarbas?
saltem si qua mihi de te suscepta fuisset
ante fugam suboles, si quis mihi paruulus aula
luderet Aeneas, qui te tamen ore referret,
non equidem omnino capta ac deserta uiderer.’ 330

Dixerat. ille Iouis monitis immota tenebat
lumina et obnixus curam sub corde premebat.
tandem pauca refert: ‘ego te, quae plurima fando
enumerare uales, numquam, regina, negabo
promeritam, nec me meminisse pigebit Elissae 335
dum memor ipse mei, dum spiritus hos regit artus.
pro re pauca loquar. neque ego hanc abscondere furto
speraui (ne finge) fugam, nec coniugis umquam
praetendi taedas aut haec in foedera ueni.
me si fata meis paterentur ducere uitam 340
auspiciis et sponte mea componere curas,
urbem Troianam primum dulcisque meorum
reliquias colerem, Priami tecta alta manerent,
et recidiua manu posuissem Pergama uictis.
sed nunc Italiam magnam Gryneus Apollo, 345
Italiam Lyciae iussere capessere sortes;
hic amor, haec patria est. si te Karthaginis arces
Phoenissam Libycaeque aspectus detinet urbis,
quae tandem Ausonia Teucros considerare terra
inuidia est? et nos fas extera quaerere regna. 350
me patris Anchisae, quotiens umentibus umbris
nox operit terras, quotiens astra ignea surgunt,
admonet in somnis et turbida terret imago;
me puer Ascanius capitisque iniuria cari,
quem regno Hesperiae fraudo et fatalibus aruis. 355

nunc etiam interpres diuum Ioue missus ab ipso
(testor utrumque caput) celeris mandata per auras
detulit: ipse deum manifesto in lumine uidi
intransentem muros uocemque his auribus hausi.
desine meque tuis incendere teque querelis; 360
Italiam non sponte sequor.'

Talia dicentem iamdudum auersa tuetur
huc illuc uoluens oculos totumque pererrat
luminibus tacitis et sic accensa profatur:
'nec tibi diua parens generis nec Dardanus auctor, 365
perfide, sed duris genuit te cautibus horrens
Caucasus Hyrcanaeque admorunt ubera tigres.
nam quid dissimulo aut quae me ad maiora reseruo?
num fletu ingemuit nostro? num lumina flexit?
num lacrimas uictus dedit aut miseratus amantem est? 370
quae quibus anteferam? iam iam nec maxima Iuno
nec Saturnius haec oculis pater aspicit aequis.
nusquam tuta fides. eiectum litore, egentem
excepi et regni demens in parte locaui.
amissam classem, socios a morte reduxi 375
(heu furiis incensa feror!); nunc augur Apollo,
nunc Lyciae sortes, nunc et Ioue missus ab ipso
interpres diuum fert horrida iussa per auras.
scilicet is superis labor est, ea cura quietos
solicitat. neque te teneo neque dicta refello: 380
i, sequere Italiam uentis, pete regna per undas.
spero equidem mediis, si quid pia numina possunt,
supplicia hausurum scopulis et nomine Dido
saepe uocaturum. sequar atris ignibus absens
et, cum frigida mors anima seduxerit artus, 385
omnibus umbra locis adero. dabis, improbe, poenas.
audiam et haec Manis ueniet mihi fama sub imos.'
his medium dictis sermonem abruptum et auras
aegra fugit seque ex oculis auertit et aufert,
linquens multa metu cunctantem et multa parantem 390
dicere. suscipiunt famulae conlapsaque membra

marmoreo referunt thalamo stratisque reponunt.

At pius Aeneas, quamquam lenire dolentem
solando cupit et dictis auertere curas,
multa gemens magnoque animum labefactus amore 395
iussa tamen diuum exsequitur classemque reuisit.
tum uero Teucri incumbunt et litore celsas
deducunt toto nauis. natat uncta carina,
frondentisque ferunt remos et robora siluis
infabricata fugae studio. 400
migrantis cernas totaque ex urbe ruentis:
ac uelut ingentem formicae farris aceruum
cum populant hiemis memores tectoque reponunt,
it nigrum campis agmen praedamque per herbas
conuectant calle angusto; pars grandia trudunt 405
obnixae frumenta umeris, pars agmina cogunt
castigantque moras, opere omnis semita feruet.
quis tibi tum, Dido, cernenti talia sensus,
quosue dabas gemitus, cum litora feruere late
prospiceres arce ex summa, totumque uideres 410
misceri ante oculos tantis clamoribus aequor!
improbe Amor, quid non mortalia pectora cogis!
ire iterum in lacrimas, iterum temptare precando
cogitur et supplex animos summittere amanti,
ne quid inexpertum frustra moritura relinquat. 415

‘Anna, uides toto properari litore circum:
undique conuenere; uocat iam carbasus auras,
puppibus et laeti nautae imposuere coronas.
hunc ego si potui tantum sperare dolorem,
et perferre, soror, potero. miserae hoc tamen unum 420
exsequere, Anna, mihi; solam nam perfidus ille
te colere, arcanos etiam tibi credere sensus;
sola uiri mollis aditus et tempora noras.
i, soror, atque hostem supplex adfare superbum:
non ego cum Danais Troianam exscindere gentem 425
Aulide iuraui classemue ad Pergama misi,

nec patris Anchisae cinerem manisue reuelli:
cur mea dicta negat duras demittere in auris?
quo ruit? extremum hoc miserae det munus amanti:
exspectet facilemque fugam uentosque ferentis. 430
non iam coniugium antiquum, quod prodidit, oro,
nec pulchro ut Latio careat regnumque relinquat:
tempus inane peto, requiem spatiumque furori,
dum mea me uictam doceat fortuna dolere.
extremam hanc oro ueniam (miserere sororis), 435
quam mihi cum dederit cumulatam morte remittam.’

Talibus orabat, talisque miserrima fletus
fertque refertque soror. sed nullis ille mouetur
fletibus aut uoces ullas tractabilis audit;
fata obstant placidasque uiri deus obstruit auris. 440
ac uelut annoso ualidam cum robore quercum
Alpini Boreae nunc hinc nunc flatibus illinc
eruere inter se certant; it stridor, et altae
consternunt terram concusso stipite frondes;
ipsa haeret scopulis et quantum uertice ad auras 445
aetherias, tantum radice in Tartara tendit:
haud secus adsiduis hinc atque hinc uocibus heros
tunditur, et magno persentit pectore curas;
mens immota manet, lacrimae uoluuntur inanes.

Tum uero infelix fatis exterrita Dido 450
mortem orat; taedet caeli conuexa tueri.
quo magis inceptum peragat lucemque relinquat,
uidit, turicremis cum dona imponeret aris,
(horrendum dictu) latices nigrescere sacros
fusaque in obscenum se uertere uina cruorem; 455
hoc uisum nulli, non ipsi effata sorori.
praeterea fuit in tectis de marmore templum
coniugis antiqui, miro quod honore colebat,
uelleribus niueis et festa fronde reuinctum:
hinc exaudiri uoces et uerba uocantis 460
uisa uiri, nox cum terras obscura teneret,

solaque culminibus ferali carmine bubo
saepe queri et longas in fletum ducere uoces;
multaque praeterea uatum praedicta priorum
terribili monitu horrificant. agit ipse furem 465
in somnis feras Aeneas, semperque relinqui
sola sibi, semper longam incommitata uidetur
ire uiam et Tyrios deserta quaerere terra,
Eumenidum ueluti demens uidet agmina Pentheus
et solem geminum et duplices se ostendere Thebas, 470
aut Agamemnonius scaenis agitatus Orestes,
armatam facibus matrem et serpentibus atris
cum fugit ultricesque sedent in limine Dirae.

Ergo ubi concepit furias euicta dolore
decreuitque mori, tempus secum ipsa modumque 475
exigit, et maestam dictis adgressa sororem
consilium uultu tegit ac spem fronte serenat:
‘inueni, germana, uiam (gratare sorori)
quae mihi reddat eum uel eo me soluat amantem.
Oceani finem iuxta solemque cadentem 480
ultimus Aethiopum locus est, ubi maximus Atlas
axem umero torquet stellis ardentibus aptum:
hinc mihi Massylae gentis monstrata sacerdos,
Hesperidum templi custos, epulasque draconi
quae dabat et sacros seruabat in arbore ramos, 485
spargens umida mella soporiferumque papauer.
haec se carminibus promittit soluere mentes
quas uelit, ast aliis duras immittere curas,
sistere aquam fluuiis et uertere sidera retro,
nocturnosque mouet Manis: mugire uidebis 490
sub pedibus terram et descendere montibus ornos.
testor, cara, deos et te, germana, tuumque
dulce caput, magicas inuitam accingier artis.
tu secreta pyram tecto interiore sub auras
erige, et arma uiri thalamo quae fixa reliquit 495
impius exuuiasque omnis lectumque iugalem,
quo perii, super imponas: abolere nefandi

cuncta uiri monimenta iuuat monstratque sacerdos.⁷
haec effata silet, pallor simul occupat ora.
non tamen Anna nouis praetexere funera sacris 500
germanam credit, nec tantos mente furores
concepit aut grauiora timet quam morte Sychaei.
ergo iussa parat.

At regina, pyra penetrali in sede sub auras
erecta ingenti taedis atque ilice secta, 505
intenditque locum sertis et fronde coronat
funerea; super exuias ensemque relictum
effigiemque toro locat haud ignara futuri.
stant arae circum et crinis effusa sacerdos
ter centum tonat ore deos, Erebumque Chaosque 510
tergeminamque Hecaten, tria uirginis ora Dianae.
sparserat et latices simulatos fontis Auerni,
falcibus et messae ad lunam quaeruntur aenis
pubentes herbae nigri cum lacte ueneni;
quaeritur et nascentis equi de fronte reuulsus 515
et matri praereptus amor.
ipsa mola manibusque piis altaria iuxta
unum exuta pedem uinclis, in ueste recincta,
testatur moritura deos et conscia fati
sidera; tum, si quod non aequo foedere amantis 520
curae numen habet iustumque memorque, precatur.

Nox erat et placidum carpebant fessa soporem
corpora per terras, siluaeque et saeua quierant
aequora, cum medio uoluuntur sidera lapsu,
cum tacet omnis ager, pecudes pictaeque uolucres, 525
quaeque lacus late liquidos quaeque aspera dumis
rura tenent, somno positae sub nocte silenti.
at non infelix animi Phoenissa, neque umquam 529
soluitur in somnos oculisue aut pectore noctem
accipit: ingeminant curae rursusque resurgens
saeuit amor magnoque irarum fluctuat aestu.
sic adeo insistit secumque ita corde uolutat:

‘en, quid ago? rursusne procos inrisa priores
experiar, Nomadumque petam conubia supplex, 535
quos ego sim totiens iam dedignata maritos?
Iliacas igitur classis atque ultima Teucrum
iussa sequar? quiane auxilio iuuat ante leuatos
et bene apud memores ueteris stat gratia facti?
quis me autem, fac uelle, sinet ratibusue superbis 540
inuisam accipiet? nescis heu, perdita, necdum
Laomedontaeae sentis periuria gentis?
quid tum? sola fuga nautas comitabor ouantis?
an Tyriis omnique manu stipata meorum
inferar et, quos Sidonia uix urbe reuelli, 545
rursus agam pelago et uentis dare uela iubebo?
quin morere ut merita es, ferroque auerte dolorem.
tu lacrimis euicta meis, tu prima furemtem
his, germana, malis oneras atque obicis hosti.
non licuit thalami expertem sine crimine uitam 550
degere more ferae, talis nec tangere curas;
non seruata fides cineri promissa Sychaeo.’

Tantos illa suo rumpebat pectore questus:
Aeneas celsa in puppi iam certus eundi
carpebat somnos rebus iam rite paratis. 555
huic se forma dei uultu redeuntis eodem
obtulit in somnis rursusque ita uisa monere est,
omnia Mercurio similis, uocemque coloremque
et crinis flauos et membra decora iuuenta:
‘nate dea, potes hoc sub casu ducere somnos, 560
nec quae te circum stent deinde pericula cernis,
demens, nec Zephyros audis spirare secundos?
illa dolos dirumque nefas in pectore uersat
certa mori, uariosque irarum concitat aestus.
non fugis hinc praeceps, dum praecipitare potestas? 565
iam mare turbari trabibus saeuasque uidebis
conlucere faces, iam feruere litora flammis,
si te his attigerit terris Aurora morantem.
heia age, rumpe moras. uarium et mutabile semper

femina.' sic fatus nocti se immiscuit atrae. 570

Tum uero Aeneas subitis exterritus umbris
corripit e somno corpus sociosque fatigat
praecipitis: 'uigilate, uiri, et considite transtris;
soluite uela citi. deus aethere missus ab alto
festinare fugam tortosque incidere funis 575
ecce iterum instimulat. sequimur te, sancte deorum,
quisquis es, imperioque iterum paremus ouantes.
adsis o placidusque iuues et sidera caelo
dextra feras.' dixit uaginaque eripit ensem
fulmineum strictoque ferit retinacula ferro. 580
idem omnis simul ardor habet, rapiuntque ruuntque;
litora deseruere, latet sub classibus aequor,
adnixa torquent spumas et caerula uerrunt.

Et iam prima nouo spargebat lumine terras
Tithoni croceum linquens Aurora cubile. 585
regina e speculis ut primam albescere lucem
uidit et aequatis classem procedere uelis,
litoraue et uacuos sensit sine remige portus,
terque quaterque manu pectus percussa decorum
flauentisque abscissa comas 'pro Iuppiter! ibit 590
hic,' ait 'et nostris inluserit aduena regnis?
non arma expedient totaque ex urbe sequentur,
diripientque rates alii naualibus? ite,
ferte citi flammas, date tela, impellite remos!
quid loquor? aut ubi sum? quae mentem insania mutat? 595
infelix Dido, nunc te facta impia tangunt?
tum decuit, cum sceptras dabas. en dextra fidesque,
quem secum patrios aiunt portare penatis,
quem subiisse umeris confectum aetate parentem!
non potui abreptum diuellere corpus et undis 600
spargere? non socios, non ipsum absumere ferro
Ascanium patriisque epulandum ponere mensis?
uerum anceps pugnae fuerat fortuna. fuisset:
quem metui moritura? faces in castra tulissem

implessemque foros flammis natumque patremque 605
cum genere exstinxem, memet super ipsa dedissem.
Sol, qui terrarum flammis opera omnia lustras,
tuque harum interpres curarum et conscia Iuno,
nocturnisque Hecate triuiis ululata per urbes
et Dirae ultrices et di morientis Elissae, 610
accipite haec, meritumque malis aduertite numen
et nostras audite preces. si tangere portus
infandum caput ac terris adnare necesse est,
et sic fata Iouis poscunt, hic terminus haeret,
at bello audacis populi uexatus et armis, 615
finibus extorris, complexu auulsus Iuli
auxilium imploret uideatque indigna suorum
funera; nec, cum se sub leges pacis iniquae
tradiderit, regno aut optata luce fruatur,
sed cadat ante diem mediaque inhumatus harena. 620
haec precor, hanc uocem extremam cum sanguine fundo.
tum uos, o Tyrii, stirpem et genus omne futurum
exercete odiis, cinerique haec mittite nostro
munera. nullus amor populis nec foedera sunt.
exoriare aliquis nostris ex ossibus ultor 625
qui face Dardanios ferroque sequare colonos,
nunc, olim, quocumque dabunt se tempore uires.
litora litoribus contraria, fluctibus undas
imprecor, arma armis: pugnent ipsique nepotesque.'

Haec ait, et partis animum uersabat in omnis, 630
inuisam quaerens quam primum abrumpere lucem.
tum breuiter Barcen nutricem adfata Sychaei,
namque suam patria antiqua cinis ater habebat:
'Annam, cara mihi nutrix, huc siste sororem:
dic corpus properet fluuiali spargere lympha, 635
et pecudes secum et monstrata piacula ducat.
sic ueniat, tuque ipsa pia tege tempora uitta.
sacra Ioui Stygio, quae rite incepta paraui,
perficere est animus finemque imponere curis
Dardaniique rogum capitis permittere flammae.' 640

sic ait. illa gradum studio celebrabat anili.
at trepida et coeptis immanibus effera Dido
sanguineam uoluens aciem, maculisque trementis
interfusa genas et pallida morte futura,
interiora domus inrumpit limina et altos 645
conscendit furibunda rogos ensemque recludit
Dardanium, non hos quaesitum munus in usus.
hic, postquam Iliacas uestis notumque cubile
conspexit, paulum lacrimis et mente morata
incubuitque toro dixitque nouissima uerba: 650
‘dulces exuuias, dum fata deusque sinebat,
accipite hanc animam meque his exsoluite curis.
uixi et quem dederat cursum Fortuna peregi,
et nunc magna mei sub terras ibit imago.
urbem praeclaram statui, mea moenia uidi, 655
ulta uirum poenas inimico a fratre recepi,
felix, heu nimium felix, si litora tantum
numquam Dardaniae tetigissent nostra carinae.’
dixit, et os impressa toro ‘moriemur inultae,
sed moriamur’ ait. ‘sic, sic iuuat ire sub umbras. 660
hauriat hunc oculis ignem crudelis ab alto
Dardanus, et nostrae secum ferat omina mortis.’
dixerat, atque illam media inter talia ferro
conlapsam aspiciunt comites, ensemque cruore
spumantem sparsasque manus. it clamor ad alta 665
atria: concussam bacchatur Fama per urbem.
lamentis gemituque et femineo ululatu
tectata fremunt, resonat magnis plangoribus aether,
non aliter quam si immissis ruat hostibus omnis
Karthago aut antiqua Tyros, flammaeque furentes 670
culmina perque hominum uoluantur perque deorum.
audiit exanimis trepidoque exterrita cursu
unguibus ora soror foedans et pectora pugnis
per medios ruit, ac morientem nomine clamat:
‘hoc illud, germana, fuit? me fraude petebas? 675
hoc rogos iste mihi, hoc ignes araeque parabant?
quid primum deserta querar? comitemne sororem

spreuisti moriens? eadem me ad fata uocasses,
idem ambas ferro dolor atque eadem hora tulisset.
his etiam struxi manibus patriosque uocaui 680
uoce deos, sic te ut posita, crudelis, abessem?
exstincti te meque, soror, populumque patresque
Sidonios urbemque tuam. date, uulnera lymphis
abluam et, extremus si quis super halitus errat,
ore legam.' sic fata gradus euaserat altos, 685
semianimemque sinu germanam amplexa fouebat
cum gemitu atque atros siccabat ueste cruores.
illa grauis oculos conata attollere rursus
deficit; infixum stridit sub pectore uulnus.
ter sese attollens cubitoque adnixa leuauit, 690
ter reuoluta toro est oculisque errantibus alto
quaesiuit caelo lucem ingemuitque reperta.

Tum Iuno omnipotens longum miserata dolorem
difficilisque obitus Irim demisit Olympo
quae luctantem animam nexosque resolveret artus. 695
nam quia nec fato merita nec morte peribat,
sed misera ante diem subitoque accensa furore,
nondum illi flauum Proserpina uertice crinem
abstulerat Stygioque caput damnauerat Orco.
ergo Iris croceis per caelum roscida pennis 700
mille trahens uarios aduerso sole colores
deuolat et supra caput astitit. 'hunc ego Diti
sacrum iussa fero teque isto corpore soluo':
sic ait et dextra crinem secat, omnis et una
dilapsus calor atque in uentos uita recessit.

LIBER V

Interea medium Aeneas iam classe tenebat
certus iter fluctusque atros Aquilone secabat
moenia respiciens, quae iam infelicis Elissae
conlucent flammis. quae tantum accenderit ignem
causa latet; duri magno sed amore dolores 5
polluto, notumque furens quid femina possit, triste per augurium Teucrorum pectora ducunt.
ut pelagus tenere rates nec iam amplius ulla
occurrit tellus, maria undique et undique caelum,
olli caeruleus supra caput astitit imber 10
noctem hiememque ferens et inhorruit unda tenebris.
ipse gubernator puppi Palinurus ab alta:
‘heu quianam tanti cinxerunt aethera nimbi?
quidue, pater Neptune, paras?’ sic deinde locutus
colligere arma iubet ualidisque incumbere remis, 15
obliquatque sinus in uentum ac talia fatur:
‘magnanime Aenea, non, si mihi Iuppiter auctor
spondeat, hoc sperem Italiam contingere caelo.
mutati transuersa fremunt et uespere ab atro
consurgunt uenti, atque in nubem cogitur aer. 20
nec nos obniti contra nec tendere tantum
sufficimus. superat quoniam Fortuna, sequamur,
quoque uocat uertamus iter. nec litora longe
fida reor fraterna Erycis portusque Sicanos,
si modo rite memor seruata remetior astra.’ 25
tum pius Aeneas: ‘equidem sic poscere uentos
iamdudum et frustra cerno te tendere contra.
flecte uiam uelis. an sit mihi gratior ulla,
quoque magis fessas optem dimittere nauis,
quam quae Dardanium tellus mihi seruat Acesten 30
et patris Anchisae gremio complectitur ossa?’
haec ubi dicta, petunt portus et uela secundi
intendunt Zephyri; fertur cita gurgite classis,
et tandem laeti notae aduertuntur harenae.

At procul ex celso miratus uertice montis 35
aduentum sociasque rates occurrit Acestes,
horridus in iaculis et pelle Libystidis ursae,
Troia Criniso conceptum flumine mater
quem genuit. ueterum non immemor ille parentum
gratatur reduces et gaza laetus agresti 40
excipit, ac fessos opibus solatur amicis.

Postera cum primo stellas Oriente fugarat
clara dies, socios in coetum litore ab omni
aduocat Aeneas tumulique ex aggere fatur:
‘Dardanidae magni, genus alto a sanguine diuum, 45
annuus exactis completur mensibus orbis,
ex quo reliquias diuinique ossa parentis
concidimus terra maestasque sacrauius aras;
iamque dies, nisi fallor, adest, quem semper acerbum,
semper honoratum (sic di uoluistis) habebo. 50
hunc ego Gaetulis agerem si Syrtibus exsul,
Argolicoue mari deprensus et urbe Mycenae,
annua uota tamen sollemnisque ordine pompas
exsequeretur strueremque suis altaria donis.
nunc ultro ad cineres ipsius et ossa parentis 55
haud equidem sine mente, reor, sine numine diuum
adsumus et portus delati intramus amicos.
ergo agite et laetum cuncti celebremus honorem:
poscamus uentos, atque haec me sacra quotannis
urbe uelit posita templis sibi ferre dicatis. 60
bina bouum uobis Troia generatus Acestes
dat numero capita in nauis; adhibete penatis
et patrios epulis et quos colit hospes Acestes.
praeterea, si nona diem mortalibus alnum
Aurora extulerit radiisque retexerit orbem, 65
prima citae Teucris ponam certamina classis;
quique pedum cursu ualet, et qui uiribus audax
aut iaculo incedit melior leuibusque sagittis,
seu crudo fidit pugnam committere caestu,
cuncti adsint meritaque exspectent praemia palmae. 70

ore fauete omnes et cingite tempora ramis.'

Sic fatus uelat materna tempora myrto.
hoc Helymus facit, hoc aeuī maturus Acestes,
hoc puer Ascanius, sequitur quos cetera pubes.
ille e concilio multis cum milibus ibat 75
ad tumulum magna medius comitante caterua.
hic duo rite mero libans carchesia Baccho
fundit humi, duo lacte nouo, duo sanguine sacro,
purpureosque iacit flores ac talia fatur:
'salue, sancte parens, iterum; saluete, recepti 80
nequiquam cineres animaeque umbraeque paternae.
non licuit finis Italos fataliaque arua
nec tecum Ausonium, quicumque est, quaerere Thybrim.'
dixerat haec, adytis cum lubricus anguis ab imis
septem ingens gyros, septena uolumina traxit 85
amplexus placide tumulum lapsusque per aras,
caeruleae cui terga notae maculosus et auro
squamam incendebat fulgor, ceu nubibus arcus
mille iacit uarios aduerso sole colores.
obstupuit uisu Aeneas. ille agmine longo 90
tandem inter pateras et leuia pocula serpens
libauitque dapes rursusque innoxius imo
successit tumulo et depasta altaria liquit.
hoc magis inceptos genitori instaurat honores,
incertus geniumne loci famulumne parentis 95
esse putet; caedit binas de more bidentis
totque sues, totidem nigrantis terga iuuencos,
uinaque fundebat pateris animamque uocabat
Anchisae magni manisque Acheronte remissos.
nec non et socii, quae cuique est copia, laeti 100
dona ferunt, onerant aras mactantque iuuencos;
ordine aena locant alii fusique per herbam
subiciunt ueribus prunas et uiscera torrent.

Exspectata dies aderat nonamque serena
Auroram Phaethontis equi iam luce uehebant, 105

famaque finitimos et clari nomen Acestae
excierat; laeto complerant litora coetu
uisuri Aeneadas, pars et certare parati.
munera principio ante oculos circoque locantur
in medio, sacri tripodes uiridesque coronae 110
et palmae pretium uictoribus, armaque et ostro
perfusae uestes, argenti aurique talenta;
et tuba commissos medio canit aggere ludos.

Prima pares ineunt grauibus certamina remis
quattuor ex omni delectae classe carinae. 115
uelocem Mnestheus agit acri remige Pristim,
mox Italus Mnestheus, genus a quo nomine Memmi,
ingentemque Gyas ingenti mole Chimaeram,
urbis opus, triplici pubes quam Dardana uersu
impellunt, terno consurgunt ordine remi; 120
Sergestusque, domus tenet a quo Sergia nomen,
Centauro inuehitur magna, Scyllaque Cloanthus
caerulea, genus unde tibi, Romane Cluenti.

Est procul in pelago saxum spumantia contra
litora, quod tumidis summersum tunditur olim 125
fluctibus, hiberni condunt ubi sidera Cauri;
tranquillo silet immotaque attollitur unda
campus et apricis statio gratissima mergis.
hic uiridem Aeneas frondenti ex ilice metam
constituit signum nautis pater, unde reuerti 130
scirent et longos ubi circumflectere cursus.
tum loca sorte legunt ipsique in puppibus auro
ductores longe effulgent ostroque decori;
cetera populea uelatur fronde iuuentus
nudatosque umeros oleo perfusa nitescit. 135
considunt transtris, intentaque bracchia remis;
intenti exspectant signum, exsultantiaque haurit
corda pauor pulsans laudumque arrecta cupido.
inde ubi clara dedit sonitum tuba, finibus omnes,
haud mora, prosiluire suis; ferit aethera clamor 140

nauticus, adductis spumant freta uersa lacertis.
infindunt pariter sulcos, totumque dehiscit
conuulsum remis rostrisque tridentibus aequor.
non tam praecipites biugo certamine campum
corripuere ruuntque effusi carcere currus, 145
nec sic immissis aurigae undantia lora
concussere iugis pronique in uerbera pendent.
tum plausu fremituque uirum studiisque fauentum
consonat omne nemus, uocemque inclusa uolulant
litora, pulsati colles clamore resultant. 150

Effugit ante alios primisque elabitur undis
turbam inter fremitumque Gyas; quem deinde Cloanthus
consequitur, melior remis, sed pondere pinus
tarda tenet. post hos aequo discrimine Pristis
Centaurusque locum tendunt superare priorem; 155
et nunc Pristis habet, nunc uictam praeterit ingens
Centaurus, nunc una ambae iunctisque feruntur
frontibus et longa sulcant uada salsa carina.
iamque propinquabant scopulo metamque tenebant,
cum princeps medioque Gyas in gurgite uictor 160
rectorem nauis compellat uoce Menoeten:
'quo tantum mihi dexter abis? huc derige cursum;
litus ama et laeua stringat sine palmula cautes;
altum alii teneant.' dixit; sed caeca Menoetes
saxa timens proram pelagi detorquet ad undas. 165
'quo diuersus abis?' iterum 'pete saxa, Menoete!'
cum clamore Gyas reuocabat, et ecce Cloanthum
respicit instantem tergo et propiora tenentem.
ille inter nauemque Gyaee scopulosque sonantis
radit iter laeuum interior subitoque priorem 170
praeterit et metis tenet aequora tuta relictis.
tum uero exarsit iuueni dolor ossibus ingens
nec lacrimis caruere genae, segnemque Menoeten
oblitus decorisque sui sociumque salutis
in mare praecipitem puppi deturbat ab alta; 175
ipse gubernaclo rector subit, ipse magister

hortaturque uiros clauumque ad litora torquet.
at grauis ut fundo uix tandem redditus imo est
iam senior madidaque fluens in ueste Menoetes
summa petit scopuli siccaque in rupe resedit. 180
illum et labentem Teucris et risere natantem
et salsos rident reuoluentem pectore fluctus.

Hic laeta extremis spes est accensa duobus,
Sergesto Mnestheique, Gyan superare morantem.
Sergestus capit ante locum scopuloque propinquat, 185
nec tota tamen ille prior praeceunte carina;
parte prior, partim rostro premit aemula Pristis.
at media socios incedens naue per ipsos
hortatur Mnestheus: 'nunc, nunc insurgite remis,
Hectorei socii, Troiae quos sorte suprema 190
delegi comites; nunc illas promite uiris,
nunc animos, quibus in Gaetulis Syrtibus usi
Ionioque mari Maleaeque sequacibus undis.
non iam prima peto Mnestheus neque uincere certo
(quamquam o! — sed superent quibus hoc, Neptune, dedisti); 195
extremos pudeat rediisse: hoc uincite, ciues,
et prohibete nefas.' olli certamine summo
procumbunt: uastis tremit ictibus aerea puppis
subtrahiturque solum, tum creber anhelitus artus
aridaque ora quatit, sudor fluit undique riuus. 200
attulit ipse uiris optatum casus honorem:
namque furens animi dum proram ad saxa suburget
interior spatiumque subit Sergestus iniquo,
infelix saxis in procurrentibus haesit.
concussae cautes et acuto in murice remi 205
obnixi crepuere inlisaque prora pependit.
consurgunt nautae et magno clamore morantur
ferratasque trudes et acuta cuspide contos
expediunt fractosque legunt in gurgite remos.
at laetus Mnestheus successuque acrior ipso 210
agmine remorum celeri uentisque uocatis
prona petit maria et pelago decurrit aperto.

qualis spelunca subito commota columba,
cui domus et dulces latebroso in pumice nidi,
fertur in arua uolans plausumque exterrita pennis 215
dat tecto ingentem, mox aere lapsa quieto
radit iter liquidum celeris neque commouet alas:
sic Mnesteus, sic ipsa fuga secat ultima Pristis
aequora, sic illam fert impetus ipse uolantem.
et primum in scopulo luctantem deserit alto 220
Sergestum breuibisque uadis frustraue uocantem
auxilia et fractis discentem currere remis.
inde Gyan ipsamque ingenti mole Chimaeram
consequitur; cedit, quoniam spoliata magistro est.
solus iamque ipso superest in fine Cloanthus, 225
quem petit et summis adnexus uiribus urget.

Tum uero ingeminat clamor cunctique sequentem
instigant studiis, resonatque fragoribus aether.
hi proprium decus et partum indignantur honorem
ni teneant, uitamque uolunt pro laude pacisci; 230
hos successus alit: possunt, quia posse uidentur.
et fors aequatis cepissent praemia rostris,
ni palmas ponto tendens utrasque Cloanthus
fudisset preces diuosque in uota uocasset:
'di, quibus imperium est pelagi, quorum aequora curro, 235
uobis laetus ego hoc candentem in litore taurum
constituam ante aras uoti reus, extaque salsos
proiciam in fluctus et uina liquentia fundam.'
dixit, eumque imis sub fluctibus audiit omnis
Nereidum Phorcique chorus Panopeaque uirgo, 240
et pater ipse manu magna Portunus euntem
impulit: illa Noto citius uolucrique sagitta
ad terram fugit et portu se condidit alto.
tum satus Anchisa cunctis ex more uocatis
uictorem magna praeconis uoce Cloanthum 245
declarat uiridique aduelat tempora lauro,
muneraque in nauis ternos optare iuuenkos
uinaque et argenti magnum dat ferre talentum.

ipsis praecipuos ductoribus addit honores:
uictori chlamydem auratam, quam plurima circum 250
purpura maeandro duplici Meliboea cucurrit,
intextusque puer frondosa regius Ida
uelocis iaculo ceruos cursuque fatigat
acer, anhelanti similis, quem praepes ab Ida
sublimem pedibus rapuit Iouis armiger uncis; 255
longaeui palmas nequiquam ad sidera tendunt
custodes, saeuitque canum latratus in auras.
at qui deinde locum tenuit uirtute secundum,
leuibz huic hamis consertam auroque trilicem
loricam, quam Demoleo detraxerat ipse 260
uictor apud rapidum Simoenta sub Ilio alto,
donat habere, uiro decus et tutamen in armis.
uix illam famuli Phegeus Sagarisque ferebant
multiplicem conixi umeris; indutus at olim
Demoleos cursu palantis Troas agebat. 265
tertia dona facit geminos ex aere lebetas
cymbiaque argento perfecta atque aspera signis.
iamque adeo donati omnes opibusque superbi
puniceis ibant euincti tempora taenis,
cum saeuo e scopulo multa uix arte reuulsus 270
amissis remis atque ordine debilis uno
inrisam sine honore ratem Sergestus agebat.
qualis saepe uiae deprensus in aggere serpens,
aerea quem obliquum rota transiit aut grauis ictu
seminecem liquit saxo lacerumque uiator; 275
nequiquam longos fugiens dat corpore tortus
parte ferox ardensque oculis et sibila colla arduus attollens; pars uulnere clauda retentat
nexantem nodis seque in sua membra plicantem:
tali remigio nauis se tarda mouebat; 280
uela facit tamen et uelis subit ostia plenis.
Sergestum Aeneas promisso munere donat
seruatam ob nauem laetus sociosque reductos.
olli serua datur operum haud ignara Mineruae,
Cressa genus, Pholoe, geminique sub ubere nati. 285

Hoc pius Aeneas misso certamine tendit
gramineum in campum, quem collibus undique curuis
cingebant siluae, mediaque in ualle theatri
circus erat; quo se multis cum milibus heros
consessu medium tulit exstructoque resedit. 290
hic, qui forte uelint rapido contendere cursu,
inuitat pretiis animos, et praemia ponit.
undique conueniunt Teucri mixtique Sicani,
Nisus et Euryalus primi,
Euryalus forma insignis uiridique iuuenta, 295
Nisus amore pio pueri; quos deinde secutus
regius egregia Priami de stirpe Diores;
hunc Salius simul et Patron, quorum alter Acarnan,
alter ab Arcadio Tegeaeae sanguine gentis;
tum duo Trinacrii iuuenes, Helymus Panopesque 300
adsueti siluis, comites senioris Acestae;
multi praeterea, quos fama obscura recondit.
Aeneas quibus in mediis sic deinde locutus:
‘accipite haec animis laetasque aduertite mentes.
nemo ex hoc numero mihi non donatus abibit. 305
Cnosia bina dabo leuato lucida ferro
spicula caelatamque argento ferre bipennem;
omnibus hic erit unus honos. tres praemia primi
accipient flauaque caput nectentur oliua.
primus equum phaleris insignem uictor habeto; 310
alter Amazoniam pharetram plenamque sagittis
Threiciis, lato quam circum amplectitur auro
balteus et tereti subnectit fibula gemma;
tertius Argolica hac galea contentus abito.’

Haec ubi dicta, locum capiunt signoque repente 315
corripiunt spatia audito limenque relinquunt,
effusi nimbo similes. simul ultima signant,
primus abit longeque ante omnia corpora Nisus
emicat et uentis et fulminis ocior alis;
proximus huic, longo sed proximus interuallo, 320
insequitur Salius; spatio post deinde relicto

tertius Euryalus;
Euryalumque Helymus sequitur; quo deinde sub ipso
ecce uolat calcemque terit iam calce Diores
incumbens umero, spatia et si plura supersint 325
transeat elapsus prior ambiguumque relinquat.
iamque fere spatio extremo fessique sub ipsam
finem aduentabant, leui cum sanguine Nisus
labitur infelix, caesis ut forte iuuentis
fusus humum uiridisque super madefecerat herbas. 330
hic iuuenis iam uictor ouans uestigia presso
haud tenuit titubata solo, sed pronus in ipso
concidit immundoque fimo sacroque cruore.
non tamen Euryali, non ille oblitus amorum:
nam sese opposuit Salio per lubrica surgens; 335
ille autem spissa iacuit reuolutus harena,
emicat Euryalus et munere uictor amici
prima tenet, plausuque uolat fremituque secundo.
post Helymus subit et nunc tertia palma Diores.
hic totum caueae consessum ingentis et ora 340
prima patrum magnis Salius clamoribus implet,
ereptumque dolo reddi sibi poscit honorem.
tutatur fauor Euryalum lacrimaeque decorae,
gratior et pulchro ueniens in corpore uirtus.
adiuuat et magna proclamat uoce Diores, 345
qui subiit palmae frustra ad praemia uenit
ultima, si primi Salio reddentur honores.
tum pater Aeneas 'uestra' inquit 'munera uobis
certa manent, pueri et palmam mouet ordine nemo;
me liceat casus miserari insontis amici.' 350
sic fatus tergum Gaetuli immane leonis
dat Salio uillis onerosum atque unguibus aureis.
hic Nisus 'si tanta' inquit 'sunt praemia uictis,
et te lapsorum miseret, quae munera Niso
digna dabis, primam merui qui laude coronam 355
ni me, quae Salium, fortuna inimica tulisset?'
et simul his dictis faciem ostentabat et udo
turpia membra fimo. risit pater optimus olli

et clipeum efferri iussit, Didymaonis artes, Neptuni sacro Danaïs de poste refixum. 360
hoc iuuenem egregium praestanti munere donat.

Post, ubi confecti cursus et dona peregit,
‘nunc, si cui uirtus animusque in pectore praesens,
adsit et euinctis attollat bracchia palmis’:
sic ait, et geminum pugnae proponit honorem, 365
uictori uelatum auro uittisque iuuenicum,
ensem atque insignem galeam solacia uicto.
nec mora; continuo uastis cum uiribus effert
ora Daes magnoque uirum se murmure tollit,
solus qui Paridem solitus contendere contra, 370
idemque ad tumulum quo maximus occubat Hector
uictorem Buten immani corpore, qui se
Bebrycia ueniens Amyci de gente ferebat,
perculit et fulua moribundum extendit harena.
talis prima Daes caput altum in proelia tollit, 375
ostenditque umeros latos alternaque iactat
bracchia protendens et uerberat ictibus auras.
quaeritur huic alius; nec quisquam ex agmine tanto
audet adire uirum manibusque inducere caestus.
ergo alacris cunctosque putans excedere palma 380
Aeneae stetit ante pedes, nec plura moratus
tum laeua taurum cornu tenet atque ita fatur:
‘nate dea, si nemo audet se credere pugnae,
quae finis standi? quo me decet usque teneri?
ducere dona iube.’ cuncti simul ore fremebant 385
Dardanidae reddique uiro promissa iuebant.

Hic grauis Entellum dictis castigat Acestes,
proximus ut uiridante toro consederat herbae:
‘Entelle, heroum quondam fortissime frustra,
tantane tam patiens nullo certamine tolli 390
dona sines? ubi nunc nobis deus ille, magister
nequiquam memoratus, Eryx? ubi fama per omnem
Trinacriam et spolia illa tuis pendencia tectis?’

ille sub haec: 'non laudis amor nec gloria cessit
pulsa metu; sed enim gelidus tardante senecta 395
sanguis hebet, frigentque effetae in corpore uires.
si mihi quae quondam fuerat quaque improbus iste
exultat fidens, si nunc foret illa iuuentas,
haud equidem pretio inductus pulchroque iuuenco
uenissem, nec dona moror.' sic deinde locutus 400
in medium geminos immani pondere caestus
proiecit, quibus acer Eryx in proelia suetus
ferre manum duroque intendere bracchia tergo.
obstipuerunt animi: tantorum ingentia septem
terga bouum plumbo insuto ferroque rigeant. 405
ante omnis stupet ipse Dares longeque recusat,
magnanimusque Anchisiades et pondus et ipsa
huc illuc uinculorum immensa uolumina uersat.
tum senior talis referebat pectore uoces:
'quid, si quis caestus ipsius et Herculis arma 410
uidisset tristemque hoc ipso in litore pugnam?
haec germanus Eryx quondam tuus arma gerebat
(sanguine cernis adhuc sparsoque infecta cerebro),
his magnum Alciden contra stetit, his ego suetus,
dum melior uiris sanguis dabat, aemula necdum 415
temporibus geminis caneant sparsa senectus.
sed si nostra Dares haec Troius arma recusat
idque pio sedet Aeneae, probat auctor Acestes,
aequemus pugnas. Erycis tibi terga remitto (solue metus), et tu Troianos exue caestus.' 420
haec fatus duplicem ex umeris reiecit amictum
et magnos membrorum artus, magna ossa lacertosque
exiit atque ingens media consistit harena.
tum satus Anchisa caestus pater extulit aequos
et paribus palmas amborum innexuit armis. 425
constitit in digitos extemplo arrectus uterque
bracchiaque ad superas interritus extulit auras.
abduxere retro longe capita ardua ab ictu
immiscentque manus manibus pugnamque lacessunt, ille pedum melior motu fretusque iuuenta, 430

hic membris et mole ualens; sed tarda trementi
genua labant, uastos quatit aeger anhelitus artus.
multa uiri nequiquam inter se uulnera iactant,
multa cauo lateri ingeminant et pectore uastos
dant sonitus, erratque auris et tempora circum 435
crebra manus, duro crepitant sub uulnere malae.
stat grauis Entellus nisuque immotus eodem
corpore tela modo atque oculis uigilantibus exit.
ille, uelut celsam oppugnat qui molibus urbem
aut montana sedet circum castella sub armis, 440
nunc hos, nunc illos aditus, omnemque pererrat
arte locum et uariis adsultibus inritus urget.
ostendit dextram insurgens Entellus et alte
extulit, ille ictum uenientem a uertice uelox
praeuidit celerique elapsus corpore cessit; 445
Entellus uiris in uentum effudit et ultro
ipse grauis grauiterque ad terram pondere uasto
concidit, ut quondam caua concidit aut Erymantho
aut Ida in magna radicibus eruta pinus.
consurgunt studiis Teucris et Trinacria pubes; 450
it clamor caelo primusque accurrit Acestes
aequaeuumque ab humo miserans attollit amicum.
at non tardatus casu neque territus heros
acrior ad pugnam redit ac uim suscitatur ira;
tum pudor incendit uiris et conscia uirtus, 455
praecipitemque Dares ardens agit aequore toto
nunc dextra ingeminans ictus, nunc ille sinistra.
nec mora nec requies: quam multa grandine nimbi
culminibus crepitant, sic densis ictibus heros
creber utraque manu pulsatur uersatur Dareta. 460

Tum pater Aeneas procedere longius iras
et saeuire animis Entellum haud passus acerbis,
sed finem imposuit pugnae fessumque Dareta
eripuit mulcens dictis ac talia fatur:
'infelix, quae tanta animum dementia cepit? 465
non uiris alias conuersaque numina sentis?

cede deo.' dixitque et proelia uoce diremit.
ast illum fidi aequales genua aegra trahentem
iactantemque utroque caput crassumque cruorem
ore eiectantem mixtosque in sanguine dentes 470
ducunt ad nauis; galeamque ensemque uocati
accipiunt, palmam Entello taurumque relinquunt.
hic uictor superans animis tauroque superbus
'nate dea, uosque haec' inquit 'cognoscite, Teucri,
et mihi quae fuerint iuuenali in corpore uires 475
et qua seruetis reuocatum a morte Dareta.'
dixit, et aduersi contra stetit ora iuueni
qui donum astat pugnae, durosque reducta
librauit dextra media inter cornua caestus
arduus, effractoque inlisit in ossa cerebro: 480
sternitur exanimisque tremens procumbit humi bos.
ille super talis effundit pectore uoces:
'hanc tibi, Eryx, meliorem animam pro morte Daretis
persoluo; hic uictor caestus artemque repono.'

Protinus Aeneas celeri certare sagitta 485
inuitat qui forte uelint et praemia dicit,
ingentique manu malum de naue Seresti
erigit et uolucrum traiecto in fune columbam,
quo tendant ferrum, malo suspendit ab alto.
conuenere uiri deiectamque aerea sortem 490
accepit galea, et primus clamore secundo
Hyrtacidae ante omnis exit locus Hippocoontis;
quem modo nauali Mnestheus certamine uictor
consequitur, uiridi Mnestheus euinctus oliua.
tertius Eurytion, tuus, o clarissime, frater, 495
Pandare, qui quondam iussus confundere foedus
in medios telum torsisti primus Achiuos.
extremus galeaque ima subsedit Acestes,
ausus et ipse manu iuuenum temptare laborem.
tum ualidis flexos incuruant uiribus arcus 500
pro se quisque uiri et depromunt tela pharetris,
primaque per caelum neruo stridente sagitta

Hyrtaeidae iuuenis uolucris diuerberat auras,
et uenit aduersique infigitur arbore mali.
intremuit malus micuitque exterrita pennis 505
ales, et ingenti sonuerunt omnia plausu.
post acer Mnestheus adducto constitit arcu
alta petens, pariterque oculos telumque tetendit.
ast ipsam miserandus auem contingere ferro
non ualuit; nodos et uincula linea rupit 510
quis innexa pedem malo pendebat ab alto;
illa Notos atque atra uolans in nubila fugit.
tum rapidus, iamdudum arcu contenta parato
tela tenens, fratrem Eurytion in uota uocauit,
iam uacuo laetam caelo speculatus et alis 515
plaudentem nigra figit sub nube columbam.
decidit exanimis uitamque reliquit in astris
aetheriis fixamque refert delapsa sagittam.
Amissa solus palma superabat Acestes,
qui tamen aerias telum contendit in auras 520
ostentans artemque pater arcumque sonantem.
hic oculis subitum obicitur magnoque futurum
augurio monstrum; docuit post exitus ingens
seraque terrifici cecinerunt omina uates.
namque uolans liquidis in nubibus arsit harundo 525
signauitque uiam flammis tenuisque recessit
consumpta in uentos, caelo ceu saepe refixa
transcurren crinemque uolantia sidera ducunt.
attonitis haesere animis superosque precati
Trinacrii Teucrique uiri, nec maximus omen 530
abnuat Aeneas, sed laetum amplexus Acesten
muneribus cumulat magnis ac talia fatur:
'sume, pater, nam te uoluit rex magnus Olympi
talibus auspiciis exsortem ducere honores.
ipsius Anchisae longaeui hoc munus habebis, 535
cratera impressum signis, quem Thracius olim
Anchisae genitori in magno munere Cisseus
ferre sui dederat monimentum et pignus amoris.'
sic fatus cingit uiridanti tempora lauro

et primum ante omnis uictorem appellat Acesten. 540
nec bonus Eurytion praelato inuidit honori,
quamuis solus auem caelo deiecit ab alto.
proximus ingreditur donis qui uincula rupit,
extremus uolucris qui fixit harundine malum.

At pater Aeneas nondum certamine misso 545
custodem ad sese comitemque impubis Iuli
Epytiden uocat, et fidam sic fatur ad aurem:
‘uade age et Ascanio, si iam puerile paratum
agmen habet secum cursusque instruxit equorum,
ducat auo turmas et sese ostendat in armis 550
dic’ ait. ipse omnem longo decedere circo
infusum populum et campos iubet esse patentis.
incedunt pueri pariterque ante ora parentum
frenatis lucent in equis, quos omnis euntis
Trinacriae mirata fremit Troiaeque iuuentus. 555
omnibus in morem tonsa coma pressa corona;
cornea bina ferunt praefixa hastilia ferro,
pars leuis umero pharetras; it pectore summo
flexilis obtorti per collum circulus auri.
tres equitum numero turmae ternique uagantur 560
ductores; pueri bis seni quemque secuti
agmine partito fulgent paribusque magistris.
una acies iuuenum, ducit quam paruus ouantem
nomen aui referens Priamus, tua clara, Polite,
progenies, auctura Italos; quem Thracius albis 565
portat equus bicolor maculis, uestigia primi
alba pedis frontemque ostentans arduus albam.
alter Atys, genus unde Atii duxere Latini,
paruus Atys pueroque puer dilectus Iulo.
extremus formaque ante omnis pulcher Iulus 570
Sidonio est inuectus equo, quem candida Dido
esse sui dederat monimentum et pignus amoris.
cetera Trinacriis pubes senioris Acestae
fertur equis.
excipiunt plausu pauidos gaudentque tuentes 575

Dardanidae, ueterumque agnoscunt ora parentum.
postquam omnem laeti consessum oculosque suorum
lustrauere in equis, signum clamore paratis
Epytides longe dedit insonuitque flagello.
olli discurrere pares atque agmina terni 580
diductis soluere choris, rursusque uocati
conuertere uias infestaque tela tulere.
inde alios ineunt cursus aliosque recursus
aduersi spatiis, alternosque orbibus orbis
impediunt pugnaeque cient simulacra sub armis; 585
et nunc terga fuga nudant, nunc spicula uertunt
infensi, facta pariter nunc pace feruntur.
ut quondam Creta fertur Labyrinthus in alta
parietibus textum caecis iter ancipitemque
mille uiis habuisse dolum, qua signa sequendi 590
frangeret indeprensus et inremeabilis error;
haud alio Teucrum nati uestigia cursu
impediunt texuntque fugas et proelia ludo,
delphinum similes qui per maria umida nando
Carpathium Libycumque secant. 595
hunc morem cursus atque haec certamina primus
Ascanius, Longam muris cum cingeret Albam,
rettulit et priscos docuit celebrare Latinos,
quo puer ipse modo, secum quo Troia pubes;
Albani docuere suos; hinc maxima porro 600
accepit Roma et patrium seruauit honorem;
Troiaque nunc pueri, Troianum dicitur agmen.
hac celebrata tenus sancto certamina patri.

Hinc primum Fortuna fidem mutata nouauit.
dum uariis tumulo referunt sollemnia ludis, 605
Irim de caelo misit Saturnia Iuno
Iliacam ad classem uentosque aspirat eunti,
multa mouens necdum antiquum saturata dolorem.
illa uiam celerans per mille coloribus arcum
nulli uisa cito decurrit tramite uirgo. 610
conspicit ingentem concursum et litora lustrat

desertosque uidet portus classemque relictam.
at procul in sola secretae Troades acta
amissum Anchisen flebant, cunctaeque profundum
pontum aspectabant flentes. heu tot uada fessis 615
et tantum superesse maris, uox omnibus una;
urbem orant, taedet pelagi perferre laborem.
ergo inter medias sese haud ignara nocendi
conicit et faciemque deae uestemque reponit;
fit Beroe, Tmarii coniunx longaeua Dorycli, 620
cui genus et quondam nomen natiue fuissent,
ac sic Dardanidum mediam se matribus infert.
‘o miserae, quas non manus’ inquit ‘Achaica bello
traxerit ad letum patriae sub moenibus! o gens
infelix, cui te exitio Fortuna reseruat? 625
septima post Troiae excidium iam uertitur aestas,
cum freta, cum terras omnis, tot inhospita saxa
sideraque emensae ferimur, dum per mare magnum
Italiam sequimur fugientem et uoluimur undis.
hic Erycis fines fraterni atque hospes Acestes: 630
quis prohibet muros iacere et dare ciuibus urbem?
o patria et rapti nequiquam ex hoste penates,
nullane iam Troiae dicentur moenia? nusquam
Hectoreos amnis, Xanthum et Simoenta, uidebo?
quin agite et mecum infaustas exurite puppis. 635
nam mihi Cassandrae per somnum uatis imago
ardentis dare uisa faces: “hic quaerite Troiam;
hic domus est” inquit “uobis.” iam tempus agi res,
nec tantis mora prodigiis. en quattuor arae
Neptuno; deus ipse faces animumque ministrat.’ 640
haec memorans prima infensum ui corripit ignem
sublataque procul dextra conixa coruscat
et iacit. arrectae mentes stupefactaque corda
Iliadum. hic una e multis, quae maxima natu,
Pyrgo, tot Priami natorum regia nutrix: 645
‘non Beroe uobis, non haec Rhoeteia, matres,
est Dorycli coniunx; diuini signa decoris
ardentisque notate oculos, qui spiritus illi,

qui uultus uocisque sonus uel gressus eunti.
ipsa egomet dudum Beroen digressa reliqui 650
aegram, indignantem tali quod sola careret
munere nec meritos Anchisae inferret honores.’
haec effata.
at matres primo ancipites oculisque malignis
ambiguae spectare rates miserum inter amorem 655
praesentis terrae fatisque uocantia regna,
cum dea se paribus per caelum sustulit alis
ingentemque fuga secuit sub nubibus arcum.
tum uero attonitae monstis actaeque furore
conclamant, rapiuntque focus penetralibus ignem, 660
pars spoliant aras, frondem ac uirgulta facesque
conciunt. furit immissis Volcanus habenis
transtra per et remos et pictas abiete puppis.
Nuntius Anchisae ad tumulum cuneosque theatri
incensas perfert nauis Eumelus, et ipsi 665
respiciunt atram in nimbo uolitare fauillam.
primus et Ascanius, cursus ut laetus equestris
ducebat, sic acer equo turbata petiuit
castra, nec exanimis possunt retinere magistri.
‘quis furor iste nouus? quo nunc, quo tenditis’ inquit 670
‘heu miserae ciues? non hostem inimicaque castra
Argium, uestras spes uritis. en, ego uester
Ascanius!’ — galeam ante pedes proiecit inanem,
qua ludo indutus belli simulacra ciebat.
accelerat simul Aeneas, simul agmina Teucrum. 675
ast illae diuersa metu per litora passim
diffugiunt, siluasque et sicubi concaua furtim
saxa petunt; piget incepti lucisque, suosque
mutatae agnoscunt excussa pectore Iuno est.

Sed non idcirco flamma atque incendia uiris 680
indomitas posuere; udo sub robore uiuit
stuppa uomens tardum fumum, lentusque carinas
est uapor et toto descendit corpore pestis,
nec uires heroum infusaque flumina prosunt.

tum pius Aeneas umeris abscindere uestem 685
auxilioque uocare deos et tendere palmas:
‘Iuppiter omnipotens, si nondum exosus ad unum
Troianos, si quid pietas antiqua labores
respicit humanos, da flammam euadere classi
nunc, pater, et tenuis Teucrum res eripe leto. 690
uel tu, quod superest, infesto fulmine morti,
si mereor, demitte tuaque hic obrue dextra.’
uix haec ediderat cum effusis imbribus atra
tempestas sine more furit tonitruque tremescunt
ardua terrarum et campi; ruit aethere toto 695
turbidus imber aqua densisque nigerrimus Austris,
implenturque super puppes, semusta madescunt
robora, restinctus donec uapor omnis et omnes
quattuor amissis seruatae a peste carinae.

At pater Aeneas casu concussus acerbo 700
nunc huc ingentis, nunc illuc pectore curas
mutabat uersans, Siculisne resideret aruis
oblitus fatorum, Italasne capesseret oras.
tum senior Nautes, unum Tritonia Pallas
quem docuit multaque insignem reddidit arte — 705
haec responsa dabat, uel quae portenderet ira
magna deum uel quae fatorum posceret ordo;
isque his Aenean solatus uocibus inquit:
‘nate dea, quo fata trahunt retrahuntque sequamur;
quidquid erit, superanda omnis fortuna ferendo est. 710
est tibi Dardanius diuinae stirpis Acestes:
hunc cape consiliis socium et coniunge uolentem,
huic trade amissis superant qui nauibus et quos
pertaesum magni incepti rerumque tuarum est.
longaeuosque senes ac fessas aequore matres 715
et quidquid tecum inualidum metuensque pericli est
delige, et his habeant terris sine moenia fessi;
urbem appellabunt permisso nomine Acestam.’

Talibus incensus dictis senioris amici

tum uero in curas animo diducitur omnis; 720
et Nox atra polum bigis subuecta tenebat.
uisa dehinc caelo facies delapsa parentis
Anchisae subito talis effundere uoces:
‘nate, mihi uita quondam, dum uita manebat,
care magis, nate Iliacis exercite fati, 725
imperio Iouis huc uenio, qui classibus ignem
depulit, et caelo tandem miseratus ab alto est.
consiliis pare quae nunc pulcherrima Nautes
dat senior; lectos iuuenes, fortissima corda,
defer in Italiam. gens dura atque aspera cultu 730
debellanda tibi Latio est. Ditis tamen ante
infernus accede domos et Auerna per alta
congressus pete, nate, meos. non me impia namque
Tartara habent, tristes umbrae, sed amoena piorum
concilia Elysiumque colo. huc casta Sibylla 735
nigrarum multo pecudum te sanguine ducet.
tum genus omne tuum et quae dentur moenia disces.
iamque uale; torquet medios Nox umida cursus
et me saeuus equis Oriens adflauit anhelis.’
dixerat et tenuis fugit ceu fumus in auras. 740
Aeneas ‘quo deinde ruis? quo proripis?’ inquit,
‘quem fugis? aut quis te nostris complexibus arcet?’
haec memorans cinerem et sopitos suscitatur ignis, Pergameumque Larem et canae penetralia Vestae
farre pio et plena supplex ueneratur acerra. 745

Extemplo socios primumque accersit Acesten
et Iouis imperium et cari praecepta parentis
edocet et quae nunc animo sententia constet.
haud mora consiliis, nec iussa recusat Acestes:
transcribunt urbi matres populumque uolentem 750
deponunt, animos nil magnae laudis egentis.
ipsi transtra nouant flammisque ambesa reponunt
robora nauigiis, aptant remosque rudentisque,
exigui numero, sed bello uiuida uirtus.
interea Aeneas urbem designat aratro 755

sortiturque domos; hoc Ilium et haec loca Troiam
esse iubet. gaudet regno Troianus Acestes
indicitque forum et patribus dat iura uocatis.
tum uicina astris Erycino in uertice sedes
fundatur Veneri Idaliae, tumuloque sacerdos 760
ac lucus late sacer additus Anchiseo.

Iamque dies epulata nouem gens omnis, et aris
factus honos: placidi strauerunt aequora uenti
creber et aspirans rursus uocat Auster in altum.
exoritur procurua ingens per litora fletus; 765
complexi inter se noctemque diemque morantur.
ipsae iam matres, ipsi, quibus aspera quondam
uisa maris facies et non tolerabile numen,
ire uolunt omnemque fugae perferre laborem.
quos bonus Aeneas dictis solatur amicis 770
et consanguineo lacrimans commendat Acestae.
tris Eryci uitulos et Tempestatibus agnam
caedere deinde iubet soluique ex ordine funem.
ipse caput tonsae foliis euinctus oliuae
stans procul in prora pateram tenet, extaque salsos 775
proicit in fluctus ac uina liquentia fundit.
certatim socii feriunt mare et aequora uerrunt; 778
prosequitur surgens a puppi uentus euntis. 777

At Venus interea Neptunum exercita curis 779
adloquitur talisque effundit pectore questus:
‘Iunonis grauis ira neque exsaturabile pectus
cogunt me, Neptune, preces descendere in omnis;
quam nec longa dies pietas nec mitigat ulla,
nec Iouis imperio fatisque infracta quiescit.
non media de gente Phrygum exedissee nefandis 785
urbem odiis satis est nec poenam traxe per omnem
reliquias Troiae: cineres atque ossa peremptae
insequitur. causas tanti sciat illa furoris.
ipse mihi nuper Libycis tu testis in undis
quam molem subito excierit: maria omnia caelo 790

miscuit Aeoliis nequiquam freta procellis,
in regnis hoc ausa tuis.
per scelus ecce etiam Troianis matribus actis
exussit foede puppis et classe subegit
amissa socios ignotae linquere terrae. 795
quod superest, oro, liceat dare tuta per undas
uela tibi, liceat Laurentem attingere Thybrim,
si concessa peto, si dant ea moenia Parcae.’
tum Saturnius haec domitor maris edidit alti:
‘fas omne est, Cytherea, meis te fidere regnis, 800
unde genus ducis. merui quoque; saepe furores
compressi et rabiem tantam caelique marisque.
nec minor in terris, Xanthum Simoentaque testor,
Aeneae mihi cura tui. cum Troia Achilles
exanimata sequens impingeret agmina muris, 805
milia multa daret leto, gementque repleti
amnes nec reperire uiam atque euoluere posset
in mare se Xanthus, Pelidae tunc ego forti
congressum Aenean nec dis nec uiribus aequis
nube caua rapui, cuperem cum uertere ab imo 810
structa meis manibus periurae moenia Troiae.
nunc quoque mens eadem perstat mihi; pelle timores.
tutus, quos optas, portus accedet Auerni.
unus erit tantum amissum quem gurgite quaeres;
unum pro multis dabitur caput.’ 815
his ubi laeta deae permulsit pectora dictis,
iungit equos auro genitor, spumantiaque addit
frena feris manibusque omnis effundit habenas.
caeruleo per summa leuis uolat aequora curru;
subsidunt undae tumidumque sub axe tonanti 820
sternitur aequor aquis, fugiunt uasto aethere nimbi.
tum uariae comitum facies, immania cete,
et senior Glauci chorus Inousque Palaemon
Tritonesque citi Phorcique exercitus omnis;
laeua tenet Thetis et Melite Panopeaque uirgo, 825
Nisae Spioque Thaliaque Cymodoceque.

Hic patris Aeneae suspensam blanda uicissim
 gaudia pertemptant mentem; iubet ocus omnis
 attolli malos, intendi bracchia uelis.
 una omnes fecere pedem pariterque sinistros, 830
 nunc dextros soluere sinus; una ardua torquent
 cornua detorquentque; ferunt sua flamina classem.
 princeps ante omnis densum Palinurus agebat
 agmen; ad hunc alii cursum contendere iussi.
 iamque fere mediam caeli Nox umida metam 835
 contigerat, placida laxabant membra quiete
 sub remis fusi per dura sedilia nautae,
 cum leuis aetheriis delapsus Somnus ab astris
 aera dimouit tenebrosum et dispulit umbras,
 te, Palinure, petens, tibi somnia tristia portans 840
 insonti; puppique deus consedit in alta
 Phorbanti similis funditque has ore loquelas:
 'Iaside Palinure, ferunt ipsa aequora classem,
 aequatae spirant aerae, datur hora quieti.
 pone caput fessosque oculos furare labori. 845
 ipse ego paulisper pro te tua munera inibo.'
 cui uix attollens Palinurus lumina fatur:
 'mene salis placidi uultum fluctusque quietos
 ignorare iubes? mene huic confidere monstro?
 Aenean credam (quid enim?) fallacibus auris 850
 et caeli totiens deceptus fraude sereni?'
 talia dicta dabat, clauumque adfixus et haerens
 nusquam amittebat oculosque sub astra tenebat.
 ecce deus ramum Lethaeo rore madentem
 uique soporatum Stygia super utraque quassat 855
 tempora, cunctantique natantia lumina soluit.
 uix primos inopina quies laxauerat artus,
 et super incumbens cum puppis parte reuulsa
 cumque gubernaculo liquidas proiecit in undas
 praecipitem ac socios nequiquam saepe uocantem; 860
 ipse uolans tenuis se sustulit ales ad auras.
 currit iter tutum non setius aequare classis
 promissisque patris Neptuni interrta fertur.

iamque adeo scopulos Sirenum aduecta subibat,
difficilis quondam multorumque ossibus albos 865
(tum rauca adsiduo longe sale saxa sonabant),
cum pater amisso fluitantem errare magistro
sensit, et ipse ratem nocturnis rexit in undis
multa gemens casuque animum concussus amici:
'o nimium caelo et pelago confise sereno, 870
nudus in ignota, Palinure, iacebis harena.'

LIBER VI

Sic fatur lacrimans, classique immittit habenas
et tandem Euboicis Cumarum adlabitur oris.
obuertunt pelago proras; tum dente tenaci
ancora fundabat nauis et litora curuae
praetexunt puppes. iuuenum manus emicat ardens 5
litus in Hesperium; quaerit pars semina flammae
abstrusa in uenis silicis, pars densa ferarum
tecta rapit siluas inuentaue flumina monstrat.
at pius Aeneas arces quibus altus Apollo
praesidet horrendaeque procul secreta Sibyllae, 10
antrum immane, petit, magnam cui mentem animumque
Delius inspirat uates aperitque futura.
iam subeunt Triuiæ lucos atque aurea tecta.

Daedalus, ut fama est, fugiens Minoia regna
praepetibus pennis ausus se credere caelo 15
insuetum per iter gelidas enauit ad Arctos,
Chalcidicaque leuis tandem super astitit arce.
redditus his primum terris tibi, Phoebe, sacrauit
remigium alarum posuitque immania templa.
in foribus letum Androgeo; tum pendere poenas 20
Cecropidae iussi (miserum!) septena quotannis
corpora natorum; stat ductis sortibus urna.
contra elata mari respondet Cnosia tellus:
hic crudelis amor tauri suppostaque furto
Pasiphae mixtumque genus prolesque biformis 25
Minotaurus inest, Veneris monimenta nefandae,
hic labor ille domus et inextricabilis error;
magnum reginae sed enim miseratus amorem
Daedalus ipse dolos tecti ambagesque resoluit,
caeca regens filo uestigia. tu quoque magnam 30
partem opere in tanto, sineret dolor, Icare, haberes.
bis conatus erat casus effingere in auro,
bis patriae cecidere manus. quin protinus omnia

perlegerent oculis, ni iam praemissus Achates
adforet atque una Phoebi Triuiaequae sacerdos, 35
Deiphobe Glauci, fatur quae talia regi:
‘non hoc ista sibi tempus spectacula poscit;
nunc grege de intacto septem mactare iuuenos
praestiterit, totidem lectas ex more bidentis.’
talibus adfata Aenean (nec sacra morantur 40
iussa uiri) Teucros uocat alta in templa sacerdos.

Excisum Euboicae latus ingens rupis in antrum,
quo lati ducunt aditus centum, ostia centum,
unde ruunt totidem uoces, responsa Sibyllae.
uentum erat ad limen, cum uirgo ‘poscere fata 45
tempus’ ait; ‘deus ecce deus!’ cui talia fanti
ante fores subito non uultus, non color unus,
non comptae mansere comae; sed pectus anhelum,
et rabie fera corda tument, maiorque uideri
nec mortale sonans, adflata est numine quando 50
iam propiore dei. ‘cessas in uota precesque,
Tros’ ait ‘Aenea? cessas? neque enim ante dehiscent
attonitae magna ora domus.’ et talia fata
conticuit. gelidus Teucris per dura cucurrit
ossa tremor, funditque preces rex pectore ab imo: 55
‘Phoebe, grauis Troiae semper miserate labores,
Dardana qui Paridis derexti tela manusque
corpus in Aeacidæ, magnas obeuntia terras
tot maria intraui duce te penitusque repostas
Massylum gentis praetentaque Syrtibus arua: 60
iam tandem Italiae fugientis prendimus oras.
hac Troiana tenuis fuerit fortuna secuta;
uos quoque Pergameae iam fas est parcere genti,
dique deaeque omnes, quibus obstitit Ilium et ingens
gloria Dardaniae. tuque, o sanctissima uates, 65
praescia uenturi, da (non indebita posco
regna meis fati) Latio considerare Teucros
errantisque deos agitataque numina Troiae.
tum Phoebo et Triuiae solido de marmore templum

instituiam festosque dies de nomine Phoebi. 70
te quoque magna manent regnis penetralia nostris:
hic ego namque tuas sortis arcanaque fata
dicta meae genti ponam, lectosque sacrabo,
alma, uiros. foliis tantum ne carmina manda,
ne turbata uolent rapidis ludibria uentis; 75
ipsa canas oro.’ finem dedit ore loquendi.

At Phoebi nondum patiens immanis in antro
bacchatur uates, magnum si pectore possit
excussisse deum; tanto magis ille fatigat
os rabidum, fera corda domans, fingitque premendo. 80
ostia iamque domus patuere ingentia centum
sponte sua uatisque ferunt responsa per auras:
‘o tandem magnis pelagi defuncte periclis
(sed terrae grauiora manent), in regna Lauini
Dardanidae uenient (mitte hanc de pectore curam), 85
sed non et uenisse uolent. bella, horrida bella,
et Thybrim multo spumantem sanguine cerno.
non Simois tibi nec Xanthus nec Dorica castra
defuerint; alius Latio iam partus Achilles,
natus et ipse dea; nec Teucris addita Iuno 90
usquam aberit, cum tu supplex in rebus egenis
quas gentis Italum aut quas non oraueris urbes!
causa mali tanti coniunx iterum hospita Teucris
externique iterum thalami.
tu ne cede malis, sed contra audentior ito, 95
qua tua te Fortuna sinet. uia prima salutis
(quod minime reris) Graia pandetur ab urbe.’

Talibus ex adyto dictis Cumaea Sibylla
horrendas canit ambages antroque remugit,
obscuris uera inuoluens: ea frena furenti 100
concutit et stimulos sub pectore uertit Apollo.
ut primum cessit furor et rabida ora quierunt,
incipit Aeneas heros: ‘non ulla laborum,
o uirgo, noua mi facies inopinaue surgit;

omnia praecepi atque animo mecum ante peregi. 105
unum oro: quando hic inferni ianua regis
dicitur et tenebrosa palus Acheronte refuso,
ire ad conspectum cari genitoris et ora
contingat; doceas iter et sacra ostia pandas.
illum ego per flammas et mille sequentia tela 110
eripui his umeris medioque ex hoste recepi;
ille meum comitatus iter maria omnia mecum
atque omnis pelagique minas caelique ferebat,
inualidus, uiris ultra sortemque senectae.
quin, ut te supplex peterem et tua limina adirem, 115
idem orans mandata dabat. gnatique patrisque,
alma, precor, miserere (potes namque omnia, nec te nequiquam lucis Hecate praefecit Auernis),
si potuit manis accersere coniugis Orpheus
Threicia fretus cithara fidibusque canoris, 120
si fratrem Pollux alterna morte redemit
itque reditque uiam totiens. quid Thesea, magnum
quid memorem Alciden? et mi genus ab Ioue summo.'

Talibus orabat dictis arasque tenebat,
cum sic orsa loqui uates: 'sate sanguine diuum, 125
Tros Anchisiade, facilis descensus Auerno:
noctes atque dies patet atri ianua Ditis;
sed reuocare gradum superasque euadere ad auras,
hoc opus, hic labor est. pauci, quos aequus amauit
Iuppiter aut ardens euexit ad aethera uirtus, 130
dis geniti potuere. tenent media omnia siluae,
Cocytusque sinu labens circumuenit atro.
quod si tantus amor menti, si tanta cupido est
bis Stygios innare lacus, bis nigra uidere
Tartara, et insano iuuat indulgere labori, 135
accipe quae peragenda prius. latet arbore opaca
aureus et foliis et lento uimine ramus,
Iunoni infernae dictus sacer; hunc tegit omnis
lucus et obscuris claudunt conuallibus umbrae.
sed non ante datur telluris operta subire 140

auricomos quam quis decerpserit arbore fetus.
hoc sibi pulchra suum ferri Proserpina munus
instituit. primo auulso non deficit alter
aureus, et simili frondescit uirga metallo.
ergo alte uestiga oculis et rite repertum 145
carpe manu; namque ipse uolens facilisque sequetur,
si te fata uocant; aliter non uiribus ullis
uincere nec duro poteris conuellere ferro.
praeterea iacet exanimum tibi corpus amici (heu nescis) totamque incestat funere classem, 150
dum consulta petis nostroque in limine pendes.
sedibus hunc refer ante suis et conde sepulcro.
duc nigras pecudes; ea prima piacula sunt.
sic demum lucos Stygis et regna inuia uiuis
aspicies.' dixit, pressoque obmutuit ore. 155

Aeneas maesto defixus lumina uultu
ingreditur linquens antrum, caecosque uolutat
euentus animo secum. cui fidus Achates
it comes et paribus curis uestigia figit.
multa inter sese uario sermone serebant, 160
quem socium exanimum uates, quod corpus humanum
diceret. atque illi Misenum in litore sicco,
ut uenere, uident indigna morte preemptum,
Misenum Aeoliden, quo non praestantior alter
aere ciere uiros Martemque accendere cantu. 165
Hectoris hic magni fuerat comes, Hectora circum
et lituo pugnans insignis obibat et hasta.
postquam illum uita uictor spoliauit Achilles,
Dardanio Aeneae sese fortissimus heros
addiderat socium, non inferiora secutus. 170
sed tum, forte caua dum personat aequora concha,
demens, et cantu uocat in certamina diuos,
aemulus exceptum Triton, si credere dignum est,
inter saxa uirum spumosa immerserat unda.
ergo omnes magno circum clamore fremebant, 175
praecipue pius Aeneas. tum iussa Sibyllae,

haud mora, festinant flentes aramque sepulcri
congerere arboribus caeloque educere certant.
itur in antiquam siluam, stabula alta ferarum;
procumbunt piceae, sonat icta securibus ilex 180
fraxineaeque trabes cuneis et fissile robur
scinditur, aduoluunt ingentis montibus ornos.

Nec non Aeneas opera inter talia primus
hortatur socios paribusque accingitur armis.
atque haec ipse suo tristi cum corde uolutat 185
aspectans siluam immensam, et sic forte precatur:
‘si nunc se nobis ille aureus arbore ramus
ostendat nemore in tanto! quando omnia uere
heu nimium de te uates, Misene, locuta est.’
uix ea fatus erat, geminae cum forte columbae 190
ipsa sub ora uiri caelo uenere uolantes,
et uiridi sedere solo. tum maximus heros
maternas agnouit auis laetusque precatur:
‘este duces, o, si qua uia est, cursumque per auras
derigite in lucos ubi pinguem diues opacat 195
ramus humum. tuque, o, dubiis ne defice rebus,
diua parens.’ sic effatus uestigia pressit
obseruans quae signa ferant, quo tendere pergant.
pascentes illae tantum prodire uolando
quantum acie possent oculi seruare sequentum. 200
inde ubi uenere ad fauces graue olentis Auerni,
tollunt se celeres liquidumque per aera lapsae
sedibus optatis gemina super arbore sidunt,
discolor unde auri per ramos aura refulsit.
quale solet siluis brumali frigore uiscum 205
fronde uirere noua, quod non sua seminat arbos,
et croceo fetu teretis circumdare truncos,
talis erat species auri frondentis opaca
ilice, sic leni crepitabat brattea uento.
corripit Aeneas extemplo auidusque refringit 210
cunctantem, et uatis portat sub tecta Sibyllae.

Nec minus interea Misenum in litore Teucri
flebant et cineri ingrato suprema ferebant.
principio pinguem taedis et robore secto
ingentem struxere pyram, cui frondibus atris 215
intexunt latera et feralis ante cupressos
constituunt, decorantque super fulgentibus armis.
pars calidos latices et aena undantia flammis
expediunt, corpusque lauant frigentis et unguunt.
fit gemitus. tum membra toro defleta reponunt 220
purpureasque super uestis, uelamina nota,
coniciunt. pars ingenti subiere feretro,
triste ministerium, et subiectam more parentum
auersi tenuere facem. congesta cremantur
turea dona, dapes, fuso crateres oliuo. 225
postquam conlapsi cineres et flamma quieuit,
reliquias uino et bibulam lauere fauillam,
ossaue lecta cado textit Corynaeus aeno.
idem ter socios pura circumtulit unda
spargens rore leui et ramo felicis oliuae, 230
lustrauitque uiros dixitque nouissima uerba.
at pius Aeneas ingenti mole sepulcrum
imponit suaue arma uiro remumque tubamque
monte sub aereo, qui nunc Misenus ab illo
dicitur aeternumque tenet per saecula nomen. 235

His actis propere exsequitur praecepta Sibyllae.
spelunca alta fuit uastoque immanis hiatu,
scrupea, tuta lacu nigro nemorumque tenebris,
quam super haud ullae poterant impune uolantes
tendere iter pennis: talis sese halitus atris 240
faucibus effundens supera ad conuexa ferebat.
[unde locum Grai dixerunt nomine Aornum.]
quattuor hic primum nigrantis terga iuuenos
constituit frontique inuergit uina sacerdos,
et summas carpens media inter cornua saetas 245
ignibus imponit sacris, libamina prima,
uoce uocans Hecaten caeloque Ereboque potentem.

supponunt alii cultros tepidumque cruorem
succipiunt pateris. ipse atri uelleris agnam
Aeneas matri Eumenidum magnaеque sorori 250
ense ferit, sterilemque tibi, Proserpina, uaccam;
tum Stygio regi nocturnas incohat aras
et solida imponit taurorum uiscera flammis,
pingue super oleum fundens ardentibus extis.
ecce autem primi sub limina solis et ortus 255
sub pedibus mugire solum et iuga coepta moueri
siluarum, uisaeque canes ululare per umbram
aduentante dea. 'procul, o procul este, profani,'
conclamat uates, 'totoque absistite luco;
tuque inuade uiam uaginaque eripe ferrum: 260
nunc animis opus, Aenea, nunc pectore firmo.'
tantum effata furens antro se immisit aperto;
ille ducem haud timidis uadentem passibus aequat.

Di, quibus imperium est animarum, umbraeque silentes
et Chaos et Phlegethon, loca nocte tacentia late, 265
sit mihi fas audita loqui, sit numine uestro
pandere res alta terra et caligine mersas.

Ibant obscuri sola sub nocte per umbram
perque domos Ditis uacuas et inania regna:
quale per incertam lunam sub luce maligna 270
est iter in siluis, ubi caelum condidit umbra
Iuppiter, et rebus nox abstulit atra colorem.
uestibulum ante ipsum primisque in faucibus Orci
Luctus et ultrices posuere cubilia Curae,
pallentesque habitant Morbi tristicque Senectus, 275
et Metus et malesuada Fames ac turpis Egestas,
terribiles uisu formae, Letumque Labosque;
tum consanguineus Leti Sopor et mala mentis
Gaudia, mortiferumque aduerso in limine Bellum,
ferreique Eumenidum thalami et Discordia demens 280
uipereum crinem uittis innexa cruentis.
in medio ramos annosaque bracchia pandit

ulmus opaca, ingens, quam sedem Somnia uulgo
uana tenere ferunt, foliisque sub omnibus haerent.
multaque praeterea uariarum monstra ferarum, 285
Centauri in foribus stabulant Scyllaeque bifformes
et centumgeminus Briareus ac belua Lerneae
horrendum stridens, flammisque armata Chimaera,
Gorgones Harpyiaeque et forma tricorporis umbrae.
corripit hic subita trepidus formidine ferrum 290
Aeneas strictamque aciem uenientibus offert,
et ni docta comes tenuis sine corpore uitas
admoneat uolitare caua sub imagine formae,
inruat et frustra ferro diuerberet umbras.

Hinc uia Tartarei quae fert Acherontis ad undas. 295
turbidus hic caeno uastaque uoragine gurgēs
aestuat atque omnem Cocyto eructat harenam.
portitor has horrendus aquas et flumina seruat
terribili squalore Charon, cui plurima mento
canities inculta iacet, stant lumina flamma, 300
sordidus ex umeris nodo dependet amictus.
ipse ratem conto subigit uelisque ministrat
et ferruginea subuectat corpora cumba,
iam senior, sed cruda deo uiridisque senectus.
huc omnis turba ad ripas effusa ruebat, 305
matres atque uiri defunctaque corpora uita
magnanimum heroum, pueri innuptaeque puellae,
impositique rogis iuuenes ante ora parentum:
quam multa in siluis autumnī frigore primo
lapsa cadunt folia, aut ad terram gurgite ab alto 310
quam multae glomerantur aues, ubi frigidus annus
trans pontum fugat et terris immittit apricis.
stabant orantes primi transmittere cursum
tendebantque manus ripae ulterioris amore.
nauita sed tristis nunc hos nunc accipit illos, 315
ast alios longe summotos arcet harena.
Aeneas miratus enim motusque tumultu
‘dic,’ ait, ‘o uirgo, quid uult concursus ad amnem?

quidue petunt animae? uel quo discrimine ripas
hae linquunt, illae remis uada liuida uerrunt?’ 320
olli sic breuiter fata est longaeua sacerdos:
‘Anchisa generate, deum certissima proles,
Cocyti stagna alta uides Stygiamque paludem,
di cuius iurare timent et fallere numen.
haec omnis, quam cernis, inops inhumataque turba est; 325
portitor ille Charon; hi, quos uehit unda, sepulti.
nec ripas datur horrendas et rauca fluenta
transportare prius quam sedibus ossa quierunt.
centum errant annos uolitantque haec litora circum;
tum demum admissi stagna exoptata reuisunt.’ 330
constitit Anchisa satus et uestigia pressit
multa putans sortemque animo miseratus iniquam.
cernit ibi maestos et mortis honore carentis
Leucaspim et Lyciae ductorem classis Oronten,
quos simul a Troia uentosa per aequora uectos 335
obruit Auster, aqua inuoluens nauemque uirosque.

Ecce gubernator sese Palinurus agebat,
qui Libyco nuper cursu, dum sidera seruat,
exciderat puppi mediis effusus in undis.
hunc ubi uix multa maestum cognouit in umbra, 340
sic prior adloquitur: ‘quis te, Palinure, deorum
eripuit nobis medioque sub aequore mersit?
dic age. namque mihi, fallax haud ante repertus,
hoc uno responso animum delusit Apollo,
qui fore te ponto incolumem finisque canebat 345
uenturum Ausonios. en haec promissa fides est?’
ille autem: ‘neque te Phoebi cortina fefellit,
dux Anchisiade, nec me deus aequore mersit.
namque gubernaculum multa ui forte reuulsum,
cui datus haerebam custos cursusque regebam, 350
praecipitans traxi mecum. maria aspera iuro
non ullum pro me tantum cepisse timorem,
quam tua ne spoliata armis, excussa magistro,
deficeret tantis nauis surgentibus undis.

tris Notus hibernas immensa per aequora noctes 355
uexit me uiolentus aqua; uix lumine quarto
prospexi Italiam summa sublimis ab unda.
paulatim adnabam terrae; iam tuta tenebam,
ni gens crudelis madida cum ueste grauatum
prensantemque uncis manibus capita aspera montis 360
ferro inuasisset praedamque ignara putasset.
nunc me fluctus habet uersantque in litore uenti.
quod te per caeli iucundum lumen et auras,
per genitorem oro, per spes surgentis Iuli,
eripe me his, inuicte, malis: aut tu mihi terram 365
inice, namque potes, portusque require Velinos;
aut tu, si qua uia est, si quam tibi diua creatrix
ostendit (neque enim, credo, sine numine diuum
flumina tanta paras Stygiamque innare paludem),
da dextram misero et tecum me tolle per undas, 370
sedibus ut saltem placidis in morte quiescam.’
taliam fatus erat coepit cum talia uates:
‘unde haec, o Palinure, tibi tam dira cupido?
tu Stygias inhumatus aquas amnemque seuerum
Eumenidum aspicies, ripamue iniussus adibis? 375
desine fata deum flecti sperare precando,
sed cape dicta memor, duri solacia casus.
nam tua finitimi, longe lateque per urbes
prodigiis acti caelestibus, ossa piabunt
et statuent tumulum et tumulo sollemnia mittent, 380
aeternumque locus Palinuri nomen habebit.’
his dictis curae emotae pulsusque parumper
corde dolor tristi; gaudet cognomine terra.

Ergo iter inceptum peragunt fluuioque propinquant.
nauita quos iam inde ut Stygia prospexit ab unda 385
per tacitum nemus ire pedemque aduertere ripae,
sic prior adgreditur dictis atque increpat ultro:
‘quisquis es, armatus qui nostra ad flumina tendis,
fare age, quid uenias, iam istinc et comprime gressum.
umbrarum hic locus est, somni noctisque soporae: 390

corpora uiua nefas Stygia uectare carina.
nec uero Alciden me sum laetatus euntem
accepisse lacu, nec Thesea Pirithoumque,
dis quamquam geniti atque inuicti uiribus essent.
Tartareum ille manu custodem in uincla petiuit 395
ipsius a solio regis traxitque trementem;
hi dominam Ditis thalamo deducere adorti.
quae contra breuiter fata est Amphrysia uates:
‘nullae hic insidiae tales (absiste moueri),
nec uim tela ferunt; licet ingens ianitor antro 400
aeternum latrans exsanguis terreat umbras,
casta licet patruī seruet Proserpina limen.
Troius Aeneas, pietate insignis et armis,
ad genitorem imas Erebi descendit ad umbras.
si te nulla mouet tantae pietatis imago, 405
at ramum hunc’ (aperit ramum qui ueste latebat)
‘agnoscas.’ tumida ex ira tum corda residunt;
nec plura his. ille admirans uenerabile donum
fatalis uirgae longo post tempore uisum
caeruleam aduertit puppim ripaeque propinquat. 410
inde alias animas, quae per iuga longa sedebant,
deturbat laxatque foros; simul accipit alueo
ingentem Aenean. gemit sub pondere cumba
sutilis et multam accepit rimosa paludem.
tandem trans fluuium incolumis uatemque uirumque 415
informi limo glaucaque exponit in ulua.

Cerberus haec ingens latratu regna trifauci
personat aduerso recubans immanis in antro.
cui uates horrere uidens iam colla colubris
melle soporatam et medicatis frugibus offam 420
obicit. ille fame rabida tria guttura pandens
corripit obiectam, atque immania terga resoluit
fusus humi totoque ingens extenditur antro.
occupat Aeneas aditum custode sepulto
euaditque celer ripam inremeabilis undae. 425

Continuo auditae uoces uagitus et ingens
infantumque animae flentes, in limine primo
quos dulcis uitae exsortis et ab ubere raptos
abstulit atra dies et funere mersit acerbo;
hos iuxta falso damnati crimine mortis. 430
nec uero hae sine sorte datae, sine iudice, sedes:
quaesitor Minos urnam mouet; ille silentum
consiliumque uocat uitasque et crimina discit.
proxima deinde tenent maesti loca, qui sibi letum
insontes peperere manu lucemque perosi 435
proiecere animas. quam uellent aethere in alto
nunc et pauperiem et duros perferre labores!
fas obstat, tristisque palus inamabilis undae
alligat et nouies Styx interfusa coercet.
nec procul hinc partem fusi monstrantur in omnem 440
Lugentes campi; sic illos nomine dicunt.
hic quos durus amor crudeli tabe peredit
secreti celant calles et myrtea circum
silua tegit; curae non ipsa in morte relinquunt.
his Phaedram Procrinque locis maestamque Eriphylen 445
crudelis nati monstrantem uulnera cernit,
Euadnenque et Pasiphaen; his Laodamia
it comes et iuuenis quondam, nunc femina, Caeneus
rursus et in ueterem fato reuoluta figuram.
inter quas Phoenissa recens a uulnere Dido 450
errabat silua in magna; quam Troius heros
ut primum iuxta stetit agnouitque per umbras
obscuram, qualem primo qui surgere mense
aut uidet aut uidisse putat per nubila lunam,
demisit lacrimas dulcique adfatus amore est: 455
‘infelix Dido, uerus mihi nuntius ergo
uenerat exstinctam ferroque extrema secutam?
funeris heu tibi causa fui? per sidera iuro,
per superos et si qua fides tellure sub ima est,
inuitus, regina, tuo de litore cessi. 460
sed me iussa deum, quae nunc has ire per umbras,
per loca senta situ cogunt noctemque profundam,

imperiis egere suis; nec credere quiui
hunc tantum tibi me discessu ferre dolorem.
siste gradum teque aspectu ne subtrahe nostro. 465
quem fugis? extremum fato quod te adloquor hoc est.
talibus Aeneas ardentem et torua tuentem
lenibat dictis animum lacrimasque ciebat.
illa solo fixos oculos auersa tenebat
nec magis incepto uultum sermone mouetur 470
quam si dura silex aut stet Marpesia cautes.
tandem corripuit sese atque inimica refugit
in nemus umbriferum, coniunx ubi pristinus illi
respondet curis aequatque Sychaeus amorem.
nec minus Aeneas casu percussus iniquo 475
prosequitur lacrimis longe et miseratur euntem.

Inde datum molitur iter. iamque arua tenebant
ultima, quae bello clari secreta frequentant.
hic illi occurrit Tydeus, hic inclutus armis
Parthenopaeus et Adrasti pallentis imago, 480
hic multum fleti ad superos belloque caduci
Dardanidae, quos ille omnis longo ordine cernens
ingemuit, Glaucumque Medontaque Thersilochumque,
tris Antenoridas Cererique sacrum Polyboeten, Idaeumque etiam currus, etiam arma tenentem. 485
circumstant animae dextra laeuaque frequentes,
nec uidisse semel satis est; iuuat usque morari
et conferre gradum et ueniendi discere causas.
at Danaum procures Agamemnoniaeque phalanges
ut uidere uirum fulgentiaque arma per umbras, 490
ingenti trepidare metu; pars uertere terga,
ceu quondam petiere rates, pars tollere uocem
exiguam: inceptus clamor frustratur hiantis.

Atque hic Priamiden laniatum corpore toto
Deiphobum uidet et lacerum crudeliter ora, 495
ora manusque ambas, populataque tempora raptis
auribus et truncas inhonesto uulnere naris.

uix adeo agnouit pautantem ac dira tegentem
supplicia, et notis compellat uocibus ultro:
‘Deiphobe armipotens, genus alto a sanguine Teucri, 500
quis tam crudelis optauit sumere poenas?
cui tantum de te licuit? mihi fama suprema
nocte tulit fessum uasta te caede Pelasgum
procubuisse super confusae stragis aceruum.
tunc egomet tumulum Rhoeteo in litore inanem 505
constitui et magna manis ter uoce uocaui.
nomen et arma locum seruant; te, amice, nequiu
conspicere et patria decedens ponere terra.’
ad quae Priamides: ‘nihil o tibi, amice, relictum;
omnia Deiphobo soluisti et funeris umbris. 510
sed me fata mea et scelus exitiale Lacaenae
his mersere malis; illa haec monimenta reliquit.
namque ut supremam falsa inter gaudia noctem
egerimus, nosti: et nimium meminisse necesse est.
cum fatalis equus saltu super ardua uenit 515
Pergama et armatum peditem grauis attulit aluo,
illa chorum simulans euhantis orgia circum
ducebat Phrygias; flammam media ipsa tenebat
ingentem et summa Danaos ex arce uocabat.
tum me confectum curis somnoque grauatum 520
infelix habuit thalamus, pressitque iacentem
dulcis et alta quies placidaeque simillima morti.
egregia interea coniunx arma omnia tectis
emouet, et fidum capiti subduxerat ensem:
intra tecta uocat Menelaum et limina pandit, 525
scilicet id magnum sperans fore munus amanti,
et famam exstingui ueterum sic posse malorum.
quid moror? inrumpunt thalamo, comes additus una
hortator scelerum Aeolides. di, talia Grais
instaurate, pio si poenas ore reposco. 530
sed te qui uiuum casus, age fare uicissim,
attulerint. pelagine uenis erroribus actus
an monitu diuum? an quae te fortuna fatigat,
ut tristis sine sole domos, loca turbida, adires?’

Hac uice sermonum roseis Aurora quadrigis 535
iam medium aetherio cursu traiecerat axem;
et fors omne datum traherent per talia tempus,
sed comes admonuit breuiterque adfata Sibylla est:
‘nox ruit, Aenea; nos flendo ducimus horas.
hic locus est, partis ubi se uia findit in ambas: 540
dextera quae Ditis magni sub moenia tendit,
hac iter Elysium nobis; at laeua malorum
exercet poenas et ad impia Tartara mittit.’
Deiphobus contra: ‘ne saeui, magna sacerdos;
discedam, explebo numerum reddarque tenebris. 545
i decus, i, nostrum; melioribus utere fatis.’
tantum effatus, et in uerbo uestigia torsit.

Respicit Aeneas subito et sub rupe sinistra
moenia lata uidet triplici circumdata muro,
quae rapidus flammis ambit torrentibus amnis, 550
Tartareus Phlegethon, torquetque sonantia saxa.
porta aduersa ingens solidoque adamante columnae,
uis ut nulla uirum, non ipsi excindere bello
caelicolae ualeant; stat ferrea turris ad auras,
Tisiphoneque sedens palla succincta cruenta 555
uestibulum exsomnis seruat noctesque diesque.
hinc exaudiri gemitus et saeua sonare
uerbera, tum stridor ferri tractaeque catenae.
constitit Aeneas strepitumque exterritus hausit.
‘quae scelerum facies? o uirgo, effare; quibusue 560
urgentur poenis? quis tantus plangor ad auras?’
tum uates sic orsa loqui: ‘dux inclute Teucrum,
nulli fas casto sceleratum insistere limen;
sed me cum lucis Hecate praefecit Auernis,
ipsa deum poenas docuit perque omnia duxit. 565
Cnosius haec Rhadamanthus habet durissima regna
castigatque auditque dolos subigitque fateri
quae quis apud superos furto laetatus inani
distulit in seram commissa piacula mortem.
continuo sontis ultrix accincta flagello 570

Tisiphone quatit insultans, toruosque sinistra
intentans anguis uocat agmina saeua sororum.
tum demum horrissono stridentes cardine sacrae
panduntur portae. cernis custodia qualis
uestibulo sedeat, facies quae limina seruet? 575
quinquaginta atris immanis hiatibus Hydra
saeuior intus habet sedem. tum Tartarus ipse
bis patet in praeceps tantum tenditque sub umbras
quantus ad aetherium caeli suspectus Olympum.
hic genus antiquum Terrae, Titania pubes, 580
fulmine deiecti fundo uoluuntur in imo.
hic et Aloidas geminos immania uidi
corpora, qui manibus magnum rescindere caelum
adgressi superisque Iouem detrudere regnis.
uidi et crudelis dantem Salmonea poenas, 585
dum flammis Iouis et sonitus imitatur Olympi.
quattuor hic inuectus equis et lampada quassans
per Graium populos mediaeque per Elidis urbem
ibat ouans, diuumque sibi poscebat honorem,
demens, qui nimbos et non imitabile fulmen 590
aere et cornipedum pulsu simularet equorum.
at pater omnipotens densa inter nubila telum
contorsit, non ille faces nec fumea taedis
lumina, praecipitemque immani turbine adegit.
nec non et Tityon, Terrae omniparentis alumnum, 595
cernere erat, per tota nouem cui iugera corpus
porrigitur, rostroque immanis uultur obunco
immortale iecur tondens fecundaque poenis
uiscera rimaturque epulis habitatque sub alto
pectore, nec fibris requies datur ulla renatis. 600
quid memorem Lapithas, Ixiona Pirithoumque?
quos super atra silex iam iam lapsura cadentique
imminet adsimilis; lucent genialibus altis
aurea fulcra toris, epulaeque ante ora paratae
regifico luxu; Furiarum maxima iuxta 605
accubat et manibus prohibet contingere mensas,
exurgitque facem attollens atque intonat ore.

hic, quibus inuisi fratres, dum uita manebat,
pulsatusue parens et fraus innexa clienti,
aut qui diuitiis soli incubuere repertis 610
nec partem posuere suis (quae maxima turba est),
quique ob adulterium caesi, quique arma secuti
impia nec ueriti dominorum fallere dextras,
inclusi poenam exspectant. ne quaere doceri
quam poenam, aut quae forma uiros fortunaue mersit. 615
saxum ingens uoluunt alii, radiisque rotarum
districti pendent; sedet aeternumque sedebit
infelix Theseus, Phlegyasque miserrimus omnis
admonet et magna testatur uoce per umbras:
“discite iustitiam moniti et non temnere diuos.” 620
uendidit hic auro patriam dominumque potentem
imposuit; fixit leges pretio atque refixit;
hic thalamum inuasit natae uetitosque hymenaeos:
ausi omnes immane nefas ausoque potiti.
non, mihi si linguae centum sint oraque centum, 625
ferrea uox, omnis scelerum comprehendere formas,
omnia poenarum percurrere nomina possim.’

Haec ubi dicta dedit Phoebi longaeua sacerdos, ‘sed iam age, carpe uiam et susceptum perforce munus;
acceleremus’ ait; ‘Cyclopum educta caminis 630
moenia conspicio atque aduerso fornice portas,
haec ubi nos praecepta iubent deponere dona.’
dixerat et pariter gressi per opaca uiarum
corripiunt spatium medium foribusque propinquant.
occupat Aeneas aditum corpusque recenti 635
spargit aqua ramumque aduerso in limine figit.

His demum exactis, perfecto munere diuae,
deuenere locos laetos et amoena uirecta
fortunatorum nemorum sedesque beatas.
largior hic campos aether et lumine uestit 640
purpureo, solemque suum, sua sidera norunt.
pars in gramineis exercent membra palaestris,

contendunt ludo et fulua luctantur harena;
pars pedibus plaudunt choreas et carmina dicunt.
nec non Threicius longa cum ueste sacerdos 645
obloquitur numeris septem discrimina uocum,
iamque eadem digitis, iam pectine pulsat eburno.
hic genus antiquum Teucri, pulcherrima proles,
magnanimi heroes nati melioribus annis,
Ilusque Assaracusque et Troiae Dardanus auctor. 650
arma procul currusque uirum miratur inanis;
stant terra defixae hastae passimque soluti
per campum pascuntur equi. quae gratia currum
armorumque fuit uiuis, quae cura nitentis
pascere equos, eadem sequitur tellure repostos. 655
conspicit, ecce, alios dextra laeuaque per herbam
uescentis laetumque choro paeana canentis
inter odoratum lauris nemus, unde superne
plurimus Eridani per siluam uoluitur amnis.
hic manus ob patriam pugnando uulnera passi, 660
quique sacerdotes casti, dum uita manebat,
quique pii uates et Phoebos digna locuti,
inuentas aut qui uitam excoluere per artis
quique sui memores aliquos fecere merendo:
omnibus his niuea cinguntur tempora uitta. 665
quos circumfusus sic est adfata Sibylla, Musaeum ante omnis (medium nam plurima turba
hunc habet atque umeris exstantem suspicit altis):
‘dicite, felices animae tuque optime uates,
quae regio Anchisen, quis habet locus? illius ergo 670
uenimus et magnos Erebi tranauimus amnis.’
atque huic responsum paucis ita reddidit heros:
‘nulli certa domus; lucis habitamus opacis,
riparumque toros et prata recentia riuis
incolimus. sed uos, si fert ita corde uoluntas, 675
hoc superate iugum, et facili iam tramite sistam.’
dixit, et ante tulit gressum camposque nitentis
desuper ostentat; dehinc summa cacumina linqunt.

At pater Anchises penitus conualle uirenti
inclusas animas superumque ad lumen ituras 680
lustrabat studio recolens, omnemque suorum
forte recensebat numerum, carosque nepotes
fataque fortunasque uirum moresque manusque.
isque ubi tendentem aduersum per gramina uidit
Aenean, alacris palmas utrasque tetendit, 685
effusaeque genis lacrimae et uox excidit ore:
‘uenisti tandem, tuaque exspectata parenti
uicit iter durum pietas? datur ora tueri,
nate, tua et notas audire et reddere uoces?
sic equidem ducebam animo rebarque futurum 690
tempora dinumerans, nec me mea cura fefellit.
quas ego te terras et quanta per aequora uectum
accipio! quantis iactatum, nate, periclis!
quam metui ne quid Libyae tibi regna nocerent!’
ille autem: ‘tua me, genitor, tua tristis imago 695
saepius occurrens haec limina tendere adegit;
stant sale Tyrrheno classes. da iungere dextram,
da, genitor, teque amplexu ne subtrahe nostro.’
sic memorans largo fletu simul ora rigabat.
ter conatus ibi colo dare bracchia circum; 700
ter frustra comprehensa manus effugit imago,
par leuibus uentis uolucrique simillima somno.

Interea uidet Aeneas in ualle reducta
seclusum nemus et uirgulta sonantia siluae,
Lethaeumque domos placidas qui praenatat amnem. 705
hunc circum innumerae gentes populique uolabant:
ac ueluti in pratis ubi apes aestate serena
floribus insidunt uariis et candida circum
lilia funduntur, strepit omnis murmure campus.
horrescit uisu subito causasque requirit 710
inscius Aeneas, quae sint ea flumina porro,
quique uiri tanto complerint agmine ripas.
tum pater Anchises: ‘animae, quibus altera fato
corpora debentur, Lethaei ad fluminis undam

securos latices et longa obliuia potant. 715
has equidem memorare tibi atque ostendere coram
iampridem, hanc prolem cupio enumerare meorum,
quo magis Italia mecum laetere reperta.’
‘o pater, anne aliquas ad caelum hinc ire putandum est
sublimis animas iterumque ad tarda reuerti 720
corpora? quae lucis miseris tam dira cupido?’
‘dicam equidem nec te suspensum, nate, tenebo’
suscipit Anchises atque ordine singula pandit.

‘Principio caelum ac terras camposque liquentis
lucentemque globum lunae Titaniaque astra 725
spiritus intus alit, totamque infusa per artus
mens agitat molem et magno se corpore miscet.
inde hominum pecudumque genus uitaeque uolantum
et quae marmoreo fert monstra sub aequore pontus.
igneus est ollis uigor et caelestis origo 730
seminibus, quantum non noxia corpora tardant
terrenique hebetant artus moribundaque membra.
hinc metuunt cupiuntque, dolent gaudentque, neque auras
dispiciunt clausae tenebris et carcere caeco.
quin et supremo cum lumine uita reliquit, 735
non tamen omne malum miseris nec funditus omnes
corporeae excedunt pestes, penitusque necesse est
multa diu concreta modis inolescere miris.
ergo exercentur poenis ueterumque malorum
supplicia expendunt: aliae panduntur inanes 740
suspensae ad uentos, aliis sub gurgite uasto
infectum eluitur scelus aut exuritur igni:
quisque suos patimur manis. exinde per amplum
mittimur Elysium et pauci laeta arua tenemus,
donec longa dies perfecto temporis orbe 745
concretam exemit labem, purumque relinquit
aetherium sensum atque aurai simplicis ignem.
has omnis, ubi mille rotam uoluere per annos,
Lethaeum ad fluuium deus euocat agmine magno,
scilicet immemores supera ut conuexa reuisant 750

rursus, et incipiant in corpora uelle reuerti.’

Dixerat Anchises natumque unaque Sibyllam
conuentus trahit in medios turbamque sonantem,
et tumulum capit unde omnis longo ordine posset
aduersos legere et uenientum discere uultus. 755

‘Nunc age, Dardanium prolem quae deinde sequatur
gloria, qui maneant Itala de gente nepotes,
inlustris animas nostrumque in nomen ituras,
expediam dictis, et te tua fata docebo.
ille, uides, pura iuuenis qui nititur hasta, 760
proxima sorte tenet lucis loca, primus ad auras
aetherias Italo commixtus sanguine surget,
Siluius, Albanum nomen, tua postuma proles,
quem tibi longaeuo serum Lauinia coniunx
educet siluis regem regumque parentem, 765
unde genus Longa nostrum dominabitur Alba.
proximus ille Procas, Troianae gloria gentis,
et Capys et Numitor et qui te nomine reddet
Siluius Aeneas, pariter pietate uel armis
egregius, si umquam regnandam acceperit Albam. 770
qui iuuenes! quantas ostentant, aspice, uiris
atque umbrata gerunt ciuili tempora quercu!
hi tibi Nomentum et Gabios urbemque Fidenam,
hi Collatinas imponent montibus arces,
Pometios Castrumque Inui Bolamque Coramque; 775
haec tum nomina erunt, nunc sunt sine nomine terrae.
quin et auo comitem sese Mauortius addet
Romulus, Assaraci quem sanguinis Ilia mater
educet. uiden, ut geminae stant uertice cristae
et pater ipse suo superum iam signat honore? 780
en huius, nate, auspiciis illa incluta Roma
imperium terris, animos aequabit Olympo,
septemque una sibi muro circumdabit arces,
felix prole uirum: qualis Berecynthia mater
inuehitur curru Phrygias turrita per urbes 785

laeta deum partu, centum complexa nepotes,
omnis caelicolas, omnis supera alta tenentis.
huc geminas nunc flecte acies, hanc aspice gentem
Romanosque tuos. hic Caesar et omnis Iuli
progenies magnum caeli uentura sub axem. 790
hic uir, hic est, tibi quem promitti saepius audis,
Augustus Caesar, diui genus, aurea condet
saecula qui rursus Latio regnata per arua
Saturno quondam, super et Garamantas et Indos
proferet imperium; iacet extra sidera tellus, 795
extra anni solisque uias, ubi caelifer Atlas
axem umero torquet stellis ardentibus aptum.
huius in aduentum iam nunc et Caspia regna
responsis horrent diuum et Maeotia tellus,
et septemgemini turbant trepida ostia Nili. 800
nec uero Alcides tantum telluris obiuit,
fixerit aeripedem ceruam licet, aut Erymanthi
pacarit nemora et Lernam tremefecerit arcu;
nec qui pampineis uictor iuga flectit habenis
Liber, agens celso Nysae de uertice tigris. 805
et dubitamus adhuc uirtutem extendere factis,
aut metus Ausonia prohibet consistere terra?
quis procul ille autem ramis insignis oliuae
sacra ferens? nosco crinis incanaque menta
regis Romani primam qui legibus urbem 810
fundabit, Curibus paruus et paupere terra
missus in imperium magnum. cui deinde subibit
otia qui rumpet patriae residesque mouebit
Tullus in arma uiros et iam desueta triumphis
agmina. quem iuxta sequitur iactantior Ancus 815
nunc quoque iam nimium gaudens popularibus auris.
uis et Tarquinius reges animamque superbam
ultoris Bruti, fascisque uidere receptos?
consulis imperium hic primus saeuasque securis
accipiet, natosque pater noua bella mouentis 820
ad poenam pulchra pro libertate uocabit,
infelix, utcumque ferent ea facta minores:

uincet amor patriae laudumque immensa cupido.
quin Decios Drususque procul saeuumque securi
aspice Torquatum et referentem signa Camillum. 825
illae autem paribus quas fulgere cernis in armis,
concordes animae nunc et dum nocte prementur,
heu quantum inter se bellum, si lumina uitae
attigerint, quantas acies stragemque ciebunt,
aggeribus socer Alpinis atque arce Monoeci 830
descendens, gener aduersis instructus Eois!
ne, pueri, ne tanta animis adsuescite bella
neu patriae ualidas in uiscera uertite uiris;
tuque prior, tu parce, genus qui ducis Olympo,
proice tela manu, sanguis meus! — 835
ille triumphata Capitolia ad alta Corintho
uictor aget currum caesis insignis Achiuis.
eruet ille Argos Agamemnoniasque Mycenae
ipsumque Aeaciden, genus armipotentis Achilli,
ultus auos Troiae templa et temerata Mineruae. 840
quis te, magne Cato, tacitum aut te, Cosse, relinquat?
quis Gracchi genus aut geminos, duo fulmina belli,
Scipiadas, cladem Libyae, paruoque potentem
Fabricium uel te sulco, Serrane, serentem?
quo fessum rapitis, Fabii? tu Maximus ille es, 845
unus qui nobis cunctando restituis rem.
excudent alii spirantia mollius aera (credo equidem), uiuos ducent de marmore uultus,
orabunt causas melius, caelique meatus
describent radio et surgentia sidera dicent: 850
tu regere imperio populos, Romane, memento
(hae tibi erunt artes), pacique imponere morem,
parcere subiectis et debellare superbos.’

Sic pater Anchises, atque haec mirantibus addit:
‘aspice, ut insignis spoliis Marcellus opimis 855
ingreditur uictorque uiros supereminet omnis.
hic rem Romanam magno turbante tumultu
sistet eques, sternet Poenos Gallumque rebellem,

tertiaque arma patri suspendet capta Quirino.
atque hic Aeneas (una namque ire uidebat 860
egregium forma iuuenem et fulgentibus armis,
sed frons laeta parum et deiecto lumina uultu)
'quis, pater, ille, uirum qui sic comitatur euntem?
filius, ane aliquis magna de stirpe nepotum?
qui strepitus circa comitum! quantum instar in ipso! 865
sed nox atra caput tristi circumuolat umbra.'
tum pater Anchises lacrimis ingressus obortis:
'o gnate, ingentem luctum ne quaere tuorum;
ostendent terris hunc tantum fata nec ultra
esse sinent. nimium uobis Romana propago 870
uisa potens, superi, propria haec si dona fuissent.
quantos ille uirum magnam Mauortis ad urbem
campus aget gemitus! uel quae, Tiberine, uidebis
funera, cum tumulum praeterlabere recentem!
nec puer Iliaca quisquam de gente Latinos 875
in tantum spe tollet auos, nec Romula quondam
ullo se tantum tellus iactabit alumno.
heu pietas, heu prisca fides inuictaque bello
dextera! non illi se quisquam impune tulisset
obuius armato, seu cum pedes iret in hostem 880
seu spumantis equi foderet calcaribus armos.
heu, miserande puer, si qua fata aspera rumpas,
tu Marcellus eris. manibus date lilia plenis
purpureos spargam flores animamque nepotis
his saltem accumulem donis, et fungar inani 885
munere.' sic tota passim regione uagantur
aeris in campis latis atque omnia lustrant.
quae postquam Anchises natum per singula duxit
incenditque animum famae uenientis amore,
exim bella uiro memorat quae deinde gerenda, 890
Laurentisque docet populos urbemque Latini,
et quo quemque modo fugiatque feratque laborem.

Sunt geminae Somni portae, quarum altera fertur
cornea, qua ueris facilis datur exitus umbris,

altera candenti perfecta nitens elephanto, 895
sed falsa ad caelum mittunt insomnia Manes.
his ibi tum natum Anchises unaque Sibyllam
prosequitur dictis portaque emittit eburna,
ille uiam secat ad nauis sociosque reuisit.

Tum se ad Caietae recto fert limite portum. 900
ancora de prora iacitur; stant litore puppes.

LIBER VII

Tu quoque litoribus nostris, Aeneia nutrix,
aeternam moriens famam, Caieta, dedisti;
et nunc seruat honos sedem tuus, ossaque nomen
Hesperia in magna, si qua est ea gloria, signat.

At pius exsequiis Aeneas rite solutis, 5
aggere composito tumuli, postquam alta quierunt
aequora, tendit iter uelis portumque relinquit.
aspirant aurae in noctem nec candida cursus
luna negat, splendet tremulo sub lumine pontus.
proxima Circaeae raduntur litora terrae, 10
diues inaccessos ubi Solis filia lucos
adsiduo resonat cantu, tectisque superbis
urit odoratam nocturna in lumina cedrum
arguto tenuis percurrrens pectine telas.
hinc exaudiri gemitus iraeque leonum 15
uincla recusantum et sera sub nocte rudentum,
saetigerique sues atque in praesepibus ursi
saeuire ac formae magnorum ululare luporum,
quos hominum ex facie dea saeua potentibus herbis
induerat Circe in uultus ac terga ferarum. 20
quae ne monstra pii paterentur talia Troes
delati in portus neu litora dira subirent,
Neptunus uentis impleuit uela secundis,
atque fugam dedit et praeter uada feruida uexit.

Iamque rubescebat radiis mare et aethere ab alto 25
Aurora in roseis fulgebat lutea bigis,
cum uenti posuere omnisque repente resedit
flatus, et in lento luctantur marmore tonsae.
atque hic Aeneas ingentem ex aequore lucum
prospicit. hunc inter fluuio Tiberinus amoeno 30
uerticibus rapidis et multa flauus harena
in mare prorumpit. uariae circumque supraque

adsuetae ripis uolucres et fluminis alueo
aethera mulcebant cantu lucoque uolabant.
flectere iter sociis terraeque aduertere proras 35
imperat et laetus fluuio succedit opaco.

Nunc age, qui reges, Erato, quae tempora, rerum
quis Latio antiquo fuerit status, aduena classem
cum primum Ausoniis exercitus appulit oris,
expediam, et primae reuocabo exordia pugnae. 40
tu uatem, tu, diua, mone. dicam horrida bella,
dicam acies actosque animis in funera reges,
Tyrrhenamque manum totamque sub arma coactam
Hesperiam. maior rerum mihi nascitur ordo,
maius opus moueo. 45

Rex arua Latinus et urbes
iam senior longa placidas in pace regebat.
hunc Fauno et nympha genitum Laurente Marica
accipimus; Fauno Picus pater, isque parentem
te, Saturne, refert, tu sanguinis ultimus auctor.
filius huic fato diuum prolesque uirilis 50
nulla fuit, primaque oriens erepta iuuenta est.
sola domum et tantas seruabat filia sedes
iam matura uiro, iam plenis nubilis annis.
multi illam magno e Latio totaque petebant
Ausonia; petit ante alios pulcherrimus omnis 55
Turnus, auis atausque potens, quem regia coniunx
adiungi generum miro properabat amore;
sed uariis portenta deum terroribus obstant.
laurus erat tecti medio in penetralibus altis
sacra comam multosque metu seruata per annos, 60
quam pater inuentam, primas cum conderet arces,
ipse ferebatur Phoebo sacrasse Latinus,
Laurentisque ab ea nomen posuisse colonis.
huius apes summum densae (mirabile dictu)
stridore ingenti liquidum trans aethera uectae 65
obsedere apicem, et pedibus per mutua nexis

examen subitum ramo frondente pependit.
continuo uates 'externum cernimus' inquit
'aduentare uirum et partis petere agmen easdem
partibus ex isdem et summa dominarier arce.' 70
praeterea, castis adolet dum altaria taedis,
et iuxta genitorem astat Lauinia uirgo,
uisa (nefas) longis comprehendere crinibus ignem
atque omnem ornatum flamma crepitante cremari,
regalisque accensa comas, accensa coronam 75
insignem gemmis; tum fumida lumine fuluo
inuolui ac totis Vulcanum spargere tectis.
id uero horrendum ac uisu mirabile ferri:
namque fore inlustrem fama fatisque canebant
ipsam, sed populo magnum portendere bellum. 80

At rex sollicitus monstris oracula Fauni,
fatidici genitoris, adit lucosque sub alta
consult Albunea, nemorum quae maxima sacro
fonte sonat saeuamque exhalat opaca mephitim.
hinc Italiae gentes omnisque Oenotria tellus 85
in dubiis responsa petunt; huc dona sacerdos
cum tulit et caesarum ouium sub nocte silenti
pellibus incubuit stratis somnosque petiuit,
multa modis simulacra uidet uolitantia miris
et uarias audit uoces fruiturque deorum 90
conloquio atque imis Acheronta adfatur Auernis.
hic et tum pater ipse petens responsa Latinus
centum lanigeras mactabat rite bidentis,
atque harum effultus tergo stratisque iacebat
uelleribus: subita ex alto uox reddita luco est: 95
'ne pete conubiis natam sociare Latinis,
o mea progenies, thalamis neu crede paratis;
externi uenient generi, qui sanguine nostrum
nomen in astra ferant, quorumque a stirpe nepotes
omnia sub pedibus, qua sol utrumque recurrens 100
aspicit Oceanum, uertique regique uidebunt.'
haec responsa patris Fauni monitusque silenti

nocte datos non ipse suo premit ore Latinus,
sed circum late uolitans iam Fama per urbes
Ausonias tulerat, cum Laomedontia pubes 105
gramineo ripae religauit ab aggere classem.

Aeneas primique duces et pulcher Iulus
corpora sub ramis deponunt arboris altae,
instituuntque dapes et adorea liba per herbam
subiciunt epulis (sic Iuppiter ipse monebat) 110
et Cereale solum pomis agrestibus augment.
consumptis hic forte aliis, ut uertere morsus
exiguam in Cererem penuria adegit edendi,
et uiolare manu malisque audacibus orbem
fatalis crusti patulis nec parcere quadris: 115
‘heus, etiam mensas consumimus?’ inquit Iulus,
nec plura, adludens. ea uox audita laborum
prima tulit finem, primamque loquentis ab ore
eripuit pater ac stupefactus numine pressit.
continuo ‘salue fatis mihi debita tellus 120
uosque’ ait ‘o fidi Troiae saluete penates:
hic domus, haec patria est. genitor mihi talia namque
(nunc repeto) Anchises fatorum arcana reliquit:
“cum te, nate, fames ignota ad litora uectum
accisis coget dapibus consumere mensas, 125
tum sperare domos defessus, ibique memento
prima locare manu molirique aggere tecta.”
haec erat illa fames, haec nos suprema manebat
exitii positura modum.
quare agite et primo laeti cum lumine solis 130
quae loca, quique habeant homines, ubi moenia gentis,
uestigemus et a portu diuersa petamus.
nunc pateras libate Ioui precibusque uocate
Anchisen genitorem, et uina reponite mensis.’
Sic deinde effatus frondenti tempora ramo 135
implicat et geniumque loci primamque deorum
Tellurem Nymphasque et adhuc ignota precatur
flumina, tum Noctem Noctisque orientia signa

Idaeumque Iouem Phrygiamque ex ordine matrem
inuocat, et duplicis caeloque Ereboque parentis. 140
hic pater omnipotens ter caelo clarus ab alto
intonuit, radiisque ardentem lucis et auro
ipse manu quatiens ostendit ab aethere nubem.
diditur hic subito Troiana per agmina rumor
aduenisse diem quo debita moenia condant. 145
certatim instaurant epulas atque omine magno
crateras laeti statuunt et uina coronant.

Postera cum prima lustrabat lampade terras
orta dies, urbem et finis et litora gentis
diuersi explorant: haec fontis stagna Numici, 150
hunc Thybrim fluuium, hic fortis habitare Latinos.
tum satus Anchisa delectos ordine ab omni
centum oratores augusta ad moenia regis
ire iubet, ramis uelatos Palladis omnis,
donaque ferre uiro pacemque exposcere Teucris. 155
haud mora, festinant iussi rapidisque feruntur
passibus. ipse humili designat moenia fossa
moliturque locum, primasque in litore sedes
castrorum in morem pinnis atque aggere cingit.
iamque iter emensi turris ac tecta Latinorum 160
ardua cernebant iuuenes muroque subibant.
ante urbem pueri et primaueo flore iuuentus
exercentur equis domitantque in puluere currus,
aut acris tendunt arcus aut lenta lacertis
spicula contorquent, cursuque ictuque lacescunt: 165
cum praeuectus equo longaeui regis ad auris
nuntius ingentis ignota in ueste reportat
aduenisse uiros. ille intra tecta uocari
imperat et solio medius consedit auito.

Tectum augustum, ingens, centum sublime columnis 170
urbe fuit summa, Laurentis regia Pici,
horrendum siluis et religione parentum.
hic sceptrum accipere et primos attollere fascis

regibus omen erat; hoc illis curia templum,
hae sacris sedes epulis; hic ariete caeso 175
perpetuis soliti patres considerare mensis.
quin etiam ueterum effigies ex ordine auorum
antiqua e cedro, Italusque paterque Sabinus
uitisator curuam seruans sub imagine falcem,
Saturnusque senex Ianique bifrontis imago 180
uestibulo astabant, aliique ab origine reges,
Martiaque ob patriam pugnando uulnera passi.
multaque praeterea sacris in postibus arma,
captiui pendent currus curuaeque secures
et cristae capitum et portarum ingentia claustra 185
spiculaque clipeique ereptaque rostra carinis.
ipse Quirinali lituo paruaque sedebat
succinctus trabea laeuaque ancile gerebat
Picus, equum domitor, quem capta cupidine coniunx
aurea percussum uirga uersumque uenenis 190
fecit auem Circe sparsitque coloribus alas.

Tali intus templo diuum patriaue Latinus
sede sedens Teucros ad sese in tecta uocauit,
atque haec ingressis placido prior edidit ore:
‘dicite, Dardanidae (neque enim nescimus et urbem 195
et genus, auditique aduertitis aequore cursum),
quid petitis? quae causa rates aut cuius egentis
litus ad Ausonium tot per uada caerula uexit?
siue errore uiae seu tempestatibus acti,
qualia multa mari nautae patiuntur in alto, 200
fluminis intrastis ripas portuque sedetis,
ne fugite hospitium, neue ignorete Latinos
Saturni gentem haud uinclo nec legibus aequam,
sponte sua ueterisque dei se more tenentem.
atque equidem memini (fama est obscurior annis) 205
Auruncos ita ferre senes, his ortus ut agris
Dardanus Idaeas Phrygiae penetrarit ad urbes
Threiciamque Samum, quae nunc Samothracia fertur.
hinc illum Corythi Tyrrhena ab sede profectum

aurea nunc solio stellantis regia caeli 210
accipit et numerum diuorum altaribus auget.’

Dixerat, et dicta Ilioneus sic uoce secutus:
‘rex, genus egregium Fauni, nec fluctibus actos
atra subegit hiems uestris succedere terris,
nec sidus regione uiae litusue fefellit: 215
consilio hanc omnes animisque uolentibus urbem
adferimur pulsi regnis, quae maxima quondam
extremo ueniens sol aspiciebat Olympo.
ab Ioue principium generis, Ioue Dardana pubes
gaudet auo, rex ipse Iouis de gente suprema: 220
Troius Aeneas tua nos ad limina misit.
quanta per Idaeos saeuis effusa Mycenis
tempestas ierit campos, quibus actus uterque
Europae atque Asiae fatis concurrerit orbis,
audiit et si quem tellus extrema refuso 225
summouet Oceano et si quem extenta plagarum
quattuor in medio dirimit plaga solis iniqui.
diluuiio ex illo tot uasta per aequora uecti
dis sedem exiguum patriis litusque rogamus
innocuum et cunctis undamque auramque patentem. 230
non erimus regno indecores, nec uestra feretur
fama leuis tantique abolescet gratia facti,
nec Troiam Ausonios gremio excepisse pigebit.
fata per Aeneae iuro dextramque potentem,
siue fide seu quis bello est expertus et armis: 235
multi nos populi, multae (ne temne, quod ultro
praeferimus manibus uittas ac uerba precantia)
et petiere sibi et uoluere adiungere gentes;
sed nos fata deum uestras exquirere terras
imperiiis egere suis. hinc Dardanus ortus, 240
huc repetit iussisque ingentibus urget Apollo
Tyrrhenum ad Thybrim et fontis uada sacra Numici.
dat tibi praeterea fortunae parua prioris
munera, reliquias Troia ex ardente receptas.
hoc pater Anchises auro libabat ad aras, 245

hoc Priami gestamen erat cum iura uocatis
more daret populis, sceptrumque sacerque tiaras
Iliadumque labor uestes.'

Talibus Ilionei dictis defixa Latinus
obtutu tenet ora soloque immobilis haeret, 250
intentos uoluens oculos. nec purpura regem
picta mouet nec sceptrum mouent Priameia tantum
quantum in conubio natae thalamoque moratur,
et ueteris Fauni uoluit sub pectore sortem:
hunc illum fatis externa ab sede profectum 255
portendi generum paribusque in regna uocari
auspiciis, huic progeniem uirtute futuram
egregiam et totum quae uiribus occupet orbem.
tandem laetus ait: 'di nostra incepta secudent
auguriumque suum! dabitur, Troiane, quod optas. 260
munera nec sperno: non uobis rege Latino
diuitis uber agri Troiaeue opulentia deerit.
ipse modo Aeneas, nostri si tanta cupido est,
si iungi hospitio properat sociusque uocari,
adueniat, uultus neue exhorrescat amicos: 265
pars mihi pacis erit dextram tetigisse tyranni.
uos contra regi mea nunc mandata referte:
est mihi nata, uiro gentis quam iungere nostrae
non patrio ex adyto sortes, non plurima caelo
monstra sinunt; generos externis adfore ab oris, 270
hoc Latio restare canunt, qui sanguine nostrum
nomen in astra ferant. hunc illum poscere fata
et reor et, si quid ueri mens augurat, opto.'
haec effatus equos numero pater eligit omni (stabant ter centum nitidi in praeseptibus altis); 275
omnibus extemplo Teucris iubet ordine duci
instratos ostro alipedes pictisque tapetis (aurea pectoribus demissa monilia pendent,
tecti auro fuluum mandunt sub dentibus aurum),
absenti Aeneae currum geminosque iugalis 280
semine ab aetherio spirantis naribus ignem,

illorum de gente patri quos daedala Circe
supposita de matre nothos furata creauit.
talibus Aeneadae donis dictisque Latini
sublimes in equis redeunt pacemque reportant. 285

Ecce autem Inachiis sese referebat ab Argis
saeua Iouis coniunx aurasque inuecta tenebat,
et laetum Aenean classemque ex aethere longe
Dardaniam Siculo prospexit ab usque Pachyno.
moliri iam tecta uidet, iam fidere terrae, 290
deseruisse rates: stetit acri fixa dolore.
tum quassans caput haec effundit pectore dicta:
‘heu stirpem inuisam et fatis contraria nostris
fata Phrygum! num Sigeis occumbere campis,
num capti potuere capi? num incensa cremauit 295
Troia uiros? medias acies mediosque per ignis
inuenere uiam. at, credo, mea numina tandem
fessa iacent, odiis aut exsaturata quieui.
quin etiam patria excussos infesta per undas
ausa sequi et profugis toto me opponere ponto. 300
absumptae in Teucros uires caelique marisque.
quid Syrtes aut Scylla mihi, quid uasta Charybdis
profuit? optato conduntur Thybridis alueo
securi pelagi atque mei. Mars perdere gentem
immanem Lapithum ualuit, concessit in iras 305
ipse deum antiquam genitor Calydonia Dianae,
quod scelus aut Lapithas tantum aut Calydonia merentem?
ast ego, magna Iouis coniunx, nil linquere inausum
quae potui infelix, quae memet in omnia uerti,
uincor ab Aenea. quod si mea numina non sunt 310
magna satis, dubitem haud equidem implorare quod usquam est:
flectere si nequeo superos, Acheronta mouebo.
non dabitur regnis, esto, prohibere Latinis,
atque immota manet fatis Lauinia coniunx:
at trahere atque moras tantis licet addere rebus, 315
at licet amborum populos excindere regum.
hac gener atque socer coeant mercede suorum:

sanguine Troiano et Rutulo dotabere, uirgo,
et Bellona manet te pronuba. nec face tantum
Cisseis praegnas ignis enixa iugalis; 320
quin idem Veneri partus suus et Paris alter,
funestaeque iterum recidiua in Pergama taedae.’
Haec ubi dicta dedit, terras horrenda petiuit;
luctificam Allecto dirarum ab sede dearum
infernisque ciet tenebris, cui tristia bella 325
iraeque insidiaeque et crimina noxia cordi.
odit et ipse pater Pluton, odere sorores
Tartareae monstrum: tot sese uertit in ora,
tam saeuae facies, tot pullulat atra colubris.
quam Iuno his acuit uerbis ac talia fatur: 330
‘hunc mihi da proprium, uirgo sata Nocte, laborem,
hanc operam, ne noster honos infractae cedat
fama loco, neu conubiis ambire Latinum
Aeneadae possint Italosue obsidere finis.
tu potes unanimos armare in proelia fratres 335
atque odiis uersare domos, tu uerbera tectis
funereasque inferre faces, tibi nomina mille,
mille nocendi artes. fecundum concute pectus,
dissice compositam pacem, sere crimina belli;
arma uelit poscatque simul rapiatque iuuentus.’ 340

Exim Gorgoneis Allecto infecta uenenis
principio Latium et Laurentis tecta tyranni
celsa petit, tacitumque obsedit limen Amatae,
quam super aduentu Teucrum Turnique hymenaeis
femineae ardentem curaeque iraeque coquebant. 345
huic dea caeruleis unum de crinibus anguem
conicit, inque sinum praecordia ad intima subdit,
quo furibunda domum monstro permisceat omnem.
ille inter uestis et leuia pectora lapsus
uoluitur attactu nullo, fallitque furem 350
uipeream inspirans animam; fit tortile collo
aurum ingens coluber, fit longae taenia uittae
innectitque comas et membris lubricus errat.

ac dum prima lues udo sublapsa ueneno
pertemptat sensus atque ossibus implicat ignem 355
necdum animus toto percepit pectore flammam,
mollius et solito matrum de more locuta est,
multa super natae lacrimans Phrygiisque hymenaeis:
‘exsulibusne datur ducenda Lauinia Teucris,
o genitor, nec te miseret nataeque tuique? 360
nec matris miseret, quam primo Aquilone relinquet
perfidus alta petens abducta uirgine praedo?
at non sic Phrygius penetrat Lacedaemona pastor,
Ledaeamque Helenam Troianas uexit ad urbes?
quid tua sancta fides? quid cura antiqua tuorum 365
et consanguineo totiens data dextera Turno?
si gener externa petitur de gente Latinis,
idque sedet, Faunisque premunt te iussa parentis,
omnem equidem sceptris terram quae libera nostris
dissidet externam reor et sic dicere diuos. 370
et Turno, si prima domus repetatur origo,
Inachus Acrisiusque patres mediaeque Mycenae.’

His ubi nequiquam dictis experta Latinum
contra stare uidet, penitusque in uiscera lapsum
serpentis furiale malum totamque pererrat, 375
tum uero infelix ingentibus excita monstribus
immensam sine more furit lymphata per urbem.
ceu quondam torto uolitans sub uerbere turbo,
quem pueri magno in gyro uacua atria circum
intenti ludo exercent — ille actus habena 380
curuatis fertur spatiis; stupet inscia supra
impubesque manus mirata uolubile buxum;
dant animos plagae: non cursu segnior illo
per medias urbes agitur populosque ferocis.
quin etiam in siluas simulato numine Bacchi 385
maius adorta nefas maioremque orsa furorem
euolat et natam frondosis montibus abdit,
quo thalamum eripiat Teucris taedasque moretur,
euhoe Bacche fremens, solum te uirgine dignum

uociferans: etenim mollis tibi sumere thyrsos, 390
te lustrare choro, sacrum tibi pascere crinem.
fama uolat, furiisque accensas pectore matres
idem omnis simul ardor agit noua quaerere tecta.
deseruere domos, uentis dant colla comasque;
ast aliae tremulis ululatibus aethera complent 395
pampineasque gerunt incinctae pellibus hastas.
ipsa inter medias flagrantem feruida pinum
sustinet ac natae Turnique canit hymenaeos
sanguineam torquens aciem, toruumque repente
clamat: 'io matres, audite, ubi quaeque, Latinae: 400
si qua piis animis manet infelicis Amatae
gratia, si iuris materni cura remordet,
soluite crinalis uittas, capite orgia mecum.'
talem inter siluas, inter deserta ferarum
reginam Allecto stimulis agit undique Bacchi. 405

Postquam uisa satis primos acuisse furores
consiliumque omnemque domum uertisse Latini,
protinus hinc fuscis tristis dea tollitur alis
audacis Rutuli ad muros, quam dicitur urbem
Acrisioneis Danae fundasse colonis 410
praecipiti delata Noto. locus Ardea quondam
dictus auis, et nunc magnum manet Ardea nomen,
sed fortuna fuit. tectis hic Turnus in altis
iam mediam nigra carpebat nocte quietem.
Allecto toruam faciem et furialia membra 415
exuit, in uultus sese transformat anilis
et frontem obscenam rugis arat, induit albos
cum uitta crinis, tum ramum innectit oliuae;
fit Calybe Iunonis anus templique sacerdos,
et iuueni ante oculos his se cum uocibus offert: 420
'Turne, tot incassum fusos pati laboribus,
et tua Dardaniis transcribi sceptrum colonis?
rex tibi coniugium et quaesitas sanguine dotes
abnegat, externusque in regnum quaeritur heres.
i nunc, ingratis offer te, inrise, periculis; 425

Tyrrhenas, i, sterne acies, tege pace Latinos.
haec adeo tibi me, placida cum nocte iaceres,
ipsa palam fari omnipotens Saturnia iussit.
quare age et armari pubem portisque moueri
laetus in arua para, et Phrygios qui flumine pulchro 430
consedere duces pictasque exure carinas.
caelestum uis magna iubet. rex ipse Latinus,
ni dare coniugium et dicto parere fatetur,
sentiat et tandem Turnum experiatur in armis.’

Hic iuuenis uatem inridens sic orsa uicissim 435
ore refert: ‘classis inuectas Thybridis undam
non, ut rere, meas effugit nuntius auris;
ne tantos mihi finge metus. nec regia Iuno
immemor est nostri.
sed te uicta situ uerique effeta senectus, 440
o mater, curis nequiquam exercet, et arma
regum inter falsa uatem formidine ludit.
cura tibi diuum effigies et templa tueri;
bella uiri pacemque gerent quis bella gerenda.’

Talibus Allecto dictis exarsit in iras. 445
at iuueni oranti subitus tremor occupat artus,
deriguere oculi: tot Erinys sibilat hydris
tantaque se facies aperit; tum flammea torquens
lumina cunctantem et quaerentem dicere plura
reppulit, et geminos erexit crinibus anguis, 450
uerberaque insonuit rabidoque haec addidit ore:
‘en ego uicta situ, quam ueri effeta senectus
arma inter regum falsa formidine ludit.
respice ad haec: adsum dirarum ab sede sororum,
bella manu letumque gero.’ 455
sic effata facem iuueni coniecit et atro
lumine fumantis fixit sub pectore taedas.
olli somnum ingens rumpit pauor, ossaque et artus
perfundit toto proruptus corpore sudor.
arma amens fremit, arma toro tectisque requirit; 460

saeuit amor ferri et scelerata insania belli,
ira super: magno ueluti cum flamma sonore
uirgea suggeritur costis undantis aeni
exsultantque aestu latices, furit intus aquai
fumidus atque alte spumis exuberat amnis, 465
nec iam se capit unda, uolat uapor ater ad auras.
ergo iter ad regem polluta pace Latinum
indicit primis iuuenum et iubet arma parari,
tutari Italiam, detrudere finibus hostem;
se satis ambobus Teucrisque uenire Latinisque. 470
haec ubi dicta dedit diuosque in uota uocauit,
certatim sese Rutuli exhortantur in arma.
hunc decus egregium formae mouet atque iuuentae,
hunc atau reges, hunc claris dextera factis.

Dum Turnus Rutulos animis audacibus implet, 475
Allecto in Teucros Stygiis se concitat alis,
arte noua, speculata locum, quo litore pulcher
insidiis cursuque feras agitabat Iulus.
hic subitam canibus rabiem Cocytia uirgo
obicit et noto naris contingit odore, 480
ut ceruum ardentes agerent; quae prima laborum
causa fuit belloque animos accendit agrestis.
ceruus erat forma praestanti et cornibus ingens,
Tyrrhidae pueri quem matris ab ubere raptum
nutribant Tyrrhusque pater, cui regia parent 485
armenta et late custodia credita campi.
adsuetum imperiis soror omni Siluia cura
mollibus intexens ornabat cornua sertis,
pectebatque ferum puroque in fonte lauabat.
ille manum patiens mensaeque adsuetus erili 490
errabat siluis rursusque ad limina nota
ipse domum sera quamuis se nocte ferebat.
hunc procul errantem rabidae uenantis Iuli
commouere canes, fluuio cum forte secundo
deflueret ripaque aestus uiridante leuaret. 495
ipse etiam eximiae laudis succensus amore

Ascanius curuo derexit spicula cornu;
nec dextrae erranti deus afuit, actaque multo
perque uterum sonitu perque ilia uenit harundo.
saucius at quadripes nota intra tecta refugit 500
successitque gemens stabulis, questuque cruentus
atque imploranti similis tectum omne replebat.
Siluia prima soror palmis percussa lacertos
auxilium uocat et duros conclamat agrestis.
olli (pestis enim tacitis latet aspera siluis) 505
improvisi adsunt, hic torre armatus obusto,
stipitis hic grauidi nodis; quod cuique repertum
rimanti telum ira facit. uocat agmina Tyrrhus,
quadrifidam quercum cuneis ut forte coactis
scindebat rapta spirans immane securi. 510
At saeua e speculis tempus dea nacta nocendi
ardua tecta petit stabuli et de culmine summo
pastorale canit signum cornuque recuruo
Tartaream intendit uocem, qua protinus omne
contremuit nemus et siluae insonuere profundae; 515
audiit et Triuia longe lacus, audiit amnis
sulpurea Nar albus aqua fontesque Velini,
et trepidae matres pressere ad pectora natos.
tum uero ad uocem celeres, qua bucina signum
dira dedit, raptis concurrunt undique telis 520
indomiti agricolae, nec non et Troia pubes
Ascanio auxilium castris effundit apertis.
derexere acies. non iam certamine agresti
stipitibus duris agitur sudibusue praeustis,
sed ferro ancipiti decernunt atraque late 525
horrescit strictis seges ensibus, aeraque fulgent
sole lacessita et lucem sub nubila iactant:
fluctus uti primo coepit cum albescere uento,
paulatim sese tollit mare et altius undas
erigit, inde imo consurgit ad aethera fundo. 530
hic iuuenis primam ante aciem stridente sagitta,
natorum Tyrrhi fuerat qui maximus, Almo,
sternitur; haesit enim sub gutture uulnus et udae

uocis iter tenuemque inclusit sanguine uitam.
corpora multa uirum circa seniorque Galaesus, 535
dum paci medium se offert, iustissimus unus
qui fuit Ausoniisque olim ditissimus aruis:
quinque greges illi balantum, quina redibant
armenta, et terram centum uertebat aratris.

Atque ea per campos aequo dum Marte geruntur, 540
promissi dea facta potens, ubi sanguine bellum
imbuit et primae commisit funera pugnae,
deserit Hesperiam et caeli conuersa per auras
Iunonem uictrix adfatur uoce superba:
'en, perfecta tibi bello discordia tristi; 545
dic in amicitiam coeant et foedera iungant.
quandoquidem Ausonio respersi sanguine Teucros,
hoc etiam his addam, tua si mihi certa uoluntas:
finitimas in bella feram rumoribus urbes,
accendamque animos insani Martis amore 550
undique ut auxilio ueniant; spargam arma per agros.'
tum contra Iuno: 'terrorum et fraudis abunde est:
stant belli causae, pugnatur comminus armis,
quae fors prima dedit sanguis nouus imbuit arma.
talìa coniugia et talis celebrent hymenaeos 555
egregium Veneris genus et rex ipse Latinus.
te super aetherias errare licentius auras
haud pater ille uelit, summi regnator Olympi.
cede locis. ego, si qua super fortuna laborum est,
ipsa regam.' talis dederat Saturnia uoces; 560
illa autem attollit stridentis anguibus alas
Cocytique petit sedem supera ardua linquens.
est locus Italiae medio sub montibus altis,
nobilis et fama multis memoratus in oris,
Amsancti ualles; densis hunc frondibus atrum 565
urget utrimque latus nemoris, medioque fragosus
dat sonitum saxis et torto uertice torrens.
hic specus horrendum et saeui spiracula Ditis
monstrantur, ruptoque ingens Acheronte uorago

pestiferas aperit fauces, quis condita Erinys, 570
inuisum numen, terras caelumque leuabat.

Nec minus interea extremam Saturnia bello
imponit regina manum. ruit omnis in urbem
pastorum ex acie numerus, caesosque reportant
Almonem puerum foedatique ora Galaesi, 575
implorantque deos obtestanturque Latinum.
Turnus adest medioque in crimine caedis et igni
terrorem ingeminat: Teucros in regna uocari,
stirpem admisceri Phrygiam, se limine pelli.
tum quorum attonitae Baccho nemora auia matres 580
insultant thiasis (neque enim leue nomen Amatae)
undique collecti coeunt Martemque fatigant.
ilicet infandum cuncti contra omina bellum,
contra fata deum peruerso numine poscunt.
certatim regis circumstant tecta Latini; 585
ille uelut pelago rupes immota resistit,
ut pelagi rupes magno ueniente fragore,
quae sese multis circum latrantibus undis
mole tenet; scopuli nequiquam et spumea circum
saxa fremunt laterique inlisa refunditur alga. 590
uerum ubi nulla datur caecum exsuperare potestas
consilium, et saeuae nutu Iunonis eunt res,
multa deos aurasque pater testatus inanis
‘frangimur heu fatis’ inquit ‘ferimurque procella!
ipsi has sacrilego pendetis sanguine poenas, 595
o miseri. te, Turne, nefas, te triste manebit
supplicium, uotisque deos uenerabere seris.
nam mihi parta quies, omnisque in limine portus
funere felici spoliior.’ nec plura locutus
saepsit se tectis rerumque reliquit habenas. 600

Mos erat Hesperio in Latio, quem protinus urbes
Albae coluere sacrum, nunc maxima rerum
Roma colit, cum prima mouent in proelia Martem,
siue Getis inferre manu lacrimabile bellum

Hyrcanisue Arabisue parant, seu tendere ad Indos 605
Auroramque sequi Parthosque reposcere signa:
sunt geminae Belli portae (sic nomine dicunt)
religione sacrae et saeui formidine Martis;
centum aerei claudunt uectes aeternaque ferri
robora, nec custos absistit limine Ianus. 610
has, ubi certa sedet patribus sententia pugnae,
ipse Quirinali trabea cinctuque Gabino
insignis reserat stridentia limina consul,
ipse uocat pugnas; sequitur tum cetera pubes,
aereaque adsensu conspirant cornua rauco. 615
hoc et tum Aeneadis indicere bella Latinus
more iubebatur tristisque recludere portas.
abstinuit tactu pater auersusque refugit
foeda ministeria, et caecis se condidit umbris.
tum regina deum caelo delapsa morantis 620
impulit ipsa manu portas, et cardine uerso
Belli ferratos rumpit Saturnia postis.
ardet inexcita Ausonia atque immobilis ante;
pars pedes ire parat campis, pars arduus altis
puluerulentus equis furit; omnes arma requirunt. 625
pars leuis clipeos et spicula lucida tergent
aruina pingui subiguntque in cote securis;
signaque ferre iuuat sonitusque audire tubarum.
quinque adeo magnae positae incudibus urbes
tela nouant, Atina potens Tiburque superbum, 630
Ardea Crustumerique et turrigerae Antemnae.
tegmina tuta cauant capitum flectuntque salignas
umbonum cratis; alii thoracas aenos
aut leuis ocreas lento ducunt argento;
uomeris huc et falcis honos, huc omnis aratri 635
cessit amor; recoquunt patrios fornacibus ensis.
classica iamque sonant, it bello tessera signum;
hic galeam tectis trepidus rapit, ille trementis
ad iuga cogit equos, clipeumque auroque tralicem
loricam induitur fidoque accingitur ense. 640

Pandite nunc Helicon, deae, cantusque mouete,
qui bello exciti reges, quae quemque secutae
complerint campos acies, quibus Itala iam tum
floruerit terra alma uiris, quibus arserit armis;
et meministis enim, diuae, et memorare potestis; 645
ad nos uix tenuis famae perlabitur aura.

Primus init bellum Tyrrhenis asper ab oris
contemptor diuum Mezentius agminaque armat.
filius huic iuxta Lausus, quo pulchrior alter
non fuit excepto Laurentis corpore Turni; 650
Lausus, equum domitor debellatorque ferarum,
ducit Agyllina nequiquam ex urbe secutos
mille uiros, dignus patriis qui laetior esset
imperiiis et cui pater haud Mezentius esset.

Post hos insignem palma per gramina currum 655
uictoresque ostentat equos satus Hercule pulchro
pulcher Auentinus, clipeoque insigne paternum
centum anguis cinctamque gerit serpentibus Hydram;
collis Auentini silua quem Rhea sacerdos
furtiuum partu sub luminis edidit oras, 660
mixta deo mulier, postquam Laurentia uictor
Geryone extincto Tirynthius attigit arua, Tyrrhenoque boues in flumine lauit Hiberas.
pila manu saeuosque gerunt in bella dolones,
et tereti pugnant mucrone uerunque Sabello. 665
ipse pedes, tegimen torquens immane leonis,
terribili impexum saeta cum dentibus albis
indutus capiti, sic regia tecta subibat,
horridus Herculeoque umeros innexus amictu.

Tum gemini fratres Tiburtia moenia linquunt, 670
fratris Tiburti dictam cognomine gentem,
Catillusque acerque Coras, Argiua iuuentus,
et primam ante aciem densa inter tela feruntur:
ceu duo nubigenae cum uertice montis ab alto

descendunt Centauri Homolen Othrymque niualem 675
linquentes cursu rapido; dat euntibus ingens
silua locum et magno cedunt uirgulta fragore.

Nec Praenestinae fundator defuit urbis,
Volcano genitum pecora inter agrestia regem
inuentumque focus omnis quem credidit aetas, 680
Caeculus. hunc legio late comitatur agrestis:
quique altum Praeneste uiri quique arua Gabinae
Iunonis gelidumque Anienem et roscida riuis
Hernica saxa colunt, quos diues Anagnia pascis,
quos Amasene pater. non illis omnibus arma 685
nec clipei currusue sonant; pars maxima glandes
liuentis plumbi spargit, pars spicula gestat
bina manu, fuluosque lupi de pelle galeros
tegmen habent capiti; uestigia nuda sinistri
instituere pedis, crudus tegit altera pero. 690

At Messapus, equum domitor, Neptunia proles,
quem neque fas igni cuiquam nec sternere ferro,
iam pridem resides populos desuetaque bello
agmina in arma uocat subito ferrumque retractat.
hi Fescenninas acies Aequosque Faliscos, 695
hi Soractis habent arces Flauiniaque arua
et Cimini cum monte lacum lucosque Capenos.
ibant aequati numero regemque canebant:
ceu quondam niuei liquida inter nubila cycni
cum sese e pastu referunt et longa canoros 700
dant per colla modos, sonat amnis et Asia longe
pulsa palus.
nec quisquam aeratas acies examine tanto
misceri putet, aeriam sed gurgite ab alto
urgeri uolucrum raucarum ad litora nubem. 705

Ecce Sabinorum prisco de sanguine magnum
agmen agens Clausus magnique ipse agminis instar,
Claudia nunc a quo diffunditur et tribus et gens

per Latium, postquam in partem data Roma Sabinis.
una ingens Amiterna cohors priscique Quirites, 710
Ereti manus omnis oliuiferaeque Mutuscae;
qui Nomentum urbem, qui Rosea rura Velini,
qui Tetricae horrentis rupes montemque Seuerum
Casperiamque colunt Forulosque et flumen Himellae,
qui Tiberim Fabarimque bibunt, quos frigida misit 715 Nursia, et Ortinae classes populique Latini,
quosque secans infaustum interluit Allia nomen:
quam multi Libyco uoluuntur marmore fluctus
saeuus ubi Orion hibernis conditur undis,
uel cum sole nouo densae torrentur aristae 720
aut Hermi campo aut Lyciae flauentibus aruis.
scuta sonant pulsuque pedum conterrita tellus.

Hinc Agamemnonius, Troiani nominis hostis,
curru iungit Halaesus equos Turnoque ferocis
mille rapit populos, uertunt felicia Baccho 725
Massica qui rastris, et quos de collibus altis
Aurunci misere patres Sidicinaque iuxta
aequora, quique Cales linquunt amnisque uadosi
accola Volturni, pariterque Saticulus asper
Oscorumque manus. teretes sunt aclydes illis 730
tela, sed haec lento mos est aptare flagello.
laeuas caetra tegit, falcati comminus enses.

Nec tu carminibus nostris indictus abibis,
Oebale, quem generasse Telon Sebethide nympha
fertur, Teleboum Capreas cum regna teneret, 735
iam senior; patriis sed non et filius aruis
contentus late iam tum dicione premebat
Sarrastis populos et quae rigat aequora Sarnus,
quique Rufras Batulumque tenent atque arua Celemnae,
et quos maliferae despectant moenia Abellae, 740
Teutonico ritu soliti torquere cateias;
tegmina quis capitum raptus de subere cortex
aerataeque micant peltae, micat aereus ensis.

Et te montosae misere in proelia Nersae,
Vfens, insignem fama et felicibus armis, 745
horrida praecipue cui gens adsuetaque multo
uenatu nemorum, duris Aequicula glaebis.
armati terram exercent semperque recentis
conuectare iuuat praedas et uiuere rapto.

Quin et Marruua uenit de gente sacerdos 750
fronde super galeam et felici comptus oliua
Archippi regis missu, fortissimus Vmbro,
uipereo generi et grauitur spirantibus hydrys
spargere qui somnos cantuque manuque solebat,
mulcebatque iras et morsus arte leuabat. 755
sed non Dardaniae medicari cuspidis ictum
eualuit neque eum iuuere in uulnera cantus
somniaferi et Marsis quaesitae montibus herbae.
te nemus Angitia, uitrea te Fucinus unda,
te liquidi fleuere lacus. 760

Ibat et Hippolyti proles pulcherrima bello,
Virbius, insignem quem mater Aricia misit,
eductum Egeriae lucis umentia circum
litora, pinguis ubi et placabilis ara Dianae.
namque ferunt fama Hippolytum, postquam arte nouercae 765
occiderit patriasque explevit sanguine poenas
turbatis distractus equis, ad sidera rursus
aetheria et superas caeli uenisse sub auras,
Paeoniis reuocatum herbis et amore Dianae.
tum pater omnipotens aliquem indignatus ab umbris 770
mortalem infernis ad lumina surgere uitae,
ipse repertorem medicinae talis et artis
fulmine Phoebigenam Stygias detrusit ad undas.
at Triuia Hippolytum secretis alma recondit
sedibus et nymphae Egeriae nemorique relegat, 775
solus ubi in siluis Italis ignobilis aeuum
exigeret uersoque ubi nomine Virbius esset.
unde etiam templo Triuia lucisque sacratis

cornipedes arcentur equi, quod litore currum
et iuuenem monstris pauidi effudere marinis. 780
filius ardentis haud setius aequore campi
exercebat equos curruque in bella ruebat.

Ipse inter primos praestanti corpore Turnus
uertitur arma tenens et toto uertice supra est.
cui triplici crinita iuba galea alta Chimaeram 785
sustinet Aetnaeos efflantem faucibus ignis;
tam magis illa fremens et tristibus effera flammis
quam magis effuso crudescunt sanguine pugnae.
at leuem clipeum sublatis cornibus Io
auro insignibat, iam saetis obsita, iam bos, 790
argumentum ingens, et custos uirginis Argus,
caelataque amnem fundens pater Inachus urna.
insequitur nimbus peditum clipeataque totis
agmina densentur campis, Argiuaque pubes
Auruncaeque manus, Rutuli ueteresque Sicani, 795

qua Saturae iacet atra palus gelidusque per imas
quaerit iter uallis atque in mare conditur Vfens.

Hos super aduenit Volsca de gente Camilla
agmen agens equitum et florentis aere cateruas,
bellatrix, non illa colo calathisue Mineruae 805
femineas adsueta manus, sed proelia uirgo

illam omnis tectis agrisque effusa iuuentus
turbaque miratur matrum et prospectat euntem,

attonitis inhians animis ut regius ostro
uelet honos leuis umeros, ut fibula crinem 815
auro internectat, Lyciam ut gerat ipsa pharetram
et pastorem praefixa cuspide myrtum.

LIBER VIII

Vt belli signum Laurenti Turnus ab arce
extulit et rauco strepuerunt cornua cantu,
utque acris concussit equos utque impulit arma,
extemplo turbati animi, simul omne tumultu
coniurat trepido Latium saeuitque iuuentus 5
effera. ductores primi Messapus et Vfens
contemptorque deum Mezentius undique cogunt
auxilia et latos uastant cultoribus agros.
mittitur et magni Venulus Diomedis ad urbem
qui petat auxilium, et Latio consistere Teucros, 10
aductum Aenean classi uictosque penatis
inferre et fatis regem se dicere posci
edoceat, multasque uiro se adiungere gentis
Dardanio et late Latio increbrescere nomen:
quid struat his coeptis, quem, si fortuna sequatur, 15
euentum pugnae cupiat, manifestius ipsi
quam Turno regi aut regi apparere Latino.

Talia per Latium. quae Laomedontius heros
cuncta uidens magno curarum fluctuat aestu,
atque animum nunc huc celerem nunc diuidit illuc 20
in partisque rapit uarias perque omnia uersat,
sicut aquae tremulum labris ubi lumen aenis
sole percussum aut radiantis imagine lunae
omnia peruolitat late loca, iamque sub auras
erigitur summique ferit laquearia tecti. 25
nox erat et terras animalia fessa per omnis
alituum pecudumque genus sopor altus habebat,
cum pater in ripa gelidique sub aetheris axe
Aeneas, tristi turbatus pectora bello,
procubuit seramque dedit per membra quietem. 30
huic deus ipse loci fluuio Tiberinus amoeno
populeas inter senior se attollere frondes
uisus (eum tenuis glauco uelabat amictu

carbasus, et crinis umbrosa tegebat harundo),
tum sic adfari et curas his demere dictis: 35

‘O sate gente deum, Troianam ex hostibus urbem
qui reuehis nobis aeternaque Pergama seruas,
exspectate solo Laurenti aruisque Latinis,
hic tibi certa domus, certi (ne absiste) penates.
neu belli terrere minis; tumor omnis et irae 40
concessere deum.

iamque tibi, ne uana putes haec fingere somnum,
litoreis ingens inuenta sub ilicibus sus
triginta capitum fetus enixa iacebit,
alba solo recubans, albi circum ubera nati. 45

[hic locus urbis erit, requies ea certa laborum,]
ex quo ter denis urbem redeuntibus annis
Ascanius clari condet cognominis Albam.
haud incerta cano. nunc qua ratione quod instat
expedias uictor, paucis (aduerte) docebo. 50
Arcades his oris, genus a Pallante profectum,
qui regem Euandrum comites, qui signa secuti,
delegere locum et posuere in montibus urbem
Pallantis proauis de nomine Pallanteum.

hi bellum adsidue ducunt cum gente Latina; 55
hos castris adhibe socios et foedera iunge.

ipse ego te ripis et recto flumine ducam,
aduersum remis superes subuectus ut amnem.
surge age, nate dea, primisque cadentibus astris
Iunoni fer rite preces, iramque minasque 60
supplicibus supera uotis. mihi uictor honorem
persolues. ego sum pleno quem flumine cernis
stringentem ripas et pinguis culta secantem,
caeruleus Thybris, caelo gratissimus amnis.

hic mihi magna domus, celsis caput urbibus exit.’ 65

Dixit, deinde lacu fluuius se condidit alto
ima petens; nox Aenean somnusque reliquit.
surgit et aetherii spectans orientia solis

lumina rite cauis undam de flumine palmis
sustinet ac talis effundit ad aethera uoces: 70
‘Nymphae, Laurentes Nymphae, genus omnibus unde est,
tuque, o Thybri tuo genitor cum flumine sancto,
accipite Aenean et tandem arcete periclis.
quo te cumque lacus miserantem incommoda nostra
fonte tenent, quocumque solo pulcherrimus exis, 75
semper honore meo, semper celebrare donis
corniger Hesperidum fluuius regnator aquarum.
adsis o tantum et propius tua numina firmes.’
sic memorat, geminasque legit de classe biremis
remigioque aptat, socios simul instruit armis. 80

Ecce autem subitum atque oculis mirabile monstrum,
candida per siluam cum fetu concolor albo
procubuit uiridique in litore conspicitur sus;
quam pius Aeneas tibi enim, tibi, maxima Iuno,
mactat sacra ferens et cum grege sistit ad aram. 85
Thybris ea fluuium, quam longa est, nocte tumentem
leniit, et tacita refluens ita substitit unda,
mitis ut in morem stagni placidaeque paludis
sterneret aequor aquis, remo ut luctamen abesset.
ergo iter inceptum celerant rumore secundo: 90
labitur uncta uadis abies; mirantur et undae,
miratur nemus insuetum fulgentia longe
scuta uirum fluuio pictasque innare carinas.
olli remigio noctemque diemque fatigant
et longos superant flexus, uariisque teguntur 95
arboribus, uiridisque secant placido aequore siluas.
sol medium caeli conscenderat igneus orbem
cum muros arcemque procul ac rara domorum
tectata uident, quae nunc Romana potentia caelo
aequauit, tum res inopes Euandrus habebat. 100
ocius aduertunt proras urbique propinquant.

Forte die sollemnem illo rex Arcas honorem
Amphitryoniadae magno diuisque ferebat

ante urbem in luco. Pallas huic filius una,
una omnes iuuenum primi pauperque senatus 105
tura dabant, tepidusque cruor fumabat ad aras.
ut celsas uidere rates atque inter opacum
adlabi nemus et tacitos incumbere remis,
terrentur uisu subito cunctique relictis
consurgunt mensis. audax quos rumpere Pallas 110
sacra uetat raptoque uolat telo obuius ipse,
et procul e tumulo: 'iuuenes, quae causa subegit
ignotas temptare uias? quo tenditis?' inquit.
'qui genus? unde domo? pacemne huc fertis an arma?'
tum pater Aeneas puppi sic fatur ab alta 115
paciferaeque manu ramum praetendit oliuae:
'Troiukenas ac tela uides inimica Latinis,
quos illi bello profugos egere superbo.
Euandrum petimus. ferte haec et dicite lectos
Dardaniae uenisse duces socia arma rogantis.' 120
obstupuit tanto percussus nomine Pallas:
'egredere o quicumque es' ait 'coramque parentem
adloquere ac nostris succede penatibus hospes.'
excepitque manu dextramque amplexus inhaesit;
progressi subeunt luco fluuiumque relinquunt. 125

Tum regem Aeneas dictis adfatur amicis:
'optime Graiugenum, cui me Fortuna precari
et uita comptos uoluit praetendere ramos,
non equidem extimui Danaum quod ductor et Arcas
quodque a stirpe fores geminis coniunctus Atridis; 130
sed mea me uirtus et sancta oracula diuum
cognatique patres, tua terris didita fama,
coniunxere tibi et fatis egere uolentem.
Dardanus, Iliacae primus pater urbis et auctor,
Electra, ut Grai perhibent, Atlantide cretus, 135
aduehitur Teucros; Electram maximus Atlas
edidit, aetherios umero qui sustinet orbis.
uobis Mercurius pater est, quem candida Maia
Cyllenae gelido conceptum uertice fudit;

at Maiam, auditis si quicquam credimus, Atlas, 140
idem Atlas generat caeli qui sidera tollit.
sic genus amborum scindit se sanguine ab uno.
his fretus non legatos neque prima per artem
temptamenta tui pepigi; me, me ipse meumque
obieci caput et supplex ad limina ueni. 145
gens eadem, quae te, crudeli Daunia bello
insequitur; nos si pellant nihil afore credunt
quin omnem Hesperiam penitus sua sub iuga mittant,
et mare quod supra teneant quodque adluit infra.
accipe daque fidem. sunt nobis fortia bello 150
pectora, sunt animi et rebus spectata iuuentus.’

Dixerat Aeneas. ille os oculosque loquentis
iamdudum et totum lustrabat lumine corpus.
tum sic pauca refert: ‘ut te, fortissime Teucrum,
accipio agnoscoque libens! ut uerba parentis 155
et uocem Anchisae magni uultumque recordor!
nam memini Hesioneae uisentem regna sororis
Laomedontiaden Priamum Salamina petentem
protinus Arcadiae gelidos inuisere finis.
tum mihi prima genas uestibat flore iuuentas, 160
mirabarque duces Teucros, mirabar et ipsum
Laomedontiaden; sed cunctis altior ibat
Anchises. mihi mens iuuenali ardebat amore
compellare uirum et dextrae coniungere dextram;
accessi et cupidus Phenei sub moenia duxi. 165
ille mihi insignem pharetram Lyciasque sagittas
discedens chlamydemque auro dedit intertextam,
frenaque bina meus quae nunc habet aurea Pallas.
ergo et quam petitis iuncta est mihi foedere dextra,
et lux cum primum terris se crastina reddet, 170
auxilio laetos dimittam opibusque iuuabo.
interea sacra haec, quando huc uenistis amici,
annua, quae differre nefas, celebrate fauentes
nobiscum, et iam nunc sociorum adsuescite mensis.’

Haec ubi dicta, dapes iubet et sublata reponi 175
pocula gramineoque uiros locat ipse sedili,
praecipuumque toro et uillosi pelle leonis
accipit Aenean solioque inuitat acerno.
tum lecti iuuenes certatim araeque sacerdos
uiscera tosta ferunt taurorum, onerantque canistris 180
dona laboratae Cereris, Bacchumque ministrant.
uescitur Aeneas simul et Troiana iuuentus
perpetui tergo bouis et lustralibus extis.
Postquam exempta fames et amor compressus edendi,
rex Euandrus ait: 'non haec sollemnia nobis, 185
has ex more dapes, hanc tanti numinis aram
uana superstitio ueterumque ignara deorum
imposuit: saeuis, hospes Troiane, periclis
seruati facimus meritosque nouamus honores.
iam primum saxis suspensam hanc aspice rupem, 190
disiectae procul ut moles desertaque montis
stat domus et scopuli ingentem traxere ruinam.
hic spelunca fuit uasto summota recessu,
semihominis Caci facies quam dira tenebat
solis inaccessam radiis; semperque recenti 195
caede tepebat humus, foribusque adfixa superbis
ora uirum tristi pendebant pallida tabo.
huic monstro Volcanus erat pater: illius atros
ore uomens ignis magna se mole ferebat.
attulit et nobis aliquando optantibus aetas 200
auxilium aduentumque dei. nam maximus ultor
tergemini nece Geryonae spoliisque superbus
Alcides aderat taurosque hac uictor agebat
ingentis, uallemque boues amnemque tenebant.
at furis Caci mens effera, ne quid inausum 205
aut intractatum scelerisue doliue fuisset,
quattuor a stabulis praestanti corpore tauros
auertit, totidem forma superante iuuenecas.
atque hos, ne qua forent pedibus uestigia rectis,
cauda in speluncam tractos uersisque uiarum 210
indiciis raptor saxo occultabat opaco;

quaerenti nulla ad speluncam signa ferebant.
interea, cum iam stabulis saturata moueret
Amphitryoniades armenta abitumque pararet,
discessu mugire boues atque omne querelis 215
impleri nemus et colles clamore relinqui.
reddidit una bouum uocem uastoque sub antro
mugit et Caci spem custodita fefellit.
hic uero Alcidae furiis exarserat atro
felle dolor: rapit arma manu nodisque grauatum 220
robur, et aërii cursu petit ardua montis.
tum primum nostri Cacus uidere timentem
turbatumque oculis; fugit ilicet ocior Euro
speluncamque petit, pedibus timor addidit alas.
ut sese inclusit ruptisque immane catenis 225
deiecit saxum, ferro quod et arte paterna
pendebat, fultosque emuniit obice postis,
ecce furens animis aderat Tirynthius omnemque
accessum lustrans huc ora ferebat et illuc,
dentibus infrendens. ter totum feruidus ira 230
lustrat Auentini montem, ter saxea temptat
limina nequiquam, ter fessus ualle resedit.
stabat acuta silex praecisis undique saxis
speluncae dorso insurgens, altissima uisu,
dirarum nidis domus opportuna uolucrum. 235
hanc, ut prona iugo laeuum incumbibat ad amnem,
dexter in aduersum nitens concussit et imis
auulsam soluit radicibus, inde repente
impulit; impulsu quo maximus intonat aether,
dissultant ripae refluitque exterritus amnis. 240
at specus et Caci detecta apparuit ingens
regia, et umbrosae penitus patuere cauernae,
non secus ac si qua penitus ui terra dehiscens
infernus reseret sedes et regna recludat
pallida, dis inuisa, superque immane barathrum 245
cernatur, trepident immisso lumine Manes.
ergo insperata deprensam luce repente
inclusumque cauo saxo atque insueta rudentem

desuper Alcides telis premit, omniaque arma
aduocat et ramis uastisque molaribus instat. 250
ille autem, neque enim fuga iam super ulla pericli,
faucibus ingentem fumum (mirabile dictu)
euomit inuoluitque domum caligine caeca
prospectum eripiens oculis, glomeratque sub antro
fumiferam noctem commixtis igne tenebris. 255
non tulit Alcides animis, seque ipse per ignem
praecipiti iecit saltu, qua plurimus undam
fumus agit nebulaque ingens specus aestuat atra.
hic Cacum in tenebris incendia uana uomentem
corripit in nodum complexus, et angit inhaerens 260
elisos oculos et siccum sanguine guttur.
panditur extemplo foribus domus atra reuulsis
abstractaeque boues abiurataeque rapinae
caelo ostenduntur, pedibusque informe cadauer
protrahitur. nequeunt expleri corda tuendo 265
terribilis oculos, uultum uillosaque saetis
pectora semiferi atque exstinctos faucibus ignis.
ex illo celebratus honos laetique minores
seruauere diem, primusque Potitius auctor
et domus Herculei custos Pinaria sacri 270
hanc aram luco statuit, quae maxima semper
dicetur nobis et erit quae maxima semper.
quare agite, o iuuenes, tantarum in munere laudum
cingite fronde comas et pocula porcite dextris,
communemque uocate deum et date uina uolentes.’ 275
dixerat, Herculea bicolor cum populus umbra
uelauitque comas foliisque innexa pependit,
et sacer impleuit dextram scyphus. ocius omnes
in mensam laeti libant diuosque precantur.
Deuexo interea propior fit Vesper Olympo. 280
iamque sacerdotes primusque Potitius ibant
pellibus in morem cincti, flammisque ferebant.
instaurant epulas et mensae grata secundae
dona ferunt cumulantque oneratis lancibus aras.
tum Salii ad cantus incensa altaria circum 285

populeis adsunt euincti tempora ramis,
hic iuuenum chorus, ille senum, qui carmine laudes
Herculeas et facta ferunt: ut prima nouercae
monstra manu geminosque premens eliserit anguis,
ut bello egregias idem disiecerit urbes, 290
Troiamque Oechaliamque, ut duros mille labores
rege sub Eurystheo fatis Iunonis iniquae
pertulerit. 'tu nubigenas, inuicte, bimembris
Hylaeumque Pholumque manu, tu Cresia mactas
prodigia et uastum Nemeae sub rupe leonem. 295
te Stygii tremuere lacus, te ianitor Orci
ossa super recubans antro semesa cruento;
nec te ullae facies, non terruit ipse Typhoeus
arduus arma tenens; non te rationis egentem
Lernaeus turba caputum circumstetit anguis. 300
salue, uera Iouis proles, decus addite diuis,
et nos et tua dexter adi pede sacra secundo.'
taliam carminibus celebrant; super omnia Caci
speluncam adiciunt spirantemque ignibus ipsum.
consonat omne nemus strepitu collesque resultant. 305

Exim se cuncti diuinis rebus ad urbem
perfectis referunt. ibat rex obsitus aeuo,
et comitem Aenean iuxta natumque tenebat
ingrediens uarioque uiam sermone leuabat.
miratur facilisque oculos fert omnia circum 310
Aeneas, capiturque locis et singula laetus
exquiratque auditque uirum monimenta priorum.
tum rex Euandrus Romanae conditor arcis:
'haec nemora indigenae Fauni Nymphaeque tenebant
gensque uirum truncis et duro robore nata, 315
quis neque mos neque cultus erat, nec iungere tauros
aut componere opes norant aut parcere parto,
sed rami atque asper uictu uenatus alebat.
primus ab aetherio uenit Saturnus Olympo
arma Iouis fugiens et regnis exsul adeptis. 320
is genus indocile ac dispersum montibus altis

composuit legesque dedit, Latiumque uocari
maluit, his quoniam latuisset tutus in oris.
aurea quae perhibent illo sub rege fuere
saecula: sic placida populos in pace regebat, 325
deterior donec paulatim ac decolor aetas
et belli rabies et amor successit habendi.
tum manus Ausonia et gentes uenere Sicanae,
saepius et nomen posuit Saturnia tellus;
tum reges asperque immani corpore Thybris, 330
a quo post Itali fluuium cognomine Thybrim
diximus; amisit uerum uetus Albula nomen.
me pulsum patria pelagique extrema sequentem
Fortuna omnipotens et ineluctabile fatum
his posuere locis, matrisque egere tremenda 335
Carmentis nymphae monita et deus auctor Apollo.’

Vix ea dicta, dehinc progressus monstrat et aram
et Carmentalem Romani nomine portam
quam memorant, nymphae priscum Carmentis honorem,
uatis fatidicae, cecinit quae prima futuros 340
Aeneadas magnos et nobile Pallanteum.
hinc lucum ingentem, quem Romulus acer asylum
rettulit, et gelida monstrat sub rupe Luperca Parrhasio dictum Panos de more Lycae.
nec non et sacri monstrat nemus Argileti 345
testaturque locum et letum docet hospitis Argi.
hinc ad Tarpeiam sedem et Capitolia ducit
aurea nunc, olim siluestribus horrida dumis.
iam tum religio pauidos terrebat agrestis
dira loci, iam tum siluam saxumque tremebant. 350
‘hoc nemus, hunc’ inquit ‘frondoso uertice collem
(quis deus incertum est) habitat deus; Arcades ipsum
credunt se uidisse Iouem, cum saepe nigrantem
aegida concuteret dextra nimbosque cieret.
haec duo praeterea disiectis oppida muris, 355
reliquias ueterumque uides monimenta uirorum.
hanc Ianus pater, hanc Saturnus condidit arcem;

Ianiculum huic, illi fuerat Saturnia nomen.
talibus inter se dictis ad tecta subibant
pauperis Euandri, passimque armenta uidebant 360
Romanoque foro et lautis mugire Carinis.
ut uentum ad sedes, 'haec' inquit 'limina uictor
Alcides subiit, haec illum regia cepit.
aude, hospes, contemnere opes et te quoque dignum
finge deo, rebusque ueni non asper egenis.' 365
dixit, et angusti subter fastigia tecti
ingentem Aenean duxit stratisque locauit
effultum foliis et pelle Libystidis ursae:
nox ruit et fuscis tellurem amplectitur alis.

At Venus haud animo nequiquam exterrita mater 370
Laurentumque minis et duro mota tumultu
Volcanum adloquitur, thalamoque haec coniugis aureo
incipit et dictis diuinum aspirat amorem:
'dum bello Argolici uastabant Pergama reges
debita casurasque inimicis ignibus arces, 375
non ullum auxilium miseris, non arma rogau
artis opisque tuae, nec te, carissime coniunx,
incassumue tuos uolui exercere labores,
quamuis et Priami deberem plurima natis,
et durum Aeneae fleuissem saepe laborem. 380
nunc Iouis imperiis Rutulorum constitit oris:
ergo eadem supplex uenio et sanctum mihi numen
arma rogo, genetrix nato. te filia Nerei,
te potuit lacrimis Tithonia flectere coniunx.
aspice qui coeant populi, quae moenia clausis 385
ferrum acuant portis in me excidiumque meorum.'
dixerat et niueis hinc atque hinc diua lacertis
cunctantem amplexu molli fouet. ille repente
accepit solitam flammam, notusque medullas
intrauit calor et labefacta per ossa cucurrit, 390
non secus atque olim tonitru cum rupta corusco
igne rima micans percurrit lumine nimbos;
sensit laeta dolis et formae conscia coniunx.

tum pater aeterno fatur deuinctus amore:
'quid causas petis ex alto? fiducia cessit 395
quo tibi, diua, mei? similis si cura fuisset,
tum quoque fas nobis Teucros armare fuisset;
nec pater omnipotens Troiam nec fata uetabant
stare decemque alios Priamum superesse per annos.
et nunc, si bellare paras atque haec tibi mens est, 400
quidquid in arte mea possum promittere curae,
quod fieri ferro liquidoue potest electro,
quantum ignes animaeque ualent, absiste precando
uiribus indubitare tuis.' ea uerba locutus
optatos dedit amplexus placidumque petiuit 405
coniugis infusus gremio per membra soporem.

Inde ubi prima quies medio iam noctis abactae
curriculo expulerat somnum, cum femina primum,
cui tolerare colo uitam tenuique Minerua
impositum, cinerem et sopitos suscitatur ignis 410
noctem addens operi, famulasque ad lumina longo
exercent penso, castum ut seruare cubile
coniugis et possit paruos educere natos:
haud secus ignipotens nec tempore segnior illo
mollibus e stratis opera ad fabrilia surgit. 415
insula Sicanium iuxta latus Aeoliamque
erigitur Liparen fumantibus ardua saxis,
quam subter specus et Cyclopum exesa caminis
antra Aetnaea tonant, ualidique incudibus ictus
auditi referunt gemitus, striduntque cauernis 420
stricturae Chalybum et fornacibus ignis anhelat,
Volcani domus et Volcania nomine tellus.
hoc tunc ignipotens caelo descendit ab alto.
ferrum exercebant uasto Cyclopes in antro,
Brontesque Steropesque et nudus membra Pyragmon. 425
his informatum manibus iam parte polita
fulmen erat, toto genitor quae plurima caelo
deicit in terras, pars imperfecta manebat.
tris imbris torti radios, tris nubis aquosae

addiderant, rutuli tris ignis et alitis Austri. 430
fulgores nunc terrificos sonitumque metumque
miscebant operi flammisque sequacibus iras.
parte alia Marti currumque rotasque uolucris
instabant, quibus ille uiros, quibus excitat urbes;
aegidaque horriferam, turbatae Palladis arma, 435
certatim squamis serpentum auroque polibant
conexosque anguis ipsamque in pectore diuae
Gorgona desecto uertentem lumina collo.
'tollite cuncta' inquit 'coeptosque auferte labores,
Aetnaei Cyclopes, et huc aduertite mentem: 440
arma acri facienda uiro. nunc uiribus usus,
nunc manibus rapidis, omni nunc arte magistra.
praecipitate moras.' nec plura effatus, at illi
ocius incubuere omnes pariterque laborem
sortiti. fluit aes riuus aurique metallum 445
uulnificusque chalybs uasta fornace liquescit.
ingentem clipeum informant, unum omnia contra
tela Latinorum, septenosque orbibus orbis
impediunt. alii uentosis follibus auras
accipiunt redduntque, alii stridentia tingunt 450
aera lacu; gemit impositis incudibus antrum;
illi inter sese multa ui bracchia tollunt
in numerum, uersantque tenaci forcipe massam.

Haec pater Aeoliis properat dum Lemnius oris,
Euandrum ex humili tecto lux suscitatur alma 455
et matutini uolucrum sub culmine cantus.
consurgit senior tunicaque inducitur artus
et Tyrrhena pedum circumdat uincula plantis.
tum lateri atque umeris Tegeaeum subligat ensem
demissa ab laeua pantherae terga retorquens. 460
nec non et gemini custodes limine ab alto
praecedunt gressumque canes comitantur erilem.
hospitis Aeneae sedem et secreta petebat
sermonum memor et promissi muneris heros.
nec minus Aeneas se matutinus agebat; 465

filius huic Pallas, illi comes ibat Achates.
congressi iungunt dextras mediisque residunt
aedibus et licito tandem sermone fruuntur.
rex prior haec:
‘maxime Teucrorum ductor, quo sospite numquam 470
res equidem Troiae uictas aut regna fatebor,
nobis ad belli auxilium pro nomine tanto
exiguae uires; hinc Tusco claudimur amni,
hinc Rutulus premit et murum circumsonat armis.
sed tibi ego ingentis populos opulentaque regnis 475
iungere castra paro, quam fors inopina salutem
ostentat: fatis huc te poscentibus adfers.
haud procul hinc saxo incolitur fundata uetusto
urbis Agyllinae sedes, ubi Lydia quondam
gens, bello praeclara, iugis insedit Etruscis. 480
hanc multos florentem annos rex deinde superbo
imperio et saeuis tenuit Mezentius armis.
quid memorem infandas caedes, quid facta tyranni
effera? di capiti ipsius generique reseruent!
mortua quin etiam iungebat corpora uiuis 485
componens manibusque manus atque oribus ora,
tormenti genus, et sanie taboque fluentis
complexu in misero longa sic morte necabat.
at fessi tandem ciues infanda furentem
armati circumsistunt ipsumque domumque, 490
obtruncant socios, ignem ad fastigia iactant.
ille inter caedem Rutulorum elapsus in agros
confugere et Turni defendier hospitibus armis.
ergo omnis furiis surrexit Etruria iustis,
regem ad supplicium praesenti Marte reposcunt. 495
his ego te, Aenea, ductorem milibus addam.
toto namque fremunt condensae litore puppes
signaque ferre iubent, retinet longaeuus haruspex
fata canens: “o Maeoniae delecta iuuentus,
flos ueterum uirtusque uirum, quos iustus in hostem 500
fert dolor et merita accendit Mezentius ira,
nulli fas Italo tantam subiungere gentem:

externos optate duces.” tum Etrusca resedit
hoc acies campo monitis exterrita diuum.
ipse oratores ad me regnique coronam 505
cum sceptro misit mandatque insignia Tarchon,
succedam castris Tyrrhenaque regna capessam.
sed mihi tarda gelu saeculisque effeta senectus
inuidet imperium seraeque ad fortia uires.
natum exhortarer, ni mixtus matre Sabella 510
hinc partem patriae traheret. tu, cuius et annis
et generi fatum indulget, quem numina poscunt,
ingredere, o Teucrum atque Italum fortissime ductor.
hunc tibi praeterea, spes et solacia nostri,
Pallanta adiungam; sub te tolerare magistro 515
militiam et graue Martis opus, tua cernere facta
adsuescat, primis et te miretur ab annis.
Arcadas huic equites bis centum, robora pubis
lecta dabo, totidemque suo tibi nomine Pallas.’
Vix ea fatus erat, defixique ora tenebant 520
Aeneas Anchisiades et fidus Achates,
multaque dura suo tristi cum corde putabant,
ni signum caelo Cytherea dedisset aperto.
namque improuiso uibratus ab aethere fulgor
cum sonitu uenit et ruere omnia uisa repente, 525
Tyrrhenusque tubae mugire per aethera clangor.
suspiciunt, iterum atque iterum fragor increpat ingens.
arma inter nubem caeli in regione serena
per sudum rutilare uident et pulsa tonare.
obstupere animis alii, sed Troius heros 530
agnouit sonitum et diuae promissa parentis.
tum memorat: ‘ne uero, hospes, ne quaere profecto
quem casum portenta ferant: ego poscor Olympo.
hoc signum cecinit missuram diua creatrix,
si bellum ingrueret, Volcaniaque arma per auras 535
laturam auxilio.
heu quantae miseris caedes Laurentibus instant!
quas poenas mihi, Turne, dabis! quam multa sub undas
scuta uirum galeasque et fortia corpora uolues,

Thyбри pater! poscant acies et foedera rumpant.’ 540

Haec ubi dicta dedit, solio se tollit ab alto
et primum Herculeis sopitas ignibus aras
excitat, hesternumque larem paruosque penatis
laetus adit; mactat lectas de more bidentis
Euandrus pariter, pariter Troiana iuuentus. 545
post hinc ad naus graditur sociosque reuisit,
quorum de numero qui sese in bella sequantur
praestantis uirtute legit; pars cetera prona
fertur aqua segnisque secundo defluit amni,
nuntia uentura Ascanio rerumque patrisque. 550
dantur equi Teucris Tyrrhena petentibus arua;
ducunt exsortem Aeneae, quem fulua leonis
pellis obit totum praefulgens unguibus aureis.

Fama uolat paruam subito uulgata per urbem
ocius ire equites Tyrrheni ad limina regis. 555
uota metu duplicant matres, propiusque periclo
it timor et maior Martis iam apparet imago.
tum pater Euandrus dextram complexus euntis
haeret inexpletus lacrimans ac talia fatur:
‘o mihi praeteritos referat si Iuppiter annos, 560
qualis eram cum primam aciem Praeneste sub ipsa
strauī scutorumque incendi uictor acruos
et regem hac Erulum dextra sub Tartara misi,
nascenti cui tris animas Feronia mater
(horrendum dictu) dederat, terna arma mouenda — 565
ter leto sternendus erat; cui tunc tamen omnis
abstulit haec animas dextra et totidem exuit armis:
non ego nunc dulci amplexu diuellerer usquam,
nate, tuo, neque finitimo Mezentius umquam
huic capiti insultans tot ferro saeua dedisset 570
funera, tam multis uiduasset ciuibus urbem.
at uos, o superi, et diuum tu maxime rector
Iuppiter, Arcadii, quaeso, miserescite regis
et patrias audite preces. si numina uestra

incolumem Pallanta mihi, si fata reseruant, 575
si uisurus eum uiuo et uenturus in unum,
uitam oro, patior quemuis durare laborem.
sin aliquem infandum casum, Fortuna, minaris,
nunc, nunc o liceat crudelem abrumpere uitam,
dum curae ambiguae, dum spes incerta futuri, 580
dum te, care puer, mea sola et sera uoluptas,
complexu teneo, grauior neu nuntius auris
uulneret.' haec genitor digressu dicta supremo
fundebat; famuli conlapsum in tecta ferebant.

Iamque adeo exierat portis equitatus apertis 585
Aeneas inter primos et fidus Achates,
inde alii Troiae proceres; ipse agmine Pallas
it medio chlamyde et pictis conspectus in armis,
qualis ubi Oceani perfusus Lucifer unda,
quem Venus ante alios astrorum diligit ignis, 590
extulit os sacrum caelo tenebrasque resoluit.
stant pauidae in muris matres oculisque sequuntur
pulueream nubem et fulgentis aere cateruas.
olli per dumos, qua proxima meta uiarum,
armati tendunt; it clamor, et agmine facto 595
quadripedante putrem sonitu quatit ungula campum.
est ingens gelidum lucus prope Caeritis amnem,
religione patrum late sacer; undique colles
inclusere caui et nigra nemus abiete cingunt.
Siluano fama est ueteres sacrasse Pelasgos, 600
aruorum pecorisque deo, lucumque diemque,
qui primi finis aliquando habuere Latinos.
haud procul hinc Tarcho et Tyrrheni tuta tenebant
castra locis, celsoque omnis de colle uideri
iam poterat legio et latis tendebat in aruis. 605
huc pater Aeneas et bello lecta iuuentus
succedunt, fessique et equos et corpora curant.

At Venus aetherios inter dea candida nimbos
dona ferens aderat; natumque in ualle reducta

ut procul egelido secretum flumine uidit, 610
talibus adfata est dictis seque obtulit ultro:
‘en perfecta mei promissa coniugis arte
munera. ne mox aut Laurentis, nate, superbos
aut acrem dubites in proelia poscere Turnum.’
dixit, et amplexus nati Cytherea petiuit, 615
arma sub aduersa posuit radiantia quercu.
ille deae donis et tanto laetus honore
expleri nequit atque oculos per singula uoluit,
miraturque interque manus et brachia uersat
terribilem cristis galeam flammasque uomentem, 620
fatiferumque ensem, loricam ex aere rigentem,
sanguineam, ingentem, qualis cum caerula nubes
solis inardescit radiis longeque refulget;
tum leuis ocreas electro auroque recocto,
hastamque et clipei non enarrabile textum. 625
illic res Italas Romanorumque triumphos
haud uatum ignarus uenturique inscius aeu
fecerat ignipotens, illic genus omne futurae
stirpis ab Ascanio pugnataque in ordine bella.
fecerat et uiridi fetam Mauortis in antro 630
procubuisse lupam, geminos huic ubera circum
ludere pendentis pueros et lambere matrem
impauidos, illam tereti ceruice reflexa
mulcere alternos et corpora fingere lingua.
nec procul hinc Romam et raptas sine more Sabinas 635
consessu caueae, magnis Circensibus actis,
addiderat, subitoque nouum consurgere bellum
Romulidis Tatioque seni Curibusque seueris.
post idem inter se posito certamine reges
armati Iouis ante aram paterasque tenentes 640
stabant et caesa iungebant foedera porca.
haud procul inde citae Mettum in diuersa quadrigae
distulerant (at tu dictis, Albane, maneres!),
raptabatque uiri mendacis uiscera Tullus
per siluam, et sparsi rorabant sanguine uepres. 645
nec non Tarquinius eiectum Porsenna iubebat

accipere ingentique urbem obsidione premebat;
Aeneadae in ferrum pro libertate ruebant.
illum indignanti similem similemque minanti
aspiceres, pontem auderet quia uellere Cocles 650

LIBER IX

Atque ea diuersa penitus dum parte geruntur,
Irim de caelo misit Saturnia Iuno
audacem ad Turnum. luco tum forte parentis
Pilumni Turnus sacrata ualle sedebat.
ad quem sic roseo Thaumantias ore locuta est: 5
‘Turne, quod optanti diuum promittere nemo
auderet, uoluenda dies en attulit ultro.
Aeneas urbe et sociis et classe relicta
sceptrā Palatini sedemque petit Euandri.
nec satis: extremas Corythi penetrauit ad urbes 10
Lydorumque manum, collectos armat agrestis.
quid dubitas? nunc tempus equos, nunc poscere currus.
 rumpe moras omnis et turbata arripe castra.’
dixit, et in caelum paribus se sustulit alis
ingentemque fuga secuit sub nubibus arcum. 15
agnouit iuuenis duplicisque ad sidera palmas
sustulit ac tali fugientem est uoce secutus:
‘Iri, decus caeli, quis te mihi nubibus actam
detulit in terras? unde haec tam clara repente
tempestas? medium uideo discedere caelum 20
palantisque polo stellas. sequor omina tanta,
quisquis in arma uocas.’ et sic effatus ad undam
processit summoque hausit de gurgite lymphas
multa deos orans, onerauitque aethera uotis.

Iamque omnis campis exercitus ibat apertis 25
diues equum, diues pictai uestis et auri;
Messapus primas acies, postrema coercent
Tyrrhidae iuuenes, medio dux agmine Turnus:
ceu septem surgens sedatis amnibus altus 30
per tacitum Ganges aut pingui flumine Nilus
cum refluit campis et iam se condidit alueo.
hic subitam nigro glomerari puluere nubem
prospiciunt Teucri ac tenebras insurgere campis.

primus ab aduersa conclamat mole Caicus: 35
'quis globus, o ciues, caligine uoluitur atra?
ferte citi ferrum, date tela, ascendite muros,
hostis adest, heia!' ingenti clamore per omnis
condunt se Teucri portas et moenia complent.
namque ita discedens praeceperat optimus armis 40
Aeneas: si qua interea fortuna fuisset,
neu struere auderent aciem neu credere campo;
castra modo et tutos seruarent aggere muros.
ergo etsi conferre manum pudor iraque monstrat,
obiciunt portas tamen et praecepta facessunt, 45
armatique cauis exspectant turribus hostem.

Turnus, ut ante uolans tardum praecesserat agmen
uiginti lectis equitum comitatus et urbi
improvisus adest, maculis quem Thracius albis
portat equus cristaque tegit galea aurea rubra, 50
'ecquis erit mecum, iuuenes, qui primus in hostem — ?
en,' ait et iaculum attorquens emittit in auras,
principium pugnae, et campo sese arduus infert.
clamorem excipiunt socii fremituque sequuntur
horrisono; Teucrum mirantur inertia corda, 55
non aequo dare se campo, non obuia ferre
arma uiros, sed castra fouere. huc turbidus atque huc
lustrat equo muros aditumque per auia quaerit.
ac ueluti pleno lupo insidiatus ouili
cum fremit ad caulas uentos perpessus et imbris 60
nocte super media; tuti sub matribus agni
balatum exercent, ille asper et improbus ira
saeuit in absentis; collecta fatigat edendi
ex longo rabies et siccae sanguine fauces:
haud aliter Rutulo muros et castra tuenti 65
ignescunt irae, duris dolor ossibus ardet.
qua temptet ratione aditus, et quae uia clausos
excutiat Teucros uallo atque effundat in aequum?
classem, quae lateri castrorum adiuncta latebat,
aggeribus saeptam circum et fluuialibus undis, 70

inuadit sociosque incendia poscit ouantis
atque manum pinu flagranti feruidus implet.
tum uero incumbunt (urget praesentia Turni),
atque omnis facibus pubes accingitur atris.
diripuerunt focos: piceum fert fumida lumen 75
taeda et commixtam Volcanus ad astra fauillam.

Quis deus, o Musae, tam saeua incendia Teucris
auertit? tantos ratibus quis depulit ignis?
dicite: prisca fides facto, sed fama perennis.
tempore quo primum Phrygia formabat in Ida 80
Aeneas classem et pelagi petere alta parabat,
ipsa deum fertur genetrix Berecynthia magnum
uocibus his adfata Iouem: 'da, nate, petenti,
quod tua cara parens domito te poscit Olympo.
pineae siluae mihi multos dilecta per annos, 85
lucus in arce fuit summa, quo sacra ferebant,
nigranti picea trabibusque obscurus acernis.
has ego Dardanio iuueni, cum classis egeret,
laeta dedi; nunc sollicitam timor anxius angit.
solue metus atque hoc precibus sine posse parentem, 90
ne cursu quassatae ullo neu turbine uenti
uincantur: prosit nostris in montibus ortas.'
filius huic contra, torquet qui sidera mundi:
'o genetrix, quo fata uocas? aut quid petis istis?
mortali manu factae immortale carinae 95
fas habeant? certusque incerta pericula lustret
Aeneas? cui tanta deo permissa potestas?
immo, ubi defunctae finem portusque tenebunt
Ausonios olim, quaecumque euaserit undis
Dardanumque ducem Laurentia uexerit arua, 100
mortalem eripiam formam magnique iubebo
aequoris esse deas, qualis Nereia Doto
et Galatea secant spumantem pectore pontum.'
dixerat idque ratum Stygii per flumina fratris,
per pice torrentis atraque uoragine ripas 105
adnuat, et totum nutu tremefecit Olympum.

Ergo aderat promissa dies et tempora Parcae
debita complerant, cum Turni iniuria Matrem
admonuit ratibus sacris depellere taedas.
hic primum noua lux oculis offulsit et ingens 110
uisus ab Aurora caelum transcurrere nimbus
Idaeique chori; tum uox horrenda per auras
excidit et Troum Rutulorumque agmina complet:
‘ne trepidate meas, Teucris, defendere nauis
neue armate manus; maria ante exurere Turno 115
quam sacras dabitur pinus. uos ite solutae,
ite deae pelagi; genetrix iubet.’ et sua quaeque
continuo puppes abrumpunt uincula ripis
delphinumque modo demersis aequora rostris
ima petunt. hinc uirgineae (mirabile monstrum) 120
reddunt se totidem facies pontoque feruntur. 122

Obstipuere animis Rutuli, conterritus ipse
turbatis Messapus equis, cunctatur et amnis
rauca sonans reuocatque pedem Tiberinus ab alto. 125
at non audaci Turno fiducia cessit;
ultro animos tollit dictis atque increpat ultro:
‘Troianos haec monstra petunt, his Iuppiter ipse
auxilium solitum eripuit: non tela neque ignis
exspectant Rutulos. ergo maria inuia Teucris, 130
nec spes ulla fugae: rerum pars altera adempta est,
terra autem in nostris manibus, tot milia gentes
arma ferunt Italiae. nil me fatalia terrent,
si qua Phryges prae se iactant, responsa deorum;
sat fatis Venerique datum, tetigere quod arua 135
fertilis Ausoniae Troes. sunt et mea contra
fata mihi, ferro sceleratam exscindere gentem
coniuge praerepta; nec solos tangit Atridas
iste dolor, solisque licet capere arma Mycenis.
“sed periisse semel satis est”: peccare fuisset 140
ante satis, penitus modo non genus omne perosos
femineum. quibus haec medii fiducia ualli
fossarumque morae, leti discrimina parua,

dant animos; at non uiderunt moenia Troiae
Neptuni fabricata manu considerare in ignis? 145
sed uos, o lecti, ferro qui scindere uallum
apparat et mecum inuadit trepidantia castra?
non armis mihi Volcani, non mille carinis
est opus in Teucros. addant se protinus omnes
Etrusci socios. tenebras et inertia furta 150
Palladii caesis late custodibus arcis
ne timeant, nec equi caeca condemur in aluo:
luce palam certum est igni circumdare muros.
haud sibi cum Danaïs rem faxo et pube Pelasga
esse ferant, decimum quos distulit Hector in annum. 155
nunc adeo, melior quoniam pars acta diei,
quod superest, laeti bene gestis corpora rebus
procurate, uiri, et pugnam sperate parari.’
interea uigilum excubiis obsidere portas
cura datur Messapo et moenia cingere flammis. 160
bis septem Rutuli muros qui milite seruent
delecti, ast illos centeni quemque sequuntur
purpurei cristis iuuenes auroque corusci.
discurrunt uariantque uices, fusique per herbam
indulgent uino et uertunt crateras aenos. 165
conlucent ignes, noctem custodia ducit
insomnem ludo.

Haec super e uallo prospectant Troes et armis
alta tenent, nec non trepidi formidine portas
explorant pontisque et propugnacula iungunt, 170
tela gerunt. instat Mnestheus acerque Serestus,
quos pater Aeneas, si quando aduersa uocarent,
rectores iuuenum et rerum dedit esse magistros.
omnis per muros legio sortita periculum
excubat exercetque uices, quod cuique tuendum est. 175

Nisus erat portae custos, acerrimus armis,
Hyrtacides, comitem Aeneae quem miserat Ida
uenatrix iaculo celerem leuibusque sagittis,

et iuxta comes Euryalus, quo pulchrior alter
non fuit Aeneadum Troiana neque induit arma, 180
ora puer prima signans intonsa iuuenta.
his amor unus erat pariterque in bella ruebant;
tum quoque communi portam statione tenebant.
Nisus ait: 'dine hunc ardorem mentibus addunt,
Euryale, an sua cuique deus fit dira cupido? 185
aut pugnam aut aliquid iamdudum inuadere magnum
mens agitat mihi, nec placida contenta quiete est.
cernis quae Rutulos habeat fiducia rerum:
lumina rara micant, somno uinoque soluti
procubuere, silent late loca. percipe porro 190
quid dubitem et quae nunc animo sententia surgat.
Aenean acciri omnes, populusque patresque,
exposcunt, mittique uiros qui certa reportent.
si tibi quae posco promittunt (nam mihi facti
fama sat est), tumulto uideor reperire sub illo 195
posse uiam ad muros et moenia Pallantea.'
obstipuit magno laudum percussus amore
Euryalus, simul his ardentem adfatur amicum:
'mene igitur socium summis adiungere rebus,
Nise, fugis? solum te in tanta pericula mittam? 200
non ita me genitor, bellis adsuetus Opheltes,
Argolicum terrorem inter Troiaeque labores
sublatum erudiit, nec tecum talia gessi
magnanimum Aenean et fata extrema secutus:
est hic, est animus lucis contemptor et istum 205
qui uita bene credat emi, quo tendis, honorem.'
Nisus ad haec: 'equidem de te nil tale uerebar,
nec fas; non ita me referat tibi magnus ouantem
Iuppiter aut quicumque oculis haec aspicit aequis.
sed si quis (quae multa uides discrimine tali) 210
si quis in aduersum rapiat casusue deusue,
te superesse uelim, tua uita dignior aetas.
sit qui me raptum pugna pretioe redemptum
mandet humo, solita aut si qua id Fortuna uetabit,
absenti ferat inferias decoretque sepulcro. 215

neu matri miserae tanti sim causa doloris,
quae te sola, puer, multis e matribus ausa
persequitur, magni nec moenia curat Acestae.’
ille autem: ‘causas nequiquam nectis inanis
nec mea iam mutata loco sententia cedit. 220
acceleremus’ ait, uigiles simul excitat. illi
succedunt seruantque uices; statione relicta
ipse comes Niso graditur regemque requirunt.

Cetera per terras omnis animalia somno
laxabant curas et corda oblita laborum: 225
ductores Teucrum primi, delecta iuuentus,
consilium summis regni de rebus habebant,
quid facerent quisue Aeneae iam nuntius esset.
stant longis adnixa hastis et scuta tenentes
castrorum et campi medio. tum Nisus et una 230
Euryalus confestim alacres admittier orant:
rem magnam pretiumque morae fore. primus Iulus
accepit trepidos ac Nisum dicere iussit.
tum sic Hyrtacides: ‘audite o mentibus aequis
Aeneadae, neue haec nostris spectentur ab annis 235
quae ferimus. Rutuli somno uinoque soluti conticuere. locum insidiis conspeximus ipsi,
qui patet in biuio portae quae proxima ponto.
interrupti ignes aterque ad sidera fumus erigitur. si fortuna permittitis uti 240
quaesitum Aenean et moenia Pallantea,
mox hic cum spoliis ingenti caede peracta
adfore cernetis. nec nos uia fallit euntis:
uidimus obscuris primam sub uallibus urbem
uenatu adsiduo et totum cognouimus amnem.’ 245
hic annis grauis atque animi maturus Aletes:
‘di patrii, quorum semper sub numine Troia est,
non tamen omnino Teucros delere paratis,
cum talis animos iuuenum et tam certa tulistis
pectora.’ sic memorans umeros dextrasque tenebat 250
amborum et uultum lacrimis atque ora rigabat.

‘quae uobis, quae digna, uiri, pro laudibus istis
praemia posse rear solui? pulcherrima primum
di moresque dabunt uestri: tum cetera reddet
actutum pius Aeneas atque integer aeui 255
Ascanius meriti tanti non immemor umquam.’
‘immo ego uos, cui sola salus genitore reducto,’ excipit Ascanius ‘per magnos, Nise, penatis Assaracique larem et canae penetralia Vestae
obtestor, quaecumque mihi fortuna fidesque est, 260
in uestris pono gremiis. reuocate parentem,
reddite conspectum; nihil illo triste recepto.
bina dabo argento perfecta atque aspera signis
pocula, deuicta genitor quae cepit Arisba, et tripodas geminos, auri duo magna talenta, 265
cratera antiquum quem dat Sidonia Dido.
si uero capere Italiam sceptrisque potiri
contigerit uictori et praedae dicere sortem,
uidisti, quo Turnus equo, quibus ibat in armis
aureus; ipsum illum, clipeum cristasque rubentis 270
excipiam sorti, iam nunc tua praemia, Nise.
praeterea bis sex genitor lectissima matrum
corpora captiuosque dabit suaque omnibus arma,
insuper his campi quod rex habet ipse Latinus.
te uero, mea quem spatiis propioribus aetas 275
insequitur, uenerande puer, iam pectore toto
accipio et comitem casus complector in omnis.
nulla meis sine te quaeretur gloria rebus:
seu pacem seu bella geram, tibi maxima rerum
uerborumque fides.’ contra quem talia fatur 280
Euryalus: ‘me nulla dies tam fortibus ausis
dissimilem arguerit; tantum fortuna secunda
haud aduersa cadat. sed te super omnia dona
unum oro: genetrix Priami de gente uetusta
est mihi, quam miseram tenuit non Ilia tellus 285
mecum excedentem, non moenia regis Acestae.
hanc ego nunc ignaram huius quodcumque pericli
inque salutatam linquo (nox et tua testis

dextera), quod nequeam lacrimas perferre parentis.
at tu, oro, solare inopem et succurre relictæ. 290
hanc sine me spem ferre tui, audentior ibo
in casus omnis.' percussa mente dedere
Dardanidæ lacrimas, ante omnis pulcher Iulus,
atque animum patriæ strinxit pietatis imago.
tum sic effatur: 295

'sponde digna tuis ingentibus omnia coeptis.
namque erit ista mihi genetrix nomenque Creusæ
solum defuerit, nec partum gratia talem
parua manet. casus factum quicumque sequentur,
per caput hoc iuro, per quod pater ante solebat: 300
quæ tibi polliceor reduci rebusque secundis,
haec eadem matricæ tuæ generique manebunt.'
sic ait inlacrimans; umero simul exiit ensem
auratum, mira quem fecerat arte Lycaon
Cnosius atqueabilem uagina aptarat eburna. 305
dat Niso Mnestheus pellem horrentisque leonis
exuuias, galeam fidus permutat Aletes.
protinus armati incedunt; quos omnis euntis
primorum manus ad portas, iuuenumque senumque,
prosequitur uotis. nec non et pulcher Iulus, 310
ante annos animumque gerens curamque uirilem,
multa patri mandata dabat portanda; sed auræ
omnia discerpunt et nubibus inrita donant.

Egressi superant fossas noctisque per umbram
castra inimica petunt, multis tamen ante futuri 315
exitio. passim somno uinoque per herbam
corpora fusa uident, arrectos litore currus,
inter lora rotasque uiros, simul arma iacere,
uina simul. prior Hyrtacides sic ore locutus:
'Euryale, audendum dextra: nunc ipsa uocat res. 320
hac iter est. tu, ne qua manus se attollere nobis
a tergo possit, custodi et consule longe;
haec ego uasta dabo et lato te limite ducam.'
sic memorat uocemque premit, simul ense superbum

Rhamnetem adgreditur, qui forte tapetibus altis 325
exstructus toto proflabat pectore somnum,
rex idem et regi Turno gratissimus augur,
sed non augurio potuit depellere pestem.
tris iuxta famulos temere inter tela iacentis
armigerumque Remi premit aurigamque sub ipsis 330
nactus equis ferroque secat pendentia colla.
tum caput ipsi aufert domino truncumque relinquit
sanguine singultantem; atro tepefacta cruore
terra torique madent. nec non Lamyrumque Lamumque
et iuuenem Serranum, illa qui plurima nocte 335
luserat, insignis facie, multoque iacebat
membra deo uictus — felix, si protinus illum
aequasset nocti ludum in lucemque tulisset:
impastus ceu plena leo per ouilia turbans
(suadet enim uesana fames) manditque trahitque 340
molle pecus mutumque metu, fremit ore cruento.
nec minor Euryali caedes; incensus et ipse
perfurit ac multam in medio sine nomine plebem,
Fadumque Herbesumque subit Rhoetumque Abarimque
ignaros; Rhoetum uigilantem et cuncta uidentem, 345
sed magnum metuens se post cratera tegebat.
pectore in aduerso totum cui cominus ensem
condidit adsurgenti et multa morte recepit.
purpuream uomit ille animam et cum sanguine mixta
uina refert moriens, hic furto feruidus instat. 350
iamque ad Messapi socios tendebat; ibi ignem
deficere extremum et religatos rite uidebat
carpere gramen equos, breuiter cum talia Nisus
(sensit enim nimia caede atque cupidine ferri)
'absistamus' ait, 'nam lux inimica propinquat. 355
poenarum exhaustum satis est, uia facta per hostis.'
multa uirum solido argento perfecta relinquunt
armaque craterasque simul pulchrosque tapetas.
Euryalus phaleras Rhamnetis et aurea bullis
cingula, Tiburti Remulo ditissimus olim 360
quae mittit dona, hospitio cum iungeret absens,

Caedicus; ille suo moriens dat habere nepoti;
post mortem bello Rutuli pugnaque potiti:
haec rapit atque umeris nequiquam fortibus aptat.
tum galeam Messapi habilem cristisque decoram 365
induit. excedunt castris et tuta capessunt.

Interea praemissi equites ex urbe Latina,
cetera dum legio campis instructa moratur,
ibant et Turno regi responsa ferebant,
ter centum, scutati omnes, Volcente magistro. 370
iamque propinquabant castris murosque subibant
cum procul hos laeue flectentis limite cernunt,
et galea Euryalum sublustri noctis in umbra
prodidit immemorem radiisque aduersa refulsit.
haud temere est uisum. conclamat ab agmine Volcens: 375
‘state, uiri. quae causa uiae? quiae estis in armis?
quoque tenetis iter?’ nihil illi tendere contra,
sed celerare fugam in siluas et fidere nocti.
obiciunt equites sese ad diuortia nota
hinc atque hinc, omnemque aditum custode coronant. 380
silua fuit late dumis atque ilice nigra
horrida, quam densi complerant undique sentes;
rara per occultos lucebat semita callis.
Euryalum tenebrae ramorum onerosaque praeda
impediunt, fallitque timor regione uiarum. 385
Nisus abit; iamque imprudens euaserat hostis
atque locos qui post Albae de nomine dicti
Albani (tum rex stabula alta Latinus habebat),
ut stetit et frustra absentem respexit amicum:
‘Euryale infelix, qua te regione reliqui? 390
quaue sequar?’ rursus perplexum iter omne reuoluens
fallacis siluae simul et uestigia retro
obseruata legit dumisque silentibus errat.
audit equos, audit strepitus et signa sequentum;
nec longum in medio tempus, cum clamor ad auris 395
peruenit ac uidet Euryalum, quem iam manus omnis
fraude loci et noctis, subito turbante tumultu,

oppressum rapit et conantem plurima frustra.
quid faciat? qua ui iuuenem, quibus audeat armis
eripere? an sese medios moriturus in enses 400
inferat et pulchram properet per uulnera mortem?
ocius adducto torquet hastile lacerto
suspiciens altam Lunam et sic uoce precatur:
‘tu, dea, tu praesens nostro succurre labori,
astrorum decus et nemorum Latonia custos. 405
si qua tuis umquam pro me pater Hyrtacus aris
dona tulit, si qua ipse meis uenatibus auxi
suspendiue tholo aut sacra ad fastigia fixi,
hunc sine me turbare globum et rege tela per auras.’
dixerat et toto conixus corpore ferrum 410
conicit. hasta uolans noctis diuerberat umbras
et uenit auersi in tergum Sulmonis ibique
frangitur, ac fisso transit praecordia ligno.
uoluitur ille uomens calidum de pectore flumen
frigidus et longis singultibus ilia pulsat. 415
diuersi circumspiciunt. hoc acrior idem
ecce aliud summa telum librabat ab aure.
dum trepidant, it hasta Tago per tempus utrumque
stridens traiectoque haesit tepefacta cerebro.
saeuit atrox Volcens nec teli conspicit usquam 420
auctorem nec quo se ardens immittere possit.
‘tu tamen interea calido mihi sanguine poenas
persolues amborum’ inquit; simul ense recluso
ibat in Euryalum. tum uero exterritus, amens,
conclamat Nisus nec se celare tenebris 425
amplius aut tantum potuit perferre dolorem:
‘me, me, adsum qui feci, in me conuertite ferrum,
o Rutuli! mea fraus omnis, nihil iste nec ausus
nec potuit; caelum hoc et conscia sidera testor;
tantum infelicem nimium dilexit amicum.’ 430
talìa dicta dabat, sed uiribus ensis adactus
transadigit costas et candida pectora rumpit.
uoluitur Euryalus leto, pulchrosque per artus
it cruor inque umeros ceruix conlapsa recumbit:

purpureus ueluti cum flos succisus aratro 435
languescit moriens, lassoue papauera collo
demisere caput pluuiam cum forte grauantur.
at Nisus ruit in medios solumque per omnis
Volcentem petit, in solo Volcente moratur.
quem circum glomerati hostes hinc comminus atque hinc 440
proturbant. instat non setius ac rotat ensem
fulmineum, donec Rutuli clamantis in ore
condidit aduerso et moriens animam abstulit hosti.
tum super exanimum sese proiecit amicum
confossus, placidaque ibi demum morte quieuit. 445

Fortunati ambo! si quid mea carmina possunt,
nulla dies umquam memori uos eximet aeuo,
dum domus Aeneae Capitoli immobile saxum
accolet imperiumque pater Romanus habebit.

Victores praeda Rutuli spoliisque potiti 450
Volcentem exanimum flentes in castra ferebant.
nec minor in castris luctus Rhamnete reperto
exsanguis et primis una tot caede peremptis, Serranoque Numaque. ingens concursus ad ipsa
corpora seminecisque uiros, tepidaque recentem 455
caede locum et pleno spumantis sanguine riuos.
agnoscunt spolia inter se galeamque nitentem
Messapi et multo phaleras sudore receptas.

Et iam prima nouo spargebat lumine terras
Tithoni croceum linquens Aurora cubile. 460
iam sole infuso, iam rebus luce retectis
Turnus in arma uiros armis circumdatus ipse
suscitat: aeratasque acies in proelia cogunt,
quisque suos, uariisque acuunt rumoribus iras.
quin ipsa arrectis (uisu miserabile) in hastis 465
praefigunt capita et multo clamore sequuntur
Euryali et Nisi.
Aeneadae duri murorum in parte sinistra

opposuere aciem (nam dextera cingitur amni),
ingentisque tenent fossas et turribus altis 470
stant maesti; simul ora uirum praefixa mouebant
nota nimis miseris atroque fluentia tabo.
Interea pauidam uolitans pennata per urbem
nuntia Fama ruit matrisque adlabitur auris
Euryali. at subitus miserae calor ossa reliquit, 475
excussi manibus radii reuolutaque pensa.
euolat infelix et femineo ululatu
scissa comam muros amens atque agmina cursu
prima petit, non illa uirum, non illa pericli
telorumque memor, caelum dehinc questibus implet: 480
‘hunc ego te, Euryale, aspicio? tune ille senectae
sera meae requies, potuisti linquere solam,
crudelis? nec te sub tanta pericula missum
adfari extremum miserae data copia matri?
heu, terra ignota canibus data praeda Latinis 485
alitibusque iaces! nec te tua funere mater
produxi pressius oculos aut uulnera laui,
ueste tegens tibi quam noctes festina diesque
urgebam, et tela curas solabar anilis.
quo sequar? aut quae nunc artus auulsaque membra 490
et funus lacerum tellus habet? hoc mihi de te,
nate, refers? hoc sum terraque marique secuta?
figite me, si qua est pietas, in me omnia tela
conicite, o Rutuli, me primam absumite ferro;
aut tu, magne pater diuum, miserere, tuoque 495
inuisum hoc detrude caput sub Tartara telo,
quando aliter nequeo crudelem abrumpere uitam.’
hoc fletu concussi animi, maestusque per omnis
it gemitus, torpent infractae ad proelia uires.
illam incendentem luctus Idaeus et Actor 500
Ilionei monitu et multum lacrimantis Iuli
corripiunt interque manus sub tecta reponunt.

At tuba terribilem sonitum procul aere canoro
increpuit, sequitur clamor caelumque remugit.

accelerant acta pariter testudine Volsci 505
et fossas implere parant ac uellere uallum;
quaerunt pars aditum et scalis ascendere muros,
qua rara est acies interlucetque corona
non tam spissa uiris. telorum effundere contra
omne genus Teucris ac duris detrudere contis, 510
adsueti longo muros defendere bello.
saxa quoque infesto uoluebant pondere, si qua
possent tectam aciem perrumpere, cum tamen omnis
ferre iuuat subter densa testudine casus.
nec iam sufficiunt. nam qua globus imminet ingens, 515
immanem Teucris molem uoluuntque ruuntque,
quae strauit Rutulos late armorumque resouit
tegmina. nec curant caeco contendere Marte
amplius audaces Rutuli, sed pelleret uallo
missilibus certant. 520
parte alia horrendus uisu quassabat Etruscam
pinum et fumiferos infert Mezentius ignis;
at Messapus equum domitor, Neptunia proles,
rescindit uallum et scalas in moenia poscit.

Vos, o Calliope, precor, aspirate canenti 525
quas ibi tum ferro strages, quae funera Turnus
ediderit, quem quisque uirum demiserit Orco,
et mecum ingentis oras euoluite belli.

Turris erat uasto suspectu et pontibus altis, 530
opportuna loco, summis quam uiribus omnes
expugnare Itali summaque euertere opum ui
certabant, Troes contra defendere saxis
perque cauas densi tela intorquere fenestras.
princeps ardentem coniecit lampada Turnus 535
et flammam adfixit lateri, quae plurima uento
corripuit tabulas et postibus haesit adesis.
turbati trepidare intus frustra malorum
uelle fugam. dum se glomerant retroque residunt
in partem quae peste caret, tum pondere turris 540

procubuit subito et caelum tonat omne fragore.
semineces ad terram immani mole secuta
confixique suis telis et pectora duro
transfossi ligno ueniunt. uix unus Helenor
et Lycus elapsi; quorum primaueus Helenor, 545
Maeonio regi quem serua Licymnia furtim
sustulerat uetitisque ad Troiam miserat armis,
ense leuis nudo parmaque inglorius alba.
isque ubi se Turni media inter milia uidit,
hinc acies atque hinc acies astare Latinas, 550
ut fera, quae densa uenantum saepta corona
contra tela furit seseque haud nescia morti
inicit et saltu supra uenabula fertur —
haud aliter iuuenis medios moriturus in hostis
inruit et qua tela uidet densissima tendit. 555
at pedibus longe melior Lycus inter et hostis
inter et arma fuga muros tenet, altaque certat
prendere tecta manu sociumque attingere dextras.
quem Turnus pariter cursu teloque secutus
increpat his uictor: ‘nostrasne euadere, demens, 560
sperasti te posse manus?’ simul arripit ipsum
pendentem et magna muri cum parte reuellit:
qualis ubi aut leporem aut candenti corpore cycnum
sustulit alta petens pedibus Iouis armiger uncis,
quaesitum aut matri multis balatibus agnum 565
Martius a stabulis rapuit lupo. undique clamor
tollitur: inuadunt et fossas aggere complent,
ardentis taedas alii ad fastigia iactant.
Ilioneus saxo atque ingenti fragmine montis
Lucetium portae subeuntem ignisque ferentem, 570
Emathiona Liger, Corynaeum sternit Asilas,
hic iaculo bonus, hic longe fallente sagitta,
Ortygium Caeneus, uictorem Caenea Turnus,
Turnus Ityn Cloniumque, Dioxippum Promolumque
et Sagarim et summis stantem pro turribus Idan, 575
Priuernum Capys. hunc primo leuis hasta Themillae
strinxerat, ille manum proiecto tegmine demens

ad uulnus tulit; ergo alis adlapsa sagitta
et laeuo infixata est alte lateri, abditaque intus
spiramenta animae letali uulnere rupit. 580
stabat in egregiis Arcentis filius armis
pictus acu chlamydem et ferrugine clarus Hibera,
insignis facie, genitor quem miserat Arcens
eductum Martis luco Symaethia circum
flumina, pinguis ubi et placabilis ara Palici: 585
stridentem fundam positis Mezentius hastis
ipse ter adducta circum caput egit habena
et media aduersi liquefacto tempora plumbo
diffidit ac multa porrectum extendit harena.

Tum primum bello celerem intendisse sagittam 590
dicitur ante feras solitus terrere fugacis
Ascanius, fortemque manu fudisse Numanum,
cui Remulo cognomen erat, Turnique minorem
germanam nuper thalamo sociatus habebat.
is primam ante aciem digna atque indigna relatu 595
uociferans tumidusque nouo praecordia regno
ibat et ingentem sese clamore ferebat:
‘non pudet obsidione iterum ualloque teneri,
bis capti Phryges, et morti praetendere muros?
en qui nostra sibi bello conubia poscunt! 600
quis deus Italiam, quae uos dementia adegit?
non hic Atridae nec fandi fictor Vlixes:
durum a stirpe genus natos ad flumina primum
deferimus saeueque gelu duramus et undis;
uenatu inuigilant pueri siluasque fatigant, 605
flectere ludus equos et spicula tendere cornu.
at patiens operum paruoque adsueta iuuentus
aut rastris terram domat aut quatit oppida bello.
omne aeuum ferro teritur, uersaque iuuentum
terga fatigamus hasta, nec tarda senectus 610
debilitat uiris animi mutatque uigorem:
canitiem galea premimus, semperque recentis
comportare iuuat praedas et uiuere raptu.

uobis picta croco et fulgenti murice uestis,
desidiaē cordi, iuuat indulgere choreis, 615
et tunicae manicas et habent redimicula mitrae.
o uere Phrygiae, neque enim Phryges, ite per alta
Dindyma, ubi adsuetis bifoŕem dat tibia cantum.
tympana uos buxusque uocat Berecynthia Matris
Idaēae; sinite arma uiris et cedite ferro.’ 620

Talia iactantem dictis ac dira canentem
non tulit Ascanius, neruoque obuŕsus equino
contendit telum diuersaque bracchia ducens
constitit, ante Iouem supplex per uota precatus:
‘Iuppiter omnipotens, audacibus adnue coeptis. 625
ipse tibi ad tua templa feram sollemnia dona,
et statuam ante aras aurata fronte iuuen-
candentem pariterque caput cum matre ferentem,
iam cornu petat et pedibus qui spargat harenam.’
audiit et caeli genitor de parte serena 630
intonuit laeuum, sonat una fatifer arcus.
effugit horrendum stridens adducta sagitta
perque caput Remuli uenit et caua tempora ferro
traicit. ‘i, uerbis uirtutem inlude superbis!
bis capti Phryges haec Rutulis responsa remittunt’: 635
hoc tantum Ascanius. Teucŕi clamore sequuntur
laetitiaque fremunt animosque ad sidera tollunt.

Aetheria tum forte plaga crinitus Apollo
desuper Ausonias acies urbemque uidebat
nube sedens, atque his uictorem adfatur Iulum: 640
‘macte noua uirtute, puer, sic itur ad astra,
dis genite et geniture deos. iure omnia bella
gente sub Assaraci fato uentura resident,
nec te Troia capit.’ simul haec effatus ab alto
aethere se mittit, spirantis dimouet auras 645
Ascaniumque petit; forma tum uertitur oris
antiquum in Buten. hic Dardanio Anchisae
armiger ante fuit fidusque ad limina custos;

tum comitem Ascanio pater addidit. ibat Apollo
omnia longaeuo similis uocemque coloremque 650
et crinis albos et saeua sonoribus arma,
atque his ardentem dictis adfatur Iulum:
'sit satis, Aenide, telis impune Numanum oppetiisse tuis. primam hanc tibi magnus Apollo
concedit laudem et paribus non inuidet armis; 655
cetera parce, puer, bello.' sic orsus Apollo
mortalis medio aspectus sermone reliquit
et procul in tenuem ex oculis euanuit auram.
agnouere deum proceres diuinaque tela
Dardanidae pharetramque fuga sensere sonantem. 660
ergo auidum pugnae dictis ac numine Phoebi
Ascanium prohibent, ipsi in certamina rursus
succedunt animasque in aperta pericula mittunt.
it clamor totis per propugnacula muris,
intendunt acris arcus amentaque torquent. 665
sternitur omne solum telis, tum scuta cauaeque
dant sonitum flictu galeae, pugna aspera surgit:
quantus ab occasu ueniens pluuiialibus Haedis
uerberat imber humum, quam multa grandine nimbi
in uada praecipitant, cum Iuppiter horridus Austris 670
torquet aquosam hiemem et caelo caua nubila rumpit.

Pandarus et Bitias, Idaeo Alcanore creti,
quos Iouis eduxit luco siluestris Iaera
abietibus iuuenes patriis et montibus aequos,
portam, quae ducis imperio commissa, recludunt 675
freti armis, ultroque inuitant moenibus hostem.
ipsi intus dextra ac laeua pro turribus astant
armati ferro et cristis capita alta corusci:
quales aeriae liquentia flumina circum
siue Padi ripis Athesim seu propter amoenum 680
consurgunt geminae quercus intonsaque caelo
attollunt capita et sublimi uertice nutant.
inrumpunt aditus Rutuli ut uidere patentis:
continuo Quercens et pulcher Aquiculus armis

et praeceps animi Tmarus et Mauortius Haemon 685
agminibus totis aut uersi terga dedere
aut ipso portae posuere in limine uitam.
tum magis increscunt animis discordibus irae,
et iam collecti Troes glomerantur eodem
et conferre manum et procurrere longius audent. 690

Ductori Turno diuersa in parte furenti
turbantique uiros perfertur nuntius, hostem
feruere caede noua et portas praebere patentis.
deserit inceptum atque immani concitus ira Dardanium ruit ad portam fratresque superbos. 695
et primum Antiphaten (is enim se primus agebat),
Thebana de matre nothum Sarpedonis alti,
coniecto sternit iaculo: uolat Italia cornus
aera per tenerum stomachoque infixam sub altum
pectus abit; reddit specus atri uulneris undam 700
spumantem, et fixo ferrum in pulmone tepescit.
tum Meropem atque Erymanta manu, tum sternit Aphidnum,
tum Bitian ardentem oculis animisque frementem,
non iaculo (neque enim iaculo uitam ille dedisset),
sed magnum stridens contorta phalarica uenit 705
fulminis acta modo, quam nec duo taurea terga
nec duplici squama lorica fidelis et auro
sustinuit; conlapsa ruunt immania membra,
dat tellus gemitum et clipeum super intonat ingens.
talis in Euboico Baiarum litore quondam 710
saxea pila cadit, magnis quam molibus ante
constructam ponto iaciunt, sic illa ruinam
prona trahit penitusque uadis inlisa recumbit;
miscent se maria et nigrae attolluntur harenae,
tum sonitu Prochyta alta tremit durumque cubile 715
Inarime Iouis imperiis imposta Typhoeo.

Hic Mars armipotens animum uirisque Latinis
addidit et stimulos acris sub pectore uertit,
immisitque Fugam Teucris atrumque Timorem.

undique conueniunt, quoniam data copia pugnae, 720
bellatorque animo deus incidit.
Pandarus, ut fuso germanum corpore cernit
et quo sit fortuna loco, qui casus agat res,
portam ui multa conuerso cardine torquet
obnixus latis umeris, multosque suorum 725
moenibus exclusos duro in certamine linquit;
ast alios secum includit recipitque ruentis,
demens, qui Rutulum in medio non agmine regem
uiderit inrumpentem ultroque incluserit urbi,
immanem ueluti pecora inter inertia tigrim. 730
continuo noua lux oculis effulsit et arma
horrendum sonuere, tremunt in uertice cristae
sanguineae clipeoque micantia fulmina mittit.
agnoscunt faciem inuisam atque immania membra
turbati subito Aeneadae. tum Pandarus ingens 735
emicat et mortis fraternae feruidus ira
effatur: 'non haec dotalis regia Amatae,
nec muris cohibet patriis media Ardea Turnum.
castra inimica uides, nulla hinc exire potestas.'
olli subridens sedato pectore Turnus: 740
'incipere, si qua animo uirtus, et consere dextram,
hic etiam inuentum Priamo narrabis Achillem.'
dixerat. ille rudem nodis et cortice crudo
intorquet summis adnixus uiribus hastam;
excepere auras, uulnus Saturnia Iuno 745
detorsit ueniens, portaeque infigitur hasta.
'at non hoc telum, mea quod ui dextera uersat,
effugies, neque enim is teli nec uulneris auctor':
sic ait, et sublatum alte consurgit in ensem
et mediam ferro gemina inter tempora frontem 750
diuidit impubisque immani uulnere malas.
fit sonus, ingenti concussa est pondere tellus;
conlapsos artus atque arma cruenta cerebro
sternit humi moriens, atque illi partibus aequis
huc caput atque illuc umero ex utroque pendit. 755

Diffugiunt uersi trepida formidine Troes,
et si continuo uictorem ea cura subisset,
rumpere claustra manu sociosque immittere portis,
ultimus ille dies bello gentique fuisset.
sed furor ardentem caedisque insana cupido 760
egit in aduersos.
principio Phalerim et succiso poplite Gygen
excipit, hinc raptas fugientibus ingerit hastas
in tergus, Iuno uiris animumque ministrat.
addit Halyn comitem et confixa Phegea parma, 765
ignaros deinde in muris Martemque cientis
Alcandrumque Haliumque Noemonaque Prytanimque.
Lyncea tendentem contra sociosque uocantem
uibranti gladio conixus ab aggere dexter
occupat, huic uno deiectum comminus ictu 770
cum galea longe iacuit caput. inde ferarum
uastatorem Amycum, quo non felicius alter
unguere tela manu ferrumque armare ueneno,
et Clytium Aeoliden et amicum Crethea Musis,
Crethea Musarum comitem, cui carmina semper 775
et citharae cordi numerosque intendere neruis,
semper equos atque arma uirum pugnasse canebat.

Tandem ductores audita caede suorum
conueniunt Teucris, Mnestheus acerque Serestus,
palantisque uident socios hostemque receptum. 780
et Mnestheus: 'quo deinde fugam, quo tenditis?' inquit.
'quos alios muros, quaeue ultra moenia habetis?
unus homo et uestris, o ciues, undique saeptus
aggeribus tantas strages impune per urbem
ediderit? iuuenum primos tot miserit Orco? 785
non infelicitis patriae ueterumque deorum
et magni Aeneae, segnes, miseretque pudetque?'
talibus accensi firmantur et agmine denso
consistunt. Turnus paulatim excedere pugna
et fluuium petere ac partem quae cingitur unda. 790
acrius hoc Teucris clamore incumbere magno

et glomerare manum, ceu saeuum turba leonem
cum telis premit infensis; at territus ille,
asper, acerba tuens, retro redit et neque terga
ira dare aut uirtus patitur, nec tendere contra 795
ille quidem hoc cupiens potis est per tela uirosque.
haud aliter retro dubius uestigia Turnus
improperata refert et mens exaestuat ira.
quin etiam bis tum medios inuaserat hostis,
bis confusa fuga per muros agmina uertit; 800
sed manus e castris propere coit omnis in unum
nec contra uiris audet Saturnia Iuno
sufficere; aeriam caelo nam Iuppiter Irim
demisit germanae haud mollia iussa ferentem,
ni Turnus cedat Teucrorum moenibus altis. 805
ergo nec clipeo iuuenis subsistere tantum
nec dextra ualet, iniectis sic undique telis
obruitur. strepit adsiduo caua tempora circum
tinnitu galea et saxis solida aera fatiscunt
discussaeque iubae, capiti nec sufficit umbo 810
ictibus; ingeminant hastis et Troes et ipse fulmineus Mnestheus. tum toto corpore sudor
liquitur et piceum (nec respirare potestas)
flumen agit, fessos quatit aeger anhelitus artus.
tum demum praeceps saltu sese omnibus armis 815
in fluuium dedit. ille suo cum gurgite flauo
accepit uenientem ac mollibus extulit undis
et laetum sociis abluta caede remisit.

LIBER X

Panditur interea domus omnipotentis Olympi
conciliumque uocat diuum pater atque hominum rex
sideream in sedem, terras unde arduus omnis
castraque Dardanidum aspectat populosque Latinos.
considunt tectis bipatientibus, incipit ipse: 5 ‘caelicolae magni, quianam sententia uobis
uersa retro tantumque animis certatis iniquis?
abnueram bello Italiam concurrere Teucris.
quae contra uetitum discordia? quis metus aut hos
aut hos arma sequi ferrumque lacescere suasit? 10
adueniet iustum pugnae (ne arcessite) tempus,
cum fera Karthago Romanis arcibus olim
exitium magnum atque Alpīs immittet apertas:
tum certare odiis, tum res rapuisse licebit.
nunc sinite et placitum laeti componite foedus.’ 15

Iuppiter haec paucis; at non Venus aurea contra
pauca refert:
‘o pater, o hominum rerumque aeterna potestas
(namque aliud quid sit quod iam implorare queamus?),
cernis ut insultent Rutuli, Turnusque feratur 20
per medios insignis equis tumidusque secundo
Marte ruat? non clausa tegunt iam moenia Teucros;
quin intra portas atque ipsis proelia miscent
aggeribus murorum et inundant sanguine fossae.
Aeneas ignarus abest. numquamne leuari 25
obsidione sines? muris iterum imminet hostis
nascentis Troiae nec non exercitus alter,
atque iterum in Teucros Aetolis surgit ab Arpis
Tydides. equidem credo, mea uulnera restant
et tua progenies mortalia demoror arma. 30
si sine pace tua atque inuito numine Troes
Italiam petiere, luant peccata neque illos
iuueris auxilio; sin tot responsa secuti

quae superi manesque dabant, cur nunc tua quisquam
uertere iussa potest aut cur noua condere fata? 35
quid repetam exustas Erycino in litore classis,
quid tempestatum regem uentosque furentis
Aeolia excitos aut actam nubibus Irim?
nunc etiam manis (haec intemptata manebat
sors rerum) mouet et superis immissa repente 40
Allecto medias Italum bacchata per urbes.
nil super imperio moueor. sperauimus ista,
dum fortuna fuit. uincant, quos uincere mauis.
si nulla est regio Teucris quam det tua coniunx
dura, per euersae, genitor, fumantia Troiae 45
excidia obtestor: liceat dimittere ab armis
incolumem Ascanium, liceat superesse nepotem.
Aeneas sane ignotis iactetur in undis
et quacumque uiam dederit Fortuna sequatur:
hunc tegere et dirae ualeam subducere pugnae. 50
est Amathus, est celsa mihi Paphus atque Cythera
Idaliaeque domus: positis inglorius armis
exigat hic aeuum. magna dicione iubeto
Karthago premat Ausoniam; nihil urbibus inde
obstabit Tyriis. quid pestem euadere belli 55
iuuit et Argolicos medium fugisse per ignis
totque maris uastaeque exhausta pericula terrae,
dum Latium Teucris recidiuaque Pergama quaerunt?
non satius cineres patriae insedissem supremos
atque solum quo Troia fuit? Xanthum et Simoenta 60
redde, oro, miseris iterumque reuoluere casus
da, pater, Iliacos Teucris.' tum regia Iuno
acta furore graui: 'quid me alta silentia cogis
rumpere et obductum uerbis uulgare dolorem?
Aenean hominum quisquam diuumque subegit 65
bella sequi aut hostem regi se inferre Latino?
Italiam petiit fatis auctoribus (esto)
Cassandrae impulsus furiis: num linquere castra
hortati sumus aut uitam committere uentis?
num puero summam belli, num credere muros, 70

Tyrrhenamque fidem aut gentis agitare quietas?
quis deus in fraudem, quae dura potentia nostra
egit? ubi hic Iuno demissaue nubibus Iris?
indignum est Italos Troiam circumdare flammis
nascentem et patria Turnum consistere terra, 75
cui Pilumnus auus, cui diua Venilia mater:
quid face Troianos atra uim ferre Latinis,
arua aliena iugo premere atque auertere praedas?
quid soceros legere et gremiis abducere pactas,
pacem orare manu, praefigere puppibus arma? 80
tu potes Aenean manibus subducere Graium
proque uiro nebulam et uentos obtendere inanis,
et potes in totidem classem conuertere nymphas:
nos aliquid Rutulos contra iuuisse nefandum est?
“Aeneas ignarus abest”: ignarus et absit. 85
est Paphus Idaliumque tibi, sunt alta Cythera:
quid grauidam bellis urbem et corda aspera temptas?
nosne tibi fluxas Phrygiae res uertere fundo
conamur? nos? an miseros qui Troas Achiuis
obiecit? quae causa fuit consurgere in arma 90
Europamque Asiamque et foedera soluere furto?
me duce Dardanius Spartam expugnauit adulter,
aut ego tela dedi fouiue Cupidine bella?
tum decuit metuisse tuis: nunc sera querelis
haud iustis adsurgis et inrita iurgia iactas.’ 95

Talibus orabat Iuno, cunctique fremebant
caelicolae adsensu uario, ceu flamina prima
cum deprensa fremunt siluis et caeca uolutant
murmura uenturos nautis prodentia uentos.
tum pater omnipotens, rerum cui prima potestas, 100
infit (eo dicente deum domus alta silescit
et tremefacta solo tellus, silet arduus aether,
tum Zephyri posuere, premit placida aequora pontus):
‘accipite ergo animis atque haec mea figite dicta.
quandoquidem Ausonios coniungi foedere Teucris 105
haud licitum, nec uestra capit discordia finem,

quae cuique est fortuna hodie, quam quisque secat spem,
Tros Rutulusne fuat, nullo discrimine habebo,
seu fatis Italum castra obsidione tenentur
siue errore malo Troiae monitisque sinistris. 110
nec Rutulos soluo. sua cuique exorsa laborem
fortunamque ferent. rex Iuppiter omnibus idem.
fata uiam inuenient.' Stygii per flumina fratris,
per pice torrentis atraque uoragine ripas
adruit et totum nutu tremefecit Olympum. 115
hic finis fandi. solio tum Iuppiter aureo
surgit, caelicolae medium quem ad limina ducunt.

Interea Rutuli portis circum omnibus instant
sternere caede uiros et moenia cingere flammis.
at legio Aeneadam uallis obsessa tenetur 120
nec spes ulla fugae. miseri stant turribus altis
nequiquam et rara muros cinxere corona
Asius Imbrasides Hicetaoniusque Thymoetes
Assaracique duo et senior cum Castore Thymbris,
prima acies; hos germani Sarpedonis ambo 125
et Clarus et Thaemon Lycia comitantur ab alta.
fert ingens toto conixus corpore saxum,
haud partem exiguum montis, Lynesius Acmon,
nec Clytio genitore minor nec fratre Menestheo.
hi iaculis, illi certant defendere saxis 130
molirique ignem neruoque aptare sagittas.
ipse inter medios, Veneris iustissima cura,
Dardanius caput, ecce, puer detectus honestum,
qualis gemma micat fuluum quae diuidit aurum,
aut collo decus aut capiti, uel quale per artem 135
inclusum buxo aut Oricia terebintho
lucet ebur; fusos ceruix cui lactea crinis
accipit et molli subnectens circulus auro.
te quoque magnanimae uiderunt, Ismare, gentes
uulnera derigere et calamos armare ueneno, 140
Maeonia generose domo, ubi pingua culta
exercentque uiri Pactolusque inrigat auro.

adfuit et Mnestheus, quem pulsi pristina Turni
aggere murorum sublimem gloria tollit,
et Capys: hinc nomen Campanae ducitur urbi. 145

Illi inter sese duri certamina belli
contulerant: media Aeneas freta nocte secabat.
namque ut ab Euandro castris ingressus Etruscis
regem adit et regi memorat nomenque genusque
quidue petat quidue ipse ferat, Mezentius arma 150
quae sibi conciliet, uiolentaque pectora Turni
edocet, humanis quae sit fiducia rebus
admonet immiscetque preces, haud fit mora, Tarchon
iungit opes foedusque ferit; tum libera fati
classem conscendit iussis gens Lydia diuum 155
externo commissa duci. Aeneia puppis
prima tenet rostro Phrygios subiuncta leones,
imminet Ida super, profugis gratissima Teucris.
hic magnus sedet Aeneas secumque uolutat
euentus belli uarios, Pallasque sinistro 160
adfixus lateri iam quaerit sidera, opacae
noctis iter, iam quae passus terraque marique.

Pandite nunc Helicon, deae, cantusque mouete,
quae manus interea Tuscis comitetur ab oris
Aenean armetque rates pelagoque uehatur. 165

Massicus aerata princeps secat aequora Tigri,
sub quo mille manus iuuenum, qui moenia Clusi
quique urbem liquere Cosas, quis tela sagittae
gorytique leues umeris et letifer arcus.
una toruus Abas: huic totum insignibus armis 170
agmen et aurato fulgebat Apolline puppis.
sescentos illi dederat Populonia mater
expertos belli iuuenes, ast Ilua trecentos
insula inexhaustis Chalybum generosa metallis.
tertius ille hominum diuumque interpret Asilas, 175
cui pecudum fibrae, caeli cui sidera parent

et linguae uolucrum et praesagi fulminis ignes,
mille rapit densos acie atque horrentibus hastis.
hos parere iubent Alphea ab origine Pisae,
urbs Etrusca solo. sequitur pulcherrimus Astyr, 180
Astyr equo fidens et uersicoloribus armis.
ter centum adiciunt (mens omnibus una sequendi)
qui Caerete domo, qui sunt Minionis in aruis,
et Pyrgi ueteres intempestaeque Grauiscae.
Non ego te, Ligurum ductor fortissime bello, 185
transierim, Cunare, et paucis comitate Cupauo,
cuius olorinae surgunt de uertice pennae
(crimen, Amor, uestrum) formaeque insigne paternae.
namque ferunt luctu Cycnum Phaethontis amati,
populeas inter frondes umbramque sororum 190
dum canit et maestum Musa solatur amorem,
canentem molli pluma duxisse senectam
linquentem terras et sidera uoce sequentem.
filius aequalis comitatus classe cateruas
ingentem remis Centaurum promouet: ille 195
instat aquae saxumque undis immane minatur
arduus, et longa sulcat maria alta carina.

Ille etiam patriis agmen ciet Ocnus ab oris,
fatidicae Mantus et Tusci filius amnis,
qui muros matrisque dedit tibi, Mantua, nomen, 200
Mantua diues auis, sed non genus omnibus unum:
gens illi triplex, populi sub gente quaterni,
ipsa caput populis, Tusco de sanguine uires.
hinc quoque quingentos in se Mezentius armat,
quos patre Benaco uelatus harundine glauca 205
Mincius infesta ducebat in aequora pinu.
it grauis Aulestes centenaque arbore fluctum
uerberat adsurgens, spumant uada marmore uerso.
hunc uehit immanis Triton et caerula concha
exterrens freta, cui laterum tenuis hispida nanti 210
frons hominem praefert, in pristim desinit aluus,
spumea semifero sub pectore murmurat unda.

Tot lecti procures ter denis nauibus ibant
subsidio Troiae et campos salis aere secabant.

Iamque dies caelo concesserat almaque curru 215
noctiuago Phoebe medium pulsabat Olympon:
Aeneas (neque enim membris dat cura quietem)
ipse sedens clauumque regit uelisque ministrat.
atque illi medio in spatio chorus, ecce, suarum
occurrit comitum: nymphae, quas alma Cybebe 220
numen habere maris nymphasque e nauibus esse
iusserat, innabant pariter fluctusque secabant,
quot prius aeratae steterant ad litora prorae.
agnoscunt longe regem lustrantque choreis;
quarum quae fandi doctissima Cymodocea 225
pone sequens dextra puppim tenet ipsaque dorso
eminet ac laeua tacitis subremigat undis.
tum sic ignarum adloquitur: 'uigilasne, deum gens,
Aenea? uigila et uelis immitte rudentis.
nos sumus, Idaeae sacro de uertice pinus, 230
nunc pelagi nymphae, classis tua. perfidus ut nos
praecipitis ferro Rutulus flammaque premebat,
rupimus inuitae tua uincula teque per aequor
quaerimus. hanc genetrix faciem miserata refecit
et dedit esse deas aeuumque agitare sub undis. 235
at puer Ascanius muro fossisque tenetur
tela inter media atque horrentis Marte Latinos.
iam loca iussa tenent forti permixtus Etrusco
Arcas eques; medias illis opponere turmas,
ne castris iungant, certa est sententia Turno. 240
surge age et Aurora socios ueniente uocari
primus in arma iube, et clipeum cape quem dedit ipse
inuictum ignipotens atque oras ambiit auro.
crastina lux, mea si non inrita dicta putaris,
ingentis Rutulae spectabit caedis aceruos.' 245
dixerat et dextra discedens impulit altam
haud ignara modi puppim: fugit illa per undas
ocior et iaculo et uentos aequante sagitta.

inde aliae celerant cursus. stupet inscius ipse
Tros Anchisiades, animos tamen omine tollit. 250
tum breuiter supera aspectans conuexa precatur:
‘alma parens Idaea deum, cui Dindyma cordi
turrigeraeque urbes biuigique ad frena leones,
tu mihi nunc pugnae princeps, tu rite propinques
augurium Phrygibusque adsis pede, diua, secundo.’ 255
tantum effatus, et interea reuoluta ruebat
matura iam luce dies noctemque fugarat;
principio sociis edicit signa sequantur
atque animos aptent armis pugnaeque parent se.

Iamque in conspectu Teucros habet et sua castra 260
stans celsa in puppi, clipeum cum deinde sinistra
extulit ardentem. clamorem ad sidera tollunt
Dardanidae e muris, spes addita suscitatur iras,
tela manu iaciunt, quales sub nubibus atris
Strymoniae dant signa grues atque aethera tranant 265
cum sonitu, fugiuntque Notos clamore secundo.
at Rutulo regi ducibusque ea mira uideri
Ausoniis, donec uersas ad litora puppis
respiciunt totumque adlabi classibus aequor.
ardet apex capiti cristisque a uertice flamma 270
funditur et uastos umbo uomit aureus ignis:
non secus ac liquida si quando nocte cometae
sanguinei lugubre rubent, aut Sirius ardor
ille sitim morbosque ferens mortalibus aegris
nascitur et laeue contristat lumine caelum. 275

Haud tamen audaci Turno fiducia cessit
litora praecipere et uenientis pellere terra.
[ultra animos tollit dictis atque increpat ultra:]
‘quod uotis optastis adest, perfringere dextra.
in manibus Mars ipse uiris. nunc coniugis esto 280
quisque suae tectique memor, nunc magna referto
facta, patrum laudes. ultra occurramus ad undam
dum trepidi egressisque labant uestigia prima.

audentis Fortuna iuuat.’

haec ait, et secum uersat quos ducere contra 285
uel quibus obsessos possit concredere muros.

Interea Aeneas socios de puppibus altis
pontibus exponit. multi seruare recursus
languentis pelagi et breuibus se credere saltu,
per remos alii. speculatus litora Tarchon, 290
qua uada non sperat nec fracta remurmurat unda,
sed mare inoffensum crescenti adlabitur aestu,
aduertit subito proras sociosque precatur:
‘nunc, o lecta manus, ualidis incumbite remis;
tollite, ferte rates, inimicam findite rostris 295
hanc terram, sulcumque sibi premat ipsa carina.
frangere nec tali puppim statione recuso
arrepta tellure semel.’ quae talia postquam
effatus Tarchon, socii consurgere tonsis
spumantisque rates aruis inferre Latinis, 300
donec rostra tenent siccum et sedere carinae
omnes innocuae. sed non puppis tua, Tarchon:
namque inflicta uadis, dorso dum pendet iniquo
anceps sustentata diu fluctusque fatigat,
soluitur atque uiros mediis exponit in undis, 305
fragmina remorum quos et fluitantia transtra
impediunt retrahitque pedes simul unda relabens.

Nec Turnum segnis retinet mora, sed rapit acer
totam aciem in Teucros et contra in litore sistit.
signa canunt. primus turmas inuasit agrestis 310
Aeneas, omen pugnae, strauitque Latinos
occiso Therone, uirum qui maximus ultro
Aenean petit. huic gladio perque aerea suta,
per tunicam squalentem auro latus haurit apertum.
inde Lichan ferit exsectum iam matre perempta 315
et tibi, Phoebe, sacrum: casus euadere ferri
quo licuit paruo? nec longe Cissea durum
immanemque Gyan sternentis agmina claua

deiecit leto; nihil illos Herculis arma
nec ualidae iuuere manus genitorque Melampus, 320
Alcidae comes usque grauis dum terra labores
praebuit. ecce Pharo, uoces dum iactat inertis,
intorquens iaculum clamanti sistit in ore.
tu quoque, flauentem prima lanugine malas
dum sequeris Clytium infelix, noua gaudia, Cydon, 325
Dardania stratus dextra, securus amorum
qui iuuenum tibi semper erant, miserande iaceres,
ni fratrum stipata cohors foret obuia, Phorci
progenies, septem numero, septenaque tela
coniciunt; partim galea clipeoque resultant 330
inrita, deflexit partim stringentia corpus
alma Venus. fidum Aeneas adfatur Achaten:
'suggere tela mihi, non ullum dextera frustra
torserit in Rutulos, steterunt quae in corpore Graium
Iliacis campis.' tum magnam corripit hastam 335
et iacit: illa uolans clipei transuerberat aera Maeonis et thoraca simul cum pectore rumpit.
huic frater subit Alcanor fratremque ruentem
sustentat dextra: traiecto missa lacerto
protinus hasta fugit seruatque cruenta tenorem, 340
dexteraque ex umero neruis moribunda pendit.
tum Numitor iaculo fratris de corpore rapto Aenean petiit: sed non et figere contra
est licitum, magnique femur perstrinxit Achatae.

Hic Curibus fidens primaueo corpore Clausus 345
aduenit et rigida Dryopem ferit eminus hasta
sub mentum grauiter pressa, pariterque loquentis
uocem animamque rapit traiecto gutture; at ille
fronte ferit terram et crassum uomit ore cruorem.
tris quoque Threicios Boreae de gente suprema 350
et tris quos Idas pater et patria Ismara mittit,
per uarios sternit casus. accurrit Halaesus
Auruncaeque manus, subit et Neptunia proles,
insignis Messapus equis. expellere tendunt

nunc hi, nunc illi: certatur limine in ipso 355
Ausoniae. magno discordes aethere uenti
proelia ceu tollunt animis et uiribus aequis;
non ipsi inter se, non nubila, non mare cedit;
anceps pugna diu, stant obnixa omnia contra:
haud aliter Troianae acies aciesque Latinae 360
concurrunt, haeret pede pes densusque uiro uir.

At parte ex alia, qua saxa rotantia late
intulerat torrens arbustaque diruta ripis,
Arcadas insuetos acies inferre pedestris
ut uidit Pallas Latio dare terga sequaci, 365
aspera aquis natura loci dimittere quando
suasit equos, unum quod rebus restat egenis,
nunc prece, nunc dictis uirtutem accendit amaris;
'quo fugitis, socii? per uos et fortia facta,
per ducis Euandri nomen deuictaque bella 370
spemque meam, patriae quae nunc subit aemula laudi,
fidite ne pedibus. ferro rumpenda per hostis
est uia. qua globus ille uirum densissimus urget,
hac uos et Pallanta ducem patria alta reposcit.
numina nulla premunt, mortali urgemur ab hoste 375
mortales; totidem nobis animaeque manusque.
ecce maris magna claudit nos obice pontus,
deest iam terra fugae: pelagus Troiamne petamus?'
haec ait, et medius densos prorumpit in hostis.

Obuius huic primum fatis adductus iniquis 380
fit Lagus. hunc, uellit magno dum pondere saxum,
intorto figit telo, discrimina costis
per medium qua spina dabat, hastamque recepat
ossibus haerentem. quem non super occupat Hisbo,
ille quidem hoc sperans; nam Pallas ante ruentem, 385
dum furit, incautum crudeli morte sodalis
excipit atque ensem tumido in pulmone recondit.
hinc Sthenium petit et Rhoeti de gente uetusta
Anchemolum thalamos ausum incestare nouercae.

uos etiam, gemini, Rutulis cecidistis in aruis, 390
Daucia, Laride Thymberque, simillima proles,
indiscreta suis gratusque parentibus error;
at nunc dura dedit uobis discrimina Pallas.
nam tibi, Thymbre, caput Euandrius abstulit ensis;
te decisa suum, Laride, dextera quaerit 395
semianimesque micant digiti ferrumque retractant.
Arcadas accensos monitu et praeclara tuentis
facta uiri mixtus dolor et pudor armat in hostis.

Tum Pallas biiugis fugientem Rhoetea praeter
traicit. hoc spatium tantumque morae fuit Ilo; 400
Ilo namque procul ualidam derexerat hastam,
quam medius Rhoeteus intercipit, optime Teuthra,
te fugiens fratremque Tyren, curruque uolutus
caedit semianimis Rutulorum calcibus arua.
ac uelut optato uentis aestate coortis 405
dispersa immittit siluis incendia pastor,
correptis subito mediis extenditur una
horrida per latos acies Volcania campos,
ille sedens uictor flammam despectat ouantis:
non aliter socium uirtus coit omnis in unum 410
teque iuuat, Palla. sed bellis acer Halaesus
tendit in aduersos seque in sua colligit arma.
hic mactat Ladona Pheretaque Demodocumque,
Strymonio dextram fulgenti deripit ense
elatum in iugulum, saxo ferit ora Thoantis 415
ossaque dispersit cerebro permixta cruento.
fata canens siluis genitor celarat Halaesum;
ut senior leto canentia lumina soluit,
iniecere manum Parcae telisque sacrarunt
Euandri. quem sic Pallas petit ante precatus: 420
‘da nunc, Thybri pater, ferro, quod missile libro,
fortunam atque uiam duri per pectus Halaesi.
haec arma exuiasque uiri tua quercus habebit.’
audiit illa deus; dum textit Imaona Halaesus,
Arcadio infelix telo dat pectus inermum. 425

At non caede uiri tanta perterrita Lausus,
pars ingens belli, sinit agmina: primus Abantem
oppositum interimit, pugnae nodumque moramque.
sternitur Arcadiae proles, sternuntur Etrusci
et uos, o Graiis imperdita corpora, Teucri. 430
agmina concurrunt ducibusque et uiribus aequis;
extremi addensent acies nec turba moueri
tela manusque sinit. hinc Pallas instat et urget,
hinc contra Lausus, nec multum discrepat aetas,
egregii forma, sed quis Fortuna negarat 435
in patriam reditus. ipsos concurrere passus
haud tamen inter se magni regnator Olympi;
mox illos sua fata manent maiore sub hoste.

Interea soror alma monet succedere Lauso
Turnum, qui uolucris curru medium secat agmen. 440
ut uidit socios: 'tempus desistere pugnae;
solus ego in Pallanta feror, soli mihi Pallas
debetur; cuperem ipse parens spectator adesset.'
haec ait, et socii cesserunt aequore iusso.
at Rutulum abscessu iuuenis tum iussa superba 445
miratus stupet in Turno corpusque per ingens
lumina uoluit obitque truci procul omnia uisu,
talibus et dictis it contra dicta tyranni:
'aut spoliis ego iam raptis laudabor opimis
aut leto insigni: sorti pater aequus utrique est. 450
tolle minas.' fatus medium procedit in aequor;
frigidus Arcadibus coit in praecordia sanguis.
desiluit Turnus biiugis, pedes apparat ire
comminus; utque leo, specula cum uidit ab alta
stare procul campis meditantem in proelia taurum, 455
aduolat, haud alia est Turni uenientis imago.
hunc ubi contiguum missae fore credidit hastae,
ire prior Pallas, si qua fors adiuuet ausum
uiribus imparibus, magnumque ita ad aethera fatur:
'per patris hospitium et mensas, quas aduena adisti, 460
te precor, Alcide, coeptis ingentibus adsis.

cernat semineci sibi me rapere arma cruenta
uictoremque ferant morientia lumina Turni.
audiit Alcides iuuenem magnumque sub imo
corde premit gemitum lacrimasque effundit inanis. 465
tum genitor natum dictis adfatur amicis:
‘stat sua cuique dies, breue et inreparabile tempus
omnibus est uitae; sed famam extendere factis,
hoc uirtutis opus. Troiae sub moenibus altis
tot gnati cecidere deum, quin occidit una 470
Sarpedon, mea progenies; etiam sua Turnum
fata uocant metasque dati peruenit ad aevi.’
sic ait, atque oculos Rutulorum reicit aruis.

At Pallas magnis emittit uiribus hastam
uaginaque caua fulgentem deripit ensem. 475
illa uolans umeri surgunt qua tegmina summa
incidit, atque uiam clipei molita per oras
tandem etiam magno strinxit de corpore Turni.
hic Turnus ferro praefixum robur acuto
in Pallanta diu librans iacit atque ita fatur: 480
‘aspice num mage sit nostrum penetrabile telum.’
dixerat; at clipeum, tot ferri terga, tot aeris,
quem pellis totiens obeat circumdata tauri,
uibranti cuspis medium transuerberat ictu
loricaeque moras et pectus perforat ingens. 485
ille rapit calidum frustra de uulnere telum:
una eademque uia sanguis animusque sequuntur.
corrui in uulnus (sonitum super arma dedere)
et terram hostilem moriens petit ore cruento.
quem Turnus super adsistens: 490
‘Arcades, haec’ inquit ‘memores mea dicta referte
Euandro: qualem meruit, Pallanta remitto.
quisquis honos tumuli, quidquid solamen humandi est,
largior. haud illi stabunt Aeneia paruo
hospitia.’ et laeuo pressit pede talia fatus 495
exanimem rapiens immania pondera baltei
impressumque nefas: una sub nocte iugali

caesa manus iuuenum foede thalamique cruenti,
quae Clonus Eurytides multo caelauerat auro;
quo nunc Turnus ouat spolio gaudetque potitus. 500
nescia mens hominum fati sortisque futurae
et seruare modum rebus sublata secundis!
Turno tempus erit magno cum optauerit emptum
intactum Pallanta, et cum spolia ista diemque
oderit. at socii multo gemitu lacrimisque 505
impositum scuto referunt Pallanta frequentes.
o dolor atque decus magnum rediture parenti,
haec te prima dies bello dedit, haec eadem aufert,
cum tamen ingentis Rutulorum linquis acervos!

Nec iam fama mali tanti, sed certior auctor 510
aduolat Aeneae tenui discrimine leti
esse suos, tempus uersis succurrere Teucris.
proxima quaeque metit gladio latumque per agmen
ardens limitem agit ferro, te, Turne, superbum
caede noua quaerens. Pallas, Euander, in ipsis 515
omnia sunt oculis, mensae quas aduena primas
tunc adiit, dextraeque datae. Sulmone creatos
quattuor hic iuuenes, totidem quos educat Vfers,
uiuentis rapit, inferias quos immolet umbris
captiuoque rogi perfundat sanguine flammis. 520
inde Mago procul infensam contenderat hastam:
ille astu subit, at tremibunda superuolat hasta,
et genua amplectens effatur talia supplex:
'per patrios manis et spes surgentis Iuli
te precor, hanc animam serues gnatoque patrique. 525
est domus alta, iacent penitus defossa talenta
caelati argenti, sunt auri pondera facti
infectique mihi. non hic uictoria Teucrum
uertitur aut anima una dabit discrimina tanta.'
dixerat. Aeneas contra cui talia reddit: 530
'argenti atque auri memoras quae multa talenta
gnatis parce tuis. belli commercia Turnus
sustulit ista prior iam tum Pallante perempto.

hoc patris Anchisae manes, hoc sentit Iulus.’
sic fatus galeam laeua tenet atque reflexa 535
ceruice orantis capulo tenus applicat ensem.
nec procul Haemonides, Phoebi Triuiaequae sacerdos,
infula cui sacra redimibat tempora uitta,
totus conlucens ueste atque insignibus albis.
quem congressus agit campo, lapsumque superstans 540
immolat ingentique umbra tegit, arma Serestus
lecta refert umeris tibi, rex Gradiue, tropaeum.

Instaurant acies Volcani stirpe creatus
Caeculus et ueniens Marsorum montibus Vmbro.
Dardanides contra furit: Anxuris ense sinistram 545
et totum clipei ferro deiecerat orbem
(dixerat ille aliquid magnum uimque adfore uerbo
crediderat, caeloque animum fortasse ferebat
canitiemque sibi et longos promiserat annos);
Tarquitus exsultans contra fulgentibus armis, 550
siluicolae Fauno Dryope quem nympa crearat,
obuius ardenti sese obtulit. ille reducta
loricam clipeique ingens onus impedit hasta,
tum caput orantis nequiquam et multa parantis
dicere deturbat terrae, truncumque tepentem 555
prouoluens super haec inimico pectore fatur:
‘istic nunc, metuende, iace. non te optima mater
condet humi patrioque onerabit membra sepulcro:
alitibus linquere feris, aut gurgite mersum
unda feret piscesque impasti uulnera lambent.’ 560
protinus Antaeum et Lucam, prima agmina Turni,
persequitur, fortemque Numam fuluumque Camertem,
magnanimo Volcente satum, ditissimus agri
qui fuit Ausonidum et tacitis regnauit Amyclis.
Aegaeon qualis, centum cui bracchia dicunt 565
centenasque manus, quinquaginta oribus ignem
pectoribusque arsisse, Iouis cum fulmina contra
tot paribus streperet clipeis, tot stringeret ensis:
sic toto Aeneas desaeuit in aequore uictor

ut semel intepuit mucro. quin ecce Niphaei 570
quadriiugis in equos aduersaque pectora tendit.
atque illi longe gradientem et dira frementem
ut uidere, metu uersi retroque ruentes
effunduntque ducem rapiuntque ad litora currus.

Interea biiugis infert se Lucagus albis 575
in medios fraterque Liger; sed frater habenis
flectit equos, strictum rotat acer Lucagus ensem.
haud tulit Aeneas tanto feruore furentis;
inruit aduersaque ingens apparuit hasta.
cui Liger: 580
‘non Diomedis equos nec currum cernis Achilli
aut Phrygiae campos: nunc belli finis et aevi
his dabitur terris.’ uesano talia late
dicta uolant Ligeri. sed non et Troius heros
dicta parat contra, iaculum nam torquet in hostis. 585
Lucagus ut pronus pendens in uerbera telo
admonuit biiugos, proiecto dum pede laeuo
aptat se pugnae, subit oras hasta per imas
fulgentis clipei, tum laeuum perforat inguen;
excussus curru moribundus uoluitur aruis. 590
quem pius Aeneas dictis adfatur amaris:
‘Lucage, nulla tuos currus fuga segnis equorum
prodidit aut uanae uertere ex hostibus umbrae:
ipse rotis saliens iuga deseris.’ haec ita fatus
arripuit biiugos; frater tendebat inertis 595
infelix palmas curru delapsus eodem:
‘per te, per qui te talem genuere parentes,
uir Troiane, sine hanc animam et miserere precantis.’
pluribus oranti Aeneas: ‘haud talia dudum
dicta dabas. morere et fratrem ne desere frater.’ 600
tum latebras animae pectus mucrone recludit.
taliam per campos edebat funera ductor
Dardanius torrentis aquae uel turbinis atri
more furens. tandem erumpunt et castra relinquunt
Ascanius puer et nequiquam obsessa iuuentus. 605

Iunonem interea compellat Iuppiter ultro:
‘o germana mihi atque eadem gratissima coniunx,
ut rebare, Venus (nec te sententia fallit)
Troianas sustentat opes, non uiuida bello
dextra uiris animusque ferox patiensque pericli.’ 610
cui Iuno summissa: ‘quid, o pulcherrime coniunx,
sollicitas aegram et tua tristia dicta timentem?
si mihi, quae quondam fuerat quamque esse decebat,
uis in amore foret, non hoc mihi namque negares,
omnipotens, quin et pugnae subducere Turnum 615
et Dauno possem incolumem seruare parenti.
nunc pereat Teucrisque pio det sanguine poenas.
ille tamen nostra deducit origine nomen
Pilumnusque illi quartus pater, et tua larga
saepe manu multisque oneravit limina donis.’ 620
cui rex aetherii breuiter sic fatur Olympi:
‘si mora praesentis leti tempusque caduco
oratur iuueni meque hoc ita ponere sentis,
tolle fuga Turnum atque instantibus eripe fati:
hactenus indulsisse uacat. sin altior istis 625
sub precibus uenia ulla latet totumque moueri
mutariue putas bellum, spes pascis inanis.’
et Iuno adlacrimans: ‘quid si, quae uoce grauaris,
mente dares atque haec Turno rata uita maneret?
nunc manet insontem grauis exitus, aut ego ueri 630
uana feror. quod ut o potius formidine falsa
ludar, et in melius tua, qui potes, orsa reflectas!’

Haec ubi dicta dedit, caelo se protinus alto
misit agens hiemem nimbo succincta per auras, Iliacamque aciem et Laurentia castra petiuit. 635
tum dea nube caua tenuem sine uiribus umbram
in faciem Aeneae (uisu mirabile monstrum)
Dardaniis ornat telis, clipeumque iubasque
diuini adsimulat capitis, dat inania uerba,
dat sine mente sonum gressusque effingit euntis, 640
morte obita qualis fama est uolitare figuras

aut quae sopitos deludunt somnia sensus.
at primas laeta ante acies exsultat imago
inirratque uirum telis et uoce lacessit.
instat cui Turnus stridentemque eminus hastam 645
conicit; illa dato uertit uestigia tergo.
tum uero Aenean auersum ut cedere Turnus
credidit atque animo spem turbidus hausit inanem:
'quo fugis, Aenea? thalamos ne desere pactos;
hac dabitur dextra tellus quaesita per undas.' 650
taliam uociferans sequitur strictumque coruscat
mucronem, nec ferre uidet sua gaudia uentos.

Forte ratis celsi coniuncta crepidine saxi
expositis stabat scalis et ponte parato,
qua rex Clusinis aduectus Osinius oris. 655
huc sese trepida Aeneae fugientis imago
conicit in latebras, nec Turnus segnior instat
exsuperatque moras et pontis transilit altos.
uix proram attigerat, rumpit Saturnia funem
auulsamque rapit reuoluta per aequora nauem. 660
tum leuis haud ultra latebras iam quaerit imago, 663
sed sublime uolans nubi se immiscuit atrae,
illum autem Aeneas absentem in proelia poscit; 661
obuia multa uirum demittit corpora morti,
cum Turnum medio interea fert aequore turbo. 665
respicit ignarus rerum ingratusque salutis
et duplicis cum uoce manus ad sidera tendit:
'omnipotens genitor, tanton me crimine dignum
duxisti et talis uoluisti expendere poenas?
quo feror? unde abii? quae me fuga quemue reducit? 670
Laurentisne iterum muros aut castra uidebo?
quid manus illa uirum, qui me meaque arma secuti?
quosque (nefas) omnis infanda in morte reliqui
et nunc palantis uideo, gemitumque cadentum
accipio? quid ago? aut quae iam satis ima dehiscat 675
terra mihi? uos o potius miserescite, uenti;
in rupes, in saxa (uolens uos Turnus adoro)

ferre ratem saevisque uadis immittite syrtis,
quo nec me Rutuli nec conscia fama sequatur.'
haec memorans animo nunc huc, nunc fluctuat illuc, 680
an sese mucrone ob tantum dedecus amens
induat et crudum per costas exigit ensem,
fluctibus an iaciat mediis et litora nando
curua petat Teucrumque iterum se reddat in arma.
ter conatus utramque uiam, ter maxima Iuno 685
continuit iuuenemque animi miserata repressit.
labitur alta secans fluctuque aestuque secundo
et patris antiquam Dauni defertur ad urbem.

At Iouis interea monitis Mezentius ardens
succedit pugnae Teucrosque inuadit ouantis. 690
concurrunt Tyrrhenae acies atque omnibus uni,
uni odiisque uiro telisque frequentibus instant.
ille (uelut rupes uastum quae prodit in aequor,
obuia uentorum furiis expostaque ponto,
uim cunctam atque minas perfert caelique marisque 695
ipsa immota manens) prolem Dolichaonis Hebrum
sternit humi, cum quo Latagum Palmumque fugacem,
sed Latagum saxo atque ingenti fragmine montis
occupat os faciemque aduersam, poplite Palmum
succiso uolui segnem sinit, armaque Lauso 700
donat habere umeris et uertice figere cristas.
nec non Euanthen Phrygium Paridisque Mimanta
aequalem comitemque, una quem nocte Theano
in lucem genitore Amyco dedit et face praegnas
Cisseis regina Parim; Paris urbe paterna 705
occubat, ignarum Laurens habet ora Mimanta.
ac uelut ille canum morsu de montibus altis
actus aper, multos Vesulus quem pinifer annos
defendit multosque palus Laurentia silua
pascit harundinea, postquam inter retia uentum est, 710
substitit infremuitque ferox et inhorruit amos,
nec cuiquam irasci propiusue accedere uirtus,
sed iaculis tutisque procul clamoribus instant;

ille autem impavidus partis cunctatur in omnis 717
dentibus infrendens et tergo decutit hastas:
haud aliter, iustae quibus est Mezentius irae, 714
non ulli est animus stricto concurrere ferro,
missilibus longe et uasto clamore lacesunt.

Venerat antiquis Corythi de finibus Acron, 719
Graius homo, infectos linquens profugus hymenaeos.
hunc ubi miscentem longe media agmina uidit,
purpureum pennis et pactae coniugis ostro,
impastus stabula alta leo ceu saepe peragrans
(suadet enim uesana fames), si forte fugacem
conspexit capream aut surgentem in cornua ceruum, 725
gaudet hians immane comasque arrexit et haeret
uisceribus super incumbens; lauit improba taeter
ora cruor —

sic ruit in densos alacer Mezentius hostis.
sternitur infelix Acron et calcibus atram 730
tundit humum exspirans infractaque tela cruentat.
atque idem fugientem haud est dignatus Oroden
sternere nec iacta caecum dare cuspidē uulnus;
obuius aduersoque occurrit seque uiro uir
contulit, haud furto melior sed fortibus armis. 735
tum super abiectum posito pede nixus et hasta:
‘pars belli haud temnenda, uiri, iacet altus Orodes.’
conclamant socii laetum paeana secuti;
ille autem exspirans: ‘non me, quicumque es, inulto,
uictor, nec longum laetabere; te quoque fata 740
prospectant paria atque eadem mox arua tenebis.’
ad quem subridens mixta Mezentius ira:
‘nunc morere. ast de me diuum pater atque hominum rex
uiderit.’ hoc dicens eduxit corpore telum.
olli dura quies oculos et ferreus urget 745
somnia, in aeternam clauduntur lumina noctem.

Caedicus Alcathoum obtruncat, Sacrator Hydaspen
partheniumque Rapo et praedurum uiribus Orsen,

Messapus Cloniumque Lycaoniumque Erichaeten,
illum infrenis equi lapsu tellure iacentem, 750
hunc peditem. pedes et Lycius processerat Agis,
quem tamen haud expers Valerus uirtutis auitae
deicit; at Thronium Salius Saliumque Nealces
insidiis, iaculo et longe fallente sagitta.

Iam grauis aequabat luctus et mutua Mauors 755
funera; caedebant pariter pariterque ruebant
uictores uictique, neque his fuga nota neque illis.
di Iouis in tectis iram miserantur inanem
amborum et tantos mortalibus esse labores;
hinc Venus, hinc contra spectat Saturnia Iuno. 760
pallida Tisiphone media inter milia saeuit.

At uero ingentem quatiens Mezentius hastam
turbidus ingreditur campo. quam magnus Orion,
cum pedes incedit medii per maxima Nerei
stagna uiam scindens, umero supereminet undas, 765
aut summis referens annosam montibus ornum
ingrediturque solo et caput inter nubila condit,
talis se uastis infert Mezentius armis.
huic contra Aeneas speculatus in agmine longo
obuius ire parat. manet imperterritus ille 770
hostem magnanimum opperiens, et mole sua stat;
atque oculis spatium emensus quantum satis hastae:
'dextra mihi deus et telum, quod missile libro,
nunc adsint! uoueo praedonis corpore raptis
indutum spoliis ipsum te, Lause, tropaeum 775
Aeneae.' dixit, stridentemque eminus hastam
iecit. at illa uolans clipeo est excussa proculque
egregium Antoren latus inter et ilia figit,
Herculis Antoren comitem, qui missus ab Argis
haeserat Euandro atque Itala consederat urbe. 780
sternitur infelix alieno uulnere, caelumque
aspicit et dulcis moriens reminiscitur Argos.
tum pius Aeneas hastam iacit; illa per orbem

aere cauum triplici, per linea terga tribusque
transiit intextum tauris opus, imaque sedit 785
inguine, sed uiris haud pertulit. ocius ensem
Aeneas uiso Tyrrheni sanguine laetus
eripit a femine et trepidanti feruidus instat.
ingemuit cari grauiter genitoris amore,
ut uidit, Lausus, lacrimaeque per ora uolutae — 790
hic mortis durae casum tuaque optima facta,
si qua fidem tanto est operi latura uetustas,
non equidem nec te, iuuenis memorande, silebo —
ille pedem referens et inutilis inque ligatus
cedebat clipeoque inimicum hastile trahebat. 795
proripuit iuuenis seseque immiscuit armis,
iamque adsurgentis dextra plagamque ferentis
Aeneae subiit mucronem ipsumque morando
sustinuit; socii magno clamore sequuntur,
dum genitor nati parma protectus abiret, 800
telaque coniciunt perturbantque eminus hostem
missilibus. furit Aeneas tectusque tenet se.
ac uelut effusa si quando grandine nimbi
praecipitant, omnis campis diffugit arator
omnis et agricola, et tuta latet arce uiator 805
aut amnis ripis aut alti fornice saxi,
dum pluit in terris, ut possint sole reducto
exercere diem: sic obrutus undique telis
Aeneas nubem belli, dum detonet omnis,
sustinet et Lausum increpitat Lausoque minatur: 810
‘quo moriture ruis maioraque uiribus audes?
fallit te incautum pietas tua.’ nec minus ille
exsultat demens, saeuae iamque altius irae
Dardanio surgunt ductori, extremaque Lauso
Parcae fila legunt. ualidum namque exigit ensem 815
per medium Aeneas iuuenem totumque recondit;
transiit et parmam mucro, leuia arma minacis,
et tunicam molli mater quam neuerat auro,
impleuitque sinum sanguis; tum uita per auras
concessit maesta ad Manis corpusque reliquit. 820

At uero ut uultum uidit morientis et ora,
ora modis Anchisiades pallentia miris,
ingemuit miserans grauitex dextramque tetendit,
et mentem patriae subiit pietatis imago.
'quid tibi nunc, miserande puer, pro laudibus istis, 825
quid pius Aeneas tanta dabit indole dignum?
arma, quibus laetatus, habes tua; teque parentum
manibus et cineri, si qua est ea cura, remitto.
hoc tamen infelix miseram solabere mortem:
Aeneae magni dextra cadis.' increpat ultro 830
cunctantis socios et terra subleuat ipsum
sanguine turpantem comptos de more capillos.

Interea genitor Tiberini ad fluminis undam
uulnera siccat lymphis corpusque leuabat
arboris acclinis trunco. procul aerea ramis 835
dependet galea et prato grauius arma quiescunt.
stant lecti circum iuuenes; ipse aeger anhelans
colla fouet fusus propexam in pectore barbam;
multa super Lauso rogitat, multumque remittit
qui reuocent maestique ferant mandata parentis. 840
at Lausum socii exanimem super arma ferebant
flentes, ingentem atque ingenti uulnere uictum.
agnouit longe gemitum praesaga mali mens.
canitiem multo deformat puluere et ambas
ad caelum tendit palmas et corpore inhaeret. 845
'tantane me tenuit uiuendi, nate, uoluptas,
ut pro me hostili paterer succedere dextrae,
quem genui? tuane haec genitor per uulnera seruator
morte tua uiuens? heu, nunc misero mihi demum
exitium infelix, nunc alte uulnus adactum! 850
idem ego, nate, tuum maculaui crimine nomen,
pulsus ob inuidiam solio sceptrisque paternis.
debueram patriae poenas odiisque meorum:
omnis per mortis animam sontem ipse dedissem!
nunc uiuo neque adhuc homines lucemque relinquo. 855
sed linquam.' simul hoc dicens attollit in aegrum

se femur et, quamquam uis alto uulnere tardat,
haud deiectus equum duci iubet. hoc decus illi,
hoc solamen erat, bellis hoc uictor abibat
omnibus. adloquitur maerentem et talibus inquit: 860
‘Rhaebe, diu, res si qua diu mortalibus ulla est,
uiximus. aut hodie uictor spolia illa cruenti
et caput Aeneae referes Lausique dolorum
ultor eris mecum, aut, aperit si nulla uiam uis,
occumbes pariter; neque enim, fortissime, credo, 865
iussa aliena pati et dominos dignabere Teucros.’
dixit, et exceptus tergo consueta locauit
membra manusque ambas iaculis onerauit acutis,
aere caput fulgens cristaque hirsutus equina.
sic cursum in medios rapidus dedit. aestuat ingens 870
uno in corde pudor mixtoque insania luctu.
atque hic Aenean magna ter uoce uocauit. 873
Aeneas agnouit enim laetusque precatur:
‘sic pater ille deum faciat, sic altus Apollo!
incipias conferre manum.’
tantum effatus et infesta subit obuius hasta.
ille autem: ‘quid me erepto, saeuissime, nato
terres? haec uia sola fuit qua perdere posses:
nec mortem horremus nec diuum parcimus ulli. 880
desine, nam uenio moriturus et haec tibi porto
dona prius.’ dixit, telumque intorsit in hostem;
inde aliud super atque aliud figitque uolatque
ingenti gyro, sed sustinet aureus umbo.
ter circum astantem laeuos equitauit in orbis 885
tela manu iaciens, ter secum Troius heros
immanem aerato circumfert tegmine siluam.
inde ubi tot traxisse moras, tot spicula taedet
uellere, et urgetur pugna congressus iniqua,
multa mouens animo iam tandem erumpit et inter 890
bellatoris equi caua tempora conicit hastam.
tollit se arrectum quadripes et calcibus auras
uerberat, effusumque equitem super ipse secutus
implicat eiectoque incumbit cernuus armo.

clamore incendunt caelum Troesque Latinique. 895
aduolat Aeneas uaginaque eripit ensem
et super haec: 'ubi nunc Mezentius acer et illa
effera uis animi?' contra Tyrrhenus, ut auras
suspiciens hausit caelum mentemque recepit:
'hostis amare, quid increpitas mortemque minaris? 900
nullum in caede nefas, nec sic ad proelia ueni,
nec tecum meus haec pepigit mihi foedera Lausus.
unum hoc per si qua est uictis uenia hostibus oro:
corpus humo patiare tegi. scio acerba meorum
circumstare odia: hunc, oro, defende furorem 905
et me consortem nati concede sepulcro.'
haec loquitur, iuguloque haud inscius accipit ensem
undantique animam diffundit in arma cruore.

LIBER XI

Oceanum interea surgens Aurora relinquit:
Aeneas, quamquam et sociis dare tempus humanidis
praecipitant curae turbataque funere mens est,
uota deum primo uictor soluebat Eoo.
ingentem quercum decisis undique ramis 5
constituit tumulo fulgentiaque induit arma,
Mezenti ducis exuuias, tibi magne tropaeum
bellipotens; aptat rorantis sanguine cristas
telaque trunca uiri, et bis sex thoraca petitem
perfossumque locis, clipeumque ex aere sinistrae 10
subligat atque ensem collo suspendit eburnum.
tum socios (namque omnis eum stipata tegebat
turba ducum) sic incipiens hortatur ouantis:
'maxima res effecta, uiri; timor omnis abesto,
quod superest; haec sunt spolia et de rege superbo 15
primitiae manibusque meis Mezentius hic est.
nunc iter ad regem nobis murosque Latinos.
arma parate, animis et spe praesumite bellum,
ne qua mora ignaros, ubi primum uellere signa
adnuerint superi pubemque educere castris, 20
impediat segnisue metu sententia tardet.
interea socios inhumataque corpora terrae
mandemus, qui solus honos Acheronte sub imo est.
ite,' ait 'egregias animas, quae sanguine nobis
hanc patriam peperere suo, decorate supremis 25
muneribus, maestamque Euandri primus ad urbem
mittatur Pallas, quem non uirtutis egentem
abstulit atra dies et funere mersit acerbo.'

Sic ait inlacrimans, recipitque ad limina gressum
corpus ubi exanimi positum Pallantis Acoetes 30
seruabat senior, qui Parrhasio Euandro
armiger ante fuit, sed non felicibus aequum
comes auspiciis caro datus ibat alumno.

circum omnis famulumque manus Troianaque turba
et maestum Iliades crinem de more solutae. 35
ut uero Aeneas foribus sese intulit altis
ingentem gemitum tunsis ad sidera tollunt
pectoribus, maestoque immugit regia luctu.
ipse caput niuei fultum Pallantis et ora
ut uidit leuique patens in pectore uulnus 40
cuspidis Ausoniae, lacrimis ita fatur obortis:
'tene,' inquit 'miserande puer, cum laeta ueniret,
inuidit Fortuna mihi, ne regna uideres
nostra neque ad sedes uictor ueherere paternas?
non haec Euandro de te promissa parenti 45
discedens dederam, cum me complexus euntem
mitteret in magnum imperium metuensque moneret
acris esse uiros, cum dura proelia gente.
et nunc ille quidem spe multum captus inani
fors et uota facit cumulatque altaria donis, 50
nos iuuenem exanimum et nil iam caelestibus ullis
debentem uano maesti comitamur honore.
infelix, nati funus crudele uidebis!
hi nostri reditus exspectatique triumphi?
haec mea magna fides? at non, Euandre, pudendis 55
uulneribus pulsum aspicias, nec sospite dirum
optabis nato funus pater. ei mihi quantum
praesidium, Ausonia, et quantum tu perdis, Iule!'

Haec ubi defleuit, tolli miserabile corpus
imperat, et toto lectos ex agmine mittit 60
mille uiros qui supremum comitentur honorem
intersintque patris lacrimis, solacia luctus
exigua ingentis, misero sed debita patri.
haud segnes alii cratis et molle feretrum
arbutis texunt uirgis et uimine querno 65
exstructosque toros obtentu frondis inumbrant.
hic iuuenem agresti sublimem stramine ponunt:
qualem uirgineo demessum pollice florem
seu mollis uiolae seu languentis hyacinthi,

cui neque fulgor adhuc nec dum sua forma recessit, 70
non iam mater alit tellus uirisque ministrat.
tum geminas uestis auroque ostroque rigentis
extulit Aeneas, quas illi laeta laborum
ipsa suis quondam manibus Sidonia Dido
fecerat et tenui telas discreuerat auro. 75
harum unam iuueni supremum maestus honorem
induit arsurasque comas obnubit amictu,
multaque praeterea Laurentis praemia pugnae
aggerat et longo praedam iubet ordine duci;
addit equos et tela quibus spoliauerat hostem. 80
uinxerat et post terga manus, quos mitteret umbris
inferias, caeso sparsurus sanguine flammās,
indutosque iubet truncos hostilibus armis
ipsos ferre duces inimicaque nomina figi.
ducitur infelix aeuo confectus Acoetes, 85
pectora nunc foedans pugnis, nunc unguibus ora,
sternitur et toto proiectus corpore terrae;
ducunt et Rutulo perfusos sanguine currus.
post bellator equus positus insignibus Aethon
it lacrimans guttisque umectat grandibus ora. 90
hastam alii galeamque ferunt, nam cetera Turnus
uictor habet. tum maesta phalanx Teucrique sequuntur
Tyrrhenique omnes et uersis Arcades armis.
postquam omnis longe comitum praecesserat ordo,
substitit Aeneas gemituque haec addidit alto: 95
'nos alias hinc ad lacrimas eadem horrida belli
fata uocant: salue aeternum mihi, maxime Palla,
aeternumque uale.' nec plura effatus ad altos
tendebat muros gressumque in castra ferebat.

Iamque oratores aderant ex urbe Latina 100
uelati ramis oleae ueniamque rogantes:
corpora, per campos ferro quae fusa iacebant,
redderet ac tumulo sineret succedere terrae;
nullum cum uictis certamen et aethere cassis;
parceret hospitibus quondam socerisque uocatis. 105

quos bonus Aeneas haud aspernanda precantis
prosequitur uenia et uerbis haec insuper addit:
‘quaenam uos tanto fortuna indigna, Latini,
implicuit bello, qui nos fugiatis amicos?
pacem me exanimis et Martis sorte peremptis 110
oratis? equidem et uiuis concedere uellem.
nec ueni, nisi fata locum sedemque dedissent,
nec bellum cum gente gero; rex nostra reliquit
hospitia et Turni potius se credidit armis.
aequius huic Turnum fuerat se opponere morti. 115
si bellum finire manu, si pellere Teucros
apparat, his mecum decuit concurrere telis:
uixet cui uitam deus aut sua dextra dedisset.
nunc ite et miseris supponite ciuibus ignem.’
dixerat Aeneas. illi obstipuerunt silentes 120
conuersique oculos inter se atque ora tenebant.

Tum senior semperque odiis et crimine Drances
infensus iuueni Turno sic ore uicissim
orsa refert: ‘o fama ingens, ingentior armis,
uir Troiane, quibus caelo te laudibus aequem? 125
iustitiaene prius mirer belline laborum?
nos uero haec patriam grati referemus ad urbem
et te, si qua uiam dederit Fortuna, Latino
iungemus regi. quaerat sibi foedera Turnus.
quin et fatalis murorum attollere moles 130
saxaque subuectare umeris Troiana iuuabit.’
dixerat haec unoque omnes eadem ore fremebant.
bis senos pepigere dies, et pace sequestra
per siluas Teucris mixtique impune Latini
errauere iugis. ferro sonat alta bipenni 135
fraxinus, euertunt actas ad sidera pinus,
roborum nec cuneis et olentem scindere cedrum
nec plaustris cessant uectare gementibus ornos.
Et iam Fama uolans, tanti praenuntia luctus,
Euandrum Euandrique domos et moenia replet, 140
quae modo uictorem Latio Pallanta ferebat.

Arcades ad portas ruere et de more uetusto
funereas rapuere faces; lucet uia longo
ordine flammarum et late discriminat agros.
contra turba Phrygum ueniens plangentia iungit 145
agmina. quae postquam matres succedere tectis
uiderunt, maestam incendunt clamoribus urbem.
at non Euandrum potis est uis ulla tenere,
sed uenit in medios. feretro Pallante reposto
procubuit super atque haeret lacrimansque gemensque, 150
et uia uix tandem uoci laxata dolore est:
'non haec, o Palla, dederas promissa parenti,
cautius ut saeuo uelles te credere Marti.
haud ignarus eram quantum noua gloria in armis
et praedulce decus primo certamine posset. 155
primitiae iuuenis miserae bellique propinqui
dura rudimenta, et nulli exaudita deorum
uota precesque meae! tuque, o sanctissima coniunx,
felix morte tua neque in hunc seruata dolorem!
contra ego uiuendo uici mea fata, superstes 160
restarem ut genitor. Troum socia arma secutum
obruerent Rutuli telis! animam ipse dedissem
atque haec pompa domum me, non Pallanta, referret!
nec uos arguerim, Teucris, nec foedera nec quas
iunximus hospitio dextras: sors ista senectae 165
debita erat nostrae. quod si immatura manebat
mors gnatum, caesis Volscorum milibus ante
ducentem in Latium Teucros cecidisse iuuabit.
quin ego non alio digner te funere, Palla,
quam pius Aeneas et quam magni Phryges et quam 170
Tyrrhenique duces, Tyrrhenum exercitus omnis.
magna tropaea ferunt quos dat tua dextera leto;
tu quoque nunc stares immanis truncus in aruis,
esset par aetas et idem si robur ab annis,
Turne. sed infelix Teucros quid demoror armis? 175
uadite et haec memores regi mandata referte:
quod uitam moror inuisam Pallante preempto
dextera causa tua est, Turnum gnatoque patrique

quam debere uides. meritis uacat hic tibi solus
fortunaque locus. non uitae gaudia quaero, 180
nec fas, sed gnato manis perferre sub imos.’

Aurora interea miseris mortalibus almam
extulerat lucem referens opera atque labores:
iam pater Aeneas, iam curuo in litore Tarchon
constituere pyras. huc corpora quisque suorum 185
more tulere patrum, subiectisque ignibus atris
conditur in tenebras altum caligine caelum.
ter circum accensos cincti fulgentibus armis
decurrere rogos, ter maestum funeris ignem
lustrauere in equis ululatusque ore dedere. 190
spargitur et tellus lacrimis, sparguntur et arma,
it caelo clamorque uirum clangorque tubarum.
hic alii spolia occisis derepta Latinis
coniciunt igni, galeas ensisque decoros
frenaque feruentisque rotas; pars munera nota, 195
ipsorum clipeos et non felicia tela.
multa boum circa mactantur corpora Morti,
saetigerosque sues raptasque ex omnibus agris
in flammam iugulant pecudes. tum litore toto
ardentis spectant socios semustaque seruant 200
busta, neque auelli possunt, nox umida donec
inuertit caelum stellis ardentibus aptum.

Nec minus et miseri diuersa in parte Latini
innumeras struxere pyras, et corpora partim
multa uirum terrae infodiunt, auectaque partim 205
finitimos tollunt in agros urbique remittunt.
cetera confusaeque ingentem caedis aceruum
nec numero nec honore cremant; tunc undique uasti
certatim crebris conlucent ignibus agri.
tertia lux gelidam caelo dimouerat umbram: 210
maerentes altum cinerem et confusa ruebant
ossa focus tepidoque onerabant aggere terrae.
iam uero in tectis, praediuitis urbe Latini,

praecipuus fragor et longi pars maxima luctus.
hic matres miseraeque nurus, hic cara sororum 215
pectora maerentum puerique parentibus orbi
dirum exsecrantur bellum Turnique hymenaeos;
ipsum armis ipsumque iubent decernere ferro,
qui regnum Italiae et primos sibi poscat honores.
ingrauat haec saeuus Drances solumque uocari 220
testatur, solum posci in certamina Turnum.
multa simul contra uariis sententia dictis
pro Turno, et magnum reginae nomen obumbrat,
multa uirum meritis sustentat fama tropaeis.

Hos inter motus, medio in flagrante tumultu, 225
ecce super maesti magna Diomedis ab urbe
legati responsa ferunt: nihil omnibus actum
tantorum impensis operum, nil dona neque aurum
nec magnas ualuisse preces, alia arma Latinis
quaerenda, aut pacem Troiano ab rege petendum. 230
deficit ingenti luctu rex ipse Latinus:
fatalem Aenean manifesto numine ferri
admonet ira deum tumulique ante ora recentes.
ergo concilium magnum primosque suorum
imperio accitos alta intra limina cogit. 235
olli conuenere fluuntque ad regia plenis
tectis uiis. sedet in mediis et maximus aevo
et primus sceptris haud laeta fronte Latinus.
atque hic legatos Aetola ex urbe remissos
quae referant fari iubet, et responsa reposcit 240
ordine cuncta suo. tum facta silentia linguis,
et Venulus dicto parens ita farier infit:

‘Vidimus, o ciues, Diomedem Argiuaque castra,
atque iter emensi casus superauimus omnis,
contigimusque manum qua concidit Ilia tellus. 245
ille urbem Argyripam patriae cognomine gentis
uictor Gargani condebat Iapygis agris.
postquam introgressi et coram data copia fandi,

munera praeferimus, nomen patriamque docemus,
qui bellum intulerint, quae causa attraxerit Arpos. 250
auditis ille haec placido sic reddidit ore:
“o fortunatae gentes, Saturnia regna,
antiqui Ausonii, quae uos fortuna quietos
sollicitat suadetque ignota lacessere bella?
quicumque Iliacos ferro uiolauimus agros 255
(mitto ea quae muris bellando exhausta sub altis,
quos Simois premat ille uiros) infanda per orbem
supplicia et scelerum poenas expendimus omnes,
uel Priamo miseranda manus; scit triste Mineruae
sidus et Euboicae cautes ultorque Caphereus. 260
militia ex illa diuersum ad litus abacti
Atrides Protei Menelaus adusque columnas
exsulat, Aetnaeos uidit Cyclophas Vlixes.
regna Neoptolemi referam uersosque penatis
Idomenei? Libycone habitantis litore Locros? 265
ipse Mycenaeus magnorum ductor Achium
coniugis infandae prima inter limina dextra
oppetiit, deuictam Asiam subsedit adulter.
inuidisse deos, patriis ut redditus aris
coniugium optatum et pulchram Calydona uiderem? 270
nunc etiam horribili uisu portenta sequuntur
et socii amissi petierunt aethera pennis
fluminibusque uagantur aues (heu, dira meorum
supplicia!) et scopulos lacrimosis uocibus implent.
haec adeo ex illo mihi iam speranda fuerunt 275
tempore cum ferro caelestia corpora demens
appetii et Veneris uiolaui uulnere dextram.
ne uero, ne me ad talis impellite pugnas.
nec mihi cum Teucris ullum post eruta bellum
Pergama nec ueterum memini laetorue malorum. 280
munera quae patriis ad me portatis ab oris
uertite ad Aenean. stetimus tela aspera contra
contulimusque manus: experto credite quantus
in clipeum adsurgat, quo turbine torqueat hastam.
si duo praeterea talis Idaea tulisset 285

terra uiros, ultro Inachias uenisset ad urbes
Dardanus, et uersis lugeret Graecia fatis.
quidquid apud durae cessatum est moenia Troiae,
Hectoris Aeneaeque manu uictoria Graium
haesit et in decimum uestigia rettulit annum. 290
ambo animis, ambo insignes praestantibus armis,
hic pietate prior. coeant in foedera dextrae,
qua datur; ast armis concurrant arma cauete.”
et responsa simul quae sint, rex optime, regis
audisti et quae sit magno sententia bello.’ 295

Vix ea legati, uariusque per ora cucurrit
Ausonidum turbata fremor, ceu saxa morantur
cum rapidos amnis, fit clauso gurgite murmur
uicinaeque fremunt ripae crepitantibus undis.
ut primum placati animi et trepida ora quierunt, 300
praefatus diuos solio rex infit ab alto:

‘Ante equidem summa de re statuisset, Latini,
et uellem et fuerat melius, non tempore tali
cogere concilium, cum muros adsidet hostis.
bellum importunum, ciues, cum gente deorum 305
inuictisque uiris gerimus, quos nulla fatigant
proelia nec uicti possunt absistere ferro.
spem si quam ascitis Aetolum habuistis in armis,
ponite. spes sibi quisque; sed haec quam angusta uidetis.
cetera qua rerum iaceant perculsa ruina, 310
ante oculos interque manus sunt omnia uestras.
nec quemquam incuso: potuit quae plurima uirtus
esse, fuit; toto certatum est corpore regni.
nunc adeo quae sit dubiae sententia menti,
expediam et paucis (animos adhibete) docebo. 315
est antiquus ager Tusco mihi proximus amni,
longus in occasum, finis super usque Sicanos;
Aurunci Rutulique serunt, et uomere duros
exercent collis atque horum asperrima pascunt.
haec omnis regio et celsi plaga pinea montis 320

cedat amicitiae Teucrorum, et foederis aequas
dicamus leges sociosque in regna uocemus:
considant, si tantus amor, et moenia condant.
sin alios finis aliamque capessere gentem
est animus possuntque solo decedere nostro, 325
bis denas Italo texamus robore nauis;
seu pluris complere ualent, iacet omnis ad undam
materies: ipsi numerumque modumque carinis
praecipiant, nos aera, manus, naualia demus.
praeterea, qui dicta ferant et foedera firment 330
centum oratores prima de gente Latinos
ire placet pacisque manu praetendere ramos,
munera portantis aurique eborisque talenta
et sellam regni trabeamque insignia nostri.
consulite in medium et rebus succurrite fessis.’ 335

Tum Drances idem infensus, quem gloria Turni
obliqua inuidia stimulisque agitabat amaris,
largus opum et lingua melior, sed frigida bello
dextera, consiliis habitus non futilis auctor,
seditione potens (genus huic materna superbum 340
nobilitas dabat, incertum de patre ferebat),
surgit et his onerat dictis atque aggerat iras:
‘rem nulli obscuram nostrae nec uocis egentem
consulis, o bone rex: cuncti se scire fatentur
quid fortuna ferat populi, sed dicere mussant. 345
det libertatem fandi flatusque remittat,
cuius ob auspiciu infaustum moresque sinistros (dicam equidem, licet arma mihi mortemque minetur)
lumina tot cecidisse ducum totamque uidemus
consedis urbem luctu, dum Troia temptat 350
castra fugae fidens et caelum territat armis.
unum etiam donis istis, quae plurima mitti
Dardanidis dicique iubes, unum, optime regum,
adicias, nec te ullius uiolentia uincat
quin natam egregio genero dignisque hymenaeis 355
des pater, et pacem hanc aeterno foedere iungas.

quod si tantus habet mentes et pectora terror,
ipsum obtestemur ueniamque oremus ab ipso:
cedat, ius proprium regi patriaeque remittat.
quid miseros totiens in aperta pericula ciuis 360
proicis, o Latio caput horum et causa malorum?
nulla salus bello, pacem te poscimus omnes,
Turne, simul pacis solum inuiolabile pignus.
primus ego, inuisum quem tu tibi fingis (et esse
nil moror), en supplex uenio. miserere tuorum, 365
pone animos et pulsus abi. sat funera fusi
uidimus ingentis et desolauimus agros.
aut, si fama mouet, si tantum pectore robur
concupis et si adeo dotalis regia cordi est,
aude atque aduersum fidens fer pectus in hostem. 370
scilicet ut Turno contingat regia coniunx,
nos animae uiles, inhumata infletaque turba,
sternamur campis. etiam tu, si qua tibi uis,
si patrii quid Martis habes, illum aspice contra
qui uocat.’ 375

Talibus exarsit dictis uiolentia Turni.
dat gemitum rumpitque has imo pectore uoces:
‘larga quidem semper, Drance, tibi copia fandi
tum cum bella manus poscunt, patribusque uocatis
primus ades. sed non replenda est curia uerbis, 380
quae tuto tibi magna uolant, dum distinet hostem
agger murorum nec inundant sanguine fossae.
proinde tona eloquio (solitum tibi) meque timoris
argue tu, Drance, quando tot stragis acervos Teucrorum tua dextra dedit, passimque tropaeis 385
insignis agros. possit quid uiuida uirtus
experiare licet, nec longe scilicet hostes
quaerendi nobis; circumstant undique muros.
imus in aduersos — quid cessas? an tibi Mauors
uentosa in lingua pedibusque fugacibus istis 390
semper erit?
pulsus ego? aut quisquam merito, foedissime, pulsum
arguet, Iliaco tumidum qui crescere Thybrim

sanguine et Euandri totam cum stirpe uidebit
procubuisse domum atque exutos Arcadas armis? 395
haud ita me experti Bitias et Pandarus ingens
et quos mille die uictor sub Tartara misi,
inclusus muris hostile aggere saeptus.
nulla salus bello? capiti cane talia, demens,
Dardanio rebusque tuis. proinde omnia magno 400
ne cessa turbare metu atque extollere uiris
gentis bis uictae, contra premere arma Latini.
nunc et Myrmidonum proceres Phrygia arma tremescunt,
nunc et Tydides et Larisaeus Achilles,
amnis et Hadriacas retro fugit Aufidus undas. 405
uel cum se pavidum contra mea iurgia fingit,
artificis scelus, et formidine crimen acerbat.
numquam animam talem dextra hac (absiste moueri)
amittes: habitet tecum et sit pectore in isto.
nunc ad te et tua magna, pater, consulta reuertor. 410
si nullam nostris ultra spem ponis in armis,
si tam deserti sumus et semel agmine uerso
funditus occidimus neque habet Fortuna regressum,
oremus pacem et dextras tendamus inertis.
quamquam o si solitae quicquam uirtutis adesset! 415
ille mihi ante alios fortunatusque laborum
egregiusque animi, qui, ne quid tale uideret,
procubuit moriens et humum semel ore momordit.
sin et opes nobis et adhuc intacta iuuentus

deficimus? cur ante tubam tremor occupat artus?
multa dies uariique labor mutabilis aeui 425
rettulit in melius, multos alterna reuisens
lusit et in solido rursus Fortuna locauit.
non erit auxilio nobis Aetolus et Arpi:
at Messapus erit felixque Tolumnius et quos

gloria delectos Latio et Laurentibus agris.
est et Volscorum egregia de gente Camilla
agmen agens equitum et florentis aere cateruas.
quod si me solum Teucri in certamina poscunt
idque placet tantumque bonis communibus obsto, 435
non adeo has exosa manus Victoria fugit
ut tanta quicquam pro spe temptare recusem.
ibo animis contra, uel magnum praestet Achillem
factaque Volcani manibus paria induat arma
ille licet. uobis animam hanc soceroque Latino 440
Turnus ego, haud ulli ueterum uirtute secundus,
deuoui. solum Aeneas uocat? et uocet oro;
nec Drances potius, siue est haec ira deorum,
morte luat, siue est uirtus et gloria, tollat.’

Illi haec inter se dubiis de rebus agebant 445
certantes: castra Aeneas aciemque mouebat.
nuntius ingenti per regia tecta tumultu
ecce ruit magnisque urbem terroribus implet:
instructos acie Tiberino a flumine Teucros
Tyrrhenamque manum totis descendere campis. 450
extemplo turbati animi concussaue uulgi
pectora et arrectae stimulis haud mollibus irae.
arma manu trepidi poscunt, fremit arma iuuentus,
flent maesti mussantque patres. hic undique clamor
dissensu uario magnus se tollit in auras, 455
haud secus atque alto in luco cum forte cateruae
consedere auium, piscosoue amne Padusae
dant sonitum rauci per stagna loquacia cycni.
‘immo,’ ait ‘o ciues,’ arrepto tempore Turnus,
‘cogite concilium et pacem laudate sedentes; 460
illi armis in regna ruunt.’ nec plura locutus
corripuit sese et tectis citus extulit altis.
‘tu, Voluse, armari Volscorum edice manipulis,
duc’ ait ‘et Rutulos. equitem Messapus in armis,
et cum fratre Coras latis diffundite campis. 465
pars aditus urbis firment turrisque capessant;

cetera, qua iusso, mecum manus inferat arma.’

Ilicet in muros tota discurritur urbe.
concilium ipse pater et magna incepta Latinus
deserit ac tristi turbatus tempore differt, 470
multaque se incusat qui non acceperit ultro
Dardanium Aenean generumque asciverit urbi.
praefodiunt alii portas aut saxa sudesque
subuectant. bello dat signum rauca cruentum
bucina. tum muros uaria cinxere corona 475
matronae puerique, uocat labor ultimus omnis.
nec non ad templum summasque ad Palladis arces
subuehitur magna matrum regina caterua
dona ferens, iuxtaque comes Lauinia uirgo,
causa mali tanti, oculos deiecta decoros. 480
succedunt matres et templum ture uaporant
et maestas alto fundunt de limine uoces:
‘armipotens, praeses belli, Tritonia uirgo,
frange manu telum Phrygii praedonis, et ipsum
prorum sterne solo portisque effunde sub altis.’ 485
cingitur ipse furens certatim in proelia Turnus.
iamque adeo rutilum thoraca indutus aenis
horrebat squamis surasque incluserat auro,
tempora nudus adhuc, laterique accinxerat ensem,
fulgebatque alta decurrens aureus arce 490
exsultatque animis et spe iam praecipit hostem:
qualis ubi abruptis fugit praesepia uinclis
tandem liber equus, campoque potitus aperto
aut ille in pastus armentaque tendit equarum
aut adsuetus aquae perfundi flumine noto 495
emicat, arrectisque fremit ceruicibus alte
luxurians luduntque iubae per colla, per amos.

Obuia cui Volscorum acie comitante Camilla
occurrit portisque ab equo regina sub ipsis
desiluit, quam tota cohors imitata relictis 500
ad terram defluxit equis; tum talia fatur:

‘Turne, sui merito si qua est fiducia forti,
audeo et Aeneadam promitto occurrere turmae
solaque Tyrrhenos equites ire obuia contra.
me sine prima manu temptare pericula belli, 505
tu pedes ad muros subsiste et moenia serua.’
Turnus ad haec oculos horrenda in uirgine fixus:
‘o decus Italiae uirgo, quas dicere grates
quasue referre parem? sed nunc, est omnia quando
iste animus supra, mecum partire laborem. 510
Aeneas, ut fama fidem missique reportant
exploratores, equitum leuia improbus arma
praemisit, quaterent campos; ipse ardua montis
per deserta iugo superans aduentat ad urbem.
furta paro belli conuexo in tramite siluae, 515
ut biuias armato obsidam milite fauces.
tu Tyrrhenum equitem conlatis excipe signis;
tecum acer Messapus erit turmaeque Latinae
Tiburtique manus, ducis et tu concipe curam.’
sic ait, et paribus Messapum in proelia dictis 520
hortatur sociosque duces et pergit in hostem.

Est curuo anfractu ualles, accommoda fraudi
armorumque dolis, quam densis frondibus atrum
urget utrimque latus, tenuis quo semita ducit
angustaeque ferunt fauces aditusque maligni. 525
hanc super in speculis summoque in uertice montis
planities ignota iacet tutique receptus,
seu dextra laeuaque uelis occurrere pugnae
siue instare iugis et grandia uoluere saxa.
huc iuuenis nota fertur regione uiarum 530
arripuitque locum et siluis insedit iniquis.

Velocem interea superis in sedibus Opim,
unam ex uirginibus sociis sacraque caterua,
compellabat et has tristis Latonia uoces
ore dabat: ‘graditur bellum ad crudele Camilla, 535
o uirgo, et nostris nequiquam cingitur armis,

cara mihi ante alias. neque enim nouus iste Dianae
uenit amor subitaque animum dulcedine mouit.
pulsus ob inuidiam regno uirisque superbas
Priuerno antiqua Metabus cum excederet urbe, 540
infantem fugiens media inter proelia belli
sustulit exsilio comitem, matrisque uocauit
nomine Casmillae mutata parte Camillam.
ipse sinu prae se portans iuga longa petebat
solorum nemorum: tela undique saeua premebant 545
et circumfuso uolitabant milite Volsci.
ecce fugae medio summis Amasenus abundans
spumabat ripis, tantus se nubibus imber
ruperat. ille innare parans infantis amore
tardatur caroque oneri timet. omnia secum 550
uersanti subito uix haec sententia sedit:
telum immane manu ualida quod forte gerebat
bellator, solidum nodis et robore cocto,
huic natam libro et siluestri subere clausam
implicat atqueabilem mediae circumligat hastae; 555
quam dextra ingenti librans ita ad aethera fatur:
“alma, tibi hanc, nemorum cultrix, Latonia uirgo,
ipse pater famulam uoueo; tua prima per auras
tela tenens supplex hostem fugit. accipe, testor,
diua tuam, quae nunc dubiis committitur auris.” 560
dixit, et adducto contortum hastile lacerto
immittit: sonuere undae, rapidum super amnem
infelix fugit in iaculo stridente Camilla.
at Metabus magna propius iam urgente caterua
dat sese fluuiio, atque hastam cum uirgine uictor 565
gramineo, donum Triuiuae, de caespite uellit.
non illum tectis ullae, non moenibus urbes
acceperere (neque ipse manus feritate dedisset),
pastorum et solis exegit montibus aeuum.
hic natam in dumis interque horrentia lustra 570
armentalis equae mammis et lacte ferino
nutribat teneris immulgens ubera labris.
utque pedum primis infans uestigia plantis

institerat, iaculo palmas armauit acuto
spiculaque ex umero paruae suspendit et arcum. 575
pro crinali auro, pro longae tegmine pallae
tigridis exuuiæ per dorsum a uertice pendent.
tela manu iam tum tenera puerilia torsit
et fundam tereti circum caput egit habena
Strymoniamque gruem aut album deiecit olorem. 580
multae illam frustra Tyrrhena per oppida matres
optauere nurum; sola contenta Diana
aeternum telorum et uirginitatis amorem
intemerata colit. uellem haud correpta fuisset
militia tali conata lacessere Teucros: 585
cara mihi comitumque foret nunc una mearum.
uerum age, quandoquidem fati urgetur acerbis,
labere, nympha, polo finisque inuise Latinos,
tristis ubi infausto committitur omine pugna.
haec cape et ultricem pharetra deprome sagittam: 590
hac, quicumque sacrum uiolarit uulnere corpus,
Tros Italusque, mihi pariter det sanguine poenas.
post ego nube caua miserandæ corpus et arma
inspoliata feram tumulo patriæque reponam.’
dixit, at illa leuis caeli delapsa per auras 595
insonuit nigro circumdata turbine corpus.

At manus interea muris Troiana propinquat,
Etruscique duces equitumque exercitus omnis
compositi numero in turmas. fremit aequore toto
insultans sonipes et pressis pugnat habenis 600
huc conuersus et huc; tum late ferreus hastis
horret ager campique armis sublimibus ardent.
nec non Messapus contra celeresque Latini
et cum fratre Coras et uirginis ala Camillae
aduersi campo apparent, hastasque reductis 605
protendunt longe dextris et spicula uibrant,
aduentusque uirum fremitusque ardescit equorum.
iamque intra iactum teli progressus uterque
substiterat: subito erumpunt clamore furentisque

exhortantur equos, fundunt simul undique tela 610
crebra niuis ritu, caelumque obtexitur umbra.
continuo aduersis Tyrrhenus et acer Aconteus
conixi incurrunt hastis primique ruinam
dant sonitu ingenti perfractaque quadripedantum
pectora pectoribus rumpunt; excussus Aconteus 615
fulminis in morem aut tormento ponderis acti
praecipitat longe et uitam dispergit in auras.

Extemplo turbatae acies, uersique Latini
reiciunt parmas et equos ad moenia uertunt;
Troes agunt, princeps turmas inducit Asilas. 620
iamque propinquabant portis rursusque Latini
clamorem tollunt et mollia colla reflectunt;
hi fugiunt penitusque datis referuntur habenis.
qualis ubi alterno procurrens gurgite pontus
nunc ruit ad terram scopulosque superiacit unda 625
spumeus extremamque sinu perfundit harenam,
nunc rapidus retro atque aestu reuoluta resorbens
saxa fugit litusque uado labente relinquit:
bis Tusci Rutulos egere ad moenia uersos,
bis reiecti armis respectant terga tegentes. 630
tertia sed postquam congressi in proelia totas
implicuere inter se acies legitque uirum uir,
tum uero et gemitus morientum et sanguine in alto
armaque corporaque et permixti caede uirorum
semianimes uoluuntur equi, pugna aspera surgit. 635
Orsilochus Remuli, quando ipsum horrebat adire,
hastam intorsit equo ferrumque sub aure reliquit;
quo sonipes ictu furit arduus altaque iactat
uulneris impatiens arrecto pectore crura,
uoluitur ille excussus humi. Catillus Iollan 640
ingentemque animis, ingentem corpore et armis
deicit Herminium, nudo cui uertice fulua
caesaries nudique umeri nec uulnera terrent;
tantus in arma patet. latos huic hasta per armos
acta tremit duplicatque uirum transfixa dolore. 645

funditur ater ubique cruor; dant funera ferro
certantes pulchramque petunt per uulnera mortem.

At medias inter caedes exsultat Amazon
unum exserta latus pugnae, pharetrata Camilla,
et nunc lenta manu spargens hastilia denset, 650
nunc ualidam dextra rapit indefessa bipennem;
aureus ex umero sonat arcus et arma Dianae.
illa etiam, si quando in tergum pulsa recessit,
spicula conuerso fugientia derigit arcu.
at circum lectae comites, Larinaque uirgo 655
Tullaque et aeratam quatiens Tarpeia securim,
Italides, quas ipsa decus sibi dia Camilla
delegit pacisque bonas bellicae ministras:
quales Threiciae cum flumina Thermodontis
pulsant et pictis bellantur Amazones armis, 660
seu circum Hippolyten seu cum se Martia curru
Penthesilea refert, magnoque ululante tumultu
feminea exsultant lunatis agmina peltis.

Quem telo primum, quem postremum, aspera uirgo,
deicis? aut quot humi morientia corpora fundis? 665
Eunaeum Clytio primum patre, cuius apertum
aduersi longa transuerberat abiete pectus.
sanguinis ille uomens riuos cadit atque cruentam
mandit humum moriensque suo se in uulnere uersat.
tum Lirim Pagasumque super, quorum alter habenas 670
suffuso reuolutus equo dum colligit, alter
dum subit ac dextram labenti tendit inermem,
praecipites pariterque ruunt. his addit Amastrum
Hippotaden, sequiturque incumbens eminus hasta
Tereaque Harpalycumque et Demophoonta Chromimque; 675
quotque emissa manu contorsit spicula uirgo,
tot Phrygii cecidere uiri. procul Ornytus armis
ignotis et equo uenator Iapyge fertur,
cui pellis latosumeros erepta iuueno
pugnatori operit, caput ingens oris hiatus 680

et malae texere lupi cum dentibus albis,
agrestisque manus armat sparus; ipse cateruis
uertitur in mediis et toto uertice supra est.
hunc illa exceptum (neque enim labor agmine uerso)
traicit et super haec inimico pectore fatur: 685
‘siluis te, Tyrrhene, feras agitare putasti?
aduenit qui uestra dies muliebribus armis
uerba redargueret. nomen tamen haud leue patrum
manibus hoc referes, telo cecidisse Camillae.’

Protinus Orsilochem et Buten, duo maxima Teucrum 690
corpora, sed Buten auersum cuspide fixit
loricam galeamque inter, qua colla sedentis
lucent et laeuo dependet parma lacerto;
Orsilochem fugiens magnumque agitata per orbem
eludit gyro interior sequiturque sequentem; 695
tum ualidam perque arma uiro perque ossa securim
altior exsurgens oranti et multa precanti
congeminat; uulnus calido rigat ora cerebro.
incidit huic subitoque aspectu territus haesit
Appenninicolae bellator filius Auni, 700
haud Ligurum extremus, dum fallere fata sinebant.
isque ubi se nullo iam cursu euadere pugnae
posse neque instantem reginam auertere cernit,
consilio uersare dolos ingressus et astu
incipit haec: ‘quid tam egregium, si femina forti 705
fidis equo? dimitte fugam et te comminus aequo
mecum crede solo pugnaeque accinge pedestri:
iam nosces uentosa ferat cui gloria fraudem.’
dixit, at illa furens acrique accensa dolore
tradit equum comiti paribusque resistit in armis 710
ense pedes nudo puraque interrita parma.
at iuuenis uicisse dolo ratus auolat ipse
(haud mora), conuersisque fugax aufertur habenis
quadripedemque citum ferrata calce fatigat.
‘uane Ligus frustraque animis elate superbis, 715
nequiquam patrias temptasti lubricus artis,

nec fraus te incolumem fallaci perferet Auno.
haec fatur uirgo, et pernicipibus ignea plantis
transit equum cursu frenisque aduersa prehensis
concreditur poenasque inimico ex sanguine sumit: 720
quam facile accipiter saxo sacer ales ab alto
consequitur pennis sublimem in nube columbam
comprehensamque tenet pedibusque euiscerat uncis;
tum cruor et uulsae labuntur ab aethere plumae.

At non haec nullis hominum sator atque deorum 725
obseruans oculis summo sedet altus Olympo.
Tyrrhenum genitor Tarchonem in proelia saeua
suscitat et stimulis haud mollibus inicit iras.
ergo inter caedes cedentiaque agmina Tarchon
fertur equo uariisque instigat uocibus alas 730
nomine quemque uocans, reficitque in proelia pulsos.
‘quis metus, o numquam dolituri, o semper inertes
Tyrrheni, quae tanta animis ignauia uenit?
femina palantis agit atque haec agmina uertit!
quo ferrum quidue haec gerimus tela inrita dextris? 735
at non in Venerem segnes nocturnaque bella,
aut ubi curua choros indixit tibia Bacchi.
exspectate dapes et plenae pocula mensae
(hic amor, hoc studium) dum sacra secundus haruspex
nuntiet ac lucos uocet hostia pinguis in altos!’ 740
haec effatus equum in medios moriturus et ipse
concitatur, et Venulo aduersum se turbidus infert
dereptumque ab equo dextra complectitur hostem
et gremium ante suum multa ui concitus aufert.
tollitur in caelum clamor cunctique Latini 745
conuertere oculos. uolat igneus aequore Tarchon
arma uirumque ferens; tum summa ipsius ab hasta
defringit ferrum et partis rimatur apertas,
qua uulnus letale ferat; contra ille repugnans
sustinet a iugulo dextram et uim uiribus exit. 750
utque uolans alte raptum cum fulua draconem
fert aquila implicuitque pedes atque unguibus haesit,

saucius at serpens sinuosa uolumina uersat
arrectisque horret squamis et sibilat ore
arduus insurgens, illa haud minus urget obunco 755
luctantem rostro, simul aethera uerberat alis:
haud aliter praedam Tiburtum ex agmine Tarchon
portat ouans. ducis exemplum euentumque secuti
Maeonidae incurrunt. tum fatis debitus Arruns
uelocem iaculo et multa prior arte Camillam 760
circuit, et quae sit fortuna facillima temptat.
qua se cumque furens medio tulit agmine uirgo,
hac Arruns subit et tacitus uestigia lustrat;
qua uictrix redit illa pedemque ex hoste reportat,
hac iuuenis furtim celeris detorquet habenas. 765
hos aditus iamque hos aditus omnemque pererrat
undique circuitum et certam quatit improbus hastam.

Forte sacer Cybelo Chloreus olimque sacerdos
insignis longe Phrygiis fulgebat in armis
spumantemque agitabat equum, quem pellis aenis 770
in plumam squamis auro conserta tegebat.
ipse peregrina ferrugine clarus et ostro
spicula torquebat Lycio Gortynia cornu;
aureus ex umeris erat arcus et aurea uati
cassida; tum croceam chlamydemque sinusque crepantis 775
carbaseos fuluo in nodum collegerat auro
pictus acu tunicas et barbara tegmina crurum.
hunc uirgo, siue ut templis praefigeret arma
Troia, captiuo siue ut se ferret in auro
uenatrix, unum ex omni certamine pugnae 780
caeca sequebatur totumque incauta per agmen
femineo praedae et spoliorum ardebat amore,
telum ex insidiis cum tandem tempore capto
concitat et superos Arruns sic uoce precatur:
'summe deum, sancti custos Soractis Apollo, 785
quem primi colimus, cui pineus ardor aceruo
pascitur, et medium freti pietate per ignem
cultores multa premimus uestigia pruna,

da, pater, hoc nostris aboleri dedecus armis,
omnipotens. non exuias pulsaeue tropaeum 790
uirginis aut spolia ulla peto, mihi cetera laudem
facta ferent; haec dira meo dum uulnere pestis
pulsa cadat, patrias remeabo inglorius urbes.'

Audiit et uoti Phoebus succedere partem
mente dedit, partem uolucris dispersit in auras: 795
sterneret ut subita turbatam morte Camillam
adnuat oranti; reducem ut patria alta uideret
non dedit, inque Notos uocem uertere procellae.
ergo ut missa manu sonitum dedit hasta per auras,
conuertere animos acris oculosque tulere 800
cuncti ad reginam Volsci. nihil ipsa nec aurae
nec sonitus memor aut uenientis ab aethere teli,
hasta sub exsertam donec perlata papillam
haesit uirgineumque alte bibit acta cruorem.
concurrunt trepidae comites dominamque ruentem 805
suscipiunt. fugit ante omnis exterritus Arruns
laetitia mixtoque metu, nec iam amplius hastae
credere nec telis occurrere uirginis audet.
ac uelut ille, prius quam tela inimica sequantur,
continuo in montis sese auius abdidit altos 810
occiso pastore lupo magnouo iuueno,
consciis audacis facti, caudamque remulcens
subiecit pauitantem utero siluasque petiuit:
haud secus ex oculis se turbidus abstulit Arruns
contentusque fuga mediis se immiscuit armis. 815
illa manu moriens telum trahit, ossa sed inter
ferreus ad costas alto stat uulnere mucro.
labitur exsanguis, labuntur frigida leto
lumina, purpureus quondam color ora reliquit.
tum sic exspirans Accam ex aequalibus unam 820
adloquitur, fida ante alias quae sola Camillae
quicum partiri curas, atque haec ita fatur:
'hactenus, Acca soror, potui: nunc uulnus acerbum
conficit, et tenebris nigrescunt omnia circum.

effuge et haec Turno mandata nouissima perfer: 825
succedat pugnae Troianosque arceat urbe.
iamque uale.’ simul his dictis linquebat habenas
ad terram non sponte fluens. tum frigida toto
paulatim exsoluit se corpore, lentaque colla
et captum leto posuit caput, arma relinquens, 830
uitaque cum gemitu fugit indignata sub umbras.
tum uero immensus surgens ferit aurea clamor
sidera: deiecta crudescit pugna Camilla;
incurrunt densi simul omnis copia Teucrum
Tyrrenique duces Euandrique Arcades alae. 835

At Triuiæ custos iamdudum in montibus Opis
alta sedet summis spectatque interrita pugnās.
utque procul medio iuuenum in clamore furentum
prospexit tristi mulcatam morte Camillam,
ingemuitque deditque has imo pectore uoces: 840 ‘heu nimium, uirgo, nimium crudele luisti
supplicium Teucros conata lacessere bello!
nec tibi desertæ in dumis coluisse Dianam
profuit aut nostras umero gessisse pharetras.
non tamen indecorem tua te regina reliquit 845
extrema iam in morte, neque hoc sine nomine letum
per gentis erit aut famam patieris inultæ.
nam quicumque tuum uiolauit uulnere corpus
morte luet merita.’ fuit ingens monte sub alto
regis Dercenni terreno ex aggere bustum 850
antiqui Laurentis opacaque ilice tectum;
hic dea se primum rapido pulcherrima nisu
sistit et Arruntem tumulo speculatur ab alto.
ut uidit fulgentem armis ac uana tumentem,
‘cur’ inquit ‘diuersus abis? huc derige gressum, 855
huc periture ueni, capias ut digna Camillæ
praemia. tune etiam telis moriere Dianæ?’
dixit, et aurata uolucrum Threissa sagittam
deprompsit pharetra cornuque infensa tetendit
et duxit longe, donec curuata coirent 860

inter se capita et manibus iam tangeret aequis,
laeua aciem ferri, dextra neruoque papillam.
extemplo teli stridorem aurasque sonantis
audiit una Arruns haesitque in corpore ferrum.
illum expirantem socii atque extrema gementem 865
obliti ignoto camporum in puluere linquunt;
Opis ad aetherium pennis aufertur Olympum.

Prima fugit domina amissa leuis ala Camillae,
turbati fugiunt Rutuli, fugit acer Atinas,
disiectique duces desolatique manipuli 870
tuta petunt et equis auersi ad moenia tendunt.
nec quisquam instantis Teucros letumque ferentis
sustentare ualet telis aut sistere contra,
sed laxos referunt umeris languentibus arcus,
quadripedumque putrem cursu quatit ungula campum. 875
uoluitur ad muros caligine turbidus atra
pulis, et e speculis percussae pectora matres
femineum clamorem ad caeli sidera tollunt.
qui cursu portas primi inrupere patentis,
hos inimica super mixto premit agmine turba, 880
nec miseram effugiunt mortem, sed limine in ipso,
moenibus in patriis atque inter tuta domorum
confixi expirant animas. pars claudere portas,
nec sociis aperire uiam nec moenibus audent
accipere orantis, oriturque miserrima caedes 885
defendentum armis aditus inque arma ruentum.
exclusi ante oculos lacrimantumque ora parentum
pars in praecipitis fossas urgente ruina
uoluitur, immissis pars caeca et concita frenis
arietat in portas et duros obice postis. 890
ipsae de muris summo certamine matres
(monstrat amor uerus patriae, ut uidere Camillam)
tela manu trepidae iaciunt ac robore duro
stipitibus ferrum sudibusque imitantur obustis
praecipites, primaeque mori pro moenibus ardent. 895

Interea Turnum in siluis saeuissimus implet
nuntius et iuueni ingentem fert Acca tumultum:
deletas Volscorum acies, cecidisse Camillam,
ingruere infensos hostis et Marte secundo
omnia corripuisse, metum iam ad moenia ferri. 900
ille furens (et saeua Iouis sic numina poscunt)
deserit obsessos collis, nemora aspera linquit.
uix e conspectu exierat campumque tenebat,
cum pater Aeneas saltus ingressus apertos
exsuperatque iugum siluaque euadit opaca. 905
sic ambo ad muros rapidi totoque feruntur
agmine nec longis inter se passibus absunt;
ac simul Aeneas fumantis puluere campos
prospexit longe Laurentiaque agmina uidit,
et saeuum Aenean agnouit Turnus in armis 910
aduentumque pedum flatusque audiuit equorum.
continuoque ineant pugnas et proelia temptent,
ni roseus fessos iam gurgite Phoebus Hiberno
tingat equos noctemque die labente reducat.
considunt castris ante urbem et moenia uallant.

LIBER XII

Turnus ut infractos aduerso Marte Latinos
defecisse uidet, sua nunc promissa reposci,
se signari oculis, ultro implacabilis ardet
attollitque animos. Poenorum qualis in aruis
saucius ille graui uenantum uulnere pectus 5
tum demum mouet arma leo, gaudetque comantis
excutiens ceruice toros fixumque latronis
impavidus frangit telum et fremit ore cruento:
haud secus accenso gliscit uiolentia Turno.
tum sic adfatur regem atque ita turbidus inquit: 10
‘nulla mora in Turno; nihil est quod dicta retractent
ignauī Aeneadae, nec quae pepigere recusent:
congregior. fer sacra, pater, et concipe foedus.
aut hac Dardanium dextra sub Tartara mittam
desertorem Asiae (sedeant spectentque Latini), 15
et solus ferro crimen commune refellam,
aut habeat uictos, cedat Lauinia coniunx.’

Olli sedato respondit corde Latinus:
‘o praestans animi iuuenis, quantum ipse feroci
uirtute exsuperas, tanto me impensius aequum est 20
consulere atque omnis metuentem expendere casus.
sunt tibi regna patris Dauni, sunt oppida capta
multa manu, nec non aurumque animusque Latino est;
sunt aliae innuptae Latio et Laurentibus aruis
nec genus indecores. sine me haec haud mollia fatu 25
sublatis aperire dolis, simul hoc animo hauri:
me natam nulli ueterum sociare procorum
fas erat, idque omnes diuique hominesque canebant.
uictus amore tui, cognato sanguine uictus
coniugis et maestae lacrimis, uincla omnia rupi; 30
promissam eripui genero, arma impia sumpsī.
ex illo qui me casus, quae, Turne, sequantur
bella, uides, quantos primus patiare labores.

bis magna uicti pugna uix urbe tuemur
spes Italas; recalent nostro Thybrina fluenta 35
sanguine adhuc campique ingentes ossibus al bent.
quo referor totiens? quae mentem insania mutat?
si Turno exstincto socios sum ascire paratus,
cur non incolumi potius certamina tollo?
quid consanguinei Rutuli, quid cetera dicet 40
Italia, ad mortem si te (fors dicta refutet!)
prodiderim, natam et conubia nostra petentem?
respice res bello uarias, miserere parentis
longaevi, quem nunc maestum patria Ardea longe
diuidit.' haudquaquam dictis uiolentia Turni 45
flectitur; exsuperat magis aegrescitque medendo.
ut primum fari potuit, sic institit ore:
'quam pro me curam geris, hanc precor, optime, pro me
deponas letumque sinas pro laude pacisci.
et nos tela, pater, ferrumque haud debile dextra 50
spargimus, et nostro sequitur de uulnere sanguis.
longe illi dea mater erit, quae nube fugacem
feminea tegat et uanis sese occulat umbris.'

At regina noua pugnae conterrita sorte
flebat et ardentem generum moritura tenebat: 55
'Turne, per has ego te lacrimas, per si quis Amatae
tangit honos animum: spes tu nunc una, senectae
tu requies miserae, decus imperiumque Latini
te penes, in te omnis domus inclinata recumbit.
unum oro: desiste manum committere Teucris. 60
qui te cumque manent isto certamine casus
et me, Turne, manent; simul haec inuisa relinquam
lumina nec generum Aenean captiua uidebo.'
accepit uocem lacrimis Lauinia matris
flagrantis perfusa genas, cui plurimus ignem 65
subiecit rubor et calefacta per ora cucurrit.
Indum sanguineo ueluti uiolauerit ostro
si quis ebur, aut mixta rubent ubi lilia multa
alba rosa, talis uirgo dabat ore colores.

illum turbat amor figitque in uirgine uultus; 70
ardet in arma magis paucisque adfatur Amatam:
‘ne, quaeso, ne me lacrimis neuē omine tanto
prosequere in duri certamina Martis euntem,
o mater; neque enim Turno mora libera mortis.
nuntius haec, Idmon, Phrygio mea dicta tyranno 75
haud placitura refer. cum primum crastina caelo
puniceis inuecta rotis Aurora rubebit,
non Teucros agat in Rutulos, Teucrum arma quiescant
et Rutuli; nostro dirimamus sanguine bellum,
illo quaeratur coniunx Lauinia campo.’ 80

Haec ubi dicta dedit rapidusque in tecta recessit,
poscit equos gaudetque tuens ante ora frementis,
Pylum quos ipsa decus dedit Orithyia,
qui candore niues anteirent, cursibus auras.
circumstant properi aurigae manibusque lacessunt 85
pectora plausa cauis et colla comantia pectunt.
ipse dehinc auro squalentem alboque orichalco
circumdat loricam umeris, simul aptat habendo
ensemque clipeumque et rubrae cornua cristae,
ensem quem Dauno ignipotens deus ipse parenti 90
fecerat et Stygia candentem tinxerat unda.
exim quae mediis ingenti adnixa columnae
aedibus astabat, ualidam ui corripit hastam,
Actoris Aurunci spoliū, quassatque trementem
uociferans: ‘nunc, o numquam frustrata uocatus 95
hasta meos, nunc tempus adest: te maximus Actor,
te Turni nunc dextra gerit; da sternere corpus
loricamque manu ualida lacerare reuulsam
seuiuri Phrygis et foedare in puluere crinis
uibatos calido ferro murraque madentis.’ 100
his agitur furiis, totoque ardentis ab ore
scintillae absistunt, oculis micat acribus ignis,
mugitus ueluti cum prima in proelia taurus
terrificos ciet aut irasci in cornua temptat
arboris obnixus trunco, uentosque lacessit 105

ictibus aut sparsa ad pugnam proludit harena.

Nec minus interea maternis saeuus in armis
Aeneas acuit Martem et se suscitāt ira,
oblato gaudens componi foedere bellum.
tum socios maestique metum solatur Iuli 110
fata docens, regique iubet responsa Latino
certa referre uiros et pacis dicere leges.

Postera uix summos spargebat lumine montis
orta dies, cum primum alto se gurgite tollunt
Solis equi lucemque elatis naribus efflant: 115
campum ad certamen magnae sub moenibus urbis
dimensi Rutulique uiri Teucrique parabant
in medioque focos et dis communibus aras
gramineas. alii fontemque ignemque ferebant
uelati limo et uerbena tempora uincti. 120
procedit legio Ausonidum, pilataque plenis
agmina se fundunt portis. hinc Troius omnis
Tyrrhenusque ruit uariis exercitus armis,
haud secus instructi ferro quam si aspera Martis
pugna uocet. nec non mediis in milibus ipsi 125
ductores auro uolitant ostroque superbi,
et genus Assaraci Mnestheus et fortis Asilas
et Messapus equum domitor, Neptunia proles;
utque dato signo spatia in sua quisque recessit,
defigunt tellure hastas et scuta reclinant. 130
tum studio effusae matres et uulgus inermum
inualidique senes turris ac tecta domorum
obsedere, alii portis sublimibus astant.

At Iuno ex summo (qui nunc Albanus habetur;
tum neque nomen erat neque honos aut gloria monti) 135
prospiciens tumulo campum aspectabat et ambas
Laurentum Troumque acies urbemque Latini.
extemplo Turni sic est adfata sororem
diua deam, stagnis quae fluminibusque sonoris

praesidet (hunc illi rex aetheris altus honorem 140
Iuppiter erepta pro uirginitate sacrauit):
‘nympha, decus fluuiorum, animo gratissima nostro,
scis ut te cunctis unam, quaecumque Latinae
magnanimi Iouis ingratum ascendere cubile,
praetulerim caelique libens in parte locarim: 145
disce tuum, ne me incuses, Iuturna, dolorem.
qua uisa est Fortuna pati Parcaeque sinebant
cedere res Latio, Turnum et tua moenia texi;
nunc iuuenem imparibus uideo concurrere fatis,
Parcarumque dies et uis inimica propinquat. 150
non pugnam aspicere hanc oculis, non foedera possum.
tu pro germano si quid praesentius audes,
perge; decet. forsan miseros meliora sequentur.’
uix ea, cum lacrimas oculis Iuturna profundit
terque quaterque manu pectus percussit honestum. 155
‘non lacrimis hoc tempus’ ait Saturnia Iuno:
‘accelera et fratrem, si quis modus, eripe morti;
aut tu bella cie conceptumque excute foedus.
auctor ego audendi.’ sic exhortata reliquit
incertam et tristi turbatam uulnere mentis. 160

Interea reges ingenti mole Latinus
quadriiugo uehitur curru (cui tempora circum
aurati bis sex radii fulgentia cingunt,
Solis aui specimen), bigis it Turnus in albis,
bina manu lato crispans hastilia ferro. 165
hinc pater Aeneas, Romanae stirpis origo,
sidereo flagrans clipeo et caelestibus armis
et iuxta Ascanius, magnae spes altera Romae,
procedunt castris, puraque in ueste sacerdos
saetigeri fetum suis intonsamque bidentem 170
attulit admouitque pecus flagrantibus aris.
illi ad surgentem conuersi lumina solem
dant fruges manibus salsas et tempora ferro
summa notant pecudum, paterisque altaria libant.

Tum pius Aeneas stricto sic ense precatur: 175
‘esto nunc Sol testis et haec mihi terra uocanti,
quam propter tantos potui perferre labores,
et pater omnipotens et tu Saturnia coniunx
(iam melior, iam, diua, precor), tuque inclute Mauors,
cuncta tuo qui bella, pater, sub numine torques; 180
fontisque fluuiosque uoco, quaeque aetheris alti
religio et quae caeruleo sunt numina ponto:
cesserit Ausonio si fors uictoria Turno,
conuenit Euandri uictos discedere ad urbem,
cedet Iulus agris, nec post arma ulla rebelles 185
Aeneadae referent ferroue haec regna lacescent.
sin nostrum adnuerit nobis uictoria Martem
(ut potius reor et potius di numine firment),
non ego nec Teucris Italos parere iubebo
nec mihi regna peto: paribus se legibus ambae 190
inuictae gentes aeterna in foedera mittant.
sacra deosque dabo; socer arma Latinus habeto,
imperium sollemne socer; mihi moenia Teucri
constituent urbique dabit Lauinia nomen.’

Sic prior Aeneas, sequitur sic deinde Latinus 195
suspiciens caelum, tenditque ad sidera dextram:
‘haec eadem, Aenea, terram, mare, sidera, iuro
Latoniaeque genus duplex Ianumque bifrontem,
uimque deum infernam et duri sacraria Ditis;
audiat haec genitor qui foedera fulmine sancit. 200
tango aras, medios ignis et numina testor:
nulla dies pacem hanc Italis nec foedera rumpet,
quo res cumque cadent; nec me uis ulla uolentem
auertet, non, si tellurem effundat in undas
diluuium miscens caelumque in Tartara soluat, 205
ut sceptrum hoc’ (dextra sceptrum nam forte gerebat)
‘numquam fronde leui fundet uirgulta nec umbras,
cum semel in siluis imo de stirpe recisum
matre caret posuitque comas et bracchia ferro,
olim arbos, nunc artificis manus aere decoro 210

inclusit patribusque dedit gestare Latinis.
talibus inter se firmabant foedera dictis
conspectu in medio procerum. tum rite sacratas
in flammam iugulant pecudes et uiscera uiuis
eripiunt, cumulantque oneratis lancibus aras. 215

At uero Rutulis impar ea pugna uideri
iamdudum et uario misceri pectora motu,
tum magis ut propius cernunt non uiribus aequos.
adiuuat incessu tacito progressus et aram
suppliciter uenerans demisso lumine Turnus 220
pubentesque genae et iuuenali in corpore pallor.
quem simul ac Iuturna soror crebrescere uidit
sermonem et uulgi uariare labantia corda,
in medias acies formam adsimulata Camerti,
cui genus a proauis ingens clarumque paternae 225
nomen erat uirtutis, et ipse acerrimus armis,
in medias dat sese acies haud nescia rerum
rumoresque serit uarios ac talia fatur:
‘non pudet, o Rutuli, pro cunctis talibus unam
obiectare animam? numerone an uiribus aequi 230
non sumus? en, omnes et Troes et Arcades hi sunt,
fatalisque manus, infensa Etruria Turno:
uix hostem, alterni si congregiamur, habemus.
ille quidem ad superos, quorum se deuouet aris,
succedet fama uiuusque per ora feretur; 235
nos patria amissa dominis parere superbis
cogemur, qui nunc lenti consedimus aruis.’

Talibus incensa est iuuenum sententia dictis
iam magis atque magis, serpitque per agmina murmur:
ipsi Laurentes mutati ipsique Latini. 240
qui sibi iam requiem pugnae rebusque salutem
sperabant, nunc arma uolunt foedusque precantur
infectum et Turni sortem miserantur iniquam.
his aliud maius Iuturna adiungit et alto
dat signum caelo, quo non praesentius ullum 245

turbauit mentes Italas monstroque fefellit.
namque uolans rubra fuluus Iouis ales in aethra
litoreas agitabat auis turbamque sonantem
agminis aligeri, subito cum lapsus ad undas
cycnum excellentem pedibus rapit improbus uncis. 250
arrexere animos Itali, cunctaeque uolucres
conuertunt clamore fugam (mirabile uisu),
aetheraque obscurant pennis hostemque per auras
facta nube premunt, donec ui uictus et ipso
pondere defecit praedamque ex unguibus ales 255
proiecit fluuio, penitusque in nubila fugit.

Tum uero augurium Rutuli clamore salutant
expediuntque manus, primusque Tolumnius augur
'hoc erat, hoc uotis' inquit 'quod saepe petiui.
accipio agnoscoque deos; me, me duce ferrum 260
corripite, o miseri, quos improbus aduena bello
territat inualidas ut auis, et litora uestra
ui populat. petet ille fugam penitusque profundo
uela dabit. uos unanimi densete cateruas
et regem uobis pugna defendite raptum.' 265
dixit, et aduersos telum contorsit in hostis
procurrens; sonitum dat stridula cornus et auras
certa secat. simul hoc, simul ingens clamor et omnes
turbati cunei calefactaque corda tumultu.
hasta uolans, ut forte nouem pulcherrima fratrum 270
corpora constiterant contra, quos fida creatur
una tot Arcadio coniunx Tyrrhena Gylippo,
horum unum ad medium, teritur qua sutilis aluo
balteus et laterum iuncturas fibula mordet,
egregium forma iuuenem et fulgentibus armis, 275
transadigit costas fuluaque effundit harena.
at fratres, animosa phalanx accensaque luctu,
pars gladios stringunt manibus, pars missile ferrum
corripiunt caecique ruunt. quos agmina contra procurrunt Laurentum, hinc densi rursus inundant 280
Troes Agyllinique et pictis Arcades armis:

sic omnis amor unus habet decernere ferro.
diripuerunt aras, ita toto turbida caelo
tempestas telorum ac ferreus ingruit imber,
craterasque focosque ferunt. fugit ipse Latinus 285
pulsatos referens infecto foedere diuos.
infrenant alii currus aut corpora saltu
subiciunt in equos et strictis ensibus adsunt.
Messapus regem regisque insigne gerentem
Tyrrhenum Aulesten, audax confundere foedus, 290
aduerso proterret equo; ruit ille recedens
et miser oppositis a tergo inuoluitur aris
in caput inque umeros. at feruidus aduolat hasta
Messapus teloque orantem multa trabali
desuper altus equo grauiter ferit atque ita fatur: 295
'hoc habet, haec melior magnis data uictima diuis.'
concurrunt Itali spoliantque calentia membra.
obuius ambustum torrem Corynaeus ab ara
corripit et uenienti Ebyso plagamque ferenti
occupat os flammis: olli ingens barba reluxit 300
nidoremque ambusta dedit. super ipse secutus
caesariem laeua turbati corripit hostis
impressoque genu nitens terrae applicat ipsum;
sic rigido latus ense ferit. Podalirius Alsum
pastorem primaque acie per tela ruentem 305
ense sequens nudo superimminet; ille securi
aduersi frontem mediam mentumque reducta
dissicit et sparso late rigat arma cruore.
olli dura quies oculos et ferreus urget
somnus, in aeternam conduntur lumina noctem. 310

At pius Aeneas dextram tendebat inermem
nudato capite atque suos clamore uocabat:
'quo ruitis? quaeue ista repens discordia surgit?
o cohibete iras! ictum iam foedus et omnes
compositae leges. mihi ius concurrere soli; 315
me sinite atque auferte metus. ego foedera faxo
firma manu; Turnum debent haec iam mihi sacra.'

has inter uoces, media inter talia uerba
ecce uiro stridens alis adlapsa sagitta est,
incertum qua pulsa manu, quo turbine adacta, 320
quis tantam Rutulis laudem, casusne deusne,
attulerit; pressa est insignis gloria facti,
nec sese Aeneae iactauit uulnere quisquam.
Turnus ut Aenean cedentem ex agmine uidit
turbatosque duces, subita spe feruidus ardet; 325
poscit equos atque arma simul, saltuque superbus
emicat in currum et manibus molitur habenas.
multa uirum uolitans dat fortia corpora leto.
seminecis uoluit multos: aut agmina curru
proterit aut raptas fugientibus ingerit hastas. 330
qualis apud gelidi cum flumina concitus Hebri
sanguineus Mauors clipeo increpat atque furentis
bella mouens immittit equos, illi aequore aperto
ante Notos Zephyrumque uolant, gemit ultima pulsu
Thrace pedum circumque atrae Formidinis ora 335
Iraeque Insidiaeque, dei comitatus, aguntur:
talis equos alacer media inter proelia Turnus
fumantis sudore quatit, miserabile caesis
hostibus insultans; spargit rapida ungula rores
sanguineos mixtaque cruor calcatur harena. 340
iamque neci Sthenelumque dedit Thamyrumque Pholumque,
hunc congressus et hunc, illum eminus; eminus ambo
Imbrasidas, Glaucum atque Laden, quos Imbrasmus ipse
nutrierat Lycia paribusque ornauerat armis
uel conferre manum uel equo praeuertere uentos. 345

Parte alia media Eumedes in proelia fertur,
antiqui proles bello praeclara Dolonis,
nomine auum referens, animo manibusque parentem,
qui quondam, castra ut Danaum speculator adiret,
ausus Pelidae pretium sibi poscere currus; 350
illum Tydides alio pro talibus ausis
adfecit pretio nec equis aspirat Achilli.
hunc procul ut campo Turnus prospexit aperto,

ante leui iaculo longum per inane secutus
sistit equos biiugis et curru desilit atque 355
semianimi lapsoque superuenit, et pede collo
impresso dextrae mucronem extorquet et alto
fulgentem tingit iugulo atque haec insuper addit:
'en agros et, quam bello, Troiane, petisti,
Hesperiam metire iacens: haec praemia, qui me 360
ferro ausi temptare, ferunt, sic moenia condunt.'
huic comitem Asbyten coniecta cuspide mittit
Chloreaque Sybarimque Daretaque Thersilochumque
et sternacis equi lapsum ceruice Thymoeten.
ac uelut Edoni Boreae cum spiritus alto 365
insonat Aegaeo sequiturque ad litora fluctus,
qua uenti incubuere, fugam dant nubila caelo:
sic Turno, quacumque uiam secat, agmina cedunt
conuersaeque ruunt acies; fert impetus ipsum
et cristam aduerso curru quatit aura uolantem. 370
non tulit instantem Phegeus animisque frementem
obiecit sese ad currum et spumantia frenis
ora citatorum dextra detorsit equorum.
dum trahitur pendetque iugis, hunc lata reiectum
lancea consequitur rumpitque infixam bilicem 375
loricam et summum degustat uulnere corpus.
ille tamen clipeo obiecto conuersus in hostem
ibat et auxilium ducto mucrone petebat,
cum rota praecipitem et procursu concitus axis
impulit effunditque solo, Turnusque secutus 380
imam inter galeam summi thoracis et oras
abstulit ense caput truncumque reliquit harenae.

Atque ea dum campis uictor dat funera Turnus,
interea Aenean Mnestheus et fidus Achates
Ascaniusque comes castris statuere cruentum 385
alternos longa nitentem cuspide gressus.
saeuit et infracta luctatur harundine telum
eripere auxilioque uiam, quae proxima, poscit:
ense secant lato uulnus telique latebram

rescindant penitus, seseque in bella remittant. 390
iamque aderat Phoebo ante alios dilectus Iapyx Iasides, acri quondam cui captus amore
ipse suas artis, sua munera, laetus Apollo
augurium citharamque dabat celerisque sagittas.
ille, ut depositi proferret fata parentis, 395
scire potestates herbarum usumque medendi
maluit et mutas agitare inglorius artis.
stabat acerba fremens ingentem nixus in hastam
Aeneas magno iuuenum et maerentis Iuli
concurso, lacrimis immobilis. ille retorto 400
Paeonium in morem senior succinctus amictu
multa manu medica Phoebique potentibus herbis
nequiquam trepidat, nequiquam spicula dextra
sollicitat prensatque tenaci forcipe ferrum.
nulla uiam Fortuna regit, nihil auctor Apollo 405
subuenit, et saeuus campis magis ac magis horror
crebrescit propiusque malum est. iam puluere caelum
stare uident: subeunt equites et spicula castris
densa cadunt mediis. it tristis ad aethera clamor
bellantum iuuenum et duro sub Marte cadentum. 410

Hic Venus indigno nati concussa dolore
dictamnum genetrix Cretaea carpit ab Ida,
puberibus caulem foliis et flore comantem
purpureo; non illa feris incognita capris
gramina, cum tergo uolucres haesere sagittae. 415
hoc Venus obscuro faciem circumdata nimbo
detulit, hoc fusum labris splendentibus amnem
inficit occulte medicans, spargitque salubris
ambrosiae sucos et odoriferam panaceam.
fouit ea uulnus lymph a longaeuus Iapyx 420
ignorans, subitoque omnis de corpore fugit
quippe dolor, omnis stetit imo uulnere sanguis.
iamque secuta manum nullo cogente sagitta
excidit, atque nouae rediere in pristina uires.
'arma citi properate uiro! quid statis?' Iapyx 425

conclamat primusque animos accendit in hostem.
‘non haec humanis opibus, non arte magistra
proueniunt, neque te, Aenea, mea dextera seruat:
maior agit deus atque opera ad maiora remittit.’
ille audius pugnae suras incluserat auro 430
hinc atque hinc oditque moras hastamque coruscat.
postquam habilis lateri clipeus loricaque tergo est,
Ascanium fuis circum complectitur armis
summaque per galeam delibans oscula fatur:
‘disce, puer, uirtutem ex me uerumque laborem, 435
fortunam ex aliis. nunc te mea dextera bello
defensum dabit et magna inter praemia ducet.
tu facito, mox cum matura adoleuerit aetas,
sis memor et te animo repetentem exempla tuorum
et pater Aeneas et auunculus excitet Hector.’ 440

Haec ubi dicta dedit, portis sese extulit ingens
telum immane manu quatiens; simul agmine denso
Antheusque Mnestheusque ruunt, omnisque relictis
turba fluit castris. tum caeco puluere campus
miscetur pulsuque pedum tremit excita tellus. 445
uidit ab aduerso uenientis aggere Turnus,
uidere Ausonii, gelidusque per ima cucurrit
ossa tremor; prima ante omnis Iuturna Latinos
audiit agnoui que sonum et tremefacta refugit.
ille uolat campoque atrum rapit agmen aperto. 450
qualis ubi ad terras abrupto sidere nimbus
it mare per medium (miseris, heu, praescia longe
horrescunt corda agricolis: dabit ille ruinas
arboribus stragemque satis, ruet omnia late),
ante uolant sonitumque ferunt ad litora uenti: 455
talis in aduersos ductor Rhoeteius hostis
agmen agit, densi cuneis se quisque coactis
adglomerant. ferit ense grauem Thymbraeus Osirim,
Arcetium Mnestheus, Epulonem obtruncat Achates
Vfentemque Gyas; cadit ipse Tolumnius augur, 460
primus in aduersos telum qui torserat hostis.

tollitur in caelum clamor, uersique uicissim
puluerulenta fuga Rutuli dant terga per agros.
ipse neque auersos dignatur sternere morti
nec pede congressos aequo nec tela ferentis 465
insequitur: solum densa in caligine Turnum
uestigat lustrans, solum in certamina poscit.
Hoc concussa metu mentem Iuturna uirago
aurigam Turni media inter lora Metiscum
excutit et longe lapsum temone reliquit; 470
ipsa subit manibusque undantis flectit habenas
cuncta gerens, uocemque et corpus et arma Metisci.
nigra uelut magnas domini cum diuitis aedes
peruolat et pennis alta atria lustrat hirundo
pabula parua legens nidisque loquacibus escas, 475
et nunc porticibus uacuis, nunc umida circum
stagna sonat: similis medios Iuturna per hostis
fertur equis rapidoque uolans obit omnia curru,
iamque hic germanum iamque hic ostentat ouantem
nec conferre manum patitur, uolat auia longe. 480
haud minus Aeneas tortos legit obuius orbis,
uestigatque uirum et disiecta per agmina magna
uoce uocat. quotiens oculos coniecit in hostem
alipedumque fugam cursu temptauit equorum,
auersos totiens currus Iuturna retorsit. 485
heu, quid agat? uario nequiquam fluctuat aestu,
diuersaeque uocant animum in contraria curae.
huic Messapus, uti laeua duo forte gerebat
lenta, leuis cursu, praefixa hastilia ferro,
horum unum certo contorquens derigit ictu. 490
substitit Aeneas et se collegit in arma
poplite subsidens; apicem tamen incita summum
hasta tulit summasque excussit uertice cristas.
tum uero adsurgunt irae, insidiisque subactus,
diuersos ubi sensit equos currumque referri, 495
multa Iouem et laesi testatus foederis aras
iam tandem inuadit medios et Marte secundo
terribilis saeuam nullo discrimine caedem

suscitat, irarumque omnis effundit habenas.

Quis mihi nunc tot acerba deus, quis carmine caedes 500

diuersas obitumque ducum, quos aequore toto
inque uicem nunc Turnus agit, nunc Troius heros,
expediat? tanton placuit concurrere motu,
Iuppiter, aeterna gentis in pace futuras?

Aeneas Rutulum Sucronem (ea prima ruentis 505
pugna loco statuit Teucros) haud multa morantem
excipit in latus et, qua fata celerrima, crudum
transadigit costas et cratis pectoris ense.

Turnus equo deiectum Amycum fratremque Dioren,
congressus pedes, hunc uenientem cuspidе longa, 510
hunc mucrone ferit, curruque abscisa duorum
suspendit capita et rorantia sanguine portat.

ille Talon Tanaimque neci fortemque Cethegum,
tris uno congressu, et maestum mittit Oniten,
nomen Echionium matrisque genus Peridiaе; 515
hic fratres Lycia missos et Apollinis agris
et iuuenem exosum nequiquam bella Menoeten,

Arcada, piscosae cui circum flumina Lernae
ars fuerat pauperque domus nec nota potentum
munera, conductaque pater tellure serebat. 520

ac uelut immissi diuersis partibus ignes
arentem in siluam et uirgulta sonantia lauro,
aut ubi decursu rapido de montibus altis
dant sonitum spumosi amnes et in aequora currunt
quisque suum populatus iter: non segnius ambo 525
Aeneas Turnusque ruunt per proelia; nunc, nunc
fluctuat ira intus, rumpuntur nescia uinci
pectora, nunc totis in uulnera uiribus itur.

Murranum hic, ataus et auorum antiqua sonantem
nomina per regesque actum genus omne Latinos, 530
praecipitem scopulo atque ingentis turbine saxi
excutit effunditque solo; hunc lora et iuga subter
prouoluere rotae, crebro super ungula pulsu

incita nec domini memorum proculcat equorum.
ille ruenti Hyllō animisque immane frementi 535
occurrit telumque aurata ad tempora torquet:
olli per galeam fixo stetit hasta cerebro.
dextera nec tua te, Graium fortissime Cretheu,
eripuit Turno, nec di texere Cupencum
Aenea ueniente sui: dedit obuia ferro 540
pectora, nec misero clipei mora profuit aerei.
te quoque Laurentes uiderunt, Aeole, campi
oppetere et late terram consternere tergo.
occidis, Argiuae quem non potuere phalanges
sternere nec Priami regnorum euersor Achilles; 545
hic tibi mortis erant metae, domus alta sub Ida,
Lyrnesi domus alta, solo Laurente sepulcrum.
totae adeo conuersae acies omnesque Latini,
omnes Dardanidae, Mnestheus acerque Serestus
et Messapus equum domitor et fortis Asilas 550
Tuscorumque phalanx Euandrique Arcades alae,
pro se quisque uiri summa nituntur opum ui;
nec mora nec requies, uasto certamine tendunt.

Hic mentem Aeneae genetrix pulcherrima misit
iret ut ad muros urbique aduerteret agmen 555
ocius et subita turbaret clade Latinos.
ille ut uestigans diuersa per agmina Turnum
huc atque huc acies circumtulit, aspicit urbem
immunem tanti belli atque impune quietam.
continuo pugnae accendit maioris imago: 560
Mnesthea Sergestumque uocat fortemque Serestum
ductores, tumultumque capit quo cetera Teucrum
concurrit legio, nec scuta aut spicula densi
deponunt. celso medius stans aggere fatur:
'ne qua meis esto dictis mora, Iuppiter hac stat, 565
neu quis ob inceptum subitum mihi segnior ito.
urbem hodie, causam belli, regna ipsa Latini,
ni frenum accipere et uicti parere fatentur,
eruam et aequa solo fumantia culmina ponam.

scilicet exspectem libeat dum proelia Turno 570
nostra pati rursusque uelit concurrere uictus?
hoc caput, o ciues, haec belli summa nefandi.
ferre faces propere foedusque reposcite flammis.
dixerat, atque animis pariter certantibus omnes
dant cuneum densaque ad muros mole feruntur; 575
scalae improviso subitusque apparuit ignis.
discurrunt alii ad portas primosque trucidant,
ferrum alii torquent et obumbrant aethera telis.
ipse inter primos dextram sub moenia tendit
Aeneas, magnaue incusat uoce Latinum 580
testaturque deos iterum se ad proelia cogi,
bis iam Italos hostis, haec altera foedera rumpi.
exoritur trepidos inter discordia ciuis:
urbem alii reserare iubent et pandere portas
Dardanidis ipsumque trahunt in moenia regem; 585
arma ferunt alii et pergunt defendere muros,
inclusas ut cum latebroso in pumice pastor
uestigauit apes fumoque impleuit amaro;
illae intus trepidae rerum per cerea castra
discurrunt magnisque acuunt stridoribus iras; 590
uoluitur ater odor tectis, tum murmure caeco
intus saxa sonant, uacuas it fumus ad auras.

Accidit haec fessis etiam fortuna Latinis,
quae totam luctu concussit funditus urbem.
regina ut tectis uenientem prospicit hostem, 595
incessi muros, ignis ad tecta uolare,
nusquam acies contra Rutulas, nulla agmina Turni,
infelix pugnae iuuenem in certamine credit
exstinctum et subito mentem turbata dolore
se causam clamat crimenque caputque malorum, 600
multaque per maestum demens effata furorem
purpureos moritura manu discindit amictus
et nodum informis leti trabe nectit ab alta.
quam cladem miserae postquam accepere Latinae,
filia prima manu flauos Lauinia crinis 605

et roseas laniata genas, tum cetera circum
turba furit, resonant late plangoribus aedes.
hinc totam infelix uulgatur fama per urbem:
demittunt mentes, it scissa ueste Latinus
coniugis attonitus fati urbisque ruina, 610
canitiem immundo perfusam puluere turpans.

Interea extremo bellator in aequore Turnus 614
palantis sequitur paucos iam segnior atque
iam minus atque minus successu laetus equorum.
attulit hunc illi caecis terroribus aura
commixtum clamorem, arrectasque impulit auris
confusae sonus urbis et inlaetabile murmur.
'ei mihi! quid tanto turbantur moenia luctu? 620
quisue ruit tantus diuersa clamor ab urbe?'
sic ait, adductisque amens subsistit habenis.
atque huic, in faciem soror ut conuersa Metisci
aurigae currumque et equos et lora regebat,
talibus occurrit dictis: 'hac, Turne, sequamur 625
Troiu genas, qua prima uiam uictoria pandit;
sunt alii qui tecta manu defendere possint.
ingruit Aeneas Italis et proelia miscet,
et nos saeua manu mittamus funera Teucris.
nec numero inferior pugnae neque honore recedes.' 630
Turnus ad haec:
'o soror, et dudum agnoui, cum prima per artem
foedera turbasti teque haec in bella dedisti,
et nunc nequiquam fallis dea. sed quis Olympo
demissam tantos uoluit te ferre labores? 635
an fratris miseri letum ut crudele uideres?
nam quid ago? aut quae iam spondet Fortuna salutem?
uidi oculos ante ipse meos me uoce uocantem
Muranum, quo non superat mihi carior alter,
oppetere ingentem atque ingenti uulnere uictum. 640
occidit infelix ne nostrum dedecus Vfers
aspiceret; Teucris potiuntur corpore et armis.
exscindine domos (id rebus defuit unum)

perpetiar, dextra nec Drancis dicta refellam?
terga dabo et Turnum fugientem haec terra uidebit? 645
usque adeone mori miserum est? uos o mihi, Manes,
este boni, quoniam superis auersa uoluntas.
sancta ad uos anima atque istius inscia culpa
descendam magnorum haud umquam indignus auorum.'

Vix ea fatus erat: medios uolat ecce per hostis 650
uectus equo spumante Saces, aduersa sagitta
saucius ora, ruitque implorans nomine Turnum:
'Turne, in te suprema salus, miserere tuorum.
fulminat Aeneas armis summasque minatur
deiecturum arces Italum excidioque daturum, 655
iamque faces ad tecta uolant. in te ora Latini,
in te oculos referunt; mussat rex ipse Latinus
quos generos uocet aut quae sese ad foedera flectat.
praeterea regina, tui fidissima, dextra
occidit ipsa sua lucemque exterrita fugit. 660
soli pro portis Messapus et acer Atinas
sustentant acies. circum hos utrimque phalanges
stant densae strictisque seges mucronibus horret
ferrea; tu currum deserto in gramine uersas.'
obstipuit uaria confusus imagine rerum 665
Turnus et obtutu tacito stetit; aestuat ingens
uno in corde pudor mixtoque insania luctu
et furiis agitatus amor et conscia uirtus.
ut primum discussae umbrae et lux reddita menti,
ardentis oculorum orbis ad moenia torsit 670
turbidus eque rotis magnam respexit ad urbem.

Ecce autem flammis inter tabulata uolutus
ad caelum undabat uertex turrimque tenebat,
turrim compactis trabibus quam eduxerat ipse
subdideratque rotas pontisque instrauerat altos. 675
'iam iam fata, soror, superant, absiste morari;
quo deus et quo dura uocat Fortuna sequamur.
stat conferre manum Aeneae, stat, quidquid acerbi est,

morte pati, neque me indecorem, germana, uidebis
amplius. hunc, oro, sine me furere ante furorem.’ 680
dixit, et e curru saltum dedit ocus aruis
perque hostis, per tela ruit maestamque sororem
deserit ac rapido cursu media agmina rumpit.
ac ueluti montis saxum de uertice praeceps
cum ruit auulsum uento, seu turbidus imber 685
proluit aut annis soluit sublapsa uetustas;
fertur in abruptum magno mons improbus actu
exultatque solo, siluas armenta uirosque
inuoluens secum: disiecta per agmina Turnus
sic urbis ruit ad muros, ubi plurima fuso 690
sanguine terra madet striduntque hastilibus auras,
significatque manu et magno simul incipit ore:
‘parcite iam, Rutuli, et uos tela inhibete, Latini.
quaecumque est fortuna, mea est; me uerius unum
pro uobis foedus luere et decernere ferro.’ 695
discessere omnes medii spatiumque dedere.

At pater Aeneas audito nomine Turni
deserit et muros et summas deserit arces
praecipitatque moras omnis, opera omnia rumpit
laetitia exsultans horrendumque intonat armis: 700
quantus Athos aut quantus Eryx aut ipse coruscis
cum fremit ilicibus quantus gaudetque niuali
uertice se attollens pater Appenninus ad auras.
iam uero et Rutuli certatim et Troes et omnes
conuertere oculos Itali, quique alta tenebant 705
moenia quique imos pulsabant ariete muros,
armaque deposuere umeris. stupet ipse Latinus
ingentis, genitos diuersis partibus orbis,
inter se coiisse uiros et cernere ferro.
atque illi, ut uacuo patuerunt aequore campi, 710
procursu rapido coniectis eminus hastis
inuadunt Martem clipeis atque aere sonoro.
dat gemitum tellus; tum crebros ensibus ictus
congeminant, fors et uirtus miscetur in unum.

ac uelut ingenti Sila summoque Taburno 715
cum duo conuersis inimica in proelia tauri
frontibus incurrunt, pauidi cessere magistri,
stat pecus omne metu mutum, mussantque iuuencae
quis nemori imperitet, quem tota armenta sequantur;
illi inter sese multa uis uulnera miscent 720
cornuaque obnixa infigunt et sanguine largo
colla armosque lauant, gemitu nemus omne remugit:
non aliter Tros Aeneas et Daunius heros
concurrunt clipeis, ingens fragor aethera complet.
Iuppiter ipse duas aequato examine lances 725
sustinet et fata imponit diuersa duorum,
quem damnet labor et quo uergat pondere letum.

Emicat hic impune putans et corpore toto
alte sublatum consurgit Turnus in ensem
et ferit; exclamant Troes trepidique Latini, 730
arrectaeque amborum acies. at perfidus ensis
frangitur in medioque ardentem deserit ictu,
ni fuga subsidio subeat. fugit oclor Euro
ut capulum ignotum dextramque aspexit inermem.
fama est praecipitem, cum prima in proelia iunctos 735
conscendebat equos, patrio mucrone relicto,
dum trepidat, ferrum aurigae rapuisse Metisci;
idque diu, dum terga dabant palantia Teucris,
suffecit; postquam arma dei ad Volcania uentum est,
mortalis mucro glacies ceu futilis ictu 740
dissiluit, fulua resplendent fragmina harena.
ergo amens diuersa fuga petit aequora Turnus
et nunc huc, inde huc incertos implicat orbis;
undique enim densa Teucris inclusere corona
atque hinc uasta palus, hinc ardua moenia cingunt. 745

Nec minus Aeneas, quamquam tardata sagitta
interdum genua impediunt cursumque recusant,
insequitur trepidique pedem pede feruidus urget:
inclusum ueluti si quando flumine nactus

ceruum aut puniceae saeptum formidine pennae 750
uenator cursu canis et latratibus instat;
ille autem insidiis et ripa territus alta
mille fugit refugitque uias, at uiuidus Vmber
haeret hians, iam iamque tenet similisque tenenti
increpuit malis morsuque elusus inani est; 755
tum uero exoritur clamor ripaeque lacusque
responsant circa et caelum tonat omne tumultu.
ille simul fugiens Rutulos simul increpat omnis
nomine quemque uocans notumque efflagitat ensem.
Aeneas mortem contra praesensque minatur 760
exitium, si quisquam adeat, terretque trementis
excisurum urbem minitans et saucius instat.
quinque orbis explent cursu totidemque retexunt
huc illuc; neque enim leuia aut ludicra petuntur
praemia, sed Turni de uita et sanguine certant. 765

Forte sacer Fauno foliis oleaster amaris
hic steterat, nautis olim uenerabile lignum,
seruati ex undis ubi figere dona solebant
Laurenti diuo et uotas suspendere uestis;
sed stirpem Teucris nullo discrimine sacrum 770
sustulerant, puro ut possent concurrere campo.
hic hasta Aeneae stabat, huc impetus illam
detulerat fixam et lenta radice tenebat.
incubuit uoluitque manu conuellere ferrum
Dardanides, teloque sequi quem prendere cursu 775
non poterat. tum uero amens formidine Turnus
‘Faune, precor, miserere’ inquit ‘tuque optima ferrum
Terra tene, colui uestros si semper honores,
quos contra Aeneadae bello fecere profanos.’
dixit, opemque dei non cassa in uota uocauit. 780
namque diu luctans lentoque in stirpe moratus
uiribus haud ullis ualuit discludere morsus
roboris Aeneas. dum nititur acer et instat,
rursus in aurigae faciem mutata Metisci
procurrit fratrique ensem dea Daunian reddidit. 785

quod Venus audaci nymphae indignata licere
accessit telumque alta ab radice reuellit.
olli sublimes armis animisque relecti,
hic gladio fidens, hic acer et arduus hasta,
adsistunt contra certamina Martis anhelī. 790

Iunonem interea rex omnipotentis Olympi
adloquitur fulua pugnās de nube tuentem:
‘quae iam finis erit, coniunx? quid denique restat?
indigetem Aenean scis ipsa et scire fateris
deberi caelo fatisque ad sidera tolli. 795
quid struis? aut qua spe gelidis in nubibus haeres?
mortalin decuit uiolari uulnere diuum?
aut ensem (quid enim sine te Iuturna ualeret?)
ereptum reddi Turno et uim crescere uictis?
desine iam tandem precibusque inflectere nostris, 800
ne te tantus edit tacitam dolor et mihi curae
saepe tuo dulci tristes ex ore recursent.
uentum ad supremum est. terris agitare uel undis
Troianos potuisti, infandum accendere bellum,
deformare domum et luctu miscere hymenaeos: 805
ulterius temptare ueto.’ sic Iuppiter orsus;
sic dea summisso contra Saturnia uultu:
‘ista quidem quia nota mihi tua, magne, uoluntas,
Iuppiter, et Turnum et terras inuita reliqui;
nec tu me aëria solam nunc sede uideres 810
digna indigna pati, sed flammis cincta sub ipsa
starem acie traheremque inimica in proelia Teucros.
Iuturnam misero (fateor) succurrere fratri
suasi et pro uita maiora audere probaui,
non ut tela tamen, non ut contenderet arcum; 815
adiuro Stygii caput implacabile fontis,
una superstitio superis quae reddita diuis.
et nunc cedo equidem pugnāsque exosa relinquo.
illud te, nulla fati quod lege tenetur,
pro Latio obtestor, pro maiestate tuorum: 820
cum iam conubiis pacem felicibus (esto)

component, cum iam leges et foedera iungent,
ne uetus indigenas nomen mutare Latinos
neu Troas fieri iubeas Teucrosque uocari
aut uocem mutare uiros aut uertere uestem. 825
sit Latium, sint Albani per saecula reges,
sit Romana potens Itala uirtute propago:
occidit, occideritque sinas cum nomine Troia.’
olli subridens hominum rerumque repertor:
‘es germana Iouis Saturnique altera proles, 830
irarum tantos uoluis sub pectore fluctus.
uerum age et inceptum frustra summitte furorem:
do quod uis, et me uictusque uolensque remitto.
sermonem Ausonii patrium moresque tenebunt,
utque est nomen erit; commixti corpore tantum 835
subsident Teucri. morem ritusque sacrorum
adiciam faciamque omnis uno ore Latinos.
hinc genus Ausonio mixtum quod sanguine surget,
supra homines, supra ire deos pietate uidebis,
nec gens ulla tuos aequae celebrabit honores.’ 840
adnuat his Iuno et mentem laetata retorsit;
interea excedit caelo nubemque relinquit.

His actis aliud genitor secum ipse uolutat
Iuturnamque parat fratris dimittere ab armis.
dicuntur geminae pestes cognomine Dirae, 845
quas et Tartaream Nox intempesta Megaeram
uno eodemque tulit partu, paribusque reuinxit
serpentum spiris uentosasque addidit alas.
hae Iouis ad solium saeuique in limine regis
apparent acuuntque metum mortalibus aegris, 850
si quando letum horrificum morbosque deum rex
molitur, meritas aut bello territat urbes.
harum unam celerem demisit ab aethere summo
Iuppiter inque omen Iuturnae occurrere iussit:
illa uolat celerique ad terram turbine fertur. 855
non secus ac neruo per nubem impulsa sagitta,
armatam saeui Parthus quam felle uenenii,

Parthus siue Cydon, telum immedicabile, torsit,
stridens et celeris incognita transilit umbras:
talis se sata Nocte tulit terrasque petiuit. 860
postquam acies uidet Iliacas atque agmina Turni,
alitis in paruae subitam collecta figuram,
quae quondam in bustis aut culminibus desertis
nocte sedens serum canit importuna per umbras —
hanc uersa in faciem Turni se pestis ob ora 865
fertque refertque sonans clipeumque euerberat alis.
illi membra nouus soluit formidine torpor,
arrectaeque horrore comae et uox faucibus haesit.

At procul ut Dirae stridorem agnouit et alas,
infelix crinis scindit Iuturna solutos 870
unguibus ora soror foedans et pectora pugnis:
‘quid nunc te tua, Turne, potest germana iuuare?
aut quid iam durae superat mihi? qua tibi lucem
arte morer? talin possum me opponere monstro?
iam iam linquo acies. ne me terrete timentem, 875
obscae uolucres: alarum uerbera nosco
letalemque sonum, nec fallunt iussa superba
magnanimi Iouis. haec pro uirginitate reponit?
quo uitam dedit aeternam? cur mortis adempta est
condicio? possem tantos finire dolores 880
nunc certe, et misero fratri comes ire per umbras!
immortalis ego? aut quicquam mihi dulce meorum
te sine, frater, erit? o quae satis ima dehiscat
terra mihi, Manisque deam demittat ad imos?’
tantum effata caput glauco contextit amictu 885
multa gemens et se fluuio dea condidit alto.

Aeneas instat contra telumque coruscat
ingens arboreum, et saeuo sic pectore fatur:
‘quae nunc deinde mora est? aut quid iam, Turne, retractas?
non cursu, saeuis certandum est comminus armis. 890
uerte omnis tete in facies et contrahe quidquid
siue animis siue arte uales; opta ardua pennis

astra sequi clausumque caua te condere terra.’
ille caput quassans: ‘non me tua feruida terrent
dicta, ferox; di me terrent et Iuppiter hostis.’ 895
nec plura effatus saxum circumspicit ingens,
saxum antiquum ingens, campo quod forte iacebat,
limes agro positus litem ut discerneret aruis.
uix illum lecti bis sex ceruice subirent,
qualia nunc hominum producit corpora tellus; 900
ille manu raptum trepida torquebat in hostem
altior insurgens et cursu concitus heros.
sed neque currentem se nec cognoscit euntem
tollentemue manu saxumue immane mouentem;
genua labant, gelidus concreuit frigore sanguis. 905
tum lapis ipse uiri uacuum per inane uolutus
nec spatium euasit totum neque pertulit ictum.
ac uelut in somnis, oculos ubi languida pressit
nocte quies, nequiquam auidos extendere cursus
uelle uidemur et in mediis conatibus aegri 910
succidimus; non lingua ualet, non corpore notae
sufficiunt uires nec uox aut uerba sequuntur:
sic Turno, quacumque uiam uirtute petiuit,
successum dea dira negat. tum pectore sensus
uertuntur uarii; Rutulos aspectat et urbem 915
cunctaturque metu letumque instare tremescit,
nec quo se eripiat, nec qua ui tendat in hostem,
nec currus usquam uidet aurigamue sororem.

Cunctanti telum Aeneas fatale coruscat,
sortitus fortunam oculis, et corpore toto 920
eminus intorquet. murali concita numquam
tormento sic saxa fremunt nec fulmine tanti
dissultant crepitus. uolat atri turbinis instar
exitium dirum hasta ferens orasque recludit
loricae et clipei extremos septemplicis orbis; 925
per medium stridens transit femur. incidit ictus
ingens ad terram duplicato poplite Turnus.
consurgunt gemitu Rutuli totusque remugit

mons circum et uocem late nemora alta remittunt.
ille humilis supplex oculos dextramque precantem 930
protendens 'equidem merui nec deprecor' inquit;
'utere sorte tua. miseri te si qua parentis
tangere cura potest, oro (fuit et tibi talis Anchises genitor) Dauni miserere senectae
et me, seu corpus spoliatum lumine mauis, 935
redde meis. uicisti et uictum tendere palmas
Ausonii uidere; tua est Lauinia coniunx,
ulterius ne tende odiis.' stetit acer in armis
Aeneas uoluens oculos dextramque repressit;
et iam iamque magis cunctantem flectere sermo 940
coeperat, infelix umero cum apparuit alto
balteus et notis fulserunt cingula bullis
Pallantis pueri, uictum quem uulnere Turnus
strauerat atque umeris inimicum insigne gerebat.
ille, oculis postquam saeui monimenta doloris 945
exuuiasque hausit, furiis accensus et ira terribilis: 'tunc hinc spoliis indute meorum
eripiare mihi? Pallas te hoc uulnere, Pallas
immolat et poenam scelerato ex sanguine sumit.'
hoc dicens ferrum aduerso sub pectore condit 950
feruidus; ast illi soluuntur frigore membra
uitaque cum gemitu fugit indignata sub umbras.

The Dual Text

Ruins at ancient Megara — according to tradition, Virgil travelled to Greece in 19 BC. After meeting Augustus in Athens and deciding to return home, Virgil caught a fever while visiting a town near Megara.

'Dido Building Carthage' by J. M. W Turner, 1815

LIBER I

BOOK I.

Arma virumque cano, Troiae qui primus ab oris
I sing of arms, I sing of him, who from the Trojan land
Italiam, fato profugus, Laviniaque venit
Thrust forth by Fate, to Italy and that Lavinian strand
litora, multum ille et terris iactatus et alto
First came: all tost about was he on earth and on the deep
vi superum saevae memorem Iunonis ob iram;
By heavenly might for Juno's wrath, that had no mind to sleep:
multa quoque et bello passus, dum conderet urbem, 5
And plenteous war he underwent ere he his town might frame
inferretque deos Latio, genus unde Latinum,
And set his Gods in Latian earth, whence is the Latin name,
Albanique patres, atque altae moenia Romae.
And father-folk of Alba-town, and walls of mighty Rome.
Musa, mihi causas memora, quo numine laeso,
Say, Muse, what wound of godhead was whereby all this must come,
quidve dolens, regina deum tot volvere casus
How grieving, she, the Queen of Gods, a man so pious drave
insignem pietate virum, tot adire labores 10
To win such toil, to welter on through such a troublous wave:
impulerit. Tantaene animis caelestibus irae?
— Can anger in immortal minds abide so fierce and fell?
Urbs antiqua fuit, Tyrii tenuere coloni,
There was a city of old time where Tyrian folk did dwell,
Karthago, Italiam contra Tiberinaque longe
Called Carthage, facing far away the shores of Italy
ostia, dives opum studiisque asperrima belli;
And Tiber-mouth; fulfilled of wealth and fierce in arms was she,
quam Iuno fertur terris magis omnibus unam 15
And men say Juno loved her well o'er every other land,
posthabita coluisse Samo; hic illius arma,
Yea e'en o'er Samos: there were stored the weapons of her hand,

hic currus fuit; hoc regnum dea gentibus esse,
And there her chariot: even then she cherished the intent
si qua fata sinant, iam tum tenditque fovetque.
To make her Lady of all Lands, if Fate might so be bent;
Progeniem sed enim Troiano a sanguine duci
Yet had she heard how such a stem from Trojan blood should grow,
audierat, Tyrias olim quae verteret arces; 20
As, blooming fair, the Tyrian towers should one day overthrow,
hinc populum late regem belloque superbum
That thence a folk, kings far and wide, most noble lords of fight,
venturum excidio Libyae: sic volvere Parcas.
Should come for bane of Libyan land: such web the Parcae dight.
Id metuens, veterisque memor Saturnia belli,
The Seed of Saturn, fearing this, and mindful how she erst
prima quod ad Troiam pro caris gesserat Argis —
For her beloved Argive walls by Troy the battle nursed —
necdum etiam causae irarum saevique dolores 25
— Nay neither had the cause of wrath nor all those hurts of old
exciderant animo: manet alta mente repostum
Failed from her mind: her inmost heart still sorely did enfold
iudicium Paridis spretaeque iniuria formae,
That grief of body set at nought in Paris' doomful deed,
et genus invisum, et rapti Ganymedis honores.
The hated race, and honour shed on heaven-rapt Ganymede —
His accensa super, iactatos aequore toto
So set on fire, that Trojan band o'er all the ocean tossed,
Troas, reliquias Danaum atque immitis Achilli, 30
Those gleanings from Achilles' rage, those few the Greeks had lost,
arcebat longe Latio, multosque per annos
She drave far off the Latin Land: for many a year they stray
errabant, acti fati, maria omnia circum.
Such wise as Fate would drive them on by every watery way.
Tantae molis erat Romanam condere gentem!
— Lo, what there was to heave aloft in fashioning of Rome!
Vix e conspectu Siculae telluris in altum
Now out of sight of Sicily the Trojans scarce were come
vela dabant laeti, et spumas salis aere ruebant, 35

And merry spread their sails abroad and clave the sea with brass,
 cum Iuno, aeternum servans sub pectore volnus,
 When Juno's heart, who nursed the wound that never thence would pass,
 haec secum: 'Mene incepto desistere victam,
 Spake out: "And must I, vanquished, leave the deed I have begun,
 nec posse Italia Teucrorum avertere regem?
 Nor save the Italian realm a king who comes of Teucer's son?
 Quippe vetor fatis. Pallasne exurere classem
 The Fates forbid it me forsooth? And Pallas, might not she Argivom atque ipsos potuit submergere ponto, 40
 Burn up the Argive fleet and sink the Argives in the sea
 unius ob noxam et furias Aiakis Oilei?
 For Oileus' only fault and fury that he wrought?
 Ipsa, Iovis rapidum iaculata e nubibus ignem,
 She hurled the eager fire of Jove from cloudy dwelling caught,
 disiecitque rates evertitque aequora ventis,
 And rent the ships and with the wind the heaped-up waters drew,
 illum expirantem transfixo pectore flammas
 And him a-dying, and all his breast by wildfire smitten through,
 turbine corripuit scopuloque infixit acuto. 45
 The whirl of waters swept away on spiky crag to bide.
 Ast ego, quae divom incedo regina, Iovisque
 While I, who go forth Queen of Gods, the very Highest's bride
 et soror et coniunx, una cum gente tot annos
 And sister, must I wage a war for all these many years
 bella gero! Et quisquam numen Iunonis adoret
 With one lone race? What! is there left a soul that Juno fears praeterea, aut supplex aris imponet honorem?"
 Henceforth? or will one suppliant hand gifts on mine altar lay?"
 Talia flammato secum dea corde volutans 50
 So brooding in her fiery heart the Goddess went her way
 nimborum in patriam, loca feta furentibus austris,
 Unto the fatherland of storm, full fruitful of the gale,
 Aeoliam venit. Hic vasto rex Aeolus antro
 Æolia hight, where Æolus is king of all avail,
 luctantes ventos tempestatesque sonoras

And far adown a cavern vast the bickering of the winds
imperio premit ac vinclis et carcere frenat.

And roaring tempests of the world with bolt and fetter binds:

Illi indignantes magno cum murmure montis 55

They set the mountains murmuring much, a-growling angrily
circum claustra fremunt; celsa sedet Aeolus arce

About their bars, while Æolus sits in his burg on high,
sceptrā tenens, mollitque animos et temperat iras.

And, sceptre-holding, softeneth them, and strait their wrath doth keep:

Ni faciat, maria ac terras caelumque profundum

Yea but for that the earth and sea, and vault of heaven the deep,
quippe ferant rapidi secum verrantque per auras.

They eager-swift would roll away and sweep adown of space:

Sed pater omnipotens speluncis abdidit atris, 60

For fear whereof the Father high in dark and hollow place

hoc metuens, molemque et montis insuper altos

Hath hidden them, and high above a world of mountains thrown
imposuit, regemque dedit, qui foedere certo

And given them therewithal a king, who, taught by law well known,
et premere et laxas sciret dare iussus habenas.

Now draweth, and now casteth loose the reins that hold them in:

Ad quem tum Iuno supplex his vocibus usa est:

To whom did suppliant Juno now in e'en such words begin:

‘Aeole, namque tibi divom pater atque hominum rex 65

“The Father of the Gods and men hath given thee might enow,
et mulcere dedit fluctus et tollere vento,

O Æolus, to smooth the sea, and make the storm-wind blow.

gens inimica mihi Tyrrhenum navigat aequor,

Hearken! a folk, my very foes, saileth the Tyrrhene main

Ilium in Italiam portans victosque Penates:

Bearing their Troy to Italy, and Gods that were but vain:

incute vim ventis submersasque obrue puppes,

Set on thy winds, and overwhelm their sunken ships at sea,

aut age diversos et disiice corpora ponto. 70

Or prithee scattered cast them forth, things drowned diversedly.

Sunt mihi bis septem praestanti corpore nymphae,

Twice seven nymphs are in my house of body passing fair:
quarum quae forma pulcherrima Deïopea,
Of whom indeed Deïopea is fairest fashioned there.
conubio iungam stabili propriamque dicabo,
I give her thee in wedlock sure, and call her all thine own
omnis ut tecum meritis pro talibus annos
To wear away the years with thee, for thy deserving shown
exigat, et pulchra faciat te prole parentem.’ 75
To me this day; of offspring fair she too shall make thee sire.”
Aeolus haec contra: ‘Tuus, O regina, quid optes
To whom spake Æolus: “O Queen, to search out thy desire
explorare labor; mihi iussa capessere fas est.
Is all thou needest toil herein; from me the deed should wend.
Tu mihi, quodcumque hoc regni, tu sceptrâ Iovemque Thou mak’st my realm; the sway of all, and Jove thou mak’st my friend,
concilias, tu das epulis accumbere divom,
Thou givest me to lie with Gods when heavenly feast is dight,
nimborumque facis tempestatumque potentem.’ 80
And o’er the tempest and the cloud thou makest me of might.”
Haec ubi dicta, cavum conversa cuspide montem
Therewith against the hollow hill he turned him spear in hand
impulit in latus: ac venti, velut agmine facto,
And hurled it on the flank thereof, and as an ordered band
qua data porta, ruunt et terras turbine perfant.
By whatso door the winds rush out o’er earth in whirling blast,
Incubuerunt mari, totumque a sedibus imis
And driving down upon the sea its lowest deeps upcast.
una Eurusque Notusque ruunt creberque procellis 85
The East, the West together there, the Afric, that doth hold
Africus, et vastos volvunt ad litora fluctus.
A heart fulfilled of stormy rain, huge billows shoreward rolled.
Insequitur clamorque virum stridorque rudentum.
Therewith came clamour of the men and whistling through the shrouds
Eripiunt subito nubes caelumque diemque
And heaven and day all suddenly were swallowed by the clouds

Teucrorum ex oculis; ponto nox incubat atra.
Away from eyes of Teucrian men; night on the ocean lies,
Intonuere poli, et crebris micat ignibus aether, 90
Pole thunders unto pole, and still with wildfire glare the skies,
praesentemque viris intentant omnia mortem.
And all things hold the face of death before the seamen's eyes.
Extemplo Aeneae solvuntur frigore membra:
Now therewithal Æneas' limbs grew weak with chilly dread,
ingemit, et duplicis tendens ad sidera palmas
He groaned, and lifting both his palms aloft to heaven, he said:
talìa voce refert: 'O terque quaterque beati,
"O thrice and four times happy ye, that had the fate to fall
quis ante ora patrum Troiae sub moenibus altis 95
Before your fathers' faces there by Troy's beloved wall!
contigit oppetere! O Danaum fortissime gentis
Tydides, thou of Danaan folk the mightiest under shield,
Tydide! Mene Iliacis occumbere campis
Why might I never lay me down upon the Ilian field,
non potuisse, tuaque animam hanc effundere dextra,
Why was my soul forbid release at thy most mighty hand,
saevus ubi Aeacidae telo iacet Hector, ubi ingens
Where eager Hector stooped and lay before Achilles' wand,
Sarpedon, ubi tot Simois correpta sub undis 100
Where huge Sarpedon fell asleep, where Simois rolls along
scuta virum galeasque et fortia corpora volvit?'
The shields of men, and helms of men, and bodies of the strong?"
Talia iactanti stridens Aquilone procella
Thus as he cried the whistling North fell on with sudden gale
velum adversa ferit, fluctusque ad sidera tollit.
And drave the seas up toward the stars, and smote aback the sail;
Franguntur remi; tum prora avertit, et undis
Then break the oars, the bows fall off, and beam on in the trough
dat latus; insequitur cumulo praeeruptus aquae mons. 105
She lieth, and the sea comes on a mountain huge and rough.
Hi summo in flucta pendent; his unda dehiscens
These hang upon the topmost wave, and those may well discern
terram inter fluctus aperit; furit aestus harenis.

The sea's ground mid the gaping whirl: with sand the surges churn.

Tris Notus abreptas in saxa latentia torquet —

Three keels the South wind cast away on hidden reefs that lie
saxa vocant Itali mediis quae in fluctibus aras —

Midmost the sea, the Altars called by men of Italy,
dorsum immane mari summo; tris Euris ab alto 110

A huge back thrusting through the tide: three others from the deep
in brevia et Syrtis urguet, miserabile visu,

The East toward straits, and swallowing sands did miserably sweep,
inliduntque vadis atque aggere cingit harenae.

And dashed them on the shoals, and heaped the sand around in ring:

Unam, quae Lycios fidumque vehebat Oronten,

And one, a keel the Lycians manned, with him, the trusty King
ipsius ante oculos ingens a vertice pontus

Orontes, in Æneas' sight a toppling wave o'erhung,

in puppim ferit: excutitur pronusque magister 115

And smote the poop, and headlong rolled, adown the helmsman flung;

volvitur in caput; ast illam ter fluctus ibidem

Then thrice about the driving flood hath hurled her as she lay,
torquet agens circum, et rapidus vorat aequore vortex.

The hurrying eddy swept above and swallowed her from day:

Adparent rari nantes in gurgite vasto,

And lo! things swimming here and there, scant in the unmeasured seas,

arma virum, tabulaeque, et Troia gaza per undas.

The arms of men, and painted boards, and Trojan treasures.

Iam validam Ilionei navem, iam fortis Achatæ, 120

And now Ilioneus' stout ship, her that Achates leal

et qua vectus Abas, et qua grandaevus Aletes,

And Abas ferried o'er the main, and old Aletes' keel

vicit hiems; laxis laterum compagibus omnes

The storm hath overcome; and all must drink the baneful stream

accipiunt inimicum imbrem, rimisque fatiscunt.

Through opening leaky sides of them that gape at every seam.

Interea magno misceri murmure pontum,

But meanwhile Neptune, sorely moved, hath felt the storm let go,

emissamque hiemem sensit Neptunus, et imis 125

And all the turmoil of the main with murmur great enow;
stagna refusa vadis, graviter commotus; et alto
The deep upheaved from all abodes the lowest that there be:
prospiciens, summa placidum caput extulit unda.

So forth he put his placid face o'er topmost of the sea,
Disiectam Aeneae, toto videt aequore classem,
And there he saw Æneas' ships o'er all the main besprent,
fluctibus oppressos Troas caelique ruina,
The Trojans beaten by the flood and ruin from heaven sent.

nec latuere doli fratrem Iunonis et irae. 130

But Juno's guile and wrathful heart her brother knew full well:
Eurum ad se Zephyrumque vocat, dehinc talia fatur:
So East and West he called to him, and spake such words to tell:
'Tantane vos generis tenuit fiducia vestri?

"What mighty pride of race of yours hath hold upon your minds,
Iam caelum terramque meo sine numine, venti,
That earth and sea ye turmoil so without my will, O winds;
miscere, et tantas audetis tollere moles?

That such upheaval and so great ye dare without my will?

Quos ego — sed motos praestat componere fluctus. 135

Whom I — But first it comes to hand the troubled flood to still:
Post mihi non simili poena commissa luetis.

For such-like fault henceforward though with nought so light ye pay.

Maturate fugam, regique haec dicite vestro:

Go get you gone, and look to it this to your king to say:

non illi imperium pelagi saevumque tridentem,

That ocean's realm and three-tined spear of dread are given by Fate

sed mihi sorte datum. Tenet ille immania saxa,

Not unto him but unto me? he holds the cliffs o'ergreat,

vestras, Eure, domos; illa se iactet in aula 140

Thine houses, Eurus; in that hall I bid him then be bold,

Aeolus, et clauso ventorum carcere regnet.'

Thine Æolus, and lord it o'er his winds in barred hold."

Sic ait, et dicto citius tumida aequora placat,

So saying and swifter than his word he layed the troubled main,
collectasque fugat nubes, solemque reducit.

And put to flight the gathered clouds, and brought the sun again;
 Cymothoe simul et Triton adnexus acuto
 And with him Triton fell to work, and fair Cymothoë, detrudent navis scopulo; levat ipse tridenti; 145
 And thrust the ships from spiky rocks; with triple spear wrought he
 et vastas aperit syrtis, et temperat aequor,
 To lift, and opened swallowing sands, and laid the waves alow.
 atque rotis summas levibus perlabitur undas.
 Then on light wheels o'er ocean's face soft gliding did he go.
 Ac veluti magno in populo cum saepe coorta est
 And, like as mid a people great full often will arise
 seditio, saevitque animis ignobile volgus,
 Huge riot, and all the low-born herd to utter anger flies,
 iamque faces et saxa volant — furor arma ministrat; 150
 And sticks and stones are in the air, and fury arms doth find:
 tum, pietate gravem ac meritis si forte virum quem
 Then, setting eyes perchance on one of weight for noble mind,
 conspexere, silent, arrectisque auribus adstant;
 And noble deeds, they hush them then and stand with pricked-up ears,
 ille regit dictis animos, et pectora mulcet, —
 And he with words becomes their lord, and smooth their anger wears;
 sic cunctus pelagi cecidit fragor, aequora postquam
 — In such wise fell all clash of sea when that sea-father rose,
 prospiciens genitor caeloque invectus aperto 155
 And looked abroad: who turned his steeds, and giving rein to those,
 flectit equos, curruque volans dat lora secundo.
 Flew forth in happy-gliding car through heaven's all-open way.
 Defessi Aeneadae, quae proxima litora, cursu
 Æneas' sore forewearied host the shores that nearest lay
 contendunt petere, et Libyae vertuntur ad oras.
 Stretch out for o'er the sea, and turn to Libyan land this while.
 Est in secessu longo locus: insula portum
 There goes a long firth of the sea, made haven by an isle,
 efficit obiectu laterum, quibus omnis ab alto 160
 Against whose sides thrust out abroad each wave the main doth send

frangitur inque sinus scindit sese unda reductos.

Is broken, and must cleave itself through hollow bights to wend:

Hinc atque hinc vastae rupes geminique minantur

Huge rocks on this hand and on that, twin horns of cliff, cast dread
in caelum scopuli, quorum sub vertice late

On very heaven; and far and wide beneath each mighty head

aequora tuta silent; tum silvis scaena coruscis

Hushed are the harmless waters; lo, the flickering wood above
desuper horrentique atrum nemus imminet umbra. 165

And wavering shadow cast adown by darksome hanging grove:

Fronte sub adversa scopulis pendentibus antrum,

In face hereof a cave there is of rocks o'erhung, made meet
intus aquae dulces vivoque sedilia saxo,

With benches of the living stone and springs of water sweet,
nympharum domus: hic fessas non vincula navis

The house of Nymphs: a-riding there may way-worn ships be bold
ulla tenent, unco non alligat ancora morsu.

To lie without the hawser's strain or anchor's hookèd hold.

Huc septem Aeneas collectis navibus omni 170

That bight with seven of all his tale of ships Æneas gained,
ex numero subit; ac magno telluris amore

And there, by mighty love of land the Trojans sore constrained,
egressi optata potiuntur Troes harena,

Leap off-board straight, and gain the gift of that so longed-for sand,
et sale tabentis artus in litore ponunt.

And lay their limbs with salt sea fouled adown upon the strand:

Ac primum silici scintillam excudit Achates,

And first Achates smote alive the spark from out the flint,
succepitque ignem foliis, atque arida circum 175

And caught the fire in tinder-leaves, and never gift did stint
nutrimenta dedit, rapuitque in fomite flammam.

Of feeding dry; and flame enow in kindled stuff he woke;

Tum Cererem corruptam undis Cerealiaque arma

Then Ceres' body spoilt with sea, and Ceres' arms they took,
expediunt fessi rerum, frugesque receptas

And sped the matter spent with toil, and fruit of furrows found
et torrere parant flammis et frangere saxo.

They set about to parch with fire and 'twixt of stones to pound.

Aeneas scopulum interea conscendit, et omnem 180

Meanwhile Æneas scaled the cliff and far and wide he swept

prospectum late pelago petit, Anthea si quem

The main, if anywhere perchance the sea his Antheus kept,

iactatum vento videat Phrygiasque biremis,

Tossed by the wind, if he might see the two-banked Phrygians row;

aut Capyn, aut celsis in puppibus arma Caici.

If Capys, or Caïcus' arms on lofty deck might show.

Navem in conspectu nullam, tris litore cervos

Nor any ship there was in sight, but on the strand he saw

prospicit errantis; hos tota armenta sequuntur 185

Three stags a-wandering at their will, and after them they draw

a tergo, et longum per vallis pascitur agmen.

The whole herd following down the dales long strung out as they feed:

Constitit hic, arcumque manu celerisque sagittas

So still he stood, and caught in hand his bow and shafts of speed,

corripuit, fidus quae tela gerebat Achates;

The weapons that Achates staunch was bearing then and oft;

ductoresque ipsos primum, capita alta ferentis

And first the very lords of those, that bore their heads aloft

cornibus arboreis, sternit, tum volgus, et omnem 190

With branching horns, he felled, and then the common sort, and so

miscet agens telis nemora inter frondea turbam;

Their army drave he with his darts through leafy woods to go:

nec prius absistit, quam septem ingentia victor

Nor held his hand till on the earth were seven great bodies strown,

corpora fundat humi, et numerum cum navibus aequet.

And each of all his ships might have one head of deer her own.

Hinc portum petit, et socios partitur in omnes.

Thence to the haven gat he gone with all his folk to share,

Vina bonus quae deinde cadis onerarat Acestes 195

And that good wine which erst the casks Acestes made to bear,

litore Trinacrio dederatque abeuntibus heros,

And gave them as they went away on that Trinacrian beach,

dividit, et dictis maerentia pectora mulcet:

He shared about; then fell to soothe their grieving hearts with speech:
 'O socii — neque enim ignari sumus ante malorum —
 "O fellows, we are used ere now by evil ways to wend;
 O passi graviora, dabit deus his quoque finem.
 O ye who erst bore heavier loads, this too the Gods shall end.
 Vos et Scyllaeam rabiem penitusque sonantis 200
 Ye, ye have drawn nigh Scylla's rage and rocks that inly roar,
 accestis scopulos, vos et Cyclopea saxa
 And run the risk of storm of stones upon the Cyclops' shore:
 experti: revocate animos, maestumque timorem
 Come, call aback your ancient hearts and put your fears away!
 mittite: forsan et haec olim meminisse iuvabit.
 This too shall be for joy to you remembered on a day.
 Per varios casus, per tot discrimina rerum
 Through diverse haps, through many risks wherewith our way is strown,
 tendimus in Latium; sedes ubi fata quietas 205
 We get us on to Latium, the land the Fates have shown
 ostendunt; illic fas regna resurgere Troiae.
 To be for peaceful seats for us: there may we raise up Troy.
 Durate, et vosmet rebus servate secundis.'
 Abide, endure, and keep yourselves for coming days of joy."
 Talia voce refert, curisque ingentibus aeger
 So spake his voice: but his sick heart did mighty trouble rack,
 spem voltu simulat, premit altum corde dolorem.
 As, glad of countenance, he thrust the heavy anguish back.
 Illi se praedae accingunt, dapibusque futuris; 210
 But they fall to upon the prey, and feast that was to dight,
 tergora deripiunt costis et viscera nudant;
 And flay the hide from off the ribs, and bare the flesh to sight.
 pars in frusta secant veribusque trementia figunt;
 Some cut it quivering into steaks which on the spits they run,
 litore aena locant alii, flammasque ministrant.
 Some feed the fire upon the shore, and set the brass thereon.
 Tum victu revocant vires, fusique per herbam
 And so meat bringeth might again, and on the grass thereby,
 implentur veteris Bacchi pinguisque ferinae. 215

Fulfilled with fat of forest deer and ancient wine, they lie.
 Postquam exempta fames epulis mensaeque remotae,
 But when all hunger was appeased and tables set aside,
 amissos longo socios sermone requirunt,
 Of missing fellows how they fared the talk did long abide;
 spemque metumque inter dubii, seu vivere credant,
 Whom, weighing hope and weighing fear, either alive they trow,
 sive extrema pati nec iam exaudire vocatos.
 Or that the last and worst has come, that called they hear not now.
 Praecipue pius Aeneas nunc acris Oronti, 220
 And chief of all the pious King Æneas moaned the pass
 nunc Amyci casum gemit et crudelia secum
 Of brisk Orontes, Amycus, and cruel fate that was
 fata Lyci, fortemque Gyan, fortemque Cloanthum.
 Of Lycus, and of Bias strong, and strong Cloanthus gone.
 Et iam finis erat, cum Iuppiter aethere summo
 But now an end of all there was, when Jove a-looking down
 despiciens mare velivolum terrasque iacentis
 From highest lift on sail-skimmed sea, and lands that round it lie,
 litoraue et latos populos, sic vertice caeli 225
 And shores and many folk about, in topmost burg of sky
 constitit, et Libyae defixit lumina regnis.
 Stood still, and fixed the eyes of God on Libya's realm at last:
 Atque illum talis iactantem pectore curas
 To whom, as through his breast and mind such cares of godhead passed,
 tristior et lacrimis oculos suffusa nitentis
 Spake Venus, sadder than her due with bright eyes gathering tears:
 adloquitur Venus: 'O qui res hominumque deumque
 "O thou, who rulest with a realm that hath no days nor years,
 aeternis regis imperiis, et fulmine terres, 230
 Both Gods and men, and mak'st them fear thy thunder lest it fall,
 quid meus Aeneas in te committere tantum,
 What then hath mine Æneas done so great a crime to call?
 quid Troes potuere, quibus, tot funera passis,
 What might have Trojan men to sin? So many deaths they bore
 cunctus ob Italiam terrarum clauditur orbis?

'Gainst whom because of Italy is shut the wide world's door.
 Certe hinc Romanos olim, volventibus annis,
 Was it not surely promised me that as the years rolled round
 hinc fore ductores, revocato a sanguine Teucri, ²³⁵
 The blood of Teucer come again should spring from out the ground,
 qui mare, qui terras omni dicione tenerent,
 The Roman folk, such very lords, that all the earth and sea
 pollicitus, quae te, genitor, sententia vertit?
 Their sway should compass? Father, doth the counsel shift in thee?
 Hoc equidem occasum Troiae tristisque ruinas
 This thing indeed atoned to me for Troy in ashes laid,
 solabar, fatis contraria fata rependens;
 And all the miserable end, as fate 'gainst fate I weighed:
 nunc eadem fortuna viros tot casibus actos ²⁴⁰
 But now the self-same fortune dogs men by such troubles driven insequitur. Quem das finem, rex magne, laborum?
 So oft and oft. What end of toil then giv'st thou, King of heaven?
 Antenor potuit, mediis elapsus Achivis,
 Antenor was of might enow to 'scape the Achæan host,
 Illyricos penetrare sinus, atque intima tutus
 And safe to reach the Illyrian gulf and pierce Liburnia's coast,
 regna Liburnorum, et fontem superare Timavi,
 And through the inmost realms thereof to pass Timavus' head,
 unde per ora novem vasto cum murmure montis ²⁴⁵
 Whence through nine mouths midst mountain roar is that wild water shed,
 it mare proruptum et pelago premit arva sonanti.
 To cast itself on fields below with all its sounding sea:
 Hic tamen ille urbem Patavi sedesque locavit
 And there he made Patavium's town and Teucrian seats to be,
 Teucrorum, et genti nomen dedit, armaque fixit
 And gave the folk their very name and Trojan arms did raise:
 Troia; nunc placida compostus pace quiescit:
 Now settled in all peace and rest he passeth quiet days.
 nos, tua progenies, caeli quibus adnuis arcem, ²⁵⁰
 But we, thy children, unto whom thou giv'st with bowing head
 navibus (infandum!) amissis, unius ob iram

The heights of heaven, our ships are lost, and we, O shame! betrayed, prodium atque Italiam longe disiungimur oris.
Are driven away from Italy for anger but of one.
Hic pietatis honos? Sic nos in sceptrum reponis?’
Is this the good man’s guerdon then? is this the promised throne?’
Olli subridens hominum sator atque deorum,
The Sower of the Gods and men a little smiled on her
vultu, quo caelum tempestatesque serenat, 255
With such a countenance as calms the storms and upper air;
oscula libavit natae, dehinc talia fatur:
He kissed his daughter on the lips, and spake such words to tell:
‘Parce metu, Cytherea: manent immota tuorum
“O Cytherean, spare thy dread! unmoved the Fates shall dwell
fata tibi; cernes urbem et promissa Lavini
Of thee and thine, and thou shalt see the promised city yet,
moenia, sublimemque feres ad sidera caeli
E’en that Lavinium’s walls, and high amidst the stars shalt set magnanimum Aeneas; neque me sententia vertit. 260
Great-souled Æneas: nor in me doth aught of counsel shift
Hic tibi (fabor enim, quando haec te cura remordet,
But since care gnaws upon thine heart, the hidden things I lift
longius et volvens fatorum arcana movebo)
Of Fate, and roll on time for thee, and tell of latter days.
bellum ingens geret Italia, populosque feroces
Great war he wars in Italy, and folk full wild of ways
contundet, moresque viris et moenia ponet,
He weareth down, and lays on men both laws and wallèd steads,
tertia dum Latio regnantem viderit aestas, 265
Till the third summer seeth him King o’er the Latin heads,
ternaque transierint Rutulis hiberna subactis.
And the third winter’s wearing brings the fierce Rutulians low.
At puer Ascanius, cui nunc cognomen Iulus
Thereon the lad Ascanius, Iulus by-named now,
additur, — Ilus erat, dum res stetit Ilia regno, —
(And Ilus was he once of old, when Ilium’s city was,)
triginta magnos volvendis mensibus orbis
Fulfilleth thirty orbs of rule with rolling months that pass,

imperio explebit, regnumque ab sede Lavini 270

And from the town Lavinium shifts the dwelling of his race,
transferet, et longam multa vi muniet Albam.

And maketh Alba-town the Long a mighty fenced place.

Hic iam ter centum totos regnabitur annos

Here when for thrice an hundred years untouched the land hath been
gente sub Hectorea, donec regina sacerdos,

Beneath the rule of Hector's folk, lo Ilia, priestess-queen,

Marte gravis, geminam partu dabit Ilia prolem.

Goes heavy with the love of Mars, and bringeth twins to birth.

Inde lupae fulvo nutricis tegmine laetus 275

'Neath yellow hide of foster-wolf thence, mighty in his mirth,

Romulus excipiet gentem, et Mavortia condet

Comes Romulus to bear the folk, and Mavors' walls to frame,
moenia, Romanosque suo de nomine dicet.

And by the word himself was called the Roman folk to name.

His ego nec metas rerum nec tempora pono;

On them I lay no bonds of time, no bonds of earthly part;

imperium sine fine dedi. Quin aspera Iuno,

I give them empire without end: yea, Juno, hard of heart,

quae mare nunc terrasque metu caelumque fatigat, 280

Who wearieth now with fear of her the heavens and earth and sea,

consilia in melius referet, mecumque fovebit

Shall gather better counsel yet, and cherish them with me;

Romanos rerum dominos gentemque togatam:

The Roman folk, the togaed men, lords of all worldly ways.

sic placitum. Veniet lustris labentibus aetas,

Such is the doom. As weareth time there come those other days,

cum domus Assaraci Phthiam clarasque Mycenae

Wherein Assaracus shall bind Mycenæ of renown,

servitio premet, ac victis dominabitur Argis. 285

And Phthia, and shall lord it o'er the Argives beaten down.

Nascetur pulchra Troianus origine Caesar,

Then shall a Trojan Cæsar come from out a lovely name,

imperium oceano, famam qui terminet astris, —

The ocean-stream shall bound his rule, the stars of heaven his fame,

Iulius, a magno demissum nomen Iulo.

Julius his name from him of old, the great Iulus sent:
 Hunc tu olim caelo, spoliis Orientis onustum,
 Him too in house of heaven one day 'neath spoils of Eastlands bent
 accipies securā; vocabitur hic quoque votis. 290
 Thou, happy, shalt receive; he too shall have the prayers of men.
 Aspera tum positis mitescent saecula bellis;
 The wars of old all laid aside, the hard world bettereth then,
 cana Fides, et Vesta, Remo cum fratre Quirinus,
 And Vesta and the hoary Faith, Quirinus and his twin
 iura dabunt; dirae ferro et compagibus artis
 Now judge the world; the dreadful doors of War now shut within
 claudentur Belli portae; Furor impius intus,
 Their iron bolts and strait embrace the godless Rage of folk,
 saeva sedens super arma, et centum vinctus aenis 295
 Who, pitiless, on weapons set, and bound in brazen yoke
 post tergum nodis, fremet horridus ore cruento.'
 Of hundred knots aback of him foams fell from bloody mouth."
 Haec ait, et Maia genitum demittit ab alto,
 Such words he spake, and from aloft he sent down Maia's youth
 ut terrae, utque novae pateant Karthaginis arces
 To cause the lands and Carthage towers new-built to open gate
 hospitio Teucris, ne fati nescia Dido
 And welcome in the Teucrian men; lest Dido, fooled of fate,
 finibus arceret: volat ille per aera magnum 300
 Should drive them from her country-side. The unmeasured air he beat
 remigio alarum, ac Libyae citus adstitit oris.
 With flap of wings, and speedily in Libya set his feet:
 Et iam iussa facit, ponuntque ferocia Poeni
 And straightway there his bidding wrought, and from the Tyrians
 fall,
 corda volente deo; in primis regina quietum
 God willing it, their hearts of war; and Dido first of all accipit in Teucros animum mentemque benignam.
 Took peace for Teucrians to her soul, and quiet heart and kind.
 At pius Aeneas, per noctem plurima volvens, 305
 Now good Æneas through the night had many things in mind,

ut primum lux alma data est, exire locosque
 And set himself to fare abroad at first of holy day
 explorare novos, quas vento accesserit oras,
 To search the new land what it was, and on what shore he lay
 qui teneant, nam inculta videt, hominesne feraene,
 Driven by the wind; if manfolk there abode, or nought but deer,
 quaerere constituit, sociisque exacta referre
 (For waste it seemed), and tidings true back to his folk to bear.
 Classem in convexo nemorum sub rupe cavata 310
 So in that hollow bight of groves beneath the cavern cleft,
 arboribus clausam circum atque horrentibus umbris
 All hidden by the leafy trees and quavering shades, he left
 occulit; ipse uno graditur comitatus Achate,
 His ships: and he himself afoot went with Achates lone,
 bina manu lato crispans hastilia ferro.
 Shaking in hand two slender spears with broad-beat iron done.
 Cui mater media sese tulit obvia silva,
 But as he reached the thicket's midst his mother stood before,
 virginis os habitumque gerens, et virginis arma 315
 Who virgin face, and virgin arms, and virgin habit bore,
 Spartanae, vel qualis equos Threissa fatigat
 A Spartan maid; or like to her who tames the Thracian horse,
 Harpalyce, volucremque fuga praevertitur Hebrum.
 Harpalyce, and flies before the hurrying Hebrus' course.
 Namque umeris de more habilem suspenderat arcum
 For huntress-wise on shoulder she had hung the handy bow,
 venatrix, dederatque comam diffundere ventis,
 And given all her hair abroad for any wind to blow,
 nuda genu, nodoque sinus collecta fluentis. 320
 And, naked-kneed, her kirtle long had gathered in a lap:
 Ac prior, 'Heus' inquit 'iuvenes, monstrate mearum
 She spake the first: "Ho youths," she said, "tell me by any hap
 vidistis si quam hic errantem forte sororum,
 If of my sisters any one ye saw a wandering wide
 succinctam pharetra et maculosae tegmine lyncis,
 With quiver girt, and done about with lynx's spotted hide,
 aut spumantis apri cursum clamore prementem.'

Or following of the foaming boar with shouts and eager feet?"

Sic Venus; et Veneris contra sic filius orsus: 325

So Venus; and so Venus' son began her words to meet:

'Nulla tuarum audita mihi neque visa sororum —

"I have not seen, nor have I heard thy sisters nigh this place,

O quam te memorem, virgo? Namque haud tibi voltus

O maid: — and how to call thee then? for neither is thy face
mortalis, nec vox hominem sonat: O, dea certe —

Of mortals, nor thy voice of men: O very Goddess thou!

an Phoebi soror? an nympharum sanguinis una? —

What! Phoebus' sister? or of nymphs whom shall I call thee now?

sis felix, nostrumque leves, quaecumque, laborem, 330

But whosoe'er thou be, be kind and lighten us our toil,

et, quo sub caelo tandem, quibus orbis in oris

And teach us where beneath the heavens, which spot of earthly soil
iactemur, doceas. Ignari hominumque locorumque

We are cast forth; unlearned of men, unlearned of land we stray,
erramus, vento huc vastis et fluctibus acti:

By might of wind and billows huge here driven from out our way.

multa tibi ante aras nostra cadet hostia dextra.'

Our right hands by thine altar-horns shall fell full many a host."

Tum Venus: 'Haud equidem tali me dignor honore; 335

Spake Venus: "Nowise am I worth so much of honour's cost:

virginibus Tyriis mos est gestare pharetram,

The Tyrian maids are wont to bear the quiver even as I,
purpureoque alte suras vincire cothurno.

And even so far upon the leg the purple shoe-thong tie.

Punica regna vides, Tyrios et Agenoris urbem;

The Punic realm thou seest here, Agenor's town and folk,

sed fines Libyici, genus intractabile bello.

But set amidst of Libyan men unused to bear the yoke.

Imperium Dido Tyria regit urbe profecta, 340

Dido is Lady of the Land, who fled from Tyre the old,

germanum fugiens. Longa est iniuria, longae

And from her brother: weary long were all the ill deed told,

ambages; sed summa sequar fastigia rerum.

And long its winding ways, but I light-foot will overpass.

'Huic coniunx Sychaeus erat, ditissimus agri
 Her husband was Sychæus hight, of land most rich he was Phoenicum, et magno miserae dilectus amore,
 Of all Phoenicians: she, poor wretch! loved him with mighty love,
 cui pater intactam dederat, primisque iugarat 345
 Whose father gave her, maid, to him, and first the rites did move
 ominibus. Sed regna Tyri germanus habebat
 Of wedlock: but as King of Tyre her brother did abide,
 Pygmalion, scelere ante alios immanior omnes.
 Pygmalion, more swollen up in sin than any man beside:
 Quos inter medius venit furor. Ille Sychaeum
 Mad hatred yoked the twain of them, he blind with golden lust,
 impius ante aras, atque auri caecus amore,
 Godless with stroke of iron laid Sychæus in the dust
 clam ferro incautum superat, securus amorum 350
 Unwares before the altar-horns; nor of the love did reck
 germanae; factumque diu celavit, et aegram,
 His sister had, but with vain hope played on the lover sick,
 multa malus simulans, vana spe lusit amantem.
 And made a host of feignings false, and hid the matter long.
 Ipsa sed in somnis inhumati venit imago
 Till in her sleep the image came of that unburied wrong,
 coniugis, ora modis attollens pallida miris,
 Her husband dead; in wondrous wise his face was waxen pale:
 crudeles aras traiectaque pectora ferro 355
 His breast with iron smitten through, the altar of his bale,
 nudavit, caecumque domus scelus omne retexit.
 The hooded sin of evil house, to her he open laid,
 Tum celerare fugam patriaque excedere suadet,
 And speedily to flee away from fatherland he bade;
 auxiliumque viae veteres tellure recludit
 And for the help of travel showed earth's hidden wealth of old,
 thesauros, ignotum argenti pondus et auri.
 A mighty mass that none might tell of silver and of gold.
 His commota fugam Dido sociosque parabat: 360
 Sore moved hereby did Dido straight her flight and friends prepare:
 conveniunt, quibus aut odium crudele tyranni

They meet together, such as are or driven by biting fear,
 aut metus acer erat; navis, quae forte paratae,
 Or bitter hatred of the wretch: such ships as hap had dight
 corripiunt, onerantque auro: portantur avari
 They fall upon and lade with gold; forth fare the treasures bright
 Pygmalionis opes pelago; dux femina facti.
 Of wretch Pygmalion o'er the sea, a woman first therein.
 Devenere locos, ubi nunc ingentia cernis 365
 And so they come unto the place where ye may see begin
 moenia surgentemque novae Karthaginis arcem,
 The towers of Carthage, and the walls new built that mighty grow,
 mercatique solum, facti de nomine Byrsam,
 And bought the Byrsa-field good cheap, as still the name shall show,
 taurino quantum possent circumdare tergo.
 So much of land as one bull's hide might scantily go about
 Sed vos qui tandem, quibus aut venistis ab oris,
 — But ye forsooth, what men are ye, from what land fare ye out,
 quove tenetis iter? 'Quaerenti talibus ille 370
 And whither go ye on your ways?" Her questioning in speech suspirans, imoque trahens a pectore vocem:
 He answered, and a heavy sigh from inmost heart did reach:
 'O dea, si prima repetens ab origine pergam,
 "O Goddess, might I tread again first footsteps of our way,
 et vacet annalis nostrorum audire laborum,
 And if the annals of our toil thine hearkening ears might stay,
 ante diem clauso componat Vesper Olympo.
 Yet Vesper first on daylight dead should shut Olympus' door.
 Nos Troia antiqua, si vestras forte per auris 375
 From Troy the old, if yet perchance your ears have felt before
 Troiae nomen iit, diversa per aequora vectos
 That name go by, do we come forth, and, many a water past,
 forte sua Libycis tempestas adpulit oris.
 A chance-come storm hath drifted us on Libyan shores at last.
 Sum pius Aeneas, raptos qui ex hoste Penates
 I am Æneas, God-lover; I snatched forth from the foe
 classe veho mecum, fama super aethera notus.
 My Gods to bear aboard with me, a fame for heaven to know.

Italiam quaero patriam et genus ab Iove summo. 380
 I seek the Italian fatherland, and Jove-descended line;
 Bis denis Phrygium conscendi navibus aequor,
 Twice ten the ships were that I manned upon the Phrygian brine,
 matre dea monstrante viam, data fata secutus;
 My Goddess-mother led the way, we followed fate god-given;
 vix septem convolsae undis Euroque supersunt.
 And now scarce seven are left to me by wave and east-wind riven;
 Ipse ignotus, egens, Libyae deserta peragro,
 And I through Libyan deserts stray, a man unknown and poor,
 Europa atque Asia pulsus.' Nec plura querentem 385
 From Asia cast, from Europe cast," She might abide no more
 passa Venus medio sic interfata dolore est:
 To hear his moan: she thrusts a word amidst his grief and saith:
 'Quisquis es, haud, credo, invisus caelestibus auras
 "Nay thou art not God's castaway, who drawest mortal breath,
 vitalis carpis, Tyriam qui adveneris urbem.
 And fairest to the Tyrian town, if aught thereof I know.
 Perge modo, atque hinc te reginae ad limina perfer,
 Set on to Dido's threshold then e'en as the way doth show.
 Namque tibi reduces socios classemque relatam 390
 For take the tidings of thy ships and folk brought back again
 nuntio, et in tutum versis aquilonibus actam,
 By shifting of the northern wind all safe from off the main:
 ni frustra augurium vani docuere parentes.
 Unless my parents learned me erst of soothsaying to wot
 Aspice bis senos laetantis agmine cynos,
 But idly. Lo there twice seven swans disporting in a knot,
 aetheria quos lapsa plaga Iovis ales aperto
 Whom falling from the plain of air drave down the bird of Jove
 turbabat caelo; nunc terras ordine longo 395
 From open heaven: strung out at length they hang the earth above,
 aut capere, aut captas iam despectare videntur:
 And now seem choosing where to pitch, now on their choice to gaze,
 ut reduces illi ludunt stridentibus alis,
 As wheeling round with whistling wings they sport in diverse ways
 et coetu cinxere polum, cantusque dedere,

And with their band ring round the pole and cast abroad their song.
 haud aliter puppesque tuae pubesque tuorum
 Nought otherwise the ships and youth that unto thee belong
 aut portum tenet aut pleno subit ostia velo. 400
 Hold haven now, or else full sail to harbour-mouth are come.
 Perge modo, et, qua te ducit via, dirige gressum.
 Set forth, set forth and tread the way e'en as it leadeth home."
 Dixit, et avertens rosea cervice refulsit,
 She spake, she turned, from rosy neck the light of heaven she cast,
 ambrosiaeque comae divinum vertice odorem
 And from her hair ambrosial the scent of Gods went past
 spiravere, pedes vestis defluxit ad imos,
 Upon the wind, and o'er her feet her skirts fell shimmering down,
 et vera incessu patuit dea. Ille ubi matrem 405
 And very God she went her ways. Therewith his mother known,
 agnovit, tali fugientem est voce secutus:
 With such a word he followed up a-fleeing from his eyes:
 'Quid natum totiens, crudelis tu quoque, falsis
 "Ah cruel as a God! and why with images and lies
 ludis imaginibus? Cur dextrae iungere dextram Dost thou beguile me? wherefore then is hand to hand not given
 non datur, ac veras audire et reddere voces?"
 And we to give and take in words that come from earth and heaven?"
 Talibus incusat, gressumque ad moenia tendit: 410
 Such wise he chided her, and then his footsteps townward bent:
 at Venus obscuro gradientes aere saepsit,
 But Venus with a dusky air did hedge them as they went,
 et multo nebulae circum dea fudit amictu,
 And widespread cloak of cloudy stuff the Goddess round them wrapped,
 cernere ne quis eos, neu quis contingere posset,
 Lest any man had seen them there, or bodily had happed
 molirive moram, aut veniendi poscere causas.
 Across their road their steps to stay, and ask their dealings there.
 Ipsa Paphum sublimis abit, sedesque revisit 415
 But she to Paphos and her home went glad amidst the air:
 laeta suas, ubi templum illi, centumque Sabaeo

There is her temple, there they stand, an hundred altars meet,
ture calent arae, sertisque recentibus halant.

Warm with Sabæan incense-smoke, with new-pulled blossoms
sweet.

Corripuere viam interea, qua semita monstrat.

But therewithal they speed their way as led the road along;

Iamque ascendebant collem, qui plurimus urbi

And now they scale a spreading hill that o'er the town is hung,
imminet, adversasque adspectat desuper arces. 420

And looking downward thereupon hath all the burg in face.

Miratur molem Aeneas, magalia quondam,

Æneas marvels how that world was once a peasants' place,
miratur portas strepitumque et strata viarum.

He marvels at the gates, the roar and rattle of the ways.

Instant ardentes Tyrii pars ducere muros,

Hot-heart the Tyrians speed the work, and some the ramparts raise,
molirique arcem et manibus subvolvere saxa,

Some pile the burg high, some with hand roll stones up o'er the ground;

pars optare locum tecto et concludere sulco. 425

Some choose a place for dwelling-house and draw a trench around;

[Iura magistratusque legunt sanctumque senatum;]

Some choose the laws, and lords of doom, the holy senate choose.

hic portus alii effodiunt; hic alta theatris

These thereaway the havens dig, and deep adown sink those
fundamenta locant alii, immanisque columnas

The founding of the theatre walls, or cleave the living stone
rupibus excidunt, scaenis decora alta futuris.

In pillars huge, one day to show full fair the scene upon.

Qualis apes aestate nova per florea rura 430

As in new summer 'neath the sun the bees are wont to speed
exercet sub sole labor, cum gentis adultos

Their labour in the flowery fields, whereover now they lead
educunt fetus, aut cum liquentia mella

The well-grown offspring of their race, or when the cells they store
stipant et dulci distendunt nectare cellas,

With flowing honey, till fulfilled of sweets they hold no more;

aut onera accipiunt venientum, aut agmine facto
 Or take the loads of new-comers, or as a watch well set ignavom fucos pecus a praesepibus arcent: 435 Drive off the lazy herd of drones that they no dwelling get;
 fervet opus, redolentque thymo fragrantia mella.
 Well speeds the work, and thymy sweet the honey's odour is.
 'O fortunati, quorum iam moenia surgunt!'
 "Well favoured of the Fates are ye, whose walls arise in bliss!"
 Aeneas ait, et fastigia suspicit urbis.
 Æneas cries, a-looking o'er the housetops spread below;
 Infert se saeptus nebula, mirabile dictu,
 Then, wonderful to tell in tale, hedged round with cloud doth go
 per medios, miscetque viris, neque cernitur ulli. 440
 Amid the thickest press of men, and yet of none is seen.
 Lucus in urbe fuit media, laetissimus umbra,
 A grove amid the town there is, a pleasant place of green,
 quo primum iactati undis et turbine Poeni
 Where erst the Tyrians, beat by waves and whirling of the wind,
 effodere loco signum, quod regia Iuno
 Dug out the token Juno once had bidden them hope to find,
 monstrarat, caput acris equi; sic nam fore bello
 An eager horse's head to wit: for thus their folk should grow
 egregiam et facilem victu per saecula gentem. 445
 Far-famed in war for many an age, of victual rich enow.
 Hic templum Iunoni ingens Sidonia Dido
 There now did Dido, Sidon-born, uprear a mighty fane
 condebat, donis opulentum et numine divae,
 To Juno, rich in gifts, and rich in present godhead's gain:
 aerea cui gradibus surgebant limina, nexaeque
 On brazen steps its threshold rose, and brass its lintel tied,
 aere trabes, foribus cardo stridebat aenis.
 And on their hinges therewithal the brazen door-leaves cried.
 Hoc primum in luco nova res oblata timorem 450
 And now within that grove again a new thing thrusting forth
 leniit, hic primum Aeneas sperare salutem
 'Gan lighten fear; for here to hope Æneas deemed it worth,
 ausus, et adflctis melius confidere rebus.

And trust his fortune beaten down that yet it might arise.
Namque sub ingenti lustrat dum singula templo,
For there while he abode the Queen, and wandered with his eyes
reginam opperiens, dum, quae fortuna sit urbi,
O'er all the temple, musing on the city's fate to be,
artificumque manus inter se operumque laborem 455
And o'er the diverse handicraft and works of mastery,
miratur, videt Iliacas ex ordine pugnās,
Lo there, set out before his face the battles that were Troy's,
bellaque iam fama totum volgata per orbem,
And wars, whereof all folk on earth had heard the fame and noise;
Atridas, Priamumque, et saevum ambobus Achillem.
King Priam, the Atridae twain, Achilles dire to both.
Constitit, et lacrimans, 'Quis iam locus' inquit 'Achate,
He stood, and weeping spake withal: "Achates, lo! forsooth
quae regio in terris nostri non plena laboris? 460
What place, what land in all the earth but with our grief is stored?
En Priamus! Sunt hic etiam sua praemia laudi;
Lo Priam! and even here belike deed hath its own reward.
sunt lacrimae rerum et mentem mortalia tangunt.
Lo here are tears for piteous things that touch men's hearts anigh:
Solve metus; feret haec aliquam tibi fama salutem.'
Cast off thy fear! this fame today shall yet thy safety buy."
Sic ait, atque animum pictura pascit inani,
And with the empty painted thing he feeds his mind withal,
multa gemens, largoque umectat flumine voltum. 465
Sore groaning, and a very flood adown his face did fall.
Namque videbat, uti bellantes Pergama circum
For there he saw, as war around of Pergamus they cast,
hac fugerent Graii, premeret Troiana iuventus,
Here fled the Greeks, the Trojan youth for ever following fast;
hac Phryges, instaret curru cristatus Achilles.
There fled the Phrygians, on their heels high-helmed Achilles' car;
Nec procul hinc Rhesi niveis tentoria velis
Not far off, fair with snowy cloths, the tents of Rhesus are;
adgnoscit lacrimans, primo quae prodita somno 470
He knew them weeping: they of old in first of sleep betrayed,

Tydides multa vastabat caede cruentus,
Tydides red with many a death a waste of nothing made,
ardentisque avertit equos in castra, prius quam
And led those fiery steeds to camp ere ever they might have
pabula gustassent Troiae Xanthumque bibissent.
One mouthful of the Trojan grass, or drink of Xanthus' wave.
Parte alia fugiens amissis Troilus armis,
And lo again, where Troilus is fleeing weaponless,
infelix puer atque impar congressus Achilli, ⁴⁷⁵
Unhappy youth, and all too weak to bear Achilles' stress,
fertur equis, curruque haeret resupinus inani,
By his own horses, fallen aback, at empty chariot borne,
lora tenens tamen; huic cervixque comaeque trahuntur
Yet holding on the reins thereof; his neck, his tresses torn
per terram, et versa pulvis inscribitur hasta.
O'er face of earth, his wrested spear a-writing in the dust.
Interea ad templum non aequae Palladis ibant
Meanwhile were faring to the fane of Pallas little just crinibus Iliades passis peplumque ferebant, ⁴⁸⁰
The wives of Troy with scattered hair, bearing the gown refused,
suppliciter tristes et tunsae pectora palmis;
Sad they and suppliant, whose own hands their very bosoms bruised,
diva solo fixos oculos aversa tenebat.
While fixed, averse, the Goddess kept her eyes upon the ground.
Ter circum Iliacos raptaverat Hectora muros,
Thrice had Achilles Hector dragged the walls of Troy around,
exanimumque auro corpus vendebat Achilles.
And o'er his body, reft of soul, was chaffering now for gold.
Tum vero ingentem gemitum dat pectore ab imo, ⁴⁸⁵
Deep groaned Æneas from his heart in such wise to behold
ut spolia, ut currus, utque ipsum corpus amici,
The car, the spoils, the very corpse of him, his fellow dead,
tendentemque manus Priamum conspexit inermis.
To see the hands of Priam there all weaponless outspread.
Se quoque principibus permixtum adgnovit Achivis,
Yea, thrust amidst Achæan lords, his very self he knew;
Eoasque acies et nigri Memnonis arma.

The Eastland hosts he saw, and arms of Memnon black of hue.

Ducit Amazonidum lunatis agmina peltis 490

There mad Penthesilea leads the maids of moony shield,

Penthesilea furens, mediisque in milibus ardet,

The Amazons, and burns amidst the thousands of the field,

aurea subnectens exsertae cingula mammae,

And with her naked breast thrust out above the golden girth,

bellatrix, audetque viris concurrere virgo.

The warrior maid hath heart to meet the warriors of the earth.

Haec dum Dardanio Aeneae miranda videntur,

But while Æneas, Dardan lord, beholds the marvels there,

dum stupet, obtutuque haeret defixus in uno, 495

And, all amazed, stands moving nought with eyes in one set stare,

regina ad templum, forma pulcherrima Dido,

Lo cometh Dido, very queen of fairest fashion wrought,

incessit magna iuvenum stipante caterva.

By youths close thronging all about unto the temple brought.

Qualis in Eurotae ripis aut per iuga Cynthi

Yea, e'en as on Eurotas' rim or Cynthus' ridges high

exercet Diana choros, quam mille secutae

Diana leadeth dance about, a thousandfold anigh

hinc atque hinc glomerantur oreades; illa pharetram 500

The following Oreads gather round, with shoulder quiver-hung

fert umero, gradiensque deas supereminet omnis:

She overbears the Goddesses her swift feet fare among,

Latonae tacitum pertemptant gaudia pectus:

And great Latona's silent breast the joys of godhead touch.

talis erat Dido, talem se laeta ferebat

Lo, such was Dido; joyously she bore herself e'en such

per medios, instans operi regnisque futuris.

Amidst them, eager for the work and ordered rule to come;

Tum foribus divae, media testudine templi, 505

Then through the Goddess' door she passed, and midmost 'neath the dome,

saepta armis, solioque alte subnixa resedit.

High raised upon a throne she sat, with weapons hedged about,

Iura dabat legesque viris, operumque laborem

And doomed, and fashioned laws for men, and fairly sifted out
partibus aequabat iustis, aut sorte trahebat:

And dealt their share of toil to them, or drew the lot as happed.

cum subito Aeneas concursu accedere magno

There suddenly Æneas sees amidst a concourse wrapped

Anthea Sergestumque videt fortemque Cloanthum, 510

Antheus, Sergestus, and the strong Cloanthus draw anigh,

Teucrorumque alios, ater quos aequore turbo

And other Teucrians whom the whirl, wild, black, all utterly
dispulerat penitusque alias avexerat oras.

Had scattered into other lands afar across the sea.

Obstipuit simul ipse simul percussus Achates

Amazed he stood, nor stricken was Achates less than he

laetitiaque metuque; avidi coniungere dextras

By joy, by fear: they hungered sore hand unto hand to set;

ardebant; sed res animos incognita turbat. 515

But doubt of dealings that might be stirred in their hearts as yet;

Dissimulant, et nube cava speculantur amicti,

So lurking, cloaked in hollow cloud they note what things betide

quae fortuna viris, classem quo litore linquant,

Their fellows there, and on what shore the ships they manned may bide,

quid veniant; cunctis nam lecti navibus ibant,

And whence they come; for chosen out of all the ships they bear

orantes veniam, et templum clamore petebant.

Bidding of peace, and, crying out, thus temple-ward they fare.

Postquam introgressi et coram data copia fandi, 520

But now when they were entered in, and gained the grace of speech,

maximus Ilioneus placido sic pectore coepit:

From placid heart Ilioneus the elder ‘gan beseech:

‘O Regina, novam cui condere Iuppiter urbem

“O Queen, to whom hath Jove here given a city new to raise,

iustitiaque dedit gentis frenare superbas,

And with thy justice to draw rein on men of wilful ways,

Troes te miseri, ventis maria omnia vecti,

We wretched Trojans, tossed about by winds o’er every main,

oramus, prohibe infandos a navibus ignis, 525

Pray thee forbid it from our ships, the dreadful fiery bane.
 parce pio generi, et propius res aspice nostras.
 Spare pious folk, and look on us with favouring kindly eyes!
 Non nos aut ferro Libycos populare Penatis
 We are not come with sword to waste the Libyan families,
 venimus, aut raptas ad litora vertere praedas;
 Nor drive adown unto the strand the plunder of the strong:
 non ea vis animo, nec tanta superbia victis.
 No such high hearts, such might of mind to vanquished folk belong.
 Est locus, Hesperiam Grai cognomine dicunt, 530
 There is a place, Hesperia called of Greeks in days that are,
 terra antiqua, potens armis atque ubere glabrae;
 An ancient land, a fruitful soil, a mighty land in war.
 Oenotri coluere viri; nunc fama minores
 Oenotrian folk first tilled the land, whose sons, as rumours run,
 Italiam dixisse ducis de nomine gentem.
 Now call it nought but Italy from him who led them on.
 Hic cursus fuit:
 And thitherward our course was turned,
 cum subito adsurgens fluctu nimbosus Orion 535
 When sudden, stormy, tumbling seas, Orion rose on us,
 in vada caeca tulit, penitusque procacibus austris
 And wholly scattering us abroad with fierce blasts from the south,
 perque undas, superante salo, perque invia saxa
 Drave us, sea-swept, by shallows blind, to straits with wayless mouth:
 dispulit; huc pauci vestris adnavimus oris.
 But to thy shores we few have swum, and so betake us here.
 Quod genus hoc hominum? Quaeve hunc tam barbara morem
 What men among men are ye then? what country's soil may bear
 permittit patria? Hospitio prohibemur harenae; 540
 Such savage ways? ye grudge us then the welcome of your sand,
 bella cient, primaque vetant consistere terra.
 And fall to arms, and gainsay us a tide-washed strip of strand.
 Si genus humanum et mortalia temnit is arma
 But if men-folk and wars of men ye wholly set at nought,
 at sperate deos memores fandi atque nefandi.

Yet deem the Gods bear memory still of good and evil wrought
 'Rex erat Aeneas nobis, quo iustior alter,
 Æneas was the king of us; no juster was there one,
 nec pietate fuit, nec bello maior et armis. 545
 No better lover of the Gods, none more in battle shone:
 Quem si fata virum servant, si vescitur aura
 And if the Fates have saved that man, if earthly air he drink,
 aetheria, neque adhuc crudelibus occubat umbris,
 Nor 'neath the cruel deadly shades his fallen body shrink,
 non metus; officio nec te certasse priorem
 Nought need we fear, nor ye repent to strive in kindly deed
 poeniteat. Sunt et Siculis regionibus urbes
 With us: we have in Sicily fair cities to our need.
 armaque, Troianoque a sanguine clarus Acestes. 550
 And fields we have; Acestes high of Trojan blood is come.
 Quassatam ventis liceat subducere classem,
 Now suffer us our shattered ships in haven to bring home,
 et silvis aptare trabes et stringere remos:
 To cut us timber in thy woods, and shave us oars anew.
 si datur Italiam, sociis et rege recepto,
 Then if the Italian cruise to us, if friends and king are due,
 tendere, ut Italiam laeti Latiumque petamus;
 To Italy and Latium then full merry wend we on.
 sin absumpta salus, et te, pater optime Teucrum, 555
 But if, dear father of our folk, hope of thy health be gone,
 pontus habet Libyae, nec spes iam restat Iuli,
 And thee the Libyan water have, nor hope Iulus give,
 at freta Sicaniae saltem sedesque paratas,
 Then the Sicanian shores at least, and seats wherein to live,
 unde huc advecti, regemque petamus Acesten.'
 Whence hither came we, and the King Acestes let us seek."
 Talibus Ilioneus; cuncti simul ore fremebant
 So spake he, and the others made as they the same would speak, Dardanidae. 560
 The Dardan-folk with murmuring mouth.
 Tum breviter Dido, voltum demissa, profatur:
 But Dido, with her head hung down, in few words answer gave:

'Solvite corde metum, Teucri, secludite curas.
 "Let fear fall from you, Teucrian men, and set your cares aside;
 Res dura et regni novitas me talia cogunt
 Hard fortune yet constraineth me and this my realm untried
 moliri, et late finis custode tueri.
 To hold such heed, with guard to watch my marches up and down.
 Quis genus Aeneadum, quis Troiae nesciat urbem, ⁵⁶⁵
 Who knoweth not Æneas' folk? who knoweth not Troy-town,
 virtutesque virosque, aut tanti incendia belli?
 The valour, and the men, and all the flame of such a war?
 Non obtusa adeo gestamus pectora Poeni,
 Nay, surely nought so dull as this the souls within us are,
 nec tam aversus equos Tyria Sol iungit ab urbe.
 Nor turns the sun from Tyrian town, so far off yoking steed.
 Seu vos Hesperiam magnam Saturniaque arva,
 So whether ye Hesperia great, and Saturn's acres need,
 sive Erycis finis regemque optatis Acesten, ⁵⁷⁰
 Or rather unto Eryx turn, and King Acestes' shore,
 auxilio tutos dimittam, opibusque iuvabo.
 Safe, holpen will I send you forth, and speed you with my store:
 Voltis et his mecum pariter considerare regnis;
 Yea and moreover, have ye will in this my land to bide.
 urbem quam statuo vestra est, subducite navis;
 This city that I build is yours: here leave your ships to ride:
 Tros Tyriusque mihi nullo discrimine agetur.
 Trojan and Tyrian no two wise at hands of me shall fare.
 Atque utinam rex ipse Noto compulsus eodem ⁵⁷⁵
 And would indeed the King himself, Æneas, with us were,
 adforet Aeneas! Equidem per litora certos Driven by that self-same southern gale: but sure men will I send,
 dimittam et Libyae lustrare extrema iubebo,
 And bid them search through Libya from end to utmost end,
 si quibus eiectus silvis aut urbibus errat.'
 Lest, cast forth anywhere, he stray by town or forest part."
 His animum arrecti dictis et fortis Achates
 Father Æneas thereupon high lifted up his heart,
 et pater Aeneas iamdudum erumpere nubem ⁵⁸⁰

Nor stout Achates less, and both were fain the cloud to break;
ardebant. Prior Aenean compellat Achates:
And to Æneas first of all the leal Achates spake:
‘Nate dea, quae nunc animo sententia surgit?
“O Goddess-born, what thought hereof ariseth in thy mind?
omnia tuta vides, classem sociosque receptos.
All safe thou seest thy ships; thy folk fair welcomed dost thou find:
Unus abest, medio in fluctu quem vidimus ipsi
One is away, whom we ourselves saw sunken in the deep;
submersum; dictis respondent cetera matris.’ 585
But all things else the promised word thy mother gave us keep.”
Vix ea fatus erat, cum circumfusa repente
Lo, even as he spake the word the cloud that wrapped them cleaves,
scindit se nubes et in aethera purgat apertum.
And in the open space of heaven no dusk behind it leaves;
Restitit Aeneas claraque in luce refulsit,
And there Æneas stood and shone amid the daylight clear,
os umerosque deo similis; namque ipsa decoram
With face and shoulders of a God: for loveliness of hair
caesariem nato genetrix lumenque iuventae 590
His mother breathed upon her son, and purple light of youth,
purpureum et laetos oculis adflarat honores:
And joyful glory of the eyes: e’en as in very sooth
quale manus addunt ebori decus, aut ubi flavo
The hand gives ivory goodliness, or when the Parian stone,
argentum Pariusve lapis circumdatur auro.
Or silver with the handicraft of yellow gold is done:
Tum sic reginam adloquitur, cunctisque repente
And therewithal unto the Queen doth he begin to speak,
improvisus ait: ‘Coram, quem quaeritis, adsum, 595
Unlooked-for of all men: “Lo here the very man ye seek,
Troius Aeneas, Libycis ereptus ab undis.
Trojan Æneas, caught away from Libyan seas of late!
O sola infandos Troiae miserata labores,
Thou, who alone of toils of Troy hast been compassionate,
quae nos, reliquias Danaum, terraeque marisque
Who takest us, the leavings poor of Danaan sword, outworn

omnibus exhaustos iam casibus, omnium egenos,
 With every hap of earth and sea, of every good forlorn,
 urbe, domo, socias, grates persolvere dignas 600
 To city and to house of thine: to thank thee to thy worth,
 non opis est nostrae, Dido, nec quicquid ubique est
 Dido, my might may compass not; nay, scattered o'er the earth
 gentis Dardaniae, magnum quae sparsa per orbem.
 The Dardan folk, for what thou dost may never give thee meed:
 Di tibi, si qua pios respectant numina, si quid
 But if somewhere a godhead is the righteous man to heed,
 usquam iustitia est et mens sibi conscia recti,
 If justice is, or any soul to note the right it wrought,
 praemia digna ferant. Quae te tam laeta tulerunt 605
 May the Gods give thee due reward. What joyful ages brought saecula? Qui tanti talem genuere parentes?
 Thy days to birth? what mighty ones gave such an one today?
 In freta dum fluvii current, dum montibus umbrae
 Now while the rivers seaward run, and while the shadows stray
 lustrabunt convexa, polus dum sidera pascet,
 O'er hollow hills, and while the pole the stars is pasturing wide,
 semper honos nomenque tuum laudesque manebunt,
 Still shall thine honour and thy name, still shall thy praise abide
 quae me cumque vocant terrae.' Sic fatus, amicum 610
 What land soever calleth me." Therewith his right hand sought Ilionea petit dextra, laevaque Serestum,
 His very friend Ilioneus, his left Serestus caught,
 post alios, fortemque Gyan fortemque Cloanthum.
 And then the others, Gyan strong, Cloanthus strong in fight.
 Obstipuit primo aspectu Sidonia Dido,
 Sidonian Dido marvelled much, first at the hero's sight,
 casu deinde viri tanto, et sic ore locuta est:
 Then marvelled at the haps he had, and so such word doth say:
 'Quis te, nate dea, per tanta pericula casus 615
 "O Goddess-born, what fate is this that ever dogs thy way
 insequitur? Quae vis immanibus applicat oris?
 With such great perils? What hath yoked thy life to this wild shore?
 Tune ille Aeneas, quem Dardanio Anchisae

And art thou that Æneas then, whom holy Venus bore
alma Venus Phrygii genuit Simoentis ad undam?
Unto Anchises, Dardan lord, by Phrygian Simoïs' wave?
Atque equidem Teucrum memini Sidona venire
Of Teucer unto Sidon come a memory yet I have,
finibus expulsum patriis, nova regna petentem 620
Who, driven from out his fatherland, was seeking new abode
auxilio Beli; genitor tum Belus opimam
By Belus' help: but Belus then, my father, over-rode vastabat Cyprum, et victor dicione tenebat.
Cyprus the rich, and held the same as very conquering lord:
Tempore iam ex illo casus mihi cognitus urbis
So from that tide I knew of Troy and bitter Fate's award,
Troianae nomenque tuum regesque Pelasgi.
I knew of those Pelasgian kings — yea, and I knew thy name.
Ipse hostis Teucros insigni laude ferebat, 625
He then, a foeman, added praise to swell the Teucrian fame,
seque ortum antiqua Teucrorum ab stirpe volebat.
And oft was glad to deem himself of ancient Teucer's line.
Quare agite, O tectis, iuvenes, succedite nostris.
So hasten now to enter in 'neath roofs of me and mine.
Me quoque per multos similis fortuna labores
Me too a fortune such as yours, me tossed by many a toil,
iactatam hac demum voluit consistere terra.
Hath pleased to give abiding-place at last upon this soil,
Non ignara mali, miseris succurrere disco.' 630
Learned in illhaps full wise am I unhappy men to aid."
Sic memorat; simul Aenean in regia ducit
Such tale she told, and therewith led to house full kingly made
tectis, simul divom templis indicit honorem.
Æneas, bidding therewithal the Gods with gifts to grace;
Nec minus interea sociis ad litora mittit
Nor yet their fellows she forgot upon the sea-beat place,
viginti tauros, magnorum horrentia centum
But sendeth them a twenty bulls, an hundred bristling backs
terga suum, pinguis centum cum matribus agnos, 635
Of swine, an hundred fatted lambs, whereof his ewe none lacks,

munera laetitiamque dii.

And gifts and gladness of the God.

At domus interior regali splendida luxu

Meanwhile the gleaming house within with kingly pomp is dight,
instruitur, mediisque parant convivia tectis:

And in the midmost of the hall a banquet they prepare:

arte laboratae vestes ostroque superbo,

Cloths laboured o'er with handicraft, and purple proud is there;

ingens argentum mensis, caelataque in auro ⁶⁴⁰

Great is the silver on the board, and carven out of gold

fortia facta patrum, series longissima rerum

The mighty deeds of father-folk, a long-drawn tale, is told,

per tot ducta viros antiqua ab origine gentis.

Brought down through many and many an one from when their race began.

Aeneas (neque enim patrius consistere mentem

Aeneas, through whose father's heart unquiet love there ran,

passus amor) rapidum ad navis praemittit Achaten,

Sent on the swift Achates now unto the ships to speed,

Ascanio ferat haec, ipsumque ad moenia ducat; ⁶⁴⁵

To bear Ascanius all these haps, and townward him to lead;

omnis in Ascanio cari stat cura parentis.

For on Ascanius well beloved was all his father's thought:

Munera praeterea, Iliacis erepta ruinis,

And therewithal gifts good to give from Ilium's ruin caught

ferre iubet, pallam signis auroque rigentem,

He bade him bring: a cope all stiff with golden imagery;

et circumtextum croceo velamen acantho,

With saffron soft acanthus twine a veil made fair to see;

ornatus Argivae Helenae, quos illa Mycenis, ⁶⁵⁰

The Argive Helen's braveries, brought from Mycenæ erst,

Pergama cum peteret inconcessosque hymenaeos,

When she was seeking Pergamos and wedding all accursed:

extulerat, matris Ledae mirabile donum:

Her mother Leda gave her these and marvellous they were.

praeterea sceptrum, Ilione quod gesserat olim,

A sceptre too that Ilione in days ago did bear,

maxima natarum Priami, colloque monile
 The eldest-born of Priam's maids; a neckchain pearl bestrown,
 bacatum, et duplicem gemmis auroque coronam. 655
 And, doubly wrought with gold and gems, a kingly-fashioned crown.
 Haec celerans ita ad naves tendebat Achates.
 So to the ships Achates went these matters forth to speed.
 At Cytherea novas artes, nova pectore versat
 But Cytherea in her heart turned over new-wrought rede,
 Consilia, ut faciem mutatus et ora Cupido
 New craft; how, face and fashion changed, her son the very Love
 pro dulci Ascanio veniat, donisque furentem
 For sweet Ascanius should come forth, and, gift-giving, should move
 incendat reginam, atque ossibus implicet ignem; 660
 The Queen to madness, make her bones the yoke-fellows of flame.
 quippe domum timet ambiguum Tyriosque bilinguis;
 Forsooth the doubtful house she dreads, the two-tongued Tyrian name;
 urit atrox Iuno, et sub noctem cura recursat.
 And bitter Juno burneth her, and care the night doth wake:
 Ergo his aligerum dictis adfatur Amorem:
 Now therefore to the winged Love such words as this she spake:
 'Nate, meae vires, mea magna potentia solus,
 "O son, my might, my only might, who fearest nought at all
 nate, patris summi qui tela Typhoia temnis, 665
 How his, the highest Father's bolts, Typhoeus' bane, may fall,
 ad te confugio et supplex tua numina posco.
 To thee I flee, and suppliant so thy godhead's power beseech:
 Frater ut Aeneas pelago tuus omnia circum
 Thy brother, e'en Æneas, tossed on every sea-side beach
 litora iactetur odiis Iunonis iniquae,
 Thou knowest; all the fashioning of wrongful Juno's hate
 nota tibi, et nostro doluisti saepe dolore.
 Thou knowest; oft upon my grief with sorrow wouldst thou wait.
 Hunc Phoenissa tenet Dido blandisque moratur 670
 Him now Phoenician Dido holds, and with kind words enow
 vocibus; et vereor, quo se Iunonia vertant
 Delays him there, but unto what Junonian welcomes grow

hospitia; haud tanto cessabit cardine rerum.

I fear me: will she hold her hand when thus the hinge is dight?

Quocirca capere ante dolis et cingere flamma

Now therefore am I compassing to catch their craft in flight,

reginam meditor, ne quo se numine mutet,

To ring the Queen about with flame that her no power may turn,

sed magno Aeneae mecum teneatur amore. 675

That she may cling to me and sore for mine Æneas yearn.

Qua facere id possis, nostram nunc accipe mentem.

Now hearken how I counsel thee to bring about my will:

Regius accitu cari genitoris ad urbem

The kingly boy his father calls, he whom I cherish still,

Sidoniam puer ire parat, mea maxima cura,

To that Sidonian city now is ready dight to fare,

dona ferens, pelago et flammis restantia Troiae:

And gifts, the gleanings of the sea and flames of Troy, doth bear,

hunc ego sopitum somno super alta Cythera 680

Whom soaked in sleep forthwith will I in high Cythera hide,

aut super Idalium sacrata sede recondam,

Or in Idalium's holy place where I am wont to bide,

ne qua scire dolos mediusve occurrere possit.

Lest any one the guile should know and thrust themselves between:

Tu faciem illius noctem non amplius unam

But thou with craft his fashion feign, and with his face be seen

falle dolo, et notos pueri puer indue voltus,

Well known of all, for no more space than one night's wearing by;

ut, cum te gremio accipiet laetissima Dido 685

And so, when Dido, gladdest grown, shall take thee up to lie

regalis inter mensas laticemque Lyæum,

Upon her breast 'twixt queenly board and great Lyæus' wave,

cum dabit amplexus atque oscula dulcia figet,

And thou the winding of her arms and kisses sweet shalt have,

occultum inspires ignem fallasque veneno.'

Then breathe the hidden flame in her and forge thy venom'd guile."

Paret Amor dictis carae genetricis, et alas

His lovesome mother Love obeyed, and doffed his wings awhile,

exuit, et gressu gaudens incedit Iuli. 690

And as Iulus goeth now rejoicing on his way.
At Venus Ascanio placidam per membra quietem
But Venus all Ascanius' limbs in quiet rest doth lay,
inrigat, et fotum gremio dea tollit in altos
And cherished in her goddess' breast unto Idalian groves
Idaliae lucos, ubi mollis amaracus illum
She bears him, where the marjoram still soft about him moves
floribus et dulci adspirans complectitur umbra.
And breatheth sweet from scented shade and blossoms on the air.
Iamque ibat dicto parens et dona Cupido 695
Love wrought her will, and bearing now those royal gifts and rare,
regia portabat Tyriis, duce laetus Achate.
Unto the Tyrians joyous went, e'en as Achates led.
Cum venit, aulaeis iam se regina superbis
But when he came into the house, there on her golden bed
aurea composuit sponda mediamque locavit.
With hangings proud Queen Dido lay amidmost of the place:
Iam pater Aeneas et iam Troiana iuventus
The father then, Æneas, then the youth of Trojan race,
conveniunt, stratoque super discumbitur ostro. 700
There gather, and their bodies cast on purple spread abroad.
Dant famuli manibus lymphas, Cereremque canistris
Folk serve them water for their hands, and speed the baskets stored
expediunt, tonsisque ferunt mantelia villis.
With Ceres, and the towels soft of close-clipped nap they bear.
Quinquaginta intus famulae, quibus ordine longam
Within were fifty serving-maids, whose long array had care
cura penum struere, et flammis adolere Penatis;
To furnish forth the meat and drink, and feed the house-gods' flame;
centum aliae totidemque pares aetate ministri, 705
An hundred more, and youths withal of age and tale the same,
qui dapibus mensas onerent et pocula ponant.
Set on the meat upon the board and lay the cups about.
Nec non et Tyrii per limina laeta frequentes
And now through that wide joyous door came thronging from without
convenere, toris iussi discumbere pictis.

The Tyrians, and, so bidden, lie on benches painted fair.
 Mirantur dona Aeneae, mirantur Iulum
 They wonder at Æneas' gifts, and at Iulus there,
 flagrantisque dei voltus simulataque verba, ⁷¹⁰
 The flaming countenance of God, and speech so feigned and fine;
 [pallamque et pictum croceo velamen acantho.]
 They wonder at the cope and veil with that acanthus twine.
 Praecipue infelix, pesti devota futurae,
 And chiefly that unhappy one doomed to the coming ill,
 expleri mentem nequit ardescitque tuendo
 Nor hungry hollow of her heart nor burning eyes may fill
 Phoenissa, et pariter puero donisque movetur.
 With all beholding: gifts and child alike her heart do move.
 Ille ubi complexu Aeneae colloque pependit ⁷¹⁵
 But he, when he had satisfied his feignèd father's love,
 et magnum falsi implevit genitoris amorem,
 And clipped Æneas all about, and round his neck had hung,
 reginam petit haec oculis, haec pectore toto
 Went to the Queen, who with her eyes and heart about him clung,
 haeret et interdum gremio fovet, inscia Dido,
 And whiles would strain him to her breast — poor Dido! knowing nought
 insadat quantus miserae deus; at memor ille
 What God upon her bosom sat; who ever had in thought matris Acidaliae paulatim abolere Sychaeum ⁷²⁰
 His Acidalian mother's word, and slowly did begin
 incipit, et vivo temptat praevertere amore
 To end Sychæus quite, and with a living love to win
 iam pridem resides animos desuetaque corda.
 Her empty soul at rest, and heart unused a weary tide.
 Postquam prima quies epulis, mensaeque remotae,
 But when the feasting first was stayed, and boards were done aside,
 crateras magnos statuunt et vina coronant.
 Great beakers there they set afoot, and straight the wine they crowned.
 Fit strepitus tectis, vocemque per ampla volutant ⁷²⁵
 A shout goes up within the house, great noise they roll around

atria; dependent lychni laquearibus aureis

The mighty halls: the candles hang adown from golden roof
incensi, et noctem flammis funalia vincunt.

All lighted, and the torches' flame keeps dusky night aloof.

Hic regina gravem gemmis auroque poposcit

And now a heavy bowl of gold and gems the Queen bade bring implevitque mero pateram, quam Belus et omnes

And fill with all unwatered wine, which erst used Belus king,
a Belo soliti; tum facta silentia tectis: 730

And all from Belus come: therewith through the hushed house she said:

‘Iuppiter, hospitibus nam te dare iura loquuntur,

“O Jupiter! they say by thee the guesting laws were made;

hunc laetum Tyriisque diem Troiaque profectis

Make thou this day to Tyrian folk, and folk come forth from Troy,
esse velis, nostrosque huius meminisse minores.

A happy day, and may our sons remember this our joy!

Adsit laetitiae Bacchus dator, et bona Iuno;

Mirth-giver Bacchus, fail thou not from midst our mirth! be kind,
et vos, O, coetum, Tyrii, celebrate faventes.’ 735

O Juno! and ye Tyrian folk, be glad this bond to bind!”

Dixit, et in mensam laticum libavit honorem,

She spake, and on the table poured the glorious wave of wine,
primaque, libato, summo tenuis attigit ore,

Then touched the topmost of the bowl with dainty lip and fine,
tum Bitiae dedit increpitans; ille impiger hausit

And, egging on, to Bitias gave: nought slothful to be told
spumantem pateram, et pleno se proluit auro

The draught he drained, who bathed himself within the foaming
gold;

post alii procures. Cithara crinitus Iopas 740

Then drank the other lords of them: long-haired Iopas then
personat aurata, docuit quem maximus Atlas.

Maketh the golden harp to sing, whom Atlas most of men

Hic canit errantem lunam solisque labores;

Erst taught: he sings the wandering moon and toiling of the sun,
unde hominum genus et pecudes; unde imber et ignes;

And whence the kind of men and beasts, how rain and fire begun,
Arcturum pluviasque Hyadas geminosque Triones;
Arcturus, the wet Hyades, and twin-wrought Northern Bears:
quid tantum Oceano properent se tingere soles 745
And why so swift the winter sun unto his sea-bath fares,
hiberni, vel quae tardis mora noctibus obstet.
And what delayeth night so long upon the daylight's hem.
Ingeminant plausu Tyrii, Troesque sequuntur.
Then praise on praise the Tyrians shout, the Trojans follow them.
Nec non et vario noctem sermone trahebat
Meanwhile unhappy Dido wore the night-tide as it sank
infelix Dido, longumque bibebat amorem,
In diverse talk, and evermore long draughts of love she drank,
multa super Priamo rogitant, super Hectore multa; 750
And many a thing of Priam asked, of Hector many a thing:
nunc quibus Aurorae venisset filius armis,
With what-like arms Aurora's son had come unto the King;
nunc quales Diomedis equi, nunc quantus Achilles.
What were the steeds of Diomed, how great Achilles was.
'Immo age, et a prima dic, hospes, origine nobis
At last she said: "But come, O guest, tell all that came to pass
insidias,' inquit, 'Danaum, casusque tuorum,
From earliest tide; of Danaan craft, and how thy land was lorn,
erroresque tuos; nam te iam septima portat 755
And thine own wanderings; for as now the seventh year is worn
omnibus errantem terris et fluctibus aestas.'
That thee a-straying wide away o'er earth and sea hath borne."

The Meeting of Dido and Aeneas by Nathaniel Dance Holland, 1801

LIBER II

BOOK II.

Conticuere omnes intentique ora tenebant
All hearkened hushed, and fixed on him was every face of man,
inde toro pater Aeneas sic orsus ab alto:
As from the couch high set aloft Æneas thus began:
Infandum, regina, iubes renouare dolorem,
“Unutterable grief, O Queen, thou biddest me renew
Troianas ut opes et lamentabile regnum
The falling of the Trojan weal and realm that all shall rue
eruerint Danaï, quaeque ipse miserrima uidi 5
‘Neath Danaan might; which thing myself unhappy did behold,
et quorum pars magna fui. quis talia fando
Yea, and was no small part thereof. What man might hear it told Myrmidonum Dolopumue aut duri miles Vlixī
Of Dolopes, or Myrmidons, or hard Ulysses’ band,
temperet a lacrimis? et iam nox umida caelo
And keep the tears back? Dewy night now falleth from the land praecipitat suadentque cadentia sidera somnos.
Of heaven, and all the setting stars are bidding us to sleep:
sed si tantus amor casus cognoscere nostros 10
But if to know our evil hap thy longing is so deep,
et breuiter Troiae supremum audire laborem,
If thou wilt hear a little word of Troy’s last agony,
quamquam animus meminisse horret luctuque refugit,
Though memory shuddereth, and my heart shrunk up in grief doth lie,
incipiam. fracti bello fatisque repulsi
I will begin. By battle broke, and thrust aback by Fate
ductores Danaum tot iam labentibus annis
Through all the wearing of the years, the Danaan lords yet wait
instar montis equum diuina Palladis arte 15
And build a horse up mountain-huge by Pallas’ art divine,
aedificant, sectaque intexunt abiete costas;

Fair fashioning the ribs thereof with timbers of the pine,
uotum pro reditu simulant; ea fama uagatur.

And feign it vowed for safe return, and let the fame fly forth.

huc delecta uirum sortiti corpora furtim

Herein by stealth a sort of men chosen for bodies' worth
includunt caeco lateri penitusque cauernas

Amid its darkness do they shut; the caverns inly lost
ingentis utrumque armato milite complent. 20

Deep in the belly of the thing they fill with armed host.

est in conspectu Tenedos, notissima fama

In sight of Troy lies Tenedos, an island known of all,

insula, diues opum Priami dum regna manebant,

And rich in wealth before the realm of Priam had its fall,

nunc tantum sinus et statio male fida carinis:

Now but a bay and roadstead poor, where scarcely ships may ride.

huc se prouecti deserto in litore condunt;

So thither now they sail away in desert place to hide.

nos abiisse rati et uento petiisse Mycenae. 25

We thought them gone, and that they sought Mycenæ on a wind,

ergo omnis longo soluit se Teucra luctu;

Whereat the long-drawn grief of Troy fell off from every mind.

panduntur portae, iuuat ire et Dorica castra

The gates are opened; sweet it is the Dorian camp to see,

desertosque uidere locos litusque relictum:

The dwellings waste, the shore all void where they were wont to be:

hic Dolopum manus, hic saeuus tendebat Achilles;

Here dwelt the band of Dolopes, here was Achilles set,

classibus hic locus, hic acie certare solebant. 30

And this was where their ships were beached; here edge to edge we met.

pars stupet innuptae donum exitiale Mineruae

Some wonder at unwedded maid Minerva's gift of death,

et molem mirantur equi; primusque Thymoetes

That baneful mountain of a horse; and first Thymoetes saith

duci intra muros hortatur et arce locari,

'Twere good in walls to lead the thing, on topmost burg to stand;

siue dolo seu iam Troiae sic fata ferebant.

Whether such word the fate of Troy or evil treason planned
 at Capys, et quorum melior sententia menti, 35
 I know not: Capys and the rest, who better counsel have,
 aut pelago Danaum insidias suspectaque dona
 Bid take the fashioned guile of Greeks, the doubtful gift they gave,
 praecipitare iubent subiectisque urere flammis,
 To tumble it adown to sea, with piled-up fire to burn,
 aut terebrare cauas uteri et temptare latebras.
 Or bore the belly of the beast its hidden holes to learn;
 scinditur incertum studia in contraria uulgus.
 So cleft atwain is rede of men abiding there in doubt.
 Primus ibi ante omnis magna comitante caterua 40
 But first before all others now with much folk all about
 Laocoon ardens summa decurrit ab arce,
 Laocoon the fiery man runs from the burg adown,
 et procul 'o miseri, quae tanta insania, ciues?
 And shouts from far: 'O wretched men, how hath such madness grown?
 creditis auectos hostis? aut ulla putatis
 Deem ye the foe hath fared away? Deem ye that Danaan gifts
 dona carere dolis Danaum? sic notus Vlixes?
 May ever lack due share of guile? Are these Ulysses' shifts?
 aut hoc inclusi ligno occultantur Achiui, 45
 For either the Achæans lurk within this fashioned tree,
 aut haec in nostros fabricata est machina muros,
 Or 'tis an engine wrought with craft bane of our walls to be,
 inspectura domos uenturaque desuper urbi,
 To look into our very homes, and scale the town perforce:
 aut aliquis latet error; equo ne credite, Teucri.
 Some guile at least therein abides: Teucrians, trust not the horse!
 quidquid id est, timeo Danaos et dona ferentis.'
 Whatso it is, the Danaan folk, yea gift-bearing I fear.'
 sic fatus ualidis ingentem uiribus hastam 50
 Thus having said, with valiant might he hurled a huge-wrought spear
 in latus inque feri curuam compagibus aluum
 Against the belly of the beast swelled out with rib and stave;
 contorsit. stetit illa tremens, uteroque recusso

It stood a-trembling therewithal; its hollow caverns gave
insonuere cauae gemitumque dedere cauernae.
From womb all shaken with the stroke a mighty sounding groan.
et, si fata deum, si mens non laeua fuisset,
And but for God's heart turned from us, for God's fate fixed and known,
impulerat ferro Argolicas foedare latebras, 55
He would have led us on with steel to foul the Argive den,
Troiaque nunc staret, Priamique arx alta maneres.
And thou, O Troy, wert standing now, thou Priam's burg as then!
Ecce, manus iuuenem interea post terga reuinctum
But lo, where Dardan shepherds lead, with plenteous clamour round,
pastores magno ad regem clamore trahebant
A young man unto Priam's place with hands behind him bound,
Dardanidae, qui se ignotum uenientibus ultro,
Who privily had thrust himself before their way e'en now
hoc ipsum ut strueret Troiamque aperiret Achiuis, 60
The work to crown, and into Troy an open way to show
obtulerat, fidens animi atque in utrumque paratus,
Unto the Greeks; a steadfast soul, prepared for either end,
seu uersare dolos seu certae occumbere morti.
Or utterly to work his craft or unto death to bend.
undique uisendi studio Troiana iuuentus
Eager to see him as he went around the Trojans flock
circumfusa ruit certantque inludere capto.
On every side, and each with each contend the man to mock.
accipe nunc Danaum insidias et crimine ab uno 65
Lo now, behold the Danaan guile, and from one wrong they wrought
disce omnis.
Learn ye what all are like to be. For as he stood in sight of all,
bewildered, weaponless,
namque ut conspectu in medio turbatus, inermis
And let his eyes go all around the gazing Phrygian press,
constitit atque oculis Phrygia agmina circumspexit,
He spake: 'What land shall have me now, what sea my head shall hide?
'heu, quae nunc tellus,' inquit, 'quae me aequora possunt

What then is left of deed to do that yet I must abide?
 accipere? aut quid iam misero mihi denique restat, 70
 No place I have among the Greeks, and Dardan folk withal
 cui neque apud Danaos usquam locus, et super ipsi
 My foemen are, and bloody end, due doom, upon me call.'
 Dardanidae infensi poenas cum sanguine poscunt?'
 And with that wail our hearts were turned, and somewhat backward hung
 quo gemitu conuersi animi compressus et omnis
 The press of men: we bade him say from whence his blood was sprung,
 impetus. hortamur fari quo sanguine cretus,
 And what he did, and if indeed a captive we might trust;
 quidue ferat; memoret quae sit fiducia capto. 75
 So thus he spake when now all fear from off his heart was thrust:
 'Cuncta equidem tibi, rex, fuerit quodcumque, fatebor 77
 'Whatso betide, to thee, O King, the matter's verity
 uera,' inquit; 'neque me Argolica de gente negabo.
 Will I lay bare unto the end, nor Argive blood deny:
 hoc primum; nec, si miserum Fortuna Sinonem
 This firstly; for if Fate indeed shaped Sinon for all bale
 finxit, uanum etiam mendacemque improba finget. 80
 To make him liar and empty fool her worst may not avail.
 fando aliquod si forte tuas peruenit ad auris
 Perchance a rumour of men's talk about your ears hath gone,
 Belidae nomen Palamedis et incluta fama
 Telling of Palamedes' fame and glory that he won,
 gloria, quem falsa sub prodicione Pelasgi
 The son of Belus: traitors' word undid him innocent;
 insontem infando indicio, quia bella uetabat,
 By unjust doom for banning war the way of death he went,
 demisere neci, nunc cassum lumine lugent: 85
 Slain by Pelasgian men, that now his quenched light deplore.
 illi me comitem et consanguinitate propinquum
 Fellow to him, and nigh akin, I went unto the war,
 pauper in arma pater primis huc misit ab annis.
 Sent by my needy father forth, e'en from my earliest years;

dum stabat regno incolumis regumque uigebat
 Now while he reigned in health, a king fair blooming mid his peers
 conciliis, et nos aliquod nomenque decusque
 In council of the kings, I too had share of name and worth.
 gessimus. inuidia postquam pellacis Vlixī 90
 But after he had gone his way from land of upper earth,
 (haud ignota loquor) superis concessit ab oris,
 Thrust down by sly Ulysses' hate, (I tell all men's belief),
 adflictus uitam in tenebris luctuque trahebam
 Then beaten down I dragged my life through shadowy ways of grief,
 et casum insontis mecum indignabar amici.
 And heavily I took the death of him my sackless friend,
 nec tacui demens et me, fors si qua tulisset,
 Nor held my peace, O fool! but vowed revenge if time should send
 si patrios umquam remeassem uictor ad Argos, 95
 A happy tide; if I should come to Argos any more,
 promisi ultorem et uerbis odia aspera moui.
 A victor then: so with my words I drew down hatred sore.
 hinc mihi prima mali labes, hinc semper Vlixes
 This was the first fleck of my ill; Ulysses ever now
 criminibus terrere nouis, hinc spargere uoces
 Would threaten with some new-found guilt, and mid the folk would sow
 in uulgum ambiguas et quaerere conscius arma.
 Dark sayings, and knowing what was toward, sought weapons new at
 need;
 nec requieuit enim, donec Calchante ministro — 100
 Nor wearied till with Calchas now to help him to the deed. —
 sed quid ego haec autem nequiquam ingrata reuoluo,
 — But why upturn these ugly things, or spin out time for nought?
 quidue moror? si omnis uno ordine habetis Achiuos,
 For if ye deem all Greekish men in one same mould are wrought:
 idque audire sat est, iamdudum sumite poenas:
 It is enough. Come make an end; Ulysses' hope fulfil!
 hoc Ithacus uelit et magno mercentur Atridae.'
 With great price would the Atridae buy such working of their will.'
 Tum uero ardemus scitari et quaerere causas, 105

Then verily to know the thing and reach it deep we burned,
ignari scelerum tantorum artisque Pelasgae.
So little in Pelasgian guile and evil were we learned.
prosequitur pauitans et ficto pectore fatur:
He takes the tale up; fluttering-voiced from lying heart he speaks:
‘Saepe fugam Danai Troia cupiere relictā
‘The longing to be gone from Troy fell oft upon the Greeks,
moliri et longo fessi discedere bello;
And oft they fain had turned their backs on war without an end,
fecissentque utinam! saepe illos aspera ponti 110
(I would they had), and oft as they were e’en at point to wend
interclusit hiems et terruit Auster euntis.
A tempest would forbid the sea, or southern gale would scare,
praecipue cum iam hic trabibus contextus acernis
And chiefly when with maple-beams this horse that standeth here
staret equus, toto sonuerunt aethere nimbi.
They fashioned, mighty din of storm did all the heavens fulfil.
suspensi Eurypylum scitatum oracula Phoebi
So held aback, Eurypylus we sent to learn the will
mittimus, isque adytis haec tristia dicta reportat: 115
Of Phoebus: from the shrine he brought such heavy words as these:
“sanguine placastis uentos et uirgine caesa,
With blood and with a virgin’s death did ye the winds appease
cum primum Iliacas, Danai, uenistis ad oras;
When first ye came, O Danaan folk, unto the Ilian shore;
sanguine quaerendi reditus animaque litandum
With blood and with an Argive soul the Gods shall ye adore
Argolica.” uulgi quae uox ut uenit ad auris,
For your return. ‘Now when that word men’s ears had gone about
obstipuerunt animi gelidusque per ima cucurrit 120
Their hearts stood still, and tremors cold took all their bones for doubt
ossa tremor, cui fata parent, quem poscat Apollo.
What man the Fates had doomed thereto, what man Apollo would.
hic Ithacus uatem magno Calchanta tumultu
Amidst us then the Ithacan drags in with clamour rude
protrahit in medios; quae sint ea numina diuum

Calchas the seer, and wearieth him the Gods' will to declare.

flagitat. et mihi iam multi crudele caneant

Of that craftsman's cruel guile had many bade beware

artificis scelus, et taciti uentura uidebant. 125

In words, and many silently foresaw the coming death.

bis quinos silet ille dies tectusque recusat

Twice five days Calchas holdeth peace and, hidden, gainsayeth

prodere uoce sua quemquam aut opponere morti.

To speak the word that any man to very death should cast,

uix tandem, magnis Ithaci clamoribus actus,

Till hardly, by Ulysses' noise sore driven, at the last

composito rumpit uocem et me destinat arae.

He brake out with the speech agreed, and on me laid the doom;

adsensere omnes et, quae sibi quisque timebat, 130

All cried assent, and what each man feared on himself might come,

unius in miseri exitium conuersa tulere.

'Gainst one poor wretch's end of days with ready hands they bear.

iamque dies infanda aderat; mihi sacra parari

Now came the evil day; for me the rites do men prepare,

et salsae fruges et circum tempora uittae.

The salted cakes, the holy strings to do my brows about.

eripui, fateor, leto me et uincula rupi,

I needs must say I brake my bonds, from Death's house gat me out,

limosoque lacu per noctem obscurus in ulua 135

And night-long lay amid the sedge by muddy marish side

delitui dum uela darent, si forte dedissent.

Till they spread sail, if they perchance should win their sailing tide.

nec mihi iam patriam antiquam spes ulla uidendi

Nor have I hope to see again my fatherland of old;

nec dulcis natos exoptatumque parentem,

My longed-for father and sweet sons I never shall behold;

quos illi fors et poenas ob nostra reposcent

On whom the guilt of me who fled may happen men will lay,

effugia, et culpam hanc miserorum morte piabunt. 140

And with their death for my default the hapless ones shall pay.

quod te per superos et conscia numina ueri,

But by the might of very God, all sooth that knoweth well,

per si qua est quae restet adhuc mortalibus usquam
 By all the unstained faith that yet mid mortal men doth dwell,
 intemerata fides, oro, miserere laborum
 If aught be left, I pray you now to pity such distress!
 tantorum, miserere animi non digna ferentis.
 Pity a heart by troubles tried beyond its worthiness!
 His lacrimis uitam damus et miserescimus ultro. 145
 His weeping won his life of us, and pity thereunto,
 ipse uiro primus manicas atque arta leuari
 And Priam was the first who bade his irons to undo,
 uincla iubet Priamus dictisque ita fatur amicis:
 And hand-bonds, and in friendly words unto the man he speaks:
 ‘quisquis es, amissos hinc iam obliuiscere Graios
 ‘Whoso thou art, henceforward now forget thy missing Greeks;
 (noster eris) mihi quae haec edissere uera roganti:
 Thou shalt be ours: but learn me now, who fain the sooth would wot,
 quo molem hanc immanis equi statuere? quis auctor? 150
 Wherefore they built this world of horse, what craftsman him begot,
 quidue petunt? quae religio? aut quae machina belli?’
 And what to do? What gift for Gods; what gin of war is he?’
 dixerat. ille dolis instructus et arte Pelasga
 He spake. The other, wise in guile and Greekish treachery,
 sustulit exutas uinclis ad sidera palmas:
 Both palms of his from bonds new-freed raised toward the stars above,
 ‘uos, aeterni ignes, et non uiolabile uestrum
 And, ‘O eternal fires!’ he cried, ‘O might that none may move,
 testor numen,’ ait, ‘uos arae ensesque nefandi, 155
 Bear witness now! ye altar-stones, ye wicked swords I fled,
 quos fugi, uitaeque deum, quas hostia gessi:
 Ye holy fillets of the Gods bound round my fore-doomed head,
 fas mihi Graiorum sacrata resolvere iura,
 That I all hallowed Greekish rites may break and do aright,
 fas odisse uiros atque omnia ferre sub auras,
 That I may hate the men and bring all hidden things to light
 si qua tegunt, teneor patriae nec legibus ullis.
 If aught lie hid; nor am I held by laws my country gave!

tu modo promissis maneat seruataque serues 160

But thou, O Troy, abide by troth, and well thy saviour save,
Troia fidem, si uera feram, si magna rependam.

If truth I bear thee, if great things for great I pay thee o'er!
omnis spes Danaum et coepti fiducia belli

'All hope the Danaans had, all trust for speeding on the war
Palladis auxiliis semper stetit. impius ex quo

On Pallas' aid was ever set: yet came a day no less

Tydidēs sed enim scelerumque inuentor Vlixēs,

When godless Diomed and he, well-spring of wickedness,
fatale adgressi sacrato auellere templo 165

Ulysses, brake the holy place that they by stealth might gain
Palladium caesis summae custodibus arcis,

The fate-fulfilled Palladium, when, all the burg-guards slain,
corripuere sacram effigiem manibusque cruentis

They caught the holy image up, and durst their bloody hands
uirgineas ausi diuiae contingere uittas,

Lay on the awful Goddess there and touch her holy bands:
ex illo fluere ac retro sublapsa referri

The flood-tide of the Danaan hope ebbed from that very day;
spes Danaum, fractae uires, auersa deae mens. 170

Might failed them, and the Goddess-maid turned all her heart away:
nec dubiis ea signa dedit Tritonia monstis.

Token whereof Tritonia gave by portent none might doubt:
uix positum castris simulacrum: arsere coruscae

Scarce was the image set in camp when suddenly flashed out
luminibus flammae arrectis, salsusque per artus

Fierce fire from staring eyes of her, and salt sweat oozed and fell
sudor iit, terque ipsa solo (mirabile dictu)

O'er all her limbs, and she from earth, O wonderful to tell!
emicuit parmamque ferens hastamque tementem. 175

Leapt thrice, still holding in her hand the quivering spear and shield:
extemplo temptanda fuga canit aequora Calchas,

Then Calchas bade us turn to flight across the wavy field,
nec posse Argolicis exscindi Pergama telis

Singing how ruin of Pergamos the Argive steel shall lack,
omina ni repetant Argis numenque reducant

Till Argos give the signs again, and we the God bring back
 quod pelago et curuis secum auexere carinis.
 In hollow of the curved keel across the tumbling main.
 et nunc quod patrias uento petiere Mycenae, ¹⁸⁰
 And this is why they sought their home, Mycenæ's land, again,
 arma deosque parant comites pelagoque remenso
 And there they dight them arms and God, and presently unwares
 improuisi aderunt; ita digerit omina Calchas.
 Will be on you across the sea — Calchas such doom declares.
 hanc pro Palladio moniti, pro numine laeso
 So warned hereby for Godhead's hurt, in stolen Palladium's stead,
 effigiem statuere, nefas quae triste piaret.
 Atonement for their heavy guilt, this horse they fashionèd.
 hanc tamen immensam Calchas attollere molem ¹⁸⁵
 But him indeed did Calchas bid to pile so mountain-high
 roboribus textis caeloque educere iussit,
 With such a might of mingled beams, and lead up to the sky,
 ne recipi portis aut duci in moenia posset,
 Lest it within the gates should come, or mid the walls, and lest
 neu populum antiqua sub religione tueri.
 Beneath their ancient Pallas-faith the people safe should rest.
 nam si uestra manus uiolasset dona Mineruae,
 For if upon Minerva's gift ye lay a godless hand,
 tum magnum exitium (quod di prius omen in ipsum ¹⁹⁰ Then mighty ruin (and would to God before his face might stand conuertant!) Priami imperio Phrygibusque futurum;
 That ruin instead) on Priam's might, and Phrygian folk shall fall.
 sin manibus uestris uestram ascendisset in urbem,
 But if your hands shall lead it up within the city wall,
 ultro Asiam magno Pelopea ad moenia bello
 Then Asia, free and willing it, to Pelops' house shall come
 uenturam, et nostros ea fata manere nepotes.'
 With mighty war; and that same fate our sons shall follow home.'
 Talibus insidiis periurique arte Sinon ¹⁹⁵
 Caught by such snares and crafty guile of Sinon the forsworn,
 credita res, captique dolis lacrimisque coactis
 By lies and lies, and tears forced forth there were we overborne;

quos neque Tydides nec Larisaeus Achilles,
We, whom Tydides might not tame, nor Larissæan king
non anni domuere decem, non mille carinae.
Achilles; nor the thousand ships, and ten years' wearying.
Hic aliud maius miseris multoque tremendum
But now another, greater hap, a very birth of fear,
obicitur magis atque improuida pectora turbat. 200
Was thrust before us wretched ones, our sightless hearts to stir.
Laocoon, ductus Neptuno sorte sacerdos,
Laocoon, chosen out by lot for mighty Neptune's priest,
sollemnis taurum ingentem mactabat ad aras.
Would sacrifice a mighty bull at altars of the feast;
ecce autem gemini a Tenedo tranquilla per alta
When lo, away from Tenedos, o'er quiet of the main
(horresco referens) immensis orbibus angues
(I tremble in the tale) we see huge coils of serpents twain
incumbunt pelago pariterque ad litora tendunt; 205
Breasting the sea, and side by side swift making for the shore;
pectora quorum inter fluctus arrecta iubaeque
Whose fronts amid the flood were strained, and high their crests upbore
sanguineae superant undas, pars cetera pontum
Blood-red above the waves, the rest swept o'er the sea behind,
pone legit sinuatque immensa uolumine terga.
And all the unmeasured backs of them coil upon coil they wind,
fit sonitus spumante salo; iamque arua tenebant While sends the sea great sound of foam. And now the meads they gained,
ardentisque oculos suffecti sanguine et igni 210
The burning eyes with flecks of blood and streaks of fire are stained,
sibila lambebant linguis uibrantibus ora.
Their mouths with hisses all fulfilled are licked by flickering tongue.
diffugimus uisu exsanguis. illi agmine certo
Bloodless we flee the sight, but they fare steadfastly along
Laocoonta petunt; et primum parua duorum
Unto Laocoon; and first each serpent round doth reach
corpora natorum serpens amplexus uterque

One little body of his sons, and knitting each to each,
 implicat et miseros morsu depascitur artus; 215
 And winding round and round about, the unhappy body gnaws:
 post ipsum auxilio subeuntem ac tela ferentem
 And then himself, as sword in hand anigh for help he draws,
 corripiunt spirisque ligant ingentibus; et iam
 They seize and bind about in coils most huge, and presently
 bis medium amplexi, bis collo squamea circum
 Are folded twice about his midst, twice round his neck they tie
 terga dati superant capite et ceruicibus altis.
 Their scaly backs, and hang above with head and toppling mane,
 ille simul manibus tendit diuellere nodos 220
 While he both striveth with his hands to rend their folds atwain,
 perfusus sanie uittas atroque ueneno,
 His fillets covered o'er with blood and venom black and fell,
 clamores simul horrendos ad sidera tollit:
 And starward sendeth forth withal a cry most horrible,
 qualis mugitus, fugit cum saucius aram
 The roaring of a wounded bull who flees the altar-horn
 taurus et incertam excussit ceruice securim.
 And shaketh from his crest away the axe unhandy borne.
 at gemini lapsu delubra ad summa dracones 225
 But fleeing to the shrines on high do those two serpents glide,
 effugiunt saeuaeque petunt Tritonidis arcem,
 And reach the hard Tritonia's house, and therewithin they hide
 sub pedibusque deae clipeique sub orbe teguntur.
 Beneath the Goddess' very feet and orbèd shield of dread;
 tum uero tremefacta nouus per pectora cunctis
 Then through our quaking hearts indeed afresh the terror spread,
 insinuat paupor, et scelus expendisse merentem
 And all men say Laocoon hath paid but worthily
 Laocoonta ferunt, sacrum qui cuspidè robur 230
 For guilt of his, and hurt of steel upon the holy tree,
 laeserit et tergo sceleratam intorserit hastam.
 When that unhappy wicked spear against its flank he threw.
 ducendum ad sedes simulacrum orandaque diuæ
 They cry to lead the image on to holy house and due,

numina conclamant.

And Pallas' godhead to adore.

diuidimus muros et moenia pandimus urbis.

We break adown our rampart walls and bare the very town:

accingunt omnes operi pedibusque rotarum 235

All gird themselves unto the work, set wheels that it may glide
subiciunt lapsus, et stuppea uincula collo

Beneath his feet, about his neck the hempen bond is tied
intendunt; scandit fatalis machina muros

To warp it on: up o'er the walls so climbs the fateful thing
feta armis. pueri circum innuptaeque puellae

Fruitful of arms; and boys about and unwed maidens sing
sacra canunt funemque manu contingere gaudent;

The holy songs, and deem it joy hand on the ropes to lay.
illa subit mediaeque minans inlabitur urbi. 240

It enters; through the city's midst it wends its evil way.

o patria, o diuum domus Ilium et incluta bello

O land! O Ilium, house of Gods! O glorious walls of war!

moenia Dardanidum! quater ipso in limine portae

Dardan walls! — four times amidst the threshold of our door
substitit atque utero sonitum quater arma dedere;

It stood: four times with sound of arms the belly of it rung;
instamus tamen immemores caecique furore

But heedless, maddened hearts and blind, hard on the ropes we hung,
et monstrum infelix sacrata sistimus arce. 245

Nor but amidst the holy burg the monster's feet we stay.

tunc etiam fatis aperit Cassandra futuris

And then Cassandra oped her mouth to tell the fateful day, —
ora dei iussu non umquam credita Teucris.

Her mouth that by the Gods' own doom the Teucrians ne'er might trow.

nos delubra deum miseri, quibus ultimus esset

Then on this day that was our last we bear the joyous bough,
ille dies, festa uelamus fronde per urbem.

Poor wretches! through the town to deck each godhead's holy place.
Vertitur interea caelum et ruit Oceano nox 250

Meanwhile the heavens are faring round, night falls on ocean's face,

inuoluens umbra magna terramque polumque
Enwrapping in her mighty shade all earthly things and sky,
Myrmidonumque dolos; fusi per moenia Teucri
And all the guile of Myrmidons: silent the Teucrians lie
conticuere; sopor fessos complectitur artus.
Through all the town, and Sleep her arms o'er wearied bodies slips.
et iam Argiua phalanx instructis nauibus ibat
And now the Argive host comes forth upon its ordered ships
a Tenedo tacitae per amica silentia lunae 255
From Tenedos, all hushed amid the kind moon's silent ways,
litora nota petens, flammas cum regia puppis
Seeking the well-known strand, when forth there breaks the balefire's blaze
extulerat, fatisque deum defensus iniquis
On the king's deck: and Sinon, kept by Gods' unequal fate,
inclusos utero Danaos et pinea furtim
For Danaans hid in horse's womb undoes the piny gate
laxat claustra Sinon. illos patefactus ad auras
In stealthy wise: them now the horse, laid open to the air,
reddit equus laetique cauo se robore promunt 260
Gives forth again, and glad from out the hollow wood they fare;
Thessandrus Sthenelusque duces et dirus Vlixes,
Thessandrus, Sthenelus, the dukes, and dire Ulysses pass;
demissum lapsi per funem, Acamasque Thoasque
Slipped down along a hanging rope, Thoas and Acamas,
Pelidesque Neoptolemus primusque Machaon
Peleian Neoptolemus, and Machaon the first,
et Menelaus et ipse doli fabricator Epeos.
And Menelaüs, and the man who forged the guile accursed,
inuadunt urbem somno uinoque sepultam; 265
Epeos. Through the city sunk in sleep and wine they break,
caeduntur uigiles, portisque patentibus omnis
Slain are the guards, at gates all oped their fellows in they take,
accipiunt socios atque agmina conscia iungunt.
Till all their bands confederate are met at last in one.
Tempus erat quo prima quies mortalibus aegris
It was the time when that first peace of sick men hath begun,

incipit et dono diuum gratissima serpit.

By very gift of God o'er all in sweetest wise to creep,
in somnis, ecce, ante oculos maestissimus Hector 270

When Hector comes before mine eyes amid the dreams of sleep,
uisus adesse mihi largosque effundere fletus,

Most sorrowful to see he was, and weeping plenteous flood,
raptatus bigis ut quondam, aterque cruento

And e'en as torn behind the car, black with the dust and blood,
puluere perque pedes traiectus lora tumentis.

His feet all swollen with the thong that pierced them through and through.

ei mihi, qualis erat, quantum mutatus ab illo

Woe worth the while for what he was! How changed from him we knew!

Hectore qui redit exuuias indutus Achilli 275

The Hector come from out the fight in arms Achilles lost,

uel Danaum Phrygios iaculatus puppibus ignis!

The Hector that on Danaan decks the Phrygian firebrands tost.

squalentem barbam et concretos sanguine crinis

Foul was his beard, and all his hair was matted up with gore,

uulneraque illa gerens, quae circum plurima muros

And on his body were the wounds, the many wounds he bore

accepit patrios. ultro flens ipse uidebar

Around his Troy. I seemed in sleep, I weeping e'en as he,

compellare uirum et maestas expromere uoces: 280

To speak unto the hero first in voice of misery:

'o lux Dardaniae, spes o fidissima Teucrum,

'O Light of Troy, most faithful hope of all the Teucrian men,

quae tantae tenuere morae? quibus Hector ab oris

What stay hath held thee back so long? from what shore com'st thou then,

exspectate uenis? ut te post multa tuorum

Long-looked-for Hector? that at last, so many died away,

funera, post uarios hominumque urbisque labores

Such toil of city, toil of men, we see thy face today,

defessi aspiciamus! quae causa indigna serenosis 285

We so forewearied? What hath fouled in such an evil wise

foedauit uultus? aut cur haec uulnera cerno?’

Thy cheerful face? what mean these hurts thou showest to mine eyes?’

ille nihil, nec me quaerentem uana moratur,

Nought: nor my questions void and vain one moment turned his speech;

sed grauitur gemitus imo de pectore ducens,

Who from the inmost of his heart a heavy groan did reach:

‘heu fuge, nate dea, teque his’ ait ‘eripe flammis.

‘O Goddess-born, flee forth,’ he said, ‘and snatch thee from the fire!

hostis habet muros; ruit alto a culmine Troia. 290

The foeman hath the walls, and Troy is down from topmost spire.

sat patriae Priamoque datum: si Pergama dextra

For Priam and for country now enough. If any hand

defendi possent, etiam hac defensa fuissent.

Might have kept Pergamos, held up by mine it yet should stand.

sacra suosque tibi commendat Troia penatis;

Her holy things and household gods Troy gives in charge to thee;

hos cape fatorum comites, his moenia quaere

Take these as fellows of thy fate: go forth the walls to see,

magna pererrato statues quae denique ponto.’ 295

The great walls thou shalt build, when thou the sea hast wandered o’er.’

sic ait et manibus uittas Vestamque potentem

He spake, and from the inner shrine forth in his hands he bore

aeternumque adytis effert penetralibus ignem.

Great Vesta, and the holy bands, and fire that never dies.

Diuerso interea miscentur moenia luctu,

Meanwhile the city’s turmoiled woe was wrought in diverse wise,

et magis atque magis, quamquam secreta parentis

And though my father’s house aback apart from all was set,

Anchisae domus arboribusque oblecta recessit, 300

And hedged about with many trees, clearer and clearer yet

clarescunt sonitus armorumque ingruit horror.

The sounds grew on us, ever swelled the weapons’ dread and din.

excutor somno et summi fastigia tecti

I shake off sleep and forthwithal climb up aloft and win

ascensu supero atque arrectis auribus asto:
 To topmost roof: with ears pricked up I stand to hearken all.
 in segetem ueluti cum flamma furentibus Austris
 As when before the furious South the driven flame doth fall
 incidit, aut rapidus montano flumine torrens 305
 Among the corn: or like as when the hill-flood rolls in haste
 sternit agros, sternit sata laeta boumque labores
 To waste the fields and acres glad, the oxen's toil to waste,
 praecipitisque trahit siluas; stupet inscius alto
 Tearing the headlong woods along, while high upon a stone
 accipiens sonitum saxi de uertice pastor.
 The unready shepherd stands amazed, and hears the sound come on.
 tum uero manifesta fides, Danaumque patescunt
 Then was their faith made manifest, then Danaan guile lay bare;
 insidiae. iam Deiphobi dedit ampla ruinam 310
 Deïphobus' wide house e'en now, o'ertopped by Vulcan's flare,
 Volcano superante domus, iam proximus ardet
 Shows forth its fall; Ucalegon's is burning by its side:
 Vcalegon; Sigea igni freta lata relucet.
 The narrow seas Sigæum guards gleam litten far and wide.
 exoritur clamorque uirum clangorque tubarum.
 The shout of men ariseth now, and blaring of the horn,
 arma amens capio; nec sat rationis in armis,
 And mad, I catch my weapons up though idly they be borne;
 sed glomerare manum bello et concurrere in arcem 315
 But burned my heart to gather folk for battle, and set forth
 cum sociis ardent animi; furor iraque mentem
 Upon the burg in fellowship; for fury and great wrath
 praecipitat, pulchrumque mori succurrit in armis.
 Thrust on my heart: to die in arms, it seemed a good reward.
 Ecce autem telis Panthus elapsus Achium,
 But lo, now Panthus newly slipped from 'neath the Achean sword,
 Panthus Othryades, arcis Phoebique sacerdos,
 Panthus the son of Othrys, priest of Phoebus' house on high;
 sacra manu uictosque deos paruumque nepotem 320
 His holy things and vanquished Gods, his little lad thereby
 ipse trahit cursuque amens ad limina tendit.

He drags, and as a madman runs, to gain our doorway set.
'quo res summa loco, Panthu? quam prendimus arcem?'
'Panthus, how fares it at the worst? what stronghold keep we yet?'
uix ea fatus eram gemitu cum talia reddit:
Scarce had I said, when from his mouth a groan and answer fares:
'uenit summa dies et ineluctabile tempus
'Troy's latest day has come on us, a tide no struggling wears:
Dardaniae. fuimus Troes, fuit Ilium et ingens 325
Time was, the Trojans were; time was, and Ilium stood; time was,
gloria Teucrorum; feros omnia Iuppiter Argos
And glory of the Teucrian folk! Jove biddeth all to pass
transtulit; incensa Danaï dominantur in urbe.
To Argos now: in Troy afire the Danaans now are lords;
arduus armatos mediis in moenibus astans
The horse high set amidst the town pours forth a flood of swords,
fundit equus uictorque Sinon incendia miscet
And Sinon, of the victors now, the flame is driving home
insultans. portis alii bipatentibus adsunt, 330
High mocking: by the open gates another sort is come,
milia quot magnis umquam uenere Mycenis;
As many thousands as ere flocked from great Mycenæ yet:
obsedere alii telis angusta uiarum
Others with weapons ready dight the narrow ways beset,
oppositis; stat ferri acies mucrone corusco
And ban all passage; point and edge are glittering drawn and bare
stricta, parata neci; uix primi proelia temptant
Ready for death: and scarcely now the first few gatewards dare
portarum uigiles et caeco Marte resistunt.' 335
The battle, and blind game of Mars a little while debate.'
talibus Othryadae dictis et numine diuum
Spurred by such speech of Othrys' son, and force of godhead great,
in flammis et in arma feror, quo tristis Erinys,
Mid fire and steel I follow on as grim Erinnys shows,
quo fremitus uocat et sublatus ad aethera clamor.
Where call the cries, where calls the shout that ever heavenward goes,
addunt se socios Rhipeus et maximus armis

Rhipheus therewith, and Epytus the mighty under shield,
 Epytus, oblatus per lunam, Hypanisque Dymasque 340
 Dymas and Hypanis withal their fellowship now yield;
 et lateri adglomerant nostro, iuuenisque Coroebus Met by the moon they join my side with young Coroebus; he Mygdonides — illis ad Troiam forte diebus
 The son of Mygdon, at that tide in Troy-town chanced to be;
 uenerat insano Cassandrae incensus amore
 Drawn thither by Cassandra's love that burned within his heart.
 et gener auxilium Priamo Phrygibusque ferebat,
 So he to Priam service gave, and helped the Phrygian part:
 infelix qui non sponsae praecepta furentis 345
 Unhappy! that the warning word of his God-maddened love
 audierit!
 He might not hearken on that day.
 quos ubi confertos ardere in proelia uidi,
 Now when I see them gathered so to dare the battle's pain,
 incipio super his: 'iuuenes, fortissima frustra
 Thus I begin: 'O fellows fair, O hardy hearts in vain!
 pectora, si uobis audentem extrema cupido
 If now ye long to follow me who dares the utterance
 certa sequi, quae sit rebus fortuna uidetis: 350
 And certain end, ye see indeed what wise our matters chance.
 excessere omnes adytis arisque relictis
 The Gods, who in the other days our lordship mighty made,
 di quibus imperium hoc steterat; succurritis urbi
 Are gone from altar and from shrine: a town of flames ye aid.
 incensae. moriamur et in media arma ruamus.
 Fall on a very midst the fire and die in press of war!
 una salus uictis nullam sperare salutem.'
 One hope there is for vanquished men, to cherish hope no more.'
 sic animis iuuenum furor additus. inde, lupi ceu 355
 Therewith the fury of their minds I feed, and thence away,
 raptos atra in nebula, quos improba uentris
 As ravening wolves by night and cloud their bellies' lust obey,
 exegit caecos rabies catulique relictis
 That bitter-sharp is driving on, the while their whelps at home

faucibus expectant siccis, per tela, per hostis
 Dry-jawed await them, so by steel, by crowd of foes we come
 uadimus haud dubiam in mortem mediaeque tenemus
 Into the very death; we hold the city's midmost street,
 urbis iter; nox atra caua circumuolat umbra. 360
 Black night-tide's wings with hollow shade about our goings meet.
 quis cladem illius noctis, quis funera fando
 O ruin and death of that ill night, what tongue may set it forth!
 explicet aut possit lacrimis aequare labores?
 Or who may pay the debt of tears that agony was worth!
 urbs antiqua ruit multos dominata per annos;
 The ancient city overthrown, lord for so many a year,
 plurima perque uias sternuntur inertia passim
 The many bodies of the slain, that, moveless, everywhere
 corpora perque domos et religiosa deorum 365
 Lie in the street, in houses lie, lie round the holy doors
 limina. nec soli poenas dant sanguine Teucri;
 Of Gods. But not alone that night the blood of Teucrians pours,
 quondam etiam uictis redit in praecordia uirtus
 For whiles the valour comes again in vanquished hearts to bide, uictoresque cadunt Danaï. crudelis ubique
 And conquering Danaans fall and die: grim grief on every side, luctus, ubique pauor et plurima mortis imago.
 And fear on every side there is, and many-faced is death.
 Primus se Danaum magna comitante caterua 370
 Androgeus, whom a mighty band of Danaans followeth,
 Androgeos offert nobis, socia agmina credens
 First falleth on the road of us, and, deeming us to be inscius, atque ultro uerbis compellat amicus:
 His fellow-folk, in friendly words he speaketh presently:
 'festinate, uiri! nam quae tam sera moratur
 'Haste on, O men! what sloth is this delayeth so your ways?
 segnities? alii rapiunt incensa feruntque
 While others hand and haul away in Pergamos ablaze;
 Pergama: uos celsis nunc primum a nauibus itis?' 375
 What! fellows, from the lofty ships come ye but even now?'
 dixit, et extemplo (neque enim responsa dabantur

But with the word, no answer had wherein at all to trow,
 fida satis) sensit medios delapsus in hostis.
 He felt him fallen amid the foe, and taken in the snare;
 obstipuit retroque pedem cum uoce repressit.
 Then foot and voice aback he drew, and stood amazèd there,
 improuisum aspris ueluti qui sentibus anguem
 As one who through the thicket thrusts, and unawares doth tread
 pressit humi nitens trepidusque repente refugit 380
 Upon a snake, and starts aback with sudden rush of dread
 attollentem iras et caerulea colla tumentem,
 From gathering anger of the thing and swelling neck of blue:
 haud secus Androgeos uisu tremefactus abibat.
 So, quaking at the sight of us, Androgeus backward drew.
 inruimus densis et circumfundimur armis,
 But we fall on with serried arms and round their rout we crowd,
 ignarosque loci passim et formidine captos
 And fell them knowing nought the place, and with all terror cowed:
 sternimus; aspirat primo Fortuna labori. 385
 So sweet the breath of fortune was on our first handicraft.
 atque hic successu exsultans animisque Coroebus
 But with good-hap and hardihood Coroebus' spirit laughed;
 'o socii, qua prima' inquit 'Fortuna salutis
 'Come, fellows, follow up,' he cries, 'the way that fortune shows
 monstrat iter, quaque ostendit se dextra, sequamur:
 This first of times, and where belike a little kind she grows.
 mutemus clipeos Danaumque insignia nobis
 Change we our shields, and do on us the tokens of the Greeks;
 aptemus. dolus an uirtus, quis in hoste requirat? 390
 Whether with fraud or force he play what man of foeman seeks,
 arma dabunt ipsi.' sic fatus deinde comantem
 Yea, these themselves shall give us arms.' He spake, and forth did bear
 Androgei galeam clipeique insigne decorum
 Androgeus' high-crested helm and shield emblazoned fair,
 induitur laterique Argiium accommodat ensem.
 And did it on, and Argive sword he girt unto his thigh:
 hoc Rhipeus, hoc ipse Dymas omnisque iuuentus

So Rhipeus did, and Dymas did, and all did joyously,
laeta facit: spoliis se quisque recentibus armat. 395

And each man wholly armed himself with plunder newly won.
uadimus immixti Danais haud numine nostro

Then mingled with the Greeks we fare, and no God helps us on,
multaque per caecam congressi proelia noctem

And many a battle there we join amid the eyeless night,
conserimus, multos Danaum demittimus Orco.

And many a Danaan send adown to Orcus from the light:
diffugiunt alii ad nauis et litora cursu

Some fled away unto the ships, some to the safe sea-shore,
fida petunt; pars ingentem formidine turpi 400

Or smitten with the coward's dread climbed the great horse once more

scandunt rursus equum et nota conduntur in aluo.

And there they lie all close within the well-known womb of wood.

Heu nihil inuitis fas quemquam fidere diuis!

Alas! what skills it man to trust in Gods compelled to good?

ecce trahebatur passis Priameia uirgo

For lo, Cassandra, Priam's maid, with hair cast all about,

crinibus a templo Cassandra adytisque Mineruae

From Pallas' house and innermost of holy place dragged out,

ad caelum tendens ardentia lumina frustra, 405

And straining with her burning eyes in vain to heaven aloft;

lumina, nam teneras arcebant uincula palmas.

Her eyes, for they in bonds had bound her tender palms and soft.

non tulit hanc speciem furiata mente Coroebus

Nought bore Coroebus' maddened mind to see that show go by,

et sese medium iniecit periturus in agmen;

And in the middle of their host he flung himself to die,

consequimur cuncti et densis incurrimus armis.

And all we follow and fall on with points together set.

hic primum ex alto delubri culmine telis 410

And first from that high temple-top great overthrow we get

nostrorum obruimur oriturque miserrima caedes

From weapons of our friends, and thence doth hapless death arise

armorum facie et Graiarum errore iubarum.

From error of the Greekish crests and armour's Greekish guise;
 tum Danai gemitu atque ereptae uirginis ira
 Then crying out for taken maid, fulfilled thereat with wrath,
 undique collecti inuadunt, acerrimus Ajax
 The gathered Greeks fall in on us: comes keenest Ajax forth;
 et gemini Atridae Dolopumque exercitus omnis: 415
 The sons of Atreus, all the host of Dolopes are there: —
 aduersi rupto ceu quondam turbine uenti
 As whiles, the knit whirl broken up, the winds together bear
 confligunt, Zephyrusque Notusque et laetus Eois
 And strive, the West wind and the South, the East wind glad and free
 Eurus equis; stridunt siluae saeuitque tridenti
 With Eastland steeds; sore groan the woods; and Nereus stirs the sea
 spumeus atque imo Nereus ciet aequora fundo.
 From lowest deeps, and trident shakes, and foams upon the wave: —
 illi etiam, si quos obscura nocte per umbram 420
 They even to whom by night and cloud great overthrow we gave,
 fudimus insidiis totaque agitauimus urbe,
 Through craft of ours, and drave about through all the town that while,
 apparent; primi clipeos mentitaque tela
 Now show themselves, and know our shields and weapons worn for guile
 agnoscunt atque ora sono discordia signant.
 The first of all; our mouths unmeet for Greekish speech they tell
 ilicet obruimur numero, primusque Coroebus
 Then o'er us sweeps the multitude; and first Coroebus fell
 Penelei dextra diuae armipotentis ad aram 425
 By Peneleus before the Maid who ever in the fight
 procumbit; cadit et Rhipeus, iustissimus unus
 Prevaileth most; fell Rhipeus there, the heedfullest of right
 qui fuit in Teucris et seruantissimus aequi
 Of all among the Teucrian folk, the justest man of men;
 (dis aliter uisum); pereunt Hypanisque Dymasque
 The Gods deemed otherwise. Dymas and Hypanis died then,
 confixi a sociis; nec te tua plurima, Panthu,
 Shot through by friends, and not a whit availed to cover thee,

labentem pietas nec Apollinis infula textit. 430

O Panthus, thine Apollo's bands or plenteous piety.

Iliaci cineres et flamma extrema meorum,

Ashes of Ilium, ye last flames where my beloved ones burned,

testor, in occasu uestro nec tela nec ullas

Bear witness mid your overthrow my face was never turned

uitauisse uices, Danaum et, si fata fuissent

From Danaan steel and Danaan deed! if fate had willed it so

ut caderem, meruisse manu. diuellimur inde,

That I should fall, I earned my wage. Borne thence away, we go

Iphitus et Pelias mecum (quorum Iphitus aevo 435

Pelias and Iphitus and I; but Iphitus was spent

iam grauior, Pelias et uulnere tardus Vlixi),

By eld, and by Ulysses' hurt half halting Pelias went.

protinus ad sedes Priami clamore uocati.

So unto Priam's house we come, called by the clamour there,

hic uero ingentem pugnam, ceu cetera nusquam

Where such a mighty battle was as though none otherwhere

bella forent, nulli tota morerentur in urbe,

Yet burned: as though none others fell in all the town beside.

sic Martem indomitum Danaosque ad tecta ruentis 440

There all unbridled Mars we saw, the Danaans driving wide

cernimus obsessumque acta testudine limen.

Against the house; with shield-roofs' rush the doors thereof beset.

haerent parietibus scalae postisque sub ipsos

The ladders cling unto the walls, men by the door-posts get

nituntur gradibus clipeosque ad tela sinistris

Some foothold up; with shielded left they meet the weapons' rain,

protecti obiciunt, prensant fastigia dextris.

While on the battlements above grip with the right they gain.

Dardanidae contra turreis ac tota domorum 445

The Dardans on the other side pluck roof and pinnacle

culmina conuellunt; his se, quando ultima cernunt,

From off the house; with such-like shot they now, beholding well

extrema iam in morte parant defendere telis,

The end anigh, all death at hand, make ready for the play:

auratasque trabes, ueterum decora alta parentum,

And gilded beams, the pomp and joy of fathers passed away.
 deuoluunt; alii strictis mucronibus imas
 They roll adown, and other some with naked point and edge
 obsedere fores, has seruant agmine denso. 450
 The nether doorways of the place in close arrayment hedge.
 instaurati animi regis succurrere tectis
 Blazed up our hearts again to aid this palace of a king,
 auxilioque leuare uiros uimque addere uictis.
 To stead their toil, to vanquished men a little help to bring.
 Limen erat caecaeque fores et peruius usus
 A door there was, a secret pass into the common way
 tectorum inter se Priami, postesque relictis
 Of all King Priam's houses there, that at the backward lay
 a tergo, infelix qua se, dum regna manebant, 455
 As one goes by: in other days, while yet the lordship was,
 saepius Andromache ferre incommitata solebat
 Hapless Andromache thereby unto the twain would pass
 ad soceros et auo puerum Astyanacta trahebat.
 Alone, or leading to the king Astyanax her boy.
 euado ad summi fastigia culminis, unde
 And thereby now I gain the tower, whence wretched men of Troy
 tela manu miseri iactabant inrita Teucris.
 In helpless wise from out their hands were casting darts aloof.
 turrim in praecipiti stantem summisque sub astra 460
 There was a tower, a sheer height down, builded from highest roof
 eductam tectis, unde omnis Troia uideri
 Up toward the stars; whence we were wont on Troy to look adown,
 et Danaum solitae naues et Achaica castra,
 And thence away the Danaan ships, the Achæan tented town.
 aggressi ferro circum, qua summa labantis
 Against the highest stage hereof the steel about we bear,
 iuncturas tabulata dabant, conuellimus altis
 Just where the joints do somewhat give: this from its roots we tear,
 sedibus impulimusque; ea lapsa repente ruinam 465
 And heave it up and over wall, whose toppling at the last
 cum sonitu trahit et Danaum super agmina late Bears crash and ruin, and wide away the Danaans are down cast

incidit. ast alii subeunt, nec saxa nec ullum
Beneath its fall: but more come on: nor drift of stones doth lack,
telorum interea cessat genus.

Nor doth all kind of weapon-shot at any while grow slack.

Vestibulum ante ipsum primoque in limine Pyrrhus

Lo, Pyrrhus in the very porch forth to the door doth pass
exsultat telis et luce coruscus aena: 470

Exulting; bright with glittering points and flashing of the brass;
qualis ubi in lucem coluber mala gramina pastus,

— E'en as a snake to daylight come, on evil herbage fed,
frigida sub terra tumidum quem bruma tegebat,

Who, swollen, 'neath the chilly soil hath had his winter bed,
nunc, positus nouus exuuiis nitidusque iuuenta,

And now, his ancient armour doffed, and sleek with youth new found,

lubrica conuoluit sublato pectore terga

With front upreared his slippery back he coileth o'er the ground
arduus ad solem, et linguis micat ore trisulcis. 475

Up 'neath the sun; his three-cleft tongue within his mouth gleams clear: —

una ingens Periphas et equorum agitator Achillis,

And with him Periphas the huge, Achilles' charioteer,
armiger Automedon, una omnis Scyria pubes

Now shield-bearer Automedon and all the Scyrian host succedunt tecto et flammas ad culmina iactant.

Closed on the walls and on the roof the blazing firebrands tost.

ipse inter primos correpta dura bipenni

Pyrrhus in forefront of them all catches a mighty bill,

limina perrumpit postisque a cardine uellit 480

Beats in the hardened door, and tears perforce from hinge and sill
aeratos; iamque excisa trabe firma cauauit

The brazen leaves; a beam hewn through, wide gaped the oak hard knit

robora et ingentem lato dedit ore fenestram.

Into a great-mouthed window there, and through the midst of it
apparet domus intus et atria longa patescunt;

May men behold the inner house; the long halls open lie;

apparent Priami et ueterum penetralia regum,
 Bared is the heart of Priam's home, the place of kings gone by;
 armatosque uident stantis in limine primo. 485
 And close against the very door all armed men they see.
 at domus interior gemitu miseroque tumultu
 That inner house indeed was mazed with wail and misery,
 miscetur, penitusque cauae plangoribus aedes
 The inmost chambers of the place an echoing hubbub hold
 femineis ululant; ferit aurea sidera clamor.
 Of women's cries, whose clamour smites the far-off stars of gold,
 tum pauidae tectis matres ingentibus errant
 And through the house so mighty great the fearful mothers stray,
 amplexaeque tenent postis atque oscula figunt. 490
 And wind their arms about the doors, and kisses on them lay.
 instat ui patria Pyrrhus; nec claustra nec ipsi
 But Pyrrhus with his father's might comes on; no bolt avails,
 custodes sufferre ualent; labat ariete crebro
 No man against the might of him; the door all battered fails,
 ianua, et emoti procumbunt cardine postes.
 The door-leaves torn from off of hinge tumble and lie along:
 fit uia ui; rumpunt aditus primosque trucidant
 Might maketh road; through passage forced the entering Danaans throng,
 immissi Danai et late loca milite complent. 495
 And slay the first and fill the place with armour of their ranks.
 non sic, aggeribus ruptis cum spumeus amnis
 Nay nought so great is foaming flood that through its bursten banks
 exiit oppositasque euicit gurgite moles,
 Breaks forth, and beateth down the moles that 'gainst its going stand.
 fertur in arua furens cumulo camposque per omnis
 And falls a fierce heap on the plain, and over all the land
 cum stabulis armenta trahit. uidi ipse furentem Drags off the herds and herd-houses. There saw I Pyrrhus wild
 caede Neoptolemum geminosque in limine Atridas, 500
 With death of men amidst the door, and either Atreus' child;
 uidi Hecubam centumque nurus Priamumque per aras
 And Hecuba and hundred wives her sons wed saw I there,

sanguine foedantem quos ipse sacrauerat ignis.
 And Priam fouling with his blood the very altars fair
 quinquaginta illi thalami, spes tanta nepotum,
 Whose fires he hallowed: fifty beds the hope of house to be,
 barbarico postes auro spoliisque superbi
 The doorways proud with outland gold and war-got bravery
 procubuere; tenent Danai qua deficit ignis. 505
 Sunk into ash; where fire hath failed the Danaans are enow.
 Forsitan et Priami fuerint quae fata requiras.
 Belike what fate on Priam fell thou askest me to show:
 urbis uti captae casum conuulsaque uidit
 For when he saw the city lost, and his own house-door stormed,
 limina tectorum et medium in penetralibus hostem,
 And how in bowels of his house the host of foemen swarmed,
 arma diu senior desueta trementibus aevo
 The ancient man in vain does on the arms long useless laid
 circumdat nequiquam umeris et inutile ferrum 510
 About his quaking back of eld, and girds himself with blade
 cingitur, ac densos fertur moriturus in hostis.
 Of no avail, and fareth forth amid the press to die.
 aedibus in mediis nudoque sub aetheris axe
 A very midmost of the courts beneath the naked sky
 ingens ara fuit iuxtaque ueterrima laurus
 A mighty altar stood: anear a bay exceeding old,
 incumbens arae atque umbra complexa penatis.
 The altar and the Gods thereof did all in shadow hold;
 hic Hecuba et natae nequiquam altaria circum, 515
 And round about that altar-stead sat Hecuba the queen,
 praecipites atra ceu tempestate columbae,
 And many daughters: e'en as doves all huddled up are seen
 condensae et diuum amplexae simulacra sedebant.
 'Neath the black storm they cling about the dear God's images.
 ipsum autem sumptis Priamum iuuenalibus armis
 But when in arms of early days King Priam now she sees,
 ut uidit, 'quae mens tam dira, miserrime coniunx,
 She crieth: 'O unhappy spouse! what evil heart hast thou,
 impulit his cingi telis? aut quo ruis?' inquit. 520

With weapons thus to gird thyself, or whither wilt thou now?
 'non tali auxilio nec defensoribus istis
 Today availeth no such help, and no such warder's stay
 tempus eget; non, si ipse meus nunc adforet Hector.
 May better aught; not even were my Hector here today.
 huc tandem concede; haec ara tuebitur omnis,
 But come thou hither unto me; this altar all shall save,
 aut moriere simul.' sic ore effata recepit
 Or we shall die together here!' Her arms about she gave ad sese et sacra longaeuum in sede locauit. 525
 And took him, and the elder set adown in holy stead.
 Ecce autem elapsus Pyrrhi de caede Polites,
 But lo! now one of Priam's sons, Polites, having fled
 unus natorum Priami, per tela, per hostis
 From Pyrrhus' murder through the swords and through the foeman's
 throng,
 porticibus longis fugit et uacua atria lustrat
 Runs wounded through the empty hall from out the cloister long,
 saucius. illum ardens infesto uulnere Pyrrhus
 And burning Pyrrhus, hard at heel, the deadly hurt doth bear,
 insequitur, iam iamque manu tenet et premit hasta. 530
 And grip of hand is on him now, and now the point of spear.
 ut tandem ante oculos euasit et ora parentum,
 But as he rushed before their eyes, his parents' face beneath
 concidit ac multo uitam cum sanguine fudit.
 He fell, and with most plenteous blood shed forth his latest breath;
 hic Priamus, quamquam in media iam morte tenetur,
 Then Priam, howsoever nigh the very death might grip,
 non tamen abstinuit nec uoci iraeque pepercit:
 Refrained him nothing at the sight, but voice and wrath let slip:
 'at tibi pro scelere,' exclamat, 'pro talibus ausis 535
 'Ah, for such wickedness,' he cried, 'for daring such a deed,
 di, si qua est caelo pietas quae talia curet,
 If aught abide in heaven as yet such things as this to heed,
 persoluant grates dignas et praemia reddant
 May the Gods give thee worthy thanks, and pay thee well-earned prize,

debita, qui nati coram me cernere letum
 That thou hast set the death of sons before my father's eyes,
 fecisti et patrios foedasti funere uultus.
 That thou thy murder's fouling thus in father's face hast flung.
 at non ille, satum quo te mentiris, Achilles 540
 Not he, Achilles, whence indeed thou liar hast never sprung,
 talis in hoste fuit Priamo; sed iura fidemque
 Was such a foe to Priam erst; for shamfast meed he gave
 supplicis erubuit corpusque exsanguie sepulcro
 To law and troth of suppliant men, and rendered to the grave
 reddidit Hectoreum meque in mea regna remisit.
 The bloodless Hector dead, and me sent to mine own again.
 sic fatus senior telumque imbelle sine ictu
 So spake the elder, and cast forth a toothless spear and vain,
 coniecit, rauco quod protinus aere repulsum, 545
 That forthwith from the griding brass was put aback all spent,
 et summo clipei nequiquam umbone pependit.
 And from the shield-boss' outer skin hung down, for nothing sent.
 cui Pyrrhus: 'referes ergo haec et nuntius ibis
 Then Pyrrhus cried: 'Yea tell him this, go take the tidings down
 Pelidae genitori. illi mea tristia facta
 To Peleus' son my father then, of Pyrrhus worsen grown
 degeneremque Neoptolemum narrare memento.
 And all these evil deeds of mine! take heed to tell the tale!
 nunc morere.' hoc dicens altaria ad ipsa trementem 550
 Now die!' And to the altar-stone him quivering did he hale,
 traxit et in multo lapsantem sanguine nati,
 And sliding in his own son's blood so plenteous: in his hair
 implicuitque comam laeua, dextraque coruscum
 Pyrrhus his left hand wound, his right the gleaming sword made bare,
 extulit ac lateri capulo tenus abdidit ensem.
 That even to the hilts thereof within his flank he hid.
 haec finis Priami factorum, hic exitus illum
 Such was the end of Priam's day, such faring forth fate bid,
 sorte tulit Troiam incensam et prolapsa uidentem 555
 Troy all aflame upon the road, all Pergamus adown.

Pergama, tot quondam populis terrisque superbum
He, of so many peoples once the mighty lord and crown,
regnatorem Asiae. iacet ingens litore truncus,
So many lands of Asia once, a trunk beside the sea
auulsumque umeris caput et sine nomine corpus.
Huge with its headless shoulders laid, a nameless corpse is he.
At me tum primum saeuus circumstetit horror.
Then first within the compassing of bitter fear I was;
obstipui; subiit cari genitoris imago, 560
The image of my father dear by me all mazed did pass,
ut regem aequaeuum crudeli uulnere uidi
When I beheld the like-aged king gasping his life away
uitam exhalantem, subiit deserta Creusa
Through cruel wound: upon mine eyes forlorn Creusa lay,
et direpta domus et parui casus Iuli.
The wasted house, my little one, Iulus', evil end.
respicio et quae sit me circum copia lustrō.
I look aback to see what folk about me yet do wend,
deseruere omnes defessi, et corpora saltu 565
But all, foredone, had fallen away, their weary bodies spent,
ad terram misere aut ignibus aegra dedere.
Some all amid the fire had cast, some unto earth had sent.
[Iamque adeo super unus eram, cum limina Vestae
Alone was I of all men now, when lo, in Vesta's house
seruantem et tacitam secreta in sede latentem
Abiding, and in inmost nook silent and lurking close,
Tyndarida aspicio; dant claram incendia lucem
Helen the seed of Tyndarus! the clear fires give her light
erranti passimque oculos per cuncta ferenti. 570
As there she strayeth, turning eyes on every shifting sight;
illa sibi infestos euersa ob Pergama Teucros
She, fearful of the Teucrian wrath for Pergamus undone,
et Danaum poenam et deserti coniugis iras
And fearful of the Danaan wrath and husband left alone,
praemetuens, Troiae et patriae communis Erinys,
The wasting fury both of Troy and land where she was born,
abdiderat sese atque aris inuisa sedebat.

She hid her by the altar-stead, a thing of Gods forlorn.

exarsere ignes animo; subit ira cadentem 575

Forth blazed the wildfire in my soul, wrath stirred me up to slake
ulcisci patriam et sceleratas sumere poenas.

My vengeance for my dying home, and ill's atonement take.

‘scilicet haec Spartam incolumis patriasque Mycenae

What! should she come to Sparta safe, and her Mycenæ then,
aspiciet, partoque ibit regina triumpho?

And in the hard-won triumphing go forth a Queen of men,

coniugiumque domumque patris natosque uidebit

And see her husband and her home, her parents and her sons,

Iliadum turba et Phrygiis comitata ministris? 580

Served by the throng of Ilian wives and Phrygian vanquished ones?

occiderit ferro Priamus? Troia arserit igni?

Shall Priam so be slain with sword; shall Troy so blaze aloft;

Dardanium totiens sudarit sanguine litus?

Shall the sea-beach the Dardan blood have sweat so oft and oft

non ita. namque etsi nullum memorabile nomen

For this? Nay, nay: and though forsooth no deed to blaze abroad

feminea in poena est, habet haec uictoria laudem;

The slaying of a woman be, nor gaineth fame's reward,

exstinxisse nefas tamen et sumpsisse merentis 585

Yet still to quench an evil thing and pay the well-earned meed

laudabor poenas, animumque explesse iuuabit

Is worthy praise, and joy it were unto the full to feed

ultricis ~famam et cineres satiasset meorum.

My heart's fell flame, and satisfy these ashes well beloved.

talia iactabam et furiata mente ferebar,]

Such things my soul gave forth; such things in furious heart I moved.

cum mihi se, non ante oculis tam clara, uidendam

When lo, my holy mother now, ne'er seen by eyes of mine

obtulit et pura per noctem in luce refulsit 590

So clear before, athwart the dark in simple light did shine;

alma parens, confessa deam qualisque uideri

All God she was; of countenance and measure was she nought,

caelicolis et quanta solet, dextraque prehensum

But her the heaven-abiders see; so my right hand she caught,

continuit roseoque haec insuper addidit ore:
And held me, and from rosy mouth moreover added word:
'nate, quis indomitas tantus dolor excitat iras?
'O son, what anger measureless thy mighty grief hath stirred?
quid furis? aut quonam nostri tibi cura recessit? 595
Why ragest thou? or whither then is gone thy heed of me?
non prius aspicias ubi fessum aetate parentem
Wilt thou not first behold the place where worn by eld is he,
liqueris Anchisen, superet coniunxne Creusa Anchises, left? Wilt thou not see if yet thy wife abide Ascaniusque puer? quos omnis undique Graiae
Creusa, or Ascanius yet? The Greekish bands fare wide
circum errant acies et, ni mea cura resistat,
About them now on every hand, and but my care withstood
iam flammae tulerint inimicus et hauserit ensis. 600
The fire had wafted them away or sword had drunk their blood.
non tibi Tyndaridis facies inuisa Lacaenae
Laconian Helen's beauty cursed this overthrow ne'er wrought.
culpatusue Paris, diuum inclementia, diuum
Nor guilty Paris; nay, the Gods, the Gods who pity nought,
has evertit opes sternitque a culmine Troiam.
Have overturned your lordship fair, and laid your Troy alow.
aspice (namque omnem, quae nunc obducta tuenti
Behold! I draw aside the cloud that all abroad doth flow,
mortalis hebetat uisus tibi et umida circum 605
Dulling the eyes of mortal men, and darkening dewily
caligat, nubem eripiam; tu ne qua parentis
The world about. And look to it no more afeard to be iussa time neu praeceptis parere recusa):
Of what I bid, nor evermore thy mother's word disown.
hic, ubi disiectas moles auulsaque saxis
There where thou seest the great walls cleft, and stone torn off from stone,
saxa uides, mixtoque undantem puluere fumum,
And seest the waves of smoke go by with mingled dust-cloud rolled,
Neptunus muros magnoque emota tridenti 610

There Neptune shakes the walls and stirs the foundings from their hold

fundamenta quatit totamque a sedibus urbem

With mighty trident, tumbling down the city from its base.

eruit. hic Iuno Scaeas saeuissima portas

There by the Scæan gates again hath bitter Juno place

prima tenet sociumque furens a nauibus agmen

The first of all, and wild and mad, herself begirt with steel,

ferro accincta uocat.

Calls up her fellows from the ships.

iam summas arces Tritonia, respice, Pallas 615

Look back! Tritonian Pallas broods o'er topmost burg on high,

insedit nimbo effulgens et Gorgone saeua.

All flashing bright with Gorgon grim from out her stormy sky;

ipse pater Danais animos uirisque secundas

The very Father hearteneth on, and stays with happy might

sufficit, ipse deos in Dardana suscitāt arma.

The Danaans, crying on the Gods against the Dardan fight.

eripe, nate, fugam finemque impone labori;

Snatch flight, O son, whiles yet thou may'st, and let thy toil be o'er,

nusquam abero et tutum patrio te limine sistam.' 620

I by thy side will bring thee safe unto thy father's door.'

dixerat et spissis noctis se condidit umbris.

She spake, and hid herself away where thickest darkness poured.

apparent dirae facies inimicaque Troiae

Then dreadful images show forth, great Godheads are abroad,

numina magna deum.

The very haters of our Troy.

Tum uero omne mihi uisum considerare in ignis

And then indeed before mine eyes all Ilium sank in flame,

Ilium et ex imo uerti Neptunia Troia: 625

And overturned was Neptune's Troy from its foundations deep.

ac ueluti summis antiquam in montibus ornum

E'en as betideth with an ash upon the mountain steep,

cum ferro accisam crebrisque bipennibus instant

Round which sore smitten by the steel the acre-biders throng,

eruere agricolae certatim, illa usque minatur

And strive in speeding of the axe: and there it threateneth long,
 et tremefacta comam concusso uertice nutat,
 And, shaken, trembleth nodding still with heavy head of leaf;
 uulneribus donec paulatim euicta supremum 630
 Till overcome by many hurts it groans its latest grief,
 congemuit traxitque iugis auulsa ruinam.
 And torn from out the ridgy hill, drags all its ruin alow.
 descendo ac ducente deo flammam inter et hostis
 I get me down, and, Goddess-led, speed on 'twixt fire and foe,
 expedior: dant tela locum flammaeque recedunt.
 And point and edge give place to me, before me sinks the flame;
 Atque ubi iam patriae peruentum ad limina sedis
 But when unto my father's door and ancient house I came,
 antiquasque domos, genitor, quem tollere in altos 635
 And I was fain of all things first my father forth to bear
 optabam primum montis primumque petebam,
 Unto the mountain-tops, and first I sought to find him there,
 abnegat excisa uitam producere Troia
 Still he gainsayed to spin out life now Troy was lost and dead,
 exsiliumque pati. 'uos o, quibus integer aevi
 Or suffer exile: 'Ye whose blood is hale with youth,' he said,
 sanguis,' ait, 'solidaeque suo stant robore uires,
 'Ye other ones, whose might and main endureth and is stout,
 uos agitate fugam. 640
 See ye to flight while yet ye may!
 me si caelicolae uoluissent ducere uitam,
 Full surely if the heavenly ones my longer life had willed,
 has mihi seruassent sedes. satis una superque
 They would have kept me this abode: the measure is fulfilled
 uidimus excidia et captae superauimus urbi.
 In that the murder I have seen, and lived when Troy-town fell.
 sic o sic positum adfati discedite corpus.
 O ye, depart, when ye have bid my body streaked farewell.
 ipse manu mortem inueniam; miserebitur hostis 645
 My hand itself shall find out death, or pity of my foes,
 exuiuiasque petet. facilis iactura sepulcri.
 Who seek my spoils: the tomb methinks a little thing to lose.

iam pridem inuisus diuis et inutilis annos
 Forsooth I tarry overlong, God-cursed, a useless thing,
 demoror, ex quo me diuum pater atque hominum rex
 Since when the Father of the Gods, the earth-abiders' King,
 fulminis adflauit uentis et contigit igni.'
 Blew on me blast of thunder-wind and touched me with his flame.'
 Talia perstabat memorans fixusque manebat. 650
 His deed was stubborn as his word, no change upon him came.
 nos contra effusi lacrimis coniunxque Creusa
 But all we weeping many tears, my wife Creusa there,
 Ascaniusque omnisque domus, ne uertere secum
 Ascanius, yea and all the house, besought him not to bear
 cuncta pater fatoque urgenti incumbere uellet.
 All things to wrack with him, nor speed the hastening evil tide.
 abnegat inceptoque et sedibus haeret in isdem.
 He gainsaith all, and in his will and home will yet abide.
 rursus in arma feror mortemque miserrimus opto. 655
 So wretchedly I rush to arms with all intent to die;
 nam quod consilium aut quae iam fortuna dabatur?
 For what availeth wisdom now, what hope in fate may lie?
 'mene efferre pedem, genitor, te posse relicto
 'And didst thou hope, O father, then, that thou being left behind,
 sperasti tantumque nefas patrio excidit ore?
 My foot would fare? Woe worth the word that in thy mouth I find!
 si nihil ex tanta superis placet urbe relinqui,
 But if the Gods are loth one whit of such a town to save,
 et sedet hoc animo perituraeque addere Troiae 660
 And thou with constant mind wilt cast on dying Troy-town's grave
 teque tuosque iuuat, patet isti ianua leto,
 Both thee and thine, wide is the door to wend adown such ways;
 iamque aderit multo Priami de sanguine Pyrrhus,
 For Pyrrhus, red with Priam's blood, is hard at hand, who slays
 natum ante ora patris, patrem qui obtruncat ad aras.
 The son before the father's face, the father slays upon
 hoc erat, alma parens, quod me per tela, per ignis
 The altar. Holy Mother, then, for this thou ledst me on
 eripis, ut mediis hostem in penetralibus utque 665

Through fire and sword! — that I might see our house filled with the foe,

Ascanium patremque meum iuxtaque Creusam

My father old, Ascanius, Creusa lying low,
alterum in alterius mactatos sanguine cernam?

All weltering in each other's blood, and murdered wretchedly.

arma, uiri, ferte arma; uocat lux ultima uictos.

Arms, fellows, arms! the last day's light on vanquished men doth cry.

reddite me Danais; sinite instaurata reuisam

Ah! give me to the Greeks again, that I may play the play
proelia. numquam omnes hodie moriemur inulti.' 670

Another while: not unavenged shall all we die today.'

Hinc ferro accingor rursus clipeoque sinistram

So was I girt with sword again, and in my shield would set insertabam aptans meque extra tecta ferebam.

My left hand now, and was in point from out of doors to get,
ecce autem complexa pedes in limine coniunx

When lo, my wife about my feet e'en in the threshold clung,
haerebat, paruumque patri tendebat Iulum:

Still to his father reaching out Iulus tender-young:

'si periturus abis, et nos rape in omnia tecum; 675

'If thou art on thy way to die, then bear us through it all;

sin aliquam expertus sumptis spem ponis in armis,

But if to thee the wise in arms some hope of arms befall,

hanc primum tutare domum. cui paruus Iulus,

Then keep this house first! Unto whom giv'st thou Iulus' life,
cui pater et coniunx quondam tua dicta relinquer?'

Thy father's, yea and mine withal, that once was called thy wife?'

Talia uociferans gemitu tectum omne replebat,

So crying out, the house she filled with her exceeding moan,
cum subitum dictuque oritur mirabile monstrum. 680

When sudden, wondrous to be told, a portent was there shown;
namque manus inter maestorumque ora parentum

For as his woeful parents' hands and lips he hangs between,
ecce leuis summo de uertice uisus Iuli

On topmost of Iulus' head a thin peaked flame is seen,

fundere lumen apex, tactuque innoxia mollis
That with the harmless touch of fire, whence clearest light is shed,
lambere flamma comas et circum tempora pasci.
Licks his soft locks and pastures round the temples of his head.
nos pauidi trepidare metu crinemque flagrantem 685
Quaking with awe from out his hair we fall the fire to shake,
excutere et sanctos restinguere fontibus ignis.
And bring the water of the well the holy flame to slake.
at pater Anchises oculos ad sidera laetus
But joyous to the stars aloft Anchises raiseth eyes,
extulit et caelo palmas cum uoce tetendit:
And with his hands spread out abroad to very heaven he cries:
'Iuppiter omnipotens, precibus si flecteris ullis,
'Almighty Jove, if thou hast will toward any prayers to turn,
aspice nos, hoc tantum, et si pietate meremur, 690
Look down on us this while alone; if aught our goodness earn,
da deinde auxilium, pater, atque haec omina firma.'
Father, give help and strengthen us these omens from the sky!'
Vix ea fatus erat senior, subitoque fragore
Scarce had the elder said the word ere crashing suddenly
intonuit laeuum, et de caelo lapsa per umbras
It thundered on the left, and down across the shades of night
stella facem ducens multa cum luce cucurrit.
Ran forth a great brand-bearing star with most abundant light;
illam summa super labentem culmina tecti 695
And clear above the topmost house we saw it how it slid
cernimus Idaea claram se condere silua
Lightening the ways, and at the last in Ida's forest hid.
signantemque uias; tum longo limite sulcus
Then through the sky a furrow ran drawn out a mighty space,
dat lucem et late circum loca sulphure fumant.
Giving forth light, and sulphur-fumes rose all about the place.
hic uero uictus genitor se tollit ad auras
My father vanquished therewithal his visage doth upraise,
adfaturque deos et sanctum sidus adorat. 700
And saith a word unto the Gods that holy star to praise:
'iam iam nulla mora est; sequor et qua ducitis adsum,

‘Now, now, no tarrying is at all, I follow where ye lead;
di patrii; seruate domum, seruate nepotem.
O Father-Gods heed ye our house and this my son’s son heed!
uestrum hoc augurium, uestroque in numine Troia est.
This is your doom; and Troy is held beneath your majesty.
cedo equidem nec, nate, tibi comes ire recuso.’
I yield, O son, nor more gainsay to go my ways with thee.’
dixerat ille, et iam per moenia clarior ignis 705
He spake; and mid the walls meanwhile we hear the fire alive
auditur, propiusque aestus incendia uoluunt.
Still clearer, and the burning place more nigh the heat doth drive.
‘ergo age, care pater, ceruici imponere nostrae;
‘O hasten, father well-beloved, to hang about my neck!
ipse subibo umeris nec me labor iste grauabit;
Lo, here my shoulders will I stoop, nor of the labour reck.
quo res cumque cadent, unum et commune periculum,
And whatsoever may befall, the two of us shall bide
una salus ambobus erit. mihi paruus Iulus 710
One peril and one heal and end: Iulus by my side
sit comes, et longe seruet uestigia coniunx.
Shall wend, and after us my wife shall follow on my feet
uos, famuli, quae dicam animis aduertite uestris.
Ye serving-folk, turn ye your minds these words of mine to meet:
est urbe egressis tumulus templumque uetustum
Scant from the city is a mound and temple of old tide,
desertae Cereris, iuxtaque antiqua cupressus
Of Ceres’ lone, a cypress-tree exceeding old beside.
religione patrum multos seruata per annos; 715
Kept by our fathers’ worshipping through many years ago:
hanc ex diuerso sedem ueniemus in unam.
Thither by divers roads go we to meet at last in one.
tu, genitor, cape sacra manu patriosque penatis;
Now, father, take thy fathers’ Gods and holy things to hold,
me bello e tanto digressum et caede recenti
For me to touch them fresh from fight and murder were o’erbold, attractare nefas, donec me flumine uiuo
A misdeed done against the Gods, till in the living flood

abluero.' 720

I make a shift to wash me clean.'

haec fatus latos umeros subiectaque colla

I stooped my neck and shoulders broad e'en as the word I said,
ueste super fuluique insternor pelle leonis,

A forest lion's yellow fell for cloth upon them laid,
succedoque oneri; dextrae se paruus Iulus

And took my burden up: my young Iulus by my side,
implicuit sequiturque patrem non passibus aequis;

Holding my hand, goes tripping short unto his father's stride;
pone subit coniunx. ferimur per opaca locorum, 725

My wife comes after: on we fare amidst a mirky world.

et me, quem dudum non ulla iniecta mouebant

And I, erewhile as nothing moved by storm of weapons hurled,
tela neque aduerso glomerati examine Grai,

I, who the gathering of the Greeks against me nothing feared,
nunc omnes terrent aerae, sonus excitat omnis

Now tremble at each breath of wind, by every sound am stirred,
suspensum et pariter comitique onerique timentem.

Sore troubled for my fellows both, and burden that I bore.

iamque propinquabam portis omnemque uidebar 730

And now we draw anigh the gates, and all the way seemed o'er,
euasisse uiam, subito cum creber ad auris

When sudden sound of falling feet was borne upon our ears,
uisus adesse pedum sonitus, genitorque per umbram

And therewithal my father cries, as through the dusk he peers,
prospiciens 'nate,' exclamat, 'fuge, nate; propinquant.

'Haste, son, and get thee swift away, for they are on us now;
ardentis clipeos atque aera micantia cerno.'

I see the glittering of the brass and all their shields aglow.'

hic mihi nescio quod trepido male numen amicum 735

What Godhead nought a friend to me amidst my terror there
confusam eripuit mentem. namque auia cursu

Snatched wit away I nothing know: for while I swiftly fare
dum sequor et nota excedo regione uiarum,

By wayless places, wandering wide from out the road I knew,
heu misero coniunx fatone erepta Creusa

Creusa, whether her the Fates from me unhappy drew,
 substitit, errauitne uia seu lapsa resedit,
 Whether she wandered from the way, or weary lagged aback,
 incertum; nec post oculis est reddita nostris. 740
 Nought know I, but that her henceforth mine eyes must ever lack.
 nec prius amissam respexi animumue reflexi
 Nor turned I round to find her lost, nor had it in my thought,
 quam tumulum antiquae Cereris sedemque sacratam
 Till to that mound and ancient house of Ceres we were brought;
 uenimus: hic demum collectis omnibus una
 Where, all being come together now, there lacked but her alone,
 defuit, et comites natumque uirumque fefellit.
 And there her fellows' hopes, her son's, her husband's were undone.
 quem non incusauī amens hominumque deorumque, 745
 On whom of men, on whom of Gods, then laid I not the guilt?
 aut quid in euersa uidi crudelius urbe?
 What saw I bitterer to be borne in all the city spilt?
 Ascanium Anchisenque patrem Teucrosque penatis Ascanius and Anchises set the Teucrian Gods beside,
 commendo sociis et curua ualle recondo;
 I give unto my fellows there in hollow dale to hide,
 ipse urbem repeto et cingor fulgentibus armis.
 But I unto the city turn with glittering weapons girt;
 stat casus renouare omnis omnemque reuerti 750
 Needs must I search all Troy again, and open every hurt,
 per Troiam et rursus caput obiectare periclis.
 And into every peril past must thrust my head once more.
 principio muros obscuraque limina portae,
 And first I reach the walls again and mirk ways of the door
 qua gressum extuleram, repeto et uestigia retro Whereby I wended out erewhile; and my old footsteps' track
 obseruata sequor per noctem et lumine lustrō:
 I find, and mid the dusk of night with close eyes follow back;
 horror ubique animo, simul ipsa silentia terrent. 755
 While on the heart lies weight of fear, and e'en the hush brings
 dread,
 inde domum, si forte pedem, si forte tulisset,

Thence to the house, if there perchance, if there again she tread,
me refero: inruerant Danai et tectum omne tenebant.

I go: infall of Greeks had been, and all the house they hold,
ilicet ignis edax summa ad fastigia uento

And 'neath the wind the ravening fire to highest ridge is rolled.
uoluitur; exsuperant flammae, furit aestus ad auras.

The flames hang o'er, with raging heat the heavens are hot withal;
procedo et Priami sedes arcemque reuiso: 760

Still on: I look on Priam's house and topmost castle-wall;
et iam porticibus uacuis Iunonis asylo

And in the desert cloisters there and Juno's very home
custodes lecti Phoenix et dirus Vlixes

Lo, Phoenix and Ulysses cursed, the chosen wards, are come
praedam adseruabant. huc undique Troia gaza

To keep the spoil; fair things of Troy, from everywhither brought,
incensis erepta adytis, mensaeque deorum

Rapt from the burning of the shrines, Gods' tables rudely caught,
crateresque auro solidi, captiuaque uestis 765

And beakers utterly of gold and raiment snatched away
congeritur. pueri et pauidae longo ordine matres

Are there heaped up; and boys and wives drawn out in long array
stant circum.

Stand trembling round about the heap.

ausus quin etiam uoces iactare per umbram

And now withal I dared to cast my cries upon the dark,
impleui clamore uias, maestusque Creusam

I fill the streets with clamour great, and, groaning woefully,
nequiquam ingeminans iterumque iterumque uocaui. 770

'Creusa,' o'er and o'er again without avail I cry.

quaerenti et tectis urbis sine fine ruenti

But as I sought and endlessly raved all the houses through
infelix simulacrum atque ipsius umbra Creusae

A hapless shape, Creusa's shade, anigh mine eyen drew,
uisa mihi ante oculos et nota maior imago.

And greater than the body known her image fashioned was;
obstupui, steteruntque comae et uox faucibus haesit.

I stood amazed, my hair rose up, nor from my jaws would pass

tum sic adfari et curas his demere dictis: 775

My frozen voice, then thus she spake my care to take away:

‘quid tantum insano iuuat indulgere dolori,

‘Sweet husband, wherefore needest thou with such mad sorrow play?

o dulcis coniunx? non haec sine numine diuum

Without the dealing of the Gods doth none of this betide;

eueniunt; nec te comitem hinc portare Creusam

And they, they will not have thee bear Creusa by thy side,

fas, aut ille sinit superi regnator Olympi.

Nor will Olympus’ highest king such fellowship allow.

longa tibi exsilia et uastum maris aequor arandum, 780

Long exile is in store for thee, huge plain of sea to plough,

et terram Hesperiam uenies, ubi Lydius arua

Then to Hesperia shalt thou come, where Lydian Tiber’s wave

inter opima uirum leni fluit agmine Thybris.

The wealthiest meads of mighty men with gentle stream doth lave:

illic res laetae regnumque et regia coniunx

There happy days and lordship great, and kingly wife, are born

parta tibi; lacrimas dilectae pelle Creusae.

For thee. Ah! do away thy tears for loved Creusa lorn.

non ego Myrmidonum sedes Dolopumue superbas 785

I shall not see the Myrmidons’ nor Dolopes’ proud place,

aspiciam aut Graias seruitum matribus ibo,

Nor wend my ways to wait upon the Greekish women’s grace;

Dardanias et diuiae Veneris nurus;

I, daughter of the Dardan race, I, wife of Venus’ son;

sed me magna deum genetrix his detinet oris.

Me the great Mother of the Gods on Trojan shore hath won.

iamque uale et nati serua communis amorem.’

Farewell, and love the son we loved together once, we twain.’

haec ubi dicta dedit, lacrimantem et multa uolentem 790

She left me when these words were given, me weeping sore, and fain

dicere deseruit, tenuisque recessit in auras.

To tell her much, and forth away amid thin air she passed:

ter conatus ibi collo dare bracchia circum;

And there three times about her neck I strove mine arms to cast,

ter frustra comprehensa manus effugit imago,

And thrice away from out my hands the gathered image streams,
par leuibus uentis uolucrique simillima somno.

E'en as the breathing of the wind or wingèd thing of dreams.

sic demum socios consumpta nocte reuiso. 795

And so at last, the night all spent, I meet my folk anew;

Atque hic ingentem comitum adfluxisse nouorum

And there I found great multitude that fresh unto us drew,

inuenio admirans numerum, matresque uirosque,

And wondered thereat: wives were there, and men, and plenteous
youth;

collectam exsilio pubem, miserabile uulgus.

All gathered for the faring forth, a hapless crowd forsooth:

undique conuenere animis opibusque parati

From everywhere they draw to us, with goods and courage set,

in quascumque uelim pelago deducere terras. 800

To follow o'er the sea where'er my will may lead them yet.

iamque iugis summae surgebat Lucifer Idae

And now o'er Ida's topmost ridge at last the day-star rose

ducebatque diem, Danaïque obsessa tenebant

With dawn in hand: all gates and doors by host of Danaan foes

limina portarum, nec spes opis ulla dabatur.

Were close beset, and no more hope of helping may I bide.

cessi et sublato montis genitore petiui.

I turned and took my father up and sought the mountain-side.

'Aeneas Tells Dido About the Fall of Troy' by Baron Pierre-Narcisse Guérin, 1815

LIBER III

BOOK III.

Postquam res Asiae Priamique euertere gentem
Now after it had pleased the Gods on high to overthrow
immeritam uisum superis, ceciditque superbum
The Asian weal and sackless folk of Priam, and alow
Ilium et omnis humo fumat Neptunia Troia, Proud Ilium lay, and Neptune's Troy was smouldering on the ground,
diuersa exsilia et desertas quaerere terras
For diverse outlands of the earth and waste lands are we bound,
auguriis agimur diuum, classemque sub ipsa 5
Driven by omens of the Gods. Our fleet we built beneath
Antandro et Phrygiae molimur montibus Idae,
Antandros, and the broken steeps of Phrygian Ida's heath,
incerti quo fata ferant, ubi sistere detur,
Unwitting whither Fate may drive, or where the Gods shall stay
contrahimusque uiros. uix prima inceperat aestas
And there we draw together men. Now scarce upon the way
et pater Anchises dare fatis uela iubebat,
Was summer when my father bade spread sails to Fate at last.
litora cum patriae lacrimans portusque relinquo 10
Weeping I leave my fatherland, and out of haven passed
et campos ubi Troia fuit. feror exsul in altum
Away from fields where Troy-town was, an outcast o'er the deep,
cum sociis natoque penatibus et magnis dis.
With folk and son and Household Gods and Greater Gods to keep.
Terra procul uastis colitur Mauortia campis
Far off a peopled land of Mars lies midst its mighty plain,
(Thraces arant) acri quondam regnata Lycurgo,
Tilled of the Thracians; there whilom did fierce Lycurgus reign.
hospitium antiquum Troiae sociique penates 15
'Twas ancient guesting-place of Troy: our Gods went hand in hand
dum fortuna fuit. feror huc et litore curuo

While bloomed our weal: there are we borne, and on the hollow
strand
moenia prima loco fatis ingressus iniquis
I set my first-born city down, 'neath evil fates begun,
Aeneadasque meo nomen de nomine fingo.
And call the folk Æneadæ from name myself had won.
sacra Dionaee matri diuisque ferebam
Unto Dione's daughter there, my mother, and the rest,
auspibus coeptorum operum, superoque nitentem 20
I sacrificed upon a day to gain beginning blest,
caelicolum regi mactabam in litore taurum.
And to the King of Heavenly folk was slaying on the shore
forte fuit iuxta tumulus, quo cornea summo
A glorious bull: at hand by chance a mound at topmost bore
uirgulta et densis hastilibus horrida myrtus.
A cornel-bush and myrtle stiff with shafts close set around:
accessi uiridemque ab humo conuellere siluam
Thereto I wend and strive to pluck a green shoot from the ground,
conatus, ramis tegerem ut frondentibus aras, 25
That I with leafy boughs thereof may clothe the altars well;
horrendum et dictu uideo mirabile monstrum.
When lo, a portent terrible and marvellous to tell!
nam quae prima solo ruptis radicibus arbos
For the first stem that from the soil uprooted I tear out
uellitur, huic atro liquuntur sanguine guttae
Oozes black drops of very blood, that all the earth about
et terram tabo maculant. mihi frigidus horror
Is stained with gore: but as for me, with sudden horror chill
membra quatit gelidusque coit formidine sanguis. 30
My limbs fall quaking, and my blood with freezing fear stands still.
rursus et alterius lentum conuellere uimen
Yet I go on and strive from earth a new tough shoot to win,
insequor et causas penitus temptare latentis;
That I may search out suddenly what causes lurk within;
ater et alterius sequitur de cortice sanguis.
And once again from out the bark blood followeth as before.
multa mouens animo Nymphas uenerabar agrestis

I turn the matter in my mind: the Field-Nymphs I adore, Gradiumque patrem, Geticis qui praesidet aruis, 35
 And him, Gradivus, father dread, who rules the Thracian plain,
 rite secundarent uisus omenque leuant.
 And pray them turn the thing to good and make its threatenings vain.
 tertia sed postquam maiore hastilia nisu
 But when upon a third of them once more I set my hand,
 adgredior gignibusque aduersae obluctor harenae,
 And striving hard thrust both my knees upon the opposing sand —
 (eloquar an sileam?) gemitus lacrimabilis imo
 — Shall I speak now or hold my peace? — a piteous groan is heard
 auditur tumulo et uox reddita fertur ad auris: 40
 From out the mound, and to mine ears is borne a dreadful word:
 ‘quid miserum, Aenea, laceras? iam parce sepulto,
 ‘Why manglest thou a wretched man? O spare me in my tomb!
 parce pias scelerare manus. non me tibi Troia
 Spare to beguile thy righteous hand, Æneas! Troy’s own womb
 externum tulit aut cruor hic de stipite manat.
 Bore me, thy kinsman; from this stem floweth no alien gore:
 heu fuge crudelis terras, fuge litus auarum:
 Woe’s me! flee forth the cruel land, flee forth the greedy shore;
 nam Polydorus ego. hic confixum ferrea textit 45
 For I am Polydore: pierced through, by harvest of the spear
 telorum seges et iaculis increuit acutis.’
 O’ergrown, that such a crop of shafts above my head doth bear.’
 tum uero ancipiti mentem formidine pressus
 I stood amazed: the wildering fear the heart in me down-weighed.
 obstipui steteruntque comae et uox faucibus haesit.
 My hair rose up, my frozen breath within my jaws was stayed.
 Hunc Polydorum auri quondam cum pondere magno
 Unhappy Priam privily had sent this Polydore, infelix Priamus furtim mandarant alendum 50
 For fostering to the Thracian king with plenteous golden store.
 Threicio regi, cum iam diffideret armis
 In those first days when he began to doubt the Dardan might,
 Dardaniae cingique urbem obsidione uideret.
 Having the leaguered walls of Troy for ever in his sight.

ille, ut opes fractae Teucrum et Fortuna recessit,
This king, as failed the weal of Troy and fortune fell away,
res Agamemnonias uictriciaque arma secutus
Turned him about to conquering arms and Agamemnon's day.
fas omne abrupit: Polydorum obruncat, et auro 55
He brake all right, slew Polydore, and all the gold he got
ui potitur. quid non mortalia pectora cogis, Perforce: O thou gold-hunger cursed, and whither driv'st thou not
auri sacra fames! postquam pauor ossa reliquit,
The hearts of men? But when at length the fear from me did fall,
delectos populi ad procures primumque parentem Unto the chosen of the folk, my father first of all,
monstra deum refero, et quae sit sententia posco.
I show those portents of the Gods and ask them of their will,
omnibus idem animus, scelerata excedere terra, 60
All deem it good that we depart that wicked land of ill,
linqui pollutum hospitium et dare classibus Austros.
And leave that blighted guesting-place and give our ships the breeze.
ergo instauramus Polydoro funus, et ingens
Therefore to Polydore we do the funeral services,
aggeritur tumulo tellus; stant Manibus arae
The earth is heaped up high in mound; the Death-Gods' altars stand
caeruleis maestae uittis atraque cupresso,
Woeful with bough of cypress black and coal-blue holy band;
et circum Iliades crinem de more solutae; 65
The wives of Ilium range about with due dishevelled hair;
inferimus tepido spumantia cymbia lacte
Cups of the warm and foaming milk unto the dead we bear,
sanguinis et sacri pateras, animamque sepulcro
And bowls of holy blood we bring, and lay the soul in grave,
condimus et magna supremum uoce ciemus.
And cry a great farewell to him, the last that he shall have.
Inde ubi prima fides pelago, placataque uenti
But now, when we may trust the sea and winds the ocean keep
dant maria et lenis crepitans uocat Auster in altum, 70
Unangered, and the South bids on light whispering to the deep,
deducunt socii nauis et litora complent;

Our fellows crowd the sea-beach o'er and run the ships adown,
prouehimur portu terraeque urbesque recedunt.

And from the haven are we borne, and fadeth field and town.

sacra mari colitur medio gratissima tellus

Amid the sea a land there lies, sweet over everything,

Nereidum matri et Neptuno Aegaeo,

Loved of the Nereids' mother, loved by that Ægean king

quam pius arquiteuens oras et litora circum 75

Great Neptune: this, a-wandering once all coasts and shores around,

errantem Mycono e celsa Gyaroque reuinxit,

The Bow-Lord good to Gyaros and high Myconos bound,

immotamque coli dedit et contemnere uentos.

And bade it fixed to cherish folk nor fear the wind again:

huc feror, haec fessos tuto placidissima portu

There come we; and that gentlest isle receives us weary men;

accipit; egressi ueneramur Apollinis urbem.

In haven safe we land, and thence Apollo's town adore;

rex Anius, rex idem hominum Phoebique sacerdos, 80

King Anius, who, a king of men, Apollo's priesthood bore,

uittis et sacra redimitus tempora lauro

His temples with the fillets done and crowned with holy bays,

occurrit; ueterem Anchisen agnouit amicum.

Meets us, and straight Anchises knows, his friend of early days.

iungimus hospitio dextras et tecta subimus.

So therewith hand to hand we join and houseward get us gone.

Templa dei saxo uenerabar structa uetusto:

There the God's fane I pray unto, the place of ancient stone:

'da propriam, Thymbraee, domum; da moenia fessis 85

'Thymbræan, give us house and home, walls to the weary give,

et genus et mansuram urbem; serua altera Troiae

In folk and city to endure: let Pergamus twice live,

Pergama, reliquias Danaum atque immitis Achilli.

In Troy twice built, left of the Greeks, left of Achilles' wrath!

quem sequimur? quoue ire iubes? ubi ponere sedes?

Ah, whom to follow? where to go? wherein our home set forth?

da, pater, augurium atque animis inlabere nostris.'

O Father, give us augury and sink into our heart!

uix ea fatus eram: tremere omnia uisa repente, 90
 Scarce had I said the word, when lo all doors with sudden start
 liminaque laurusque dei, totusque moueri
 Fell trembling, and the bay of God, and all the mountain side,
 mons circum et mugire adytis cortina reclusis.
 Was stirred, and in the opened shrine the holy tripod cried:
 summissi petimus terram et uox fertur ad auris:
 There as a voice fell on our ears we bowed ourselves to earth:
 ‘Dardanidae duri, quae uos a stirpe parentum
 ‘O hardy folk of Dardanus, the land that gave you birth
 prima tulit tellus, eadem uos ubere laeto 95
 From root and stem of fathers old, its very bosom kind,
 accipiet reduces. antiquam exquirite matrem.
 Shall take you back: go fare ye forth, your ancient mother find:
 hic domus Aeneae cunctis dominabitur oris
 There shall Æneas’ house be lords o’er every earth and sea,
 et nati natorum et qui nascentur ab illis.’
 The children of his children’s sons, and those that thence shall be.’
 haec Phoebus; mixtoque ingens exorta tumultu
 So Phoebus spake, and mighty joy arose with tumult mixed,
 laetitia, et cuncti quae sint ea moenia quaerunt, 100
 As all fell wondering where might be that seat of city fixed,
 quo Phoebus uocet errantis iubeatque reuerti.
 Where Phoebus called us wandering folk, bidding us turn again.
 tum genitor ueterum uoluens monimenta uirorum
 Thereat my father, musing o’er the tales of ancient men, ‘audite, o proceres,’ ait ‘et spes discite uestras.
 Saith: ‘Hearken, lords, and this your hope a little learn of me!
 Creta Iouis magni medio iacet insula ponto,
 There is an isle of mightiest Jove called Crete amid the sea;
 mons Idaeus ubi et gentis cunabula nostrae. 105
 An hundred cities great it hath, that most abundant place;
 centum urbes habitant magnas, uberrima regna,
 And there the hill of Ida is, and cradle of our race.
 maximus unde pater, si rite audita recordor,
 Thence Teucer our first father came, if right the tale they tell,
 Teucus Rhoeteas primum est aduectus in oras,

When borne to those Rhoetean shores he chose a place to dwell
 optauitque locum regno. nondum Ilium et arces
 A very king: no Ilium was, no Pergamus rose high;
 Pergameae steterant; habitabant uallibus imis. 110
 He and his folk abode as then in dales that lowly lie:
 hinc mater cultrix Cybeli Corybantiaque aera
 Thence came Earth-mother Cybele and Corybantian brass,
 Idaeumque nemus, hinc fida silentia sacris,
 And Ida's thicket; thence the hush all hallowed came to pass,
 et iuncti currum dominae subiere leones.
 And thence the lions yoked and tame, the Lady's chariot drag.
 ergo agite et diuum ducunt qua iussa sequamur:
 On then! and led by God's command for nothing let us lag!
 placemus uentos et Cnosia regna petamus. 115
 Please we the winds, and let our course for Gnosian land be laid;
 nec longo distant cursu: modo Iuppiter adsit,
 Nor long the way shall be for us: with Jupiter to aid,
 tertia lux classem Cretaeis sistet in oris.'
 The third-born sun shall stay our ships upon the Cretan shore.'
 sic fatus meritos aris mactauit honores,
 So saying, all the offerings due he to the altar bore,
 taurum Neptuno, taurum tibi, pulcher Apollo,
 A bull to Neptune, and a bull to thee, Apollo bright,
 nigram Hiemi pecudem, Zephyris felicibus albam. 120
 A black ewe to the Storm of sea, to Zephyr kind a white.
 Fama uolat pulsum regnis cessisse paternis
 Fame went that Duke Idomeneus, thrust from his fathers' land,
 Idomenea ducem, desertaque litora Cretae,
 Had gone his ways, and desert now was all the Cretan strand,
 hoste uacare domum sedesque astare relictas.
 That left all void of foes to us those habitations lie.
 linquimus Ortygiae portus pelagoque uolamus
 Ortygia's haven then we leave, and o'er the sea we fly
 bacchatamque iugis Naxon uiridemque Donusam, 125
 By Naxos of the Bacchus ridge, Donusa's green-hued steep,
 Olearon niueamque Paron sparsasque per aequor
 And Olearon, and Paros white, and scattered o'er the deep

Cycladas, et crebris legimus freta concita terris.

All Cyclades; we skim the straits besprent with many a folk;
nauticus exoritur uario certamine clamor:

And diverse clamour mid the ships seafarers striving woke;
hortantur socii Cretam proauosque petamus.

Each eggs his fellow; On for Crete, and sires of time agone!
prosequitur surgens a puppi uentus euntis, 130

And rising up upon our wake a fair wind followed on.
et tandem antiquis Curetum adlabimur oris.

And so at last we glide along the old Curetes' strand,
ergo audius muros optatae molior urbis

And straightway eager do I take the city wall in hand,
Pergameamque uoco, et laetam cognomine gentem

And call it Pergamea, and urge my folk that name who love,
hortor amare focos arcemque attollere tectis.

For love of hearth and home to raise a burg their walls above.
Iamque fere sicco subductae litore puppes, 135

And now the more part of the ships are hauled up high and dry,
conubiis aruisque nouis operata iuuentus,

To wedding and to work afield the folk fall presently,
iura domosque dabam, subito cum tabida membris

And I give laws and portion steads; when suddenly there fell
corrupto caeli tractu miserandaque uenit

From poisoned heaven a wasting plague, a wretched thing to tell,
arboribusque satisque lues et letifer annus.

On limbs of men, on trees and fields; and deadly was the year,
linquebant dulcis animas aut aegra trahebant 140

And men must leave dear life and die, or weary sick must bear
corpora; tum sterilis exurere Sirius agros,

Their bodies on: then Sirius fell to burn the acres dry;
arebant herbae et uictum seges aegra negabat.

The grass was parched, the harvest sick all victual did deny.
rursus ad oraclum Ortygiae Phoebumque remenso

Then bids my father back once more o'er the twice-measured main,
hortatur pater ire mari ueniamque precari,

To Phoebus and Ortygia's strand, some grace of prayer to gain:
quam fessis finem rebus ferat, unde laborum 145

What end to our outworn estate he giveth? whence will he
 temptare auxilium iubeat, quo uertere cursus.
 That we should seek us aid of toil; where turn to o'er the sea?
 Nox erat et terris animalia somnus habebat:
 Night falleth, and all lives of earth doth sleep on bosom bear,
 effigies sacrae diuum Phrygiiue penates,
 When lo, the holy images, the Phrygian House-gods there,
 quos mecum a Troia mediisque ex ignibus urbis
 E'en them I bore away from Troy and heart of burning town,
 extuleram, uisi ante oculos astare iacentis 150
 Were present to the eyes of me in slumber laid adown,
 in somnis multo manifesti lumine, qua se
 Clear shining in the plenteous light that over all was shed
 plena per insertas fundebat luna fenestras;
 By the great moon anigh her full through windows fashioned.
 tum sic adfari et curas his demere dictis:
 Then thus they fall to speech with me, end of my care to make:
 'quod tibi delato Ortygiam dicturus Apollo est,
 'The thing that in Ortygia erst the seer Apollo spake
 hic canit et tua nos en ultro ad limina mittit. 155
 Here telleth he, and to thy doors come we of his good will:
 nos te Dardania incensa tuaque arma secuti,
 Thee and thine arms from Troy aflame fast have we followed still.
 nos tumidum sub te permensi classibus aequor,
 We 'neath thy care and in thy keel have climbed the swelling sea,
 idem uenturos tollemus in astra nepotes
 And we shall bear unto the stars thy sons that are to be,
 imperiumque urbi dabimus. tu moenia magnis
 And give thy city majesty: make ready mighty wall
 magna para longumque fugae ne linque laborem. 160
 For mighty men, nor toil of way leave thou, though long it fall.
 mutandae sedes. non haec tibi litora suasit
 Shift hence abode; the Delian-born Apollo ne'er made sweet
 Delius aut Cretae iussit considerare Apollo.
 These shores for thee, nor bade thee set thy city down in Crete:
 est locus, Hesperiam Grai cognomine dicunt,
 There is a place, the Westland called of Greeks in days that are,

terra antiqua, potens armis atque ubere glabrae;
 An ancient land, a fruitful soil, a mighty land of war;
 Oenotri coluere uiri; nunc fama minores 165
 Oenotrian folk first tilled the land, whose sons, as rumours run,
 Italiam dixisse ducis de nomine gentem.
 Now call it nought but Italy, from him who led them on.
 hae nobis propriae sedes, hinc Dardanus ortus
 This is our very due abode: thence Dardanus outbroke,
 Iasiusque pater, genus a quo principe nostrum.
 Iasius our father thence, beginner of our folk.
 surge age et haec laetus longaeuo dicta parenti
 Come rise, and glad these tidings tell unto thy father old,
 haud dubitanda refer: Corythum terrasque requirat 170
 No doubtful tale: now Corythus, Ausonian field and fold
 Ausonias; Dictaea negat tibi Iuppiter arua.
 Let him go seek, for Jupiter banneth Dictæan mead.
 talibus attonitus uisis et uoce deorum
 All mazed was I with sight and voice of Gods; because indeed (nec sopor illud erat, sed coram agnoscere uultus
 This was not sleep, but face to face, as one a real thing sees.
 uelatasque comas praesentiaque ora uidebar;
 I seemed to see their coifed hair and very visages,
 tum gelidus toto manabat corpore sudor) 175
 And over all my body too cold sweat of trembling flowed.
 corripio e stratis corpus tendoque supinas
 I tore my body from the bed, and, crying out aloud,
 ad caelum cum uoce manus et munera libo
 I stretched my upturned hands to heaven and unstained gifts I spilled
 intemerata focis. perfecto laetus honore
 Upon the hearth, and joyfully that worship I fulfilled.
 Anchisen facio certum remque ordine pando.
 Anchises next I do to wit and all the thing unlock;
 agnouit prolem ambiguam geminosque parentis, 180
 And he, he saw the twi-branched stem, twin fathers of our stock,
 seque nouo ueterum deceptum errore locorum.
 And how by fault of yesterday through steads of old he strayed.
 tum memorat: 'nate, Iliacis exercite fatis,

‘O son, well learned in all the lore of Ilium’s fate,’ he said,
sola mihi talis casus Cassandra canebat.

‘Cassandra only of such hap would sing; I mind me well
nunc repeto haec generi portendere debita nostro
Of like fate meted to our folk full oft would she foretell;
et saepe Hesperiam, saepe Italia regna uocare. 185

And oft would call to Italy and that Hesperian home.

sed quis ad Hesperiae uenturos litora Teucros

But who believed that Teucrian folk on any day might come
crederet? aut quem tum uates Cassandra moueret?

Unto Hesperia’s shores? or who might trow Cassandra then?
cedamus Phoebos et moniti meliora sequamur.’

Yield we to Phoebus, follow we as better counselled men
sic ait, et cuncti dicto paremus ouantes.

The better part.’ We, full of joy, obey him with one mind;
hanc quoque deserimus sedem paucisque relictis 190

From this seat too we fare away and leave a few behind;
uela damus uastumque caua trabe currimus aequor.

With sail abroad in hollow tree we skim the ocean o’er.

Postquam altum tenuere rates nec iam amplius ullae

But when our keels the deep sea made, nor had we any more

apparent terrae, caelum undique et undique pontus,

The land in sight, but sea around, and sky around was spread,
tum mihi caeruleus supra caput astitit imber

A coal-blue cloud drew up to us that, hanging overhead,

noctem hiememque ferens, et inhorruit unda tenebris. 195

Bore night and storm, and mirky gloom o’er all the waters cast:
continuo uenti uoluunt mare magnaue surgunt

Therewith the winds heap up the waves, the seas are rising fast
aequora, dispersi iactamur gurgite uasto;

And huge; and through the mighty whirl scattered we toss about;
inuoluere diem nimbi et nox umida caelum

The storm-clouds wrap around the day, and wet mirk blotteth out
abstulit, ingeminant abruptis nubibus ignes,

The heavens, and mid the riven clouds the ceaseless lightnings live.
excutimur cursu et caecis erramus in undis. 200

So are we blown from out our course, through might of seas we drive,

ipse diem noctemque negat discernere caelo
Nor e'en might Palinurus self the day from night-tide sift,
nec meminisse uiae media Palinurus in unda.
Nor have a deeming of the road atwixt the watery drift.
tris adeo incertos caeca caligine soles
Still on for three uncertain suns, that blind mists overlay,
erramus pelago, totidem sine sidere noctes.
And e'en so many starless nights, across the sea we stray;
quarto terra die primum se attollere tandem 205
But on the fourth day at the last afar upon us broke
uisa, aperire procul montis ac uoluere fumum.
The mountains of another land, mid curling wreaths of smoke.
uela cadunt, remis insurgimus; haud mora, nautae
Then fall the sails, we rise on oars, no sloth hath any place,
adnixi torquent spumas et caerula uerrunt.
The eager seamen toss the spray and sweep the blue sea's face;
seruatum ex undis Strophadum me litora primum
And me first saved from whirl of waves the Strophades on strand
excipiunt. Strophades Graio stant nomine dictae 210
Now welcome; named by Greekish name Isles of the Sea, they stand
insulae Ionio in magno, quas dira Celaeno
Amid the great Ionian folk: Celæno holds the shores,
Harpyiaeque colunt aliae, Phineia postquam
And others of the Harpies grim, since shut were Phineus' doors
clausa domus mensasque metu liquere priores.
Against them, and they had to leave the tables they had won.
tristius haud illis monstrum, nec saeuior ulla
No monster woefuller than they, and crueller is none
pestis et ira deum Stygiis sese extulit undis. 215
Of all God's plagues and curses dread from Stygian waters sent.
uirginei uolucrum uultus, foedissima uentris
A wingèd thing with maiden face, whose bellies' excrement
proluuiis uncaeque manus et pallida semper
Is utter foul; and hookèd hands, and face for ever pale
ora fame.
With hunger that no feeding stints.

huc ubi delati portus intrauimus, ecce
 Borne thither, into haven come, we see how everywhere
 laeta boum passim campis armenta uidemus 220
 The merry wholesome herds of neat feed down the meadows fair,
 caprigenumque pecus nullo custode per herbas.
 And all untended goatish flocks amid the herbage bite.
 inruimus ferro et diuos ipsumque uocamus
 With point and edge we fall on them, and all the Gods invite,
 in partem praedamque louem; tum litore curuo
 Yea very Jove, to share the spoil, and on the curvèd strand
 exstruimusque toros dapibusque epulamur opimis.
 We strew the beds, and feast upon rich dainties of the land.
 at subitae horrifico lapsu de montibus adsunt 225
 When lo, with sudden dreadful rush from out the mountains hap
 Harpyiae et magnis quatiunt clangoribus alas,
 The Harpy folk, and all about their clanging wings they flap,
 diripiuntque dapes contactuque omnia foedant
 And foul all things with filthy touch as at the food they wrench,
 immundo; tum uox taetrum dira inter odorem.
 And riseth up their grisly voice amid the vilest stench.
 rursum in secessu longo sub rupe cauata
 Once more then 'neath a hollow rock at a long valley's head, [arboribus clausam circum atque horrentibus umbris] 230
 Where close around the boughs of trees their quavering shadows
 shed,
 instruimus mensas arisque reponimus ignem;
 We dight the boards, and once again flame on the altars raise.
 rursum ex diuerso caeli caecisque latebris
 Again from diverse parts of heaven, from dusky lurking-place,
 turba sonans praedam pedibus circumuolat uncis,
 The shrieking rout with hookèd feet about the prey doth fly,
 polluit ore dapes. sociis tunc arma capessant
 Fouling the feast with mouth: therewith I bid my company
 edico, et dira bellum cum gente gerendum. 235
 To arms, that with an evil folk the war may come to pass.
 haud secus ac iussi faciunt tectosque per herbam
 They do no less than my commands, and lay along the grass

disponunt ensis et scuta latentia condunt.
 Their hidden swords, and therewithal their bucklers cover o'er.
 ergo ubi delapsae sonitum per curua dedere
 Wherefore, when swooping down again, they fill the curvèd shore
 litora, dat signum specula Misenus ab alta
 With noise, Misenus blows the call from off a watch-stead high
 aere cauo. inuadunt socii et noua proelia temptant, 240
 With hollow brass; our folk fall on and wondrous battle try,
 obscenas pelagi ferro foedare uolucris.
 Striving that sea-fowl's filthy folk with point and edge to spill.
 sed neque uim plumis ullam nec uulnera tergo
 But nought will bite upon their backs, and from their feathers still
 accipiunt, celerique fuga sub sidera lapsae
 Glanceth the sword, and swift they flee up 'neath the stars of air,
 semesam praedam et uestigia foeda relinquunt.
 Half-eaten meat and token foul leaving behind them there.
 una in praecelsa consedit rupe Celaeno, 245
 But on a rock exceeding high yet did Celæno rest,
 infelix uates, rumpitque hanc pectore uocem;
 Unhappy seer! there breaks withal a voice from out her breast:
 'bellum etiam pro caede boum stratisque iuuentis,
 'What, war to pay for slaughtered neat, war for our heifers slain?
 Laomedontiadae, bellumne inferre paratis
 O children of Laomedon, the war then will ye gain?
 et patrio Harpyias insontis pellere regno?
 The sackless Harpies will ye drive from their own land away?
 accipite ergo animis atque haec mea figite dicta, 250
 Then let this sink into your souls, heed well the words I say;
 quae Phoebus pater omnipotens, mihi Phoebus Apollo
 The Father unto Phoebus told a tale that Phoebus told
 praedixit, uobis Furiarum ego maxima pando.
 To me, and I the first-born fiend that same to you unfold:
 Italiam cursu petitis uentisque uocatis:
 Ye sail for Italy, and ye, the winds appeased by prayer,
 ibitis Italiam portusque intrare licebit.
 Shall come to Italy, and gain the grace of haven there:
 sed non ante datam cingetis moenibus urbem 255

Yet shall ye gird no wall about the city granted you,
 quam uos dira fames nostraeque iniuria caedis
 Till famine, and this murder's wrong that ye were fain to do,
 ambasas subigat malis absumere mensas.'
 Drive you your tables gnawed with teeth to eat up utterly.'
 dixit, et in siluam pennis ablata refugit.
 She spake, and through the woody deeps borne off on wings did fly.
 at sociis subita gelidus formidine sanguis
 But sudden fear fell on our folk, and chilled their frozen blood;
 deriguit: cecidere animi, nec iam amplius armis, 260
 Their hearts fell down; with weapon-stroke no more they deem it good
 sed uotis precibusque iubent exposcere pacem,
 To seek for peace: but rather now sore prayers and vows they will,
 siue deae seu sint dirae obscenaeque uolucres.
 Whether these things be goddesses or filthy fowls of ill.
 et pater Anchises passis de litore palmis
 Father Anchises on the strand stretched both his hands abroad,
 numina magna uocat meritosque indicit honores:
 And, bidding all their worship due, the Mighty Ones adored:
 'di, prohibete minas; di, talem auertite casum 265
 'Gods, bring their threats to nought! O Gods, turn ye the curse, we pray!
 et placidi seruate pios.' tum litore funem
 Be kind, and keep the pious folk!' Then bade he pluck away
 deripere excussosque iubet laxare rudentis.
 The hawser from the shore and slack the warping cable's strain:
 tendunt uela Noti: fugimus spumantibus undis
 The south wind fills the sails, we fare o'er foaming waves again,
 qua cursum uentusque gubernatorque uocabat.
 E'en as the helmsman and the winds have will that we should fare.
 iam medio apparet fluctu nemorosa Zacynthos 270
 And now amidmost of the flood Zacynthus' woods appear,
 Dulichiumque Sameque et Neritos ardua saxis.
 Dulichium, Samos, Neritos, with sides of stony steep:
 effugimus scopulos Ithacae, Laertia regna,
 Wide course from cliffs of Ithaca, Laertes' land, we keep,

et terram altricem saeui exsecramur Vlixī.
 Cursing the soil that bore and nursed Ulysses' cruelty.
 mox et Leucatae nimbose cacumina montis
 Now open up Leucata's peaks, that fare so cloudy high
 et formidatus nautis aperitur Apollo. 275
 Over Apollo, mighty dread to all seafarers grown;
 hunc petimus fessi et paruae succedimus urbi;
 But weary thither do we steer and make the little town,
 ancora de prora iacitur, stant litore puppes.
 We cast the anchors from the bows and swing the sterns a-strand.
 Ergo insperata tandem tellure potiti
 And therewithal since we at last have gained the longed-for land,
 lustramurque Ioui uotisque incendimus aras,
 We purge us before Jupiter and by the altars pray,
 Actiaque Iliacis celebramus litora ludis. 280
 Then on the shores of Actium's head the Ilian plays we play.
 exercent patrias oleo labente palaestras
 Anointed with the sleeking oil there strive our fellows stripped
 nudati socii: iuuat euasisse tot urbes
 In wrestling game of fatherland: it joys us to have slipped
 Argolicas mediosque fugam tenuisse per hostis.
 By such a host of Argive towns amidmost of the foe.
 interea magnum sol circumuoluitur annum
 Meanwhile, the sun still pressing on, the year about doth go,
 et glacialis hiems Aquilonibus asperat undas. 285
 And frosty winter with his north the sea's face rough doth wear;
 aere cauo clipeum, magni gestamen Abantis,
 A buckler of the hollow brass of mighty Abas' gear
 postibus aduersis figo et rem carmine signo:
 I set amid the temple-doors with singing scroll thereon,
 aeneas haec de danais victoribus arma;
 ÆNEAS HANGETH ARMOUR HERE FROM CONQUERING DANAANS WON.
 linquere tum portus iubeo et considerare transtris.
 And then I bid to leave the shore and man the thwarts again.
 certatim socii feriunt mare et aequora uerrunt: 290
 Hard strive the folk in smiting sea, and oar-blades brush the main.

protinus aerias Phaeacum abscondimus arces
The airy high Phæacian towers sink down behind our wake,
litoraue Epiri legimus portuque subimus
And coasting the Epirote shores Chaonia's bay we make,
Chaonio et celsam Buthroti accedimus urbem.
And so Buthrotus' city-walls high set we enter in.
Hic incredibilis rerum fama occupat auris,
There tidings hard for us to throw unto our ears do win,
Priamiden Helenum Graias regnare per urbis 295
How Helenus, e'en Priam's son, hath gotten wife and crown
coniugio Aeacidæ Pyrrhi sceptrisque potitum,
Of Pyrrhus come of Æacus, and ruleth Greekish town,
et patrio Andromachen iterum cecidisse marito.
And that Andromache hath wed one of her folk once more.
obstupui, miroque incensum pectus amore
All mazed am I; for wondrous love my heart was kindling sore compellere uirum et casus cognoscere tantos.
To give some word unto the man, of such great things to learn:
progredior portu classis et litora linquens, 300
So from the haven forth I fare, from ships and shore I turn.
sollemnis cum forte dapes et tristia dona
But as it happened Andromache was keeping yearly day,
ante urbem in luco falsi Simoentis ad undam
Pouring sad gifts unto the dead, amidst a grove that lay
libabat cineri Andromache manisque uocabat
Outside the town, by wave that feigned the Simoïs that had been,
Hectoreum ad tumulum, uiridi quem caespitè inanem Blessing the dead by Hector's mound empty and grassy green,
et geminas, causam lacrimis, sacrauerat aras. 305
Which she with altars twain thereby had hallowed for her tears.
ut me conspexit uenientem et Troia circum
But when she saw me drawing nigh with armour that Troy bears
arma amens uidit, magnis exterrita monstis
About me, senseless, throughly feared with marvels grown so great,
deriguit uisu in medio, calor ossa reliquit,
She stiffens midst her gaze; her bones are reft of life-blood's heat,
labitur, et longo uix tandem tempore fatur:

She totters, scarce, a long while o'er, this word comes forth from her:
 'uerane te facies, uerus mihi nuntius adfers, 310
 'Is the show true, O Goddess-born? com'st thou a messenger
 nate dea? uiuisne? aut, si lux alma recessit,
 Alive indeed? or if from thee the holy light is fled,
 Hector ubi est?' dixit, lacrimasque effudit et omnem
 Where then is Hector?' Flowed the tears e'en as the word she said, impleuit clamore locum. uix pauca furenti
 And with her wailing rang the place: sore moved I scarce may speak
 subicio et raris turbatus uocibus hisco:
 This word to her, grown wild with grief, in broken voice and weak:
 'uiuo equidem uitamque extrema per omnia duco; 315
 'I live indeed, I drag my life through outer ways of ill;
 ne dubita, nam uera uides.
 Doubt not, thou seest the very sooth.
 heu! quis te casus deiectam coniuge tanto
 Alas! what hap hath caught thee up from such a man downcast?
 excipit, aut quae digna satis fortuna reuisit,
 Hath any fortune worthy thee come back again at last?
 Hectoris Andromache? Pyrrhin conubia seruas?
 Doth Hector's own Andromache yet serve in Pyrrhus' bed?'
 deiecit uultum et demissa uoce locuta est: 320
 She cast her countenance adown, and in a low voice said:
 'o felix una ante alias Priameia uirgo,
 'O thou alone of Trojan maids that won a little joy,
 hostilem ad tumulum Troiae sub moenibus altis
 Bidden to die on foeman's tomb before the walls of Troy!
 iussa mori, quae sortitus non pertulit ullos
 Who died, and never had to bear the sifting lot's award,
 nec uictoris heri tetigit captiua cubile!
 Whose slavish body never touched the bed of victor lord!
 nos patria incensa diuersa per aequora uectae 325
 We from our burning fatherland carried o'er many a sea,
 stirpis Achilleae fastus iuuenemque superbum
 Of Achillæan offspring's pride the yoke-fellow must be,
 seruitio enixae tulimus; qui deinde secutus
 Must bear the childbed of a slave: thereafter he, being led

Ledaëam Hermionen Lacedaemoniosque hymenaeos
 To Leda's child Hermione and that Laconian bed,
 me famulo famulamque Heleno transmisit habendam.
 To Helenus his very thrall me very thrall gave o'er:
 ast illum ereptae magno flammatus amore 330
 But there Orestes, set on fire by all the love he bore
 coniugis et scelerum furiis agitatus Orestes
 His ravished wife, and mad with hate, comes on him unaware
 excipit incautum patriasque obtruncat ad aras.
 Before his fathers' altar-stead and slays him then and there.
 morte Neoptolemi regnorum reddita cessit
 By death of Neoptolemus his kingdom's leavings came
 pars Heleno, qui Chaonios cognomine campos
 To Helenus, who called the fields Chaonian fields by name,
 Chaoniamque omnem Troiano a Chaone dixit, 335
 And all the land Chaonia, from Chaon of Troy-town;
 Pergamaque Iliacamque iugis hanc addidit arcem.
 And Pergamus and Ilian burg on ridgy steep set down.
 sed tibi qui cursum uenti, quae fata dedere?
 What winds, what fates gave thee the road to cross the ocean o'er?
 aut quisnam ignarum nostris deus appulit oris?
 Or what of Gods hath borne thee on unwitting to our shore?
 quid puer Ascanius? superatne et uescitur aura?
 What of the boy Ascanius? lives he and breathes he yet?
 quem tibi iam Troia — 340
 Whom unto thee when Troy yet was ——
 ecqua tamen puero est amissae cura parentis?
 The boy then, of his mother lost, hath he a thought of her?
 ecquid in antiquam uirtutem animosque uirilis
 Do him Æneas, Hector gone, father and uncle, stir,
 et pater Aeneas et auunculus excitat Hector?
 To valour of the ancient days, and great hearts' glorious gain?
 talia fundebat lacrimans longosque ciebat
 Such tale she poured forth, weeping sore, and long she wept in vain
 incassum fletus, cum sese a moenibus heros 345
 Great floods of tears: when lo, from out the city draweth nigh
 Priamides multis Helenus comitantibus adfert,

Lord Helenus the Priam-born midst mighty company,
 agnoscitque suos laetusque ad limina ducit,
 And knows his kin, and joyfully leads onward to his door,
 et multum lacrimas uerba inter singula fundit.
 Though many a tear 'twixt broken words the while doth he outpour.
 procedo et paruam Troiam simulataque magnis
 So on; a little Troy I see feigned from great Troy of fame,
 Pergama et arentem Xanthi cognomine riuum 350
 A Pergamus, a sandy brook that hath the Xanthus name,
 agnosco, Scaeeaeque amplector limina portae;
 On threshold of a Scæan gate I stoop to lay a kiss.
 nec non et Teucri socia simul urbe fruuntur.
 Soon, too, all Teucrian folk are wrapped in friendly city's bliss,
 illos porticibus rex accipiebat in amplis:
 And them the King fair welcomes in amid his cloisters broad,
 aulai medio libabant pocula Bacchi
 And they amidmost of the hall the bowls of Bacchus poured,
 impositis auro dapibus, paterasque tenebant. 355
 The meat was set upon the gold, and cups they held in hand.
 Iamque dies alterque dies processit, et auræ
 So passed a day and other day, until the gales command
 uela uocant tumidoque inflatur carbasus Austro:
 The sails aloft, and canvas swells with wind from out the South:
 his uatem adgredior dictis ac talia quaeso:
 Therewith I speak unto the seer, such matters in my mouth:
 'Troiu gena, interpres diuum, qui numina Phoebi,
 'O Troy-born, O Gods' messenger, who knowest Phoebus' will,
 qui tripodas Clarii et laurus, qui sidera sentis 360
 The tripods and the Clarian's bay, and what the stars fulfil,
 et uolucrum linguas et praepectis omina pennae,
 And tongues of fowl, and omens brought by swift foreflying wing,
 fare age (namque omnis cursum mihi prospera dixit
 Come, tell the tale! for of my way a happy heartening thing
 religio, et cuncti suaserunt numine diui
 All shrines have said, and all the Gods have bid me follow on Italiam petere et terras temptare repostas;
 To Italy, till outland shores, far off, remote were won:

sola nouum dictuque nefas Harpyia Celaeno 365

Alone Celæno, Harpy-fowl, new dread of fate set forth,
prodigium canit et tristis denuntiat iras

Unmeet to tell, and bade us fear the grimmest day of wrath,
obsceamque famem), quae prima pericula uito?

And ugly hunger. How may I by early perils fare?
quidue sequens tantos possim superare labores?’

Or doing what may I have might such toil to overbear?’

hic Helenus caesis primum de more iuuenis

So Helenus, when he hath had the heifers duly slain,

exorat pacem diuum uittasque resouit 370

Prays peace of Gods, from hallowed head he doffs the bands again,
sacra capitis, meque ad tua limina, Phoebe,

And then with hand he leadeth me, O Phoebus, to thy door,
ipse manu multo suspensum numine ducit,

My fluttering soul with all thy might of godhead shadowed o’er.

atque haec deinde canit diuino ex ore sacerdos:

There forth at last from God-loved mouth the seer this word did send:

‘Nate dea (nam te maioribus ire per altum

‘O Goddess-born, full certainly across the sea ye wend

auspiciis manifesta fides; sic fata deum rex 375

By mightiest bidding, such the lot the King of Gods hath found
sortitur uoluitque uices, is uertitur ordo),

All fateful; so he rolls the world, so turns its order round.

pauca tibi e multis, quo tutior hospita lustres

Few things from many will I tell that thou the outland sea

aequora et Ausonio possis considerare portu,

May’st sail the safer, and at last make land in Italy;

expediam dictis; prohibent nam cetera Parcae

The other things the Parcae still ban Helenus to wot,

scire Helenum farique uetat Saturnia Iuno. 380

Saturnian Juno’s will it is that more he utter not.

principio Italiam, quam tu iam rere propinquam

First, from that Italy, which thou unwitting deem’st anigh,

uicinosque, ignare, paras inuadere portus,

Thinking to make in little space the haven close hereby,

longa procul longis uia diuidit inuia terris.
 Long is the wayless way that shears, and long the length of land;
 ante et Trinacria lentandus remus in unda
 And first in the Trinacrian wave must bend the rower's wand.
 et salis Ausonii lustrandum nauibus aequor 385
 On plain of that Ausonian salt your ships must stray awhile,
 infernique lacus Aeaeaeque insula Circae,
 And thou must see the nether meres, Ææan Circe's isle,
 quam tuta possis urbem componere terra.
 Ere thou on earth assured and safe thy city may'st set down.
 signa tibi dicam, tu condita mente teneto:
 I show thee tokens; in thy soul store thou the tokens shown.
 cum tibi sollicito secreti ad fluminis undam
 When thou with careful heart shalt stray the secret stream anigh,
 litoreis ingens inuenta sub ilicibus sus 390
 And 'neath the holm-oaks of the shore shalt see a great sow lie,
 triginta capitum fetus enixa iacebit,
 That e'en now farrowed thirty head of young, long on the ground
 alba solo recubans, albi circum ubera nati,
 She lieth white, with piglings white their mother's dugs around, —
 is locus urbis erit, requies ea certa laborum.
 That earth shall be thy city's place, there rest from toil is stored.
 nec tu mensarum morsus horresce futuros:
 Nor shudder at the coming curse, the gnawing of the board,
 fata uiam inuenient aderitque uocatus Apollo. 395
 The Fates shall find a way thereto; Apollo called shall come.
 has autem terras Italique hanc litoris oram,
 But flee these lands of Italy, this shore so near our home,
 proxima quae nostri perfunditur aequoris aestu,
 That washing of the strand thereof our very sea-tide seeks;
 effuge; cuncta malis habitantur moenia Graiis.
 For in all cities thereabout abide the evil Greeks.
 hic et Narycii posuerunt moenia Locri,
 There now have come the Locrian folk Narycian walls to build;
 et Sallentinos obsedit milite campos 400
 And Lyctian Idomeneus Sallentine meads hath filled
 Lyctius Idomeneus; hic illa ducis Meliboei

With war-folk; Philoctetes there holdeth Petelia small,
 parua Philoctetae subnixa Petelia muro.
 Now by that Meliboean duke fenced round with mighty wall.
 quin ubi transmissae steterint trans aequora classes
 Moreover, when your ships have crossed the sea, and there do stay,
 et positis aris iam uota in litore solues,
 And on the altars raised thereto your vows ashore ye pay,
 purpureo uelare comas adopertus amictu, 405
 Be veiled of head, and wrap thyself in cloth of purple dye,
 ne qua inter sanctos ignis in honore deorum
 Lest 'twixt you and the holy fires ye light to God on high
 hostilis facies occurrat et omina turbet.
 Some face of foeman should thrust in the holy signs to spill.
 hunc socii morem sacrorum, hunc ipse teneto;
 Now let thy folk, yea and thyself, this worship thus fulfil,
 hac casti maneant in religione nepotes.
 And let thy righteous sons of sons such fashion ever mind.
 ast ubi digressum Siculae te admouerit orae 410
 But when, gone forth, to Sicily thou comest on the wind,
 uentus, et angusti rarescent claustra Pelori,
 And when Pelorus' narrow sea is widening all away,
 laeua tibi tellus et longo laeua petantur
 Your course for leftward lying land and leftward waters lay,
 aequora circuitu; dextrum fuge litus et undas.
 How long soe'er ye reach about: flee right-hand shore and wave.
 haec loca ui quondam et uasta conuulsa ruina
 In time agone some mighty thing this place to wrack down drave, (tantum aevi longinqua ualet mutare uetustas) 415
 So much for changing of the world doth lapse of time avail.
 dissiluisse ferunt, cum protinus utraque tellus
 It split atwain, when heretofore the two lands, saith the tale,
 una foret: uenit medio ui pontus et undis
 Had been but one, the sea rushed in and clave with mighty flood
 Hesperium Siculo latus abscidit, aruaque et urbes Hesperia's side from Italy, and field and city stood
 litore diductas angusto interluit aestu.
 Drawn back on either shore, along a sundering sea-race strait.

dextrum Scylla latus, laeuum implacata Charybdis 420

There Scylla on the right hand lurks, the left insatiate
obsidet, atque imo barathri ter gurgite uastos
Charybdis holds, who in her maw all whirling deep adown
sorbet in abruptum fluctus rursusque sub auras
Sucketh the great flood tumbling in thrice daily, which out-thrown
erigit alternos, et sidera uerberat unda.

Thrice daily doth she spout on high, smiting the stars with brine.
at Scyllam caecis cohibet spelunca latebris

But Scylla doth the hidden hole of mirky cave confine;
ora exsertantem et nauis in saxa trahentem. 425

With face thrust forth she draweth ships on to that stony bed;
prima hominis facies et pulchro pectore uirgo

Manlike above, with maiden breast and lovely fashioned
pube tenus, postrema immani corpore pistrix

Down to the midst, she hath below huge body of a whale,
delphinum caudas utero commissa luporum.

And unto maw of wolfish heads is knit a dolphin's tail.
praestat Trinacrii metas lustrare Pachyni

'Tis better far to win about Pachynus, outer ness
cessantem, longos et circumflectere cursus, 430

Of Sicily, and reach long round, despite the weariness,
quam semel informem uasto uidisse sub antro

Than have that ugly sight of her within her awful den,
Scyllam et caeruleis canibus resonantia saxa.

And hear her coal-blue baying dogs and rocks that ring again.
praeterea, si qua est Heleno prudentia uati,

Now furthermore if Helenus in anything have skill,
si qua fides, animum si ueris implet Apollo,

Or aught of trust, or if his soul with sooth Apollo fill,
unum illud tibi, nate dea, proque omnibus unum 435

Of one thing, Goddess-born, will I forewarn thee over all,
praedicam et repetens iterumque iterumque monebo,

And spoken o'er and o'er again my word on thee shall fall:
Iunonis magnae primum prece numen adora,

The mighty Juno's godhead first let many a prayer seek home;
Iunoni cane uota libens dominamque potentem

To Juno sing your vows in joy, with suppliant gifts o'ercome
 supplicibus supera donis: sic denique uictor
 That Lady of all Might; and so, Trinacria overpast, Trinacria finis Italos mittere relictæ. 440
 Shalt thou be sped to Italy victorious at the last.
 huc ubi delatus Cumæam accesseris urbem
 When there thou com'st and Cumæ's town amidst thy way hast
 found,
 diuinosque lacus et Auerna sonantia siluis,
 The Holy Meres, Avernus' woods fruitful of many a sound,
 insanam uatem aspicias, quæ rupe sub ima
 There the wild seer-maid shalt thou see, who in a rock-hewn cave
 fata canit foliisque notas et nomina mandat.
 Singeth of fate, and letteth leaves her names and tokens have:
 quaecumque in foliis descripsit carmina uirgo 445
 But whatso song upon those leaves the maiden seer hath writ
 digerit in numerum atque antro seclusa relinquit:
 She ordereth duly, and in den of live stone leaveth it:
 illa manent immota locis neque ab ordine cedunt.
 There lie the written leaves unmoved, nor shift their ordered rows.
 uerum eadem, uerso tenuis cum cardine uentus
 But when the hinge works round, and thence a light air on them blows,
 impulit et teneras turbauit ianua frondes,
 Then, when the door doth disarray among the frail leaves bear,
 numquam deinde cauo uolitantia prendere saxo 450
 To catch them fluttering in the cave she never hath a care,
 nec reuocare situs aut iungere carmina curat:
 Nor will she set them back again nor make the song-words meet;
 inconsulti abeunt sedemque odere Sibyllæ.
 So folk unanswered go their ways and loathe the Sibyl's seat.
 hic tibi ne qua moræ fuerint dispendia tanti,
 But thou, count not the cost of time that there thou hast to spend;
 quamuis increpitent socii et ui cursus in altum
 Although thy fellows blame thee sore, and length of way to wend
 uela uocet, possisque sinus implere secundos, 455
 Call on thy sails, and thou may'st fill their folds with happy gale,

quin adeas uatem precibusque oracula poscas
 Draw nigh the seer, and strive with prayers to have her holy tale;
 ipsa canat uocemque uolens atque ora resoluat.
 Beseech her sing, and that her words from willing tongue go free:
 illa tibi Italiae populos uenturaque bella
 So revered shall she tell thee tale of folk of Italy
 et quo quemque modo fugiasque ferasque laborem
 And wars to come; and how to 'scape, and how to bear each ill,
 expediet, cursusque dabit uenerata secundos. 460
 And with a happy end at last thy wandering shall fulfil.
 haec sunt quae nostra liceat te uoce moneri.
 Now is this all my tongue is moved to tell thee lawfully:
 uade age et ingentem factis fer ad aethera Troiam.'
 Go, let thy deeds Troy's mightiness exalt above the sky!'

Quae postquam uates sic ore effatus amico est,
 So when the seer from loving mouth such words as this had said,
 dona dehinc auro graui ac secto elephanto
 Then gifts of heavy gold and gifts of carven tooth he bade
 imperat ad nauis ferri, stipatque carinis 465
 Be borne a-shipboard; and our keels he therewithal doth stow
 ingens argentum Dodonaeosque lebetas,
 With Dodonæan kettle-ware and silver great enow,
 lorica consertam hamis auroque trilicem,
 A coat of hookèd woven mail and triple golden chain,
 et conum insignis galeae cristasque comantis,
 A helm with noble towering crest crowned with a flowing mane,
 arma Neoptolemi. sunt et sua dona parenti.
 The arms of Pyrrhus: gifts most meet my father hath withal;
 addit equos, additque duces, 470
 And steeds he gives and guides he gives,
 remigium supplet, socios simul instruit armis.
 Fills up the tale of oars, and arms our fellows to their need.
 Interea classem uelis aptare iubebat
 Anchises still was bidding us meanwhile to have a heed
 Anchises, fieret uento mora ne qua ferenti.
 Of setting sail, nor with the wind all fair to make delay;
 quem Phoebi interpret multo compellat honore:

To whom with words of worship now doth Phoebus' servant say:
'coniugio, Anchisa, Veneris dignate superbo, 475
'Anchises, thou whom Venus' bed hath made so glorious,
cura deum, bis Pergameis erepte ruinis,
Care of the Gods, twice caught away from ruin of Pergamus,
ecce tibi Ausoniae tellus: hanc arripe uelis.
Lo, there the Ausonian land for thee, set sail upon the chase:
et tamen hanc pelago praeterlabare necesse est:
Yet needs must thou upon the sea glide by its neighbouring face.
Ausoniae pars illa procul quam pandit Apollo.
Far off is that Ausonia yet that Phoebus open lays.
uade,' ait 'o felix nati pietate. quid ultra 480
Fare forth, made glad with pious son! why tread I longer ways
prouehor et fando surgentis demoror Austros?'
Of speech, and stay the rising South with words that I would tell?'
nec minus Andromache digressu maesta supremo
And therewithal Andromache, sad with the last farewell,
fert picturatas auri subtemine uestis
Brings for Ascanius raiment wrought with picturing wool of gold,
et Phrygiam Ascanio chlamydem (nec cedit honore)
And Phrygian coat; nor will she have our honour wax acold,
textilibusque onerat donis, ac talia fatur: 485
But loads him with the woven gifts, and such word sayeth she:
'accipe et haec, manuum tibi quae monimenta mearum
'Take these, fair boy; keep them to be my hands' last memory,
sint, puer, et longum Andromachae testentur amorem,
The tokens of enduring love thy younger days did win
coniugis Hectoreae. cape dona extrema tuorum,
From Hector's wife Andromache, the last gifts of thy kin.
o mihi sola mei super Astyanactis imago.
O thou, of my Astyanax the only image now!
sic oculos, sic ille manus, sic ora ferebat; 490
Such eyes he had, such hands he had, such countenance as thou,
et nunc aequali tecum pubesceret aeuo.'
And now with thee were growing up in equal tale of years.'
hos ego digrediens lacrimis adfabar obortis:
Then I, departing, spake to them amid my rising tears:

‘uiuie felices, quibus est fortuna peracta

‘Live happy! Ye with fortune’s game have nothing more to play,
iam sua: nos alia ex aliis in fata uocamur.

While we from side to side thereof are hurried swift away.

uobis parta quies: nullum maris aequor arandum, ⁴⁹⁵

Your rest hath blossomed and brought forth; no sea-field shall ye till,
arua neque Ausoniae semper cedentia retro

Seeking the fields of Italy that fade before you still.

quaerenda. effigiem Xanthi Troiamque uidetis

Ye see another Xanthus here, ye see another Troy,

quam uestrae fecere manus, melioribus, opto,

Made by your hands for better days me hopes, and longer joy:

auspiciis, et quae fuerit minus obuia Graiis.

And soothly less it lies across the pathway of the Greek,

si quando Thybrim uicinaque Thybridis arua ⁵⁰⁰

If ever I that Tiber flood and Tiber fields I seek

intraro gentique meae data moenia cernam,

Shall enter, and behold the walls our folk shall win of fate.

cognatas urbes olim populosque propinquos,

Twin cities some day shall we have, and folks confederate,

Epiro Hesperiam (quibus idem Dardanus auctor

Epirus and Hesperia; from Dardanus each came,

atque idem casus), unam faciemus utramque

One fate had each: them shall we make one city and the same,

Troiam animis: maneat nostros ea cura nepotes.’ ⁵⁰⁵

One Troy in heart: lo, let our sons of sons’ sons see to it!’

Prouehimur pelago uicina Ceraunia iuxta,

Past nigh Ceraunian mountain-sides thence o’er the sea we flit,

unde iter Italiam cursusque breuissimus undis.

Whence the sea-way to Italy the shortest may be made.

sol ruit interea et montes umbrantur opaci;

But in the meanwhile sets the sun, the dusk hills lie in shade,

sternimur optatae gremio telluris ad undam

And, choosing oar-wards, down we lie on bosom of the land

sortiti remos passimque in litore sicco ⁵¹⁰

So wished for: by the water-side and on the dry sea-strand

corpora curamus, fessos sopor inrigat artus.

We tend our bodies here and there; sleep floodeth every limb.

necdum orbem medium Nox Horis acta subibat:

But ere the hour-bedriven night in midmost orb did swim,

haud segnis strato surgit Palinurus et omnis

Nought slothful Palinurus rose, and wisdom strives to win

explorat uentos atque auribus aera captat;

Of all the winds: with eager ear the breeze he drinketh in;

sidera cuncta notat tacito labentia caelo, 515

He noteth how through silent heaven the stars soft gliding fare,

Arcturum pluuiasque Hyadas geminosque Triones,

Arcturus, the wet Hyades, and either Northern Bear,

armatumque auro circumspicit Oriona.

And through and through he searcheth out Orion girt with gold.

postquam cuncta uidet caelo constare sereno,

So when he sees how everything a peaceful sky foretold,

dat clarum e puppi signum; nos castra mouemus

He bloweth clear from off the poop, and we our campment shift,

temptamusque uiam et uelorum pandimus alas. 520

And try the road and spread abroad our sail-wings to the lift.

Iamque rubescebat stellis Aurora fugatis

And now, the stars all put to flight, Aurora's blushes grow,

cum procul obscuros collis humilemque uidemus

When we behold dim fells afar and long lands lying low,

Italiam. Italiam primus conclamat Achates,

— E'en Italy. Achates first cries out on Italy;

Italiam laeto socii clamore salutant.

To Italy our joyous folk glad salutation cry.

tum pater Anchises magnum cratera corona 525

Anchises then a mighty bowl crowned with a garland fair,

induit impleuitque mero, diuosque uocauit

And filled it with unwatered wine and called the Gods to hear,

stans celsa in puppi:

High standing on the lofty deck:

'di maris et terrae tempestatumque potentes,

'O Gods that rule the earth and sea, and all the tides of storm,

ferte uiam uento facilem et spirare secundi.'

Make our way easy with the wind, breathe on us kindly breath!'

crebrescunt optatae aurae portusque patescit 530

Then riseth up the longed-for breeze, the haven openeth
iam propior, templumque apparet in arce Mineruae;

As nigh we draw, and on the cliff a fane of Pallas shows:
uela legunt socii et proras ad litora torquent.

Therewith our fellow-folk furl sail and shoreward turn the prows.
portus ab euroo fluctu curuatus in arcum,

Bow-wise the bight is hollowed out by eastward-setting flood,
objectae salsa spumant aspergine cautes,

But over-foamed by salt-sea spray thrust out its twin horns stood,
ipse latet: gemino demittunt brachia muro 535

While it lay hidden; tower-like rocks let down on either hand
turriti scopuli refugitque ab litore templum.

Twin arms of rock-wall, and the fane lies backward from the stand.
quattuor hic, primum omen, equos in gramine uidi

But I beheld upon the grass four horses, snowy white,
tondentis campum late, candore niuali.

Grazing the meadows far and wide, first omen of my sight.
et pater Anchises 'bellum, o terra hospita, portas:

Father Anchises seeth and saith: 'New land, and bear'st thou war?
bello armantur equi, bellum haec armenta minantur. 540

For war are horses dight; so these war-threatening herd-beasts are.
sed tamen idem olim curru succedere sueti

Yet whiles indeed those four-foot things in car will well refrain,
quadripedes et frena iugo concordia ferre:

And tamed beneath the yoke will bear the bit and bridle's strain,
spes et pacis' ait. tum numina sancta precamur

So there is yet a hope of peace.' Then on the might we call Palladis armisonae, quae prima accepit ouantis,

Of Pallas of the weapon-din, first welcomer of all,
et capita ante aras Phrygio uelamur amictu, 545

And veil our brows before the Gods with cloth of Phrygian dye;
praeceptisque Heleni, dederat quae maxima, rite

And that chief charge of Helenus we do all rightfully,
Iunoni Argiuae iussos adolemus honores.

And Argive Juno worship there in such wise as is willed.
Haud mora, continuo perfectis ordine uotis

We tarry not, but when all vows are duly there fulfilled,
cornua uelatarum obuertimus antemnarum,
Unto the wind our sail-yard horns we fall to turn about,
Graiugenumque domos suspectaque linquimus arua. 550
And leave the houses of the Greeks, and nursing fields of doubt.
hinc sinus Herculei (si uera est fama) Tarenti
And next is seen Tarentum's bay, the Herculean place
cernitur, attollit se diua Lacinia contra,
If fame tell true; Lacinia then, the house of Gods, we face;
Caulonisque arces et nauifragum Scylaceum.
And Caulon's towers, and Scylaceum, of old the shipman's bane.
tum procul e fluctu Trinacria cernitur Aetna,
Then see we Ætna rise far off above Trinacria's main;
et gemitum ingentem pelagi pulsataque saxa 555
Afar the mighty moan of sea, and sea-cliffs beaten sore,
audimus longe fractasque ad litora uoces,
We hearken, and the broken voice that cometh from the shore:
exsultantque uada atque aestu miscentur harenae.
The sea leaps high upon the shoals, the eddy churns the sand.
et pater Anchises 'nimirum hic illa Charybdis:
Then saith Anchises: 'Lo forsooth, Charybdis is at hand,
hos Helenus scopulos, haec saxa horrenda canebat.
Those rocks and stones the dread whereof did Helenus foretell.
eripite, o socii, pariterque insurgite remis.' 560
Save ye, O friends! swing out the oars together now and well!
haud minus ac iussi faciunt, primusque rudentem
Nor worser than his word they do, and first the roaring beaks
contorsit laeuas proram Palinurus ad undas;
Doth Palinurus leftward wrest; then all the sea-host seeks
laeuam cuncta cohors remis uentisque petiuit.
With sail and oar the waters wild upon the left that lie:
tollimur in caelum curuato gurgite, et idem
Upheaved upon the tossing whirl we fare unto the sky,
subducta ad Manis imos desedimus unda. 565
Then down unto the nether Gods we sink upon the wave:
ter scopuli clamorem inter caua saxa dedere,
Thrice from the hollow-carven rocks great roar the sea-cliffs gave;

ter spumam elisam et rorantia uidimus astra.

Thrice did we see the spray cast forth and stars with sea-dew done;
interea fessos uentus cum sole reliquit,

But the wind left us weary folk at sinking of the sun,
ignarique uiae Cyclopum adlabimur oris.

And on the Cyclops' strand we glide unwitting of the way.

Portus ab accessu uentorum immotus et ingens 570

Locked from the wind the haven is, itself an ample bay;

ipse: sed horrificis iuxta tonat Aetna ruinis,

But hard at hand mid ruin and fear doth Ætna thunder loud;

interdumque atram prorumpit ad aethera nubem

And whiles it blasteth forth on air a black and dreadful cloud,

turbine fumantem piceo et candente fauilla,

That rolleth on a pitchy wreath, where bright the ashes mix,

attollitque globos flammarum et sidera lambit;

And heaveth up great globes of flame and heaven's high star-world
licks,

interdum scopulos auulsaque uiscera montis 575

And other whiles the very cliffs, and riven mountain-maw

erigit eructans, liquefactaque saxa sub auras

It belches forth; the molten stones together will it draw

cum gemitu glomerat fundoque exaestuat imo.

Aloft with moan, and boileth o'er from lowest inner vale.

fama est Enceladi semustum fulmine corpus

This world of mountain presseth down, as told it is in tale,

urgeri mole hac, ingentemque insuper Aetnam

Enceladus the thunder-scorched; huge Ætna on him cast,

impositam ruptis flammam exspirare caminis, 580

From all her bursten furnaces breathes out his fiery blast;

et fessum quotiens mutet latus, intremere omnem

And whensoe'er his weary side he shifteth, all the shore

murmure Trinacriam et caelum subtexere fumo.

Trinacrian trembleth murmuring, and heaven is smoke-clad o'er.

noctem illam tecti siluis immania monstra

In thicket close we wear the night amidst these marvels dread,

perferimus, nec quae sonitum det causa uidemus.

Nor may we see what thing it is that all that noise hath shed:

nam neque erant astrorum ignes nec lucidus aethra 585

For neither showed the planet fires, nor was the heaven bright
siderea polus, obscuro sed nubila caelo,

With starry zenith; mirky cloud hung over all the night,
et lunam in nimbo nox intempesta tenebat.

In mist of dead untimely tide the moon was hidden close.

Postera iamque dies primo surgebat Eoo

But when from earliest Eastern dawn the following day arose,

umentemque Aurora polo dimouerat umbram,

And fair Aurora from the heaven the watery shades had cleared,

cum subito e siluis macie confecta suprema 590

Lo, suddenly from out the wood new shape of man appeared.

ignoti noua forma uiri miserandaque cultu

Unknown he was, most utter lean, in wretchedest of plight:

procedit supplexque manus ad litora tendit.

Shoreward he stretched his suppliant hands; we turn back at the sight,

respicimus. dira inluuies immissaque barba,

And gaze on him: all squalor there, a mat of beard we see,

consertum tegimen spinis: at cetera Graius,

And raiment clasped with wooden thorns; and yet a Greek is he,

et quondam patriis ad Troiam missus in armis. 595

Yea, sent erewhile to leaguered Troy in Greekish weed of war.

isque ubi Dardanios habitus et Troia uidit

But when he saw our Dardan guise and arms of Troy afar,

arma procul, paulum aspectu conterritus haesit

Feared at the sight he hung aback at first a little space,

continuitque gradum; mox sese ad litora praeceps

But presently ran headlong down into our sea-side place

cum fletu precibusque tulit: ‘per sidera testor,

With tears and prayers: ‘O Teucrian men, by all the stars,’ he cried,

per superos atque hoc caeli spirabile lumen, 600

‘By all the Gods, by light of heaven ye breathe, O bear me wide

tollite me, Teucri. quascumque abducite terras:

Away from here! to whatso land henceforth ye lead my feet

hoc sat erit. scio me Danais e classibus unum

It is enough. That I am one from out the Danaan fleet,

et bello Iliacos fateor petiisse penatis.

And that I warred on Ilian house erewhile, most true it is;

pro quo, si sceleris tanta est iniuria nostri,

For which, if I must pay so much wherein I wrought amiss,

spargite me in fluctus uastoque immergite ponto; 605

Then strew me on the flood and sink my body in the sea!

si pereo, hominum manibus periisse iuuabit.’

To die by hands of very men shall be a joy to me.’

dixerat et genua amplexus genibusque uolutans

He spake with arms about our knees, and wallowing still he clung

haerebat. qui sit fari, quo sanguine cretus,

Unto our knees: but what he was and from what blood he sprung

hortamur, quae deinde agitet fortuna fateri.

We bade him say, and tell withal what fate upon him drave.

ipse pater dextram Anchises haud multa moratus 610

His right hand with no tarrying then Father Anchises gave

dat iuueni atque animum praesenti pignore firmat.

Unto the youth, and heartened him with utter pledge of peace.

ille haec deposita tandem formidine fatur:

So now he spake when fear of us amid his heart did cease:

‘sum patria ex Ithaca, comes infelicis Vlixī,

‘Luckless Ulysses’ man am I, and Ithaca me bore,

nomine Achaemenides, Troiam genitore Adamasto

Hight Achaemenides, who left that Adamastus poor

paupere (mansissetque utinam fortuna!) profectus. 615

My father (would I still were there!) by leaguered Troy to be.

hic me, dum trepidi crudelia limina linquunt,

Here while my mates aquake with dread the cruel threshold flee,

immemores socii uasto Cyclopi in antro

They leave me in the Cyclops’ den unmindful of their friend;

deseruere. domus sanie dapibusque cruentis,

A house of blood and bloody meat, most huge from end to end,

intus opaca, ingens. ipse arduus, altaque pulsat

Mirky within: high up aloft star-smiting to behold

sidera (di talem terris auertite pestem!) 620

Is he himself; — such bane, O God, keep thou from field and fold!

nec uisu facilis nec dictu adfabilis ulli;

Scarce may a man look on his face; no word to him is good;
 uisceribus miserorum et sanguine uescitur atro.
 On wretches' entrails doth he feed and black abundant blood.
 uidi egomet duo de numero cum corpora nostro
 Myself I saw him of our folk two hapless bodies take prensa manu magna medio resupinus in antro
 In his huge hand, whom straight he fell athwart a stone to break
 frangeret ad saxum, sanieque aspersa natarent 625
 As there he lay upon his back; I saw the threshold swim
 limina; uidi atro cum membra fluentia tabo
 With spouted blood, I saw him grind each bloody dripping limb, manderet et tepidi tremerent sub dentibus artus —
 I saw the joints amidst his teeth all warm and quivering still.
 haud impune quidem, nec talia passus Vlixes
 — He payed therefore, for never might Ulysses bear such ill,
 oblitusue sui est Ithacus discrimine tanto.
 Nor was he worser than himself in such a pinch bestead:
 nam simul expletus dapibus uinoque sepultus 630
 For when with victual satiate, deep sunk in wine, his head
 ceruicem inflexam posuit, iacuitque per antrum
 Fell on his breast, and there he lay enormous through the den,
 immensus sanie eructans et frustra cruento
 Snorting out gore amidst his sleep, with gobbets of the men
 per somnum commixta mero, nos magna precati
 And mingled blood and wine; then we sought the great Gods with prayer
 numina sortitique uices una undique circum
 And drew the lots, and one and all crowded about him there,
 fundimur, et telo lumen terebramus acuto 635
 And bored out with a sharpened pike the eye that used to lurk
 ingens quod torua solum sub fronte latebat,
 Enormous lonely 'neath his brow overhanging grim and mirk,
 Argolici clipei aut Phoebeae lampadis instar,
 As great a shield of Argolis, or Phoebus' lamp on high;
 et tandem laeti sociorum ulciscimur umbras.
 And so our murdered fellows' ghosts avenged we joyously.
 sed fugite, o miseri, fugite atque ab litore funem

— But ye, O miserable men, flee forth! make haste to pluck
rumpite. 640

The warping hawser from the shore!

nam qualis quantusque cauo Polyphemus in antro

For even such, and e'en so great as Polypheme in cave

lanigeras claudit pecudes atque ubera pressat,

Shuts in the wealth of woolly things and draws the udders' wave,

centum alii curua haec habitant ad litora uulgo

An hundred others commonly dwell o'er these curving bights,

infandi Cyclopes et altis montibus errant.

Unutterable Cyclop folk, or stray about the heights.

tertia iam lunae se cornua lumine complent 645

Thrice have the twin horns of the moon fulfilled the circle clear

cum uitam in siluis inter deserta ferarum

While I have dragged out life in woods and houses of the deer,

lustra domosque traho uastosque ab rupe Cyclopas

And gardens of the beasts; and oft from rocky place on high

prospicio sonitumque pedum uocemque tremesco.

Trembling I note the Cyclops huge, hear foot and voice go by.

uictum infelicem, bacas lapidosaque corna,

And evil meat of wood-berries, and cornel's flinty fruit

dant rami, et uulsis pascunt radicibus herbae. 650

The bush-boughs give; on grass at whiles I browse, and plucked-up root

omnia conlustrans hanc primum ad litora classem

So wandering all about, at last I see unto the shore

conspexi uenientem. huic me, quaecumque fuisset,

Your ships a-coming: thitherward my steps in haste I bore:

addixi: satis est gentem effugisse nefandam.

Whate'er might hap enough it was to flee this folk of ill;

uos animam hanc potius quocumque absumite leto.'

Rather do ye in any wise the life within me spill.'

Vix ea fatus erat summo cum monte uidemus 655

And scarcely had he said the word ere on the hill above

ipsum inter pecudes uasta se mole mouentem

The very shepherd Polypheme his mountain mass did move,

pastorem Polyphemum et litora nota petentem,

A marvel dread, a shapeless trunk, an eyeless monstrous thing,
monstrum horrendum, informe, ingens, cui lumen ademptum.
Who down unto the shore well known his sheep was shepherding;
trunca manum pinus regit et uestigia firmat;
A pine-tree in the hand of him leads on and stays his feet;
lanigeræ comitantur oues; ea sola uoluptas 660
The woolly sheep his fellows are, his only pleasure sweet,
solamenque mali.

The only solace of his ill.
postquam altos tetigit fluctus et ad æquora uenit,
But when he touched the waters deep, and mid the waves was come,
luminis effossi fluidum lauit inde cruorem
He falls to wash the flowing blood from off his eye dug out;
dentibus infrendens gemitu, graditurque per æquor
Gnashing his teeth and groaning sore he walks the sea about,
iam medium, necdum fluctus latera ardua tinxit. 665
But none the less no wave there was up to his flank might win.
nos procul inde fugam trepidi celerare recepto
Afeard from far we haste to flee, and, having taken in
supplice sic merito tacitique incidere funem,
Our suppliant, who had earned it well, cut cable silently,
uertimus et proni certantibus æquora remis.
And bending to the eager oars sweep out along the sea.
sensit, et ad sonitum uocis uestigia torsit.
He heard it, and his feet he set to follow on the sound;
uerum ubi nulla datur dextra adfectare potestas 670
But when his right hand failed to reach, and therewithal he found nec potis Ionios fluctus æquare sequendo,
He might not speed as fast as fares the Ionian billow lithe,
clamorem immensum tollit, quo pontus et omnes
Then clamour measureless he raised, and ocean quaked therewith
intremuere undæ, penitusque exterrita tellus
Through every wave, and inwardly the land was terrified
Italiae curuisque immugiit Aetna cauernis.
Of Italy, and Ætna boomed from many-hollowed side.
at genus e siluis Cyclopum et montibus altis 675
But all the race of Cyclops stirred from woods and lofty hills,

excitum ruit ad portus et litora complent.
 Down rushes to the haven-side and all the haven fills;
 cernimus astantis nequiquam lumine toruo
 And Ætna's gathered brethren there we see; in vain they stand
 Aetnaeos fratres caelo capita alta ferentis,
 Glowering grim-eyed with heads high up in heaven, a dreadful band
 concilium horrendum: quales cum uertice celso
 Of councillors: they were as when on ridge aloft one sees
 aeriae quercus aut coniferae cyparissi 680
 The oaks stand thick against the sky, and cone-hung cypresses,
 constiterunt, silua alta Iouis lucusue Dianae.
 Jove's lofty woods, or thicket where Diana's footsteps stray.
 praecipitis metus acer agit quocumque rudentis
 Then headlong fear fell on our folk in whatsoever way
 excutere et uentis intendere uela secundis.
 To shake the reefs out spreading sail to any wind that blew;
 contra iussa monent Heleni, Scyllamque Charybdinque
 But Helenus had bid us steer a midmost course and true
 inter, utrimque uiam leti discrimine paruo, 685
 'Twixt Scylla and Charybdis, lest to death we sail o'er-close:
 ni teneam cursus: certum est dare lintea retro.
 So safest seemed for backward course to let the sails go loose.
 ecce autem Boreas angusta ab sede Pelori
 But lo, from out Pelorus' strait comes down the northern flaw,
 missus adest: uiuo praeteruehor ostia saxo
 And past Pantagia's haven-mouth of living stone we draw,
 Pantagiae Megarosque sinus Thapsumque iacentem.
 And through the gulf of Megara by Thapsus lying low.
 talia monstrabat relegens errata retrorsus 690
 Such names did Achemenides, Ulysses' fellow, show,
 litora Achaemenides, comes infelicis Vlixi.
 As now he coasted back again the shore erst wandered by.
 Sicanio praetenta sinu iacet insula contra
 In jaws of the Sicanian bay there doth an island lie
 Plemyrion undosum; nomen dixere priores
 Against Plemyrion's wavy face; folk called it in old days
 Ortygiam. Alpheum fama est huc Elidis amnem

Ortygia: there, as tells the tale, Alpheus burrowed ways
occultas egisse uias subter mare, qui nunc 695
 From his own Elis 'neath the sea, and now by mouth of thine,
 ore, Arethusa, tuo Siculis confunditur undis.
 O Arethusa, blendeth him with that Sicilian brine.
iussi numina magna loci ueneramur, et inde
 We pray the isle's great deities, e'en as we bidden were:
exsupero praepingue solum stagnantis Helori.
 And thence we pass the earth o'erfat about Helorus' mere;
hinc altas cautes proiectaque saxa Pachyni
 Then by Pachynus' lofty crags and thrust-forth rocks we skim,
radimus, et fatis numquam concessa moueri 700
 And Camarina showeth next a long way off and dim;
 apparet Camerina procul campique Geloi,
 Her whom the Fates would ne'er be moved: then comes the plain in sight
immanisque Gela fluuii cognomine dicta.
 Of Gela, yea, and Gela huge from her own river high:
arduus inde Acragas ostentat maxima longe
 Then Acragas the very steep shows great walls far away,
moenia, magnanimum quondam generator equorum;
 Begetter of the herds of horse high-couraged on a day.
teque datis linquo uentis, palmosa Selinus, 705
 Then thee, Selinus of the palms, I leave with happy wind,
et uada dura lego saxis Lilybeia caecis.
 And coast the Lilybean shoals and tangled skerries blind.
hinc Drepani me portus et inlaetabilis ora
 But next the firth of Drepanum, the strand without a joy,
accipit. hic pelagi tot tempestatibus actus
 Will have me. There I tossed so sore, the tempests' very toy,
heu, genitorem, omnis curae casusque leuamen,
 O woe is me! my father lose, lightener of every care,
amitto Anchisen. hic me, pater optime, fessum 710
 Of every ill: me all alone, me weary, father dear,
deseris, heu, tantis nequiquam erepte periclis!
 There wouldst thou leave; thou borne away from perils all for
 nought!

nec uates Helenus, cum multa horrenda moneret,
Ah, neither Helenus the seer, despite the fears he taught,
hos mihi praedixit luctus, non dira Celaeno.
Nor grim Celæno in her wrath, this grief of soul forebode.
hic labor extremus, longarum haec meta uiarum,
This was the latest of my toils, the goal of all my road,
hinc me digressum uestris deus appulit oris. 715
For me departed thence some God to this your land did bear.”
Sic pater Aeneas intentis omnibus unus
So did the Father Æneas, with all at stretch to hear,
fata renarrabat diuum cursusque docebat.
Tell o’er the fateful ways of God, and of his wanderings teach:
conticuit tandem factoque hic fine quieuit.
But here he hushed him at the last and made an end of speech.

LIBER IV

BOOK IV.

At regina graui iamdudum saucia cura
Meanwhile the Queen, long smitten sore with sting of all desire,
uulnus alit uenis et caeco carpitur igni.
With very heart's blood feeds the wound and wastes with hidden fire.
multa uiri uirtus animo multusque recursat
And still there runneth in her mind the hero's valiancy,
gentis honos; haerent infixi pectore uultus
And glorious stock; his words, his face, fast in her heart they lie:
uerbaque nec placidam membris dat cura quietem. 5
Nor may she give her body peace amid that restless pain.
postera Phoebea lustrabat lampade terras
But when the next day Phoebus' lamp lit up the lands again,
umentemque Aurora polo dimouerat umbram,
And now Aurora from the heavens had rent the mist apart,
cum sic unanimam adloquitur male sana sororem:
Sick-souled her sister she bespeaks, the sharer of her heart:
'Anna soror, quae me suspensam insomnia terrent!
"Sister, O me, this sleepless pain that fears me with unrest!
quis nouus hic nostris successit sedibus hospes, 10
O me, within our house and home this new-come wondrous guest!
quem sese ore ferens, quam forti pectore et armis!
Ah, what a countenance and mien! in arms and heart how strong!
credo equidem, nec uana fides, genus esse deorum.
Surely to throw him of the Gods it doth no wisdom wrong;
degeneres animos timor arguit. heu, quibus ille
For fear it is shows base-born souls. Woe's me! how tossed about iactatus fatis! quae bella exhausta canebat!
By fortune was he! how he showed war's utter wearing out!
si mihi non animo fixum immotumque sederet 15
And, but my heart for ever now were set immovably
ne cui me uinclo uellem sociare iugali,
Never to let me long again the wedding bond to tie,

postquam primus amor deceptam morte fefellit;
Since love betrayed me first of all with him my darling dead,
si non pertaesum thalami taedaeque fuisset,
And were I not all weary-sick of torch and bridal bed,
huic uni forsán potui succumbere culpae.
This sin alone of all belike my falling heart might trap;
Anna (fatebor enim) miseri post fata Sychaei 20
For, Anna, I confess it thee, since poor Sychæus' hap,
coniugis et sparsos fraterna caede penatis
My husband dead, my hearth acold through murderous brother's deed,
solus hic inflexit sensus animumque labantem
This one alone hath touched the quick; this one my heart may lead
impulit. agnosco ueteris uestigia flammae.
Unto its fall: I feel the signs of fire of long agony.
sed mihi uel tellus optem prius ima dehiscat
And yet I pray the deeps of earth beneath my feet may yawn,
uel pater omnipotens adigat me fulmine ad umbras, 25
I pray the Father send me down bolt-smitten to the shades,
pallentis umbras Erebo noctemque profundam,
The pallid shades of Erebus, the night that never fades,
ante, pudor, quam te uiolo aut tua iura resoluo.
Before, O Shame, I shame thy face, or loose what thou hast tied!
ille meos, primus qui me sibi iunxit, amores
He took away the love from me, who bound me to his side
abstulit; ille habeat secum seruetque sepulcro.'
That first of times. Ah, in the tomb let love be with him still!"
sic effata sinum lacrimis impleuit obortis. 30
The tears arisen as she spake did all her bosom fill.
Anna refert: 'o luce magis dilecta sorori,
But Anna saith: "Dearer to me than very light of day,
solane perpetua maerens carpere iuuenta
Must thou alone and sorrowing wear all thy youth away,
nec dulcis natos Veneris nec praemia noris?
Nor see sweet sons, nor know the joys that gentle Venus brings?
id cinerem aut manis credis curare sepultos?
Deem'st thou dead ash or buried ghosts have heed of such-like things?

esto: aegram nulli quondam flexere mariti, 35

So be it that thy sickened soul no man to yield hath brought

non Libyae, non ante Tyro; despectus Iarbas

In Libya as in Tyre; let be Iarbas set at nought,

ductoresque alii, quos Africa terra triumphis

And other lords, whom Africa, the rich in battle's bliss,

diues alit: placitone etiam pugnabis amori?

Hath nursed: but now, with love beloved, — must thou be foe to this?

nec uenit in mentem quorum consederis aruis?

Yea, hast thou not within thy mind amidst whose bounds we are?

hinc Gaetulae urbes, genus insuperabile bello, 40

Here the Gætulian cities fierce, a folk unmatched in war,

et Numidae infreni cingunt et inhospita Syrtis;

And hard Numidia's bitless folk, and Syrtes' guestless sand

hinc deserta siti regio lateque furentes

Lie round thee: there Barcaeans wild, the rovers of the land,

Barcaei. quid bella Tyro surgentia dicam

Desert for thirst: what need to tell of wars new-born in Tyre, germanique minas?

And of thy murderous brother's threats?

dis equidem auspicibus reor et Iunone secunda 45

Meseems by very will of Gods, by Juno's loving mind,

hunc cursum Iliacas uento tenuisse carinas.

The Ilian keels run down their course before the following wind.

quam tu urbem, soror, hanc cernes, quae surgere regna

Ah, what a city shalt thou see! how shall the lordship wax

coniugio tali! Teucrum comitantibus armis

With such a spouse! with Teucrian arms our brothers at our backs

Punica se quantis attollet gloria rebus!

Unto what glory of great deeds the Punic realm may reach!

tu modo posce deos ueniam, sacrisque litatis 50

But thou, go seek the grace of Gods, with sacrifice beseech;

indulge hospitio causasque innecte morandi,

Then take thy fill of guest-serving; weave web of all delays:

dum pelago desaeuit hiems et aquosus Orion,

The wintry raging of the sea, Orion's watery ways,
 quassataeque rates, dum non tractabile caelum.'

The way-worn ships, the heavens unmeet for playing seaman's part."
 His dictis impenso animum flammauit amore

So saying, she blew the flame of love within her kindled heart,
 spemque dedit dubiae menti soluitque pudorem. 55

And gave her doubtful soul a hope and loosed the girth of shame.
 principio delubra adeunt pacemque per aras

Then straight they fare unto the shrines, by every altar's flame
 exquirunt; mactant lectas de more bidentis

Praying for peace; and hosts they slay, chosen as custom would,
 legiferae Cereri Phoeboque patrique Lyaeo,

To Phoebus, Ceres wise of law, Father Lyæus good,
 Iunoni ante omnis, cui uincla iugalia curae.

But chiefest unto Juno's might, that wedlock hath in care.
 ipsa tenens dextra pateram pulcherrima Dido 60

There bowl in hand stands Dido forth, most excellently fair,
 candentis uaccae media inter cornua fundit,

And pours between the sleek cow's horns; or to and fro doth pace
 aut ante ora deum pinguis spatiat ad aras,

Before the altars fat with prayer, 'neath very godhead's face,
 instauratque diem donis, pecudumque reclusis

And halloweth in the day with gifts, and, gazing eagerly
 pectoribus inhians spirantia consulit exta.

Amid the host's yet beating heart, for answering rede must try.
 heu, uatum ignarae mentes! quid uota furem, 65

— Woe's me! the idle mind of priests! what prayer, what shrine
 avails

quid delubra iuuant? est mollis flamma medullas

The wild with love! — and all the while the smooth flame never fails
 interea et tacitum uiuit sub pectore uulnus.

To eat her heart: the silent wound lives on within her breast:
 uritur infelix Dido totaque uagatur

Unhappy Dido burneth up, and, wild with all unrest,
 urbe furens, qualis coniecta cerua sagitta,

For ever strays the city through: as arrow-smitten doe,
 quam procul incautam nemora inter Cresia fixit 70

Unwary, whom some herd from far hath drawn upon with bow
pastor agens telis liquitque uolatile ferrum
Amid the Cretan woods, and left the swift steel in the sore,
nescius: illa fuga siluas saltusque peragrat
Unknowing: far in flight she strays the woods and thickets o'er,
Dictaeos; haeret lateri letalis harundo.
'Neath Dictæ's heights; but in her flank still bears the deadly reed.
nunc media Aenean secum per moenia ducit
Now midmost of the city-walls Æneas doth she lead,
Sidoniasque ostentat opes urbemque paratam, 75
And shows him the Sidonian wealth, the city's guarded ways;
incipit effari mediaque in uoce resistit;
And now she falls to speech, and now amidst a word she stays.
nunc eadem labente die conuiuia quaerit,
Then at the dying of the day the feast she dights again,
Ilicosque iterum demens audire labores
And, witless, once again will hear the tale of Ilium's pain;
exposcit pendetque iterum narrantis ab ore.
And once more hangeth on the lips that tell the tale aloud.
post ubi digressi, lumenque obscura uicissim 80
But after they were gone their ways, and the dusk moon did shroud
luna premit suadentque cadentia sidera somnos,
Her light in turn, and setting stars bade all to sleep away,
sola domo maeret uacua stratisque relictis
Lone in the empty house she mourns, broods over where he lay,
incubat. illum absens absentem auditque uidetque,
Hears him and sees him, she apart from him that is apart
aut gremio Ascanium genitoris imagine capta
Or, by his father's image smit, Ascanius to her heart
detinet, infandum si fallere possit amorem. 85
She taketh, if her utter love she may thereby beguile.
non coeptae adsurgunt turre, non arma iuuentus
No longer rise the walls begun, nor play the youth this while
exercet portusue aut propugnacula bello
In arms, or fashion havens forth, or ramparts of the war:
tuta parant: pendent opera interrupta minaeque
Broken is all that handicraft and mastery; idle are

murorum ingentes aequataque machina caelo.

The mighty threatenings of the walls and engines wrought heaven high.

Quam simul ac tali persensit peste teneri 90

Now when the holy wife of Jove beheld her utterly

cara Iouis coniunx nec famam obstare furori,

Held by that plague, whose madness now not e'en her fame might stay,

talibus adgreditur Venerem Saturnia dictis:

Then unto Venus, Saturn's seed began such words to say:

'egregiam uero laudem et spolia ampla refertis

"Most glorious praise ye carry off, meseems, most wealthy spoil,

tuque puerque tuus (magnum et memorabile numen),

Thou and thy Boy; wondrous the might, and long to tell the toil,

una dolo diuum si femina uicta duorum est. 95

Whereas two Gods by dint of craft one woman have o'erthrown.

nec me adeo fallit ueritam te moenia nostra

But well I wot, that through your fear of walls I call mine own,

suspectas habuisse domos Karthaginis altae.

In welcome of proud Carthage doors your hearts may never trow.

sed quis erit modus, aut quo nunc certamine tanto?

But what shall be the end hereof? where wends our contest now?

quin potius pacem aeternam pactosque hymenaeos

What if a peace that shall endure, and wedlock surely bound,

exercemus? habes tota quod mente petisti: 100

We fashion? That which all thine heart was set on thou hast found.

ardet amans Dido traxitque per ossa furorem.

For Dido burns: bone of her bone thy madness is today:

communem hunc ergo populum paribusque regamus

So let us rule these folks as one beneath an equal sway:

auspiciis; liceat Phrygio seruire marito

Let the doom be that she shall take a Phrygian man for lord,

dotalisque tuae Tyrios permittere dextrae.'

And to thine hand for dowry due her Tyrian folk award."

Olli (sensit enim simulata mente locutam, 105

But Venus felt that Juno's guile within the word did live,

quo regnum Italiae Libycas auerteret oras)

Who lordship due to Italy to Libya fain would give,
 sic contra est ingressa Venus: 'quis talia demens
 So thus she answered her again: "Who were so overbold
 abnuat aut tecum malit contendere bello?
 To gainsay this? or who would wish war against thee to hold,
 si modo quod memoras factum fortuna sequatur.
 If only this may come to pass, and fate the deed may seal?
 sed fatis incerta feror, si Iuppiter unam 110
 But doubtful drifts my mind of fate, if one same town and weal
 esse uelit Tyriis urbem Troiaque profectis,
 Jove giveth to the Tyrian folk and those from Troy outcast,
 misceriue probet populos aut foedera iungi.
 If he will have those folks to blend and bind the treaty fast
 tu coniunx, tibi fas animum temptare precando.
 Thou art his wife: by prayer mayst thou prove all his purpose weighed.
 perge, sequar.' tum sic excepit regia Iuno:
 Set forth, I follow." Juno then took up the word and said:
 'mecum erit iste labor. nunc qua ratione quod instat 115
 "Yea, that shall be my very work: how that which presseth now
 confieri possit, paucis (aduertere) docebo.
 May be encompassed, hearken ye, in few words will I show:
 uenatum Aeneas unaque miserrima Dido
 Æneas and the hapless queen are minded forth to fare
 in nemus ire parant, ubi primos crastinus ortus
 For hunting to the thicket-side, when Titan first shall bear
 extulerit Titan radiisque retexerit orbem.
 Tomorrow's light aloft, and all the glittering world unveil:
 his ego nigrantem commixta grandine nimbum, 120
 On them a darkening cloud of rain, blended with drift of hail,
 dum trepidant alae saltusque indagine cingunt,
 Will I pour down, while for the hunt the feathered snare-lines shake,
 desuper infundam et tonitru caelum omne ciebo.
 And toils about the thicket go: all heaven will I awake
 diffugient comites et nocte tegentur opaca:
 With thunder, and their scattered folk the mid-mirk shall enwrap:
 speluncam Dido dux et Troianus eandem

Then Dido and the Trojan lord on one same cave shall hap;
 deuenient. adero et, tua si mihi certa uoluntas, 125
 I will be there, and if to me thy heart be stable grown,
 conubio iungam stabili propriamque dicabo.
 In wedlock will I join the two and deem her all his own:
 hic hymenaeus erit.' non aduersata petenti
 And there shall be their bridal God." Then Venus nought gainsaid, adnuit atque dolis risit Cytherea repertis.
 But, nodding yea, she smiled upon the snare before her laid.
 Oceanum interea surgens Aurora reliquit.
 Meanwhile Aurora risen up had left the ocean stream,
 it portis iubare exorto delecta iuuentus, 130
 And gateway throng the chosen youth in first of morning's beam,
 retia rara, plagae, lato uenabula ferro,
 And wide-meshed nets, and cordage-toils and broad-steeled spears abound,
 Massylique ruunt equites et odora canum uis.
 Massylian riders go their ways with many a scenting hound.
 reginam thalamo cunctantem ad limina primi
 The lords of Carthage by the door bide till the tarrying queen
 Poenorum exspectant, ostroque insignis et auro
 Shall leave her chamber: there, with gold and purple well beseen,
 stat sonipes ac frena ferox spumantia mandit. 135
 The mettled courser stands, and champs the bit that bids him bide.
 tandem progreditur magna stipante caterua
 At last she cometh forth to them with many a man beside:
 Sidoniam picto chlamydem circumdata limbo;
 A cloak of Sidon wrapped her round with pictured border wrought,
 cui pharetra ex auro, crines nodantur in aurum,
 Her quiver was of fashioned gold, and gold her tresses caught;
 aurea purpuream subnectit fibula uestem.
 The gathering of her purple gown a golden buckle had.
 nec non et Phrygii comites et laetus Iulus 140
 Then come the Phrygian fellows forth; comes forth Iulus glad;
 incedunt. ipse ante alios pulcherrimus omnis
 Yea and Æneas' very self is of their fellowship,
 infert se socium Aeneas atque agmina iungit.

And joins their band: in goodliness all those did he outstrip:
 qualis ubi hibernam Lyciam Xanthique fluenta
 E'en such as when Apollo leaves the wintry Lycian shore,
 deserit ac Delum maternam inuisit Apollo
 And Xanthus' stream, and Delos sees, his mother's isle once more;
 instauratque choros, mixtique altaria circum 145
 And halloweth in the dance anew, while round the altars shout
 Cretesque Dryopesque fremunt pictique Agathyrsi;
 The Cretans and the Dryopes, and painted Scythian rout:
 ipse iugis Cynthi graditur mollique fluentem
 He steps it o'er the Cynthus' ridge, and leafy crown to hold
 fronde premit crinem fingens atque implicat auro,
 His flowing tresses doth he weave, and intertwines the gold,
 tela sonant umeris: haud illo segnior ibat
 And on his shoulders clang the shafts. Nor duller now passed on Aeneas, tantum egregio decus enitet ore. 150
 Æneas, from his noble face such wondrous glory shone.
 postquam altos uentum in montis atque inuia lustra,
 So come they to the mountain-side and pathless deer-fed ground,
 ecce ferae saxi deiectae uertice caprae
 And lo, from hill-tops driven adown, how swift the wild goats bound
 decurrere iugis; alia de parte patentis
 Along the ridges: otherwhere across the open lea
 transmittunt cursu campos atque agmina cerui
 Run hart and hind, and gathering up their hornèd host to flee,
 puluerulenta fuga glomerant montisque relinquunt. 155
 Amid a whirling cloud of dust they leave the mountain-sides.
 at puer Ascanius mediis in uallibus acri
 But here the boy Ascanius the midmost valley rides,
 gaudet equo iamque hos cursu, iam praeterit illos,
 And glad, swift-horsed, now these he leaves, now those he flees
 before,
 spumantemque dari pecora inter inertia uotis
 And fain were he mid deedless herds to meet a foaming boar,
 optat aprum, aut fuluum descendere monte leonem.
 Or see some yellow lion come the mountain-slopes adown.
 Interea magno misceri murmure caelum 160

Meanwhile with mighty murmuring sound confused the heavens are
grown,
incipit, insequitur commixta grandine nimbus,
And thereupon the drift of rain and hail upon them broke;
et Tyrii comites passim et Troiana iuuentus
Therewith the scattered Trojan youth, the Tyrian fellow-folk,
Dardaniusque nepos Veneris diuersa per agros
The son of Venus' Dardan son, scared through the meadows fly
tectata metu petiere; ruunt de montibus amnes.
To diverse shelter, while the streams rush from the mountains high.
speluncam Dido dux et Troianus eandem 165
Then Dido and the Trojan lord meet in the self-same cave;
deueniunt. prima et Tellus et pronuba Iuno
Then Earth, first-born of everything, and wedding Juno gave
dant signum; fulsere ignes et conscius aether
The token; then the wildfires flashed, and air beheld them wed,
conubiis summoque ulularunt uertice Nymphae.
And o'er their bridal wailed the nymphs in hill-tops overhead.
ille dies primus leti primusque malorum
That day began the tide of death; that day the evil came;
causa fuit; neque enim specie famaue mouetur 170
No more she heedeth eyes of men; no more she heedeth fame;
nec iam furtiuum Dido meditatur amorem:
No more hath Dido any thought a stolen love to win,
coniugium uocat, hoc praetexit nomine culpam.
But calls it wedlock: yea, e'en so she weaveth up the sin.
Extemplo Libyae magnas it Fama per urbes,
Straight through the mighty Libyan folks is Rumour on the wing —
Fama, malum qua non aliud uelocius ullum:
Rumour, of whom nought swifter is of any evil thing:
mobilitate uiget uirisque adquirat eundo, 175
She gathereth strength by going on, and bloometh shifting oft!
parua metu primo, mox sese attollit in auras
A little thing, afraid at first, she springeth soon aloft;
ingrediturque solo et caput inter nubila condit.
Her feet are on the worldly soil, her head the clouds o'erlay.
illam Terra parens ira irritata deorum

Earth, spurred by anger 'gainst the Gods, begot her as they say,
extremam, ut perhibent, Coeo Enceladoque sororem
Of Coeus and Enceladus the latest sister-birth.
progeniuit pedibus celerem et pernicious alis, 180
Swift are her wings to cleave the air, swift-foot she treads the earth:
monstrum horrendum, ingens, cui quot sunt corpore plumae,
A monster dread and huge, on whom so many as there lie
tot uigiles oculi subter (mirabile dictu),
The feathers, under each there lurks, O strange! a watchful eye;
tot linguae, totidem ora sonant, tot subrigit auris.
And there wag tongues, and babble mouths, and hearkening ears
upstand
nocte uolat caeli medio terraeque per umbram
As many: all a-dusk by night she flies 'twixt sky and land
stridens, nec dulci declinat lumina somno; 185
Loud clattering, never shutting eye in rest of slumber sweet.
luce sedet custos aut summi culmine tecti
By day she keepeth watch high-set on houses of the street,
turribus aut altis, et magnas territat urbes,
Or on the towers aloft she sits for mighty cities' fear!
tam ficti prauique tenax quam nuntia ueri.
And lies and ill she loves no less than sooth which she must bear.
haec tum multiplici populos sermone replebat
She now, rejoicing, filled the folk with babble many-voiced,
gaudens, et pariter facta atque infecta canebat: 190
And matters true and false alike sang forth as she rejoiced:
uenisse Aenean Troiano sanguine cretum,
How here was come Æneas now, from Trojan blood sprung forth,
cui se pulchra uiro dignetur iungere Dido;
Whom beauteous Dido deemed indeed a man to mate her worth:
nunc hiemem inter se luxu, quam longa, fouere
How winter-long betwixt them there the sweets of sloth they nursed,
regnum immemores turpique cupidine captos.
Unmindful of their kingdoms' weal, by ill desire accursed.
haec passim dea foeda uirum diffundit in ora. 195
This in the mouth of every man the loathly Goddess lays,
protinus ad regem cursus detorquet Iarban

And thence to King Iarbas straight she wendeth on her ways,
 incenditque animum dictis atque aggerat iras.
 To set his mind on fire with words, and high his wrath to lead.
 Hic Hammone satus rapta Garamantide nympha
 He, sprung from Garamantian nymph and very Ammon's seed,
 templa Ioui centum latis immania regnis,
 An hundred mighty fanes to Jove, an hundred altars fair,
 centum aras posuit uigilemque sacrauerat ignem, 200
 Had builded in his wide domain, and set the watch-fire there,
 excubias diuum aeternas, pecudumque cruore
 The everlasting guard of God: there fat the soil was grown
 pingue solum et uariis florentia limina sertis.
 With blood of beasts; the threshold bloomed with garlands diverse blown.
 isque amens animi et rumore accensus amaro
 He, saith the tale, all mad at heart, and fired with bitter fame,
 dicitur ante aras media inter numina diuum
 Amidmost of the might of God before the altars came,
 multa Iouem manibus supplex orasse supinis: 205
 And prayed a many things to Jove with suppliant hands outspread:
 'Iuppiter omnipotens, cui nunc Maurusia pictis
 "O Jupiter, almighty lord, to whom from painted bed
 gens epulata toris Lenaeum libat honorem,
 The banqueting Maurusian folk Lenæan joy pours forth,
 aspicias haec? an te, genitor, cum fulmina torques Dost thou behold? O Father, is our dread of nothing worth
 nequiquam horremus, caecique in nubibus ignes
 When thou art thundering? Yea, forsooth, a blind fire of the clouds, terrificant animos et inania murmura miscent? 210
 An idle hubbub of the sky, our souls with terror loads!
 femina, quae nostris errans in finibus urbem
 A woman wandering on our shore, who set her up e'en now
 exiguum pretio posuit, cui litus arandum
 A little money-cheapened town, to whom a field to plough
 cuique loci leges dedimus, conubia nostra
 And lordship of the place we gave, hath thrust away my word
 reppulit ac dominum Aenean in regna recepit.

Of wedlock, and hath taken in Æneas for her lord:

et nunc ille Paris cum semiuiro comitatu, 215

And now this Paris, hedged around with all his gelding rout,

Mæonia mentum mitra crinemque madentem

Mæonian mitre tied to chin, and wet hair done about,

subnexus, rapto potitur: nos munera templis

Sits on the prey while to thine house a many gifts we bear,

quippe tuis ferimus famamque fouemus inanem.’

Still cherishing an idle tale who our begetters were.”

Talibus orantem dictis arasque tenentem

The Almighty heard him as he prayed holding the altar-horns,

audiit Omnipotens, oculosque ad moenia torsit 220

And to the war-walls of the Queen his eyes therewith he turns,

regia et oblitos famaе melioris amantis.

And sees the lovers heeding nought the glory of their lives;

tum sic Mercurium adloquitur ac talia mandat:

Then Mercury he calls to him, and such a bidding gives:

‘uade age, nate, uoca Zephyros et labere pennis

“Go forth, O Son, the Zephyrs call, and glide upon the wing

Dardaniumque ducem, Tyria Karthagine qui nunc

Unto the duke of Dardan men in Carthage tarrying,

exspectat fatisque datas non respicit urbes, 225

Who hath no eyes to see the walls that fate to him hath given:

adloquere et celeris defer mea dicta per auras.

Speak to him, Son, and bear my words down the swift air of heaven:

non illum nobis genetrix pulcherrima talem

His fairest mother promised us no such a man at need,

promisit Graiumque ideo bis uindicat armis;

Nor claimed him twice from Greekish sword to live for such a deed.

sed fore qui grauidam imperiis belloque frementem

But Italy, the fierce in war, the big with empire’s brood,

Italiam regeret, genus alto a sanguine Teucri 230

Was he to rule; to get for us from glorious Teucer’s blood

proderet, ac totum sub leges mitteret orbem.

That folk of folks, and all the world beneath his laws to lay.

si nulla accendit tantarum gloria rerum

But if such glory of great deeds nought stirreth him today,

nec super ipse sua molitur laude laborem,
Nor for his own fame hath he heart the toil to overcome,
Ascanione pater Romanas inuidet arces?
Yet shall the father grudge the son the towered heights of Rome?
quid struit? aut qua spe inimica in gente moratur 235
What doth he? tarrying for what hope among the enemy?
nec prolem Ausoniam et Lauinia respicit arua?
And hath no eyes Ausonian sons, Lavinian land to see?
nauiget! haec summa est, hic nostri nuntius esto.’
Let him to ship! this is the doom; this word I bid thee bear.”
Dixerat. ille patris magni parere parabat
He spake: his mighty father’s will straight did the God prepare
imperio; et primum pedibus talaria nequit
To compass, and his golden shoes first bindeth on his feet,
aurea, quae sublimem alis siue aequora supra 240
E’en those which o’er the ocean plain aloft on feathers fleet,
seu terram rapido pariter cum flamine portant.
Or over earth swift bear him on before the following gale:
tum uirgam capit: hac animas ille euocat Orco
And then his rod he takes, wherewith he calleth spirits pale
pallentis, alias sub Tartara tristia mittit,
From Orcus, or those others sends sad Tartarus beneath,
dat somnos adimitque, et lumina morte resignat.
And giveth sleep and takes away, and openeth eyes to death;
illa fretus agit uentos et turbida tranat 245
The rod that sways the ocean-winds and rules the cloudy rack.
nubila. iamque uolans apicem et latera ardua cernit
Now winging way he comes in sight of peak and steepy back
Atlantis duri caelum qui uertice fulcit,
Of flinty Atlas, on whose head all heaven is set adown —
Atlantis, cinctum adsidue cui nubibus atris
Of Atlas with the piny head, and never-failing crown
piniferum caput et uento pulsatur et imbri,
Of mirky cloud, beat on with rain and all the winds that blow:
nix umeros infusa tegit, tum flumina mento 250
A snow-cloak o’er his shoulders falls, and headlong streams overflow

praecipitant senis, et glacie riget horrida barba.
His ancient chin; his bristling beard with plenteous ice is done.
hic primum paribus nitens Cyllenius alis
There hovering on his poisèd wings stayed that Cyllenian one,
constitit; hinc toto praeceps se corpore ad undas
And all his gathered body thence sent headlong toward the waves;
misit aui similis, quae circum litora, circum
Then like a bird the shores about, about the fishy caves,
piscosos scopulos humilis uolat aequora iuxta. 255
Skims low adown upon the wing the sea-plain's face anigh,
haud aliter terras inter caelumque uolabat
Not otherwise 'twixt heaven and earth Cyllene's God did fly;
litus harenosum ad Libyae, uentosque secabat
And now, his mother's father great a long way left behind,
materno ueniens ab auo Cyllenia proles.
Unto the sandy Libya's shore he clave the driving wind.
ut primum alatis tetigit magalia plantis,
But when the cot-built place of earth he felt beneath his feet,
Aenean fundantem arces ac tecta nouantem 260
He saw Æneas founding towers and raising houses meet:
conspicit. atque illi stellatus iaspide fulua
Starred was the sword about him girt with yellow jasper stone,
ensis erat Tyrioque ardebat murice laena
The cloak that from his shoulders streamed with Tyrian purple shone:
demissa ex umeris, diues quae munera Dido
Fair things that wealthy Dido's hand had given him for a gift,
fecerat, et tenui telas discreuerat auro.
Who with the gleam of thready gold the purple web did shift.
continuo inuadit: 'tu nunc Karthaginis altae 265
Then brake the God on him: "Forsooth, tall Carthage wilt thou
found,
fundamenta locas pulchramque uxori urbem
O lover, and a city fair raise up from out the ground?
exstruis? heu, regni rerumque oblite tuarum!
Woe's me! thy lordship and thy deeds hast thou forgotten quite?
ipse deum tibi me claro demittit Olympo

The very ruler of the Gods down from Olympus bright
 regnator, caelum et terras qui numine torquet,
 Hath sent me, he whose majesty the earth and heavens obey;
 ipse haec ferre iubet celeris mandata per auras: 270
 This was the word he bade me bear adown the windy way.
 quid struis? aut qua spe Libycis teris otia terris?
 What dost thou? hoping for what hope in Libya dost thou wear
 si te nulla mouet tantarum gloria rerum
 Thy days? if glorious fated things thine own soul may not stir,
 [nec super ipse tua moliris laude laborem,]
 And heart thou lackest for thy fame the coming toil to wed,
 Ascanium surgentem et spes heredis Iuli
 Think on Ascanius' dawn of days and hope inherited,
 respice, cui regnum Italiae Romanaque tellus 275
 To whom is due the Italian realm and all the world of Rome!"
 debetur.' tali Cyllenius ore locutus
 But when from out Cyllenius' mouth such word as this had come,
 mortalis uisus medio sermone reliquit
 Amidst his speech he left the sight of men that die from day,
 et procul in tenuem ex oculis euanuit auram.
 And mid thin air from eyes of folk he faded far away.
 At uero Aeneas aspectu obmutuit amens,
 But sore the sight Æneas feared, and wit from out him drave;
 arrectaeque horrore comae et uox faucibus haesit. 280
 His hair stood up, amidst his jaws the voice within him clave.
 ardet abire fuga dulcisque relinquere terras,
 Bewildered by that warning word, and by that God's command,
 attonitus tanto monitu imperioque deorum.
 He yearneth to depart and flee, and leave the lovely land.
 heu quid agat? quo nunc reginam ambire furem
 Ah, what to do? and with what word may he be bold to win
 audeat adfatu? quae prima exordia sumat?
 Peace of the Queen all mad with love? what wise shall he begin?
 atque animum nunc huc celerem nunc diuidit illuc 285
 Hither and thither now he sends his mind all eager-swift,
 in partisue rapit uarias perque omnia uersat.
 And bears it diversely away and runs o'er every shift:

haec alternanti potior sententia uisa est:

At last, as many things he weighed, this seemed the better rede.

Mnesthea Sergestumque uocat fortemque Serestum,

Mnestheus, Sergestus, straight he calls, Sergestus stout at need,

classem aptent taciti sociosque ad litora cogant,

And bids them dight ship silently and bring their folk to shore,

arma parent et quae rebus sit causa nouandis 290

And dight their gear, and cause thereof with lying cover o'er;

dissimulent; sese interea, quando optima Dido

While he himself, since of all this kind Dido knoweth nought,

nesciat et tantos rumpi non speret amores,

Nor of the ending of such love may ever have a thought,

temptaturum aditus et quae mollissima fandi

Will seek to draw anigh the Queen, seek time wherein the word

tempora, quis rebus dexter modus. ocius omnes

May softliest be said to her, the matter lightliest stirred.

imperio laeti parent et iussa facessunt. 295

So all they glad his bidding do, and get them to the work.

At regina dolos (quis fallere possit amantem?)

But who may hoodwink loving eyes? She felt the treason lurk

praesensit, motusque excepit prima futuros

About her life, and from the first saw all that was to be;

omnia tuta timens. eadem impia Fama furenti

Fearing indeed where no fear was. That Rumour wickedly

detulit armari classem cursumque parari.

Told her wild soul of ship-host armed and ready to set out;

saeuit inops animi totamque incensa per urbem 300

The heart died in her; all aflame she raves the town about,

bacchatur, qualis commotis excita sacris

E'en as a Thyad, who, soul-smit by holy turmoil, hears

Thyias, ubi audito stimulant trieterica Baccho

The voice of Bacchus on the day that crowns the triple years,

orgia nocturnusque uocat clamore Cithaeron.

And mirk Cithæron through the night hath called her clamorous.

tandem his Aenean compellat uocibus ultro:

Unto Æneas at the last herself she speaketh thus:

'dissimulare etiam sperasti, perfide, tantum 305

"O thou forsworn! and hast thou hoped with lies to cover o'er
 posse nefas tacitusque mea decedere terra?
 Such wickedness, and silently to get thee from my shore?
 nec te noster amor nec te data dextera quondam
 Our love, it hath not held thee back? nor right hand given in faith
 nec moritura tenet crudeli funere Dido?
 Awhile agone? nor Dido doomed to die a bitter death?
 quin etiam hiberno moliri sidere classem
 Yea, e'en beneath the winter heavens thy fleet thou gatherest
 et mediis properas Aquilonibus ire per altum, ³¹⁰
 In haste to fare across the main amid the north's unrest
 crudelis? quid, si non arua aliena domosque
 O cruel! What if land unknown and stranger field and fold
 ignotas peteres, et Troia antiqua maneret,
 Thou sought'st not; if the ancient Troy stood as in days of old;
 Troia per undosum peteretur classibus aequor?
 Wouldst thou not still be seeking Troy across the wavy brine?
 mene fugis? per ego has lacrimas dextramque tuam te
 — Yea, me thou fleest. O by these tears, by that right hand of thine, (quando aliud mihi iam miserae nihil ipsa reliqui), ³¹⁵
 Since I myself have left myself unhappy nought but this,
 per conubia nostra, per inceptos hymenaeos,
 And by our bridal of that day and early wedding bliss,
 si bene quid de te merui, fuit aut tibi quicquam
 If ever I were worthy thanks, if sweet in aught I were,
 dulce meum, miserere domus labentis et istam,
 Pity a falling house! If yet be left a space for prayer,
 oro, si quis adhuc precibus locus, exue mentem.
 O then I pray thee put away this mind of evil things!
 te propter Libycae gentes Nomadumque tyranni ³²⁰
 Because of thee the Libyan folks, and those Numidian kings,
 odere, infensi Tyrii; te propter eundem
 Hate me, and Tyrians are my foes: yea, and because of thee
 exstinctus pudor et, qua sola sidera adibam,
 My shame is gone, and that which was my heavenward road to be.
 fama prior. cui me moribundam deseris hospes
 My early glory. — Guest, to whom leav'st thou thy dying friend?

(hoc solum nomen quoniam de coniuge restat)?

Since of my husband nought but this is left me in the end.

quid moror? an mea Pygmalion dum moenia frater 325

Why bide I till Pygmalion comes to lay my walls alow,

destruat aut captam ducat Gaetulus Iarbas?

Till taken by Getulian kings, Iarbas' slave I go?

saltem si qua mihi de te suscepta fuisset

Ah! if at least ere thou wert gone some child of thee I had!

ante fugam suboles, si quis mihi paruulus aula

If yet Æneas in mine house might play a little lad,

luderet Aeneas, qui te tamen ore referret,

E'en but to bring aback the face of that beloved one,

non equidem omnino capta ac deserta uiderer.' 330

Then were I never vanquished quite, nor utterly undone."

Dixerat. ille Iouis monitis immota tenebat

She spake: he, warned by Jove's command, his eyes still steadfast held,

lumina et obnixus curam sub corde premebat.

And, striving, thrust his sorrow back, howso his heart-strings swelled:

tandem pauca refert: 'ego te, quae plurima fando

At last he answered shortly thus: "O Queen, though words may fail

enumerare uales, numquam, regina, negabo

To tell thy lovingkindness, ne'er my heart belies the tale:

promeritam, nec me meminisse pigebit Elissae 335

Still shall it be a joy to think of sweet Elissa's days

dum memor ipse mei, dum spiritus hos regit artus.

While of myself I yet may think, while breath my body sways.

pro re pauca loquar. neque ego hanc abscondere furto

Few words about the deed in hand: ne'er in my mind it came

sperauī (ne finge) fugam, nec coniugis umquam

As flees a thief to flee from thee; never the bridal flame

praetendi taedas aut haec in foedera ueni.

Did I hold forth, or plight my troth such matters to fulfil.

me si fata meis paterentur ducere uitam 340

If fate would let me lead a life according to my will,

auspiciis et sponte mea componere curas,

Might I such wise as pleaseth me my troubles lay to rest,
 urbem Troianam primum dulcisque meorum
 By Troy-town surely would I bide among the ashes blest
 reliquias colerem, Priami tecta alta manerent,
 Of my beloved, and Priam's house once more aloft should stand;
 et recidiua manu posuissem Pergama uictis.
 New Pergamus for vanquished men should rise beneath my hand.
 sed nunc Italiam magnam Gryneus Apollo, ³⁴⁵
 But now Grynean Phoebus bids toward Italy the great
 Italiam Lyciae iussere capessere sortes;
 To reach my hand; to Italy biddeth the Lycian fate:
 hic amor, haec patria est. si te Karthaginis arces
 There is my love, there is my land. If Carthage braveries
 Phoenissam Libycaeque aspectus detinet urbis,
 And lovely look of Libyan walls hold fast thy Tyrian eyes,
 quae tandem Ausonia Teucros considerare terra
 Why wilt thou grudge the Teucrian men Ausonian dwelling-place?
 inuidia est? et nos fas extera quaerere regna. ³⁵⁰
 If we too seek the outland realm, for us too be there grace!
 me patris Anchisae, quotiens umentibus umbris
 Father Anchises, whensoever night covereth up the earth
 nox operit terras, quotiens astra ignea surgunt,
 With dewy dark, and whensoe'er the bright stars come to birth,
 admonet in somnis et turbida terret imago;
 His troubled image midst of sleep brings warning word and fear.
 me puer Ascanius capitisque iniuria cari,
 Ascanius weigheth on my heart with wrong of head so dear,
 quem regno Hesperiae fraudo et fatalibus aruis. ³⁵⁵
 Whom I beguile of fateful fields and realm of Italy.
 nunc etiam interpres diuum Ioue missus ab ipso
 Yea, even now God's messenger sent from the Jove on high,
 (testor utrumque caput) celeris mandata per auras
 (Bear witness either head of us!) bore doom of God adown
 detulit: ipse deum manifesto in lumine uidi
 The eager wind: I saw the God enter the fair-walled town
 intrans muros uocemque his auribus hausi.
 In simple light: I drank his voice, yea with these ears of mine.

desine meque tuis incendere teque querelis; 360

Cease then to burn up with thy wail my burdened heart and thine!

Italiam non sponte sequor.'

Perforce I follow Italy." But now this long while, as he spake, athwart and wild she gazed,

Talia dicentem iamdudum auersa tuetur

And here and there her eyeballs rolled, and strayed with silent look
huc illuc uoluens oculos totumque pererrat

His body o'er; and at the last with heart of fire outbroke:

luminibus tacitis et sic accensa profatur:

"Traitor! no Goddess brought thee forth, nor Dardanus was first

'nec tibi diua parens generis nec Dardanus auctor, 365

Of thine ill race; but Caucasus on spiky crags accurst

perfide, sed duris genuit te cautibus horrens

Begot thee; and Hyrcanian dugs of tigers suckled thee.

Caucasus Hyrcanaeque admorunt ubera tiges.

Why hide it now? why hold me back lest greater evil be?

nam quid dissimulo aut quae me ad maiora reseruo?

For did he sigh the while I wept? his eyes — what were they moved?

num fletu ingemuit nostro? num lumina flexit?

Hath he been vanquished unto tears, or pitied her that loved?

num lacrimas uictus dedit aut miseratus amantem est? 370

— Ah, is aught better now than aught, when Juno utter great,

quae quibus anteferam? iam iam nec maxima Iuno

Yea and the Father on all this with evil eyen wait?

nec Saturnius haec oculis pater aspicit aequis.

All faith is gone! I took him in a stranded outcast, bare:

nusquam tuta fides. eiectum litore, egentem

Yea in my very throne and land, ah fool! I gave him share.

excepi et regni demens in parte locaui.

His missing fleet I brought aback; from death I brought his friends.

amissam classem, socios a morte reduxi 375

— Woe! how the furies burn me up! — Now seer Apollo sends,

(heu furiis incensa feror!): nunc augur Apollo,

Now bidding send the Lycian lots; now sendeth Jove on high

nunc Lyciae sortes, nunc et Ioue missus ab ipso

His messenger to bear a curse adown the windy sky!

interpres diuum fert horrida iussa per auras.
Such is the toil of Gods aloft; such are the cares that rack
scilicet is superis labor est, ea cura quietos
Their souls serene. — I hold thee not, nor cast thy words aback.
sollicitat. neque te teneo neque dicta refello: 380
Go down the wind to Italy! seek lordship o'er the sea!
i, sequere Italiam uentis, pete regna per undas.
Only I hope amid the rocks, if any God there be,
spero equidem mediis, si quid pia numina possunt,
Thou shalt drink in thy punishment and call on Dido's name
supplicia hausurum scopulis et nomine Dido
Full oft: and I, though gone away, will follow with black flame;
saepe uocaturum. sequar atris ignibus absens
And when cold death from out my limbs my soul hath won away,
et, cum frigida mors anima seduxerit artus, 385
I will be with thee everywhere; O wretch, and thou shalt pay.
omnibus umbra locis adero. dabis, improbe, poenas.
Ah, I shall hear; the tale of all shall reach me midst the dead.”
audiam et haec Manis ueniet mihi fama sub imos.’
Therewith she brake her speech athwart, and sick at heart she fled
his medium dictis sermonem abrumpit et auras
The outer air, and turned away, and gat her from his eyes;
aegra fugit seque ex oculis auertit et aufert,
Leaving him dallying with his fear, and turning many wise
linquens multa metu cunctantem et multa parantem 390
The words to say. Her serving-maids the fainting body weak,
dicere. suscipiunt famulae conlapsaque membra
Bear back unto the marble room and on the pillows streak.
marmoreo referunt thalamo stratisque reponunt.
But god-fearing Æneas now, however fain he were
At pious Aeneas, quamquam lenire dolentem
To soothe her grief and with soft speech assuage her weary care,
solando cupit et dictis auertere curas,
Much groaning, and the heart of him shaken with loving pain.
multa gemens magnoque animum labefactus amore 395
Yet went about the God's command and reached his ships again.
iussa tamen diuum exsequitur classemque reuisit.

Then fall the Teucrians on indeed, and over all the shore
tum uero Teucri incumbunt et litore celsas
Roll the tall ships; the pitchy keel swims in the sea once more:
deducunt toto nauis. natat uncta carina,
They bear the oars still leaf-bearing: they bring the might of wood,
frondentisque ferunt remos et robora siluis
Unwrought, so fain of flight they are,
infabricata fugae studio. 400

Lo now their flitting! how they run from all the town in haste!
migrantis cernas totaque ex urbe ruentis:
E'en as the ants, the winter-wise, are gathered whiles to waste
ac uelut ingentem formicae farris aceruum
A heap of corn, and toil that same beneath their roof to lay,
cum populant hiemis memores tectoque reponunt,
Forth goes the black troop mid the mead, and carries forth the prey
it nigrum campis agmen praedamque per herbas
Over the grass in narrow line: some strive with shoulder-might conuectant calle angusto; pars grandia trudunt 405
And push along a grain o'ergreat, some drive the line aright,
obnixae frumenta umeris, pars agmina cogunt
Or scourge the loiterers: hot the work fares all along the road.
castigantque moras, opere omnis semita feruet.

Ah Dido, when thou sawest all what heart in thee abode!
quis tibi tum, Dido, cernenti talia sensus,
What groans thou gavest when thou saw'st from tower-top the long
strand

quosue dabas gemitus, cum litora feruere late
A-boil with men all up and down; the sea on every hand
prospiceres arce ex summa, totumque uideres 410
Before thine eyes by stir of men torn into all unrest!
misceri ante oculos tantis clamoribus aequor!
O evil Love, where wilt thou not drive on a mortal breast?
improbe Amor, quid non mortalia pectora cogis!
Lo, she is driven to weep again and pray him to be kind,
ire iterum in lacrimas, iterum temptare precando
And suppliant, in the bonds of love her lofty heart to bind,
cogitur et supplex animos summittere amori,

Lest she should leave some way untried and die at last for nought.
ne quid inexpertum frustra moritura relinquat. 415
“Anna, thou seest the strand astir, the men together brought ‘Anna, uides toto properari litore circum:
From every side, the canvas spread calling the breezes down.
undique conuenere; uocat iam carbasus auras,
While joyful on the quarter-deck the sea-folk lay the crown.
puppibus et laeti nautae imposuere coronas.
Sister, since I had might to think that such a thing could be,
hunc ego si potui tantum sperare dolorem,
I shall have might to bear it now: yet do one thing for me,
et perferre, soror, potero. miserae hoc tamen unum 420
Poor wretch, O Anna: for to thee alone would he be kind,
exsequere, Anna, mihi; solam nam perfidus ille
That traitor, and would trust to thee the inmost of his mind;
te colere, arcanos etiam tibi credere sensus;
And thou alone his softening ways and melting times dost know.
sola uiri mollis aditus et tempora noras.
O sister, speak a suppliant word to that high-hearted foe:
i, soror, atque hostem supplex adfare superbum:
I never swore at Aulis there to pluck up root and branch
non ego cum Danaïs Troianam excindere gentem 425
The Trojan folk; for Pergamus no war-ship did I launch:
Aulide iuraui classemue ad Pergama misi,
Anchises’ buried ghost from tomb I never tore away:
nec patris Anchisae cinerem manisue reuelli:
Why will his ears be ever deaf to any word I say?
cur mea dicta negat duras demittere in auris?
Where hurrieth he? O let him give his wretched love one gift;
quo ruit? extremum hoc miserae det munus amanti:
Let him but wait soft sailing-tide, when fair the breezes shift.
exspectet facilemque fugam uentosque ferentis. 430
No longer for the wedding past, undone, I make my prayer,
non iam coniugium antiquum, quod prodidit, oro,
Nor that he cast his lordship by, and promised Latium fair.
nec pulchro ut Latio careat regnumque relinquat:
For empty time, for rest and stay of madness now I ask,

tempus inane peto, requiem spatiumque furori,
 Till Fortune teach the overthrown to learn her weary task.
 dum mea me uictam doceat fortuna dolere.
 Sister, I pray this latest grace; O pity me today,
 extremam hanc oro ueniam (miserere sororis), 435
 And manifold when I am dead the gift will I repay."
 quam mihi cum dederit cumulata morte remittam."
 So prayed she: such unhappy words of weeping Anna bears,
 Talibus orabat, talisque miserrima fletus
 And bears again and o'er again: but him no weeping stirs,
 fertque refertque soror. sed nullis ille mouetur
 Nor any voice he hearkeneth now may turn him from his road:
 fletibus aut uoces ullas tractabilis audit;
 God shut the hero's steadfast ears; fate in the way abode.
 fata obstant placidasque uiri deus obstruit auris. 440
 As when against a mighty oak, strong growth of many a year,
 ac uelut annoso ualidam cum robore quercum
 On this side and on that the blasts of Alpine Boreas bear,
 Alpini Boreae nunc hinc nunc flatibus illinc
 Contending which shall root it up: forth goes the roar, deep lie
 eruere inter se certant; it stridor, et altae
 The driven leaves upon the earth from shaken bole on high.
 consternunt terram concusso stipite frondes;
 But fast it clingeth to the crag, and high as goes its head
 ipsa haeret scopulis et quantum uertice ad auras 445
 To heaven aloft, so deep adown to hell its roots are spread.
 aetherias, tantum radice in Tartara tendit:
 E'en so by ceaseless drift of words the hero every wise
 haud secus adsiduis hinc atque hinc uocibus heros
 Is battered, and the heavy care deep in his bosom lies;
 tunditur, et magno persentit pectore curas;
 Steadfast the will abides in him; the tears fall down for nought.
 mens immota manet, lacrimae uoluuntur inanes.
 Ah, and unhappy Dido then the very death besought,
 Tum uero infelix fatis exterrita Dido 450
 Outworn by fate: the hollow heaven has grown a sight to grieve.
 mortem orat; taedet caeli conuexa tueri.

And for the helping of her will, that she the light may leave,
 quo magis inceptum peragat lucemque relinquat,
 She seeth, when mid the frankincense her offering she would lay,
 uidit, turicremis cum dona imponeret aris,
 The holy water blackening there, O horrible to say!
 (horrendum dictu) latices nigrescere sacros
 The wine poured forth turned into blood all loathly as it fell.
 fusaque in obscenum se uertere uina cruorem; 455
 Which sight to none, not e'en unto her sister, would she tell.
 hoc uisum nulli, non ipsi effata sorori.
 Moreover, to her first-wed lord there stood amidst the house
 praeterea fuit in tectis de marmore templum
 A marble shrine, the which she loved with worship marvellous,
 coniugis antiqui, miro quod honore colebat,
 And bound it was with snowy wool and leafage of delight;
 uelleribus niueis et festa fronde reuinctum:
 Thence heard she, when the earth was held in mirky hand of night,
 hinc exaudiri uoces et uerba uocantis 460
 Strange sounds come forth, and words as if her husband called his own.
 uisa uiri, nox cum terras obscura teneret,
 And o'er and o'er his funeral song the screech-owl wailed alone,
 solaque culminibus ferali carmine bubo
 And long his lamentable tale from high aloft was rolled.
 saepe queri et longas in fletum ducere uoces;
 And many a saying furthermore of god-loved seers of old
 multaue praeterea uatum praedicta priorum
 Fears her with dreadful memory: all wild amid her dreams
 terribili monitu horrificant. agit ipse furem 465
 Cruel Æneas drives her on, and evermore she seems in somnis ferus Aeneas, semperque relinquit Left all alone; and evermore a road that never ends,
 sola sibi, semper longam incommitata uidetur
 Mateless, and seeking through the waste her Tyrian folk, she wends.
 ire uiam et Tyrios deserta quaerere terra,
 As raving Pentheus saw the rout of that Well-willing Folk,
 Eumenidum ueluti demens uidet agmina Pentheus

When twofold sun and twofold Thebes upon his eyes outbroke:
et solem geminum et duplices se ostendere Thebas, 470

Or like as Agamemnon's son is driven across the stage,
aut Agamemnonius scaenis agitatus Orestes,
Fleeing his mother's fiery hand that bears the serpent's rage,
armatam facibus matrem et serpentibus atris
While there the avenging Dreadful Ones upon the threshold sit.
cum fugit ultricesque sedent in limine Dirae.

But when she gave the horror birth, and, grief-worn, cherished it,
Ergo ubi concepit furias euicta dolore

And doomed her death, then with herself she planned its time and guise,

decreuitque mori, tempus secum ipsa modumque 475

And to her sister sorrowing sore spake word in such a wise,
exigit, et maestam dictis adgressa sororem

Covering her end with cheerful face and calm and hopeful brow:
consilium uultu tegit ac spem fronte serenat:

"Kinswoman, I have found a way, (joy with thy sister now!)

'inueni, germana, uiam (gratare sorori)

Whereby to bring him back to me or let me loose from him.

quae mihi reddat eum uel eo me soluat amantem.

Adown beside the setting sun, hard on the ocean's rim,

Oceani finem iuxta solemque cadentem 480

Lies the last world of Æthiops, where Atlas mightiest grown
ultimus Aethiopum locus est, ubi maximus Atlas

Upon his shoulder turns the pole with burning stars bestrown.
axem umero torquet stellis ardentibus aptum:

A priestess thence I met erewhile, come of Massylian seed,

hinc mihi Massylae gentis monstrata sacerdos,

The warden of the West-maid's fane, and wont the worm to feed,

Hesperidum templi custos, epulasque draconi

Mingling for him the honey-juice with poppies bearing sleep,

quae dabat et sacros seruabat in arbore ramos, 485

Whereby she maketh shift on tree the hallowed bough to keep.

spargens umida mella soporiferumque papauer.

She by enchantment takes in hand to loose what hearts she will,

haec se carminibus promittit soluere mentes

But other ones at need will she with heavy sorrows fill;
 quas uelit, ast aliis duras immittere curas,
 And she hath craft to turn the stars and back the waters beat,
 sistere aquam fluuiis et uertere sidera retro,
 Call up the ghosts that fare by night, make earth beneath thy feet
 nocturnosque mouet Manis: mugire uidebis 490
 Cry out, and ancient ash-trees draw the mountain-side adown.
 sub pedibus terram et descendere montibus ornos.
 Dear heart, I swear upon the Gods, I swear on thee, mine own
 testor, cara, deos et te, germana, tuumque
 And thy dear head, that I am loath with magic craft to play.
 dulce caput, magicas inuitam accingier artis.
 But privily amid the house a bale for burning lay
 tu secreta pyram tecto interiore sub auras
 'Neath the bare heaven, and pile on it the arms that evil one
 erige, et arma uiri thalamo quae fixa reliquit 495
 Left in the chamber: all he wore, the bridal bed whereon
 impius exuuiasque omnis lectumque iugalem,
 My days were lost: for so 'tis good: the priestess showeth me
 quo perii, super imponas: abolere nefandi
 All tokens of the wicked man must perish utterly."
 cuncta uiri monimenta iuuat monstratque sacerdos.'
 No more she spake, but with the word her face grew deadly white.
 haec effata silet, pallor simul occupat ora.
 But Anna sees not how she veiled her death with new-found rite,
 non tamen Anna nouis praetexere funera sacris 500
 Nor any thought of such a deed her heart encompasseth;
 germanam credit, nec tantos mente furores
 Nor fears she heavier things to come than at Sychæus' death.
 concipit aut grauiora timet quam morte Sychaei.
 Wherefore she takes the charge in hand.
 ergo iussa parat.
 But now the Queen, that bale being built amid the inner house
 At regina, pyra penetrali in sede sub auras
 'Neath the bare heavens, piled high with fir and cloven oak enow,
 erecta ingenti taedis atque ilice secta, 505
 Hangeth the garlands round the place, and crowns the bale with bough

intenditque locum sertis et fronde coronat

That dead men use: the weed he wore, his very effigy,

funerea; super exuuias ensemque relictum

His sword, she lays upon the bed, well knowing what shall be.

effigiemque toro locat haud ignara futuri.

There stand the altars, there the maid, wild with her scattered hair,

stant arae circum et crinis effusa sacerdos

Calls Chaos, Erebus, and those three hundred godheads there,

ter centum tonat ore deos, Erebumque Chaosque 510

And Hecate triply fashionèd to maiden Dian's look;

tergeminamque Hecaten, tria uirginis ora Dianae.

Water she scattered, would-be wave of dark Avernus' brook;

sparserat et latices simulatos fontis Auerni,

And herbs she brought, by brazen shears 'neath moonlight harvested,

falcibus et messae ad lunam quaeruntur aenis

All downy-young, though inky milk of venomèd ill they shed.

pubentes herbae nigri cum lacte ueneni;

She brings the love-charm snatchèd away from brow of new-born

foal

quaeritur et nascentis equi de fronte reuulsus 515

Ere yet the mother snatcheth it.

et matri praereptus amor.

Dido herself the altars nigh, meal in her hallowed hands,

ipsa mola manibusque piis altaria iuxta

With one foot of its bindings bare, and ungirt raiment stands,

unum exuta pedem uinclis, in ueste recincta,

And dying calls upon the Gods, and stars that fateful fare;

testatur moritura deos et conscia fati

And then if any godhead is, mindful and just to care

sidera; tum, si quod non aequo foedere amantis 520

For unloved lovers, unto that she sendeth up the prayer.

curae numen habet iustumque memorque, precatur.

Now night it was, and everything on earth had won the grace

Nox erat et placidum carpebant fessa soporem

Of quiet sleep: the woods had rest, the wilderèd waters' face:

corpora per terras, siluaeque et saeua quierant

It was the tide when stars roll on amid their courses due,
aequora, cum medio uoluuntur sidera lapsu,
And all the tilth is hushed, and beasts, and birds of many a hue;
cum tacet omnis ager, pecudes pictaeque uolucres, 525
And all that is in waters wide, and what the waste doth keep
quaeque lacus late liquidos quaeque aspera dumis
In thicket rough, amid the hush of night-tide lay asleep,
rura tenent, somno positae sub nocte silenti.
And slipping off the load of care forgot their toilsome part.
at non infelix animi Phoenissa, neque umquam 529
But ne'er might that Phoenician Queen, that most unhappy heart,
soluitur in somnos oculisue aut pectore noctem
Sink into sleep, or take the night unto her eyes and breast:
accipit: ingeminant curae rursusque resurgens
Her sorrows grow, and love again swells up with all unrest,
saeuit amor magnoque irarum fluctuat aestu.
And ever midst her troubled wrath rolls on a mighty tide;
sic adeo insistit secumque ita corde uolutat:
And thus she broods and turns it o'er and o'er on every side.
'en, quid ago? rursusne procos inrisa priores
"Ah, whither now? Shall I bemocked my early lovers try,
experiar, Nomadumque petam conubia supplex, 535
And go Numidian wedlock now on bended knee to buy:
quos ego sim totiens iam dedignata maritos?
I, who so often scorned to take their bridal-bearing hands?
Iliacas igitur classis atque ultima Teucrum
Or shall I, following Ilian ships, bear uttermost commands
iussa sequar? quiane auxilio iuuat ante leuatos
Of Teucrian men, because my help their lightened hearts makes kind;
et bene apud memores ueteris stat gratia facti?
Because the thank for deed I did lies ever on their mind?
quis me autem, fac uelle, sinet ratibusue superbis 540
But if I would, who giveth leave, or takes on scornful keel
inuisam accipiet? nescis heu, perdita, necdum
The hated thing? Thou knowest not, lost wretch, thou may'st not feel,
Laomedontae sentis periuria gentis?

What treason of Laomedon that folk for ever bears.
 quid tum? sola fuga nautas comitabor ouantis?
 What then? and shall I follow lone the joyous mariners?
 an Tyriis omnique manu stipata meorum
 Or, hedged with all my Tyrian host, upon them shall I bear,
 inferar et, quos Sidonia uix urbe reuelli, 545
 Driving again across the sea those whom I scarce might tear
 rursus agam pelago et uentis dare uela iubebo?
 From Sidon's city, forcing them to spread their sails abroad?
 quin morere ut merita es, ferroque auerte dolorem.
 Nay, stay thy grief with steel, and die, and reap thy due reward!
 tu lacrimis euicta meis, tu prima furentem
 Thou, sister, conquered by my tears, wert first this bane to lay
 his, germana, malis oneras atque obicis hosti.
 On my mad soul, and cast my heart in that destroyer's way.
 non licuit thalami expertem sine crimine uitam 550
 Why was I not allowed to live without the bridal bed,
 degere more ferae, talis nec tangere curas;
 Sackless and free as beasts afield, with no woes wearied?
 non seruata fides cineri promissa Sychæo.
 Why kept I not the faith of old to my Sychæus sworn?"
 Tantos illa suo rumpebat pectore questus:
 Such wailing of unhappy words from out her breast was torn.
 Aeneas celsa in puppi iam certus eundi
 Æneas on the lofty deck meanwhile, assured of flight,
 carpebat somnos rebus iam rite paratis. 555
 Was winning sleep, since every need of his was duly dight;
 huic se forma dei uultu redeuntis eodem
 When lo! amid the dreams of sleep that shape of God come back,
 obtulit in somnis rursusque ita uisa monere est,
 Seemed once again to warn him thus: nor yet the face did lack
 omnia Mercurio similis, uocemque coloremque
 Nor anything of Mercury; both voice and hue was there,
 et crinis flauos et membra decora iuuenta:
 And loveliness of youthful limbs and length of yellow hair:
 'nate dea, potes hoc sub casu ducere somnos, 560
 "O Goddess-born, and canst thou sleep through such a tide as this?

nec quae te circum stent deinde pericula cernis,
And seest thou not how round about the peril gathered is?
demens, nec Zephyros audis spirare secundos?
And, witless, hear'st not Zephyr blow with gentle, happy wind?
illa dolos dirumque nefas in pectore uersat
For treason now and dreadful deed she turneth in her mind,
certa mori, uariosque irarum concitat aestus.
Assured of death; and diversely the tide of wrath sets in.
non fugis hinc praeceps, dum praecipitare potestas? 565
Why fleest thou not in haste away, while haste is yet to win?
iam mare turbari trabibus saeuasque uidebis
Thou shalt behold the sea beat up with oar-blade, and the brand
conlucere faces, iam feruere litora flammis,
Gleam dire against thee, and one flame shall run adown the strand,
si te his attigerit terris Aurora morantem.
If thee tomorrow's dawn shall take still lingering on this shore.
heia age, rumpe moras. uarium et mutabile semper
Up! tarry not! for woman's heart is shifting evermore."
femina.' sic fatus nocti se immiscuit atrae. 570
So saying, amid the mirk of night he mingled and was lost.
Tum uero Aeneas subitis exterritus umbris
And therewithal Æneas, feared by sudden-flitting ghost,
corripit e somno corpus sociosque fatigat
Snatching his body forth from sleep, stirs up his folk at need:
praecipitis: 'uigilate, uiri, et considite transtris;
"Wake ye, and hurry now, O men! get to the thwarts with speed,
soluite uela citi. deus aethere missus ab alto
And bustle to unfurl the sails! here sent from heaven again
festinare fugam tortosque incidere funis 575
A God hath spurred us on to flight, and biddeth hew atwain
ecce iterum instimulat. sequimur te, sancte deorum,
The hempen twine. O holy God, we follow on thy way,
quisquis es, imperioque iterum paremus ouantes.
Whatso thou art; and glad once more thy bidding we obey.
adsis o placidusque iuues et sidera caelo
O be with us! give gracious aid; set stars the heaven about
dextra feras.' dixit uaginaque eripit ensem

To bless our ways!" And from the sheath his lightning sword flew out

fulmineum strictoque ferit retinacula ferro. 580

E'en as he spake: with naked blade he smote the hawser through,

idem omnis simul ardor habet, rapiuntque ruuntque;

And all are kindled at his flame; they hurry and they do.

litora deseruere, latet sub classibus aequor,

The shore is left, with crowd of keels the sight of sea is dim;

adnixi torquent spumas et caerulea uerrunt.

Eager they whirl the spray aloft, as o'er the blue they skim.

Et iam prima nouo spargebat lumine terras

And now Aurora left alone Tithonus' saffron bed,

Tithoni croceum linquens Aurora cubile. 585

And first light of another day across the world she shed.

regina e speculis ut primam albescere lucem

But when the Queen from tower aloft beheld the dawn grow white,

uidit et aequatis classem procedere uelis,

And saw the ships upon their way with fair sails trimmed aright,

litoraue et uacuos sensit sine remige portus,

And all the haven shipless left, and reach of empty strand,

terque quaterque manu pectus percussa decorum

Then thrice and o'er again she smote her fair breast with her hand,

flauentisque abscissa comas 'pro Iuppiter! ibit 590

And rent her yellow hair, and cried, "Ah, Jove! and is he gone?

hic,' ait 'et nostris inluserit aduena regnis?

And shall a very stranger mock the lordship I have won?

non arma expedient totaque ex urbe sequentur,

Why arm they not? Why gather not from all the town in chase?

diripientque rates alii naualibus? ite,

Ho ye! why run ye not the ships down from their standing-place?

ferte citi flammas, date tela, impellite remos!

Quick, bring the fire! shake out the sails! hard on the oars to sea!

quid loquor? aut ubi sum? quae mentem insania mutat? 595

— What words are these, or where am I? What madness changeth me?

infelix Dido, nunc te facta impia tangunt?

Unhappy Dido! now at last thine evil deed strikes home.

tum decuit, cum scepra dabas. en dextra fidesque,
 Ah, better when thou mad'st him lord — lo whereunto are come
 quem secum patrios aiunt portare penatis,
 His faith and troth who erst, they say, his country's house-gods held
 quem subiisse umeris confectum aetate parentem!
 The while he took upon his back his father spent with eld?
 non potui abreptum diuellere corpus et undis 600
 Why! might I not have shred him up, and scattered him piecemeal
 spargere? non socios, non ipsum absumere ferro
 About the sea, and slain his friends, his very son, with steel,
 Ascanium patriisque epulandum ponere mensis?
 Ascanius on his father's board for dainty meat to lay?
 uerum anceps pugnae fuerat fortuna. fuisset:
 But doubtful, say ye, were the fate of battle? Yea, O yea!
 quem metui moritura? faces in castra tulissem
 What might I fear, who was to die? — if I had borne the fire
 implessemque foros flammis natumque patremque 605
 Among their camp, and filled his decks with flame, and son and sire
 cum genere exstinxem, memet super ipsa dedissem.
 Quenched with their whole folk, and myself had cast upon it all!
 Sol, qui terrarum flammis opera omnia lustras,
 — O Sun, whose flames on every deed earth doeth ever fall,
 tuque harum interpretis curarum et conscia Iuno,
 O Juno, setter-forth and seer of these our many woes,
 nocturnisque Hecate triuiis ululata per urbes Hecate, whose name howled out a-nights o'er city crossway goes,
 et Dirae ultrices et di morientis Elissae, 610
 Avenging Dread Ones, Gods that guard Elissa perishing,
 accipite haec, meritumque malis aduertite numen
 O hearken! turn your might most meet against the evil thing!
 et nostras audite preces. si tangere portus
 O hearken these our prayers! and if the doom must surely stand,
 infandum caput ac terris adnare necesse est,
 And he, the wicked head, must gain the port and swim aland,
 et sic fata Iouis poscunt, hic terminus haeret,
 If Jove demand such fixèd fate and every change doth bar,
 at bello audacis populi uexatus et armis, 615

Yet let him faint mid weapon-strife and hardy folk of war!
 finibus extorris, complexu auulsus Iuli
 And let him, exiled from his house, torn from Iulus, wend,
 auxilium imploret uideatque indigna suorum
 Beseeching help mid wretched death of many and many a friend.
 funera; nec, cum se sub leges pacis iniquae
 And when at last he yieldeth him to pact of grinding peace,
 tradiderit, regno aut optata luce fruatur,
 Then short-lived let his lordship be, and lovèd life's increase.
 sed cadat ante diem mediaque inhumatus harena. 620
 And let him fall before his day, unburied on the shore!
 haec precor, hanc uocem extremam cum sanguine fundo.
 Lo this I pray, this last of words forth with my blood I pour.
 tum uos, o Tyrii, stirpem et genus omne futurum
 And ye, O Tyrians, 'gainst his race that is, and is to be,
 exercete odiis, cinerique haec mittite nostro
 Feed full your hate! When I am dead send down this gift to me:
 munera. nullus amor populis nec foedera sunt.
 No love betwixt the peoples twain, no troth for anything!
 exoriare aliquis nostris ex ossibus ultor 625
 And thou, Avenger of my wrongs, from my dead bones outspring,
 qui face Dardanios ferroque sequare colonos,
 To bear the fire and the sword o'er Dardan-peopled earth
 nunc, olim, quocumque dabunt se tempore uires.
 Now or hereafter; whensoever the day brings might to birth.
 litora litoribus contraria, fluctibus undas
 I pray the shore against the shore, the sea against the sea,
 imprecor, arma armis: pugnent ipsique nepotesque.'
 The sword 'gainst sword — fight ye that are, and ye that are to be!"
 Haec ait, et partis animum uersabat in omnis, 630
 So sayeth she, and everywise she turns about her mind
 inuisam quaerens quam primum abrumpere lucem.
 How ending of the loathèd light she speediest now may find.
 tum breuiter Barcen nutricem adfata Sychaei,
 And few words unto Barce spake, Sychæus' nurse of yore;
 namque suam patria antiqua cinis ater habebat:
 For the black ashes held her own upon the ancient shore:

‘Annam, cara mihi nutrix, huc siste sororem:

“Dear nurse, my sister Anna now bring hither to my need,
dic corpus properet fluuiali spargere lympha, 635

And bid her for my sprinkling-tide the running water speed;
et pecudes secum et monstrata piacula ducat.

And bid her have the hosts with her, and due atoning things:
sic ueniat, tuque ipsa pia tege tempora uitta.

So let her come; but thou, thine head bind with the holy strings;
sacra Ioui Stygio, quae rite incepta paraui,

For I am minded now to end what I have set afoot,
perficere est animus finemque imponere curis

And worship duly Stygian Jove and all my cares uproot;
Dardanique rogam capitis permittere flammae.’ 640

Setting the flame beneath the bale of that Dardanian head.”
sic ait. illa gradum studio celebrabat anili.

She spake; with hurrying of eld the nurse her footsteps sped.
at trepida et coeptis immanibus effera Dido

But Dido, trembling, wild at heart with her most dread intent,
sanguineam uoluens aciem, maculisque trementis

Rolling her blood-shot eyes about, her quivering cheeks besprent
interfusa genas et pallida morte futura,

With burning flecks, and elsewhere dead white with death drawn nigh

interiora domus inrumpit limina et altos 645

Burst through the inner doorways there and clomb the bale on high,
conscendit furibunda rogos ensemque recludit

Fulfilled with utter madness now, and bared the Dardan blade,
Dardanium, non hos quaesitum munus in usus.

Gift given not for such a work, for no such ending made.
hic, postquam Iliacas uestis notumque cubile

There, when upon the Ilian gear her eyen had been set,
conspexit, paulum lacrimis et mente morata

And bed well known, ‘twixt tears and thoughts awhile she lingered yet;

incubuitque toro dixitque nouissima uerba: 650

Then brooding low upon the bed her latest word she spake:
‘dulces exuuias, dum fata deusque sinebat,

“O raiment dear to me while Gods and fate allowed, now take
accipite hanc animam meque his exsoluite curis.
This soul of mine and let me loose from all my woes at last!
uixi et quem dederat cursum Fortuna peregi,
I, I have lived, and down the way fate showed to me have passed;
et nunc magna mei sub terras ibit imago.
And now a mighty shade of me shall go beneath the earth!
urbem praeclaram statui, mea moenia uidi, 655
A glorious city have I raised, and brought my walls to birth,
ulta uirum poenas inimico a fratre recepi,
Avenged my husband, made my foe, my brother, pay the pain:
felix, heu nimium felix, si litora tantum
Happy, ah, happy overmuch were all my life-days’ gain,
numquam Dardaniae tetigissent nostra carinae.’
If never those Dardanian keels had drawn our shores anigh.”
dixit, et os impressa toro ‘moriemur inultae,
She spake: her lips lay on the bed: “Ah, unavenged to die!
sed moriamur’ ait. ‘sic, sic iuuat ire sub umbras. 660
But let me die! Thus, thus ’tis good to go into the night!
hauriat hunc oculis ignem crudelis ab alto
Now let the cruel Dardan eyes drink in the bale-fire’s light,
Dardanus, et nostrae secum ferat omina mortis.’
And bear for sign across the sea this token of my death.”
dixerat, atque illam media inter talia ferro
Her speech had end: but on the steel, amid the last word’s breath,
conlapsam aspiciunt comites, ensemque cruore
They see her fallen; along the blade they see her blood foam out,
spumantem sparsasque manus. it clamor ad alta 665
And all her hands besprent therewith: wild fly the shrieks about
atria: concussam bacchatur Fama per urbem.
The lofty halls, and Rumour runs mad through the smitten town.
lamentis gemituque et femineo ululatu
The houses sound with women’s wails and lamentable groan;
tectata fremunt, resonat magnis plangoribus aether,
The mighty clamour of their grief rings through the upper skies.
non aliter quam si immissis ruat hostibus omnis
’Twas e’en as if all Carthage fell mid flood of enemies,

Karthago aut antiqua Tyros, flammaeque furentes 670

Or mighty Tyre of ancient days, — as if the wildfire ran
culmina perque hominum uoluantur perque deorum.

Rolling about the roof of God and dwelling-place of man.

audiit exanimis trepidoque exterrita cursu

Half dead her sister heard, and rushed distraught and trembling there,
unguibus ora soror foedans et pectora pugnis

With nail and fist befouling all her face and bosom fair:

per medios ruit, ac morientem nomine clamat:

She thrust amidst them, and by name called on the dying Queen:

‘hoc illud, germana, fuit? me fraude petebas? 675

“O was it this my sister, then! guile in thy word hath been!

hoc rogos iste mihi, hoc ignes araeque parabant?

And this was what the bale, the fire, the altars wrought for me!

quid primum deserta querar? comitemne sororem

Where shall I turn so left alone? Ah, scorned was I to be

spreuisti moriens? eadem me ad fata uocasses,

For death-fellow! thou shouldst have called me too thy way to wend.

idem ambas ferro dolor atque eadem hora tulisset.

One sword-pang should have been for both, one hour to make an end.

his etiam struxi manibus patriosque uocaui 680

Built I with hands, on Father-Gods with crying did I cry

uoce deos, sic te ut posita, crudelis, abessem?

To be away, a cruel heart, from thee laid down to die?

exstincti te meque, soror, populumque patresque

O sister, me and thee, thy folk, the fathers of the land,

Sidonios urbemque tuam. date, uulnera lymphis

Thy city hast thou slain —— O give, give water to my hand,

abluam et, extremus si quis super halitus errat,

And let me wash the wound, and if some last breath linger there,

ore legam.’ sic fata gradus euaserat altos, 685

Let my mouth catch it!” Saying so she reached the topmost stair,

semianimemque sinu germanam amplexa fouebat

And to her breast the dying one she fondled, groaning sore,

cum gemitu atque atros siccabat ueste cruores.

And with her raiment strove to staunch the black and flowing gore.

illa grauis oculos conata attollere rursus
Then Dido strove her heavy lids to lift, but back again
deficit; infixum stridit sub pectore uulnus.
They sank, and deep within her breast whispered the deadly bane:
ter sese attollens cubitoque adnixa leuauit, 690
Three times on elbow struggling up a little did she rise,
ter reuoluta toro est oculisque errantibus alto
And thrice fell back upon the bed, and sought with wandering eyes
quaesiuit caelo lucem ingemuitque reperta.
The light of heaven aloft, and moaned when it was found at last.
Tum Iuno omnipotens longum miserata dolorem
Then on her long-drawn agony did Juno pity cast,
difficilisque obitus Irim demisit Olympo
Her hard departing; Iris then she sent from heaven on high,
quae luctantem animam nexosque resolveret artus. 695
And bade her from the knitted limbs the struggling soul untie.
nam quia nec fato merita nec morte peribat,
For since by fate she perished not, nor waited death-doom given,
sed misera ante diem subitoque accensa furore,
But hapless died before her day by sudden fury driven,
nondum illi flauum Proserpina uertice crinem
Not yet the tress of yellow hair had Proserpine off-shred,
abstulerat Stygioque caput damnauerat Orco.
Nor unto Stygian Orcus yet had doomed her wandering head.
ergo Iris croceis per caelum roscida pennis 700
So Iris ran adown the sky on wings of saffron dew,
mille trahens uarios aduerso sole colores
And colours shifting thousandfold against the sun she drew,
deuolat et supra caput astitit. 'hunc ego Diti
And overhead she hung: "So bid, from off thee this I bear,
sacrum iussa fero teque isto corpore soluo':
Hallowed to Dis, and charge thee now from out thy body fare."
sic ait et dextra crinem secat, omnis et una
She spake and sheared the tress away; then failed the life-heat spent
dilapsus calor atque in uentos uita recessit.
And forth away upon the wind the spirit of her went.

'The Death of Dido' by Andrea Sacchi , 1661

LIBER V

BOOK V.

Interea medium Aeneas iam classe tenebat
Meanwhile Æneas with his ships the mid-sea way did hold
certus iter fluctusque atros Aquilone secabat
Steadfast, and cut the dusky waves before the north wind rolled,
moenia respiciens, quae iam infelicis Elissae
Still looking back upon the walls now litten by the flame
conlucent flammis. quae tantum accenderit ignem
Of hapless Dido: though indeed whence so great burning came
causa latet; duri magno sed amore dolores 5
They knew not; but the thought of grief that comes of love defiled
polluto, notumque furens quid femina possit,
How great it is, what deed may come of woman waxen wild,
triste per augurium Teucrorum pectora ducunt.
Through woeful boding of the sooth the Teucrians' bosoms bore.
ut pelagus tenuere rates nec iam amplius ulla
But when the ships the main sea held, nor had they any more
occurrit tellus, maria undique et undique caelum,
The land in sight, but sea around and sky around was spread,
olli caeruleus supra caput astitit imber 10
A coal-blue cloud drew up to them, that hanging overhead
noctem hiememque ferens et inhorruit unda tenebris.
Bore night and storm: feared 'neath the dark the waters trembling lie.
ipse gubernator puppi Palinurus ab alta:
Then called the helmsman Palinure from lofty deck on high:
'heu quianam tanti cinxerunt aethera nimbi?
"Ah, wherefore doth such cloud of storm gird all the heavens about?
quidue, pater Neptune, paras?" sic deinde locutus
What will ye, Father Neptune, now?" Therewith he crieth out
colligere arma iubet ualidisque incumbere remis, 15
To gather all the tackling in, and hard on oars to lay,
obliquatque sinus in uentum ac talia fatur:
And slopeth sail across the wind; and so such word doth say:

‘magnanime Aenea, non, si mihi Iuppiter auctor “Great-souled Æneas, e’en if Jove my borrow now should be,
spondeat, hoc sperem Italiam contingere caelo.
‘Neath such a sky I might not hope to make our Italy:
mutati transuersa fremunt et uespere ab atro
The changed winds roar athwart our course, and from the west grown black
consurgunt uenti, atque in nubem cogitur aer. 20
They rise; while o’er the face of heaven gathers the cloudy rack.
nec nos obniti contra nec tendere tantum
Nor have we might to draw a-head, nor e’en to hold our own.
sufficimus. superat quoniam Fortuna, sequamur,
Wherefore since Fortune hath prevailed, by way that she hath shown,
quoque uocat uertamus iter. nec litora longe
Whither she calleth, let us turn: methinks the way but short
fida reor fraterna Erycis portusque Sicanos,
To brother-land of Eryx leal and safe Sicanian port,
si modo rite memor seruata remetior astra.’ 25
If I may read the stars aright that erst I bare in mind.”
tum pius Aeneas: ‘equidem sic poscere uentos
Quoth good Æneas: “Now for long that suchwise would the wind
iamdudum et frustra cerno te tendere contra.
I saw, and how thou heldest head against it all in vain:
flecte uiam uelis. an sit mihi gratior ulla,
Shift sail and go about; what land may sweeter be to gain,
quoue magis fessas optem dimittere nauis,
Or whither would I liefer turn my keels from beat of sea,
quam quae Dardanium tellus mihi seruat Acesten 30
Than that which yet the Dardan lord Acestes holds for me, et patris Anchisae gremio complectitur ossa?”
That holds my very father’s bones, Anchises, in its breast?”
haec ubi dicta, petunt portus et uela secundi
They seek the haven therewithal, and fair and happy west
intendunt Zephyri; fertur cita gurgite classis,
Swellleth the sails: o’er whirl of waves full speedily they wend,
et tandem laeti notae aduertuntur harenae.
And glad to that familiar sand they turn them in the end:

At procul ex celso miratus uertice montis 35

But there Acestes meeteth them, who from a mountain high
aduentum sociasque rates occurrit Acestes,

All wondering had seen afar the friendly ships draw nigh.

horridus in iaculis et pelle Libystidis ursae,

With darts he bristled, and was clad in fell of Libyan bear.

Troia Criniso conceptum flumine mater

Him erst unto Crimissus' flood a Trojan mother fair

quem genuit. ueterum non immemor ille parentum

Brought forth: and now, forgetting nought his mother's folk of old,

gratatur reduces et gaza laetus agresti 40

He welcomes them come back again with wealth of field and fold,
excipit, ac fessos opibus solatur amicis.

And solaces the weary men with plenteous friendly cheer.

Postera cum primo stellas Oriente fugarat

But when the stars in first of dawn fled from the morrow clear,

clara dies, socios in coetum litore ab omni

Æneas called upon the shore assembly of his folk,

aduocat Aeneas tumulique ex aggere fatur:

And standing high aloft on mound such words to tell he spoke:

'Dardanidae magni, genus alto a sanguine diuum, 45

"O mighty Dardan men, O folk from blood of Godhead born,

annuus exactis completur mensibus orbis,

The yearly round is all fulfilled, with lapse of months outworn,

ex quo reliquias diuinique ossa parentis

Since when my godlike father's husk and bones of him we laid

condidimus terra maestasque sacrauiumus aras;

Amid the mould, and heavy sad the hallowed altars made:

iamque dies, nisi fallor, adest, quem semper acerbum,

And now meseems the day is here, for evermore to me

semper honoratum (sic di uoluistis) habebo. 50

A bitter day, a worshipped day. — So God would have it be!

hunc ego Gaetulis agerem si Syrtibus exsul,

Yea should it find me outcast man on great Getulia's sand,

Argolicoue mari deprensus et urbe Mycenae,

Or take me in the Argive sea, or mid Mycenæ's land,

annua uota tamen sollempnisque ordine pompas

Yet yearly vows, and pomps that come in due recurring while,
exsequeretur strueremque suis altaria donis.

Still should I pay, and gifts most meet upon the altar pile.

nunc ultro ad cineres ipsius et ossa parentis 55

Now to my father's bones, indeed, and ashes are we brought
haud equidem sine mente, reor, sine numine diuum

By chance; yet not, meseems, without the Godhead's will and thought

adsumus et portus delati intramus amicos.

Are we come here, to lie in peace within a friendly bay.

ergo agite et laetum cuncti celebremus honorem:

So come, and let all worship here the glory of the day;

poscamus uentos, atque haec me sacra quotannis

Pray we the winds, that year by year this worship may be done
urbe uelit posita templis sibi ferre dicatis. 60

In temples dedicate to him within my city won.

bina boum uobis Troia generatus Acestes

Troy-born Acestes giveth you two head of hornèd beasts

dat numero capita in nauis; adhibete penatis

For every ship; so see ye bid the House-gods to your feasts,
et patrios epulis et quos colit hospes Acestes.

Both them of Troy and them our host Acestes loveth here.

praeterea, si nona diem mortalibus alnum

Moreover, if the ninth dawn hence Aurora shall uprear

Aurora extulerit radiisque retexerit orbem, 65

For health of men, and with her rays earth's coverlit shall lift,

prima citae Teucris ponam certamina classis;

For Teucrians will I fast set forth the race for galleys swift:

quique pedum cursu ualet, et qui uiribus audax

Then whosoe'er is fleet of foot, or bold of might and main,

aut iaculo incedit melior leuibusque sagittis,

Or with the dart or eager shaft a better prize may gain,

seu crudo fidit pugnam committere caestu,

Or whoso hath the heart to play in fight-glove of raw hide,

cuncti adsint meritaque exspectent praemia palmae. 70

Let all be there, and victory's palm and guerdon due abide.

ore fauete omnes et cingite tempora ramis.'

Clean be all mouths! and gird with leaves the temple of the head.”
Sic fatus uelat materna tempora myrto.
His mother’s bush he did on brow e’en as the word he said;
hoc Helymus facit, hoc aeuī maturus Acestes,
The like did Helymus, the like Acestes ripe of eld,
hoc puer Ascanius, sequitur quos cetera pubes.
The like the boy Ascanius, yea, and all that manner held.
ille e concilio multis cum milibus ibat 75
Then from that council to the tomb that duke of men did pass;
ad tumulum magna medius comitante caterua.
Mid many thousands, he the heart of all that concourse was.
hic duo rite mero libans carchesia Baccho
There, worshipping, on earth he pours in such wise as was good
fundit humi, duo lacte nouo, duo sanguine sacro,
Two cups of mere wine, two of milk, and two of holy blood,
purpureosque iacit flores ac talia fatur:
And scatters purple flowers around; and then such words he said:
‘salue, sancte parens, iterum; saluete, recepti 80
“Hail, holy father! hail once more! hail, ashes visited
nequiquam cineres animaeque umbraeque paternae.
Once more for nought! hail, father-shade and spirit sweet in vain!
non licuit finis Italos fataliaque arua
Forbid with me that Italy to seek, that fated plain,
nec tecum Ausonium, quicumque est, quaerere Thybrim.’
With me Ausonian Tiber-flood, whereso it be, to seek.”
dixerat haec, adytis cum lubricus anguis ab imis
He spake: but from the lowest mound a mighty serpent sleek
septem ingens gyros, septena uolumina traxit 85
Drew seven great circles o’er the earth, and glided sevenfold,
amplexus placide tumulum lapsusque per aras,
Passing in peace the tomb around, and o’er the altars rolled:
caeruleae cui terga notae maculosus et auro
Blue stripèd was the back of him, and all his scales did glow
squamam incendebat fulgor, ceu nubibus arcus
With glitter of fine flecks of gold; e’en as the cloud-hung bow
mille iacit uarios aduerso sole colores.
A thousand shifting colours fair back from the sun he cast.

obstupuit uisu Aeneas. ille agmine longo 90
Æneas wondered at the sight; but on the serpent passed,
tandem inter pateras et leuia pocula serpens
And 'twixt the bowls and smoothèd cups his long array he wound,
libauitque dapes rursusque innoxius imo
Tasting the hallowed things; and so he gat him underground
successit tumulo et depasta altaria liquit.
Beneath the tomb again, and left the altars pastured o'er.
hoc magis inceptos genitori instaurat honores,
Heartened hereby, his father's soul Æneas worshipped more,
incertus geniumne loci famulumne parentis 95
And, doubtful, deemeth it to be Anchises' guardian ghost
esse putet; caedit binas de more bidentis
Or godhead of the place: so there he slayeth double host,
totque sues, totidem nigrantis terga iuuencos,
As custom would; two black-backed steers, and e'en as many swine,
uinaque fundebat pateris animamque uocabat
And calleth on his father's soul with pouring of the wine,
Anchisae magni manisque Acheronte remissos.
On great Anchises' glorious ghost from Acheron set free.
nec non et socii, quae cuique est copia, laeti 100
From out their plenty therewithal his fellows joyfully
dona ferunt, onerant aras mactantque iuuencos;
Give gifts, and load the altar-stead, and smite the steers adown.
ordine aena locant alii fusique per herbam
While others serve the seething brass, and o'er the herbage strown
subiciunt ueribus prunas et uiscera torrent.
Set coaly morsels 'neath the spit, and roast the inner meat.
Exspectata dies aderat nonamque serena
And now the looked-for day was come with simple light and sweet,
Auroram Phaethontis equi iam luce uehebant, 105
And Phaeton's horses shining bright the ninth dawn in did bear.
famaque finitimos et clari nomen Acestae
Fame and the name Acestes had the neighbouring people stir
excierat; laeto complerant litora coetu
To fill the shore with joyful throng, Æneas' folk to see:
uisuri Aeneadas, pars et certare parati.

But some were dight amid the games their strife-fellows to be.

munera principio ante oculos circoque locantur

There first before the eyes of men the gifts to come they lay

in medio, sacri tripodes uiridesque coronae 110

Amid the course; as hallowed bowls, and garlands of green bay,

et palmae pretium uictoribus, armaque et ostro

And palms, the prize of victory, weapons, and raiment rolled

perfusae uestes, argenti aurique talenta;

In purple, and a talent's weight of silver and of gold;

et tuba commissos medio canit aggere ludos.

Then blast of horn from midst the mound the great games halloweth in:

Prima pares ineunt grauibus certamina remis

Four ships from all the fleet picked out will first the race begin

quattuor ex omni delectae classe carinae. 115

With heavy oars; well matched are they for speed and rowers' tale:

uelocem Mnestheus agit acri remige Pristim,

Hereof did Mnestheus' eager oars drive on the speedy Whale,

mox Italus Mnestheus, genus a quo nomine Memmi,

Mnestheus to be of Italy, whence cometh Memmius' name.

ingentemque Gyas ingenti mole Chimaeram,

The huge Chimæra's mountain mass was Gyas set to tame;

urbis opus, triplici pubes quam Dardana uersu

There on that city of a ship threesome its rowing plies

impellunt, terno consurgunt ordine remi; 120

The Dardan youth; the banks of oars in threefold order rise.

Sergestusque, domus tenet a quo Sergia nomen,

Sergestus next, the name whereof the Sergian house yet bears,

Centauro inuehitur magna, Scyllaque Cloanthus

Is ferried by the Centaur great: last in blue Scylla steers

caerulea, genus unde tibi, Romane Cluenti.

Cloanthus, whence the name of thee, Cluentius, man of Rome.

Est procul in pelago saxum spumantia contra

Far mid the sea a rock there is, facing the shore-line's foam,

litora, quod tumidis summersum tunditur olim 125

Which, beat by overtoppling waves, is drowned and hidden oft,

fluctibus, hiberni condunt ubi sidera Cauri;

What time the stormy North-west hides the stars in heaven aloft:
tranquillo silet immotaque attollitur unda

But otherwhiles it lies in peace when nought the sea doth move,
campus et apricis statio gratissima mergis.

And riseth up a meadow fair that sunning sea-gulls love.

hic uiridem Aeneas frondenti ex ilice metam

There a green goal Æneas raised, dight of a leafy oak,

constituit signum nautis pater, unde reuerti 130

To be a sign of turning back to that sea-faring folk,

scirent et longos ubi circumflectere cursus.

That fetching compass round the same their long course they might turn.

tum loca sorte legunt ipsique in puppibus auro

So then by lot they take their place: there on the deck they burn.

ductores longe effulgent ostroque decori;

The captains, goodly from afar in gold and purple show:

cetera populea uelatur fronde iuuentus

The other lads with poplar-leaf have garlanded the brow,

nudatosque umeros oleo perfusa nitescit. 135

And with the oil poured over them their naked shoulders shine.

considunt transtris, intentaque bracchia remis;

They man the thwarts; with hearts a-stretch they hearken for the sign,

intenti exspectant signum, exsultantiaque haurit

With arms a-stretch upon the oars; hard tugs the pulse of fear

corda paupor pulsans laudumque arrecta cupido.

About their bounding hearts, hard strains the lust of glory dear.

inde ubi clara dedit sonitum tuba, finibus omnes,

But when the clear horn gives the sound, forthwith from where they
lie

haud mora, prosiluire suis; ferit aethera clamor 140

They leap away; the seamen's shouts smite up against the sky,

nauticus, adductis spumant freta uersa lacertis.

The upturned waters froth about as home the arms are borne:

infindunt pariter sulcos, totumque dehiscit

So timely they the furrows cut, and all the sea upturn

conuulsum remis rostrisque tridentibus aequor.

Is cloven by the sweep of oars and bows' three-headed push.

non tam praecipites biuugo certamine campum

— Nay, nought so swift in twi-yoke race forth from the barriers rush
corripuere ruuntque effusi carcere currus, 145

The scattered headlong chariots on to wear the space of plain,
nec sic immissis aurigae undantia lora

Nor eager so the charioteers shake waves along the rein
concussere iugis pronique in uerba pendent.

Above the hurrying yoke, as hung over the lash they go.
tum plausu fremituque uirum studiisque fauentum

— Then with the shouts and praise of men, and hope cast to and fro,
consonat omne nemus, uocemque inclusa uolitant

Rings all the grove; the cliff-walled shore rolleth great voice around,
litora, pulsati colles clamore resultant. 150

And beating 'gainst the mountain-side the shattering shouts rebound.
Effugit ante alios primisque elabitur undis

Before the others Gyas flies, and first the waves doth skim
turbam inter fremitumque Gyas; quem deinde Cloanthus

Betwixt the throng and roar, but hard Cloanthus presseth him;
consequitur, melior remis, sed pondere pinus

Who, better manned, is held aback by sluggish weight of pine.
tarda tenet. post hos aequo discrimine Pristis

'Twixt Whale and Centaur after these the edge of strife is fine,
Centaurusque locum tendunt superare priorem; 155

And hard they struggle each with each to win the foremost place.
et nunc Pristis habet, nunc uictam praeterit ingens

Now the Whale hath it; beaten now is foregone in the race
Centaurus, nunc una ambae iunctisque feruntur

By the huge Centaur; head and head now follow on the two,
frontibus et longa sulcant uada salsa carina.

As the long keel of either one the salt sea furrows through.
iamque propinquabant scopulo metamque tenebant,

But now they drew anigh the holm, the goal close on them gave,
cum princeps medioque Gyas in gurgite uictor 160

When Gyas first and conquering there amid the whirl of wave
rectorem nauis compellat uoce Menoeten:

Unto the helmsman of his ship, Menoetes, cries command:

'quo tantum mihi dexter abis? huc derige cursum;

“And why so far unto the right? turn hither to this hand!
 litus ama et laeua stringat sine palmula cautes;
 Hug thou the shore; let the blades graze the very rocks a-lee.
 altum alii teneant.’ dixit; sed caeca Menoetes
 Let others hold the deep!” No less unto the wavy sea
 saxa timens proram pelagi detorquet ad undas. 165
 Menoetes, fearing hidden rocks, still turns away the bow:
 ‘quo diuersus abis?’ iterum ‘pete saxa, Menoete!’
 Gyas would shout him back again: “Menoetes, whither now?
 cum clamore Gyas reuocabat, et ecce Cloanthum Steer for the rocks!” And therewithal, as back his eyes he cast.
 respicit instantem tergo et propiora tenentem.
 He sees Cloanthus hard at heel and gaining on him fast;
 ille inter nauemque Gyae scopulosque sonantis
 Who, grazing on this hand and that the rocks and Gyas’ ship,
 radit iter laeuum interior subitoque priorem 170
 Now suddenly by leeward course a-head of all doth slip,
 praeterit et metis tenet aequora tuta relictis.
 And leaving clear the goal behind hath open water’s gain.
 tum uero exarsit iuueni dolor ossibus ingens
 Then unto Gyas’ very bones deep burns the wrathful pain;
 nec lacrimis caruere genae, segnemque Menoeten
 Nor did his cheeks lack tears indeed: forgetting honour’s trust,
 oblitus decorisque sui sociumque salutis
 Forgetting all his fellows’ weal, Menoetes doth he thrust
 in mare praecipitem puppi deturbat ab alta; 175
 Headlong from off the lofty deck into the sea adown,
 ipse gubernaclo rector subit, ipse magister
 And takes the tiller, helmsman now and steering-master grown;
 hortaturque uiros clauumque ad litora torquet.
 He cheers his men, and toward the shore the rudder wresteth round.
 at grauis ut fundo uix tandem redditus imo est
 Menoetes, heavy, hardly won up from the ocean’s ground,
 iam senior madidaque fluens in ueste Menoetes
 (For he was old, and floods enow fulfilled his dripping gear,)
 summa petit scopuli siccaque in rupe resedit. 180
 Made for the holm and sat him down upon the dry rock there:

illum et labentem Teucri et risere natantem
 The Teucrians laughed to see him fall, and laughed to see him swim, et salsos rident reuomentem pectore fluctus.
 And laugh to see him spue the brine back from the heart of him.
 Hic laeta extremis spes est accensa duobus,
 Now Mnestheus' and Sergestus' hope began anew to spring,
 Sergesto Mnestheique, Gyan superare morantem.
 That they might outgo Gyas yet amid his tarrying:
 Sergestus capit ante locum scopuloque propinquat, 185
 Of whom Sergestus draws ahead and nears the rocky holm;
 nec tota tamen ille prior praeceunte carina;
 But not by all his keel indeed the other did o'ercome,
 parte prior, partim rostro premit aemula Pristis.
 But by the half; the eager Whale amidships held her place,
 at media socios incedens naue per ipsos
 Where Mnestheus midst the men themselves now to and fro did pace,
 hortatur Mnestheus: 'nunc, nunc insurgite remis,
 Egging them on: "Now, now!" he cries; "up, up, on oar-heft high!
 Hectorei socii, Troiae quos sorte suprema 190
 Fellows of Hector, whom I chose when Troy last threw the die!
 delegi comites; nunc illas promite uiris,
 Now put ye forth your ancient heart, put forth the might of yore,
 nunc animos, quibus in Gaetulis Syrtibus usi
 Wherewith amid Getulian sand, Ionian sea ye bore;
 Ionioque mari Maleaeque sequacibus undis.
 The heart and might ye had amidst Malea's following wave!
 non iam prima peto Mnestheus neque uincere certo
 I, Mnestheus, seek not victory now, nor foremost place to save.
 (quamquam o! — sed superent quibus hoc, Neptune, dedisti); 195
 — Yet, O my heart! but let them win to whom thou giv'st the crown,
 extremos pudeat rediisse: hoc uincite, ciues,
 O Neptune! — but the shameful last! O townsmen, beat it down.
 et prohibete nefas.' olli certamine summo
 And ban such horror!" Hard on oars they lie mid utter throes,
 procumbunt: uastis tremit ictibus aerea puppis
 And quivereth all the brazen ship beneath their mighty blows;

subtrahiturque solum, tum creber anhelitus artus

The sea's floor slippeth under them; the ceaseless pantings shake
aridaque ora quatit, sudor fluit undique riuus. 200

Their limbs and parchèd mouths, and still the sweat-streams never slake.

attulit ipse uiris optatum casus honorem:

But very chance those strivers gave the prize they struggled for,
namque furens animi dum proram ad saxa suburget

Since now Sergestus, hot at heart, while to the stony shore
interior spatiaque subit Sergestus iniquo,

He clingeth innerward, is come into the treacherous strait,
infelix saxis in procurrentibus haesit.

And hapless driveth on the rocks thrust forth for such a fate:
concussae cautes et acuto in murice remi 205

The cliffs are shaken and the oars against the flinty spikes
obnixi crepuere inlisaque prora pependit.

Snap crashing, and the prow thrust up yet hangeth where it strikes:
consurgunt nautae et magno clamore morantur

Up start the seafarers, and raise great hubbub tarrying;
ferratasque trudes et acuta cuspidē contos

Then sprits all iron-shod and poles sharp-ended forth they bring
expediunt fractosque legunt in gurgite remos.

To bear her off, and gather oars a-floating in the wash.
at laetus Mnesteus successuque acrior ipso 210

But Mnesteus, whetted by his luck, joyful, with hurrying dash
agmine remorum celeri uentisque uocatis

Of timely-beating oars, speeds forth, and praying breezes on,
prona petit maria et pelago decurrit aperto.

O'er waters' slope adown the sea's all open way doth run:
qualis spelunca subito commota columba,

— E'en as a pigeon in a cave stirred suddenly from rest,
cui domus et dulces latebroso in pumice nidi,

Who in the shady pumice-rock hath house and happy nest;
fertur in arua uolans plausumque exterrita pennis 215

Scared 'neath the roof she beateth forth with mighty flap of wings,
dat tecto ingentem, mox aere lapsa quieto

And flieth, borne adown the fields, till in soft air she swings,

radit iter liquidum celeris neque commouet alas:

And floateth on the flowing way, nor scarce a wing doth move;
sic Mnestheus, sic ipsa fuga secat ultima Pristis

— So Mnestheus, so the Whale herself, the latter waters clove,
aequora, sic illam fert impetus ipse uolantem.

So with the way erst made on her she flew on swift and soft;
et primum in scopulo luctantem deserit alto 220

And first Sergestus doth she leave stayed on the rock aloft,
Sergestum breuibisque uadis frustraue uocantem

Striving in shallows' tanglement, calling for help in vain,
auxilia et fractis discentem currere remis.

And learning with his broken oars a little way to gain.

inde Gyan ipsamque ingenti mole Chimaeram

Then Gyas and Chimæra's bulk he holdeth hard in chase,
consequitur; cedit, quoniam spoliata magistro est.

Who, from her lack of helmsman lost, must presently give place.

solus iamque ipso superest in fine Cloanthus, 225

And now at very end of all Cloanthus is the last

quem petit et summis adnixus uiribus urget.

With whom to deal: his most he strives, and presseth on him fast.

Tum uero ingeminat clamor cunctique sequentem

Then verily shout thrusts on shout, and all with all goodwill
instigant studiis, resonatque fragoribus aether.

Cry on the chase; their echoing noise the very lift doth fill.

hi proprium decus et partum indignantur honorem

These, thinking shame of letting fall their hardly-gotten gain

ni teneant, uitamque uolunt pro laude pacisci; 230

Of glory's meed, to buy the praise with very life are fain;

hos successus alit: possunt, quia posse uidentur.

Those, fed on good-hap, all things may, because they deem they may:

et fors aequatis cepissent praemia rostris,

The twain, perchance, head laid to head, had won the prize that day,

ni palmas ponto tendens utrasque Cloanthus

But if Cloanthus both his palms had stretched to seaward there,

fudissetque preces diuosque in uota uocasset:

And called upon the Gods to aid and poured forth eager prayer:

'di, quibus imperium est pelagi, quorum aequora curro, 235
 "O Gods, whose lordship is the sea, whose waters I run o'er,
 uobis laetus ego hoc candentem in litore taurum
 Now glad will I, your debtor bound, by altars on the shore
 constituam ante aras uoti reus, extaque salsos
 Bring forth for you a snow-white bull, and cast amid the brine
 proiciam in fluctus et uina liquentia fundam.'
 His inner meat, and pour abroad a flowing of fair wine."
 dixit, eumque imis sub fluctibus audiit omnis
 He spake, and all the Nereids' choir hearkened the words he said
 Nereidum Phorcique chorus Panopeaque uirgo, 240
 Down 'neath the waves, and Phorcus' folk, and Panopea the maid;
 et pater ipse manu magna Portunus euntem
 Yea, and the sire Portunus thrust the keel with mighty hand
 impulit: illa Noto citius uolucrique sagitta
 Upon its way, and arrow-swift it flew on toward the land,
 ad terram fugit et portu se condidit alto.
 Swift as the South, and there at rest in haven deep it lies.
 tum satus Anchisa cunctis ex more uocatis
 But now Anchises' seed, all men being summoned in due wise,
 uictorem magna praeconis uoce Cloanthum 245
 Proclaims Cloanthus victor there by loud-voiced herald's shout,
 declarat uiridique aduelat tempora lauro,
 And with green garland of the bay he does his brows about;
 muneraque in nauis ternos optare iuuenos
 Then biddeth them to choose the gifts, for every ship three steers,
 uinaque et argenti magnum dat ferre talentum.
 And wine, and every crew therewith great weight of silver bears.
 ipsis praecipuos ductoribus addit honores:
 And glorious gifts he adds withal to every duke of man:
 uictori chlamydem auratam, quam plurima circum 250
 A gold-wrought cloak the victor hath, about whose rim there ran
 purpura maeandro duplici Meliboea cucurrit,
 A plenteous double wavy stream of Meliboean shell,
 intextusque puer frondosa regius Ida
 And leafy Ida's kingly boy thereon was pictured well.
 uelocis iaculo ceruos cursuque fatigat

A-following up the fleeing hart with spear and running fleet;
 acer, anhelanti similis, quem praepes ab Ida
 Eager he seemed as one who pants; then him with hookèd feet
 sublimem pedibus rapuit Iouis armiger uncis; 255
 Jove's shield-bearer hath caught, and up with him from Ida flies,
 longaeui palmas nequiquam ad sidera tendunt
 And there the ancient masters stretch vain palms unto the skies,
 custodes, saeuitque canum latratus in auras.
 While bark of staring hunting-hound beats fierce at upper air.
 at qui deinde locum tenuit uirtute secundum,
 Then next for him who second place of might and valour bare
 leuibus huic hamis consertam auroque tralicem
 A mail-coat wove of polished rings with threefold wire of gold,
 loricam, quam Demoleo detraxerat ipse 260
 Which from Demoleos the King had stripped in days of old,
 uictor apud rapidum Simoenta sub Ilio alto,
 A conqueror then by Simoïs swift beneath high-builted Troy,
 donat habere, uiro decus et tutamen in armis.
 He giveth now that lord to have a safeguard and a joy;
 uix illam famuli Phegeus Sagarisque ferebant
 Its many folds his serving-men, Phegeus and Sagaris,
 multiplicem conixi umeris; indutus at olim
 Scarce bore on toiling shoulders joined, yet clad in nought but this Demoleos cursu palantis Troas agebat. 265
 Swift ran Demoleos following on the Trojans disarrayed.
 tertia dona facit geminos ex aere lebetas
 A third gift then he setteth forth, twin cauldrons brazen made,
 cymbiaque argento perfecta atque aspera signis.
 And silver bowls with picturing fret and wrought with utter pain.
 iamque adeo donati omnes opibusque superbi
 And now when all had gotten gifts, and glorying in their gain,
 puniceis ibant euincti tempora taenis,
 Were wending with the filleting of purple round the brow,
 cum saeue scopulo multa uix arte reuulsus 270
 Lo, gotten from the cruel rock with craft and toil enow,
 amissis remis atque ordine debilis uno
 With missing oars, and all one board unhandy and foredone,

inrisam sine honore ratem Sergestus agebat.

His ship inglorious and bemocked, Sergestus driveth on.

qualis saepe uiae depensus in aggere serpens,

— As with an adder oft it haps caught on the highway's crown,

aerea quem obliquum rota transiit aut grauis ictu

Aslant by brazen tire of wheel, or heavy pebble thrown

seminecem liquit saxo lacerumque uiator; 275

By wayfarer, hath left him torn and nigh unto his end:

nequiquam longos fugiens dat corpore tortus

Who writhings wrought for helpless flight through all his length doth send,

parte ferox ardensque oculis et sibila colla

And one half fierce with burning eyes uprears a hissing crest,

arduus attollens; pars uulnere clauda retentat

The other half, with wounds all halt, still holding back the rest;

nexantem nodis seque in sua membra plicantem:

He knitteth him in many a knot and on himself doth slip.

tali remigio nauis se tarda mouebat; 280

— E'en such the crawling of the oars that drave the tarrying ship.

uela facit tamen et uelis subit ostia plenis.

But they hoist sail on her, and so the harbour-mouth make shift

Sergestum Aeneas promisso munere donat

To win: and there Æneas gives Sergestus promised gift,

seruatam ob nauem laetus sociosque reductos.

Blithe at his saving of the ship, and fellows brought aback:

olli serua datur operum haud ignara Mineruae,

A maid he hath, who not a whit of Pallas' art doth lack.

Cressa genus, Pholoe, geminique sub ubere nati. 285

Of Crete she is, and Pholoë called, and twins at breast she bears.

Hoc pius Aeneas misso certamine tendit

Now all that strife being overpast, the good Æneas fares

gramineum in campum, quem collibus undique curuis

To grassy meads girt all about by hollow wooded hills,

cingebant siluae, mediaque in ualle theatri

Where theatre-wise the racing-course the midmost valley fills.

circus erat; quo se multis cum milibus heros

Thereto the hero, very heart of many a thousand men,

consessu medium tulit exstructoque resedit. 290

Now wendeth, and on seat high-piled he sits him down again.

hic, qui forte uelint rapido contendere cursu,

There whosoever may have will to strive in speedy race

inuitat pretiis animos, et praemia ponit.

He hearteneth on with hope of gift, and shows the prize and grace.

undique conueniunt Teucri mixtique Sicani,

So from all sides Sicilians throng, and Trojan fellowship.

Nisus et Euryalus primi,

Euryalus and Nisus first.

Euryalus forma insignis uiridique iuuenta, 295

Euryalus for goodness and youth's first blossom famed,

Nisus amore pio pueri; quos deinde secutus

Nisus for fair love of the youth; then after these are named

regius egregia Priami de stirpe Diores;

Diores, of the blood of kings from Priam's glorious race;

hunc Salius simul et Patron, quorum alter Acarnan,

Salius and Patron next; the one of Acarnanian place,

alter ab Arcadio Tegeaeae sanguine gentis;

The other from Arcadian blood of Tegeæa outsprung:

tum duo Trinacrii iuuenes, Helymus Panopesque 300

Then two Trinacrians, Helymus and Panopes the young,

adsueti siluis, comites senioris Acestae;

In woodcraft skilled, who ever went by old Acestes' side;

multi praeterea, quos fama obscura recondit.

And many others else there were whom rumour dimmed doth hide.

Aeneas quibus in mediis sic deinde locutus:

And now amidmost of all these suchwise Æneas spake:

‘accipite haec animis laetasque aduertite mentes.

“Now hearken; let your merry hearts heed of my saying take:

nemo ex hoc numero mihi non donatus abibit. 305

No man of all the tale of you shall henceforth giftless go;

Cnosia bina dabo leuato lucida ferro

Two Gnosian spears to each I give with polished steel aglow,

spicula caelatamque argento ferre bipennem;

An axe to carry in the war with silver wrought therein.

omnibus hic erit unus honos. tres praemia primi

This honour is for one and all: the three first prize shall win,
accipient flauaque caput nectentur oliua.

And round about their heads shall do the olive dusky-grey.
primus equum phaleris insignem uictor habeto; 310

A noble horse with trappings dight the first shall bear away;
alter Amazoniam pharetram plenamque sagittis

A quiver of the Amazons with Thracian arrows stored
Threiciis, lato quam circum amplectitur auro

The second hath; about it goes a gold belt broidered broad,
balteus et tereti subnectit fibula gemma;

With gem-wrought buckle delicate to clasp it at the end.
tertius Argolica hac galea contentus abito.'

But gladdened with this Argive helm content the third shall wend."
Haec ubi dicta, locum capiunt signoque repente 315

All said, they take their places due, and when the sign they hear,
corripiunt spatia audito limenque relinquunt,

Forthwith they leave the bar behind and o'er the course they bear,
effusi nimbo similes. simul ultima signant,

Like drift of storm-cloud; on the goal all set their eager eyes:
primus abit longequae ante omnia corpora Nisus

But far before all shapes of man shows Nisus, and outflies
emicat et uentis et fulminis ocior alis;

The very whistling of the winds or lightning on the wing.
proximus huic, longo sed proximus interuallo, 320

Then, though the space be long betwixt, comes Salius following;
insequitur Salius; spatium post deinde relicto

And after Salius again another space is left,
tertius Euryalus;

And then Euryalus is third;

Euryalumque Helymus sequitur; quo deinde sub ipso
And after him is Helymus: but lo, how hard on heel

ecce uolat calcemque terit iam calce Diore Diores scuds! foot on his foot doth Helymus nigh feel,

incumbens umero, spatia et si plura supersint 325

Shoulder on shoulder: yea, and if the course held longer out,
transeat elapsus prior ambiguumque relinquat.

He would slip by him and be first, or leave the thing in doubt.

iamque fere spatio extremo fessique sub ipsam
 Now, spent, unto the utmost reach and very end of all
 finem aduentabant, leui cum sanguine Nisus
 They came, when in the slippery blood doth luckless Nisus fall,
 labitur infelix, caesis ut forte iuuenis
 E'en where the ground was all a-slop with bullocks slain that day,
 fusus humum uiridisque super madefecerat herbas. 330
 And all the topmost of the grass be-puddled with it lay:
 hic iuuenis iam uictor ouans uestigia presso
 There, as he went the victor now, exulting, failed his feet
 haud tenuit titubata solo, sed pronus in ipso
 From off the earth, and forth he fell face foremost down to meet
 concidit immundoque fimo sacroque cruore.
 The midst of all the filthy slime blent with the holy gore:
 non tamen Euryali, non ille oblitus amorum:
 Yet for Euryalus his love forgot he none the more,
 nam sese opposuit Salio per lubrica surgens; 335
 For rising from the slippery place in Salius' way he thrust,
 ille autem spissa iacuit reuolutus harena,
 Who, rolling over, lay along amid the thickened dust.
 emicat Euryalus et munere uictor amici
 Forth flies Euryalus, and flies to fame and foremost place,
 prima tenet, plausuque uolat fremituque secundo.
 His own friend's gift, mid beat of hands and shouts that bear him grace.
 post Helymus subit et nunc tertia palma Diores.
 Next came in Helymus, and next the palm Diores bore.
 hic totum caueae consessum ingentis et ora 340
 But over all the concourse set in hollow dale, and o'er prima patrum magnis Salio clamoribus implet,
 The heads of those first father-lords goes Salio's clamouring speech,
 ereptumque dolo reddi sibi poscit honorem.
 Who for his glory reft away by guile doth still beseech.
 tutatur fauor Euryalum lacrimaeque decorae,
 But safe goodwill and goodly tears Euryalus do bear,
 gratior et pulchro ueniens in corpore uirtus.
 And lovelier seemeth valour set in body wrought so fair.

adiuuat et magna proclamat uoce Diores, 345
 Him too Diores backeth now, and crieth out on high,
 qui subiit palmae frustra ad praemia uenit
 Whose palm of praise and third-won place shall fail and pass him by,
 ultima, si primi Salio reddentur honores.
 If the first glory once again at Salius' bidding shift.
 tum pater Aeneas 'uestra' inquit 'munera uobis
 Then sayeth Father Æneas: "O fellows, every gift
 certa manent, pueri et palmam mouet ordine nemo;
 Shall bide unmoved: the palm of praise shall no man now displace.
 me liceat casus miserari insontis amici.' 350
 Yet for my sackless friend's mishap give me some pity's grace."
 sic fatus tergum Gaetuli immane leonis
 He spake, and unto Salius gave a mighty lion's hide,
 dat Salio uillis onerosum atque unguibus aureis.
 Getulian born, with weight of hair and golden claws beside:
 hic Nisus 'si tanta' inquit 'sunt praemia uictis,
 Then Nisus spake: "If such great gifts are toward for beaten men,
 et te lapsorum miseret, quae munera Niso
 And thou must pity those that fall, what gift is worthy then
 digna dabis, primam merui qui laude coronam 355
 Of Nisus? I, who should have gained the very victory's crown,
 ni me, quae Salium, fortuna inimica tulisset?"
 If me, as Salius, Fate my foe had never overthrown."
 et simul his dictis faciem ostentabat et udo
 And even as he speaks the word he showeth face and limb
 turpia membra fimo. risit pater optimus olli
 Foul with the mud. The kindest lord, the Father, laughed on him,
 et clipeum efferri iussit, Didymaonis artes,
 And bade them bring a buckler forth, wrought of Didymaon,
 Neptuni sacro Danaï de poste refixum. 360
 Spoil of the Greeks, from Neptune's house and holy doors undone;
 hoc iuuenem egregium praestanti munere donat.
 And there unto the noble youth he gives that noble thing.
 Post, ubi confecti cursus et dona peregit,
 But now, the race all overpassed and all the gift-giving,
 'nunc, si cui uirtus animusque in pectore praesens,

Quoth he: "If any valour hath, or heart that may withstand,
 adsit et euinctis attollat bracchia palmis':
 Let him come forth to raise his arm with hide-begirded hand."
 sic ait, et geminum pugnae proponit honorem, 365
 So saying, for the fight to come he sets forth glories twain;
 uictori uelatum auro uittisque iuuentum,
 A steer gilt-horned and garlanded the conquering man should gain,
 ensem atque insignem galeam solacia uicto.
 A sword and noble helm should stay the vanquished in his woe.
 nec mora; continuo uastis cum uiribus effert
 No tarrying was there: Dares straight his face to all doth show, ora Dares magnoque uirum se murmure tollit,
 And riseth in his mighty strength amidst the murmur great:
 solus qui Paridem solitus contendere contra, 370
 He who alone of all men erst with Paris held debate,
 idemque ad tumulum quo maximus occubat Hector
 And he who at the mound wherein that mightiest Hector lay,
 uictorem Buten immani corpore, qui se
 Had smitten Butes' body huge, the winner of the day,
 Bebrycia ueniens Amyci de gente ferebat,
 Who called him come of Amycus and that Bebrycian land:
 perculit et fulua moribundum extendit harena.
 But Dares stretched him dying there upon the yellow sand.
 talis prima Dares caput altum in proelia tollit, 375
 Such was the Dares that upreared his head against the fight,
 ostenditque umeros latos alternaque iactat
 And showed his shoulders' breadth and drave his fists to left and right,
 bracchia protendens et uerberat ictibus auras.
 With arms cast forth, as heavy strokes he laid upon the air.
 quaeritur huic alius; nec quisquam ex agmine tanto
 But when they sought a man for him, midst all the concourse there
 audet adire uirum manibusque inducere caestus.
 Was none durst meet him: not a hand the fighting-glove would don:
 ergo alacris cunctosque putans excedere palma 380
 Wherefore, high-hearted, deeming now the prize from all was won,
 Aeneae stetit ante pedes, nec plura moratus

He stood before Æneas' feet nor longer tarrièd,
 tum laeua taurum cornu tenet atque ita fatur:
 But with his left hand took the steer about the horn and said:
 'nate dea, si nemo audet se credere pugnae,
 "O Goddess-born, if no man dares to trust him in the play,
 quae finis standi? quo me decet usque teneri?
 What end shall be of standing here; must I abide all day?
 ducere dona iube.' cuncti simul ore fremebant 385
 Bid them bring forth the gifts." Therewith they cried out one and all,
 Dardanidae reddique uiro promissa iubebant.
 The Dardan folk, to give the gifts that due to him did fall.
 Hic grauis Entellum dictis castigat Acestes,
 But with hard words Acestes now Entellus falls to chide,
 proximus ut uiridante toro consederat herbae:
 As on the bank of grassy green they sat there side by side,
 'Entelle, heroum quondam fortissime frustra,
 "Entellus, bravest hero once of all men, and for nought,
 tantane tam patiens nullo certamine tolli 390
 If thou wilt let them bear away without a battle fought
 dona sines? ubi nunc nobis deus ille, magister
 Such gifts as these. And where is he, thy master then, that God,
 nequiquam memoratus, Eryx? ubi fama per omnem
 That Eryx, told of oft in vain? where is thy fame sown broad Trinacriam et spolia illa tuis pendentia tectis?"
 Through all Trinacria, where the spoils hung up beneath thy roof?"
 ille sub haec: 'non laudis amor nec gloria cessit
 "Nay," said he, "neither love of fame nor glory holds aloof
 pulsa metu; sed enim gelidus tardante senecta 395
 Beaten by fear, but cold I grow with eld that holdeth back.
 sanguis hebet, frigentque effetae in corpore uires.
 My blood is dull, my might gone dry with all my body's lack.
 si mihi quae quondam fuerat quaque improbus iste
 Ah, had I that which once I had, that which the rascal there exsultat fidens, si nunc foret illa iuuentas, Trusts in with idle triumphing, the days of youth the dear,
 haud equidem pretio inductus pulchroque iuuenco
 Then had I come into the fight by no gift-giving led,

uenissem, nec dona moror.' sic deinde locutus 400

No goodly steer: nought heed I gifts." And with the last word said,
in medium geminos immani pondere caestus
His fighting gloves of fearful weight amidst of them he cast,
proiecit, quibus acer Eryx in proelia suetus
Wherewith the eager Eryx' hands amid the play had passed
ferre manum duroque intendere bracchia tergo.
Full oft; with hardened hide of them his arms he used to bind.
obstipuerunt animi: tantorum ingentia septem
Men's hearts were mazed; such seven bull-hides each other in them lined,

terga bouum plumbo insuto ferroque rigeant. 405

So stiff they were with lead sewn in and iron laid thereby;
ante omnis stupet ipse Dares longeque recusat,
And chief of all was Dares mazed, and drew back utterly.
magnanimusque Anchisiades et pondus et ipsa
But the great-souled Anchises' seed that weight of gauntlets
weighed,
huc illuc uinculorum immensa uolumina uersat.

And here and there he turned about their mighty folds o'erlaid.
tum senior talis referebat pectore uoces:

Then drew the elder from his breast words that were like to these:

'quid, si quis caestus ipsius et Herculis arma 410

"Ah, had ye seen the gloves that armed the very Hercules,
uidisset tristemque hoc ipso in litore pugnam?

And that sad battle foughten out upon this country shore!

haec germanus Eryx quondam tuus arma gerebat

For these are arms indeed that erst thy kinsmen Eryx bore:

(sanguine cernis adhuc sparsoque infecta cerebro),

Lo, ye may see them even now flecked with the blood and brain.

his magnum Alciden contra stetit, his ego suetus,

With these Alcides he withstood; with these I too was fain

dum melior uiris sanguis dabat, aemula necdum 415

Of war, while mightier blood gave might, nor envious eld as yet
temporibus geminis canebat sparsa senectus.

On either temple of my head the hoary hairs had set.

sed si nostra Dares haec Troius arma recusat

But if this Dares out of Troy refuse our weapons still,
 idque pio sedet Aeneae, probat auctor Acestes,
 And good Æneas doom it so, and so Acestes will,
 aequemus pugnās. Erycis tibi terga remitto
 My fight-lord; make the weapons like: these gloves of Eryx here
 (solue metus), et tu Troianos exue caestus.' 420
 I take aback: be not afraid, but doff thy Trojan gear."
 haec fatus duplicem ex umeris reiecit amictum
 He spake, and from his back he cast his twifold cloak adown,
 et magnos membrorum artus, magna ossa lacertosque
 And naked his most mighty limbs and shoulders huge were shown,
 exuit atque ingens media consistit harena.
 And on the midmost of the sand a giant there he stood.
 tum satus Anchisa caestus pater extulit aequos Wherewith Anchises' seed brought forth gloves even-matched and
 good,
 et paribus palmas amborum innexuit armis. 425
 And so at last with gear alike the arms of each he bound,
 constitit in digitos extemplo arrectus uterque
 Then straightway each one stretched aloft on tip-toe from the ground:
 brachiaque ad superas interritus extulit auras.
 They cast their mighty arms abroad, nor any fear they know,
 abduxere retro longe capita ardua ab ictu
 The while their lofty heads they draw abackward from the blow:
 immiscentque manus manibus pugnamque lacesunt,
 And so they mingle hands with hands and fall to wake the fight.
 ille pedum melior motu fretusque iuuenta, 430
 The one a-trusting in his youth and nimbler feet and light;
 hic membris et mole ualens; sed tarda trementi
 The other's bulk of all avail, but, trembling, ever shrank
 genua labant, uastos quatit aeger anhelitus artus.
 His heavy knees, and breathing short for ever shook his flank.
 multa uiri nequiquam inter se uulnera iactant,
 Full many a stroke those mighty men cast each at each in vain;
 multa cauo lateri ingeminant et pectore uastos
 Thick fall they on the hollow sides; the breasts ring out again
 dant sonitus, erratque auris et tempora circum 435

With mighty sound; and eager-swift the hands full often stray
crebra manus, duro crepitant sub uulnere malae.
Round ears and temples; crack the jaws beneath that heavy play:
stat grauis Entellus nисуque immotus eodem
In one set strain, not moving aught, heavy Entellus stands,
corpore tela modo atque oculis uigilantibus exit.
By body's sway and watchful eye shunning the dart of hands:
ille, uelut celsam oppugnat qui molibus urbem
But Dares is as one who brings the gin 'gainst high-built town,
aut montana sedet circum castella sub armis, 440
Or round about some mountain-hold the leaguer setteth down:
nunc hos, nunc illos aditus, omnemque pererrat
Now here now there he falleth on, and putteth art to pain
arte locum et uariis adsultibus inritus urget.
At every place, and holds them strait with onset all in vain.
ostendit dextram insurgens Entellus et alte
Entellus, rising to the work, his right hand now doth show
extulit, ille ictum uenientem a uertice uelox
Upread; but he, the nimble one, foresaw the falling blow
praeuidit celerique elapsus corpore cessit; 445
Above him, and his body swift writhed skew-wise from the fall.
Entellus uiris in uentum effudit et ultro
Entellus spends his stroke on air, and, overborne withal,
ipse grauis grauiusque ad terram pondere uasto
A heavy thing, falls heavily to earth, a mighty weight:
concidit, ut quondam caua concidit aut Erymantho
As whiles a hollow-eaten pine on Erymanthus great,
aut Ida in magna radicibus eruta pinus.
Or mighty Ida, rooted up, to earthward toppling goes.
consurgunt studiis Teucris et Trinacria pubes; 450
Then Teucrian and Trinacrian folk with wondrous longing rose,
it clamor caelo primusque accurrit Acestes
And shouts went skyward: thither first the King Acestes ran,
aequaeuumque ab humo miserans attollit amicum.
And pitying his like-aged friend raised up the fallen man;
at non tardatus casu neque territus heros
Who neither slackened by his fall, nor smit by any fear,

acrior ad pugnam redit ac uim suscitāt ira;
Gets back the eagerer to the fight, for anger strength doth stir,
tum pudor incendit uiris et conscia uirtus, 455
And shame and conscious valour lights his ancient power again.
praecipitemque Daren ardens agit aequore toto
In headlong flight his fiery wrath drives Dares o'er the plain,
nunc dextra ingeminans ictus, nunc ille sinistra.
And whiles his right hand showereth strokes, his left hand raineth whiles.

nec mora nec requies: quam multa grandine nimbi
No tarrying and no rest there is; as hail-storm on the tiles
culminibus crepitant, sic densis ictibus heros
Rattleth, so swift with either hand the eager hero now
creber utraque manu pulsāt uersatque Dareta. 460
Beats on and batters Dares down, and blow is laid on blow.
Tum pater Aeneas procedere longius iras
But now the Father Æneas no longer might abide
et saeuire animis Entellum haud passus acerbis, Entellus' bitter rage of soul or lengthening anger's tide,
sed finem imposuit pugnae fessumque Dareta
But laid an end upon the fight therewith, and caught away
eripuit mulcens dictis ac talia fatur:
Dares foredone, and soothing words in such wise did he say:
'infelix, quae tanta animum dementia cepit? 465
"Unhappy man, what madness then hath hold upon thine heart?
non uiris alias conuersaque numina sentis?
Feel'st not another might than man's, and Heaven upon his part?
cede deo.' dixitque et proelia uoce diremit.
Yield to the Gods!" So 'neath his word the battle sank to peace.
ast illum fidi aequales genua aegra trahentem
But Dares his true fellows took, trailing his feeble knees,
iactantemque utroque caput crassumque cruorem Lolling his head from side to side, the while his sick mouth sent
ore eiectantem mixtosque in sanguine dentes 470
The clotted blood from out of it wherewith the teeth were blent.
ducunt ad nauis; galeamque ensemque uocati
They lead him to the ships; then, called, they take the helm and

sword,
 accipiunt, palmam Entello taurumque relinquunt.
 But leave Entellus' bull and palm, the victory's due reward;
 hic uictor superans animis tauroque superbus
 Who, high of heart, proud in the beast his conquering hand did earn,
 'nate dea, uosque haec' inquit 'cognoscite, Teucri,
 "O Goddess-born," he said, "and ye, O Teucrians, look, and learn
 et mihi quae fuerint iuuenali in corpore uires 475
 What might was in my body once, ere youth it had to lack,
 et qua seruetis reuocatum a morte Dareta.'
 And what the death whence Dares saved e'en now ye draw aback."
 dixit, et aduersi contra stetit ora iuueni
 He spake, and at the great bull's head straightway he took his stand,
 qui donum astabat pugnae, duosque reducta
 As there it bode the prize of fight, and drawing back his hand
 libruit dextra media inter cornua caestus
 Rose to the blow, and 'twixt the horns sent forth the hardened glove, arduus, effractoque inlinit in ossa cerebro: 480
 And back upon his very brain the shattered skull he drove.
 sternitur exanimisque tremens procumbit humi bos.
 Down fell the beast and on the earth lay quivering, outstretched,
 dead,
 ille super talis effundit pectore uoces:
 While over him from his inmost breast such words Entellus said:
 'hanc tibi, Eryx, meliorem animam pro morte Daretis
 "Eryx, this soul, a better thing, for Dares doomed to die,
 persoluo; hic uictor caestus artemque repono.'
 I give thee, and victorious here my gloves and craft lay by."
 Protinus Aeneas celeri certare sagitta 485
 Forth now Æneas biddeth all who have a mind to strive
 inuitat qui forte uelint et praemia dicit,
 At speeding of the arrow swift, and gifts thereto doth give,
 ingentique manu malum de naue Seresti
 And with his mighty hand the mast from out Serestus' keel
 erigit et uolucrum traiecit in fune columbam, Uprears; and there a fluttering dove, mark for the flying steel,
 quo tendant ferrum, malo suspendit ab alto.

Tied to a string he hangeth up athwart the lofty mast.

conuenere uiri deiectamque aerea sortem 490

Then meet the men; a brazen helm catches the lots down cast:

accepit galea, et primus clamore secundo

And, as from out their favouring folk ariseth up the shout,

Hyrtacidae ante omnis exit locus Hippocoontis;

Hippocoon, son of Hyrtacus, before the rest leaps out;

quem modo nauali Mnestheus certamine uictor

Then Mnestheus, who was victor erst in ship upon the sea,

consequitur, uiridi Mnestheus euinctus oliua.

Comes after: Mnestheus garlanded with olive greenery.

tertius Eurytion, tuus, o clarissime, frater, 495

The third-come was Eurytion, thy brother, O renowned,

Pandare, qui quondam iussus confundere foedus

O Pandarus, who, bidden erst the peace-troth to confound,

in medios telum torsiisti primus Achiuos.

Wert first amid Achæan host to send a wingèd thing.

extremus galeaque ima subsedit Acestes,

But last, at bottom of the helm, Acestes' name did cling,

ausus et ipse manu iuuenum temptare laborem.

Who had the heart to try the toil amid the youthful rout.

tum ualidis flexos incuruant uiribus arcus 500

Then with their strength of all avail they bend the bows about

pro se quisque uiri et depromunt tela pharetris,

Each for himself: from quiver then the arrows forth they take:

primaque per caelum neruo stridente sagitta

And first from off the twanging string through heaven there went the wake

Hyrtacidae iuuenis uolucris diuerberat auras,

Of shaft of young Hyrtacides, and clave the flowing air,

et uenit aduersique infigitur arbore mali.

And, flying home, amid the mast that stood before it there

intremuit malus micuitque exterrita pennis 505

It stuck: the mast shook therewithal; the frightened, timorous bird,

ales, et ingenti sonuerunt omnia plausu.

Fluttered her wings; and mighty praise all round about was heard.

post acer Mnestheus adducto constitit arcu

Then stood forth Mnestheus keen, and drew his bow unto the head,
 alta petens, pariterque oculos telumque tetendit.
 Aiming aloft; and shaft and eyes alike therewith he sped;
 ast ipsam miserandus auem contingere ferro
 But, worthy of all pitying, the very bird he missed,
 non ualuit; nodos et uincula linea rupit 510
 But had the hap to shear the knots and lines of hempen twist
 quis innexa pedem malo pendebat ab alto;
 Whereby, all knitted to her foot, she to the mast was tied:
 illa Notos atque atra uolans in nubila fugit.
 But flying toward the winds of heaven and mirky mist she hied.
 tum rapidus, iamdudum arcu contenta parato
 Then swift Eurytion, who for long had held his arrow laid
 tela tenens, fratrem Eurytion in uota uocauit,
 On ready bow-string, vowed, and called his brother unto aid,
 iam uacuo laetam caelo speculatus et alis 515
 And sighted her all joyful now amidst the void of sky,
 plaudentem nigra figit sub nube columbam.
 And smote her as she clapped her wings 'neath the black cloud on high:
 decidit exanimis uitamque reliquit in astris
 Then dead she fell, and mid the stars of heaven her life she left,
 aetheriis fixamque refert delapsa sagittam.
 And, falling, brought the shaft aback whereby her heart was cleft.
 Amissa solus palma superabat Acestes,
 Acestes now was left alone, foiled of the victory's prize.
 qui tamen aerias telum contendit in auras 520
 No less the father sent his shot aloft unto the skies,
 ostentans artemque pater arcumque sonantem.
 Fain to set forth his archer-craft and loud-resounding bow.
 hic oculis subitum obicitur magnoque futurum
 Then to men's eyes all suddenly a portent there did show,
 augurio monstrum; docuit post exitus ingens
 A mighty sign of things to come, the ending showed how great
 seraque terrifici cecinerunt omina uates.
 When seers, the shakers of men's hearts, sang over it too late.
 namque uolans liquidis in nubibus arsit harundo 525

For, flying through the flowing clouds, the swift reed burned about,
signauitque uiam flammis tenuisque recessit
And marked its road with flaming wake, and, eaten up, died out
consumpta in uentos, caelo ceu saepe refixa
Mid the thin air: as oft the stars fly loose from heaven's roof,
transcurren crinemque uolantia sidera ducunt.
And run adown the space of sky with hair that flies aloof.
attonitis haesere animis superosque precati
Trinacrian men and Teucrian men, staring aghast they stood,
Trinacrii Teucrique uiri, nec maximus omen 530
Praying the Gods: but mightiest Æneas held for good
abnuat Aeneas, sed laetum amplexus Acesten
That tokening, and Acestes takes as one all glad at heart,
muneribus cumulat magnis ac talia fatur:
And loadeth him with many gifts, and suchwise speaks his part:
'sume, pater, nam te uoluit rex magnus Olympi
"Take them, O father, for indeed by such a sign I wot
talibus auspiciis exsortem ducere honores.
Olympus' King will have thee win all honour without lot.
ipsius Anchisae longaeui hoc munus habebis, 535
This gift thou hast, Anchises' self, the ancient, had before,
cratera impressum signis, quem Thracius olim
A bowl all stamped with images, which Cisseus once of yore,
Anchisae genitori in magno munere Cisseus
The Thracian, to my father gave, that he might bear the same
ferre sui dederat monimentum et pignus amoris.'
A very tokening of his love and memory of his name."
sic fatus cingit uiridanti tempora lauro
So saying, a garland of green bay he doth his brows about,
et primum ante omnis uictorem appellat Acesten. 540
And victor over all the men Acestes giveth out:
nec bonus Eurytion praelato inuidit honori,
Nor did the good Eurytion grudge his honour so preferred,
quamuis solus auem caelo deiecit ab alto.
Though he alone from height of heaven had brought adown the bird:
proximus ingreditur donis qui uincula rupit,
But he came next in gift-giving who sheared the string, and last

extremus uolucris qui fixit harundine malum.

Was he who set his wingèd reed amidmost of the mast.

At pater Aeneas nondum certamine misso 545

Now had Æneas called to him, ere yet the match was done,

custodem ad sese comitemque impubis Iuli

The child of Epytus, the guard, and fellow of his son,

Epytiden uocat, et fidam sic fatur ad aurem:

Beardless Iulus, and so spake into his faithful ear:

‘uade age et Ascanio, si iam puerile paratum

“Go thou and bid Asoenius straight, if ready dight with gear

agmen habet secum cursusque instruxit equorum,

He hath that army of the lads, and fair array of steeds,

ducat auo turmas et sese ostendat in armis 550

To bring unto his grandsire now, himself in warlike weeds,

dic’ ait. ipse omnem longo decedere circo

That host of his.” The lord meanwhile biddeth all folk begone infusum populum et campos iubet esse patentis.

Who into the long course had poured, and leave the meadow lone.

incedunt pueri pariterque ante ora parentum

Then come the lads: in equal ranks before their fathers’ eyes

frenatis lucent in equis, quos omnis euntis

They shine upon their bitted steeds, and wondering murmurs rise

Trinacriae mirata fremit Troiaeque iuuentus. 555

From men of Troy and Sicily as on their ways they fare.

omnibus in morem tonsa coma pressa corona;

Due crown of well-ordainèd leaves bindeth their flowing hair,

cornea bina ferunt praefixa hastilia ferro,

And each a pair of cornel shafts with iron head doth hold;

pars levis umero pharetras; it pectore summo

And some the polished quiver bear at shoulder: limber gold,

flexilis obtorti per collum circulus auri.

Ring the neck with twisted stem, high on the breast is shown.

tres equitum numero turmae ternique uagantur 560

Three companies of horse they are by tale, and up and down

ductores; pueri bis seni quemque secuti

Three captains ride, and twice six lads each leadeth to the war:

agmine partito fulgent paribusque magistris.

In bands of even tale they shine, and like their leaders are.
 una acies iuuenum, ducit quam paruus ouantem
 Their first array all glad at heart doth little Priam lead,
 nomen aui referens Priamus, tua clara, Polite,
 Who from his grandsire had his name, thy well-renowned seed,
 progenies, auctura Italos; quem Thracius albis 565
 Polites, fated to beget Italian folk: him bore
 portat equus bicolor maculis, uestigia primi
 A Thracian piebald flecked with white, whose feet were white
 before,
 alba pedis frontemque ostentans arduus albam.
 And white withal the crest of him that high aloft he flung.
 alter Atys, genus unde Atii duxere Latini,
 Next Atys came, from whence the stem of Latin Atii sprung;
 paruus Atys pueroque puer dilectus Iulo.
 Young Atys, whom Iulus young most well-beloved did call:
 extremus formaque ante omnis pulcher Iulus 570
 Iulus last, in goodliness so far excelling all,
 Sidonio est inuectus equo, quem candida Dido
 Upon a horse of Sidon came, whom that bright Dido gave
 esse sui dederat monimentum et pignus amoris.
 To be a token of her love, her memory to save.
 cetera Trinacriis pubes senioris Acestae
 On horses of Acestes old, Trinacrian-nurtured beasts,
 fertur equis.
 The others of the youth are borne.
 excipiunt plausu pauidos gaudentque tuentes 575
 With praise they greet their fluttering hearts and look on them with joy,
 Dardanidae, ueterumque agnoscunt ora parentum.
 Those Dardan folk, who see in them the ancient eyes of Troy.
 postquam omnem laeti consessum oculosque suorum
 But after they had fared on steed the concourse all about
 lustrauere in equis, signum clamore paratis
 Before the faces of their folk, Epytides did shout
 Epytides longe dedit insonuitque flagello.
 The looked-for sign afar to them, and cracked withal his whip:

olli discurrere pares atque agmina terni 580

Then evenly they fall apart, in threesome order slip

diductis soluere choris, rursusque uocati

Their cloven ranks; but, called again, aback upon their way

conuertere uias infestaque tela tulere.

They turn, and threatening levelled spears against each other lay.

inde alios ineunt cursus aliosque recursus

Then they to other onset now and other wheeling take,

aduersi spatiis, alternosque orbibus orbis

In bands opposed, and tanglements of ring on ring they make;

impediunt pugnaeque cient simulacra sub armis; 585

So with their weapons every show of very fight they stir,

et nunc terga fuga nudant, nunc spicula uertunt

And now they bare their backs in flight, and now they turn the spear

infensi, facta pariter nunc pace feruntur.

In hostile wise; now side by side in plighted peace they meet.

ut quondam Creta fertur Labyrinthus in alta

— E'en as they tell of Labyrinth that lies in lofty Crete,

parietibus textum caecis iter ancipitemque

A road with blind walls crossed and crossed, an ever-shifting trap

mille uis habuisse dolum, qua signa sequendi 590

Of thousand ways, where he who seeks upon no sign may hap,

frangeret indeprensus et inremeabilis error;

But midst of error, blind to seize or follow back, 'tis gone.

haud alio Teucrum nati uestigia cursu

Not otherwise Troy's little ones the tangle follow on

impediunt texuntque fugas et proelia ludo,

At top of speed, and interweave the flight and battle's play;

delphinum similes qui per maria umida nando

E'en as the dolphins, swimming swift amid the watery way,

Carpathium Libycumque secant. 595

Cleave Libyan or Carpathian sea and sport upon the wave.

hunc morem cursus atque haec certamina primus

This guise of riding, such-like play, his folk Ascanius gave

Ascanius, Longam muris cum cingeret Albam,

Once more, when round the Long White Stead the walls of war he drew:

rettulit et priscos docuit celebrare Latinos,
Withal the Ancient Latin Folk he taught the games to do,
quo puer ipse modo, secum quo Troia pubes;
Suchwise as he a lad had learned with lads from Troy that came:
Albani docuere suos; hinc maxima porro 600
That same the Albans taught their sons; most mighty Rome that same
accepit Roma et patrium seruauit honorem;
Took to her thence, and honoured so her sires of yore agone:
Troiaque nunc pueri, Troianum dicitur agmen.
Now name of Troy and Trojan host the play and boys have won.
hac celebrata tenus sancto certamina patri.
Thus far unto the Holy Sire the games were carried through,
Hinc primum Fortuna fidem mutata nouauit.
When Fortune turned her faith at last and changed her mind anew:
dum uariis tumulto referunt sollemnia ludis, 605
For while the diverse hallowed games about the tomb they spent,
Irim de caelo misit Saturnia Iuno
Saturnian Juno Iris fair from heights of heaven hath sent Iliacam ad classem uentosque aspirat eunti,
Unto the Ilian ships, and breathed fair wind behind her ways,
multa mouens necdum antiquum saturata dolorem.
For sore she brooded, nor had spent her wrath of ancient days.
illa uiam celerans per mille coloribus arcum
So now the maid sped swift along her thousand-coloured bow,
nulli uisa cito decurrit tramite uirgo. 610
And swiftly ran adown the path where none beheld her go.
conspicit ingentem concursum et litora lustrat
And there she saw that gathering great, and swept the strand with eye,
desertosque uidet portus classemque relictam.
And saw the haven void of folk, the ships unheeded lie.
at procul in sola secretae Troades acta
But far away on lonely beach the Trojan women weep
amissum Anchisen flebant, cunctaeque profundum
The lost Anchises; and all they look ever on the deep
pontum aspectabant flentes. heu tot uada fessis 615
Amid their weeping: "Woe are we! what waters yet abide!

et tantum superesse maris, uox omnibus una;
 What ocean-waste for weary folk!" So one and all they cried,
 urbem orant, taedet pelagi perferre laborem.
 And all they yearn for city's rest: sea-toil is loathsome grown.
 ergo inter medias sese haud ignara nocendi
 So she, not lacking craft of guile, amidst them lighted down,
 conicit et faciemque deae uestemque reponit;
 When she hath put away from her God's raiment and God's mien,
 fit Beroe, Tmarii coniunx longaeua Dorycli, 620
 And but as wife of Doryclus, the Tmarian man, is seen,
 cui genus et quondam nomen natique fuissent,
 Old Beroë, who once had sons and lordly race and name;
 ac sic Dardanidum mediam se matribus infert.
 Amid the Dardan mother-folk such wise the Goddess came:
 'o miserae, quas non manus' inquit 'Achaica bello
 "O wretched ones!" she said, "O ye whom armed Achæan hand
 traxerit ad letum patriae sub moenibus! o gens
 Dragged not to death before the walls that stayed your fatherland!
 infelix, cui te exitio Fortuna reseruat? 625
 Unhappy folk! and why hath Fate held back your doom till now?
 septima post Troiae excidium iam uertitur aestas,
 The seventh year is on the turn since Troy-town's overthrow;
 cum freta, cum terras omnis, tot inhospita saxa
 And we all seas the while, all lands, all rocks and skies that hate
 sideraque emensae ferimur, dum per mare magnum
 The name of guest, have wandered o'er, and through the sea
 o'ergreat
 Italiam sequimur fugientem et uoluimur undis.
 Still chase that fleeing Italy mid wallowing waters tossed.
 hic Erycis fines fraterni atque hospes Acestes: 630
 Lo, here is Eryx' brother-land; Acestes is our host;
 quis prohibet muros iacere et dare ciuibus urbem?
 What banneth us to found our walls and lawful cities gain?
 o patria et rapti nequiquam ex hoste penates,
 O Fatherland! O House-Gods snatched from midst the foe in vain!
 nullane iam Troiae dicentur moenia? nusquam
 Shall no walls more be called of Troy? Shall I see never more

Hectoreos amnis, Xanthum et Simoenta, uidebo?
 Xanthus or Simoïs, like the streams where Hector dwelt of yore?
 quin agite et mecum infaustas exurite puppis. 635
 Come on, and those unhappy ships burn up with aid of me;
 nam mihi Cassandrae per somnum uatis imago
 For e'en now mid the dreams of sleep Cassandra did I see,
 ardentis dare uisa faces: "hic quaerite Troiam;
 Who gave me burning brand, and said, 'Here seek your Troy anew:
 hic domus est" inquit "uobis." iam tempus agi res,
 This is the house that ye shall have.' — And now is time to do!
 nec tantis mora prodigiis. en quattuor arae
 No tarrying with such tokens toward! Lo, altars four are here
 Neptuno; deus ipse faces animumque ministrat.' 640
 Of Neptune: very God for us heart and the fire doth bear!"
 haec memorans prima infensum ui corripit ignem
 So saying, first she caught upon the fiery bane, and raised
 sublataque procul dextra conixa coruscat
 Her hand aloft, and mightily she whirled it as it blazed
 et iacit. arrectae mentes stupefactaque corda
 And cast it: but the Ilian wives, their straining hearts are torn,
 Iliadum. hic una e multis, quae maxima natu,
 Their souls bewildered: one of them, yea, and their eldest-born,
 Pyrgo, tot Priami natorum regia nutrix: 645
 Pyrgo, the queenly fosterer of many a Priam's son,
 'non Beroe uobis, non haec Rhoeteia, matres,
 Cried: "Mothers, nay no Beroë, nay no Rhoeteian one,
 est Dorycli coniunx; diuini signa decoris
 The wife of Doryclus is this: lo, Godhead's beauty there!
 ardentisque notate oculos, qui spiritus illi,
 Behold the gleaming of her eyes, note how she breathes the air;
 qui uultus uocisque sonus uel gressus eunti.
 Note ye her countenance and voice, the gait wherewith she goes.
 ipsa egomet dudum Beroen digressa reliqui 650
 Yea, I myself left Beroë e'en now amidst her woes;
 aegram, indignantem tali quod sola careret
 Sick, sad at heart that she alone must fail from such a deed,
 munere nec meritos Anchisae inferret honores.'

Nor bear unto Anchises' ghost his glory's righteous meed."
haec effata.

Such were the words she spake to them.

at matres primo ancipites oculisque malignis

But now those mothers, at the first doubtful, with evil eyes
ambiguae spectare rates miserum inter amorem 655

Gazed on the ships awhile between unhappy craving stayed
praesentis terrae fatisque uocantia regna,

For land they stood on, and the thought of land that Fortune bade:
cum dea se paribus per caelum sustulit alis

When lo! with even spread of wings the Goddess rose to heaven,
ingentemque fuga secuit sub nubibus arcum.

And in her flight the cloudy lift with mighty bow was riven.

tum uero attonitae monstribus actaeque furore

Then, wildered by such tokens dread, pricked on by maddened hearts,

conclamant, rapiuntque focus penetralibus ignem, 660

Shrieking they snatch the hearthstone's fire and brand from inner parts;

pars spoliant aras, frondem ac uirgulta facesque

While some, they strip the altars there, and flaming leaf and bough
coniciunt. furit immissis Vulcanus habenis

Cast forth: and Vulcan, let a loose, is swiftly raging now
transtra per et remos et pictas abiete puppis.

Along the thwarts, along the oars, and stems of painted fir.

Nuntius Anchisae ad tumulum cuneosque theatri

But now with news of flaming ships there goes a messenger,
incensas perfert nauis Eumelus, et ipsi 665

Eumelus, to Anchises' tomb, and theatre-seats, and they
respiciunt atram in nimbo uolitare fauillam.

Look round themselves and see the soot black in the smoke-cloud play.

primus et Ascanius, cursus ut laetus equestris

Then first Ascanius, e'en as blithe the riding-play he led,
ducebat, sic acer equo turbata petiuit

So eager now he rode his ways to camp bewildered,
castra, nec exanimis possunt retinere magistri.

And nowise might they hold him back, his masters spent of breath.
 'quis furor iste nouus? quo nunc, quo tenditis' inquit 670
 "O what new madness then is this? What, what will ye?" he saith.
 'heu miserae ciues? non hostem inimicaque castra
 "O wretched townswomen, no foe, no camp of Argive men
 Argium, uestras spes uritis. en, ego uester
 Ye burn, but your own hopes ye burn. Lo, your Ascanius then!"
 Ascanius!' — galeam ante pedes proiecit inanem,
 Therewith before their feet he cast his empty helm afar,
 qua ludo indutus belli simulacra ciebat.
 Dight wherewithal he stirred in sport that image of the war.
 accelerat simul Aeneas, simul agmina Teucrum. 675
 And thither now Æneas sped, and crowd of Teucrian folk;
 ast illae diuersa metu per litora passim
 Whereat the women diversely along the sea-shore broke,
 diffugiunt, siluasque et sicubi concaua furtim
 Fleeing afeard, and steal to woods and whatso hollow den,
 saxa petunt; piget incepti lucisque, suosque
 And loathe their deed, and loathe the light, as changed they know again
 mutatae agnoscunt excussa pectore Iuno est.
 Their very friends, and Juno now from every heart is cast.
 Sed non idcirco flamma atque incendia uiris 680
 But none the less the flaming rage for ever holdeth fast
 indomitas posuere; udo sub robore uiuit
 With might untamed; the fire lives on within the timbers wet,
 stuppa uomens tardum fumum, lentusque carinas
 The caulking sends forth sluggish smoke, the slow heat teeth doth set
 est uapor et toto descendit corpore pestis,
 Upon the keel; to inmost heart down creeps the fiery bale;
 nec uires heroum infusaque flumina prosunt.
 Nor all the might of mighty men nor rivers poured avail.
 tum pius Aeneas umeris abscindere uestem 685
 Then good Æneas from his back the raiment off him tore,
 auxilioque uocare deos et tendere palmas:
 And called the Gods to aid, and high his palms to heaven upbore:
 'Iuppiter omnipotens, si nondum exosus ad unum

"Great Jove, if not all utterly a hater thou art grown
 Troianos, si quid pietas antiqua labores
 Of Trojan folk, and if thy love of old yet looketh down
 respicit humanos, da flammam euadere classi
 On deeds of men, give to our ships to win from out the flame,
 nunc, pater, et tenuis Teucrum res eripe leto. 690
 O Father, now, and snatch from death the feeble Teucrian name,
 uel tu, quod superest, infesto fulmine morti,
 Or else thrust down the remnant left, if so we merit aught,
 si mereor, demitte tuaque hic obrue dextra.'
 With bolt of death, and with thine hand sweep us away to nought!"
 uix haec ediderat cum effusis imbribus atra
 Scarce had he given forth the word, ere midst outpouring rain,
 tempestas sine more furit tonitruque tremescunt
 The black storm rageth measureless, and earthly height and plain
 ardua terrarum et campi; ruit aethere toto 695
 Shake to the thundering; all the sky casts forth confused flood,
 turbidus imber aqua densisque nigerrimus Austris,
 Most black with gathering of the South: then all the ship-hulls stood
 implenturque super puppes, semusta madescunt
 Fulfilled with water of the heavens; the half-burned oak was drenched,
 robora, restinctus donec uapor omnis et omnes
 Until at last to utmost spark the smouldering fire is quenched,
 quattuor amissis seruatae a peste carinae.
 And all the ships escaped the bane of fiery end save four.
 At pater Aeneas casu concussus acerbo 700
 But, shaken by such bitter hap, Father Æneas bore
 nunc huc ingentis, nunc illuc pectore curas
 This way and that; and turned the cares on all sides in his breast:
 mutabat uersans, Siculisne resideret aruis
 Whether amid Sicilian fields to set him down in rest,
 oblitus fatorum, Italasne capesseret oras.
 Forgetting Fate, or yet to strive for shores of Italy.
 tum senior Nautes, unum Tritonia Pallas
 Then the old Nautes, whom erewhile had Pallas set on high
 quem docuit multaque insignem reddidit arte — 705

By her exceeding plenteous craft and lore that she had taught: —
 haec responsa dabat, uel quae portenderet ira
 She gave him answers; telling him how wrath of God was wrought,
 magna deum uel quae fatorum posceret ordo;
 And how it showed, and what the law of fate would ask and have: — isque his Aenean solatus uocibus infit:
 This man unto Æneas now such words of solace gave:
 ‘nate dea, quo fata trahunt retrahuntque sequamur;
 “O Goddess-born, Fate’s ebb and flow still let us follow on,
 quidquid erit, superanda omnis fortuna ferendo est. 710
 Whate’er shall be, by bearing all must Fortune’s fight be won.
 est tibi Dardanius diuinae stirpis Acestes:
 Dardan Acestes have ye here, sprung of the Godhead’s seed;
 hunc cape consiliis socium et coniunge uolentem,
 Take his goodwill and fellowship to help thee in thy rede.
 huic trade amissis superant qui nauibus et quos
 Give him the crews of those burnt ships; to him let such-like go
 pertaesum magni incepti rerumque tuarum est.
 As faint before thy mighty hope and shifting weal and woe.
 longaeuosque senes ac fessas aequore matres 715
 The mothers weary of the sea, the elders spent with years,
 et quidquid tecum inualidum metuensque pericli est
 And whatsoever feeble is and whatsoever fears,
 delige, et his habeant terris sine moenia fessi;
 Choose out, and in this land of his walls let the weary frame;
 urbem appellabunt permisso nomine Acestam.’
 And they their town by leave of thee shall e’en Acesta name.”
 Talibus incensus dictis senioris amici
 So was he kindled by the speech of that wise ancient friend,
 tum uero in curas animo diducitur omnis; 720
 Yet still down every way of care his thought he needs must send.
 et Nox atra polum bigis subuecta tenebat.
 But now the wain of mirky night was holding middle sky,
 uisa dehinc caelo facies delapsa parentis
 When lo, his father’s image seemed to fall from heaven the high,
 Anchisae subito talis effundere uoces:
 And suddenly Anchises’ lips such words to him poured forth:

'nate, mihi uita quondam, dum uita manebat,
 "O son, that while my life abode more than my life wert worth;
 care magis, nate Iliacis exercite fatis, 725
 O son, well learned in Ilium's fates, hither my ways I take
 imperio Iouis huc uenio, qui classibus ignem
 By Jove's commands, who even now the fiery bane did slake
 depulit, et caelo tandem miseratus ab alto est.
 Amid thy ships, and now at last in heaven hath pitied thee:
 consiliis pare quae nunc pulcherrima Nautes
 Yield thou to elder Nautes' redes; exceeding good they be:
 dat senior; lectos iuuenes, fortissima corda,
 The very flower of all thy folk, the hearts that hardiest are,
 defer in Italiam. gens dura atque aspera cultu 730
 Take thou to Italy; for thee in Latium bideth war
 debellanda tibi Latio est. Ditis tamen ante
 With hardy folk of nurture rude: but first must thou be gone
 infernas accede domos et Auerna per alta
 To nether dwelling-place of Dis: seek thou to meet me, son,
 congressus pete, nate, meos. non me impia namque
 Across Avernus deep: for me the wicked house of hell
 Tartara habent, tristes umbrae, sed amoena piorum
 The dusk unhappy holdeth not; in pleasant place I dwell,
 concilia Elysiumque colo. huc casta Sibylla 735
 Elysium, fellowship of good: there shall the holy Maid,
 nigrarum multo pecudum te sanguine ducet.
 The Sibyl, bring thee; plenteous blood of black-wooled ewes being paid:
 tum genus omne tuum et quae dentur moenia disces.
 There shalt thou learn of all thy race, and gift of fated walls.
 iamque uale; torquet medios Nox umida cursus
 And now farewell: for dewy night from mid way-faring falls,
 et me saeuus equis Oriens adflauit anhelis.'
 The panting steeds of cruel dawn are on me with their breath."
 dixerat et tenuis fugit ceu fumus in auras. 740
 He spake, and midst thin air he fled as smoke-wreath vanisheth.
 Aeneas 'quo deinde ruis? quo proripis?' inquit,
 "Where rushest thou?" Æneas cried: "where hurriest thou again?

‘quem fugis? aut quis te nostris complexibus arcet?’
Whom fleest thou? who driveth thee from these embraces fain?”
haec memorans cinerem et sopitos suscitāt ignis,
So saying, the flame asleep in ash he busied him to wake,
Pergameumque Larem et canae penetralia Vestae
And worshipped with the censer full and holy-kneaded cake
farre pio et plena supplex ueneratur acerra. 745
The sacred Vesta’s shrine and God of Pergamean wall.
Extemplo socios primumque accersit Acesten
Then for his fellows doth he send, Acestes first of all,
et Iouis imperium et cari praecepta parentis
And teacheth them of Jove’s command, and what his sire beloved
edocet et quae nunc animo sententia constet.
Had bidden him, and whitherwise his heart thereto was moved.
haud mora consiliis, nec iussa recusat Acestes:
No tarrying there was therein, Acestes gainsaid nought;
transcribunt urbi matres populumque uolentem 750
They write the mothers on the roll; thither a folk is brought,
deponunt, animos nil magnae laudis egentis.
Full willing hearts, who nothing crave the great reward of fame:
ipsi transtra nouant flammisque ambesa reponunt
But they themselves shape thwarts anew; and timbers gnawed by flame
robora nauigiis, aptant remosque rudentisque,
Make new within their ships again, and oars and rudders fit.
exigui numero, sed bello uiuida uirtus.
A little band it is by tale, but valour lives in it.
interea Aeneas urbem designat aratro 755
Meanwhile Æneas marketh out the city with the plough,
sortiturque domos; hoc Ilium et haec loca Troiam
And, portioning the houses out, bids Troy and Ilium grow:
esse iubet. gaudet regno Troianus Acestes
Therewith Acestes, Trojan king, joys in his lordship fair;
indicitque forum et patribus dat iura uocatis.
Sets forth the court, and giveth laws to fathers gathered there:
tum uicina astris Erycino in uertice sedes
Then on the head of Eryx huge a house that neareth heaven

fundatur Veneri Idaliae, tumuloque sacerdos 760

To Venus of Idalia is reared: a priest is given

ac lucus late sacer additus Anchiseo.

And holy grove wide spread around, where old Anchises lay.

Iamque dies epulata nouem gens omnis, et aris

Now all the folk for nine days' space have made them holyday

factus honos: placidi strauerunt aequora uenti

And worshipped God; and quiet winds have lowly laid the main,
creber et aspirans rursus uocat Auster in altum.

And ever gentle Southern breath woos to the deep again:

exoritur procurua ingens per litora fletus; 765

Then all along the hollow shore ariseth weeping great,

complexi inter se noctemque diemque morantur.

And 'twixt farewells and many a kiss a night and day they wait:

ipsae iam matres, ipsi, quibus aspera quondam

Yea e'en the mothers, yea e'en they to whom so hard and drear

uisa maris facies et non tolerabile numen,

The sea had seemed, a dreadful name they had no heart to bear,
ire uolunt omnemque fugae perferre laborem.

Are fain to go, are fain to take all toil the way may find.

quos bonus Aeneas dictis solatur amicis 770

Whom good Æneas solaceth with friendly words and kind,

et consanguineo lacrimans commendat Acestae.

As to Acestes' kindred heart weeping he giveth them.

tris Eryci uitulos et Tempestatibus agnam

Three calves to Eryx then he bids slay on the ocean's hem;

caedere deinde iubet soluique ex ordine funem.

To wind and weather an ewe lamb; then biddeth cast aloose:

ipse caput tonsae foliis euinctus oliuae

And he himself, begarlanded with olive clipped close,

stans procul in prora pateram tenet, extaque salsos 775

Stands, cup in hand, on furthest prow, and casts upon the brine

proicit in fluctus ac uina liquentia fundit.

The inner meat, and poureth forth the flowing of the wine.

certatim socii feriunt mare et aequora uerrunt; 778

They gather way; springs up astern the fair and following breeze;

prosequitur surgens a puppi uentus euntis. 777

The fellows strive in smiting brine and sweep the level seas.

At Venus interea Neptunum exercita curis 779

But meanwhile Venus, sorely stirred by cares and all unrest,
adloquitur talisque effundit pectore questus:

Hath speech of Neptune, pouring forth complaining from her breast:

‘Iunonis grauis ira neque exsaturabile pectus

“The cruel wrath that Juno bears, and heart insatiate,

cogunt me, Neptune, preces descendere in omnis;

Drive me, O Neptune, prayer-fulfilled upon thy power to wait:

quam nec longa dies pietas nec mitigat ulla,

She softeneth not by lapse of days nor piety’s increase,

nec Iouis imperio fatisque infracta quiescit.

Nor yielding unto Jove and Fate from troubling will she cease.

non media de gente Phrygum exedissee nefandis 785

’Tis not enough to tear away from heart of Phrygian folk

urbem odiis satis est nec poenam traxe per omnem

Their city by her cruel hate; nor with all ills to yoke

reliquias Troiae: cineres atque ossa peremptae

Troy’s remnant; but its ash and bones through death she followeth on.

insequitur. causas tanti sciat illa furoris.

What! doth her own heart know the deed that all this wrath hath won?

ipse mihi nuper Libycis tu testis in undis

Be thou my witness how of late she stirred up suddenly

quam molem subito excierit: maria omnia caelo 790

Wild tumult of the Libyan sea! all waters with the sky

miscuit Aeoliis nequiquam freta procellis,

She mingled, trusting all in vain to storm of Æolus:

in regnis hoc ausa tuis.

This in thy very realm she dared.

per scelus ecce etiam Troianis matribus actis

E’en now mad hearts to Trojan wives by wickedness she gave,

exussit foede puppis et classe subegit

And foully burned his ships; and him with crippled ship-host drave

amissa socios ignotae linquere terrae. 795

To leave his fellow-folk behind upon an outland shore.

quod superest, oro, liceat dare tuta per undas
 I pray thee let the remnant left sail safe thine ocean o'er,
 uela tibi, liceat Laurentem attingere Thybrim,
 And let them come where into sea Laurentian Tiber falls,
 si concessa peto, si dant ea moenia Parcae.'
 If right I ask, and unto these Fate giveth fateful walls."
 tum Saturnius haec domitor maris edidit alti:
 Then Saturn's son, the sea-tamer, gave forth such words as these:
 'fas omne est, Cytherea, meis te fidere regnis, 800
 "'Tis utter right, O Cytherean, to trust thee to my seas,
 unde genus ducis. merui quoque; saepe furores
 Whence thou wert born; and I myself deserve no less; e'en I,
 compressi et rabiem tantam caelique marisque.
 Who oft for thee refrain the rage of maddened sea and sky.
 nec minor in terris, Xanthum Simoentaque testor,
 Nor less upon the earth my care Æneas did embrace;
 Aeneae mihi cura tui. cum Troia Achilles
 Xanthus and Simoïs witness it! — When, following up the chace,
 exanimata sequens impingeret agmina muris, 805
 The all-unheartened host of Troy 'gainst Troy Achilles bore,
 milia multa daret leto, gementque repleti
 And many a thousand gave to death; choked did the rivers roar
 amnes nec reperire uiam atque euoluere posset
 Nor any way might Xanthus find to roll his flood to sea:
 in mare se Xanthus, Pelidae tunc ego forti Æneas then in hollow cloud I caught away, when he
 congressum Aenean nec dis nec uiribus aequis
 Would meet Pelides' might with hands and Gods not strong enow.
 nube caua rapui, cuperem cum uertere ab imo 810
 Yea, that was when from lowest base I wrought to overthrow structa meis manibus periuræ moenia Troiae.
 The walls of that same Troy forsworn my very hands had wrought.
 nunc quoque mens eadem perstat mihi; pelle timores.
 And now cast all thy fear away, my mind hath shifted nought;
 tutus, quos optas, portus accedet Auerni.
 Avernus' haven shall he reach, e'en as thou deemest good,
 unus erit tantum amissum quem gurgite quaeres;

And one alone of all his folk shall seek amidst the flood;

unum pro multis dabitur caput.' 815

One head shall pay for all the rest."

his ubi laeta deae permulsit pectora dictis,

So when these words had brought to peace the Goddess' joyful heart,

iungit equos auro genitor, spumantiaque addit

The Father yokes his steeds with gold, and bridles the wild things

frena feris manibusque omnis effundit habenas.

With o'erfoamed bit, and loose in hand the rein above them flings,

caeruleo per summa levis uolat aequora curru;

And light in coal-blue car he flies o'er topmost of the sea:

subsidunt undae tumidumque sub axe tonanti 820

The waves sink down, the heaped main lays his waters peacefully

sternitur aequor aquis, fugiunt uasto aethere nimbi.

Before the thunder of his wheels; from heaven all cloud-flecks fail.

tum uariae comitum facies, immania cete,

Lo, diverse bodies of his folk; lo, many a mighty whale;

et senior Glauci chorus Inousque Palaemon

And Glaucus' ancient fellowship, Palæmon Ino's son,

Tritonesque citi Phorcique exercitus omnis;

And Tritons swift, and all the host that Phorcus leadeth on;

laeua tenet Thetis et Melite Panopeaque uirgo, 825

Maid Panopea and Melite, Cymodoce the fair,

Nisæe Spioque Thaliaque Cymodoceque.

Nesæa, Spio, and Thalia, with Thetis leftward bear.

Hic patris Aeneae suspensam blanda uicissim

Now to Æneas' overstrained heart the kindly joy and soft

gaudia pertemptant mentem; iubet ocius omnis

Sinks deep: herewith he biddeth men raise all the masts aloft

attolli malos, intendi braccia uelis.

At swiftest, and along the yards to spread the sails to wind:

una omnes fecere pedem pariterque sinistros, 830

So all sheet home together then; then leftward with one mind

nunc dextros soluere sinus; una ardua torquent

They tack; then tack again to right: the yard-horns up in air

cornua detorquentque; ferunt sua flamina classem.

They shift and shift, while kindly winds seaward the ship-host bear.

princeps ante omnis densum Palinurus agebat
But first before all other keels did Palinurus lead
agmen; ad hunc alii cursum contendere iussi.
The close array, and all were charged to have his course in heed.
iamque fere mediam caeli Nox umida metam 835
And now the midmost place of heaven had dewy night drawn nigh,
contigerat, placida laxabant membra quiete
And 'neath the oars on benches hard scattered the shipmen lie,
sub remis fusi per dura sedilia nautae,
Who all the loosened limbs of them to gentle rest had given;
cum levis aetheriis delapsus Somnus ab astris
When lo, the very light-winged Sleep stooped from the stars of heaven,
aera dimouit tenebrosum et dispulit umbras,
Thrusting aside the dusky air and cleaving night atwain:
te, Palinure, petens, tibi somnia tristia portans 840
The sackless Palinure he sought with evil dreams and vain.
insonti; puppique deus consedit in alta
So on the high poop sat the God as Phorbas fashionèd,
Phorbanti similis funditque has ore loquelas:
And as he sat such-like discourse from out his mouth he shed:
'Iaside Palinure, ferunt ipsa aequora classem,
"Iasian Palinure, unasked the waves our ship-host bear;
aequatae spirant aerae, datur hora quieti.
Soft blow the breezes steadily; the hour for rest is here:
pone caput fessosque oculos furare labori. 845
Lay down thine head, steal weary eyes from toil a little space,
ipse ego paulisper pro te tua munera inibo.'
And I will do thy deeds awhile and hold me in thy place."
cui uix attollens Palinurus lumina fatur:
But Palinure with scarce-raised eyes e'en such an answer gave:
'mene salis placidi uultum fluctusque quietos
"To gentle countenance of sea and quiet of the wave
ignorare iubes? mene huic confidere monstro?
Deem'st thou me dull? would'st have me trow in such a monster's truth?
Aenean credam (quid enim?) fallacibus auris 850

And shall I mine Æneas trust to lying breeze forsooth,
 et caeli totiens deceptus fraude sereni?"
 I, fool of peaceful heaven and sea so many times of old?"
 talia dicta dabat, clauumque adfixus et haerens
 So saying to the helm he clung, nor ever left his hold,
 nusquam amittebat oculosque sub astra tenebat.
 And all the while the stars above his eyen toward them drew.
 ecce deus ramum Lethaeo rore madentem
 But lo, the God brought forth a bough wet with Lethean dew,
 uique soporatum Stygia super utraque quassat 855
 And sleepy with the might of Styx, and shook it therewithal
 tempora, cunctantique natantia lumina soluit.
 Over his brow, and loosed his lids delaying still to fall:
 uix primos inopina quies laxauerat artus,
 But scarce in first of stealthy sleep his limbs all loosened lay,
 et super incumbens cum puppis parte reuulsa
 When, weighing on him, did he tear a space of stern away,
 cumque gubernaclo liquidas proiecit in undas
 And rolled him, helm and wrack and all, into the flowing wave
 praecipitem ac socios nequiquam saepe uocantem; 860
 Headlong, and crying oft in vain for fellowship to save:
 ipse uolans tenuis se sustulit ales ad auras.
 Then Sleep himself amid thin air flew, borne upon the wing.
 currit iter tutum non setius aequore classis
 No less the ship-host sails the sea, its safe way following promissisque patris Neptuni interrita fertur.
 Untroubled 'neath the plighted word of Father Neptune's mouth.
 iamque adeo scopulos Sirenum aduecta subibat,
 So to the Sirens' rocks they draw, a dangerous pass forsooth
 difficilis quondam multorumque ossibus albos 865
 In yore agone, now white with bones of many a perished man.
 (tum rauca adsiduo longe sale saxa sonabant),
 Thence ever roared the salt sea now as on the rocks it ran;
 cum pater amisso fluitantem errare magistro
 And there the Father felt the ship fare wild and fitfully,
 sensit, et ipse ratem nocturnis rexit in undis
 Her helmsman lost; so he himself steered o'er the night-tide sea,

multa gemens casuque animum concussus amici:

Sore weeping; for his fellow's end his inmost heart did touch:

'o nimium caelo et pelago confise sereno, 870

"O Palinure, that trowed the sky and soft seas overmuch,
nudus in ignota, Palinure, iacebis harena.'

Now naked on an unknown shore thy resting-place shall be!"

LIBER VI

BOOK VI.

Sic fatur lacrimans, classique immittit habenas
So spake he weeping, and his host let loose from every band,
et tandem Euboicis Cumarum adlabitur oris.
Until at last they draw anigh Cumæ's Euboean strand.
obuertunt pelago proras; tum dente tenaci
They turn the bows from off the main; the toothèd anchors' grip
ancora fundabat nauis et litora curuae
Makes fast the keels; the shore is hid by many a curvèd ship.
praetexunt puppes. iuuenum manus emicat ardens 5
Hot-heart the youthful company leaps on the Westland's shore;
litus in Hesperium; quaerit pars semina flammae
Part falleth on to seek them out the seed of fiery store
abstrusa in uenis silicis, pars densa ferarum
That flint-veins hide; part runneth through the dwellings of the deer,
tecta rapit siluas inuenta que flumina monstrat.
The thicket steads, and each to each the hidden streams they bare.
at pius Aeneas arces quibus altus Apollo
But good Æneas seeks the house where King Apollo bides,
praesidet horrendaeque procul secreta Sibyllae, 10
The mighty den, the secret place set far apart, that hides
antrum immane, petit, magnam cui mentem animumque
The awful Sibyl, whose great soul and heart he seeketh home,
Delius inspirat uates aperitque futura.
The Seer of Delos, showing her the hidden things to come:
iam subeunt Triuiæ lucos atque aurea tecta.
And so the groves of Trivia and golden house they gain.
Daedalus, ut fama est, fugiens Minoia regna
Now Dædalus, as tells the tale, fleeing from Minos' reign,
praepetibus pennis ausus se credere caelo 15
Durst trust himself to heaven on wings swift hastening, and swim
forth
insuetum per iter gelidas enauit ad Arctos,

Along the road ne'er tried before unto the chilly north;
Chalcidicaque leuis tandem super astitit arce.
So light at last o'er Chalcis' towers he hung amid the air,
redditus his primum terris tibi, Phoebe, sacrauit
Then, come adown to earth once more, to thee he hallowed here,
remigium alarum posuitque immania templa.
O Phoebus, all his wingèd oars, and built thee mighty fane:
in foribus letum Androgeo; tum pendere poenas 20
Androgeus' death was on the doors; then paying of the pain
Cecropidae iussi (miserum!) septena quotannis
By those Cecropians; bid, alas, each year to give in turn
corpora natorum; stat ductis sortibus urna.
Seven bodies of their sons; — lo there, the lots drawn from the urn.
contra elata mari respondet Cnosia tellus:
But facing this the Gnosian land draws up amid the sea:
hic crudelis amor tauri suppostaque furto
There is the cruel bull-lust wrought, and there Pasiphaë
Pasiphae mixtumque genus prolesque biformis 25
Embraced by guile: the blended babe is there, the twiformed thing,
Minotaurus inest, Veneris monimenta nefandae,
The Minotaur, that evil sign of Venus' cherishing;
hic labor ille domus et inextricabilis error;
And there the tangled house and toil that ne'er should be undone:
magnum reginae sed enim miseratus amorem
But ruth of Dædalus himself a queen's love-sorrow won,
Daedalus ipse dolos tecti ambagesque resoluit,
And he himself undid the snare and winding wilderment.
caeca regens filo uestigia. tu quoque magnam 30
Guiding the blind feet with the thread. Thou, Icarus, wert blent partem opere in tanto, sineret dolor, Icare, haberes.
Full oft with such a work be sure, if grief forbade it not;
bis conatus erat casus effingere in auro,
But twice he tried to shape in gold the picture of thy lot,
bis patriae cecidere manus. quin protinus omnia
And twice the father's hands fell down. Long had their eyes read o'er
perlegerent oculis, ni iam praemissus Achates

Such matters, but Achates, now, sent on a while before,
 adforet atque una Phoebi Triuiaequae sacerdos, 35
 Was come with that Deïphobe, the Glaucus' child, the maid
 Deiphobe Glauci, fatur quae talia regi:
 Of Phoebus and of Trivia, and such a word she said:
 'non hoc ista sibi tempus spectacula poscit;
 "The hour will have no tarrying o'er fair shows for idle eyes;
 nunc grege de intacto septem mactare iuuenos
 'Twere better from an unyoked herd seven steers to sacrifice,
 praestiterit, totidem lectas ex more bidentis.'
 And e'en so many hosts of ewes in manner due culled out."
 talibus adfata Aeneas (nec sacra morantur 40
 She spake; her holy bidding then the warriors go about,
 iussa uiri) Teucros uocat alta in templa sacerdos.
 Nor tarry: into temple high she calls the Teucrian men,
 Excisum Euboicae latus ingens rupis in antrum,
 Where the huge side of Cumæ's rock is carven in a den,
 quo lati ducunt aditus centum, ostia centum,
 Where are an hundred doors to come, an hundred mouths to go,
 unde ruunt totidem uoces, responsa Sibyllae.
 Whence e'en so many awful sounds, the Sibyl's answers flow.
 uentum erat ad limen, cum uirgo 'poscere fata 45
 But at the threshold cried the maid: "Now is the hour awake
 tempus' ait; 'deus ecce deus!' cui talia fanti
 For asking — Ah, the God, the God!" And as the word she spake
 ante fores subito non uultus, non color unus,
 Within the door, all suddenly her visage and her hue
 non comptae mansere comae; sed pectus anhelum,
 Were changed, and all her sleekèd hair, and gasping breath she drew,
 et rabie fera corda tument, maiorque uideri
 And with the rage her wild heart swelled, and greater was she grown,
 nec mortale sonans, adflata est numine quando 50
 Nor mortal-voiced; for breath of God upon her heart was blown
 iam propiore dei. 'cessas in uota precesque,
 As He drew nigher: "Art thou dumb of vows and prayers, forsooth,
 Tros' ait 'Aenea? cessas? neque enim ante dehiscent
 Trojan Æneas, art thou dumb? unprayed, the mighty mouth

attonitae magna ora domus.' et talia fata
 Of awe-mazed house shall open not." Even such a word she said,
 conticuit. gelidus Teucris per dura cucurrit
 Then hushed: through hardened Teucrian bones swift ran the chilly
 dread,
 ossa tremor, funditque preces rex pectore ab imo: 55
 And straight the king from inmost heart the flood of prayers doth pour:
 'Phoebe, grauis Troiae semper miserate labores,
 "Phoebus, who all the woe of Troy hast pitied evermore,
 Dardana qui Paridis derexti tela manusque
 Who Dardan shaft and Paris' hands in time agone didst speed
 corpus in Aeacidae, magnas obeuntia terras Against Achilles' body there, who me withal didst lead
 tot maria intraui duce te penitusque repostas
 Over the seas that go about so many a mighty land,
 Massylum gentis praetentaque Syrtibus arua: 60
 Through those Massylian folks remote, and length of Syrtes' sand,
 iam tandem Italiae fugientis prendimus oras.
 Till now I hold that Italy that ever drew aback;
 hac Troiana tenuis fuerit fortuna secuta;
 And now perchance a Trojan fate we, even we may lack.
 uos quoque Pergameae iam fas est parcere genti,
 Ye now, O Gods and Goddesses, to whom a stumbling-stone
 dique deaeque omnes, quibus obstitit Ilium et ingens
 Was Ilium in the days of old, and Dardan folk's renown,
 gloria Dardaniae. tuque, o sanctissima uates, 65
 May spare the folk of Pergamus. But thou, O holiest,
 praescia uenturi, da (non indebita posco
 O Maid that knowest things to come, grant thou the Latin rest
 regna meis fatis) Latio considerare Teucros
 To Teucrian men, and Gods of Troy, the straying way-worn powers!
 errantisque deos agitataque numina Troiae.
 For surely now no realm I ask but such as Fate makes ours.
 tum Phoebus et Triviae solido de marmore templum
 To Phoebus and to Trivia then a temple will I raise,
 instituam festosque dies de nomine Phoebi. 70

A marble world; in Phoebus' name will hallow festal days:
te quoque magna manent regnis penetralia nostris:
Thee also in our realm to be full mighty shrines await,
hic ego namque tuas sortis arcanaque fata
There will I set thine holy lots and hidden words of fate
dicta meae genti ponam, lectosque sacrabo,
Said to my folk, and hallow there well-chosen men for thee,
alma, uiros. foliis tantum ne carmina manda,
O Holy One: But give thou not thy songs to leaf of tree,
ne turbata uolent rapidis ludibria uentis; 75
Lest made a sport to hurrying gales confusedly they wend;
ipsa canas oro.' finem dedit ore loquendi.
But sing them thou thyself, I pray!" Therewith his words had end.
At Phoebi nondum patiens immanis in antro
Meanwhile the Seer-maid, not yet tamed to Phoebus, raves about
bacchatur uates, magnum si pectore possit
The cave, still striving from her breast to cast the godhead out;
excussisse deum; tanto magis ille fatigat
But yet the more the mighty God her mouth bewildered wears,
os rabidum, fera corda domans, fingitque premendo. 80
Taming her wild heart, fashioning her soul with weight of fears.
ostia iamque domus patuere ingentia centum
At last the hundred mighty doors fly open, touched of none,
sponte sua uatisque ferunt responsa per auras:
And on the air the answer floats of that foreseeing one:
'o tandem magnis pelagi defuncte periclis
"O Thou, who dangers of the sea hast thoroughly worn away, (sed terrae grauiora manent), in regna Lauini
Abides thee heavier toil of earth: the Dardans on a day
Dardanidae uenient (mitte hanc de pectore curam), 85
Shall come to that Lavinian land, — leave fear thereof afar:
sed non et uenisse uolent. bella, horrida bella,
Yet of their coming shall they rue. Lo, war, war, dreadful war!
et Thybrim multo spumantem sanguine cerno.
And Tiber bearing plenteous blood upon his foaming back.
non Simois tibi nec Xanthus nec Dorica castra
Nor Simoïs there, nor Xanthus' stream, nor Dorian camp shall lack:

defuerint; alius Latio iam partus Achilles,
 Yea, once again in Latin land Achilles is brought forth,
 natus et ipse dea; nec Teucris addita Iuno 90
 God-born no less: nor evermore shall mighty Juno's wrath
 usquam aberit, cum tu supplex in rebus egenis
 Fail Teucrian men. Ah, how shalt thou, fallen on evil days,
 quas gentis Italum aut quas non oraueris urbes!
 To all Italian lands and folks thine hands beseeching raise!
 causa mali tanti coniunx iterum hospita Teucris
 Lo, once again a stranger bride brings woeful days on Troy,
 externique iterum thalami.
 Once more the wedding of a foe.
 tu ne cede malis, sed contra audentior ito, 95
 But thou, yield not to any ill, but set thy face, and wend
 qua tua te Fortuna sinet. uia prima salutis
 The bolder where thy fortune leads; the dawn of perils' end,
 (quod minime reris) Graia pandetur ab urbe.'
 Whence least thou mightest look for it, from Greekish folk shall come."
 Talibus ex adyto dictis Cumaea Sibylla
 Suchwise the Seer of Cumæ sang from out her inner home
 horrendas canit ambages antroque remugit,
 The dreadful double words, wherewith the cavern moans again,
 obscuris uera inuoluens: ea frena furenti 100
 As sooth amid the mirk she winds: Apollo shakes the rein
 concutit et stimulos sub pectore uertit Apollo.
 Over the maddened one, and stirs the strings about her breast;
 ut primum cessit furor et rabida ora quierunt,
 But when her fury lulled awhile and maddened mouth had rest,
 incipit Aeneas heros: 'non ulla laborum,
 Hero Æneas thus began: "No face of any care,
 o uirgo, noua mi facies inopinaue surgit;
 O maiden, can arise on me in any wise unware:
 omnia praecepi atque animo mecum ante peregi. 105
 Yea, all have I forecast; my mind hath worn through everything.
 unum oro: quando hic inferni ianua regis
 One prayer I pray, since this they call the gateway of the King

dicitur et tenebrosa palus Acheronte refuso,
Of Nether-earth, and Acheron's o'erflow this mirky mere:
ire ad conspectum cari genitoris et ora
O let me meet the eyes and mouth of my dead father dear;
contingat; doceas iter et sacra ostia pandas.
O open me the holy gate, and teach me where to go!
illum ego per flammas et mille sequentia tela 110
I bore him on these shoulders once from midmost of the foe,
eripui his umeris medioque ex hoste recepi;
From flame and weapons thousandfold against our goings bent;
ille meum comitatus iter maria omnia mecum
My yoke-fellow upon the road o'er every sea he went,
atque omnis pelagique minas caelique ferebat,
'Gainst every threat of sea and sky a hardy heart he held,
inualidus, uiris ultra sortemque senectae.
Though worn and feeble past decay and feebleness of eld.
quin, ut te supplex peterem et tua limina adirem, 115
Yea, he it was who bade me wend, a suppliant, to thy door,
idem orans mandata dabat. gnatique patrisque,
And seek thee out: O holy one, cast thou thy pity o'er alma, precor, miserere (potes namque omnia, nec te Father and son! All things thou canst, nor yet hath Hecaté nequiquam lucis Hecate praefecit Auernis),
Set thee to rule Avernus' woods an empty Queen to be.
si potuit manis accersere coniugis Orpheus
Yea, Orpheus wrought with Thracian harp and strings of tuneful
might
Threicia fretus cithara fidibusque canoris, 120
To draw away his perished love from midmost of the night.
si fratrem Pollux alterna morte redemit
Yea, Pollux, dying turn for turn, his brother borrowed well, itique reditque uiam totiens. quid Thesea, magnum
And went and came the road full oft — Of Theseus shall I tell?
quid memorem Alciden? et mi genus ab Ioue summo.'
Or great Alcides? Ah, I too from highest Jove am sprung."
Talibus orabat dictis arasque tenebat,
Such were the words he prayed withal and round the altars clung:

cum sic orsa loqui uates: 'sate sanguine diuum, 125

Then she fell speaking: "Man of Troy, from blood of Godhead
grown,

Tros Anchisiade, facilis descensus Auerno:

Anchises' child, Avernus' road is easy faring down;

noctes atque dies patet atri ianua Ditis;

All day and night is open wide the door of Dis the black;

sed reuocare gradum superasque euadere ad auras,

But thence to gain the upper air, and win the footsteps back,

hoc opus, hic labor est. pauci, quos aequus amauit

This is the deed, this is the toil: Some few have had the might,

Iuppiter aut ardens euexit ad aethera uirtus, 130

Beloved by Jove the just, upborne to heaven by valour's light,

dis geniti potuere. tenent media omnia siluae,

The Sons of God. 'Twixt it and us great thicket fills the place

Cocytusque sinu labens circumuenit atro.

That slow Cocytus' mirky folds all round about embrace;

quod si tantus amor menti, si tanta cupido est

But if such love be in thine heart, such yearning in thee lie,

bis Stygios innare lacus, bis nigra uidere

To swim twice o'er the Stygian mere and twice to see with eye

Tartara, et insano iuuat indulgere labori, 135

Black Tartarus, and thou must needs this idle labour win,

accipe quae peragenda prius. latet arbore opaca

Hearken what first there is to do: the dusky tree within

aureus et foliis et lento uimine ramus,

Lurks the gold bough with golden leaves and limber twigs of gold,

Iunoni infernae dictus sacer; hunc tegit omnis

To nether Juno consecrate; this all these woods enfold,

lucus et obscuris claudunt conuallibus umbrae.

Dim shadowy places cover it amid the hollow dale;

sed non ante datur telluris operta subire 140

To come unto the under-world none living may avail

auricomos quam quis decerpserit arbore fetus.

Till he that growth of golden locks from off the tree hath shorn;

hoc sibi pulchra suum ferri Proserpina munus

For this fair Proserpine ordained should evermore be borne

instituit. primo auulso non deficit alter

Her very gift: but, plucked away, still faileth not the thing,
aureus, et simili frondescit uirga metallo.

Another golden stem instead hath leafy tide of spring.

ergo alte uestiga oculis et rite repertum 145

So thoroughly search with eyes: thine hand aright upon it lay
carpe manu; namque ipse uolens facilisque sequetur,

When thou hast found: for easily 'twill yield and come away
si te fata uocant; aliter non uiribus ullis

If the Fates call thee: otherwise no might may overbear
uincere nec duro poteris conuellere ferro.

Its will, nor with the hardened steel the marvel mayst thou shear.
praeterea iacet exanimus tibi corpus amici

— Ah! further, — of thy perished friend as yet thou nothing
know'st,

(heu nescis) totamque incestat funere classem, 150

Whose body lying dead and cold defileth all thine host,
dum consulta petis nostroque in limine pendes.

While thou beseechest answering words, and hankest on our door:
sedibus hunc refer ante suis et conde sepulcro.

Go, bring him to his own abode and heap the grave mound o'er;
duc nigras pecudes; ea prima piacula sunt.

Bring forth the black-wooled ewes to be first bringing back of grace:
sic demum lucos Stygis et regna inuia uiuis

So shalt thou see the Stygian groves, so shalt thou see the place
aspicies.' dixit, pressoque obmutuit ore. 155

That hath no road for living men." So hushed her mouth shut close:
Aeneas maesto defixus lumina uultu

But sad-faced and with downcast eyes therefrom Æneas goes,
ingreditur linquens antrum, caecosque uolutat

And leaves the cave, still turning o'er those coming things, so dim,
euentus animo secum. cui fidus Achates

So dark to see. Achates fares nigh fellow unto him,
it comes et paribus curis uestigia figit.

And ever 'neath like load of cares he lets his footsteps fall:
multa inter sese uario sermone serebant, 160

And many diverse words they cast each unto each withal,

quem socium exanimum uates, quod corpus humandum
What was the dead friend and the grave whereof the seer did teach.
diceret. atque illi Misenum in litore sicco,
But when they gat them down at last upon the barren beach,
ut uenere, uident indigna morte peremptum,
They saw Misenus lying dead by death but lightly earned;
Misenum Aeoliden, quo non praestantior alter
Misenus, son of Æolus; no man more nobly learned
aere ciere uiros Martemque accendere cantu. 165
In waking up the war with brass and singing Mars alight.
Hectoris hic magni fuerat comes, Hectora circum
Great Hector's fellow was he erst, with Hector through the fight
et lituo pugnans insignis obibat et hasta.
He thrust, by horn made glorious, made glorious by the spear.
postquam illum uita uictor spoliauit Achilles,
But when from Hector life and all Achilles' hand did tear,
Dardanio Aeneae sese fortissimus heros
Dardan Æneas' man became that mightiest under shield,
addiderat socium, non inferiora secutus. 170
Nor unto any worser lord his fellowship would yield.
sed tum, forte caua dum personat aequora concha,
Now while by chance through hollow shell he blew across the sea,
demens, et cantu uocat in certamina diuos,
And witless called the very Gods his singing-foes to be,
aemulus exceptum Triton, si credere dignum est,
The envious Triton caught him up, if ye the tale may trow,
inter saxa uirum spumosa immerserat unda.
And sank the hero 'twixt the rocks in foaming waters' flow.
ergo omnes magno circum clamore fremebant, 175
Wherefore about him weeping sore were gathered all the men,
praecipue pius Aeneas. tum iussa Sibyllae,
And good Æneas chief of all: the Sibyl's bidding then
haud mora, festinant flentes aramque sepulcri
Weeping they speed, and loiter not, but heap the tree-boughs high
congerere arboribus caeloque educere certant.
Upon the altar of the dead to raise it to the sky:
itur in antiquam siluam, stabula alta ferarum;

Then to the ancient wood they fare, high dwelling of wild things;
procumbunt piceae, sonat icta securibus ilex 180

They fell the pine, and 'neath the axe the smitten holm-oak rings;
fraxineaeque trabes cuneis et fissile robur

With wedge they cleave the ashen logs, and knitted oaken bole,
scinditur, aduoluunt ingentis montibus ornos.

Full fain to split; and mighty elms down from the mountains roll.

Nec non Aeneas opera inter talia primus

Amid the work Æneas is, who hearteneth on his folk,
hortatur socios paribusque accingitur armis.

As with such very tools as they he girds him for the stroke;

atque haec ipse suo tristi cum corde uolutat 185

But through the sorrow of his heart such thought as this there strays,
aspectans siluam immensam, et sic forte precatur:

And looking toward the waste of wood such word as this he prays:

'si nunc se nobis ille aureus arbore ramus

"O if that very golden bough would show upon the tree,
ostendat nemore in tanto! quando omnia uere

In such a thicket and so great; since all she told of thee,

heu nimium de te uates, Misene, locuta est.'

The seer-maid, O Misenus lost, was true and overtrue!"

uix ea fatus erat, geminae cum forte columbae 190

But scarcely had he spoken thus, when lo, from heaven there flew
ipsa sub ora uiri caelo uenere uolantes,

Two doves before his very eyes, who settled fluttering

et uiridi sedere solo. tum maximus heros

On the green grass: and therewithal that mightiest battle-king

maternas agnouit auis laetusque precatur:

Knoweth his mother's birds new-come, and joyful poureth prayer:

'este duces, o, si qua uia est, cursumque per auras

"O, if a way there be at all, lead ye amid the air,

derigite in lucos ubi pinguem diues opacat 195

Lead on unto the thicket place where o'er the wealthy soil

ramus humum. tuque, o, dubiis ne defice rebus,

The rich bough casteth shadow down! Fail not my eyeless toil,

diua parens.' sic effatus uestigia pressit

O Goddess-mother!" So he saith, and stays his feet to heed

obseruans quae signa ferant, quo tendere pergant.

What token they may bring to him, and whitherward they speed.

pascentes illae tantum prodire uolando

So on they flutter pasturing, with such a space between,

quantum acie possent oculi seruare sequentum. 200

As they by eyes of following folk may scantily well be seen;

inde ubi uenere ad fauces graue olentis Auerni,

But when Avernus' jaws at last, the noisome place, they reach,

tollunt se celeres liquidumque per aera lapsae

They rise aloft and skim the air, and settle each by each

sedibus optatis gemina super arbore sidunt,

Upon the very wished-for place, yea high amid the tree,

discolor unde auri per ramos aura refulsit.

Where the changed light through twigs of gold shines forth diversedly;

quale solet siluis brumali frigore uiscum 205

As in the woods mid winter's chill puts forth the mistletoe,

fronde uirere noua, quod non sua seminat arbos,

And bloometh with a leafage strange his own tree ne'er did sow,

et croceo fetu teretis circumdare truncos,

And with his yellow children hath the rounded trunk in hold,

talis erat species auri frondentis opaca

So in the dusky holm-oak seemed that bough of leafy gold,

ilice, sic leni crepitabat brattea uento.

As through the tinkling shaken foil the gentle wind went by:

corripit Aeneas extemplo audisque refringit 210

Then straight Æneas caught and culled the tough stem greedily,

cunctantem, et uatis portat sub tecta Sibyllae.

And to the Sibyl's dwelling-place the gift in hand he bore.

Nec minus interea Misenum in litore Teucri

Nor less meanwhile the Teucrians weep Misenus on the shore,

flebant et cineri ingrato suprema ferebant.

And do last service to the dead that hath no thanks to pay.

principio pinguem taedis et robore secto

And first fat fagots of the fir and oaken logs they lay,

ingentem struxere pyram, cui frondibus atris 215

And pile a mighty bale and rich, and weave the dusk-leaved trees

intexunt latera et feralis ante cupressos
Between its sides, and set before the funeral cypresses,
constituunt, decorantque super fulgentibus armis.
And over all in seemly wise the gleaming weapons pile:
pars calidos latices et aena undantia flammis
But some speed fire bewavèd brass and water's warmth meanwhile,
expediunt, corpusque lauant frigentis et unguunt.
And wash all o'er and sleek with oil the cold corpse of the dead:
fit gemitus. tum membra toro defleta reponunt 220
Goes up the wail; the limbs bewept they streak upon the bed,
purpureasque super uestis, uelamina nota,
And cast thereon the purple cloths, the well-known noble gear.
coniciunt. pars ingenti subiere feretro,
Then some of them, they shoulder up the mighty-fashioned bier,
triste ministerium, et subiectam more parentum
Sad service! and put forth the torch with faces from him turned,
auersi tenuere facem. congesta cremantur
In fashion of the fathers old: there the heaped offerings burned,
turea dona, dapes, fuso crateres oliuo. 225
The frankincense, the dainty meats, the bowls o'erflowed with oil.
postquam conlapsi cineres et flamma quieuit,
But when the ashes were sunk down and fire had rest from toil,
reliquias uino et bibulam lauere fauillam,
The relics and the thirsty ash with unmixed wine they wet.
ossaque lecta cado textit Corynaeus aeno.
Then the gleaned bones in brazen urn doth Corynaeus set,
idem ter socios pura circumtulit unda
Who thrice about the gathered folk the stainless water bore.
spargens rore leui et ramo felicis oliuae, 230
As from the fruitful olive-bough light dew he sprinkled o'er,
lustrauitque uiros dixitque nouissima uerba.
And cleansed the men, and spake withal last farewell to the dead.
at pius Aeneas ingenti mole sepulcrum
But good Æneas raised a tomb, a mound huge fashioned,
imponit suaque arma uiro remumque tubamque
And laid thereon the hero's arms and oar and battle-horn,
monte sub aerio, qui nunc Misenus ab illo

Beneath an airy hill that thence Misenus' name hath borne,
 dicitur aeternumque tenet per saecula nomen. 235
 And still shall bear it, not to die till time hath faded out.
 His actis propere exsequitur praecepta Sibyllae.
 This done, those deeds the Sibyl bade he setteth swift about:
 spelunca alta fuit uastoque immanis hiatu,
 A deep den is there, pebble-piled, with mouth that gapeth wide;
 scrupea, tuta lacu nigro nemorumque tenebris,
 Black mere and thicket shadowy-mirk the secret of it hide.
 quam super haud ullae poterant impune uolantes
 And over it no fowl there is may wend upon the wing
 tendere iter pennis: talis sese halitus atris 240
 And 'scape the bane; its blackened jaws bring forth such venoming.
 faucibus effundens supera ad conuexa ferebat.
 Such is the breath it bears aloft unto the hollow heaven;
 [unde locum Grai dixerunt nomine Aornum.]
 So to the place the Greekish folk have name of Fowl-less given.
 quattuor hic primum nigrantis terga iuuenos
 Here, first of all, four black-skinned steers the priestess sets in line,
 constituit frontique inuergit uina sacerdos,
 And on the foreheads of all these out-pours the bowl of wine.
 et summas carpens media inter cornua saetas 245
 Then 'twixt the horns she culleth out the topmost of the hair,
 ignibus imponit sacris, libamina prima,
 And lays it on the holy fire, the first-fruits offered there,
 uoce uocans Hecaten caeloque Ereboque potentem.
 And cries aloud on Hecat , of might in heaven and hell;
 supponunt alii cultros tepidumque cruorem
 While others lay the knife to throat and catch the blood that fell
 succipiunt pateris. ipse atri uelleris agnam
 Warm in the bowls:  neas then an ewe-lamb black of fleece Aeneas matri Eumenidum magna que sorori 250
 Smites down with sword to her that bore the dread Eumenides,
 ense ferit, sterilemque tibi, Proserpina, uaccam;
 And her great sister; and a cow yet barren slays aright
 tum Stygio regi nocturnas incohat aras
 To thee, O Proserpine, and rears the altars of the night

et solida imponit taurorum uiscera flammis,
Unto the Stygian King, and lays whole bulls upon the flame,
pingue super oleum fundens ardentibus extis.
Pouring rich oil upon the flesh that rush of fire o'ercame.
ecce autem primi sub limina solis et ortus 255
But now, when sunrise is at hand, and dawning of the day,
sub pedibus mugire solum et iuga coepta moueri
The earth falls moaning 'neath their feet, the wooded ridges sway,
siluarum, uisaeque canes ululare per umbram
And dogs seem howling through the dusk as now she drew anear
aduentante dea. 'procul, o procul este, profani,'
The Goddess. "O be far away, ye unclean!" cries the seer.
conclamat uates, 'totoque absistite luco;
'Be far away! ah, get ye gone from all the holy wood!
tuque inuade uiam uaginaque eripe ferrum: 260
But thou, Æneas, draw thy steel and take thee to the road;
nunc animis opus, Aenea, nunc pectore firmo.'
Now needeth all thine hardihood and steadfast heart and brave."
tantum effata furens antro se immisit aperto;
She spake, and wildly cast herself amidst the hollow cave,
ille ducem haud timidis uadentem passibus aequat.
But close upon her fearless feet Æneas followeth.
Di, quibus imperium est animarum, umbraeque silentes
O Gods, who rule the ghosts of men, O silent shades of death,
et Chaos et Phlegethon, loca nocte tacentia late, 265
Chaos and Phlegethon, hushed lands that lie beneath the night!
sit mihi fas audita loqui, sit numine uestro
Let me speak now, for I have heard: O aid me with your might
pandere res alta terra et caligine mersas.
To open things deep sunk in earth, and mid the darkness blent.
Ibant obscuri sola sub nocte per umbram
All dim amid the lonely night on through the dusk they went,
perque domos Ditis uacuas et inania regna:
On through the empty house of Dis, the land of nought at all.
quale per incertam lunam sub luce maligna 270
E'en as beneath the doubtful moon, when niggard light doth fall
est iter in siluis, ubi caelum condidit umbra

Upon some way amid the woods, when God hath hidden heaven,
Iuppiter, et rebus nox abstulit atra colorem.

And black night from the things of earth the colours dear hath driven.

uestibulum ante ipsum primisque in faucibus Orci

Lo, in the first of Orcus' jaws, close to the doorway side,

Luctus et ultrices posuere cubilia Curae,

The Sorrows and Avenging Griefs have set their beds to bide;

pallentesque habitant Morbi tristicque Senectus, 275

There the pale kin of Sickness dwells, and Eld, the woeful thing,

et Metus et malesuada Fames ac turpis Egestas,

And Fear, and squalid-fashioned Lack, and witless Hungering,

terribiles uisu formae, Letumque Labosque;

Shapes terrible to see with eye; and Toil of Men, and Death,

tum consanguineus Leti Sopor et mala mentis

And Sleep, Death's brother, and the Lust of Soul that sickeneth:

Gaudia, mortiferumque aduerso in limine Bellum,

And War, the death-bearer, was set full in the threshold's way,

ferreique Eumenidum thalami et Discordia demens 280

And those Well-willers' iron beds: there heartless Discord lay,

uipereum crinem uittis innexa cruentis.

Whose viper-breeding hair about was bloody-filleted.

in medio ramos annosaque bracchia pandit

But in the midst a mighty elm, dusk as the night, outspread

ulmus opaca, ingens, quam sedem Somnia uulgo

Its immemorial boughs and limbs, where lying dreams there lurk,

uana tenere ferunt, foliisque sub omnibus haerent.

As tells the tale, still clinging close 'neath every leaf-side mirk.

multaque praeterea uariarum monstra ferarum, 285

Withal most wondrous, many-shaped are all the wood-beasts there;

Centauri in foribus stabulant Scyllaeque bifformes

The Centaurs stable by the porch, and twi-shaped Scyllas fare,

et centumgeminus Briareus ac belua Lernae

And hundred-folded Briareus, and Lerna's Worm of dread

horrendum stridens, flammisque armata Chimaera,

Fell hissing; and Chimæra's length and fire-behelmèd head,

Gorgones Harpyiaequae et forma tricornis umbrae.

Gorgons and Harpies, and the shape of that three-bodied Shade.

corripit hic subita trepidus formidine ferrum 290

Then smitten by a sudden fear Æneas caught his blade,

Aeneas strictamque aciem uenientibus offert,

And turned the naked point and edge against their drawing nigh;

et ni docta comes tenuis sine corpore uitas

And but for her wise word that these were thin lives flitting by

admoneat uolitare caua sub imagine formae,

All bodiless, and wrapped about in hollow shape and vain,

inruat et frustra ferro diuerberet umbras.

With idle sword had he set on to cleave the ghosts atwain.

Hinc uia Tartarei quae fert Acherontis ad undas. 295

To Acheron of Tartarus from hence the road doth go,

turbidus hic caeno uastaque uoragine gurges

That mire-bemingled, whirling wild, rolls on his desert flow,

aestuat atque omnem Cocyto eructat harenam.

And all amid Cocytus' flood casteth his world of sand.

portitor has horrendus aquas et flumina seruat

This flood and river's ferrying doth Charon take in hand,

terribili squalore Charon, cui plurima mento

Dread in his squalor: on his chin untrimmed the hoar hair lies

canities inculta iacet, stant lumina flamma, 300

Most plenteous; and unchanging flame bides in his staring eyes:

sordidus ex umeris nodo dependet amictus.

Down from his shoulders hangs his gear in filthy knot upknot;

ipse ratem conto subigit uelisque ministrat

And he himself poles on his ship, and tends the sails of it,

et ferruginea subuectat corpora cumba,

And crawls with load of bodies lost in bark all iron-grey,

iam senior, sed cruda deo uiridisque senectus.

Grown old by now: but fresh and green is godhead's latter day.

huc omnis turba ad ripas effusa ruebat, 305

Down thither rushed a mighty crowd, unto the flood-side borne;

matres atque uiri defunctaque corpora uita

Mothers and men, and bodies there with all the life outworn

magnanimum heroum, pueri innuptaeque puellae,

Of great-souled heroes; many a boy and never-wedded maid,

impositique rogis iuuenes ante ora parentum:

And youths before their fathers' eyes upon the death-bale laid:
quam multa in siluis autumn frigore primo
As many as the leaves fall down in first of autumn cold;
lapsa cadunt folia, aut ad terram gurgite ab alto 310
As many as the gathered fowl press on to field and fold,
quam multae glomerantur aues, ubi frigidus annus
From off the weltering ocean-flood, when the late year and chill
trans pontum fugat et terris immittit apricis.
Hath driven them across the sea the sunny lands to fill.
stabant orantes primi transmittere cursum
There stood the first and prayed him hard to waft their bodies o'er,
tendebantque manus ripae ulterioris amore.
With hands stretched out for utter love of that far-lying shore.
nauita sed tristis nunc hos nunc accipit illos, 315
But that grim sailor now takes these, now those from out the band,
ast alios longe summotos arcet harena.
While all the others far away he thrusteth from the sand.
Aeneas miratus enim motusque tumultu
Æneas wondered at the press, and moved thereby he spoke:
'dic,' ait, 'o uirgo, quid uult concursus ad amnem?
"Say, Maid, what means this river-side, and gathering of the folk?
quidue petunt animae? uel quo discrimine ripas
What seek the souls, and why must some depart the river's rim,
hae linquunt, illae remis uada liuida uerrunt?" 320
While others with the sweep of oars the leaden waters skim?"
olli sic breuiter fata est longaeua sacerdos:
Thereon the ancient Maid of Days in few words answered thus:
'Anchisa generate, deum certissima proles,
"Anchises' seed, thou very child of Godhead glorious,
Cocyti stagna alta uides Stygiamque paludem,
Thou seest the deep Cocytus' pools, thou seest the Stygian mere,
di cuius iurare timent et fallere numen.
By whose might Gods will take the oath, and all forswearing fear:
haec omnis, quam cernis, inops inhumataque turba est; 325
But all the wretched crowd thou seest are they that lack a grave,
portitor ille Charon; hi, quos uehit unda, sepulti.
And Charon is the ferryman: those borne across the wave

nec ripas datur horrendas et rauca fluenta
 Are buried: none may ever cross the awful roaring road
 transportare prius quam sedibus ossa quierunt.
 Until their bones are laid at rest within their last abode.
 centum errant annos uolitantque haec litora circum;
 An hundred years they stray about and wander round the shore,
 tum demum admissi stagna exoptata reuisunt.’ 330
 Then they at last have grace to gain the pools desired so sore.”
 constitit Anchisa satus et uestigia pressit
 There tarried then Anchises’ child and stayed awhile his feet,
 multa putans sortemque animo miseratus iniquam.
 Mid many thoughts, and sore at heart, for such a doom unmeet:
 cernit ibi maestos et mortis honore carentis
 And there he saw all sorrowful, without the death-dues dead,
 Leucaspim et Lyciae ductorem classis Oronten, Leucaspis, and Orontes, he that Lycian ship-host led;
 quos simul a Troia uentosa per aequora uectos 335
 Whom, borne from Troy o’er windy plain, the South wind utterly
 obruit Auster, aqua inuoluens nauemque uirosque.
 O’erwhelming, sank him, ships and men, in swallow of the sea.
 Ecce gubernator sese Palinurus agebat,
 And lo ye now, where Palinure the helmsman draweth nigh,
 qui Libyco nuper cursu, dum sidera seruat,
 Who lately on the Libyan sea, noting the starry sky,
 exciderat puppi mediis effusus in undis.
 Fell from the high poop headlong down mid wavy waters cast.
 hunc ubi uix multa maestum cognouit in umbra, 340
 His sad face through the plenteous dusk Æneas knew at last,
 sic prior adloquitur: ‘quis te, Palinure, deorum
 And spake: “What God, O Palinure, did snatch thee so away
 eripuit nobis medioque sub aequore mersit?
 From us thy friends and drown thee dead amidst the watery way?
 dic age. namque mihi, fallax haud ante repertus,
 Speak out! for Seer Apollo, found no guileful prophet erst,
 hoc uno responso animum delusit Apollo,
 By this one answer in my soul a lying hope hath nursed;
 qui fore te ponto incolumem finisque canebat 345

Who sang of thee safe from the deep and gaining field and fold
uenturum Ausonios. en haec promissa fides est?’

Of fair Ausonia: suchwise he his plighted word doth hold!”

ille autem: ‘neque te Phoebi cortina fefellit,

The other spake: “Apollo’s shrine in nowise lied to thee,
dux Anchisiade, nec me deus aequore mersit.

King of Anchises, and no God hath drowned me in the sea:
namque gubernaculum multa ui forte reuulsum,

But while I clung unto the helm, its guard ordained of right,
cui datus haerebam custos cursusque regebam, 350

And steered thee on, I chanced to fall, and so by very might
praecipitans traxi mecum. maria aspera iuro

Seaward I dragged it down with me. By the rough seas I swear
non ullum pro me tantum cepisse timorem,

My heart, for any hap of mine, had no so great a fear
quam tua ne spoliata armis, excussa magistro,

As for thy ship; lest, rudderless, its master from it torn,
deficeret tantis nauis surgentibus undis.

Amid so great o’ertoppling seas it yet might fail forlorn.

tris Notus hibernas immensa per aequora noctes 355

Three nights of storm I drifted on, ‘neath wind and water’s might,
uexit me uiolentus aqua; uix lumine quarto

Over the sea-plain measureless; but with the fourth day’s light
prospexi Italiam summa sublimis ab unda.

There saw I Italy rise up from welter of the wave.
paulatim adnabam terrae; iam tuta tenebam,

Then slow I swam unto the land, that me well-nigh did save,
ni gens crudelis madida cum ueste grauatum

But fell the cruel folk on me, heavy with raiment wet,
prensantemque uncis manibus capita aspera montis 360

And striving with my hookèd hands hold on the rocks to get:
ferro inuasisset praedamque ignara putasset.

The fools, they took me for a prey, and steel against me bore.
nunc me fluctus habet uersantque in litore uenti.

Now the waves have me, and the winds on sea-beach roll me o’er.
quod te per caeli iucundum lumen et auras,

But by the breath of heaven above, by daylight’s joyous ways,

per genitorem oro, per spes surgentis Iuli,
By thine own father, by the hope of young Iulus' days,
eripe me his, inuicte, malis: aut tu mihi terram 365
Snatch me, O dauntless, from these woes, and o'er me cast the earth!
inice, namque potes, portusque require Velinos;
As well thou may'st when thou once more hast gained the Veline firth.

aut tu, si qua uia est, si quam tibi diua creatrix
Or if a way there be, if way thy Goddess-mother show, —
ostendit (neque enim, credo, sine numine diuum
For not without the will of Gods meseemeth wouldst thou go
flumina tanta paras Stygiamque innare paludem), O'er so great floods, or have a mind to swim the Stygian mere, —
da dextram misero et tecum me tolle per undas, 370
Then give thine hand, and o'er the wave me woeful with thee bear,
sedibus ut saltem placidis in morte quiescam.'

That I at least in quiet place may rest when I am dead."

talìa fatus erat coepit cum talìa uates:

So spake he, but the priestess straight such word unto him said:

'unde haec, o Palinure, tibi tam dira cupido?

"O Palinure, what godless mind hath gotten hold of thee,

tu Stygias inhumatus aquas amnemque seuerum

That thou the grim Well-willers' stream and Stygian flood wouldst see

Eumenidum aspicias, ripamue iniussus adibis? 375

Unburied, and unbidden still the brim wilt draw anear?

desine fata deum flecti sperare precando,

Hope not the Fates of very God to change by any prayer.

sed cape dicta memor, duri solacia casus.

But take this memory of my words to soothe thy wretched case:

nam tua finitimi, longe lateque per urbes

Through all their cities far and wide the people of the place,

prodigiis acti caelestibus, ossa piabunt

Driven by mighty signs from heaven, thy bones shall expiate

et statuent tumulum et tumulo sollemnia mittent, 380

And raise thee tomb, and year by year with worship on thee wait;

aeternumque locus Palinuri nomen habebit.'

And there the name of Palinure shall dwell eternally.”

his dictis curae emotae pulsusque parumper

So at that word his trouble lulled, his grief of heart passed by,
corde dolor tristi; gaudet cognomine terra.

A little while he joyed to think of land that bore his name.

Ergo iter inceptum peragunt fluuioque propinquant.

So forth upon their way they went and toward the river came;
nauita quos iam inde ut Stygia prospexit ab unda 385

But when from Stygian wave their path the shipman’s gaze did meet,
per tacitum nemus ire pedemque aduertere ripae,

As through the dead hush of the grove shoreward they turned their feet,

sic prior adgreditur dictis atque increpat ultro:

He fell upon them first with words and unbid chided them:

‘quisquis es, armatus qui nostra ad flumina tendis,

“Whoe’er ye be who come in arms unto our river’s hem,

fare age, quid uenias, iam istinc et comprime gressum.

Say what ye be! yea, speak from thence and stay your steps forthright!

umbrarum hic locus est, somni noctisque soporae: 390

This is the very place of shades, and sleep, and sleepful night;
corpora uiua nefas Stygia uectare carina.

And living bodies am I banned in Stygian keel to bear.

nec uero Alciden me sum laetatus euntem

Nor soothly did I gain a joy, giving Alcides fare,

accepisse lacu, nec Thesea Pirithoumque,

Or ferrying of Pirithoüs and Theseus time ago,

dis quamquam geniti atque inuicti uiribus essent.

Though come of God they were and matched in valiancy of none:

Tartareum ille manu custodem in uincla petiuit 395

He sought the guard of Tartarus chains on his limbs to lay,
ipsius a solio regis traxitque trementem;

And from the King’s own seat he dragged the quaking beast away:

hi dominam Ditis thalamo deducere adorti.’

Those strove to carry off the Queen from great Dis’ very bed.”

quae contra breuiter fata est Amphrysia uates:

The Amphrysian prophet answering, few words unto him said:

‘nullae hic insidiae tales (absiste moueri),

“But here are no such guiles as this, so let thy wrath go by:

nec uim tela ferunt; licet ingens ianitor antro 400

Our weapons bear no war; for us still shall the door-ward lie

aeternum latrans exsanguis terreat umbras,

And bark in den, and fright the ghosts, the bloodless, evermore:

casta licet patrui seruet Proserpina limen.

Nor shall chaste Proserpine for us pass through her kinsman’s door:

Troius Aeneas, pietate insignis et armis,

Trojan Æneas, great in arms and great in godly grace,

ad genitorem imas Erebi descendit ad umbras.

Goes down through dark of Erebus to see his father’s face.

si te nulla mouet tantae pietatis imago, 405

But if such guise of piety may move thine heart no whit,

at ramum hunc’ (aperit ramum qui ueste latebat)

At least this bough “ — (bared from her weed therewith she showeth it) —

‘agnoscas.’ tumida ex ira tum corda residunt;

“Know ye!” Then in his swelling heart adown the anger sank,

nec plura his. ille admirans uenerabile donum

Nor spake he more; but wondering at that gift a God might thank,

fatalis uirgae longo post tempore uisum

The fateful stem, now seen once more so long a time worn by,

caeruleam aduertit puppim ripaeque propinquat. 410

He turned about his coal-blue keel and drew the bank anigh

inde alias animas, quae per iuga longa sedebant,

The souls upon the long thwarts set therewith he thrusteth out,

deturbat laxatque foros; simul accipit alueo

And clears the gangway, and withal takes in his hollow boat

ingentem Aenean. gemuit sub pondere cumba

The huge Æneas, ‘neath whose weight the seamed boat groans and creaks,

sutilis et multam accepit rimosa paludem.

And plenteous water of the mere lets in at many leaks.

tandem trans fluuium incolumis uatemque uirumque 415

At last the Hero and the Maid safe o’er the watery way

informi limo glaucaque exponit in ulua.

He leaveth on the ugly mire and sedge of sorry grey.
 Cerberus haec ingens latratu regna trifauci
 The three-mouthed bark of Cerberus here filleth all the place,
 personat aduerso recubans immanis in antro.
 As huge he lieth in a den that hath them full in face:
 cui uates horrere uidens iam colla colubris
 But when the adders she beheld upon his crest upborne,
 melle soporatam et medicatis frugibus offam 420
 A sleepy morsel honey-steeped, and blent of wizards' corn,
 obicit. ille fame rabida tria guttura pandens
 She cast him: then his threefold throat, all wild with hunger's lack,
 corripit obiectam, atque immania terga resoluit
 He opened wide, and caught at it, and sank his monstrous back,
 fusus humi totoque ingens extenditur antro.
 And there he lay upon the earth enormous through the cave.
 occupat Aeneas aditum custode sepulto
 Æneas caught upon the pass the door-ward's slumber gave,
 euaditque celer ripam inremeabilis undae. 425
 And fled the bank of that sad stream no man may pass again.
 Continuo auditae uoces uagitus et ingens
 And many sounds they heard therewith, a wailing vast and vain;
 infantumque animae flentes, in limine primo
 For weeping souls of speechless babes round the first threshold lay,
 quos dulcis uitae exsortis et ab ubere raptos
 Whom, without share of life's delight, snatched from the breast away,
 abstulit atra dies et funere mersit acerbo;
 The black day hurried off, and all in bitter ending hid.
 hos iuxta falso damnati crimine mortis. 430
 And next were those condemned to die for deed they never did:
 nec uero hae sine sorte datae, sine iudice, sedes:
 For neither doom nor judge nor house may any lack in death:
 quaesitor Minos urnam mouet; ille silentum
 The seeker Minos shakes the urn, and ever summoneth
 consiliumque uocat uitasque et crimina discit.
 The hushed-ones' court, and learns men's lives and what against them stands.

proxima deinde tenent maesti loca, qui sibi letum
 The next place is of woeful ones, who sackless, with their hands
 insontes peperere manu lucemque perosi 435
 Compassed their death, and weary-sick of light without avail
 proiecere animas. quam uellent aethere in alto
 Cast life away; but now how fain to bear the poor man's bale
 nunc et pauperiem et duros perferre labores!
 Beneath the heaven, the uttermost of weary toil to bear!
 fas obstat, tristisque palus inamabilis undae
 But law forbiddeth: the sad wave of that unlovely mere alligat et nouies Styx interfusa coerct.
 Is changeless bond; and ninefold Styx compelleth to abide.
 nec procul hinc partem fusi monstrantur in omnem 440
 Nor far from thence behold the meads far spread on every side,
 Lugentes campi; sic illos nomine dicunt.
 The Mourning Meads — in tale have they such very name and sign.
 hic quos durus amor crudeli tabe peredit
 There those whom hard love ate away with cruel wasting pine
 secreti celant calles et myrtea circum
 Are hidden in the lonely paths with myrtle-groves about,
 silua tegit; curae non ipsa in morte relinquunt.
 Nor in the very death itself may wear their trouble out:
 his Phaedram Procrinque locis maestamque Eriphylen 445
 Phædra he saw, Procris he saw, and Eriphyle sad.
 crudelis nati monstrantem uulnera cernit,
 Baring that cruel offspring's wound her loving body had:
 Euadnenque et Pasiphaen; his Laodamia
 Evadne and Pasiphaë, Laodamia there
 it comes et iuuenis quondam, nunc femina, Caeneus
 He saw, and Cænis, once a youth and then a maiden fair,
 rursus et in ueterem fato reuoluta figuram.
 And shifted by the deed of fate to his old shape again.
 inter quas Phoenissa recens a uulnere Dido 450
 Midst whom Phoenician Dido now, fresh from the iron bane,
 errabat silua in magna; quam Troius heros
 Went wandering in the mighty wood: and when the Trojan man
 ut primum iuxta stetit agnouitque per umbras

First dimly knew her standing by amid the glimmer wan
obscuram, qualem primo qui surgere mense

— E'en as in earliest of the month one sees the moon arise,
aut uidet aut uidisse putat per nubila lunam,

Or seems to see her at the least in cloudy drift of skies —
demisit lacrimas dulcique adfatus amore est: 455

He spake, and let the tears fall down by all love's sweetness stirred:
'infelix Dido, uerus mihi nuntius ergo

"Unhappy Dido, was it true, that bitter following word,
uenerat exstinctam ferroque extrema secutam?

That thou wert dead, by sword hadst sought the utter end of all?
funeris heu tibi causa fui? per sidera iuro,

Was it thy very death I wrought? Ah! on the stars I call,
per superos et si qua fides tellure sub ima est,

I call the Gods and whatso faith the nether earth may hold,
inuitus, regina, tuo de litore cessi. 460

To witness that against my will I left thy field and fold!
sed me iussa deum, quae nunc has ire per umbras,

But that same bidding of the Gods, whereby e'en now I wend
per loca senta situ cogunt noctemque profundam,

Through dark, through deserts rusty-rough, through night without an
end,

imperiis egere suis; nec credere quiui

Drave me with doom. Nor held my heart in anywise belief
hunc tantum tibi me discessu ferre dolorem.

That my departure from thy land might work thee such a grief.
siste gradum teque aspectu ne subtrahe nostro. 465

O stay thy feet! nor tear thyself from my beholding thus.
quem fugis? extremum fato quod te adloquor hoc est.'

Whom fleest thou? this word is all that Fate shall give to us."
talibus Aeneas ardentem et torua tuentem

Such were the words Æneas spake to soothe her as she stood
lenibat dictis animum lacrimasque ciebat.

With stern eyes flaming, while his heart swelled with the woeful flood:

illa solo fixos oculos auersa tenebat

But, turned away, her sick eyes still she fixed upon the earth;

nec magis incepto uultum sermone mouetur 470

Nor was her face moved any more by all his sad words' birth
quam si dura silex aut stet Marpesia cautes.

Than if Marpesian crag or flint had held her image so:
tandem corripuit sese atque inimica refugit

At last she flung herself away, and fled, his utter foe,
in nemus umbriferum, coniunx ubi pristinus illi

Unto the shady wood, where he, her husband of old days,
respondet curis aequatque Sychaeus amorem.

Gives grief for grief, and loving heart beside her loving lays.
nec minus Aeneas casu percussus iniquo 475

Nor less Æneas, smitten sore by her unworthy woes,
prosequitur lacrimis longe et miseratur euntem.

With tears and pity followeth her as far away she goes.
Inde datum molitur iter. iamque arua tenebant

But thence the meted way they wear, and reach the outer field,
ultima, quae bello clari secreta frequentant.

Where dwell apart renownèd men, the mighty under shield:
hic illi occurrit Tydeus, hic inclutus armis

There Tydeus meets him; there he sees the great fight-glorious man, Parthenopæus et Adrasti pallentis imago, 480

Parthenopæus; there withal Adrastus' image wan;
hic multum fleti ad superos belloque caduci

And there the Dardans battle-slain, for whom the wailing went Dardanidae, quos ille omnis longo ordine cernens

To very heaven: their long array he saw with sad lament:
ingemuit, Glaucumque Medontaque Thersilochumque,

Glaucus and Medon there he saw, Thersilochus, the three
tris Antenoridas Cererique sacrum Polyboeten,

Antenor-sons, and Polyphoe, by Ceres' mystery
Idaemque etiam currus, etiam arma tenentem. 485

Made holy, and Idæus still in car with armèd hand:
circumstant animae dextra laeuoque frequentes,

There on the right side and the left the straying spirits stand.
nec uidisse semel satis est; iuuat usque morari

Nor is one sight of him enough; it joyeth them to stay
et conferre gradum et ueniendi discere causas.

And pace beside, asking for why he wendeth such a way.
 at Danaum proceres Agamemnoniaeque phalanges
 But when the lords of Danaan folk, and Agamemnon's hosts,
 ut uidere uirum fulgentiaque arma per umbras, 490
 Behold the man and gleaming arms amid the dusky ghosts,
 ingenti trepidare metu; pars uertere terga,
 They fall a-quaking full of fear: some turn their back to fly
 ceu quondam petiere rates, pars tollere uocem
 As erst they ran unto the ships; some raise a quavering cry,
 exiguum: inceptus clamor frustratur hiantis.
 But never from their gaping vain will swell the shout begun.
 Atque hic Priamiden laniatum corpore toto
 And now Deiphobus he sees, the glorious Priam's son;
 Deiphobum uidet et lacerum crudeliter ora, 495
 But all his body mangled sore, his face all evilly hacked,
 ora manusque ambas, populataque tempora raptis
 His face and hands; yea, and his head, laid waste, the ear-lobes lacked,
 auribus et truncas inhoneste uulnere naris.
 And nostrils cropped unto the root by wicked wound and grim.
 uix adeo agnouit pauitantem ac dira tegentem
 Scarcely he knew the trembling man, who strove to hide from him
 supplicia, et notis compellat uocibus ultro:
 Those torments dire, but thus at last he spake in voice well known:
 'Deiphobe armipotens, genus alto a sanguine Teucri, 500
 "O great in arms, Deiphobus, from Teucer's blood come down,
 quis tam crudelis optauit sumere poenas?
 Who had the heart to work on thee such bitter wicked bale?
 cui tantum de te licuit? mihi fama suprema
 Who had the might to deal thee this? Indeed I heard the tale,
 nocte tulit fessum uasta te caede Pelasgum
 That, tired with slaying of the Greeks on that last night of all,
 procubuisse super confusae stragis acruum.
 Upon a heap of mingled death thou didst to slumber fall:
 tunc egomet tumulum Rhoeteo in litore inanem 505
 And I myself an empty tomb on that Rhoetean coast
 constitui et magna manis ter uoce uocaui.

Set up to thee, and thrice aloud cried blessing on thy ghost:
 nomen et arma locum seruant; te, amice, nequiui
 Thy name and arms still keep the place; but thee I found not, friend, conspiciere et patria decedens ponere terra.
 To set thee in thy fathers' earth ere I too needs must wend."
 ad quae Priamides: 'nihil o tibi, amice, relictum;
 To him the child of Priam spake: "Friend, nought thou left'st undone;
 omnia Deiphobo soluisti et funeris umbris. 510
 All things thou gav'st Deïphobus, and this dead shadowy one:
 sed me fata mea et scelus exitiale Lacaenae
 My Fates and that Laconian Bane, the Woman wicked-fair,
 his mersere malis; illa haec monimenta reliquit.
 Have drowned me in this sea of ills: she set these tokens here.
 namque ut supremam falsa inter gaudia noctem
 How midst a lying happiness we wore the last night by
 egerimus, nosti: et nimium meminisse necesse est.
 'Thou know'st: yea; overwell belike thou hold'st that memory
 cum fatalis equus saltu super ardua uenit 515
 Now when the baneful Horse of Fate high Pergamus leapt o'er,
 Pergama et armatum peditem grauis attulit aluo,
 With womb come nigh unto the birth of weaponed men of war,
 illa chorum simulans euhantis orgia circum
 She, feigning hallowed dance, led on a holy-shouting band
 ducebat Phrygias; flammam media ipsa tenebat
 Of Phrygian maids, and midst of them, the bale-fire in her hand,
 ingentem et summa Danaos ex arce uocabat.
 Called on the Danaan men to come, high on the castle's steep:
 tum me confectum curis somnoque grauatum 520
 But me, outworn with many cares and weighed adown with sleep,
 infelix habuit thalamus, pressitque iacentem
 The hapless bride-bed held meanwhile, and on me did there press
 dulcis et alta quies placidaeque simillima morti.
 Deep rest and sweet, most like indeed to death's own quietness.
 egreia interea coniunx arma omnia tectis
 Therewith my glorious wife all arms from out the house withdrew,
 emouet, et fidum capiti subduxerat ensem:

And stole away from o'er my head the sword whose faith I knew,
intra tecta uocat Menelaum et limina pandit, 525

Called Menelaüs to the house and opened him the door,
scilicet id magnum sperans fore munus amanti,
Thinking, forsooth, great gift to give to him who loved so sore,
et famam exstingui ueterum sic posse malorum.

To quench therewith the tale gone by of how she did amiss.
quid moror? inrumpunt thalamo, comes additus una

Why linger? They break in on me, and he their fellow is,
hortator scelerum Aeolides. di, talia Grais

Ulysses, preacher of all guilt. — O Gods, will ye not pay
instaure, pio si poenas ore reposco. 530

The Greeks for all? belike with mouth not godless do I pray.
sed te qui uiuum casus, age fare uicissim,

— But tell me, thou, what tidings new have brought thee here alive?
attulerint. pelagine uenis erroribus actus

Is it blind strayings o'er the sea that hither doth thee drive,
an monitu diuum? an quae te fortuna fatigat,

Or bidding of the Gods? Wherein hath Fortune worn thee so,
ut tristis sine sole domos, loca turbida, adires?"

That thou, midst sunless houses sad, confused lands, must go?"
Hac uice sermonum roseis Aurora quadrigis 535

But as they gave and took in talk, Aurora at the last
iam medium aetherio cursu traiecerat axem;

In rosy wain the topmost crown of upper heaven had passed,
et fors omne datum traherent per talia tempus,

And all the fated time perchance in suchwise had they spent;
sed comes admonuit breuiterque adfata Sibylla est:

But warning of few words enow the Sibyl toward him sent:
'nox ruit, Aenea; nos flendo ducimus horas.

"Night falls, Æneas, weeping here we wear the hours in vain;
hic locus est, partis ubi se uia findit in ambas: 540

And hard upon us is the place where cleaves the road atwain;
dextera quae Ditis magni sub moenia tendit,

On by the walls of mighty Dis the right-hand highway goes,
hac iter Elysium nobis; at laeua malorum

Our way to that Elysium: the left drags on to woes

exercet poenas et ad impia Tartara mittit.
 Ill-doers' souls, and bringeth them to godless Tartarus."
 Deiphobus contra: 'ne saeui, magna sacerdos;
 Then spake Deiphobus: "Great seer, be not o'erwroth with us:
 discedam, explebo numerum reddarque tenebris. 545
 I will depart and fill the tale, and unto dusk turn back:
 i decus, i, nostrum; melioribus utere fatis.'
 Go forth, our glory, go and gain the better fate I lack!"
 tantum effatus, et in uerbo uestigia torsit.
 And even with that latest word his feet he tore away.
 Respicit Aeneas subito et sub rupe sinistra
 But suddenly Æneas turned, and lo, a city lay
 moenia lata uidet triplici circumdata muro,
 Wide-spread 'neath crags upon the left, girt with a wall threefold;
 quae rapidus flammis ambit torrentibus amnis, 550
 And round about in hurrying flood a flaming river rolled,
 Tartareus Phlegethon, torquetque sonantia saxa.
 E'en Phlegethon of Tartarus, with rattling, stony roar:
 porta aduersa ingens solidoque adamante columnae,
 In face with adamantine posts was wrought the mighty door,
 uis ut nulla uirum, non ipsi exscindere bello
 Such as no force of men nor might of heaven-abiders high
 caelicolae ualeant; stat ferrea turris ad auras,
 May cleave with steel; an iron tower thence riseth to the sky:
 Tisiphoneque sedens palla succincta cruenta 555
 And there is set Tisiphone, with girded blood-stained gown,
 uestibulum exsomnia seruat noctesque diesque.
 Who, sleepless, holdeth night and day the doorway of the town.
 hinc exaudiri gemitus et saeua sonare
 Great wail and cruel sound of stripes that city sendeth out,
 uerbera, tum stridor ferri tractaeque catenae.
 And iron clanking therewithal of fetters dragged about.
 constitit Aeneas strepitumque exterritus hausit.
 Then fearfully Æneas stayed, and drank the tumult in:
 'quae scelerum facies? o uirgo, effare; quibusue 560
 "O tell me, Maiden, what is there? What images of sin?
 urgentur poenis? quis tantus plangor ad auras?'

What torments bear they? What the wail yon city casts abroad?"
 tum uates sic orsa loqui: 'dux inclute Teucrum,
 Then so began the seer to speak: "O glorious Teucrian lord,
 nulli fas casto sceleratum insistere limen;
 On wicked threshold of the place no righteous foot may stand:
 sed me cum lucis Hecate praefecit Auernis,
 But when great Hecate made me Queen of that Avernus land,
 ipsa deum poenas docuit perque omnia duxit. 565
 She taught me of God's punishments and led me down the path.
 Cnosius haec Rhadamanthus habet durissima regna
 — There Gnosian Rhadamanthus now most heavy lordship hath,
 castigatque auditque dolos subigitque fateri
 And heareth lies, and punisheth, and maketh men confess
 quae quis apud superos furto laetatus inani
 Their deeds of earth, whereof made glad by foolish wickedness,
 distulit in seram commissa piacula mortem.
 They thrust the late repentance off till death drew nigh to grip:
 continuo sontis ultrix accincta flagello 570
 Those guilty drives Tisiphone, armed with avenging whip,
 Tisiphone quatit insultans, toruosque sinistra
 And mocks their writhings, casting forth her other dreadful hand
 intentans anguis uocat agmina saeua sororum.
 Filled with the snakes, and crying on her cruel sister's band.
 tum demum horrissono stridentes cardine sacrae
 And then at last on awful hinge loud-clanging opens wide
 panduntur portae. cernis custodia qualis
 The Door of Doom: — and lo, behold what door-ward doth abide
 uestibulo sedeat, facies quae limina seruet? 575
 Within the porch, what thing it is the city gate doth hold!
 quinquaginta atris immanis hiatibus Hydra
 More dreadful yet the Water-worm, with black mouth fiftyfold,
 saeuior intus habet sedem. tum Tartarus ipse
 Hath dwelling in the inner parts. Then Tartarus aright
 bis patet in praeceps tantum tenditque sub umbras
 Gapes sheer adown; and twice so far it thrusteth under night
 quantus ad aetherium caeli suspectus Olympum.
 As up unto the roof of heaven Olympus lifteth high:

hic genus antiquum Terrae, Titania pubes, 580

And there the ancient race of Earth, the Titan children, lie,
fulmine deiecti fundo uoluuntur in imo.

Cast down by thunder, wallowing in bottomless abode.

hic et Aloidas geminos immania uidi

There of the twin Aloidæ the monstrous bodies' load
corpora, qui manibus magnum rescindere caelum

I saw; who fell on mighty heaven to cleave it with their hands,
adgressi superisque Iouem detrudere regnis.

That they might pluck the Father Jove from out his glorious lands;
uidi et crudelis dantem Salmonea poenas, 585

And Salmoneus I saw withal, paying the cruel pain
dum flammas Iouis et sonitus imitatur Olympi.

That fire of Jove and heaven's own voice on earth he needs must feign:

quattuor hic inuectus equis et lampada quassans

He, drawn by fourfold rush of steeds, and shaking torches' glare,
per Graium populos mediaeque per Elidis urbem

Amidmost of the Grecian folks, amidst of Elis fair,

ibat ouans, diuumque sibi poscebat honorem,

Went glorying, and the name of God and utter worship sought.

demens, qui nimbos et non imitabile fulmen 590

O fool! the glory of the storm, and lightning like to nought,
aere et cornipedum pulsu simularet equorum.

He feigned with rattling copper things and beat of horny hoof.

at pater omnipotens densa inter nubila telum

Him the Almighty Father smote from cloudy rack aloof,

contorsit, non ille faces nec fumea taedis

But never brand nor pitchy flame of smoky pine-tree cast,
lumina, praecipitemque immani turbine adegit.

As headlong there he drave him down amid the whirling blast.

nec non et Tityon, Terrae omniparentis alumnum, 595

And Tityon, too, the child of Earth, great Mother of all things,

cernere erat, per tota nouem cui iugera corpus

There may ye see: nine acres' space his mighty frame he flings;
porrigitur, rostroque immanis uultur obunco

His deathless liver still is cropped by that huge vulture's beak

immortale iecur tondens fecundaque poenis
That evermore his daily meat doth mid his inwards seek,
uiscera rimaturque epulis habitatque sub alto
Fruitful of woe, and hath his home beneath his mighty breast:
pectore, nec fibris requies datur ulla renatis. 600
Whose heart-strings eaten, and new-born shall never know of rest.
quid memorem Lapithas, Ixiona Pirithoumque?
Of Lapithæ, Pirithoüs, Ixion, what a tale!
quos super atra silex iam iam lapsura cadentique
O'er whom the black crag hangs, that slips, and slips, and ne'er shall fail

imminet adsimilis; lucent genialibus altis
To seem to fall. The golden feet of feast beds glitter bright,
aurea fulcra toris, epulaeque ante ora paratae
And there in manner of the kings is glorious banquet dight.
regifico luxu; Furiarum maxima iuxta 605
But lo, the Furies' eldest-born is crouched beside it there,
accubat et manibus prohibet contingere mensas,
And banneth one and all of them hand on the board to bear,
exsurgitque facem attollens atque intonat ore.
And riseth up with tossing torch, and crieth, thundering loud.
hic, quibus inuisi fratres, dum uita manebat,
Here they that hated brethren sore while yet their life abode,
pulsatusue parens et fraus innexa clienti,
The father-smiters, they that drew the client-catching net,
aut qui diuitiis soli incubuere repertis 610
The brooders over treasure found in earth, who never yet
nec partem posuere suis (quae maxima turba est),
Would share one penny with their friends — and crowded thick these are —

quique ob adulterium caesi, quique arma secuti
Those slain within another's bed; the followers up of war
impia nec ueriti dominorum fallere dextras,
Unrighteous; they no whit ashamed their masters' hand to fail,
inclusi poenam exspectant. ne quaere doceri
Here prisoned bide the penalty: seek not to know their tale
quam poenam, aut quae forma uiros fortunaue mersit. 615

Of punishment; what fate it is o'erwhelmeth such a folk.
 saxum ingens uoluunt alii, radiisque rotarum
 Some roll huge stones; some hang adown, fast bound to tire or spoke
 districti pendent; sedet aeternumque sedebit
 Of mighty wheels. There sitteth now, and shall sit evermore
 infelix Theseus, Phlegyasque miserrimus omnis Theseus undone: wretch Phlegyas is crying o'er and o'er
 admonet et magna testatur uoce per umbras:
 His warning, and in mighty voice through dim night testifies:
 "discite iustitiam moniti et non temnere diuos." 620
 'Be warned, and learn of righteousness, nor holy Gods despise.'
 uendidit hic auro patriam dominumque potentem
 This sold his fatherland for gold; this tyrant on it laid;
 imposuit; fixit leges pretio atque refixit;
 This for a price made laws for men, for price the laws unmade:
 hic thalamum inuasit natae uetitosque hymenaeos:
 This broke into his daughter's bed and wedding-tide accursed:
 ausi omnes immane nefas ausoque potiti.
 All dared to think of monstrous deed, and did the deed they durst.
 non, mihi si linguae centum sint oraue centum, 625
 Nor, had I now an hundred mouths, an hundred tongues at need,
 ferrea uox, omnis scelerum comprehendere formas,
 An iron voice, might I tell o'er all guise of evil deed,
 omnia poenarum percurrere nomina possim.'
 Or run adown the names of woe those evil deeds are worth."
 Haec ubi dicta dedit Phoebi longaeua sacerdos,
 So when Apollo's ancient seer such words had given forth:
 'sed iam age, carpe uiam et susceptum perface munus;
 "Now to the road! fulfil the gift that we so far have brought!
 acceleremus' ait; 'Cyclopum educta caminis 630
 Haste on!" she saith, "I see the walls in Cyclops' furnace wrought;
 moenia conspicio atque aduerso fornice portas,
 And now the opening of the gates is lying full in face,
 haec ubi nos praecepta iubent deponere dona.'
 Where we are bidden lay adown the gift that brings us grace."
 dixerat et pariter gressi per opaca uiarum
 She spake, and through the dusk of ways on side by side they wend,

corripunt spatium medium foribusque propinquant.
 And wear the space betwixt, and reach the doorway in the end.
 occupat Aeneas aditum corpusque recenti 635
 Æneas at the entering in bedews his body o'er
 spargit aqua ramumque aduerso in limine figit.
 With water fresh, and sets the bough in threshold of the door.
 His demum exactis, perfecto munere diuæ,
 So, all being done, the Goddess' gift well paid in manner meet,
 deuenere locos laetos et amoena uirecta
 They come into a joyous land, and green-sward fair and sweet
 fortunatorum nemorum sedesque beatas.
 Amid the happiness of groves, the blessèd dwelling-place.
 largior hic campos aether et lumine uestit 640
 Therein a more abundant heaven clothes all the meadows' face
 purpureo, solemque suum, sua sidera norunt.
 With purple light, and their own sun and their own stars they have.
 pars in gramineis exercent membra palaestris,
 Here some in games upon the grass their bodies breathing gave;
 contendunt ludo et fulua luctantur harena;
 Or on the yellow face of sand they strive and play the play;
 pars pedibus plaudunt choreas et carmina dicunt.
 Some beat the earth with dancing foot, and some, the song they say:
 nec non Threicius longa cum ueste sacerdos 645
 And there withal the Thracian man in flowing raiment sings
 obloquitur numeris septem discrimina uocum,
 Unto the measure of the dance on seven-folded strings;
 iamque eadem digitis, iam pectine pulsat eburno.
 And now he smites with finger-touch, and now with ivory reed.
 hic genus antiquum Teucris, pulcherrima proles,
 And here is Teucer's race of old, most lovely sons indeed;
 magnanimi heroes nati melioribus annis,
 High-hearted heroes born on earth in better days of joy:
 Ilusque Assaracusque et Troiae Dardanus auctor. 650
 Ilus was there, Assaracus, and he who builded Troy,
 arma procul currusque uirum miratur inanis;
 E'en Dardanus. Far off are seen their empty wains of war
 stant terra defixae hastae passimque soluti

And war-weed: stand the spears in earth, unyoked the horses are,
per campum pascuntur equi. quae gratia currum

And graze the meadows all about; for even as they loved
armorumque fuit uiuis, quae cura nitentis

Chariot and weapons, yet alive, and e'en as they were moved
pascere equos, eadem sequitur tellure repostos. 655

To feed sleek horses, under earth doth e'en such joy abide.
conspicit, ecce, alios dextra laeuaque per herbam

Others he saw to right and left about the meadows wide
uescentis laetumque choro paeana canentis

Feasting; or joining merry mouths to sing the battle won
inter odoratum lauris nemus, unde superne

Amidst the scented laurel grove, whence earthward rolleth on
plurimus Eridani per siluam uoluitur amnis.

The full flood that Eridanus athwart the wood doth pour.
hic manus ob patriam pugnando uulnera passi, 660

Lo, they who in their country's fight sword-wounded bodies bore;
quique sacerdotes casti, dum uita manebat,

Lo, priests of holy life and chaste, while they in life had part;
quique pii uates et Phoebos digna locuti,

Lo, God-loved poets, men who spake things worthy Phoebus' heart:
inuentas aut qui uitam excoluere per artis

And they who bettered life on earth by new-found mastery;
quique sui memores aliquos fecere merendo:

And they whose good deeds left a tale for men to name them by:
omnibus his niuea cinguntur tempora uitta. 665

And all they had their brows about with snowy fillets bound.
quos circumfusus sic est adfata Sibylla,

Now unto them the Sibyl spake as there they flowed around, — Musaeum ante omnis (medium nam plurima turba

Unto Musæus first; for him midmost the crowd enfolds
hunc habet atque umeris exstantem suspicit altis):

Higher than all from shoulders up, and reverently beholds:
'dicite, felices animae tuque optime uates,

"Say, happy souls, and thou, O bard, the best earth ever bare,
quae regio Anchisen, quis habet locus? illius ergo 670

What land, what place Anchises hath? for whose sake came we here,

uenimus et magnos Erebi tranauimus amnis.’

And swam the floods of Erebus and every mighty wave.”

atque huic responsum paucis ita reddidit heros:

Then, lightly answering her again, few words the hero gave:

‘nulli certa domus; lucis habitamus opacis,

“None hath a certain dwelling-place; in shady groves we bide,

riparumque toros et prata recentia riuis

And meadows fresh with running streams, and beds by river-side:

incolimus. sed uos, si fert ita corde uoluntas, 675

But if such longing and so sore the heart within you hath,

hoc superate iugum, et facili iam tramite sistam.’

O’ertop yon ridge and I will set your feet in easy path.”

dixit, et ante tulit gressum camposque nitentis

He spake and footed it afore, and showeth from above

desuper ostentat; dehinc summa cacumina linquunt.

The shining meads; and thence away from hill-top down they move.

At pater Anchises penitus conualle uirenti

But Sire Anchises deep adown in green-grown valley lay,

inclusas animas superumque ad lumen ituras 680

And on the spirits prisoned there, but soon to wend to day,

lustrabat studio recolens, omnemque suorum

Was gazing with a fond desire: of all his coming ones

forte recensebat numerum, carosque nepotes

There was he reckoning up the tale, and well-loved sons of sons:

fataque fortunasque uirum moresque manusque.

Their fate, their haps, their ways of life, their deeds to come to pass.

isque ubi tendentem aduersum per gramina uidit

But when he saw Æneas now draw nigh athwart the grass,

Aenean, alacris palmas utrasque tetendit, 685

He stretched forth either palm to him all eager, and the tears

effusaeque genis lacrimae et uox excidit ore:

Poured o’er his cheeks, and speech withal forth from his mouth there fares:

‘uenisti tandem, tuaque exspectata parenti

“O come at last, and hath the love, thy father hoped for, won

uicit iter durum pietas? datur ora tueri,

O’er the hard way, and may I now look on thy face, O son,

nate, tua et notas audire et reddere uoces?

And give and take with thee in talk, and hear the words I know?

sic equidem ducebam animo rebarque futurum 690

So verily my mind forebode, I deemed 'twas coming so,
tempora dinumerans, nec me mea cura fefellit.

And counted all the days thereto; nor was my longing vain.

quas ego te terras et quanta per aequora uectum

And now I have thee, son, borne o'er what lands, how many a main!

accipio! quantis iactatum, nate, periclis!

How tossed about on every side by every peril still!

quam metui ne quid Libyae tibi regna nocerent!'

Ah, how I feared lest Libyan land should bring thee unto ill!"

ille autem: 'tua me, genitor, tua tristis imago 695

Then he: "O father, thou it was, thine image sad it was,

saepius occurrens haec limina tendere adegit;

That, coming o'er and o'er again, drave me these doors to pass:

stant sale Tyrrheno classes. da iungere dextram,

My ships lie in the Tyrrhene salt — ah, give the hand I lack!

da, genitor, teque amplexu ne subtrahe nostro.'

Give it, my father; neither thus from my embrace draw back!"

sic memorans largo fletu simul ora rigabat.

His face was wet with plenteous tears e'en as the word he spake,

ter conatus ibi colo dare bracchia circum; 700

And thrice the neck of him beloved he strove in arms to take;

ter frustra comprehensa manus effugit imago,

And thrice away from out his hands the gathered image streams,

par leuibus uentis uolucrique simillima somno.

E'en as the breathing of the wind or wingèd thing of dreams.

Interea uidet Aeneas in ualle reducta

But down amid a hollow dale meanwhile Æneas sees

seclusum nemus et uirgulta sonantia siluae,

A secret grove, a thicket fair, with murmuring of the trees,

Lethaeumque domos placidas qui praenatat amnem. 705

And Lethe's stream that all along that quiet place doth wend;

hunc circum innumerae gentes populique uolabant:

O'er which there hovered countless folks and peoples without end:

ac ueluti in pratis ubi apes aestate serena

And as when bees amid the fields in summer-tide the bright
floribus insidunt uariis et candida circum

Settle on diverse flowery things, and round the lilies white
lilia funduntur, strepit omnis murmure campus.

Go streaming; so the fields were filled with mighty murmuring.
horrescit uisu subito causasque requirit 710

Unlearned Æneas fell aquake at such a wondrous thing,
inscius Aeneas, quae sint ea flumina porro,

And asketh what it all may mean, what rivers these may be,
quique uiri tanto complerint agmine ripas.

And who the men that fill the banks with such a company.
tum pater Anchises: 'animae, quibus altera fato

Then spake Anchises: "These are souls to whom fate oweth now
corpora debentur, Lethaei ad fluminis undam

New bodies: there they drink the draught by Lethe's quiet flow,
seculos latices et longa obliuia potant. 715

The draught that is the death of care, the long forgetfulness.
has equidem memorare tibi atque ostendere coram

And sure to teach thee of these things, and show thee all their press,
iampridem, hanc prolem cupio enumerare meorum,

And of mine offspring tell the tale, for long have I been fain,
quo magis Italia mecum laetere reperta.'

That thou with me mightst more rejoice in thine Italia's gain."

'o pater, anne aliquas ad caelum hinc ire putandum est

"O Father, may we think it then, that souls may get them hence
sublimis animas iterumque ad tarda reuerti 720

To upper air and take once more their bodies' hinderance?
corpora? quae lucis miseris tam dira cupido?"

How can such mad desire be to win the worldly day?"

'dicam equidem nec te suspensum, nate, tenebo'

"Son, I shall tell thee all thereof, nor hold thee on the way."
suscipit Anchises atque ordine singula pandit.

Therewith he takes the tale and all he openeth orderly:

'Principio caelum ac terras camposque liquentis

"In the beginning: earth and sky and flowing fields of sea,
lucentemque globum lunae Titaniaque astra 725

And stars that Titan fashioned erst, and gleaming moony ball,

spiritus intus alit, totamque infusa per artus
An inward spirit nourisheth, one soul is shed through all,
mens agitat molem et magno se corpore miscet.
That quickeneth all the mass, and with the mighty thing is blent:
inde hominum pecudumque genus uitaeque uolantum
Thence are the lives of men and beasts and flying creatures sent,
et quae marmoreo fert monstra sub aequore pontus.
And whatsoe'er the sea-plain bears beneath its marble face;
igneus est ollis uigor et caelestis origo 730
Quick in these seeds is might of fire and birth of heavenly place,
seminibus, quantum non noxia corpora tardant
Ere earthly bodies' baneful weight upon them comes to lie,
terrenique hebetant artus moribundaque membra.
Ere limbs of earth bewilder them and members made to die.
hinc metuunt cupiuntque, dolent gaudentque, neque auras
Hence fear they have, and love, and joy, and grief, and ne'er may find
dispiciunt clausae tenebris et carcere caeco.
The face of heaven amid the dusk and prison strait and blind:
quin et supremo cum lumine uita reliquit, 735
Yea, e'en when out of upper day their life at last is borne,
non tamen omne malum miseris nec funditus omnes
Not all the ill of wretched men is utterly outworn,
corporeae excedunt pestes, penitusque necesse est
Not all the bane their bodies bred; and sure in wondrous wise
multa diu concreta modis inolescere miris.
The plenteous ill they bore so long engrained in them it lies:
ergo exercentur poenis ueterumque malorum
So therefore are they worn by woes and pay for ancient wrong:
supplicia expendunt: aliae panduntur inanes 740
And some of them are hung aloft the empty winds among;
suspensae ad uentos, aliis sub gurgite uasto
And some, their stain of wickedness amidst the water's heart
infectum eluitur scelus aut exuritur igni:
Is washed away; amidst the fire some leave their worser part;
quisque suos patimur manis. exinde per amplum
And each his proper death must bear: then through Elysium wide

mittimur Elysium et pauci laeta arua tenemus,
 Are we sent forth; a scanty folk in joyful fields we bide,
 donec longa dies perfecto temporis orbe 745
 Till in the fulness of the time, the day that long hath been
 concretam exemit labem, purumque relinquit
 Hath worn away the inner stain and left the spirit clean,
 aetherium sensum atque aurai simplicis ignem.
 A heavenly essence, a fine flame of all unmingled air.
 has omnis, ubi mille rotam uoluere per annos,
 All these who now have turned the wheel for many and many a year
 Lethaeum ad fluuium deus euocat agmine magno,
 God calleth unto Lethe's flood in mighty company,
 scilicet immemores supera ut conuexa reuisant 750
 That they, remembering nought indeed, the upper air may see
 rursus, et incipiant in corpora uelle reuerti.
 Once more, and long to turn aback to worldly life anew."
 Dixerat Anchises natumque unaque Sibyllam
 Anchises therewithal his son, and her the Sibyl drew
 conuentus trahit in medios turbamque sonantem,
 Amid the concourse, the great crowd that such a murmuring sent,
 et tumultum capit unde omnis longo ordine posset
 And took a mound whence they might see the spirits as they went
 aduersos legere et uenientum discere uultus. 755
 In long array, and learn each face as 'neath their eyes it came.
 'Nunc age, Dardaniam prolem quae deinde sequatur
 "Come now, and I of Dardan folk will tell the following fame,
 gloria, qui maneant Itala de gente nepotes,
 And what a folk from Italy the world may yet await,
 inlustris animas nostrumque in nomen ituras,
 Most glorious souls, to bear our name adown the ways of fate.
 expediam dictis, et te tua fata docebo.
 Yea, I will set it forth in words, and thou thy tale shalt hear:
 ille, uides, pura iuuenis qui nititur hasta, 760
 Lo ye, the youth that yonder leans upon the headless spear,
 proxima sorte tenet lucis loca, primus ad auras
 Fate gives him highest place today; he first of all shall rise,
 aetherias Italo commixtus sanguine surget,

Blent blood of Troy and Italy, unto the earthly skies:
 Siluius, Albanum nomen, tua postuma proles,
 Silvius is he, an Alban name, thy son, thy latest born;
 quem tibi longaeuo serum Lauinia coniunx
 He whom thy wife Lavinia now, when thin thy life is worn,
 educet siluis regem regumque parentem, 765
 Beareth in woods to be a king and get a kingly race,
 unde genus Longa nostrum dominabitur Alba.
 Whence comes the lordship of our folk within the Long White Place.
 proximus ille Procas, Troianae gloria gentis,
 And Procas standeth next to him, the Trojan people's fame;
 et Capys et Numitor et qui te nomine reddet
 Then Capys, Numitor, and he who bringeth back thy name,
 Siluius Aeneas, pariter pietate uel armis
 Silvius Æneas, great in war, and great in godliness,
 egregius, si umquam regnandam acceperit Albam. 770
 If ever he in that White Stead may bear the kingdom's stress.
 qui iuuenes! quantas ostentant, aspice, uiris
 Lo ye, what youths! what glorious might unto thine eyes is shown!
 atque umbrata gerunt ciuili tempora quercu!
 But they who shade their temples o'er with civic oaken crown,
 hi tibi Nomentum et Gabios urbemque Fidenam,
 These build for thee Nomentum's walls, and Gabii, and the folk
 hi Collatinas imponent montibus arces,
 Fidenian, and the mountains load with fair Collatia's yoke:
 Pometios Castrumque Inui Bolamque Coramque; 775
 Pometii, Bola, Cora, there shall rise beneath their hands,
 haec tum nomina erunt, nunc sunt sine nomine terrae.
 And Inuus' camp: great names shall spring amid the nameless lands.
 quin et auo comitem sese Mauortius addet
 "Then Mavors' child shall come on earth, his grandsire following,
 Romulus, Assaraci quem sanguinis Ilia mater
 When Ilia's womb, Assaracus' own blood, to birth shall bring

 That Romulus: — lo, see ye not the twin crests on his head,
 et pater ipse suo superum iam signat honore? 780
 And how the Father hallows him for day with his own dread

en huius, nate, auspiciis illa incluta Roma
E'en now? Lo, son! those signs of his; lo, that renownèd Rome!
imperium terris, animos aequabit Olympo,
Whose lordship filleth all the earth, whose heart Olympus' home,
septemque una sibi muro circumdabit arces,
And with begirdling of her wall girds seven great burgs to her,
felix prole uirum: qualis Berecynthia mater
Rejoicing in her man-born babes: e'en as the Earth-Mother
inuehitur curru Phrygias turrita per urbes 785
Amidst the Phrygian cities goes with car and towered crown,
laeta deum partu, centum complexa nepotes,
Glad in the Gods, whom hundred-fold she kisseth for her own.
omnis caelicolas, omnis supera alta tenentis.
All heaven-abiders, all as kings within the house of air.
huc geminas nunc flecte acies, hanc aspice gentem
Ah, turn thine eyeballs hitherward, look on this people here,
Romanosque tuos. hic Caesar et omnis Iuli
Thy Roman folk! Lo Cæsar now! Lo all Iulus' race,
progenies magnum caeli uentura sub axem. 790
Who 'neath the mighty vault of heaven shall dwell in coming days.
hic uir, hic est, tibi quem promitti saepius audis,
And this is he, this is the man thou oft hast heard foretold,
Augustus Caesar, diui genus, aurea condet
Augustus Cæsar, sprung from God to bring the age of gold
saecula qui rursus Latio regnata per arua
Aback unto the Latin fields, where Saturn once was king.
Saturno quondam, super et Garamantas et Indos
Yea, and the Garamantian folk and Indians shall he bring
proferet imperium; iacet extra sidera tellus, 795
Beneath his sway: beyond the stars, beyond the course of years,
extra anni solisque uias, ubi caelifer Atlas
Beyond the Sun-path lies the land, where Atlas heaven upbears,
axem umero torquet stellis ardentibus aptum.
And on his shoulders turns the pole with burning stars bestrown.
huius in aduentum iam nunc et Caspia regna
Yea, and e'en now the Caspian realms quake at his coming, shown
responsis horrent diuum et Maeotia tellus,

By oracles of God; and quakes the far Mæotic mere,
et septemgemini turbant trepida ostia Nili. 800
And sevenfold Nile through all his mouths quakes in bewildered fear.

nec uero Alcides tantum telluris obiuit,
Not so much earth did Hercules o'erpass, though he prevailed
fixerit aeripedem ceruam licet, aut Erymanthi
To pierce the brazen-footed hind, and win back peace that failed
pacarit nemora et Lernam tremefecerit arcu;
The Erymanthus' wood, and shook Lerna with draught of bow;
nec qui pampineis uictor iuga flectit habenis
Nor Liber turning vine-wreathed reins when he hath will to go
Liber, agens celso Nysae de uertice tigris. 805
Adown from Nysa's lofty head in tiger-yokèd car. —
et dubitamus adhuc uirtutem extendere factis,
Forsooth then shall we doubt but deeds shall spread our valour far?
aut metus Ausonia prohibet consistere terra?
Shall fear forsooth forbid us rest in that Ausonian land?

The holy things? I know the hair and hoary beard of eld
regis Romani primam qui legibus urbem 810
Of him, the Roman king, who first a law-bound city held,
fundabit, Curibus paruis et paupere terra Sent out from little Cures' garth, that unrich land of his,
missus in imperium magnum. cui deinde subibit
Unto a mighty lordship: yea, and Tullus next is this,
otia qui rumpet patriae residesque mouebit
Who breaks his country's sleep and stirs the slothful men to fight;
Tullus in arma uiros et iam desueta triumphis
And calleth on the weaponed hosts unused to war's delight
agmina. quem iuxta sequitur iactantior Ancus 815
But next unto him Ancus fares, a boaster overmuch;
nunc quoque iam nimium gaudens popularibus auris.
Yea and e'en now the people's breath too nigh his heart will touch.
uis et Tarquinius reges animamque superbam

And wilt thou see the Tarquin kings and Brutus' lofty heart,
ultoris Bruti, fascisque uidere receptos?

And fasces brought aback again by his avenging part?

consulis imperium hic primus saeuasque securis

He first the lordship consular and dreadful axe shall take;

accipiet, natosque pater noua bella mouentis 820

The father who shall doom the sons, that war and change would
wake,

ad poenam pulchra pro libertate uocabit,

To pain of death, that he thereby may freedom's fairness save.

infelix, utcumque ferent ea facta minores:

Unhappy! whatso tale of thee the after-time may have,

uincet amor patriae laudumque immensa cupido.

The love of country shall prevail, and boundless lust of praise.

quin Decios Drusosque procul saeuumque securi

"Drusi and Decii lo afar! On hard Torquatus gaze,

aspice Torquatum et referentem signa Camillum. 825

He of the axe: Camillus lo, the banner-rescuer!

illae autem paribus quas fulgere cernis in armis,

But note those two thou seest shine in arms alike and clear,

concordes animae nunc et dum nocte prementur,

Now souls of friends, and so to be while night upon them weighs:

heu quantum inter se bellum, si lumina uitae

Woe's me! what war shall they awake if e'er the light of days

attigerint, quantas acies stragemque ciebunt,

They find: what host each sets 'gainst each, what death-field shall they dight!

aggeribus socer Alpinis atque arce Monoeci 830

The father from the Alpine wall, and from Monoecus' height

descendens, gener aduersis instructus Eois!

Comes down; the son against him turns the East's embattlement.

ne, pueri, ne tanta animis adsuescite bella

O children, in such evil war let not your souls be spent,

neu patriae ualidas in uiscera uertite uiris;

Nor turn the valour of your might against the heart of home.

tuque prior, tu parce, genus qui ducis Olympo,

Thou first, refrain, O thou my blood from high Olympus come;

proice tela manu, sanguis meus! — 835

Cast thou the weapons from thine hand!

ille triumphata Capitolia ad alta Corintho

“Lo to the Capitol aloft, for Corinth triumphing, victor aget currum caesis insignis Achiuis.

One glorious with Achæan deaths in victor’s chariot goes;

eruet ille Argos Agamemnoniasque Mycenæ

Mycenæ, Agamemnon’s house, and Argos he o’erthrows,

ipsumque Aeaciden, genus armipotentis Achilli,

Yea and Æacides himself the great Achilles’ son;

ultus auos Troiae templa et temerata Mineruæ. 840

Avenging so the sires of Troy and Pallas’ house undone.

quis te, magne Cato, tacitum aut te, Cosse, relinquat?

Great Cato, can I leave thee then untold? pass Cossus o’er?

quis Gracchi genus aut geminos, duo fulmina belli,

Or house of Gracchus? Yea, or ye, twin thunderbolts of war,

Scipiadas, cladem Libyæ, paruoque potentem

Ye Scipios, bane of Libyan land? Fabricius, poor and strong?

Fabricium uel te sulco, Serrane, serentem?

Or thee, Serranus, casting seed adown the furrows long?

quo fessum rapitis, Fabii? tu Maximus ille es, 845

Fabii, where drive ye me outworn? Thou Greatest, thou art he,

unus qui nobis cunctando restituis rem.

Who bringest back thy country’s weal by tarrying manfully.

excudent alii spirantia mollius aera

“Others, I know, more tenderly may beat the breathing brass,

(credo equidem), uiuos ducent de marmore uultus,

And better from the marble block bring living looks to pass;

orabunt causas melius, caelique meatus

Others may better plead the cause, may compass heaven’s face,

describent radio et surgentia sidera dicent: 850

And mark it out, and tell the stars, their rising and their place:

tu regere imperio populos, Romane, memento

But thou, O Roman, look to it the folks of earth to sway;

(hae tibi erunt artes), pacique imponere morem,

For this shall be thine handicraft, peace on the world to lay,

parcere subiectis et debellare superbos.’

To spare the weak, to wear the proud by constant weight of war.”
Sic pater Anchises, atque haec mirantibus addit:
So mid their marvelling he spake, and added furthermore:
‘aspice, ut insignis spoliis Marcellus opimis 855
“Marcellus lo! neath Spoils of Spoils how great and glad he goes,
ingreditur uictorque uiros supereminet omnis.
And overtops all heroes there, the vanquisher of foes:
hic rem Romanam magno turbante tumultu
Yea, he shall prop the Roman weal when tumult troubleth all,
sistet eques, sternet Poenos Gallumque rebellem,
And ride amid the Punic ranks, and crush the rising Gaul, tertiaeque arma patri suspendet capta Quirino.’
And hang in sire Quirinus’ house the third war-taken gear.”
atque hic Aeneas (una namque ire uidebat 860
Then spake Æneas, for he saw following Marcellus near
egregium forma iuuenem et fulgentibus armis,
A youth of beauty excellent, with gleaming arms bedight,
sed frons laeta parum et deiecto lumina uultu)
Yet little glad of countenance with eyes that shunned the light:
‘quis, pater, ille, uirum qui sic comitatur euntem?
“O father, who is he that wends beside the hero’s hem,
filius, ane aliquis magna de stirpe nepotum?
His son belike, or some one else from out that mighty stem?
qui strepitus circa comitum! quantum instar in ipso! 865
What murmuring of friends about! How mighty is he made!
sed nox atra caput tristi circumuolat umbra.’
But black Night fluttereth over him with woeful mirky shade.”
tum pater Anchises lacrimis ingressus obortis:
Then midst the rising of his tears father Anchises spoke:
‘o gnate, ingentem luctum ne quaere tuorum;
“O son, search not the mighty woe and sorrow of thy folk!
ostendent terris hunc tantum fata nec ultra
The Fates shall show him to the world, nor longer blossoming
esse sinent. nimium uobis Romana propago 870
Shall give. O Gods that dwell on high, belike o’ergreat a thing
uisa potens, superi, propria haec si dona fuissent.
The Roman tree should seem to you, should this your gift endure!

quantos ille uirum magnam Mauortis ad urbem
 How great a wail of mighty men that Field of Fame shall pour
 campus aget gemitus! uel quae, Tiberine, uidebis
 On Mavors' mighty city walls: what death-rites seest thou there,
 funera, cum tumulum praeterlabere recentem!
 O Tiber, as thou glidest by his new-wrought tomb and fair!
 nec puer Iliaca quisquam de gente Latinos 875
 No child that is of Ilian stock in Latin sires shall raise
 in tantum spe tollet auos, nec Romula quondam
 Such glorious hope; nor shall the land of Romulus e'er praise
 ullo se tantum tellus iactabit alumno.
 So fair and great a nursling child mid all it ever bore.
 heu pietas, heu prisca fides inuictaque bello
 Goodness, and faith of ancient days, and hand unmatched in war,
 dextera! non illi se quisquam impune tulisset
 Alas for all! No man unhurt had raised a weaponed hand
 obuius armato, seu cum pedes iret in hostem 880
 Against him, whether he afoot had met the foeman's band,
 seu spumantis equi foderet calcaribus armos.
 Or smitten spur amid the flank of eager foaming horse.
 heu, miserande puer, si qua fata aspera rumpas,
 O child of all men's ruth, if thou the bitter Fates mayst force,
 tu Marcellus eris. manibus date lilia plenis
 Thou art Marcellus. Reach ye hands of lily-blooms fulfilled;
 purpureos spargam flores animamque nepotis
 For I will scatter purple flowers, and heap such offerings spilled
 his saltem accumulem donis, et fungar inani 885
 Unto the spirit of my child, and empty service do."
 munere.' sic tota passim regione uagantur
 Thereafter upon every side they strayed that country through,
 aeris in campis latis atque omnia lustrant.
 Amid wide-spreading airy meads, and sight of all things won.
 quae postquam Anchises natum per singula duxit
 But after old Anchises now through all had led his son,
 incenditque animum famae uenientis amore,
 And kindled love within his heart of fame that was to be,
 exim bella uiro memorat quae deinde gerenda, 890

Then did he tell him of the wars that he himself should see,
Laurentisque docet populos urbemque Latini,
And of Laurentian peoples taught, and town of Latin folk;
et quo quemque modo fugiatque feratque laborem.
And how from every grief to flee, or how to bear its stroke.
Sunt geminae Somni portae, quarum altera fertur
Now twofold are the Gates of Sleep, whereof the one, men say,
cornea, qua ueris facilis datur exitus umbris,
Is wrought of horn, and ghosts of sooth thereby win easy way,
altera candenti perfecta nitens elephanto, 895
The other clean and smooth is wrought of gleaming ivory,
sed falsa ad caelum mittunt insomnia Manes.
But lying dreams the nether Gods send up to heaven thereby.
his ibi tum natum Anchises unaque Sibyllam
All said, Anchises on his son and Sibyl-maid doth wait
prosequitur dictis portaque emittit eburna,
Unto the last, and sends them up by that same ivory gate.
ille uiam secat ad nauis sociosque reuisit.
He wears the way and gains his fleet and fellow-folk once more.
Tum se ad Caietae recto fert limite portum. 900
So for Caieta's haven-mouth by straightest course they bore,
ancora de prora iacitur; stant litore puppes.
Till fly the anchors from the bows and sterns swing round ashore.

LIBER VII

BOOK VII.

Tu quoque litoribus nostris, Aeneia nutrix,
Thou also, O Æneas' nurse, Caieta, didst avail,
aeternam moriens famam, Caieta, dedisti;
E'en dying, unto these our shores to leave a deathless tale:
et nunc seruat honos sedem tuus, ossaque nomen
And yet thy glory guards the place, thy bones have won it name
Hesperia in magna, si qua est ea gloria, signat.
Within the great Hesperian land, if that be prize of fame.
At pius exsequiis Aeneas rite solutis, 5
But good Æneas, when at last all funeral rites were paid
aggere composito tumuli, postquam alta quierunt
And the grave heaped, when in a while the ocean's face was laid,
aequora, tendit iter uelis portumque relinquit.
Went on his way with sails aloft, and left the port behind:
aspirant aerae in noctem nec candida cursus
The faint winds breathe about the night, the moon shines clear and kind;
luna negat, splendet tremulo sub lumine pontus.
Beneath the quivering shining road the wide seas gleaming lie.
proxima Circaeae raduntur litora terrae, 10
But next the beach of Circe's land their swift ships glide anigh,
diues inaccessos ubi Solis filia lucos
Where the rich daughter of the Sun with constant song doth rouse
adsiduo resonat cantu, tectisque superbis
The groves that none may enter in, or in her glorious house
urit odoratam nocturna in lumina cedrum
Burneth the odorous cedar-torch amidst the dead of night,
arguto tenuis percurrens pectine telas.
While through the slender warp she speeds the shrilling shuttle light.
hinc exaudiri gemitus iraeque leonum 15
And thence they hear the sound of groans, and wrath of lions dread
uincla recusantum et sera sub nocte rudentum,

Fretting their chains; and roaring things o'er night-tide fallen dead;
saetigerique sues atque in praesepibus ursi
And bristled swine and caged bears cried bitter-wild, and sore;
saeuire ac formae magnorum ululare luporum,
And from the shapes of monstrous wolves the howling seaward bore.
quos hominum ex facie dea saeua potentibus herbis
These from the likeness of mankind had cruel Circe won
induerat Circe in uultus ac terga ferarum. 20
By herbs of might, and shape and hide of beasts upon them done.
quae ne monstra pii paterentur talia Troes
But lest the godly Trojan folk such wickedness should bear,
delati in portus neu litora dira subirent,
Lest borne into the baneful bay they bring their keels o'er near,
Neptunus uentis impleuit uela secundis,
Their sails did Father Neptune fill with fair and happy breeze,
atque fugam dedit et praeter uada feruida uexit.
And sped their flight and sent them swift across the hurrying seas.
Iamque rubescebat radiis mare et aethere ab alto 25
Now reddened all the sea with rays, and from the heavenly plain
Aurora in roseis fulgebat lutea bigis,
The golden-hued Aurora shone amidst her rosy wain,
cum uenti posuere omnisque repente resedit
Then fell the winds and every air sank down in utter sleep,
flatus, et in lento luctantur marmore tonsae.
And now the shaven oars must strive amid the sluggish deep:
atque hic Aeneas ingentem ex aequore lucum
Therewith Æneas sees a wood rise from the water's face,
prospicit. hunc inter fluuio Tiberinus amoeno 30
And there it is the Tiber's flood amidst a pleasant place,
uerticibus rapidis et multa flauus harena
With many a whirling eddy swift and yellowing with sand
in mare prorumpit. uariae circumque supraque
Breaks into sea; and diversely above on either hand
adsuetae ripis uolucres et fluminis alueo
The fowl that love the river-bank and haunt the river-bed
aethera mulcebant cantu lucoque uolabant.
Sweetened the air with plenteous song and through the thicket fled.

flectere iter sociis terraeque aduertere proras 35
 So there Æneas bids his folk shoreward their bows to lay,
 imperat et laetus fluuio succedit opaco.
 And joyfully he entereth in the stream's o'ershadowed way.
 Nunc age, qui reges, Erato, quae tempora, rerum
 To aid, Erato! while I tell what kings, what deedful tide,
 quis Latio antiquo fuerit status, aduena classem
 What manner life, in Latin land did anciently abide
 cum primum Ausoniis exercitus appulit oris,
 When first the stranger brought his ships to that Ausonian shore;
 expediam, et primae reuocabo exordia pugnae. 40
 Yea help me while I call aback beginnings of the war.
 tu uatem, tu, diua, mone. dicam horrida bella,
 O Goddess, hearten thou thy seer! dread war my song-speech saith:
 dicam acies actosque animis in funera reges,
 It tells the battle in array, and kings full fain of death,
 Tyrrhenamque manum totamque sub arma coactam
 The Tyrrhene host, all Italy, spurred on the sword to bear:
 Hesperiam. maior rerum mihi nascitur ordo,
 Yea, greater matters are afoot, a mightier deed I stir.
 maius opus moueo. Rex arua Latinus et urbes 45
 The king Latinus, old of days, ruled o'er the fields' increase,
 iam senior longa placidas in pace regebat.
 And cities of the people there at rest in long-drawn peace:
 hunc Fauno et nympha genitum Laurente Marica
 Of Faunus and Laurentian nymph, Marica, do we learn
 accipimus; Fauno Picus pater, isque parentem
 That he was born: but Faunus came of Picus, who must turn
 te, Saturne, refert, tu sanguinis ultimus auctor.
 To thee, O Saturn, for his sire: 'twas he that blood began.
 filius huic fato diuum prolesque uirilis 50
 Now, as God would, this king had got no son to grow a man,
 nulla fuit, primaque oriens erepta iuuenta est.
 For he who first had dawned on him in earliest youth had waned:
 sola domum et tantas seruabat filia sedes
 A daughter only such a house, so great a world sustained,
 iam matura uiro, iam plenis nubilis annis.

Now ripe for man, the years fulfilled that made her meet for bed:
multi illam magno e Latio totaque petebant
 And her much folk of Latin land were fain enow to wed,
Ausonia; petit ante alios pulcherrimus omnis 55
 And all Ausonia: first of whom, and fairest to be seen,
Turnus, auis atausque potens, quem regia coniunx
 Was Turnus, great from fathers great; and him indeed the queen
adiungi generum miro properabat amore;
 Was fain of for her son-in-law with wondrous love of heart:
sed uariis portenta deum terroribus obstant.
 But dreadful portents of the Gods the matter thrust apart.
laurus erat tecti medio in penetralibus altis
 Amidmost of the inner house a laurel-tree upbore
sacra comam multosque metu seruata per annos, 60
 Its hallowed leaves, that fear of God had kept through years of yore:
quam pater inuentam, primas cum conderet arces,
 Father Latinus first, they said, had found it there, when he
ipse ferebatur Phoebo sacrasse Latinus,
 Built there his burg and hallowed it to Phoebus' deity,
Laurentisque ab ea nomen posuisse colonis.
 And on Laurentian people thence the name thereof had laid;
huius apes summum densae (mirabile dictu)
 On whose top now the gathered bees, O wondrous to be said!
stridore ingenti liquidum trans aethera uectae 65
 Borne on with mighty humming noise amid the flowing air,
obsedere apicem, et pedibus per mutua nexis
 Had settled down, and foot to foot all interwoven there,
examen subitum ramo frondente pependit.
 In sudden swarm they hung adown from off the leafy bough.
continuo uates 'externum cernimus' inquit
 But straight the seer cries out: "Ah me! I see him coming now,
'aduentare uirum et partis petere agmen easdem
 The stranger man; I see a host from that same quarter come
partibus ex isdem et summa dominarier arce.' 70
 To this same quarter, to be lords amidst our highest home."
praeterea, castis adolet dum altaria taedis,
 But further, while the altar-fires she feeds with virgin brands,

et iuxta genitorem astat Lauinia uirgo,
The maid Lavinia, and beside her ancient father stands,
uisa (nefas) longis comprehendere crinibus ignem
Out! how along her length of hair the grasp of fire there came,
atque omnem ornatum flamma crepitante cremari,
And all the tiring of her head was caught in crackling flame.
regalisque accensa comas, accensa coronam 75
And there her royal tresses blazed, and blazed her glorious crown
insignem gemmis; tum fumida lumine fuluo
Gem-wrought, and she one cloud of smoke and yellow fire was
grown:
inuolui ac totis Vulcanum spargere tectis.
And wrapped therein, the fiery God she scattered through the house:
id uero horrendum ac uisu mirabile ferri:
And sure it seemed a dreadful thing, a story marvellous:
namque fore inlustrem fama fatisque canebant
For they fell singing she should grow glorious of fame and fate,
ipsam, sed populo magnum portendere bellum. 80
But unto all her folk should be the seed of huge debate.
At rex sollicitus monstris oracula Fauni,
So troubled by this tokening dread forth fareth now the king
fatidici genitoris, adit lucosque sub alta
To Faunus' fane, his father-seer, to ask him counselling consulit Albunea, nemorum quae maxima sacro
'Neath Albunea the high, whose wood, the thicket most of worth,
fonte sonat saeuamque exhalat opaca mephitim.
Resoundeth with the holy well and breathes the sulphur forth.
hinc Italae gentes omnisque Oenotria tellus 85
From whence the folk of Italy and all Oenotrian land
in dubiis responsa petunt; huc dona sacerdos Seek rede amidst of troublous time. Here, when the priest in hand
cum tulit et caesarum ouium sub nocte silenti
Hath borne the gifts, and laid him down amidst the hush of night
pellibus incubuit stratis somnosque petiuit,
On the strown fells of slaughtered ewes, and sought him sleep aright,
multa modis simulacra uidet uolitantia miris
He seeth wondrous images about him flit and shift,

et uarias audit uoces fruiturque deorum 90

He hearkeneth many a changing voice, of talk with Gods hath gift,
conloquio atque imis Acheronta adfatur Auernis.

And holdeth speech with Acheron, from deep Avernus come.

hic et tum pater ipse petens responsa Latinus

There now the sire Latinus went seeking the answers home,
centum lanigeras mactabat rite bidentis,

And there an hundred woolly ewes in order due did slay,
atque harum effultus tergo stratisque iacebat

And propped upon the fells thereof on bed of fleeces lay,
uelleribus: subita ex alto uox reddita luco est: 95

Till from the thickets inner depths the sudden answer came:

‘ne pete conubiis natam sociare Latinis,

“Seek not thy daughter, O my son, to wed to Latin name;

o mea progenies, thalamis neu crede paratis;

Unto the bridal set on foot let not thy troth be given:

externi uenient generi, qui sanguine nostrum

Thy sons are coming over sea to raise our blood to heaven,

nomen in astra ferant, quorumque a stirpe nepotes

And sons of sons’ sons from their stem shall see beneath their feet
omnia sub pedibus, qua sol utrumque recurrens 100

All things for them to shift and doom; all things the sun may meet,
aspicit Oceanum, uertique regique uidebunt.’

As to and fro he wendeth way ‘twixt either ocean wave.”

haec responsa patris Fauni monitusque silenti

Such warnings of the silent night that father Faunus gave,

nocte datos non ipse suo premit ore Latinus,

Shut up betwixt his closed lips Latinus held no whit,

sed circum late uolitans iam Fama per urbes

But through Ausonia flying fame had borne the noise of it,

Ausonias tulerat, cum Laomedontia pubes 105

When that Laomedontian folk at last had moored their ships
gramineo ripae religauit ab aggere classem.

Unto the grassy-mounded bank whereby the river slips.

Aeneas primique duces et pulcher Iulus

Æneas and Iulus fair, and all their most and best,

corpora sub ramis deponunt arboris altae,

Beneath a tall tree's boughs had laid their bodies down to rest:
instituantque dapes et adorea liba per herbam

They dight the feast; about the grass on barley-cakes they lay
subiciunt epulis (sic Iuppiter ipse monebat) 110

What meat they had, — for even so Jove bade them do that day, —
et Cereale solum pomis agrestibus augent.

And on the ground that Ceres gave the woodland apples pile.
consumptis hic forte aliis, ut uertere morsus

And so it happed, that all being spent, they turn them in a while
exiguam in Cererem penuria adegit edendi,

To Ceres' little field, and eat, egged on by very want,
et uiolare manu malisque audacibus orbem

And dare to waste with hands and teeth the circle thin and scant
fatalis crusti patulis nec parcere quadris: 115

Where fate lay hid, nor spare upon the trenchers wide to fall.

'heus, etiam mensas consumimus?' inquit Iulus,

"Ah!" cries Iulus, "so today we eat up board and all."

nec plura, adludens. ea uox audita laborum

'Twas all his jest-word; but its sound their labour slew at last,
prima tulit finem, primamque loquentis ab ore

And swift his father caught it up, as from his mouth it passed,
eripuit pater ac stupefactus numine pressit.

And stayed him, by the might of God bewildered utterly.

continuo 'salue fatis mihi debita tellus 120

Then forthwith: "Hail," he cried, "O land that Fate hath owed to me!
uosque' ait 'o fidi Troiae saluete penates:

And ye, O House-gods of our Troy, hail ye, O true and kind!
hic domus, haec patria est. genitor mihi talia namque

This is your house, this is your land: my father, as I mind, (nunc repeto) Anchises fatorum arcana reliquit:

Such secrets of the deeds of Fate left me in days of yore:

"cum te, nate, fames ignota ad litora uectum

'O son, when hunger driveth thee stranded on outland shore
accisis coget dapibus consumere mensas, 125

To eat the very boards beneath thy victual scant at need,
tum sperare domos defessus, ibique memento

There hope for house, O weary one, and in that place have heed

prima locare manu molirique aggere tecta.”

To set hand first unto the roof, and heap the garth around.’

haec erat illa fames, haec nos suprema manebat

So this will be that hunger-tide: this waited us to bound exitiis positura modum.

Our wasting evils at the last.

quare agite et primo laeti cum lumine solis 130

So come, and let us joyfully upon the first of dawn

quae loca, quae habeant homines, ubi moenia gentis,

Seek out the land, what place it is, what men-folk there abide,
uestigemus et a portu diuersa petamus.

And where their city; diversely leaving the haven-side.

nunc pateras libate Ioui precibusque uocate

But now pour out the bowls to Jove, send prayer upon the way

Anchisen genitorem, et uina reponite mensis.’

To sire Anchises, and the wine again on table lay.”

Sic deinde effatus frondenti tempora ramo 135

He spake, and with the leafy bough his temples garlanded,

implicat et geniumque loci primamque deorum

And to the Spirit of the Soil forthwith the prayer he said,

Tellurem Nymphasque et adhuc ignota precatur

To Earth, the eldest-born of Gods, to Nymphs, to Streams unknown

flumina, tum Noctem Noctisque orientia signa

As yet: he called upon the Night, and night-tide’s signs new shown;

Idaeumque Iouem Phrygiamque ex ordine matrem

Idæan Jove, the Phrygian Queen, the Mother, due and well

inuocat, et duplicis caeloque Ereboque parentis. 140

He called on; and his parents twain in Heaven and in Hell.

hic pater omnipotens ter caelo clarus ab alto

But thrice the Almighty Father then from cloudless heaven on high

intonuit, radiisque ardentem lucis et auro

Gave thunder, showing therewithal the glory of his sky

ipse manu quatiens ostendit ab aethere nubem.

All burning with the golden gleam, and shaken by his hand.

diditur hic subito Troiana per agmina rumor

Then sudden rumour ran abroad amid the Trojan band,

aduenisse diem quo debita moenia condant. 145

That now the day was come about their fateful walls to raise;
certatim instaurant epulas atque omine magno
So eagerly they dight the feast, gladdened by omen's grace,
crateras laeti statuunt et uina coronant.
And bring the beakers forth thereto and garland well the wine.
Postera cum prima lustrabat lampade terras
But when the morrow's lamp of dawn across the earth 'gan shine,
orta dies, urbem et finis et litora gentis
The shore, the fields, the towns of folk they search, wide scattering:
diuersi explorant: haec fontis stagna Numici, 150
And here they come across the pools of that Numician spring:
hunc Thybrim fluuium, hic fortis habitare Latinos.
This is the Tiber-flood; hereby the hardy Latins dwell.
tum satus Anchisa delectos ordine ab omni
But therewithal Anchises' seed from out them chose him well
centum oratores augusta ad moenia regis
An hundred sweet-mouthed men to go unto the walls renowned,
ire iubet, ramis uelatos Palladis omnis,
Where dwelt the king, and every one with Pallas' olive crowned,
donaque ferre uiro pacemque exposcere Teucris. 155
To carry gifts unto the lord and peace for Teucrians pray.
haud mora, festinant iussi rapidisque feruntur
So, bidden, nought they tarry now, but swift-foot wear the way.
passibus. ipse humili designat moenia fossa
But he himself marks out the walls with shallow ditch around,
moliturque locum, primasque in litore sedes
And falls to work upon the shore his first abode to found,
castrorum in morem pinnis atque aggere cingit.
In manner of a camp, begirt with bank and battlement.
iamque iter emensi turris ac tecta Latinorum 160
Meanwhile his men beheld at last, when all the way was spent,
ardua cernebant iuuenes muroque subibant.
The Latin towers and roofs aloft, and drew the walls anigh:
ante urbem pueri et primaueo flore iuuentus
There were the lads and flower of youth afield the city by
exercentur equis domitantque in puluere currus,
Backing the steed, or mid the dust a-steering of the car,

aut acris tendunt arcus aut lenta lacertis
Or bending of the bitter bow, hurling tough darts afar
spicula contorquent, cursuque ictuque lacesunt: 165
By strength of arm; for foot or fist crying the challenging.
cum praeuectus equo longaeui regis ad auris
Then fares a well-horsed messenger, who to the ancient king
nuntius ingentis ignota in ueste reportat
Bears tidings of tall new-comers in outland raiment clad:
aduenisse uiros. ille intra tecta uocari
So straight Latinus biddeth them within his house be had,
imperat et solio medius consedit auito.
And he upon his father's throne sat down amidmost there.
Tectum augustum, ingens, centum sublime columnis 170
High on an hundred pillars stood that mighty house and fair,
urbe fuit summa, Laurentis regia Pici,
High in the burg, the dwelling-place Laurentian Picus won,
horrendum siluis et religione parentum.
Awful with woods, and worshipping of sires of time agone:
hic sceptrum accipere et primos attollere fascis
Here was it wont for kings to take the sceptre in their hand,
regibus omen erat; hoc illis curia templum,
Here first to raise the axe of doom: 'twas court-house of the land,
hae sacris sedes epulis; hic ariete caeso 175
This temple, and the banquet-hall; here when the host was slain
perpetuis soliti patres considerare mensis.
The fathers at the endlong boards would sit the feast to gain.
quin etiam ueterum effigies ex ordine auorum
There too were dight in cedar old the sires of ancient line
antiqua e cedro, Italusque paterque Sabinus
For there was fashioned Italus, and he who set the vine,
uitisator curuam seruans sub imagine falcem,
Sabinus, holding yet in hand the image of the hook;
Saturnusque senex Ianique bifrontis imago 180
And Saturn old, and imaging of Janus' double look,
uestibulo astabant, aliique ab origine reges,
Stood in the porch; and many a king was there from ancient tide,
Martiaque ob patriam pugnando uulnera passi.

Who in their country's battle erst the wounds of Mars would bide:
multaque praeterea sacris in postibus arma,
And therewithal were many arms hung on the holy door.
captiui pendent currus curvaeque secures
There hung the axes crookèd-horned, and taken wains of war,
et cristae capitum et portarum ingentia claustra 185
And crested helms, and bolts and locks that city-gates had borne;
spiculaque clipeique ereptaque rostra carinis.
And spears and shields, and thrusting-beaks from ships of battle torn.
ipse Quirinali lituo paruaque sedebat
There with Quirinus' crooked staff, girt in the shortened gown,
succinctus trabea laeuaque ancile gerebat
With target in his left hand held, was Picus set adown, —
Picus, equum domitor, quem capta cupidine coniunx
The horse-tamer, whom Circe fair, caught with desire erewhile,
aurea percussum uirga uersumque uenenis 190
Smote with that golden rod of hers, and, sprinkling venom's guile,
fecit auem Circe sparsitque coloribus alas.
Made him a fowl, and colours fair blent on his shifting wings.
Tali intus templo diuum patriaque Latinus
In such a temple of the Gods, in such a house of kings,
sede sedens Teucros ad sese in tecta uocauit,
Latinus sat when he had called those Teucrian fellows in,
atque haec ingressis placido prior edidit ore:
And from his quiet mouth and grave such converse did begin:
'dicite, Dardanidae (neque enim nescimus et urbem 195
"What seek ye, sons of Dardanus? for not unknown to me et genus, auditique aduertitis aequare cursum),
Is that your city or your blood; and how ye crossed the sea,
quid petitis? quae causa rates aut cuius egentis
That have I heard. But these your ships, what counsel or what lack litus ad Ausonium tot per uada caerula uexit?
Hath borne them to Ausonian strand o'er all the blue sea's back?
siue errore uiae seu tempestatibus acti,
If ye have strayed from out your course, or, driven by stormy tide
qualia multa mari nautae patiuntur in alto, 200
(For such things oft upon the sea must seafarers abide),

fluminis intrastis ripas portuque sedetis,
Have entered these our river-banks in haven safe to lie,
ne fugite hospitium, neue ignorete Latinos
Flee not our welcome, nor unknown the Latin folk pass by;
Saturni gentem haud uinclo nec legibus aequam,
The seed of Saturn, bound to right by neither law nor chain,
sponte sua ueterisque dei se more tenentem.
But freely following in the ways whereof the God was fain.
atque equidem memini (fama est obscurior annis) 205
Yea now indeed I mind a tale, though now with years outworn,
Auruncos ita ferre senes, his ortus ut agris
How elders of Aurunce said that mid these fields was born
Dardanus Idaeas Phrygiae penetrarit ad urbes
That Dardanus, who reached at last the Phrygian Ida's walls,
Threiciamque Samum, quae nunc Samothracia fertur.
And Thracian Samos, that the world now Samothracia calls:
hinc illum Corythi Tyrrhena ab sede profectum
From Tuscan stead of Corythus he went upon his ways;
aurea nunc solio stellantis regia caeli 210
Whose throne is set in golden heaven, the star-besprinkled place,
accipit et numerum diuorum altaribus auget.’
Who adds one other to the tale of altared deities.”
Dixerat, et dicta Ilioneus sic uoce secutus:
He ended, but Ilioneus followed in words like these:
‘rex, genus egregium Fauni, nec fluctibus actos
“O king, O glorious Faunus’ child, no storm upon the main
atra subegit hiems uestris succedere terris,
Drave us amid the drift of waves your country coast to gain;
nec sidus regione uiae litusue fefellit: 215
And neither star nor strand made blind the region of our road;
consilio hanc omnes animisque uolentibus urbem
But we by counsel and free will have sought out thine abode,
adferimur pulsi regnis, quae maxima quondam
Outcast from such a realm as once was deemed the mightiest
extremo ueniens sol aspiciebat Olympo.
The Sun beheld, as o’er the heaven she ran from east to west.
ab Ioue principium generis, Ioue Dardana pubes

Jove is the well-spring of our race; the Dardan children joy
 gaudet auo, rex ipse Iouis de gente suprema: 220
 In Jove for father; yea, our king, Æneas out of Troy,
 Troius Aeneas tua nos ad limina misit.
 Who sends us to thy door, himself is of the Highest's seed.
 quanta per Idaeos saevis effusa Mycenis
 How great a tempest was let loose o'er our Idæan mead,
 tempestas ierit campos, quibus actus uterque
 From dire Mycenæ Sent; what fate drave either clashing world,
 Europæ atque Asiae fatis concurrerit orbis,
 Europe and Asia, till the war each against each they hurled,
 audiit et si quem tellus extrema refuso 225
 His ears have heard, who dwells afar upon the land alone
 summouet Oceano et si quem extenta plagarum
 That ocean beats; and his no less the bondman of the zone,
 quattuor in medio dirimit plaga solis iniqui.
 That midmost lieth of the four, by cruel sun-blaze worn.
 diluio ex illo tot uasta per aequora uecti
 Lo, from that flood we come to thee, o'er waste of waters borne,
 dis sedem exiguam patriis litusque rogamus Praying a strip of harmless shore our House-Gods' home to be,
 innocuum et cunctis undamque auramque patentem. 230
 And grace of water and of air to all men lying free.
 non erimus regno indecores, nec uestra feretur
 We shall not foul our land's renown; and thou, thy glory fair
 fama levis tantique abolescet gratia facti,
 We know, and plenteous fruit of thanks this deed of thine shall bear:
 nec Troiam Ausonios gremio excepisce pigebit.
 Nor ever may embrace of Troy Ausonia's soul despite.
 fata per Aeneae iuro dextramque potentem,
 Now by Æneas' fates I swear, and by his hand of might,
 siue fide seu quis bello est expertus et armis: 235
 Whether in troth it hath been tried, or mid the hosts of war,
 multi nos populi, multae (ne temne, quod ultro
 That many folks — yea, scorn us not that willingly we bore
 praeferimus manibus uittas ac uerba precantia)
 These fillets in our hands today with words beseeching peace —

et petiere sibi et uoluere adiungere gentes;
 That many lands have longed for us, and yearned for our increase.
 sed nos fata deum uestras exquirere terras
 But fate of Gods and Gods' command would ever drive us home
 imperiis egere suis. hinc Dardanus ortus, 240
 To this your land: this is the place whence Dardanus was come,
 huc repetit iussisque ingentibus urget Apollo
 And hither now he comes again: full sore Apollo drave
 Tyrrhenum ad Thybrim et fontis uada sacra Numici.
 To Tuscan Tiber, and the place of dread Numicius' wave.
 dat tibi praeterea fortunae parua prioris
 Moreover, here some little gifts of early days of joy
 munera, reliquias Troia ex ardente receptas.
 Giveth our king, a handful gleaned from burning-tide of Troy:
 hoc pater Anchises auro libabat ad aras, 245
 Anchises at the altar erst would pour from out this gold;
 hoc Priami gestamen erat cum iura uocatis
 This was the gear that Priam used when in the guise of old
 more daret populis, sceptrumque sacerque tiaras
 He gave his gathered folk the law; sceptre, and holy crown,
 Iliadumque labor uestes.'
 And weed the work of Ilian wives."
 Talibus Ilionei dictis defixa Latinus
 Now while Ilioneus so spake Latinus held his face,
 obtutu tenet ora soloque immobilis haeret, 250
 Musing and steadfast, on the ground setting his downcast gaze,
 intentos uoluens oculos. nec purpura regem
 Rolling his eyes all thought-fulfilled; nor did the broidered gear
 picta mouet nec scepra mouent Priameia tantum
 Of purple move the King so much, nor Priam's sceptre fair,
 quantum in conubio natae thalamoque moratur,
 As on his daughter's bridal bed the thoughts in him had rest,
 et ueteris Fauni uoluit sub pectore sortem:
 For ancient Faunus' fateful word he turned within his breast.
 hunc illum fatis externa ab sede profectum 255
 Here was the son, the fate-foretold, the outland wanderer,
 portendi generum paribusque in regna uocari

Called on by equal doom of God the equal throne to share;
auspiciis, huic progeniem uirtute futuram
He from whose loins those glorious sons of valour should come forth egregiam et totum quae uiribus occupet orbem.
To take the whole world for their own by utter might of worth.
tandem laetus ait: 'di nostra incepta secudent
At last he spake out joyfully: "God grace our deed begun,
auguriumque suum! dabitur, Troiane, quod optas. 260
And his own bidding! man of Troy, thine asking shall be done:
munera nec sperno: non uobis rege Latino
I take your gifts: nought shall ye lack from King Latinus' hand,
diuitis uber agri Troiaeue opulentia deerit.
Riches of Troy, nor health and wealth of fat and fruitful land.
ipse modo Aeneas, nostri si tanta cupido est,
But let Æneas come himself if he so yearn for me,
si iungi hospitio properat sociusque uocari,
If he be eager for our house, and would our fellow be;
adueniat, uultus neue exhorrescat amicos: 265
Nor let him fear to look upon friends' faces close anigh,
pars mihi pacis erit dextram tetigisse tyranni.
Part of the peace-troth shall be this, my hand in his to lie.
uos contra regi mea nunc mandata referte:
And now bear back unto your king this bidding that I send:
est mihi nata, uiro gentis quam iungere nostrae
I have a daughter; her indeed with countryman to blend
non patrio ex adyto sortes, non plurima caelo
The answers of my father's house forbid, and many a sign
monstra sinunt; generos externis adfore ab oris, 270
Sent down from heaven: from over sea comes one to wed our line;
hoc Latio restare canunt, qui sanguine nostrum
They say this bideth Latin Land; a man to raise our blood
nomen in astra ferant. hunc illum poscere fata
Up to the very stars of heaven: that this is he fate would,
et reor et, si quid ueri mens augurat, opto.'
I think, yea hope, if any whit my heart herein avail."
haec effatus equos numero pater eligit omni
He spake, and bade choose horses out from all his noble tale,

(stabant ter centum nitidi in praeseptibus altis); 275

Whereof three hundred sleek and fair stood in the stables high:

omnibus extemplo Teucris iubet ordine duci

These biddeth he for Teucrian men be led forth presently,

instratos ostro alipedes pictisque tapetis

Wing-footed purple-bearing beasts, with pictures o'er them flung (aurea pectoribus demissa monilia pendent,

Of woven stuff, and, on their breasts are golden collars hung:

tecti auro fuluum mandunt sub dentibus aurum),

Gold-housed are they, and champ in teeth the yellow-golden chain

absenti Aeneae currum geminosque iugalis 280

But to Æneas, absent thence, a car and yoke-beasts twain

semine ab aetherio spirantis naribus ignem,

He sends: the seed of heaven are they, and breathing very fire,

illorum de gente patri quos daedala Circe

The blood of those that Circe stole when she beguiled her sire,

supposita de matre nothos furata creauit.

That crafty mistress, winning them, bastards, from earthy mare.

talibus Aeneadae donis dictisque Latini

So back again Æneas' folk high on their horses fare,

sublimes in equis redeunt pacemque reportant. 285

Bearing Latinus' gifts and words, and all the tale of peace.

Ecce autem Inachiis sese referebat ab Argis

But lo, where great Jove's bitter wife comes from the town of Greece,

saeua Iouis coniunx aurasque inuecta tenebat,

From Argos wrought of Inachus, and holds the airy way.

et laetum Aenean classemque ex aethere longe

Far off she sees Æneas' joy, and where the ship-host lay

Dardanium Siculo prospexit ab usque Pachyno.

Of Dardans: yea from Sicily and far Pachynus head

moliri iam tecta uidet, iam fidere terrae, 290

She seeth him on earth at last and raising roofèd stead,

deseruisse rates: stetit acri fixa dolore.

And all the ships void: fixed she stood, smit through with bitter wrath,

tum quassans caput haec effundit pectore dicta:

And shook her head: then from her breast the angry words came forth:

‘heu stirpem inuisam et fatis contraria nostris

“Ah, hated race! Ah, Phrygian fates that shear my fates atwain!

fata Phrygum! num Sigeis occumbere campis,

Was there no dead man’s place for you on that Sigeian plain?

num capti potuere capi? num incensa cremauit 295

Had ye no might to wend as slaves? gave Troy so poor a flame

Troia uiros? medias acies mediosque per ignis

To burn her men, that through the fire and through the swords ye came?

inuenere uiam. at, credo, mea numina tandem

I think at last my godhead’s might is wearied and gone by,

fessa iacent, odiis aut exsaturata quieui.

That I have drunk enough of hate, and now at rest may lie: — I,

quin etiam patria excussos infesta per undas

who had heart to follow up those outcasts from their land,

ausa sequi et profugis toto me opponere ponto. 300

And as they fled o’er all the sea still in their path would stand.

absumptae in Teucros uires caelique marisque.

Against these Teucrians sea and sky have spent their strength for nought:

quid Syrtes aut Scylla mihi, quid uasta Charybdis

Was Syrtes aught, or Scylla aught, or huge Charybdis aught?

profuit? optato conduntur Thybridis alueo

Lo now the longed-for Tiber’s breast that nation cherisheth

securi pelagi atque mei. Mars perdere gentem

Safe from the deep and safe from me: while Mars might do to death

immanem Lapithum ualuit, concessit in iras 305

Those huge-wrought folk of Lapithæ: the very Father-God

ipse deum antiquam genitor Calydonæ Dianæ,

Gave up the ancient Calydon to Dian’s wrath and rod.

quod scelus aut Lapithas tantum aut Calydonæ merentem?

What was the guilt of Lapithæ? what crime wrought Calydon?

ast ego, magna Iouis coniunx, nil linquere inausum

But I, the mighty spouse of Jove, who nought have left undone

quae potui infelix, quae memet in omnia uerti,

My evil hap might compass, I who ran through all craft's tale
 uincor ab Aenea. quod si mea numina non sunt 310
 Am vanquished of Æneas now. But if of no avail
 magna satis, dubitem haud equidem implorare quod usquam est:
 My godhead be, I will not spare to pray what is of might,
 flectere si nequeo superos, Acheronta mouebo.
 Since Heaven I move not, needs must I let loose the Nether Night.
 non dabitur regnis, esto, prohibere Latinis,
 Ah! say it is not fated me the Latin realm to ban,
 atque immota manet fatis Lauinia coniunx:
 Lavinia must be fated wife of this same Trojan man,
 at trahere atque moras tantis licet addere rebus, 315
 Yet may I draw out time at least, and those great things delay;
 at licet amborum populos excindere regum.
 At least may I for either king an host of people slay:
 hac gener atque socer coeant mercede suorum:
 For father and for son-in-law shall plenteous price be paid,
 sanguine Troiano et Rutulo dotabere, uirgo,
 With Trojan and Rutulian blood shalt thou be dowered, O maid;
 et Bellona manet te pronuba. nec face tantum
 Bellona's self shall bridal thee; not Cisseus' seed alone
 Cisseis praegnas ignis enixa iugalis; 320
 Was big with brand; not she alone with wedding-ring has shone:
 quin idem Veneri partus suus et Paris alter,
 Yea, and this too is Venus' child; another Paris comes
 funestaeque iterum recidiua in Pergama taedae.'
 To kindle deadly torch again in new-born Trojan homes."
 Haec ubi dicta dedit, terras horrenda petiuit;
 So spake she terrible, and sank into the earth below,
 luctificam Allecto dirarum ab sede dearum
 Yea to the nether night, and stirred Alecto, forge of woe,
 infernisque ciet tenebris, cui tristia bella 325
 From the dread Goddesses' abode: sad wars she loveth well,
 iraeque insidiaeque et crimina noxia cordi.
 And murderous wrath, and lurking guile, and evil deeds and fell:
 odit et ipse pater Pluton, odere sorores
 E'en Pluto loathes her; yea, e'en they of that Tartarean place,

Tartareae monstrum: tot sese uertit in ora,
Her sisters, hate her: sure she hath as many a changing face,
tam saeuae facies, tot pullulat atra colubris.
As many a cruel body's form, as her black snakes put forth.
quam Iuno his acuit uerbis ac talia fatur: 330
To whom in such wise Juno spake and whetted on her wrath:
'hunc mihi da proprium, uirgo sata Nocte, laborem,
"Win me a work after thine heart, O Virgin of the night,
hanc operam, ne noster honos infractae cedat
Lest all my fame, unstained of old, my glory won aright,
fama loco, neu conubiis ambire Latinum
Give place: lest there Æneas' sons Latinus overcome
Aeneadae possint Italosue obsidere finis.
By wedlock, and in Italy set up their house and home:
tu potes unanimos armare in proelia fratres 335
Thou, who the brothers of one heart canst raise up each 'gainst each,
atque odiis uersare domos, tu uerbera tectis
And overturn men's homes with hate, and through the house-walls' breach
funereasque inferre faces, tibi nomina mille,
Bear in the stroke and deadly brand — a thousand names hast thou,

mille nocendi artes. fecundum concute pectus,
A thousand arts of ill: Stir up thy fruitful bosom now;
dissice compositam pacem, sere crimina belli;
Be render of the plighted peace; of war-seed be the sower;
arma uelit poscatque simul rapiatque iuuentus.' 340
That men may yearn for arms, and ask, and snatch in one same hour."

Exim Gorgoneis Allecto infecta uenenis
Thereon Alecto, steeped at heart with Gorgon venom.
principio Latium et Laurentis tecta tyranni
Sought Latium first and high-built house of that Laurentian king,
celsa petit, tacitumque obsedit limen Amatae,
And by the silent threshold stood whereby Amata lay,
quam super aduentu Teucrum Turnique hymenaeis
In whose hot heart a woman's woe and woman's wrath did play,

femineae ardentem curaeque iraeque coquebant. 345

About those Teucrian new-comers and Turnus' bridal bed:

huic dea caeruleis unum de crinibus anguem

On her she cast an adder blue, a tress from off her head,

conicit, inque sinum praecordia ad intima subdit,

And sent it to her breast to creep her very heart-strings through,

quo furibunda domum monstro permisceat omnem.

That she, bewildered by the bane, may all the house undo.

ille inter uestis et leuia pectora lapsus

So he betwixt her bosom smooth and dainty raiment slid,

uoluitur attactu nullo, fallitque furem 350

And crawled as if he touched her not, and maddened her yet hid,

uipeream inspirans animam; fit tortile collo

And breathed the adder's soul in her: the dreadful wormy thing

aurum ingens coluber, fit longae taenia uittae

Seemed the wrought gold about her neck, or the long silken string

innectitque comas et membris lubricus errat.

That knit her hair, and slippery soft it glided o'er her limbs.

ac dum prima lues udo sublapsa ueneno

And now while first the plague begins, and soft the venom swims,

pertemptat sensus atque ossibus implicat ignem 355

Touching her sense, and round her bones the fiery web is pressed,

necdum animus toto percepit pectore flammam,

Nor yet her soul had caught the flame through all her poisoned
breast,

mollius et solito matrum de more locuta est,

Still soft, and e'en as mothers will, she spake the word and said

multa super natae lacrimans Phrygiisque hymenaeis:

Her woes about her daughter's case, and Phrygian bridal bed.

'exsulibusne datur ducenda Lauinia Teucris,

"To Teucrian outcasts shall our maid, Lavinia, wedded be?

o genitor, nec te miseret nataeque tuique? 360

O Father, hast thou nought of ruth of her, forsooth, and thee?

nec matris miseret, quam primo Aquilone relinquet

Nor of the mother, whom that man forsworn shall leave behind,

perfidus alta petens abducta uirgine praedo?

Bearing the maiden o'er the sea with the first northern wind?

at non sic Phrygius penetrat Lacedaemona pastor,
 Nay, not e'en so the Phrygian herd pierced Lacedæmon's fold,
 Ledæamque Helenam Troianas uexit ad urbes?
 And bore Ledæan Helen off unto the Trojan hold.
 quid tua sancta fides? quid cura antiqua tuorum 365
 Nay, where is gone thine hallowed faith, thy kinsomeness of yore?
 et consanguineo totiens data dextera Turno?
 Thine hand that oft to Turnus' hand, thy kinsman, promise bore?
 si gener externa petitur de gente Latinis,
 Lo, if we needs must seek a son strange to the Latin folk,
 idque sedet, Faunique premunt te iussa parentis,
 And Father Faunus' words on thee are e'en so strait a yoke,
 omnem equidem sceptris terram quae libera nostris
 I deem, indeed, that every land free from our kingdom's sway
 dissidet externam reor et sic dicere diuos. 370
 Is stranger land, and even so I deem the Gods would say:
 et Turno, si prima domus repetatur origo,
 And Turnus comes, if we shall seek beginning of his race.
 Inachus Acrisiusque patres mediaeque Mycenæ.'
 From Inachus, Acrisius old, and mid Mycenæ's place."
 His ubi nequiquam dictis experta Latinum
 But when she thus had said in vain, and saw Latinus still
 contra stare uidet, penitusque in uiscera lapsum
 Withstand her: when all inwardly the maddening serpent's ill
 serpentis furiale malum totamque pererrat, 375
 Hath smitten through her heart of hearts and passed through all her frame,
 tum uero infelix ingentibus excita monstris
 Then verily the hapless one, with dreadful things aflame,
 immensam sine more furit lymphata per urbem.
 Raves through the city's length and breadth in God-wrought agonies:
 ceu quondam torto uolitans sub uerbere turbo,
 As 'neath the stroke of twisted lash at whiles the whip-top flies,
 quem pueri magno in gyro uacua atria circum
 Which lads all eager for the game drive, ever circling wide
 intenti ludo exercent — ille actus habena 380
 Round some void hall; it, goaded on beneath the strip of hide,

curuatis fertur spatiis; stupet inscia supra
From circle unto circle goes; the silly childish throng
impubesque manus mirata uolubile buxum;
Still hanging o'er, and wondering how the box-tree spins along,
dant animos plagae: non cursu segnior illo
The while their lashes make it live: no quieter she ran
per medias urbes agitur populosque ferocis.
Through the mid city, borne amid fierce hearts of many a man.
quin etiam in siluas simulato numine Bacchi 385
Then in the wilderness she feigns the heart that Bacchus fills,
maius adorta nefas maioremque orsa furorem
And stirs a greater madness up, beginning greater ills,
euolat et natam frondosis montibus abdit,
And mid the leafy mountain-side her daughter hides away,
quo thalamum eripiat Teucris taedasque moretur,
To snatch her from the Teucrian bed, the bridal torch to stay;
euhoe Bacche fremens, solum te uirgine dignum
Foaming: "Hail, Bacchus! thou alone art worthy lord to wed
uociferans: etenim mollis tibi sumere thyrsos, 390
This virgin thing: for thee she takes the spear's soft-fruited head,
te lustrare choro, sacrum tibi pascere crinem.
For thee she twinkleth dancing feet, and feeds her holy hair."
fama uolat, furiisque accensas pectore matres
The rumour flies, and one same rage all mother-folk doth bear,
idem omnis simul ardor agit noua quaerere tecta.
Heart-kindled by the Fury's ill, to roofs of all unrest:
deseruere domos, uentis dant colla comasque;
They flee the house and let the wind play free o'er hair and breast:
ast aliae tremulis ululatibus aethera complent 395
While others fill the very heavens with shrilly quivering wail,
pampineasque gerunt incinctae pellibus hastas.
And skin-clad toss about the spear the wreathing vine-leaves veil:
ipsa inter medias flagrantem feruida pinum
But she ablaze amidst of them upholds the fir-lit flame,
sustinet ac natae Turnique canit hymenaeos
And sings her daughter's bridal song, and sings of Turnus' name,
sanguineam torquens aciem, toruumque repente

Rolling her blood-shot eyes about; then eager suddenly
clamat: 'io matres, audite, ubi quaeque, Latinae: 400
She shouts: "Ho, mothers! Latin wives, wherever ye may be,
si qua piis animis manet infelicis Amatae
Hearken! if in your righteous souls abideth any love
gratia, si iuris materni cura remordet,
Of lorn Amata; if your souls a mother's right may move,
soluite crinalis uittas, capite orgia mecum.'
Cast off the fillets from your locks, with me the madness bear."
talem inter siluas, inter deserta ferarum
So through the woodland wilderness and deserts of the deer
reginam Allecto stimulis agit undique Bacchi. 405
Alecto drave the Queen around, with Bacchus' stings beset
Postquam uisa satis primos acuisse furores
But when she deemed enough was wrought that rage of hers to whet,
consiliumque omnemque domum uertisse Latini,
And that Latinus' rede and house was utterly undone,
protinus hinc fuscis tristis dea tollitur alis
Forthwith away on dusky wings is borne that evil one
audacis Rutuli ad muros, quam dicitur urbem
Unto the bold Rutulian's wall: a city, saith the tale,
Acrisioneis Danae fundasse colonis 410
Raised up by Danaë for her Acrisian folks' avail
praecipiti delata Noto. locus Ardea quondam
When on the hurrying South she fled: Ardea in days of yore
dictus auis, et nunc magnum manet Ardea nomen,
Our fathers called it; nor as yet is name thereof passed o'er,
sed fortuna fuit. tectis hic Turnus in altis
Though wealth be gone: there Turnus lay within his house on high,
iam mediam nigra carpebat nocte quietem.
And midmost sleep of dusky night was winning peacefully.
Allecto toruam faciem et furialia membra 415
When there Alecto cruel face and hellish body shed,
exuit, in uultus sese transformat anilis
And to an ancient woman's like her shape she fashioned,
et frontem obscenam rugis arat, induit albos
Wrinkling her forehead villanous; and hoary coifed hair

cum uitta crinis, tum ramum innectit oliuae;
 She donned, and round about it twined the olive-garland fair,
 fit Calybe Iunonis anus templique sacerdos,
 And seemed the ancient Calybé of Juno's holy place;
 et iuueni ante oculos his se cum uocibus offert: 420
 And so with such a word she thrust before the hero's face:
 'Turne, tot incassum fusos patiere labores,
 "Turnus, and wilt thou bear it now, such labour spent in vain,
 et tua Dardaniis transcribi sceptrum colonis?
 And give thy folk to Dardan men, the outcasts of the main?
 rex tibi coniugium et quaesitas sanguine dotes
 The King gainsays thy wedding couch, and dowry justly bought
 abnegat, externusque in regnum quaeritur heres.
 By very blood, and for his throne an outland heir is sought.
 i nunc, ingratis offer te, inrise, periclis; 425
 Go, thou bemocked, and thrust thyself mid perils none shall thank;
 Tyrrhenas, i, sterne acies, tege pace Latinos.
 For cloaking of the Latin peace o'erthrow the Tuscan rank!
 haec adeo tibi me, placida cum nocte iaceres,
 The mighty Saturn's Seed herself hath bid me openly
 ipsa palam fari omnipotens Saturnia iussit.
 To bear thee this, while thou in peace of middle night shouldst lie.
 quare age et armari pubem portisque moueri
 So up! be merry! arm the lads! bid wend from out the gate.
 laetus in arua para, et Phrygios qui flumine pulchro 430
 Up, up, and arm! The Phrygian folk who in the fair stream wait,
 consedere duces pictasque exure carinas.
 Burn thou their dukes of men with fire! burn every painted keel!
 caelestum uis magna iubet. rex ipse Latinus,
 'Tis heavenly might that biddeth this. Let King Latinus feel
 ni dare coniugium et dicto parere fatetur,
 Thy strength, and learn to know at last what meaneth Turnus' sword,
 sentiat et tandem Turnum experiatur in armis.'
 Unless he grant the wedding yet, and hold his plighted word."
 Hic iuuenis uatem inridens sic orsa uicissim 435
 But therewithal the young man spake, and answered her in scorn:
 ore refert: 'classis inuectas Thybridis undam

“Thou errest: tidings of all this failed nowise to be borne
non, ut rere, meas effugit nuntius auris;
Unto mine ears, how stranger ships the Tiber-flood beset.
ne tantos mihi finge metus. nec regia Iuno
Nay, make me not so sore afeared, — belike she minds me yet,
immemor est nostri.

Juno, the Queen of Heaven aloft.

sed te uicta situ uerique effeta senectus, 440

Nay, mother, Eld the mouldy-dull, the empty of all sooth,
o mater, curis nequiquam exercet, et arma
Tormenteth thee with cares in vain, and mid the arms of kings
regum inter falsa uatem formidine ludit.

Bemocks the seer with idle shows of many fearful things.

cura tibi diuum effigies et templa tueri;

Nay, 'tis for thee to watch God's house, and ward the images,
bella uiri pacemque gerent quis bella gerenda.'

And let men deal with peace and war; for they were born for these.”

Talibus Allecto dictis exarsit in iras. 445

But at such word Alecto's wrath in utter fire outbrake;

at iuueni oranti subitus tremor occupat artus,

A tremor ran throughout his limbs e'en as the word he spake;

deriguere oculi: tot Erinys sibilat hydrys

Fixed stared his eyes, the Fury hissed with Serpent-world so dread,

tantaque se facies aperit; tum flammea torquens

And such a mighty body woke: then rolling in her head

lumina cunctantem et quaerentem dicere plura

Her eyes of flame, she thrust him back, stammering and seeking speech,

reppulit, et geminos erexit crinibus anguis, 450

As on her head she reared aloft two adders each by each,

uerberaque insonuit rabidoque haec addidit ore:

And sounded all her fearful whip, and cried from raving mouth:

'en ego uicta situ, quam ueri effeta senectus

“Lo, I am she, the mouldy-dull, whom Eld, the void of sooth,

arma inter regum falsa formidine ludit.

Bemocks amid the arms of kings with empty lies of fear!

respice ad haec: adsum dirarum ab sede sororum,

Look, look! for from the Sisters' House, the Dread Ones, come I here;

bella manu letumque gero.' 455

And war and death I have in hand."

sic effata facem iuueni coniecit et atro

She spake, and on the youth she cast her torch and set its blaze,
lumine fumantis fixit sub pectore taedas.

A mirky gleam of smoke-wreathed flame, amidmost of his heart:

olli somnum ingens rumpit pauor, ossaque et artus

And mighty dread his slumber brake, and forth from every part,
perfundit toto proruptus corpore sudor.

From bones and body, burst the sweat, and o'er his limbs 'gan fall;
arma amens fremit, arma toro tectisque requirit; 460

And wild he cries for arms, and seeks for arms from bed and wall:
saeuit amor ferri et scelerata insania belli,

The sword-lust rageth in his soul, and wicked thirst of war.

ira super: magno ueluti cum flamma sonore

So was it as at whiles it is, when with a mighty roar

uirgea suggeritur costis undantis aeni

The twiggen flame goes up about the hollow side of brass;
exsultantque aestu latices, furit intus aquai

The water leapeth up therewith, within comes rage to pass,
fumidus atque alte spumis exuberat amnis, 465

The while the cloudy foaming flood spouts up a bubbling stir,
nec iam se capit unda, uolat uapor ater ad auras.

Until the sea refrains no more; the black cloud flies in air.

ergo iter ad regem polluta pace Latinum

So to the dukes of men he shows how peace hath evil end,

indicit primis iuuenum et iubet arma parari,

And on Latinus biddeth them in weed of war to wend;

tutari Italiam, detrudere finibus hostem;

That they may save their Italy, and thrust the foemen forth.

se satis ambobus Teucrisque uenire Latinisque. 470

And he will fare unto the field more than the twain of worth,

haec ubi dicta dedit diuosque in uota uocauit,

Teucrians and Latins: so he saith, and calls the Gods to aid.

certatim sese Rutuli exhortantur in arma.

Then eagerly Rutulian men to war and battle bade:
hunc decus egregium formae mouet atque iuuentae,
For some his glorious beauty stirred, and some his youth drave on,
hunc atque reges, hunc claris dextera factis.
And some his sires; and some were moved by deeds his hand had done.

Dum Turnus Rutulos animis audacibus implet, ⁴⁷⁵

But while he fills Rutulian souls with love for glorious things,

Allecto in Teucros Stygiis se concitat alis,

Alecto to the Teucrians wends on Stygian-fashioned wings,

arte noua, speculata locum, quo litore pulcher

With fresh guile spying out the place where goodly on the shore,
insidiis cursuque feras agitabat Iulus.

With toils and speed 'gainst woodland beasts, Iulus waged the war.

hic subitam canibus rabiem Cocytia uirgo

Here for his hounds Cocytus' Maid a sudden madness blent,

obicit et noto naris contingit odore, ⁴⁸⁰

Crossing the nostrils of the beasts with long familiar scent,

ut ceruum arduos agerent; quae prima laborum

As eagerly they chased a hart. This first began the toil,

causa fuit belloque animos accendit agrestis.

And kindled field-abiders' souls to war and deadly broil.

ceruus erat forma praestanti et cornibus ingens,

There was a hart most excellent, a noble hornèd thing,

Tyrrhidae pueri quem matris ab ubere raptum

That Tyrrheus' sons had stolen from its own dam's cherishing, nutribant Tyrrhusque pater, cui regia parent ⁴⁸⁵

And fostered: he, their father, had the kingly herd to heed,

armenta et late custodia credita campi.

And well was trusted far and wide, the warden of the mead.

adsuetum imperiis soror omni Siluia cura

But to their sister Sylvia's hand the beast was used, and oft

mollibus intexens ornabat cornua sertis,

She decked him lovingly, and wreathed his horns with leafage soft,

pectebatque ferum puroque in fonte lauabat.

And combed him oft, and washed him oft in water of the well.

ille manum patiens mensaeque adsuetus erili ⁴⁹⁰

Tame to her hand, and used enow amid manfolk to dwell,
 errabat siluis rursusque ad limina nota
 He strayed the woods; but day by day betook him evermore,
 ipse domum sera quamuis se nocte ferebat.
 Of his own will at twilight-tide, to that familiar door.
 hunc procul errantem rabidae uenantis Iuli
 Him now Iulus' hunting hounds mad-eager chanced to stir
 commouere canes, fluuio cum forte secundo
 Afar from home, and floating whiles adown the river fair,
 deflueret ripaque aestus uiridante leuaret. 495
 Or whiles on bank of grassy green beguiling summer's flame.
 ipse etiam eximiae laudis succensus amore
 Therewith Ascanius, all afire with lust of noble fame,
 Ascanius curuo derexit spicula cornu;
 Turned on the beast the spiky reed from out the curvèd horn;
 nec dextrae erranti deus afuit, actaque multo
 Nor lacked the God to his right hand; on was the arrow borne
 perque uterum sonitu perque ilia uenit harundo.
 With plenteous whirr, and smote the hart through belly and through flank;
 saucius at quadripes nota intra tecta refugit 500
 Who, wounded, to the well-known house fled fast, and groaning shrank
 successitque gemens stabulis, questuque cruentus
 Into the stalls of his abode, and bloody, e'en as one
 atque imploranti similis tectum omne replebat.
 Who cries for pity, filled the place with woefulness of moan.
 Siluia prima soror palmis percussa lacertos
 Then first the sister Sylvia there, smiting her breast, cried out,
 auxilium uocat et duros conclamat agrestis.
 Calling to aid the hardy hearts of field-folk thereabout;
 olli (pestis enim tacitis latet aspera siluis) 505
 And swifter than the thought they came; for still that bitter Bane improuisi adsunt, hic torre armatus obusto, Lurked in the silent woods: this man a half-burned brand did gain
 stipitis hic grauidi nodis; quod cuique repertum
 For weapon; that a knotted stake: whate'er came first to hand,

rimanti telum ira facit. uocat agmina Tyrrhus,
 The seeker's wrath a weapon made: there Tyrrheus cheers his band,
 quadrifidam quercum cuneis ut forte coactis
 Come from the cleaving of an oak with foursome driven wedge,
 scindebat rapta spirans immane securi. 510
 Panting and fierce he tossed aloft the wood-bill's grinded edge.
 At saeua e speculis tempus dea nacta nocendi
 But she, that Evil, on the watch, noting the death anigh,
 ardua tecta petit stabuli et de culmine summo
 Climbs up upon the stall-house loft, and from its roof on high
 pastorale canit signum cornuque recuruo
 Singeth the shepherd's gathering sign, and through the crookèd horn
 Tartaream intendit uocem, qua protinus omne
 Sends voice of hell: and e'en therewith, as forth the notes were borne,
 contremuit nemus et siluae insonuere profundae; 515
 The forest trembled; the deep woods resounded; yea afar
 audiit et Triuia longe lacus, audiit amnis
 The mere of Trivia heard the sound, and that white water, Nar, sulphurea Nar albus aqua fontesque Velini,
 That bears the sulphur down its stream; the Veline well-springs heard:
 et trepidae matres pressere ad pectora natos.
 Mothers caught up their little ones, and trembled sore afeard.
 tum uero ad uocem celeres, qua bucina signum
 Then hurrying at the voice sent forth by the dread war-horn's song,
 dira dedit, raptis concurrunt undique telis 520
 The hardy-hearted folk of fields from everywhither throng,
 indomiti agricolae, nec non et Troia pubes
 With weapons caught in haste: and now the Trojan folk withal
 Ascanio auxilium castris effundit apertis.
 Pour from their opened gates, and on to aid Ascanius fall.
 derexere acies. non iam certamine agresti
 And there the battle is arrayed; and now no war they wake,
 stipitibus duris agitur sudibus praeustis,
 Where field-folk strive with knotty club or fire-behardened stake;
 sed ferro ancipiti decernunt atraque late 525

But with the two-edged sword they strive: the meadows bristle black
horrescit strictis seges ensibus, aeraque fulgent

With harvest of the naked steel: the gleaming brass throws back
sole lacessita et lucem sub nubila iactant:

Unto the clouds that swim aloft the smiting of the sun:

fluctus uti primo coepit cum albescere uento,

As when the whitening of the wind across the flood doth run,
paulatim sese tollit mare et altius undas

And step by step the sea gets up, and higher heaps the wave,
erigit, inde imo consurgit ad aethera fundo. 530

Until heaven-high it sweeps at last up from its lowest cave.

hic iuuenis primam ante aciem stridente sagitta,

And here, by dint of whistling shaft in forefront of the fight,
natorum Tyrrhi fuerat qui maximus, Almo,

A youth, e'en Tyrrheus' eldest son, by name of Almo hight,
sternitur; haesit enim sub gutture uulnus et udae

Was laid alow: there in his throat the reedy bane abode,
uocis iter tenuemque inclusit sanguine uitam.

And shut with blood the path of speech, the tender life-breath's road.
corpora multa uirum circa seniorque Galaesus, 535

And many a body fell around: there, thrusting through the press
dum paci medium se offert, iustissimus unus

With peaceful word, Galæsus old died in his righteousness;
qui fuit Ausoniisque olim ditissimus aruis:

Most just of men; most rich erewhile of all Ausonian land:
quinque greges illi balantum, quina redibant

Five flocks of bleaters once he had: five-fold came home to hand
armenta, et terram centum uertebat aratris.

His herds of neat: an hundred ploughs turned up the earth for him.

Atque ea per campos aequo dum Marte geruntur, 540

But while they wrought these deeds of Mars mid doubtful fate and dim,

promissi dea facta potens, ubi sanguine bellum

The Goddess, strong in pledge fulfilled, since she the war had stained
imbuit et primae commisit funera pugnae,

With very blood, and death of men in that first battle gained,
deserit Hesperiam et caeli conuersa per auras

Leaveth the Westland, and upborne along the hollow sky,
 Iunonem uictrix adfatur uoce superba:
 To Juno such a word of pride sets forth victoriously:
 'en, perfecta tibi bello discordia tristi; 545
 "Lo thou, the discord fashioned fair with misery of fight!
 dic in amicitiam coeant et foedera iungant.
 Come let them join in friendship now, and troth together plight!
 quandoquidem Ausonio respersi sanguine Teucros,
 But now, since I have sprinkled Troy with that Ausonian blood,
 hoc etiam his addam, tua si mihi certa uoluntas:
 I will do more, if thereunto thy will abideth good;
 finitimas in bella feram rumoribus urbes,
 For all the cities neighbouring to war my word shall bring,
 accendamque animos insani Martis amore 550
 And in their souls the love of Mars and maddening fire shall fling
 undique ut auxilio ueniant; spargam arma per agros.'
 Till all strike in, and all the lea crops of my sowing bear."
 tum contra Iuno: 'terrorum et fraudis abunde est:
 But Juno answered: "Full enough there is of fraud and fear;
 stant belli causae, pugnatur comminus armis,
 Fast stands the stumbling-block of war, and hand to hand they fight:
 quae fors prima dedit sanguis nouus imbuat arma.
 The sword that Fate first gave to them hath man's death stained aright
 talia coniugia et talis celebrent hymenaeos 555
 Forsooth let King Latinus now and Venus' noble son
 egregium Veneris genus et rex ipse Latinus.
 Join hand to hand, and hold high feast for such a wedding won.
 te super aetherias errare licentius auras
 But thee, the Father of the Gods, lord of Olympus high,
 haud pater ille uelit, summi regnator Olympi.
 Will nowise have a-wandering free beneath the worldly sky:
 cede locis. ego, si qua super fortuna laborum est,
 Give place; and whatso more of toil Fortune herein may make
 ipsa regam.' talis dederat Saturnia uoces; 560 Myself shall rule." Such words as these Saturnian Juno spake,
 illa autem attollit stridentis anguibus alas

And on the wing the Evil rose, with snaky sweeping whirr, Cocytique petit sedem supera ardua linquens.
Seeking Cocytus' house, and left the light world's steep of air.
est locus Italiae medio sub montibus altis,
Midst Italy a place there is 'neath mountains high set down,
nobilis et fama multis memoratus in oris,
Whose noble tale in many a land hath fame and great renown,
Amsancti ualles; densis hunc frondibus atrum 565
The valley of Amsanctus called, hemmed in by woody steep
urget utrimque latus nemoris, medioque fragosus
On either side, and through whose midst a rattling stream doth leap,
dat sonitum saxi et torto uertice torrens.
With clattering stones and eddying whirl: a strange den gapeth there,
hic specus horrendum et saeui spiracula Ditis
The very breathing-hole of Dis; an awful place of fear,
monstrantur, ruptoque ingens Acheronte uorago
A mighty gulf of baneful breath that Acheron hath made
pestiferas aperit fauces, quis condita Erinys, 570
When he brake forth: therein as now the baneful Fury laid
inuisum numen, terras caelumque leuabat.
Her hated godhead, lightening so the load of earth and heaven.
Nec minus interea extremam Saturnia bello
No less meanwhile did Saturn's Queen still turn her hand to leaven
imponit regina manum. ruit omnis in urbem
That war begun. The shepherd folk rush from the battle-wrack
pastorum ex acie numerus, caesosque reportant
Into the city of the king, bearing their dead aback,
Almonem puerum foedatique ora Galaesi, 575
Almo the lad, Galæsus slain with changed befoulèd face.
implorantque deos obtestanturque Latinum.
They bid Latinus witness bear, and cry the Gods for grace.
Turnus adest medioque in crimine caedis et igni
Turnus is there, and loads the tale of bale-fire and the sword,
terrorem ingeminat: Teucros in regna uocari,
And swells the fear: "The land shall have a Teucrian host for lord:
stirpem admisceri Phrygiam, se limine pelli.
With Phrygians shall ye foul your race and drive me from your door.”

tum quorum attonitae Baccho nemora auia matres 580

Then they, whose mothers midst the wood God Bacchus overbore,
insultant thiasis (neque enim leue nomen Amatae)

To lead the dance — Amata’s name being held in nowise light —
undique collecti coeunt Martemque fatigant.

Together draw from every side, and weary for the fight.

ilicet infandum cuncti contra omina bellum,

Yea, all with froward heart and voice cry out for war and death,
contra fata deum peruerso numine poscunt.

That signs of heaven forbid so sore, that high God gainsayeth,
certatim regis circumstant tecta Latini; 585

And King Latinus’ house therewith beset they eagerly;

ille uelut pelago rupes immota resistit,

But he unmoved against them stands as crag amid the sea;

ut pelagi rupes magno ueniente fragore,

As crag amid the sea, that stands unmoved and huge to meet
quae sese multis circum latrantibus undis

The coming crash, while plenteously the waves bark round its feet:
mole tenet; scopuli nequiquam et spumea circum

Vain is the roaring on the rocks and rattling shingly crash,
saxa fremunt laterique inlisa refunditur alga. 590

The wrack from off its smitten sides falls down amid the wash.
uerum ubi nulla datur caecum exsuperare potestas

But when no might is given him their blindness to o’ercome,
consilium, et saeuae nutu Iunonis eunt res,

And by the road fell Juno would the matter must win home,
multa deos aurasque pater testatus inanis

Sore called the father on the Gods and emptiness of air:

‘frangimur heu fatis’ inquit ‘ferimurque procella!

“Ah, broken by the Fates,” he cried, “amid the storm we bear!
ipsi has sacrilego pendetis sanguine poenas, 595

Ye with your godless blood yourselves shall pay the penalty,
o miseri. te, Turne, nefas, te triste manebit

Unhappy men! But Turnus, thou, thine ill deed bideth thee
supplicium, uotisque deos uenerabere seris.

With woe enough, and overlate the Gods shalt thou adore.

nam mihi parta quies, omnisque in limine portus
 For me, my rest is gained, my foot the threshold passeth o'er;
 funere felici spoliis. nec plura locutus
 Yet is my happy ending spilled." Nor further would he say;
 saepsit se tectis rerumque reliquit habenas. 600
 But, hedged within his house, he cast the reins of rule away.
 Mos erat Hesperio in Latio, quem protinus urbes
 In Latium of the Westland world a fashion was whilome,
 Albanæ coluere sacrum, nunc maxima rerum
 Thence hallowed of the Alban folk, held holy thence by Rome,
 Roma colit, cum prima mouent in proelia Martem,
 Earth's mightiest thing: and this they used what time so'er they woke
 siue Getis inferre manu lacrimabile bellum
 Mars unto battle; whether they against the Getic folk,
 Hyrcanisue Arabisue parant, seu tendere ad Indos 605
 Ind, Araby, Hyrcanian men, fashioned the woeful wrack,
 Auroramque sequi Parthosque reposcere signa:
 Or mid the dawn from Parthian men the banners bade aback.
 sunt geminae Belli portae (sic nomine dicunt)
 For twofold are the Gates of War — still bear they such a name —
 religione sacrae et saeui formidine Martis;
 Hallowed by awe of Mars the dread, and worship of his fame,
 centum aerei claudunt uectes aeternaque ferri
 Shut by an hundred brazen bolts, and iron whose avail
 robora, nec custos absistit limine Ianus. 610
 Shall never die: nor ever thence doth door-ward Janus fail.
 has, ubi certa sedet patribus sententia pugnae,
 Now when amid the Fathers' hearts fast is the war-rede grown,
 ipse Quirinali trabea cinctuque Gabino
 The Consul, girt in Sabine wise, and with Quirinus gown
 insignis reserat stridentia limina consul,
 Made glorious, doth himself unbar the creaking door-leaves great,
 ipse uocat pugnas; sequitur tum cetera pubes,
 And he himself cries on the war; whom all men follow straight,
 aereaque adsensu conspirant cornua rauco. 615
 The while their brazen yea-saying the griding trumpets blare.

hoc et tum Aeneadis indicere bella Latinus
 In e'en such wise Latinus now was bidden to declare
 more iubebatur tristisque recludere portas.
 The battle 'gainst Æneas' folk, and ope the gates of woe.
 abstinuit tactu pater auersusque refugit
 But from their touch the Father shrank, and fleeing lest he do
 foeda ministeria, et caecis se condidit umbris.
 The evil deed, in eyeless dark he hideth him away.
 tum regina deum caelo delapsa morantis 620
 Then slipped the Queen of Gods from heaven, and ended their delay;
 impulit ipsa manu portas, et cardine uerso
 For back upon their hinges turned the Seed of Saturn bore
 Belli ferratos rumpit Saturnia postis.
 The tarrying leaves, and burst apart the iron Gates of War,
 ardet inexcita Ausonia atque immobilis ante;
 And all Ausonia yet unstirred brake suddenly ablaze:
 pars pedes ire parat campis, pars arduus altis
 And some will go afoot to field, and some will wend their ways
 puluerulentus equis furit; omnes arma requirunt. 625
 Aloft on horses dusty-fierce: all seek their battle-gear.
 pars leuis clipeos et spicula lucida tergent
 Some polish bright the buckler's face and rub the pike-point clear
 aruina pingui subiguntque in cote securis;
 With fat of sheep; and many an axe upon the wheel is worn.
 signaque ferre iuuat sonitusque audire tubarum.
 They joy to rear the banners up and hearken to the horn.
 quinque adeo magnae positae incudibus urbes
 And now five mighty cities forge the point and edge anew
 tela nouant, Atina potens Tiburque superbum, 630
 On new-raised anvils; Tibur proud, Atina staunch to do, Ardea Crustumerique et turrigeræ Antemnae.
 Ardea and Crustumerium's folk, Antemnæ castle-crowned.
 tegmina tuta cauant capitum flectuntque salignas
 They hollow helming for the head; they bend the withe around
 umbonum cratis; alii thoracas aenos
 For buckler-boss: or other some beat breast-plates of the brass,
 aut leuis ocreas lento ducunt argento;

Or from the toughened silver bring the shining greaves to pass.
 uomeris huc et falcis honos, huc omnis aratri 635
 Now fails all prize of share and hook, all yearning for the plough;
 cessit amor; recoquunt patrios fornacibus ensis.
 The swords their fathers bore afield anew they smithy now.
 classica iamque sonant, it bello tessera signum;
 Now is the gathering-trumpet blown; the battle-token speeds;
 hic galeam tectis trepidus rapit, ille trementis
 And this man catches helm from wall; this thrusteth foaming steeds
 ad iuga cogit equos, clipeumque auroque trilicem
 To collar; this his shield does on, and mail-coat threesome laid
 loricam induitur fidoque accingitur ense. 640
 Of golden link, and girdeth him with ancient trusty blade.
 Pandite nunc Helicon, deae, cantusque mouete,
 O Muses, open Helicon, and let your song awake
 qui bello exciti reges, quae quemque secutae
 To tell what kings awoke to war, what armies for whose sake
 complerint campos acies, quibus Itala iam tum Filled up the meads; what men of war sweet mother Italy
 floruerit terra alma uiris, quibus arserit armis;
 Bore unto flower and fruit as then; what flame of fight ran high:
 et meministis enim, diuiae, et memorare potestis; 645
 For ye remember, Holy Ones, and ye may tell the tale;
 ad nos uix tenuis famae perlabitur aura.
 But we — a slender breath of fame scarce by our ears may sail.
 Primus init bellum Tyrrhenis asper ab oris
 Mezentius first, the foe of Gods, fierce from the Tuscan shore
 contemptor diuum Mezentius agminaque armat.
 Unto the battle wends his way, and armeth host of war:
 filius huic iuxta Lausus, quo pulchrior alter
 Lausus, his son, anigh him wends; — no lovelier man than he,
 non fuit excepto Laurentis corpore Turni; 650
 Save Turnus, the Laurentine-born, the crown of all to see. —
 Lausus, equum domitor debellatorque ferarum,
 Lausus, the tamer of the horse, the wood-deer's following bane,
 ducit Agyllina nequiquam ex urbe secutos
 Who led from Agyllina's wall a thousand men in vain.

mille uiros, dignus patriis qui laetior esset
Worthy was he to have more mirth than 'neath Mezentius' sway;
imperiis et cui pater haud Mezentius esset.
Worthy that other sire than he had given him unto day.
Post hos insignem palma per gramina curram 655
The goodly Aventinus next, glorious with palm of prize,
uictoresque ostentat equos satus Hercule pulchro
Along the grass his chariot shows and steeds of victories,
pulcher Auentinus, clipeoque insigne paternum
Sprung from the goodly Hercules, marked by his father's shield,
centum anguis cinctamque gerit serpentibus Hydram;
Where Hydra girded hundred-fold with adders fills the field:
collis Auentini silua quem Rhea sacerdos
Him Rhea the priestess on a day gave to the sun-lit earth,
furtuum partu sub luminis edidit oras, 660
On wooded bent of Aventine, in secret stolen birth;
mixta deo mulier, postquam Laurentia uictor
The woman mingled with a God, what time that, Geryon slain, Geryone exstincto Tirynthius attigit arua,
The conquering man of Tiryns touched the fair Laurentian plain,
Tyrrenoque boues in flumine lauit Hiberas.
And washed amidst the Tuscan stream the bulls Iberia bred.
pila manu saeuosque gerunt in bella dolones,
These bear in war the bitter glaive and darts with piled head:
et tereti pugnant mucrone uerunque Sabello. 665
With slender sword and Sabine staff the battle they abide;
ipse pedes, tegimen torquens immane leonis,
But he afoot and swinging round a monstrous lion's hide,
terribili impexum saeta cum dentibus albis
Whose bristly brow and terrible with sharp white teeth a-row
indutus capiti, sic regia tecta subibat,
Hooded his head, beneath the roof where dwelt the king did go
horridus Herculeoque umeros innexus amictu.
All shaggy rough, his shoulders clad with Herculean cloak.
Tum gemini fratres Tiburtia moenia linquunt, 670
Then next twin brethren wend away from Tibur's town and folk,
fratris Tiburti dictam cognomine gentem,

Whose brother-born, Tiburtus, erst had named that citied place;
 Catillusque acerque Coras, Argiua iuuentus,
 Catillus, eager Coras they, men of the Argive race;
 et primam ante aciem densa inter tela feruntur:
 In forefront of the battle-wood, mid thick of sleet they fare,
 ceu duo nubigenae cum uertice montis ab alto
 Like as two centaurs cloud-begot, that down the mountains bear,
 descendunt Centauri Homolen Othrymque niualem 675
 Leaving the high-piled Homole, and Othrys of the snow
 linquentes cursu rapido; dat euntibus ingens
 With hurrying hoofs: the mighty wood yields to them as they go;
 silua locum et magno cedunt uirgulta fragore.
 The tangle of the thicket-place before them gives aback.
 Nec Praenestinae fundator defuit urbis,
 Nor did Præneste's raiser-up from field of battle lack,
 Volcano genitum pecora inter agrestia regem
 That Cæculus, whom king of men mid cattle of the mead,
 inuentumque focus omnis quem credidit aetas, 680
 All ages of the world have trowed was Vulcan's very seed
 Caeculus. hunc legio late comitatur agrestis:
 Found on the hearth: from wide away gathered his rustic band:
 quique altum Praeneste uiri quique arua Gabinæ
 Those housed upon Præneste's steep; they of the Juno land
 Iunonis gelidumque Anienem et roscida riuis
 Of Gabii: abiders near cool Anio, they that dwell
 Hernica saxa colunt, quos diues Anagnia pascis,
 On Hernic rocks, the stream-bedewed: they whom thou feedest well,
 quos Amasene pater. non illis omnibus arma 685
 Anagnia rich; the foster-sons of Amasenus' coast.
 nec clipei currusue sonant; pars maxima glandes
 Not all had arms, or clash of shield, or war-wain; but the most
 liuentis plumbi spargit, pars spicula gestat
 Cast the grey plummets forth, and some, the dart in hand they bear,
 bina manu, fuluosque lupi de pelle galeros
 And on the head the fallow fell of woodland wolf they wear
 tegmen habent capiti; uestigia nuda sinistri
 For helming: now with all of them the left foot goes aground,

instituere pedis, crudus tegit altera pero. 690
 Naked and bare; but with the hide untanned the left is bound.
 At Messapus, equum domitor, Neptunia proles,
 Messapus lo, the horse-tamer, a child by Neptune won,
 quem neque fas igni cuiquam nec sternere ferro,
 Ne'er by the fire to be spilled, nor by the steel undone;
 iam pridem resides populos desuetaque bello
 His folk this long while sunk in peace, a battle-foolish band,
 agmina in arma uocat subito ferrumque retractat.
 He calleth suddenly to fight, and taketh sword in hand;
 hi Fescenninas acies Aequosque Faliscos, 695
 Æqui Falisci are of these, Fescennium's folk of fight,
 hi Soractis habent arces Flauiniaque arua
 These lie upon Flavinium's lea, and hold Soracte's hight,
 et Cimini cum monte lacum lucosque Capenos.
 And mere and mound of Ciminus, Capena's woodland broad.
 ibant aequati numero regemque canebant:
 With measured footfalls on they go, a-singing of their lord:
 ceu quondam niuei liquida inter nubila cycni
 As whiles the snowy swans will fare amid the world of cloud,
 cum sese e pastu referunt et longa canoros 700
 Returning from their feeding-field; far goes the song and loud,
 dant per colla modos, sonat amnis et Asia longe
 Whose notes along their necks they pour: the flood resounds, and all
 pulsa palus.
 The Asian marish beat with song.
 nec quisquam aeratas acies examine tanto
 Scarce might ye deem the brazen ranks of such a mighty host
 misceri putet, aeriam sed gurgite ab alto
 Were gathered there: but rather fowl a-driving toward the coast,
 urgeri uolucrum raucarum ad litora nubem. 705
 An airy cloud of hoarse-voiced things drawn from the wallowing sea.
 Ecce Sabinorum prisco de sanguine magnum
 Lo sprung from ancient Sabine blood comes Clausus presently,
 agmen agens Clausus magnique ipse agminis instar,
 Leading a mighty host, himself a very host of war;
 Claudia nunc a quo diffunditur et tribus et gens

From whom the Claudian tribe and race hath spread itself afar
 per Latium, postquam in partem data Roma Sabinis.
 Through Latium, since the Sabine folk was given a share in Rome:
 una ingens Amiterna cohors priscique Quirites, ⁷¹⁰
 With him the Amiternian host and old Quirites come;
 Ereti manus omnis oliuiferaeque Mutuscae;
 Eretus' host and they that keep Mutusca's olive gain,
 qui Nomentum urbem, qui Rosea rura Velini,
 The bidders in Nomentum's wall, and Veline Rosea's plain,
 qui Tetricae horrentis rupes montemque Seuerum
 The bristling rocks of Tetricæ and high Severus' flank,
 Casperiamque colunt Forulosque et flumen Himellae,
 Casperia and Foruli and wet Himella's bank;
 qui Tiberim Fabarimque bibunt, quos frigida misit ⁷¹⁵
 The drinkers of the Tiber-stream and Fabaris, and folk Nursia, et Ortinae classes populiue Latini,
 Cool Nursia sends, and Horta's troop, and men of Latin yoke;
 quosque secans infaustum interluit Allia nomen:
 And they whom hapless Allia parts with wash of waters wan:
 quam multi Libyco uoluuntur marmore fluctus
 As many as on Lybian main the tumbling waves roll on
 saeuus ubi Orion hibernis conditur undis,
 When fierce Orion falls to sleep in wintry waters' lair;
 uel cum sole nouo densae torrentur aristae ⁷²⁰
 Or thick as stand the wheaten ears the young sun burneth there
 aut Hermi campo aut Lyciae flauentibus aruis.
 On Hermus' plain or Lycia's lea a-yellowing for the hook:
 scuta sonant pulsuque pedum conterrita tellus.
 Loud clashed the shields, and earth afeared beneath their footfalls shook.
 Hinc Agamemnonius, Troiani nominis hostis,
 Halæsus, Agamemnon's blood, a foe to Troy inbred,
 curru iungit Halaesus equos Turnoque ferocis
 Next yoked the horses to the car; a thousand men he led,
 mille rapit populos, uertunt felicia Baccho ⁷²⁵
 Fierce folk for Turnus: they that hoe the vine-fair Massic soil;
 Massica qui rastris, et quos de collibus altis

And they that from their lofty hills adown unto the broil
Aurunci misere patres Sidicinaque iuxta
Aruncan fathers sent, and they of Sidicinum's lea;
aequora, quique Cales linquunt amnisque uadosi
All who leave Cales, all whose homes beside Vulturnus be,
accola Volturni, pariterque Saticulus asper
The shoally water: with them went Saticula's fierce band,
Oscorumque manus. teretes sunt aclydes illis 730
And host of Oscans: slender shafts are weapons of their hand,
tela, sed haec lento mos est aptare flagello.
Which same to toughened casting-thong amid the fight they tie;
laeuas caetra tegit, falcati comminus enses.
With bucklered left and scanty blade they come to blows anigh.
Nec tu carminibus nostris indictus abibis,
Nor, Oebalus, shalt thou unsung from this our story fail,
Oebale, quem generasse Telon Sebethide nympha
Whom Telon on nymph Sebethis begat as tells the tale
fertur, Teleboum Capreas cum regna teneret, 735
When Teleboan Capreae he reigned o'er waxen old;
iam senior; patriis sed non et filius aruis
Whose son might not abide to sit within his father's fold;
contentus late iam tum dicione premebat
But even then held neath his sway the country far and wide,
Sarrastis populos et quae rigat aequora Sarnus,
Sarrastes' folk, and all the plain along the Sarnus side.
quique Rufra Batulumque tenent atque arua Celemnae, Celenna's lea, and Batulum, and folk of Rufra's town,
et quos maliferae despectant moenia Abellae, 740
And those on whom Abella's walls, the apple-rich, look down.
Teutonico ritu soliti torquere cateias;
But these are wont to hurl the spear after the Teuton wise,
tegmina quis capitum raptus de subere cortex
Their heads are helmed with e'en such bark as on the holm-oak lies:
aerataeque micant peltae, micat aereus ensis.
All brazen-wrought their targets gleam, their brazen sword-blades flash.
Et te montosae misere in proelia Nersae,

'Twas Nursæ in the heart of hills sent thee to battle-clash,
 Vfens, insignem fama et felicibus armis, 745
 O Ufens, well renowned of fame, and rich in battle's grace;
 horrida praecipue cui gens adsuetaque multo
 Whose folk are roughest lived of men, eager for woodland chase;
 uenatu nemorum, duris Aequicula glæbis.
 Æquiculi they hight; who dwell on land of little gain,
 armati terram exercent semperque recentis
 And ever armed they till the earth, and ever are they fain
 conuectare iuuat praedas et uiuere rapto.
 To drive the spoil from hour to hour, and live upon the prey.
 Quin et Marruua uenit de gente sacerdos 750
 Then Umbro of the hardy heart went on the battle-way;
 fronde super galeam et felici comptus oliua
 Priest was he of Marruvian folk; about his helm was bent
 Archippi regis missu, fortissimus Vmbro,
 The happy olive, leaf and twig: him King Archippus sent:
 uipereo generi et grauitur spirantibus hydrys
 Wont was he with his hand and voice the bitter viper-kind
 spargere qui somnos cantuque manuque solebat,
 And water-worms of evil breath in bonds of sleep to bind;
 mulcebatque iras et morsus arte leuabat. 755
 And he would soothe the wrath of them, and dull their bite by craft,
 sed non Dardaniae medicari cuspidis ictum
 Yet nothing might he heal the hurt that came of Dardan shaft;
 eualuit neque eum iuuere in uulnera cantus
 Nay, nothing might the sleepy song avail against his bane, somniferi et Marsis quaesitae montibus herbae.
 All herbs on Marsian mountains plucked were nought thereto and vain.
 te nemus Angitia, uitrea te Fucinus unda,
 Anguitia's thicket wept for thee, Fucinus wave of glass,
 te liquidi fleuere lacus. 760
 The thin wan waters wept for thee.
 Ibat et Hippolyti proles pulcherrima bello,
 Most goodly Virbius went to war, Hippolytus' own son:
 Virbius, insignem quem mater Aricia misit,

His mother fair Aricia sent this battle-glorious one
 eductum Egeriae lucis umentia circum
 From fostering of Egeria's wood, from out the marish place
 litora, pinguis ubi et placabilis ara Dianae.
 Where standeth Dian's altar rich fulfilled of plenteous grace.
 namque ferunt fama Hippolytum, postquam arte nouercae 765
 For folk say, when Hippolytus, undone by step-dame's lie,
 occiderit patriasque explerit sanguine poenas
 Had paid unto his father's wrath that utmost penalty,
 turbatis distractus equis, ad sidera rursus
 He, piecemeal torn by maddened steeds, yet came aback to live
 aetheria et superas caeli uenisse sub auras,
 Beneath the starry firmament, and air that heaven doth give,
 Paeoniis reuocatum herbis et amore Dianae.
 Brought back to life by healing herbs and Dian's cherishing:
 tum pater omnipotens aliquem indignatus ab umbris 770
 Then the Almighty Father, wroth that any mortal thing
 mortalem infernis ad lumina surgere uitae,
 Should rise again to light of life from nether shadows wan,
 ipse repertorem medicinae talis et artis
 Beat down with bolt to Stygian wave the Phoebus-gotten man,
 fulmine Phoebigenam Stygias detrusit ad undas.
 The finder of such healing craft, the wise in such an art.
 at Triuia Hippolytum secretis alma recondit
 But Trivia's lovingkindness hid Hippolytus apart,
 sedibus et nymphae Egeriae nemorique relegat, 775
 And in the nymph Egeria's wood she held him many a day:
 solus ubi in siluis Italis ignobilis aeuum
 Alone in woods of Italy he wore his life away,
 exigeret uersoque ubi nomine Virbius esset.
 Deedless, his very name all changed, and Virbius by-named then.
 unde etiam templo Triuia lucisque sacratis
 So for this cause to Trivia's fane and hallowed grove do men
 cornipedes arcentur equi, quod litore currum
 Drive horn-foot steeds, because, o'ercome by sea-beasts dread of yore,
 et iuuenem monstribus pauidi effudere marinis. 780

Piecemeal the chariot and the man they strewed about the shore.
filius ardentis haud setius aequore campi
 No less his son would drive the steeds across the level plain
exercebat equos curruque in bella ruebat.
 For all their heat, and rush to war aloft in battle-wain.
Ipse inter primos praestanti corpore Turnus
 Now mid the forefront Turnus self of body excellent,
uertitur arma tenens et toto uertice supra est.
 Strode sword in hand: there by the head all others he outwent:
cui triplici crinita iuba galea alta Chimaeram 785
 His threefold crested helm upbore Chimæra in her wrath;
sustinet Aetnaeos efflantem faucibus ignis;
 Where very flame of Ætna's womb her jaws were pouring forth;
tam magis illa fremens et tristibus effera flammis
 And fiercer of her flames was she, and madder of her mood
quam magis effuso crudescunt sanguine pugnae.
 As bloomed the battle young again with more abundant blood.
at leuem clipeum sublatis cornibus Io
 But on the smoothness of his shield was golden Io shown
auro insignibat, iam saetis obsita, iam bos, 790
 With upraised horns, with hairy skin, a very heifer grown, —
argumentum ingens, et custos uirginis Argus,
 A noble tale; — and Argus there was wrought, the maiden's ward;
caelataque amnem fundens pater Inachus urna.
 And father Inachus from bowl well wrought the river poured.
insequitur nimbus peditum clipeataque totis
 A cloud of foot-folk follow him; his shielded people throng
agmina densentur campis, Argiuaque pubes
 The meadows all about; forth goes the Argive manhood strong;
Auruncaeque manus, Rutuli ueteresque Sicani, 795
 Aruncan men and Rutuli, Sicanians of old years,
et Sacrae acies et picti scuta Labici;
 Sacranian folk, Labicus' band the blazoned shield-bearers:
qui saltus, Tiberine, tuos sacrumque Numici Thy thicket-biders, Tiber; those that holy acres till litus arant Rutulosque exercent uomere collis
 Beside Numicus, those that plough Rutulian holt and hill,

Circaeumque iugum, quis Iuppiter Anxurus aruis
And ridges of Circæi: they whose meadows Anxur Jove
praesidet et uiridi gaudens Feronia luco; 800 Looks down on, where Feronia joys amid her fair green grove;
qua Saturae iacet atra palus gelidusque per imas
Where Satura's black marish lies, where chilly Ufens glides,
quaerit iter uallis atque in mare conditur Vfens.
Seeking a way through lowest dales, till in the sea he hides.
Hos super aduenit Volsca de gente Camilla
And after these from Volscian folk doth fair Camilla pass,
agmen agens equitum et florentis aere cateruas,
Leading a mighty host of horse all blossoming with brass;
bellatrix, non illa colo calathisque Mineruae 805
A warrior maid, whose woman's hands unused to ply the rock,
femineas adsueta manus, sed proelia uirgo
Unused to bear Minerva's crate, were wise in battle's shock.
dura pati cursuque pedum praeuertere uentos.
The very winds might she outgo with hurrying maiden feet,
illa uel intactae segetis per summa uolaret
Or speed across the topmost blades of tall unsmitten wheat,
gramina nec teneras cursu laessisset aristas,
Nor ever hurt the tender ears below her as she ran;
uel mare per medium fluctu suspensa tument 810
Or she might walk the middle sea, and cross the welter wan, ferret iter celeris nec tingeret aequare plantas.
Nor dip the nimble soles of her amid the wavy ways.
illam omnis tectis agrisque effusa iuuentus
From house and field the youth pours forth to wonder and to gaze;
turbaque miratur matrum et prospectat euntem,
The crowd of mothers stands at stare all marvelling, and beholds
attonitis inhians animis ut regius ostro
Her going forth; how kingly cloak of purple dye enfolds
uelet honos leuis umeros, ut fibula crinem 815
Her shining shoulders, how the clasp of gold knots up her hair,
auro internectat, Lyciam ut gerat ipsa pharetram
And how a quiver Lycian-wrought the Queen herself doth bear,
et pastorem praefixa cuspidem myrtum.

And shepherd's staff of myrtle-wood steel-headed to a spear.

LIBER VIII

BOOK VIII.

Vt belli signum Laurenti Turnus ab arce
When Turnus from Laurentum's burg the battle-sign upreared,
extulit et rauco strepuerunt cornua cantu,
When with their voices hard and shrill the gathering trumpets blare,
utque acris concussit equos utque impulit arma,
When he had stirred his war-steeds on and clashed his weed of war,
extemplo turbati animi, simul omne tumultu
All troubled were the minds of men, and midst of tumult sore
coniurat trepido Latium saeuitque iuuentus 5
All Latium swore the battle oath, and rage of men outbroke;
effera. ductores primi Messapus et Vfens Messapus then, and Ufens great, the dukes of warring folk,
contemptorque deum Mezentius undique cogunt
Mezentius, scorner of the Gods, these drive from every side
auxilia et latos uastant cultoribus agros.
The folk to war, and waste the fields of tillers far and wide.
mittitur et magni Venulus Diomedis ad urbem
And Venulus is sent withal to Diomedes' town
qui petat auxilium, et Latio consistere Teucros, 10
To pray for aid, and tell him how the Teucrians are come down
aductum Aenean classi uictosque penatis
On Latium: how Æneas comes with ship-host, carrying
inferre et fatis regem se dicere posci
His vanquished House-Gods, calling him the Fate-ordainèd King;
edoceat, multasque uiro se adiungere gentis
How many a folk of Italy hath joined the Dardan lord,
Dardanio et late Latio increbrescere nomen:
How that his name in Latin land is grown a mighty word —
quid struat his coeptis, quem, si fortuna sequatur, 15
'What thing the man will build from this, what way the prize of fight,
euentum pugnae cupiat, manifestus ipsi
If Fortune aid him he shall turn — through this thou see'st more light

quam Turno regi aut regi apparere Latino.
Than cometh to King Turnus yet or King Latinus eyes.
Talia per Latium. quae Laomedontius heros
So goes the world in Latium now, and noting how all lies,
cuncta uidens magno curarum fluctuat aestu,
The Trojan hero drifts adown a mighty tide of care,
atque animum nunc huc celerem nunc diuidit illuc 20
And hither now his swift thought speeds, now thither bids it fare,
in partisque rapit uarias perque omnia uersat,
And sends it diversely about by every way to slip:
sicut aquae tremulum labris ubi lumen aenis
As quivering light of water is in brazen vessel's lip,
sole repercussum aut radiantis imagine lunae
Smit by the sun, or casting back the image of the moon.
omnia peruolitat late loca, iamque sub auras
It flitteth all about the place, and rising upward soon
erigitur summique ferit laquearia tecti. 25
Smiteth the fashioned ceiling spread beneath the tiling steep.
nox erat et terras animalia fessa per omnis
Night fell, and over all the world the earthly slumber deep
alituum pecudumque genus sopor altus habebat,
Held weary things, the fowl of air, the cattle of the wold,
cum pater in ripa gelidique sub aetheris axe
And on the bank beneath the crown of heaven waxen cold,
Aeneas, tristi turbatus pectora bello,
Father Æneas, all his heart with woeful war oppressed,
procubuit seramque dedit per membra quietem. 30
Lay stretched along and gave his limbs the tardy meed of rest:
huic deus ipse loci fluuio Tiberinus amoeno
When lo, between the poplar-leaves the godhead of the place,
populeas inter senior se attollere frondes
E'en Tiber of the lovely stream, arose before his face,
uisus (eum tenuis glauco uelabat amictu
A veil of linen grey and thin the elder's body clad,
carbasus, et crinis umbrosa tegebat harundo),
And garlanding of shady sedge the tresses of him had;
tum sic adfari et curas his demere dictis: 35

And thus Æneas he bespeaks to take away his woe:
‘O sate gente deum, Troianam ex hostibus urbem
“O Seed of Gods, who bearest us Troy-town from midst the foe, qui reuehis nobis aeternaue Pergama seruas,
Who savest Pergamus new-born no more to die again,
exspectate solo Laurenti aruisque Latinis,
Long looked-for on Laurentine earth and fields of Latin men;
hic tibi certa domus, certi (ne absiste) penates.
This is your sure abiding-place, your House-Gods’ very stead;
neu belli terrere minis; tumor omnis et irae 40
Turn not, nor fear the battle-threats, for now hath fallen dead
concessere deum.

The swelling storm of godhead’s wrath.
iamque tibi, ne uana putes haec fingere somnum,
And lest thou think I forge for thee an idle dream of sleep,
litoreis ingens inuenta sub ilicibus sus
Amid the holm-oaks of the shore a great sow shalt thou see,
triginta capitem fetus enixa iacebit,
Who e’en now farrowed thirty head of young; there lieth she
alba solo recubans, albi circum ubera nati. 45
All white along, with piglings white around her uddered sides:
[hic locus urbis erit, requies ea certa laborum,]
That earth shall be thy dwelling-place; there rest from toil abides.
ex quo ter denis urbem redeuntibus annis
From thence Ascanius, when the year hath thrice ten times rolled round,

Ascanius clari condet cognominis Albam.
Shall raise a city, calling it by Alba’s name renowned.
haud incerta cano. nunc qua ratione quod instat
No doubtful matters do I sing, — but how to speed thee well,
expedias uictor, paucis (aduerte) docebo. 50
And win thee victor from all this, in few words will I tell:
Arcades his oris, genus a Pallante profectum,
Arcadian people while agone, a folk from Pallas come,
qui regem Euandrum comites, qui signa secuti,
Following Evander for their king, have borne his banners home,
delegere locum et posuere in montibus urbem

And chosen earth, and reared their town amid a mountain place
Pallantis proau de nomine Pallanteum.

E'en Pallanteum named, from him who first began their race:

hi bellum adsidue ducunt cum gente Latina; 55

This folk against the Latin men for ever wages fight,

hos castris adhibe socios et foedera iunge.

Bid them as fellows to thy camp, and treaty with them plight;

ipse ego te ripis et recto flumine ducam,

But I by bank and flow of flood will straightly lead thee there,

aduersum remis superes subuectus ut amnem.

While thou with beating of the oars the stream dost overbear.

surge age, nate dea, primisque cadentibus astris

Arise, arise, O Goddess-born, when the first star-world sets,

Iunoni fer rite preces, iramque minasque 60

Make prayer to Juno in due wise; o'ercome her wrath and threats

supplicibus supera uotis. mihi uictor honorem

With suppliant vows: victorious grown, thou yet shalt worship me;

persolues. ego sum pleno quem flumine cernis

For I am that abundant flood whom thou today dost see

stringentem ripas et pinguia culta secantem,

Sweeping the bank and cleaving way amid the plenteous earth,

caeruleus Thybris, caelo gratissimus amnis.

Blue Tiber, sweetest unto heaven of all the streams of worth.

hic mihi magna domus, celsis caput urbibus exit.' 65

This is my mighty house; my head from lofty cities sweeps."

Dixit, deinde lacu fluuius se condidit alto

The River spake, and hid himself amid the watery deeps;

ima petens; nox Aenean somnusque reliquit.

But night and slumber therewithal Æneas' eyes forsook;

surgit et aetherii spectans orientia solis

He rose and toward the dawning-place and lights of heaven 'gan look,

lumina rite cauis undam de flumine palmis

And duly in his hollow hand he lifted water fair

sustinet ac talis effundit ad aethera uoces: 70

From out the stream, and unto heaven in such wise poured his prayer:

‘Nymphae, Laurentes Nymphae, genus amnibus unde est, “O Nymphs, Laurentian Nymphs, from whence the race of rivers springs,
tuque, o Thybri tuo genitor cum flumine sancto,
And thou, O father Tiber fair, with holy wanderings,
accipite Aenean et tandem arcete periclis.
Cherish Æneas; thrust from me the bitter following bane,
quo te cumque lacus miserantem incommoda nostra
What pool soe’er may nurse thy spring, O pityer of my pain,
fonte tenent, quocumque solo pulcherrimus exis, 75
From whatso land, O loveliest, thy stream may issue forth.
semper honore meo, semper celebrabere donis
For ever will I give thee gifts, and worship well thy worth,
corniger Hesperidum fluius regnator aquarum.
Horned river, of all Westland streams the very king and lord;
adsis o tantum et propius tua numina firmes.’
Only be with me; faster bind thy great God-uttered word.”
sic memorat, geminasque legit de classe biremis
Thus having said, two two-banked keels he chooseth from the fleet,
remigioque aptat, socios simul instruit armis. 80
And mans the oars and dights his folk with gear and weapons meet.
Ecce autem subitum atque oculis mirabile monstrum,
But lo meanwhile a wondrous sign is thrust before his eyes;
candida per siluam cum fetu concolor albo
For on the green-sward of the wood a snow-white sow there lies
procubuit uiridique in litore conspicitur sus;
Down by the strand, her little ones, like-hued, about her pressed;
quam pius Aeneas tibi enim, tibi, maxima Iuno,
Whom god-loving Æneas slays to thee, O mightiest,
mactat sacra ferens et cum grege sistit ad aram. 85
O Juno, at thine altar-fires hallowing both dam and brood.
Thybris ea fluuium, quam longa est, nocte tumentem
Now while the long night wore away, the swelling of his flood
leniit, et tacita refluens ita substitit unda,
Had Tiber soothed, and eddying back in peace the stream was stayed,
mitis ut in morem stagni placidaeque paludis
And in the manner of a mere the water’s face was laid,

sterneret aequor aquis, remo ut luctamen abesset.

Or as a pool, that so the oars unstrained their work may ply.

ergo iter inceptum celerant rumore secundo: 90

So now they speed their journey forth amid a happy cry;

labitur uncta uadis abies; mirantur et undae,

The oiled fir slips along the seas, the waves fall wondering then, —

miratur nemus insuetum fulgentia longe

The woods, unused, fall wondering sore to see the shields of men

scuta uirum fluuio pictasque innare carinas.

Shine far up stream; to see the keels bepainted swimming there:

olli remigio noctemque diemque fatigant

But day and night, with beat of oars, the watery way they wear,

et longos superant flexus, uariisque teguntur 95

And conquer reaches long, o'erlaid with many a shifting tree,

arboribus, uiridisque secant placido aequore siluas.

And cleave the forest fair and green along the waveless sea.

sol medium caeli conscenderat igneus orbem

Unto the midmost crown of heaven had climbed the fiery sun,

cum muros arcemque procul ac rara domorum

By then the walls, and far-off burg, and few roofs one by one

tecta uident, quae nunc Romana potentia caelo

They see; the place raised high as heaven by mightiness of Rome,

aequauit, tum res inopes Euandrus habebat. 100

Where in those days Evander had an unrich, scanty home:

ocius aduertunt proras urbiue propinquant.

So thither swift they turned their prows, and toward the city drew.

Fortē die sollemnem illo rex Arcas honorem

That day it chanced the Arcadian King did yearly honour do

Amphitryoniadae magno diuisque ferebat

Unto Amphitryon's mighty son, and on the God did call

ante urbem in luco. Pallas huic filius una,

In grove before the city-walls: Pallas, his son, withal,

una omnes iuuenum primi pauperque senatus 105

The battle-lords, the senate poor of that unwealthy folk

tura dabant, tepidusque cruor fumabat ad aras.

Cast incense there; with yet warm blood the altars were a-smoke.

ut celsas uidere rates atque inter opacum

But when they saw the tall ships glide amidst the dusky shade
adlabi nemus et tacitos incumbere remis,
 Of woody banks, and might of men on oars all silent laid,
terrentur uisu subito cunctique relictis
 Scared at the sudden sight they rise, and all the boards forsake:
consurgunt mensis. audax quos rumpere Pallas 110
 But Pallas, of the hardy heart, forbids the feast to break,
sacra uetat raptoque uolat telo obuius ipse,
 While he, with weapon caught in haste, flies forth to meet the men,
et procul e tumulo: 'iuuenes, quae causa subegit
 And crieth from a mound afar: "Fellows, what drave you then?
ignotas temptare uias? quo tenditis?' inquit.
 And whither wend ye on your ways by road untried before?
'qui genus? unde domo? pacemne huc fertis an arma?'
 What folk and from what home are ye? and is it peace or war?"
tum pater Aeneas puppi sic fatur ab alta 115
 Then spake the father Æneas the lofty deck aboard,
paciferaeque manu ramum praetendit oliuae:
 As with the peaceful olive-bough he reached his hand abroad;
'Troiukenas ac tela uidēs inimica Latinis,
 "Troy's folk ye see and weapons whet against the Latin side,
quos illi bello profugos egere superbo.
 Whom they have driven forth by war amid their plenteous pride.
Euandrum petimus. ferte haec et dicite lectos
 We seek Evander: go ye forth and tell him this, and say
Dardaniae uenisse duces socia arma rogantis.' 120
 That chosen dukes of Troy are come for plighted troth to pray."
obstipuit tanto percussus nomine Pallas:
 The sound of such a mighty name smote Pallas with amaze:
'egredere o quicumque es' ait 'coramque parentem
 "Come forth," he said, "whoso ye be: before my father's face
adloquere ac nostris succede penatibus hospes.'
 Say what ye would; come to our Gods and in our house be guest."
excepitque manu dextramque amplexus inhaesit;
 So saying he gave his hand to him, and hard his right hand pressed;
progressi subeunt luco fluuiumque relinquunt. 125
 Therewith they leave the river-bank, and wend amidst the wood:

Tum regem Aeneas dictis adfatur amicis:
 But spake Æneas to the king fair friendly words and good:
 ‘optime Graiugenum, cui me Fortuna precari
 “O best of Greeks, whom fortune wills that I should now beseech, et uitta comptos uoluit praetendere ramos,
 And unto thee the suppliant staff of olive garlands reach,
 non equidem extimui Danaum quod ductor et Arcas
 I feared thee not for Arcas’ seed or Duke of Danai, quodque a stirpe fores geminis coniunctus Atridis; ¹³⁰
 Nor for thy being to Atreus’ twins a kinsman born anigh:
 sed mea me uirtus et sancta oracula diuum
 Rather my heart, and holy words that Gods have given forth,
 cognatique patres, tua terris didita fama,
 Our fathers’ kin, the world-wide tale that goeth of thy worth,
 coniunxere tibi et fatis egere uolentem.
 Bind me to thee, and make me fain of what Fate bids befall.
 Dardanus, Iliacae primus pater urbis et auctor,
 Now Dardanus, first setter-up and sire of Ilian wall,
 Electra, ut Grai perhibent, Atlantide cretus, ¹³⁵
 Born of Electra, Atlas’ child, as Greekish stories say,
 aduehitur Teucros; Electram maximus Atlas
 Came to the Teucrians: Atlas huge Electra gave today,
 edidit, aetherios umero qui sustinet orbis.
 Atlas, who on his shoulders rears the round-wrought heavenly house:
 uobis Mercurius pater est, quem candida Maia
 But Mercury thy father is, whom Maia glorious
 Cyllenae gelido conceptum uertice fudit;
 Conceived, and shed on earth one day on high Cyllene cold;
 at Maïam, auditis si quicquam credimus, Atlas, ¹⁴⁰
 But Atlas Maia too begot, if we may trow tale told,
 idem Atlas generat caeli qui sidera tollit.
 That very Atlas who the stars of heavenly house doth raise,
 sic genus amborum scindit se sanguine ab uno.
 So from one root the race of us wends on its twofold ways.
 his fretus non legatos neque prima per artem
 Stayed by these things none else I sent, nor guilefully have sought,
 temptamenta tui pepigi; me, me ipse meumque

Assaying of thee, but myself unto thyself I brought,
obieci caput et supplex ad limina ueni. 145

And mine own head; and here I stand a suppliant at thy door.

gens eadem, quae te, crudeli Daunia bello

And that same Daunian folk of men drive us with bitter war
insequitur; nos si pellant nihil afore credunt

As fall on thee: if us they chase, what stay but utterly,

quin omnem Hesperiam penitus sua sub iuga mittant,

(So deem they) all the Westland earth beneath their yoke shall lie,

et mare quod supra teneant quodque adluit infra.

With all the upper flood of sea, and nether waters' wash.

accipe daque fidem. sunt nobis fortia bello 150

Take troth and give it: hearts are we stout in the battle's clash,

pectora, sunt animi et rebus spectata iuuentus.'

High-counselled souls, men well beheld in deeds that try the man."

Dixerat Aeneas. ille os oculosque loquentis

He ended: but Evander's look this long while overran

iamdudum et totum lustrabat lumine corpus.

His face, his speaking eyes, and all his body fair to see;

tum sic pauca refert: 'ut te, fortissime Teucrum,

Then in few words he answered thus: "How sweet to welcome thee,

accipio agnoscoque libens! ut uerba parentis 155

Best heart of Troy! and how I mind the words, and seem to hear

et uocem Anchisae magni uultumque recordor!

Anchises' voice, and see the face that mighty man did bear:

nam memini Hesioneae uisentem regna sororis

For I remember Priam erst, child of Laomedon,

Laomedontiaden Priamum Salamina petentem

Came to Hesione's abode, to Salamis passed on,

protinus Arcadiae gelidos inuisere finis.

And thence would wend his ways to seek Arcadia's chilly place.

tum mihi prima genas uestibat flore iuuentas, 160

The blossom of the spring of life then bloomed upon my face,

mirabarque duces Teucros, mirabar et ipsum

When on the Teucrian lords I looked with joy and wonderment;

Laomedontiaden; sed cunctis altior ibat

On Priam, too: but loftier there than any other went

Anchises. mihi mens iuuenali ardebat amore
 Anchises; and his sight in me struck youthful love awake.
 compellare uirum et dextrae coniungere dextram;
 I yearned to speak unto the man, and hand in hand to take:
 accessi et cupidus Phenei sub moenia duxi. 165
 So fain I met him, led him in to Phineus' wallèd place;
 ille mihi insignem pharetram Lyciasque sagittas
 And he, departing, gave to me a noble arrow-case
 discedens chlamydemque auro dedit intertextam,
 And Lycian shafts; a cloak thereto, all shot across with gold,
 frenaque bina meus quae nunc habet aurea Pallas.
 And golden bridles twain, that now Pallas, my son, doth hold.
 ergo et quam petitis iuncta est mihi foedere dextra,
 Lo, then, the right hand that ye sought is joined in troth to thine;
 et lux cum primum terris se crastina reddet, 170
 And when tomorrow's light once more upon the world shall shine,
 auxilio laetos dimittam opibusque iuuabo.
 Glad, holpen, shall I send you forth and stay you with my store.
 interea sacra haec, quando huc uenistis amici,
 Meanwhile, since here ye come our friends, with us the Gods adore
 annua, quae differre nefas, celebrate fauentes
 At this our hallowed yearly feast, which ill it were to stay:
 nobiscum, et iam nunc sociorum adsuescite mensis.'
 Be kind, and with your fellows' boards make friends without delay."
 Haec ubi dicta, dapes iubet et sublata reponi 175
 Therewith he bids bring forth once more the wine-cups and the meat,
 pocula gramineoque uiros locat ipse sedili,
 And he himself sets down the men upon a grassy seat;
 praecipuumque toro et uillosi pelle leonis
 But chiefly to the bed bedight with shaggy lion's skin
 accipit Aenean solioque inuitat acerno.
 He draws Æneas, bidding him the throne of maple win.
 tum lecti iuuenes certatim araeque sacerdos
 Then vie the chosen youth-at-arms, the altar-priest brings aid;
 uiscera tosta ferunt taurorum, onerantque canistris 180
 They bear in roasted flesh of bulls, and high the baskets lade
 dona laboratae Cereris, Bacchumque ministrant.

With gifts of Ceres fashioned well, and serve the Bacchus' joy;
uescitur Aeneas simul et Troiana iuuentus
So therewithal Æneas eats and men-at-arms of Troy
perpetui tergo bouis et lustralibus extis.
Of undivided oxen chines and inwards of the feast.
Postquam exempta fames et amor compressus edendi,
But when the lust of meat was dulled and hunger's gnawing ceased,
rex Euandrus ait: 'non haec sollemnia nobis, 185
Saith King Evander: "This high-tide that we are holding thus,
has ex more dapes, hanc tanti numinis aram
This ordered feast, this altar raised to God all-glorious,
uana superstitio ueterumque ignara deorum
No idle task of witch-work is, that knoweth not the Gods
imposuit: saeuis, hospes Troiane, periclis
Of ancient days: O Trojan chief, we, saved from fearful odds,
seruati facimus meritosque nouamus honores.
Here worship, and give glory new to deeds done gloriously.
iam primum saxis suspensam hanc aspice rupem, 190
Note first the crag, whose world of stones o'ertoppleth there anigh;
disiectae procul ut moles desertaque montis
What stone-heaps have been cast afar, how waste and wild is grown
stat domus et scopuli ingentem traxere ruinam.
The mountain-house, what mighty wrack the rocks have dragged adown.
hic spelunca fuit uasto summota recessu,
Therein a cave was erst, that back a long way burrowing ran,
semihominis Caci facies quam dira tenebat
Held by the dreadful thing, the shape of Cacus, monster-man.
solis inaccessam radiis; semperque recenti 195
A place the sun might never see, for ever warm and wet
caede tepebat humus, foribusque adfixa superbis
With reek of murder newly wrought; o'er whose proud doorways set
ora uirum tristi pendebant pallida tabo.
The heads of men were hanging still wan mid the woeful gore.
huic monstro Volcanus erat pater: illius atros
Vulcan was father of this fiend; his black flame did he pour
ore uomens ignis magna se mole ferebat.

Forth from his mouth, as monster-great he wended on his ways.

attulit et nobis aliquando optantibus aetas 200

But to our aid, as whiles it will, brought round the lapse of days

auxilium aduentumque dei. nam maximus ultor

The help and coming of a God: for that most mighty one,

tergemini nece Geryonae spoliisque superbus

All glorious with the death and spoils of threefold Geryon,

Alcides aderat taurosque hac uictor agebat

Alcides, our avenger came, driving the victor's meed,

ingentis, uallemque boues amnemque tenebant.

His mighty bulls, who down the dale and river-bank did feed.

at furis Caci mens effera, ne quid inausum 205

But Cacus, mad with furious heart, that nought undared might be

aut intractatum scelerisque doliue fuisset,

Of evil deeds, or nought untried of guile and treachery,

quattuor a stabulis praestanti corpore tauros

Drave from the fold four head of bulls of bodies excellent,

auertit, totidem forma superante iuencas.

And e'en so many lovely kine, whose fashion all outwent;

atque hos, ne qua forent pedibus uestigia rectis,

Which same, that of their rightful road the footprints clean might lack,

cauda in speluncam tractos uersisque uiarum 210

Tail-foremost dragged he to his den, turning their way-marks back;

indiciis raptor saxo occultabat opaco;

And so he hid them all away amid that stonydark,

quaerenti nulla ad speluncam signa ferebant.

Nor toward the cave might he that sought find any four-foot mark.

interea, cum iam stabulis saturata moueret

"Meanwhile, his beasts all satiate, from fold Amphitryon's son

Amphitryoniades armenta abutumque pararet,

Now gets them ready for the road, and busks him to be gone;

discessu mugire boues atque omne querelis 215

When lo, the herd falls bellowing, and with its sorrow fills

impleri nemus et colles clamore relinqui.

The woodland as it goes away, and lowing leaves the hills.

reddidit una bouum uocem uastoque sub antro

Therewith a cow gave back the sound, and in the cavern hid mugiit et Caci spem custodita fefellit.

Low'd out, and in despite his heed all Cacus' hope undid.

hic uero Alcidae furiis exarserat atro

Then verily Alcides' ire and gall of heart outbroke

felle dolor: rapit arma manu nodisque grauatum 220

In fury, and his arms he caught and weight of knotty oak,

robur, et aëri cursu petit ardua montis.

And running, sought the hill aloft that thrusteth toward the skies.

tum primum nostri Cacus uidere timentem

Then first our folk saw Cacus scared and trouble in his eyes,

turbatumque oculis; fugit ilicet ocior Euro

And in a twinkling did he flee, no eastern wind as fleet,

speluncamque petit, pedibus timor addidit alas.

Seeking his den, and very fear gave wings unto his feet;

ut sese inclusit ruptisque immane catenis 225

But scarcely was he shut therein, and, breaking down the chains,

deiecit saxum, ferro quod et arte paterna

Had dropped the monstrous rock that erst his crafty father's pains

pendebat, fultosque emuniit obice postis,

Hung there with iron; scarce had he blocked the doorway with the same,

ecce furens animis aderat Tirynthius omnemque

When lo, the man of Tiryns there, who with his heart aflame

accessum lustrans huc ora ferebat et illuc,

Eyed all the entries, here and there turning about his face,

dentibus infrendens. ter totum feruidus ira 230

Gnashing his teeth: afire with wrath, thrice all that hilly place

lustrat Auentini montem, ter saxea temptat

Of Aventine he eyeth o'er, thrice tries without avail

limina nequiquam, ter fessus ualle resedit.

The rocky door, thrice sits him down awearied in the dale.

stabat acuta silex praecisis undique saxis

"There was a peak'd rock of flint with ragged edges dight,

speluncae dorso insurgens, altissima uisu,

Which at the cave's back rose aloft exceeding high to sight,

dirarum nidis domus opportuna uolucrum. 235

A dwelling meet for evil fowl amidst their nests to bide;
hanc, ut prona iugo laeuum incumbibat ad amnem,
This, that hung o'er the brow above the river's leftward side,
dexter in aduersum nitens concussit et imis
Hard from the right he beareth on, and shakes, and from its roots
auulsam soluit radicibus, inde repente
Wrencheth it loose, and suddenly adown the bent side shoots.
impulit; impulsu quo maximus intonat aether,
Then ringeth all the mighty heaven with thunder of its wrack,
dissultant ripae refluitque exterritus amnis. 240
The banks are rent, the frightened stream its waters casteth back;
at specus et Caci detecta apparuit ingens
But Cacus' den and kingly house showed all uncovered there,
regia, et umbrosae penitus patuere cauernae,
The inmost of the shadowy cave was laid undoored and bare:
non secus ac si qua penitus ui terra dehiscens
As if the inner parts of earth 'neath mighty stroke should gape,
infernus reseret sedes et regna recludat
Unlocking all the house of hell, showing that country's shape,
pallida, dis inuisa, superque immane barathrum 245
The wan land all forlorn of God: there shows the unmeasured pit, cernatur, trepidant immisso lumine Manes.
And ghosts aquake with light of day shot through the depths of it.
ergo insperata deprensus luce repente
"But Cacus, caught unwares by day whereof he had no doubt,
inclusumque cauo saxo atque insueta rudentem
Imprisoned in the hollow rock, in strange voice bellowing out,
desuper Alcides telis premit, omniaque arma
Alcides fell on from above, calling all arms to aid,
aduocat et ramis uastisque molaribus instat. 250
And plenteous cast of boughs and stones upon the monster laid;
ille autem, neque enim fuga iam super ulla pericli,
While he, since now no flight availed to 'scape that peril's hold,
faucibus ingentem fumum (mirabile dictu)
Pours from his mouth a mighty smoke, O wondrous to be told!
euomit inuoluitque domum caligine caeca
Enwrapping all the house about with blinding misty shroud,

prospectum eripiens oculis, glomeratque sub antro
 Snatching the sight from eyes of men, and rolling on the cloud,
 fumiferam noctem commixtis igne tenebris. 255
 A reeking night with heart of fire and utter blackness blent.
 non tulit Alcides animis, seque ipse per ignem
 Alcides' spirit bore it nought; his body swift he sent
 praecipiti iecit saltu, qua plurimus undam
 With headlong leap amid the fire where thickest rolled the wave
 fumus agit nebulaque ingens specus aestuat atra.
 Of smoke, and with its pitchy mist was flooding all the cave;
 hic Cacum in tenebris incendia uana uomentem
 Cacus he catcheth in the dark spueing out fire in vain,
 corripit in nodum complexus, et angit inhaerens 260
 And knitteth him in knot about, and, strangling him, doth strain
 elisos oculos et siccum sanguine guttur.
 The starting eyes from out of him, and throat that blood doth lack:
 panditur extemplo foribus domus atra reuulsis
 Then the mirk house is opened wide; the doors are torn aback;
 abstractaeque boues abiurataeque rapinae
 The stolen kine, that prey his oath foreswore to heaven are shown,
 caelo ostenduntur, pedibusque informe cadauer
 And by the feet is dragged today the body hideous grown;
 protrahitur. nequeunt expleri corda tuendo 265
 Nor may men satiate their hearts by gazing on the thing;
 terribilis oculos, uultum uillosaque saetis
 His fearful eyes, the face of him, the man-beast's fashioning
 pectora semiferi atque extinctos faucibus ignis.
 Of bristled breast; those jaws of his, whence faded is the flame.
 ex illo celebratus honos laetique minores
 "Hence is this honour celebrate, and they that after came
 seruauere diem, primusque Potitius auctor
 Still kept the day all joyfully; Potitius wrought it first,
 et domus Herculei custos Pinaria sacri 270
 This feast of mighty Hercules; the house Pinarian nursed,
 hanc aram luco statuit, quae maxima semper
 The altar of the grove he reared, which Mightiest yet we call,
 dicetur nobis et erit quae maxima semper.

And ever more, in very sooth, shall mightiest be of all.
quare agite, o iuuenes, tantarum in munere laudum
So come, O youths, these glorious deeds I bid you glorify:
cingite fronde comas et pocula porrigite dextris,
Wreath round your hair, put forth your hands and raise the cup on high!

communemque uocate deum et date uina uolentes.’ 275

Call on the God whom all we love, and give the wine full fain!”

dixerat, Herculea bicolor cum populus umbra

He spake: the leaf of Hercules, the poplar coloured twain,

uelauitque comas foliisque innexa pendit,

Shaded his hair; the leaves entwined hung down aback his head;

et sacer impleuit dextram scyphus. ocius omnes

The holy beaker filled his hand: then merry all men sped,

in mensam laeti libant diuosque precantur.

And on the table poured their gift, and called the Gods to hear.

Deuxo interea propior fit Vesper Olympo. 280

Meanwhile unto the slopes of heaven the Western Star drew near,

iamque sacerdotes primusque Potitius ibant

And then the priests, and chief thereof, Potitius, thither came,

pellibus in morem cincti, flammasque ferebant.

All clad in skins, as due it was, and bearing forth the flame.

instaurant epulas et mensae grata secundae

New feast they dight, and gifts beloved of second service bring,

dona ferunt cumulantque oneratis lancibus aras.

And on the altar pile again the plates of offering.

tum Salii ad cantus incensa altaria circum 285

The Salii then to singing-tide heart-kindled go around

populeis adsunt euincti tempora ramis,

The altars; every brow of them with poplar leafage bound:

hic iuuenum chorus, ille senum, qui carmine laudes

And here the youths, the elders there, set up the song of praise,

Herculeas et facta ferunt: ut prima nouercae

And sing the deeds of Hercules: How, on his first of days,

monstra manu geminosque premens eliserit anguis,

The monsters twain his stepdame sent, the snakes, he crushed in hand;

ut bello egregias idem disiecerit urbes, 290
 And how in war he overthrew great cities of the land,
 Troiamque Oechalamque, ut duros mille labores
 Troy and Oechalia: how he won through thousand toils o'er great,
 rege sub Eurystheo fatis Iunonis iniquae
 That King Eurystheus laid on him by bitter Juno's fate.
 pertulerit. 'tu nubigenas, inuicte, bimembris
 "O thou Unconquered, thou whose hand beat down the cloud-born two,
 Hylaeumque Pholumque manu, tu Cresia mactas
 Pholeus, Hylæus, twin-wrought things, and Cretan monsters slew:
 prodigia et uastum Nemeae sub rupe leonem. 295
 O thou who slew'st the lion huge 'neath that Nemean steep,
 te Stygii tremuere lacus, te ianitor Orci
 The Stygian mere hath quaked at thee, the ward of Orcus deep
 ossa super recubans antro semesa cruento;
 Quaked in his den above his bed of half-gnawed bones and blood.
 nec te ullae facies, non terruit ipse Typhoeus
 At nothing fashioned wert thou feared; not when Typhoeus stood
 arduus arma tenens; non te rationis egentem
 Aloft in arms: nor from thine heart fell any rede away
 Lernaes turba caput circumstetit anguis. 300
 When round thee headed-manifold the Worm of Lerna lay.
 salue, uera Iouis proles, decus addite diuis,
 O very child of Jupiter, O Heaven's new glory, hail!
 et nos et tua dexter adi pede sacra secundo.'
 Fail not thy feast with friendly foot, nor us, thy lovers, fail!"
 talia carminibus celebrant; super omnia Caci
 With such-like song they sing the praise, and add to all the worth
 speluncam adiciunt spirantemque ignibus ipsum.
 The cave of Cacus, and the beast that breathed the wildfire forth.
 consonat omne nemus strepitu collesque resultant. 305
 The woods sing with them as they sing; the hills are light with song.
 Exim se cuncti diuinis rebus ad urbem
 So, all the holy things fulfilled, they wend their ways along perfectis referunt. ibat rex obsitus aevo,
 Unto the city: the old king afoot was with them there,

et comitem Aenean iuxta natumque tenebat
And bade Æneas and his son close to his side to fare,
ingrediens uarioque uiam sermone leuabat.
And as he went made light the way with talk of many a thing.
miratur facilisque oculos fert omnia circum 310
Æneas wonders, and his eyes go lightly wandering
Aeneas, capiturque locis et singula laetus
O'er all; but here and there they stay, as, joyful of his ways,
exquiriturque auditque uirum monimenta priorum.
He asks and hears of tokens left by men of earlier days.
tum rex Euandrus Romanae conditor arcis:
Then spake the King Evander, he who built up Rome of old:
'haec nemora indigenae Fauni Nymphaeque tenebant
'These woods the earth-born Fauns and Nymphs in time agoe did hold,
gensque uirum truncis et duro robore nata, 315
And men from out the tree-trunk born and very heart of oak;
quis neque mos neque cultus erat, nec iungere tauros
No fashion of the tilth they knew, nor how the bulls to yoke,
aut componere opes norant aut parcere parto,
Nor how to win them store of wealth, or spare what they had got;
sed rami atque asper uictu uenatus alebat.
The tree-boughs only cherished them and rugged chase and hot.
primus ab aetherio uenit Saturnus Olympo
Then from Olympus of the heavens first Saturn came adown, arma Iouis fugiens et regnis exsul adeptus. 320
Fleeing the war of Jupiter and kingdom overthrown:
is genus indocile ac dispersum montibus altis
He laid in peace the rugged folk amid the mountains steep
composuit legesque dedit, Latiumque uocari
Scattered about, and gave them laws, and willed them well to keep
maluit, his quoniam latuisset tutus in oris.
The name of Latium, since he lay safe hidden on that shore.
aurea quae perhibent illo sub rege fuere
They call the days the Golden Days that 'neath that king outwore,
saecula: sic placida populos in pace regebat, 325
Amid such happiness of peace o'er men-folk did he reign.

deterior donec paulatim ac decolor aetas
 But worsened time as on it wore, and gathered many a stain;
 et belli rabies et amor successit habendi.
 And then the battle-rage was born, and lust of gain outbroke:
 tum manus Ausonia et gentes uenere Sicanae,
 Then came the host Ausonian; then came Sicanian folk;
 saepius et nomen posuit Saturnia tellus;
 And oft and o'er again the land of Saturn cast its name.
 tum reges asperque immani corpore Thybris, 330
 Then kings there were, and Thybris fierce, of monstrous body came,
 a quo post Itali fluuium cognomine Thybrim
 From whom the Tiber flood is named by us of Italy,
 diximus; amisit uerum uetus Albula nomen.
 Its old true name of Albula being perished and gone by.
 me pulsum patria pelagique extrema sequentem
 Me, driven from my land, and strayed about the ocean's ends,
 Fortuna omnipotens et ineluctabile fatum
 Almighty Fortune and the Fate no struggling ever bends
 his posuere locis, matrisque egere tremenda 335
 Set in these steads; my mother's word well worshipped hither drave, Carmentis nymphae monita et deus auctor Apollo.
 The nymph Carmentis; and a god, Apollo, wayfare gave."
 Vix ea dicta, dehinc progressus monstrat et aram
 Now, as he spake, hard thereunto the altar-stead doth show,
 et Carmentalem Romani nomine portam
 And gate that by Carmentis' name the Roman people know;
 quam memorant, nymphae priscum Carmentis honorem,
 An honour of the olden time to nymph Carmentis, she,
 uatis fatidicae, cecinit quae prima futuros 340
 The faithful seer, who first foretold what mighty men should be Aeneadas magnos et nobile Pallanteum.
 Æneas' sons; how great a name from Pallanteum should come.
 hinc lucum ingentem, quem Romulus acer asyllum
 Then the great grove that Romulus hallowed the flier's home
 rettulit, et gelida monstrat sub rupe Lupercal
 He showeth, and Lupercal set beneath the cliff acold, Parrhasio dictum Panos de more Lycaei.

Called of Lycæan Pan in wise Parrhasia used of old.

nec non et sacri monstrat nemus Argileti 345

Thereafter Argiletum's grove he shows and bids it tell,
testaturque locum et letum docet hospitibus Argi.

A very witness, where and how the guesting Argus fell.
hinc ad Tarpeiam sedem et Capitolia ducit

Next, then, to the Tarpeian stead and Capitol they went,
aurea nunc, olim siluestribus horrida dumis.

All golden now, but wild of yore with thickets' tanglement:
iam tum religio pauidos terrebat agrestis

E'en then at its dread holiness the folk afield would quake
dira loci, iam tum siluam saxumque tremebant. 350

And tremble sore to look upon its cliff-besetting brake.

'hoc nemus, hunc' inquit 'frondoso uertice collem

"This grove," saith he, "this hill thou seest with thicket-covered brow,

(quis deus incertum est) habitat deus; Arcades ipsum

Some godhead haunts, we know not who: indeed Arcadians trow
credunt se uidisse Iouem, cum saepe nigrantem

That very Jove they there have seen, when he his blackening shield
aegida concuteret dextra nimbosque cieret.

Hath shaken whiles and stirred the storm amidst the heavenly field.

haec duo praeterea disiectis oppida muris, 355

Look therewithal on those two burghs with broken walls foredone!
reliquias ueterumque uides monimenta uirorum.

There thou beholdest tokens left by folk of long ago:

hanc Ianus pater, hanc Saturnus condidit arcem;

For one did Father Janus old, and one did Saturn raise,
Ianiculum huic, illi fuerat Saturnia nomen.'

Janiculum, Saturnia, they hight in ancient days."

talibus inter se dictis ad tecta subibant

Amid such talk they reach the roofs whereunder did abide
pauperis Euandri, passimque armenta uidebant 360

Unrich Evander; and they see the herd-beasts feeding wide
Romanoque foro et lautis mugire Carinis.

And lowing through the Roman Courts amid Carinæ's shine.
ut uentum ad sedes, 'haec' inquit 'limina uictor

But when they came unto the house, "Beneath these doors of mine
 Alcides subiit, haec illum regia cepit.
 Conquering Alcides went," he said; "this king's house took him in.
 aude, hospes, contemnere opes et te quoque dignum
 Have heart to scorn world's wealth, O guest, and strive thou too to win
 finge deo, rebusque ueni non asper egenis.' 365
 A godhead's worth: take thou no scorn of our unrich estate."
 dixit, et angusti subter fastigia tecti
 He spake, and 'neath the narrow roof Æneas' body great
 ingentem Aenean duxit stratisque locauit
 He led withal, and set him down; and such a bed was there
 effultum foliis et pelle Libystidis ursae:
 As 'twas of leaves, and overlaid with skin of Libyan bear.
 nox ruit et fuscis tellurem amplectitur alis.
 Night falleth, and its dusky wings spreads o'er the face of earth,
 At Venus haud animo nequiquam exterrita mater 370
 When Venus, fearful in her soul (nor less than fear 'twas worth),
 Laurentumque minis et duro mota tumultu
 Sore troubled by Laurentine threats and all the tumult dread,
 Vulcanum adloquitur, thalamoque haec coniugis aureo
 Bespeaketh Vulcan, as she lay upon his golden bed,
 incipit et dictis diuinum aspirat amorem:
 And holiness of very love amidst her words she bore:
 'dum bello Argolici uastabant Pergama reges
 "When Argive kings were wasting Troy predestined with their war,
 debita casurasque inimicis ignibus arces, 375
 Were wracking towers foredoomed to fall mid flames of hating men,
 non ullum auxilium miseris, non arma rogau
 No help of thine for hapless ones, no arms I asked for then,
 artis opisque tuae, nec te, carissime coniunx,
 Wrought by thy craft and mastery: nor would I have thee spend
 incassumue tuos uolui exercere labores,
 Thy labour, O beloved spouse, to win no happy end;
 quamuis et Priami deberem plurima natis,
 Though many things to Priam's house meseemeth did I owe,
 et durum Aeneae fleuissem saepe laborem. 380

And oftentimes I needs must weep Æneas' pain and woe.
 nunc Iouis imperiis Rutulorum constitit oris:
 But now that he by Jove's command Rutulian shores hath won,
 ergo eadem supplex uenio et sanctum mihi numen
 I am thy suppliant, asking arms, a mother for her son,
 arma rogo, genetrix nato. te filia Nerei,
 Praying thy godhead's holiness: time was when Nereus' seed,
 te potuit lacrimis Tithonia flectere coniunx.
 Tithonus' wife, with many tears could bend thee to thy need.
 aspice qui coeant populi, quae moenia clausis 385
 Look round, what peoples gather now; what cities shut within
 ferrum acuant portis in me excidiumque meorum.'
 Their barrèd gates are whetting sword to slay me and my kin."
 dixerat et niueis hinc atque hinc diua lacertis
 She spake: with snowy arms of God she fondled him about,
 cunctantem amplexu molli fouet. ille repente
 And wound him in her soft embrace, while yet he hung in doubt:
 accepit solitam flammam, notusque medullas
 Sudden the wonted fire struck home; unto his inmost drew
 intrauit calor et labefacta per ossa cucurrit, 390
 The old familiar heat, and all his melting bones ran through:
 non secus atque olim tonitru cum rupta corusco
 No otherwise than whiles it is when rolls the thunder loud,
 ignea rima micans percurrit lumine nimbos;
 And gleaming of the fiery rent breaks up the world of cloud.
 sensit laeta dolis et formae conscia coniunx.
 In glory of her loveliness she felt her guile had gained.
 tum pater aeterno fatur deuinctus amore:
 Then spake the Father, overcome by Love that ne'er hath waned:
 'quid causas petis ex alto? fiducia cessit 395
 "Why fish thy reasons from the deep? where is thy trust in me,
 quo tibi, diua, mei? similis si cura fuisset,
 I prithee, O my God and Love? Had such wish weighed on thee,
 tum quoque fas nobis Teucros armare fuisset;
 Then, also, had it been my part to arm the Teucrian hand,
 nec pater omnipotens Troiam nec fata uetabant
 Nor had the Almighty Sire nor Fate forbidden Troy to stand,

stare decemque alios Priamum superesse per annos.
 And Priam might have held it out another ten years yet.
 et nunc, si bellare paras atque haec tibi mens est, 400
 And now if thou wouldst wage the war, if thus thy soul is set,
 quidquid in arte mea possum promittere curae,
 Thy longing shall have whatsoe'er this craft of mine may lend;
 quod fieri ferro liquidouae potest electro,
 Whatever in iron may be done, or silver-golden blend;
 quantum ignes animaeque ualent, absiste precando
 Whatever wind and fire may do: I prithee pray no more,
 uiribus indubitare tuis.' ea uerba locutus
 But trust the glory of thy might." So when his words wore o'er
 optatos dedit amplexus placidumque petiuit 405
 He gave the enfolding that she would, and shed upon her breast
 coniugis infusus gremio per membra soporem.
 He lay, and over all his limbs he drew the sleepy rest.
 Inde ubi prima quies medio iam noctis abactae
 But when the midmost night was worn, and slumber, past its prime,
 curriculo expulerat somnum, cum femina primum,
 Had faded out, in sooth it was that woman's rising-time,
 cui tolerare colo uitam tenuique Minerua
 Who needs must prop her life with rock and slender mastery
 impositum, cinerem et sopitos suscitatur ignis 410
 That Pallas gives: she wakes the ash and flames that smouldering lie,
 noctem addens operi, famulasque ad lumina longo
 And, adding night unto her toil, driveth her maids to win
 exercet penso, castum ut seruare cubile
 Long task before its kindled light, that she may keep from sin
 coniugis et possit paruos educere natos:
 Her bride-bed; that her little ones well waxen-up may be.
 haud secus ignipotens nec tempore segnior illo
 Not otherwise that Might of Fire, no sluggard more than she,
 mollibus e stratis opera ad fabrilia surgit. 415
 To win his art and handicraft from that soft bed arose.
 insula Sicani iuxta latus Aeoliamque
 Upon the flank of Sicily there hangs an island close erigitur Liparen fumantibus ardua saxa,

To Lipari of Æolus, with shear-hewn smoky steep;
 quam subter specus et Cyclopum exesa caminis
 Beneath it thunder caves and dens Ætnæan, eaten deep
 antra Aetnaea tonant, ualidique incudibus ictus
 With forges of the Cyclops: thence men hear the anvils cry
 auditi referunt gemitus, striduntque cauernis 420
 'Neath mighty strokes, and through the cave the hissing sparkles fly
 stricturae Chalybum et fornacibus ignis anhelat,
 From iron of the Chalybes, and pants the forge with flame.
 Volcani domus et Volcania nomine tellus.
 The house is Vulcan's, and the land Vulcania hath to name.
 hoc tunc ignipotens caelo descendit ab alto.
 Thither the Master of the Fire went down from upper air,
 ferrum exercebant uasto Cyclopes in antro,
 Where Cyclop folk in mighty den were forging iron gear;
 Brontesque Steropesque et nudus membra Pyragmon. 425
 Pyracmon of the naked limbs, Brontes and Steropes.
 his informatum manibus iam parte polita
 A thunderbolt half-fashioned yet was in the hands of these,
 fulmen erat, toto genitor quae plurima caelo
 Part-wrought, suchwise as many an one the Father casts on earth
 deicit in terras, pars imperfecta manebat.
 From all the heaven, but otherwhere unfinished from the birth,
 tris imbris torti radios, tris nubis aquosae
 Three rays they wrought of writhen storm, three of the watery wrack;
 addiderant, rutuli tris ignis et alitis Austri. 430
 Nor do the three of ruddy flame nor windy winging lack:
 fulgores nunc terrificos sonitumque metumque
 And now the work of fearful flash, and roar, and dread they won,
 miscebant operi flammisque sequacibus iras.
 And blent amid their craftsmanship the flame that followeth on.
 parte alia Marti currumque rotasque uolucris
 But otherwhere they dight the wain and wingèd wheels of Mars,
 instabant, quibus ille uiros, quibus excitat urbes;
 Wherewith the men and walls of men he waketh up to wars.
 aegidaque horriferam, turbatae Palladis arma, 435
 There angry Pallas's arms they wrought and Ægis full of fear,

certatim squamis serpentum auroque polibant
 And set the gold and serpent scales, and did with mighty care
 conexosque anguis ipsamque in pectore diuæ
 The knitted adders, and for breast of very God did deck
 Gorgona desecto uertentem lumina collo.
 The Gorgon rolling eyen still above her severed neck.
 ‘tollite cuncta’ inquit ‘coeptosque auferte labores,
 “Do all away,” he said, “lay by the labour so far done;
 Aetnaei Cyclopes, et huc aduertite mentem: 440
 Cyclops of Ætna, turn your minds to this one thing alone:
 arma acri facienda uiro. nunc uiribus usus,
 Arms for a great man must be wrought; betake ye to your might;
 nunc manibus rapidis, omni nunc arte magistra.
 Betake ye to your nimble hands and all your mastery’s sleight,
 praecipitate moras.’ nec plura effatus, at illi
 And hurry tarrying into haste.” No more he spake: all they
 ocius incubuere omnes pariterque laborem
 Fall swift to work and portion out the labour of the day:
 sortiti. fluit aes riuis aurique metallum 445
 The brazen rivers run about with metal of the gold,
 uulnificusque chalybs uasta fornace liquescit.
 And soft the Chalyb bane-master flows in the forges’ hold.
 ingentem clipeum informant, unum omnia contra
 A mighty shield they set on foot to match all weapons held
 tela Latinorum, septenosque orbibus orbis
 By Latin men, and sevenfold ring on ring about it weld.
 impediunt. alii uentosis follibus auras
 Meanwhile, in windy bellows’ womb some in the breezes take
 accipiunt redduntque, alii stridentia tingunt 450
 And give them forth, some dip the brass all hissing in the lake,
 aera lacu; gemit impositis incudibus antrum;
 And all the cavern is agroan with strokes on anvil laid.
 illi inter sese multa ui brachia tollunt
 There turn and turn about betwixt, with plenteous might to aid,
 in numerum, uersantque tenaci forcepe massam.
 They rear their arms; with grip of tongs they turn the iron o’er.
 Haec pater Aeoliis properat dum Lemnius oris,

But while the Lemnian Father thus speeds on the Æolean shore
Euandrum ex humili tecto lux suscitāt alma 455

The lovely light Evander stirs amid his lowly house,
et matutini uolucrum sub culmine cantus.

And morning song of eave-dwellers from sleep the king doth rouse.
consurgit senior tunicaque inducitur artus

Riseth that ancient man of days and on his kirtle does,
et Tyrrhena pedum circumdat uincula plantis.

And both his feet he binds about with bonds of Tyrrhene shoes;
tum lateri atque umeris Tegeaeum subligat ensem

Then Tegeæan sword he girds to shoulder and to side,
demissa ab laeua pantherae terga retorquens. 460

And on the left he flings aback the cloak of panther-hide.
nec non et gemini custodes limine ab alto

Moreover, from the threshold step goes either watchful ward,
praecedunt gressumque canes comitantur erilem.

Two dogs to wit, that follow close the footsteps of their lord.
hospitis Aeneae sedem et secreta petebat

So to the chamber of his guest the hero goes his way,
sermonum memor et promissi muneris heros.

Well mindful of his spoken word and that well-promised stay.
nec minus Aeneas se matutinus agebat; 465

Nor less Æneas was afoot betimes that morning-tide,
filius huic Pallas, illi comes ibat Achates.

And Pallas and Achates went each one their lord beside.
congressi iungunt dextras mediisque residunt

So met, they join their right hands there and in the house sit down,
aedibus et licito tandem sermone fruuntur.

And win the joy of spoken words, that lawful now hath grown;
rex prior haec:

And thuswise speaks Evander first:

‘maxime Teucrorum ductor, quo sospite numquam 470

“O mightiest duke of Trojan men, — for surely, thou being safe,
res equidem Troiae uictas aut regna fatebor,

My heart may never more believe in Troy-town’s vanquishing, —
nobis ad belli auxilium pro nomine tanto

The battle-help that I may give is but a little thing

exiguae uires; hinc Tusco claudimur amni,
For such a name: by Tuscan stream on this side are we bound;
hinc Rutulus premit et murum circumsonat armis.
On that side come Rutulian arms to gird our walls with sound.
sed tibi ego ingentis populos opulentaque regnis 475
But 'tis my rede to join to you a mighty folk of fight,
iungere castra paro, quam fors inopina salutem
A wealthy lordship: chance unhoped this hope for us hath dight;
ostentat: fatis huc te poscentibus adfers.
So draw thou thither whereunto the Fates are calling on.
haud procul hinc saxo incolitur fundata uetusto
Not far hence is a place of men, on rock of yore agone
urbis Agyllinae sedes, ubi Lydia quondam
Built up; Agylla's city 'tis, where glorious folk of war,
gens, bello praeclara, iugis insedit Etruscis. 480
The Lydian folk, on Tuscan hills pitched their abode of yore.
hanc multos florentem annos rex deinde superbo
A many years of blooming once they had, until the king
imperio et saeuis tenuit Mezentius armis.
Mezentius held them 'neath his pride and cruel warfaring.
quid memorem infandas caedes, quid facta tyranni
Why tell those deaths unspeakable, and many a tyrant's deed?
effera? di capiti ipsius generique reseruent!
May the Gods store them for the heads of him and all his seed!
mortua quin etiam iungebat corpora uiuis 485
Yea, yea, dead corpses would he join to bodies living yet,
componens manibusque manus atque oribus ora,
And hand to hand, O misery! and mouth to mouth would set;
tormenti genus, et sanie taboque fluentis
There, drenched with gore and drenched with dew of death, must they abide,
complexu in misero longa sic morte necabat.
A foul embrace unspeakable, and long and long they died.
at fessi tandem ciues infanda furentem
Worn out at last, his folk in arms beset his house about,
armati circumsistunt ipsumque domumque, 490
And him therein all mad with rage, cut of his following rout,

obtruncant socios, ignem ad fastigia iactant.
 And cast the wildfire therewithal over his roof on high:
 ille inter caedem Rutulorum elapsus in agros
 But he, amidst the slaughter slipped, to fields of Rutuli
 confugere et Turni defendier hospitibus armis.
 Made shift to flee, and there is held a guest by Turnus' sword.
 ergo omnis furiis surrexit Etruria iustis,
 So by just anger raised today Etruria is abroad,
 regem ad supplicium praesenti Marte repossunt. 495
 Crying with Mars to aid, 'Give back the king to pay the cost!'
 his ego te, Aenea, ductorem milibus addam.
 Æneas, I will make thee now the captain of their host:
 toto namque fremunt condensae litore puppes
 For down the whole coast goes the roar from out their ship-host's pack;
 signaque ferre iubent, retinet longaeus haruspex
 They cry to bear the banners forth; but them still holdeth back
 fata canens: "o Maeoniae delecta iuventus,
 The ancient seer, thus singing Fate: Mæonia's chosen peers,
 flos ueterum uirtusque uirum, quos iustus in hostem 500
 The heart and flower of men of old, whom grief's just measure bears
 fert dolor et merita accendit Mezentius ira,
 Against the foe; souls that your king hath stirred to righteous wrath,
 nulli fas Italo tantam subiungere gentem:
 No man of Italy is meet to lead this army forth;
 externos optate duces." tum Etrusca resedit
 Seek outland captains. Then, indeed, the Tuscan war array,
 hoc acies campo monitis exterrita diuum.
 Feared by such warnings of the Gods, amidst these meadows lay.
 ipse oratores ad me regnique coronam 505
 Tarchon himself hath hither sent sweet speakers, bearing me
 cum sceptro misit mandatque insignia Tarchon,
 Their lordships' kingly staff and crown, and signs of royalty;
 succedam castris Tyrrhenaque regna capessam.
 And bidding take the Tuscan land and join their camp of war.
 sed mihi tarda gelu saeculisque effeta senectus
 But old adull with winter frost and spent with days of yore,

inuidet imperium seraeque ad fortia uires.

My body over-old for deeds begrudged such government.

natum exhortarer, ni mixtus matre Sabella 510

I would have stirred my son, but he, with Sabine mother blent,

hinc partem patriae traheret. tu, cuius et annis

Shared blood of this Italian land: but thee the Fates endow

et generi fatum indulget, quem numina poscunt,

With years and race full meet hereto; the Gods call on thee now.

ingredere, o Teucrum atque Italum fortissime ductor.

Go forth, O captain valorous of Italy and Troy.

hunc tibi praeterea, spes et solacia nostri,

Yea, I will give thee Pallas here, my hope and darling joy,

Pallanta adiungam; sub te tolerare magistro 515

And bid him 'neath thy mastery learn in battle to be bold,

militiam et graue Martis opus, tua cernere facta

And win the heavy work of Mars, and all thy deeds behold;

adsuescat, primis et te miretur ab annis.

And, wondering at thy valiancy, win through his earliest years.

Arcadas huic equites bis centum, robora pubis

Two hundred knights of Arcady, the bloom of all it bears,

lecta dabo, totidemque suo tibi nomine Pallas.'

I give thee; in his own name, too, like host shall Pallas bring."

Vix ea fatus erat, defixique ora tenebant 520

Scarce had he said, and still their gaze unto the earth did cling,

Aeneas Anchisiades et fidus Achates,

Æneas of Anchises born and his Achates true,

multaque dura suo tristi cum corde putabant,

For many thoughts of matters hard their minds were running through,

ni signum caelo Cytherea dedisset aperto.

When Cytherea gave a sign amid the open sky;

namque improuiso uibratus ab aethere fulgor

For from the left a flash of light went quivering suddenly,

cum sonitu uenit et ruere omnia uisa repente, 525

And sound went with it, and all things in utter turmoil fared,

Tyrrhenusque tubae mugire per aethera clangor.

And clangour of the Tyrrhene trump along the heavens blared.

suspiciunt, iterum atque iterum fragor increpat ingens.

They look up; ever and anon a mighty clash they hear,
 arma inter nubem caeli in regione serena
 And gleams they see betwixt the clouds, amid the sky-land clear,
 per sudum rutilare uident et pulsa tonare.
 The glitter of the arms of God, the thunder of their clang.
 obstipuerunt animis alii, sed Troius heros 530
 The man of Troy, while others' hearts amazed and fearful hang, agnouit sonitum et diuinae promissa parentis.
 Knoweth the sound, the promised help, his Goddess-mother's need.
 tum memorat: 'ne uero, hospes, ne quaere profecto
 He saith: "Yea, verily, O host, to ask is little need
 quem casum portenta ferant: ego poscor Olympo.
 What hap this portent draweth on: the Gods will have me wend;
 hoc signum cecinit missuram diua creatrix,
 The God that made me promised erst such heavenly signs to send
 si bellum ingrueret, Volcaniaque arma per auras 535
 If war were toward; and through the sky she promised to bear down
 laturam auxilio.
 Arms Vulcan-fashioned for my need.
 heu quantae miseris caedes Laurentibus instant!
 Woe's me for poor Laurentium's folk! what death, what bloody graves!
 quas poenas mihi, Turne, dabis! quam multa sub undas
 — Ah, Turnus, thou shalt pay it me! — how many 'neath thy waves,
 scuta uirum galeasque et fortia corpora uolues,
 O Father Tiber, shalt thou roll the shields and helms of men,
 Thybri pater! poscant acies et foedera rumpant.' 540
 And bodies of the mighty ones! Cry war, oath-breakers, then!"
 Haec ubi dicta dedit, solio se tollit ab alto
 And as he spake the word he rose from off the lofty throne,
 et primum Herculeis sopitas ignibus aras
 And the slaked fire of Hercules roused on the altar-stone;
 excitat, hesternumque larem paruosque penatis
 And joyfully he drew anear the God of yesterday
 laetus adit; mactat lectas de more bidentis
 And little House-Gods: chosen ewes in manner due they slay,
 Euandrus pariter, pariter Troiana iuuentus. 545

Evander and the youth of Troy together side by side.
post hinc ad nauis graditur sociosque reuisit,
Then to the ships they wend their ways, where yet their fellows bide:
quorum de numero qui sese in bella sequantur
There men to follow him in fight he chooseth from the peers,
praestantis uirtute legit; pars cetera prona
The flower of hardy hearts; the rest the downlong water bears;
fertur aqua segnisque secundo defluit amni,
Deedless they swim adown the stream, Ascanius home to bring
nuntia uentura Ascanio rerumque patrisque. 550
The tidings of his coming sire and matters flourishing.
dantur equi Teucris Tyrrhena petentibus arua;
But horses get such Teucrian men as are for Tyrrhene mead;
ducunt exsortem Aeneae, quem fulua leonis
By lot they choose Æneas one which yellow lion's weed
pellis obit totum praefulgens unguibus aureis.
Goes all about; full fair it shone, for it was golden-clawed.
Fama uolat paruam subito uulgata per urbem
Then sudden through the little town the rumour flies abroad,
ocius ire equites Tyrrheni ad limina regis. 555
That knights will speedily ride forth to Tyrrhene kingly stead.
uota metu duplicant matres, propiusque periclo
Then fear redoubleth mothers' prayers, and nigher draweth dread
it timor et maior Martis iam apparet imago.
In peril's hand, and greater still the face of Mars doth grow.
tum pater Euandrus dextram complexus euntis
Father Evander strains the hand of him that needs must go,
haeret inexpletus lacrimans ac talia fatur:
Clinging with tears insatiate, and such a word doth say:
'o mihi praeteritos referat si Iuppiter annos, 560
"O me! would Jove bring back again the years long worn away!
qualis eram cum primam aciem Praeneste sub ipsa
Were I as when the foremost foes upon Praeneste's field
straui scutorumque incendi uictor aceruos
I felled, and burnt victoriously a heap of shield on shield:
et regem hac Erulum dextra sub Tartara misi,
When with this very hand I sent King Herilus to Hell,

nascenti cui tris animas Feronia mater
 Whose dam, Feronia, at his birth, — wild is the tale to tell, —
 (horrendum dictu) dederat, terna arma mouenda — 565
 Had given him gift of threefold life; three times the sword to shake,
 ter leto sternendus erat; cui tunc tamen omnis
 And thrice to fall upon the field: yet did this right hand take
 abstulit haec animas dextra et totidem exuit armis:
 That threefold life away from him, thrice spoiled him of his gear.
 non ego nunc dulci amplexu diuellerer usquam,
 O were I such, ne'er would I break from thine embracing dear,
 nate, tuo, neque finitimo Mezentius umquam
 O son; nor had Mezentius erst, the tyrant neighbour lord,
 huic capiti insultans tot ferro saeua dedisset 570
 In my despite so many deaths wrought with his cruel sword,
 funera, tam multis uiduasset ciuibus urbem.
 Nor widowed this our city here of such a host of sons.
 at uos, o superi, et diuum tu maxime rector
 But ye, O Gods! — thou Mightiest, King of all heavenly ones,
 Iuppiter, Arcadii, quaeso, miserescite regis
 O Jove, have pity now, I pray, upon the Arcadian King,
 et patrias audite preces. si numina uestra
 And hear a father's prayers! for if your mighty governing, —
 incolumem Pallanta mihi, si fata reseruant, 575
 If Fate shall keep my Pallas safe, and I may live to see
 si uisurus eum uiuo et uenturus in unum,
 His face again, — if he return to keep our unity,
 uitam oro, patior quemuis durare laborem.
 Then may I live, and any toil, such as ye will, abide!
 sin aliquem infandum casum, Fortuna, minaris,
 But, Fortune, if thou threatenest ill, and misery betide,
 nunc, nunc o liceat crudelem abrumpere uitam,
 Then let me now, yea, now indeed, the cruel life break through,
 dum curae ambiguae, dum spes incerta futuri, 580
 While yet my fear is unfulfilled and hope may yet come true;
 dum te, care puer, mea sola et sera uoluptas,
 While thee, belovèd joy of eld, I wrap mine arms around,
 complexu teneo, grauior neu nuntius auris

Ere yet the tale of evil hap mine ancient ears may wound."
 uulneret.' haec genitor digressu dicta supremo
 Thus at their last departing-tide the father poured the prayer,
 fundebat; famuli conlapsum in tecta ferebant.
 Whom, fainting now, the serving-men back within doors must bear;
 Iamque adeo exierat portis equitatus apertis 585
 While forth from out the open gate the host of horsemen ride,
 Aeneas inter primos et fidus Achates,
 Æneas and Achates leal in forefront of their pride,
 inde alii Troiae proceres; ipse agmine Pallas
 And then the other Trojan lords: amidst the company,
 it medio chlamyde et pictis conspectus in armis,
 In cloak adorned and painted arms, was Pallas fair to see:
 qualis ubi Oceani perfusus Lucifer unda,
 E'en such as Lucifer, when he bathed in the ocean stream,
 quem Venus ante alios astrorum diligit ignis, 590
 The light beloved of Venus well o'er every starry beam,
 extulit os sacrum caelo tenebrasque resoluit.
 Hath raised his holy head in heaven and down the darkness rent.
 stant puidae in muris matres oculisque sequuntur
 The fearful mothers on the walls their eyen after sent,
 pulueream nubem et fulgentis aere cateruas.
 Following the dusty cloud of them and ranks of glittering brass.
 olli per dumos, qua proxima meta uiarum,
 But mid the thicket places there by highest road they pass
 armati tendunt; it clamor, et agmine facto 595
 Unto their end in weed of war: with shout and serried band
 quadripedante putrem sonitu quatit ungula campum.
 The clattering hooves of four-foot things shake down the dusty land.
 est ingens gelidum lucus prope Caeritis amnem,
 There is a mighty thicket-place by chilly Cæres' side,
 religione patrum late sacer; undique colles
 By ancient dread of fathers gone held holy far and wide:
 inclusere caui et nigra nemus abiete cingunt.
 A place that hollow hills shut in and pine-wood black begirds.
 Siluano fama est ueteres sacrasse Pelagos, 600
 Men say that to Silvanus erst, the God of fields and herds,

aruorum pecorisque deo, lucumque diemque,
The old Pelasgi hallowed it, and made a holy day,
qui primi finis aliquando habuere Latinos.
E'en those who in the time agone on Latin marches lay.
haud procul hinc Tarcho et Tyrrheni tuta tenebant
No great way hence the Tuscan folk and Tarcho held them still
castra locis, celsoque omnis de colle uideri
In guarded camp; the host of them from rising of a hill
iam poterat legio et latis tendebat in aruis. 605
Might now be seen, as far and wide they spread about the field.
huc pater Aeneas et bello lecta iuuentus
Father Æneas and his folk, the mighty under shield,
succedunt, fessique et equos et corpora curant.
Speed hither, and forewearied now their steeds and bodies tend.
At Venus aetherios inter dea candida nimbos
But through the clouds of heavenly way doth fair white Venus wend,
dona ferens aderat; natumque in ualle reducta
Bearing the gift; who when she saw in hidden valley there
ut procul egelido secretum flumine uidit, 610
Her son afar, apart from men by river cool and fair,
talibus adfata est dictis seque obtulit ultro:
Then kind she came before his eyes, and in such words she spake:
'en perfecta mei promissa coniugis arte
"These promised gifts, my husband's work, O son, I bid thee take:
munera. ne mox aut Laurentis, nate, superbos
So shalt thou be all void of doubt, O son, when presently
aut acrem dubites in proelia poscere Turnum.' Laurentines proud and Turnus fierce thou bidst the battle try."
dixit, et amplexus nati Cytherea petiuit, 615
So spake the Cytherean one and sought her son's embrace,
arma sub aduersa posuit radiantia quercu.
And hung the beaming arms upon an oak that stood in face.
ille deae donis et tanto laetus honore
But he, made glad by godhead's gift, and such a glory great,
expleri nequit atque oculos per singula uoluit,
Marvelleth and rolleth o'er it all his eyes insatiate,
miraturque interque manus et brachia uersat

And turns the pieces o'er and o'er his hands and arms between;
terribilem cristis galeam flammasque uomentem, 620

The helm that flasheth flames abroad with crest so dread beseen:
fatiferumque ensem, loricam ex aere rigentem,

The sword to do the deeds of Fate; the hard-wrought plates of brass,
sanguineam, ingentem, qualis cum caerula nubes

Blood-red and huge; yea, e'en as when the bright sun brings to pass solis inardescit radiis longaeque refulget;

Its burning through the coal-blue clouds and shines o'er field and fold:

tum leuis ocreas electro auroque recocto,

The light greaves forged and forged again of silver-blend and gold:
hastamque et clipei non enarrabile textum. 625

The spear, and, thing most hard to tell, the plating of the shield.
illic res Italas Romanorumque triumphos

For there the tale of Italy and Roman joy afield

haud uatum ignarus uenturique inscius aevi

That Master of the Fire had wrought, not unlearned of the seers,
fecerat ignipotens, illic genus omne futurae

Or blind to see the days before. The men of coming years,
stirpis ab Ascanio pugnataque in ordine bella.

Ascanius stem, all foughten fields, were wrought in due array.

fecerat et uiridi fetam Mauortis in antro 630

In the green den of Mavors there the fostering she-wolf lay,

procubuisse lupam, geminos huic ubera circum

The twin lads sporting round the beast, clung to her udders there,
ludere pendentis pueros et lambere matrem

And sucked the nursing mother-wolf, and nothing knew of fear;
impauidos, illam tereti ceruice reflexa

But she, with lithe neck turned about, now this now that caressed,
mulcere alternos et corpora fingere lingua.

And either body with her tongue for hardy shaping pressed.

nec procul hinc Romam et raptas sine more Sabinas 635

Rome had he done anigh thereto and Sabine maidens caught
consessu caueae, magnis Circensibus actis,

From concourse of the hollow seats when roundway games were wrought

addiderat, subitoque nouum consurgere bellum
 There for the sons of Romulus the sudden war upstarts
 Romulidis Tatioque seni Curibusque seueris.
 With Tatius, the old king of days, and Cures' hardy hearts.
 post idem inter se posito certamine reges
 Then those two kings, the battle quenched, yet clad in battle-gear,
 armati Iouis ante aram paterasque tenentes 640
 Stand with the bowl in hand before the fire of Jupiter,
 stabant et caesa iungebant foedera porca.
 As each to each o'er slaughtered sow the troth of peace they plight.
 haud procul inde citae Mettum in diuersa quadrigae
 Anigh is Metius piecemeal dragged by foursome chariots light.
 distulerant (at tu dictis, Albane, maneres!),
 — Ah, Alban, by the troth of words 'twere better to abide! —
 raptabatque uiri mendacis uiscera Tullus
 There Tullus strews his lying flesh about the thicket wide,
 per siluam, et sparsi rorabant sanguine uepres. 645
 Nor sprinkling of a traitor's blood the bramble-bushes lack.
 nec non Tarquinius eiectum Porsenna iubebat
 There was Porsenna bidding men take outcast Tarquin back,
 accipere ingentique urbem obsidione premebat;
 The while his mighty leaguer lay about the city's weal.
 Aeneadae in ferrum pro libertate ruebant.
 For freedom there Æneas' sons were rushing on the steel:
 illum indignanti similem similemque minanti
 As full of wrath, as one who threats, might ye behold his frown,
 aspiceres, pontem auderet quia uellere Cocles 650
 Because that Cocles was of heart to break the bridge adown;
 et fluuium uinclis innaret Cloelia ruptis.
 And Cloelia from her bursten bonds was swimming o'er the flood.
 in summo custos Tarpeiae Manlius arcis
 On topmost of Tarpeian burg the warden Manlius stood stabat pro templo et Capitolia celsa tenebat,
 Before the house of God, and held the Capitol high-set;
 Romuleoque recens horrebat regia culmo.
 Whereon with straw of Romulus the roof was bristling yet.
 atque hic auratis uolitans argenteus anser 655

There fluttering mid the golden porch the silver goose was done,
 porticibus Gallos in limine adesse canebat;
 The seer that told of Gaulish feet unto the threshold won:
 Galli per dumos aderant arcemque tenebant
 Then through the brake the Gauls were come, and held the castle's height,
 defensi tenebris et dono noctis opacae.
 Beneath the shielding of the mirk and gift of shadowy night.
 aurea caesaries ollis atque aurea uestis,
 All golden are the locks of these, and golden is their gear,
 uirgatis lucent sagulis, tum lactea colla 660
 And fair they shine in welshed coats; their milk-white necks do bear
 auro innectuntur, duo quisque Alpina coruscant
 The twisted gold; each one in hand two Alpine spears doth wield, gaesa manu, scutis protecti corpora longis.
 And guarded are their bodies well with plenteous length of shield.
 hic exsultantis Salios nudosque Lupercos
 The Salii in their dancing game; the naked Luperci,
 lanigerosque apices et lapsa ancilia caelo
 With crests that bore the tuft of wool and shields from out the sky,
 extuderat, castae ducebant sacra per urbem 665
 There had he wrought: the mothers chaste in softly-gliding car
 pilentis matres in mollibus. hinc procul addit Bore holy things the city through. Yea, he had wrought afar
 Tartareas etiam sedes, alta ostia Ditis,
 The very house of Tartarus, and doors of Dis the deep,
 et scelerum poenas, et te, Catilina, minaci
 And dooms of evil: there wert thou hung on the beetling steep,
 pendentem scopulo Furiarumque ora trementem,
 O Catiline, and quaking sore 'neath many a fiendly face;
 secretosque pios, his dantem iura Catonem. 670
 While Cato gave the good their laws in happy hidden place.
 haec inter tumidi late maris ibat imago
 The image of the swelling sea amidst of these there lay
 aurea, sed fluctu spumabant caerulea cano,
 All golden, with the blue o'erfoamed with flecks of hoary spray,
 et circum argento clari delphines in orbem

And dolphins shining silver-white with tail-stroke swept the wave,
aequora uerrebant caudis aestumque secabant.

And gathered in an orbèd band the flowing waters clave.

in medio classis aeratas, Actia bella, 675

And in the midst were brazen fleets and show of Actium's wars
cernere erat, totumque instructo Marte uideres

And all Leucate set a-boil with ordered game of Mars
feruere Leucaten auroque effulgere fluctus.

There might ye see; and all the flood lit up with golden light.

hinc Augustus agens Italos in proelia Caesar

Augustus Cæsar, leading on Italian men to fight
cum patribus populoque, penatibus et magnis dis,

With Father-folk, and Household Gods, and Gods of greater name,
stans celsa in puppi, geminas cui tempora flammas 680

Stood high on deck: his joyful brow flashed forth a twofold flame, laeta uomunt patriumque aperitur uertice sidus.

His father's star above his head is shining glory-clear.

parte alia uentis et dis Agrippa secundis

With wind to aid and God to aid, Agrippa elsewhere

arduus agmen agens, cui, belli insigne superbum,

Leads on the host from high; whose brows with glorious battle-sign tempora nauali fulgent rostrata corona.

Are decked; for with the crown of beaks, the ship-host's prize, they shine.

hinc ope barbarica uariisque Antonius armis, 685

But Antony, with outland force and arms wrought diversely, uictor ab Aurorae populis et litore rubro,

Victorious from the morning-folks and ruddy-stranded sea,

Aegyptum uirisque Orientis et ultima secum

Bore Egypt and the Eastland might and Bactria's outer ends;

Bactra uehit, sequiturque (nefas) Aegyptia coniunx.

And after him — O shame to tell! — a wife of Egypt wends.

una omnes ruere ac totum spumare reductis

They rush together; all the sea is beaten into foam,

conuulsum remis rostrisque tridentibus aequor. 690

Torn by the great three-tyndè beaks and oar-blades driven home:

alta petunt; pelago credas innare reuulsas

They seek the deep: ye might have thought that upturn Cyclades
Cycladas aut montis concurrere montibus altos,
Swam o'er the main, that mountains met high mountains on the seas,
tanta mole uiri turritis puppibus instant.
With such a world of towered ships fall on those folks of war.
stuppea flamma manu telisque uolatile ferrum
The hempen flame they fling from hand; they cast the dart afar
spargitur, arua noua Neptunia caede rubescunt. 695
Of wingèd steel, and Neptune's lea reddens with death anew.
regina in mediis patrio uocat agmina sistro,
The Queen amidst calls on her host with timbrel fashioned due necdum etiam geminos a tergo respicit anguis.
In Egypt's guise, nor looks aback the adders twain to see;
omnigenumque deum monstra et latrator Anubis Barking Anubis, shapes of God wild-wrought and diversely contra Neptunum et Venerem contraque Mineruam
'Gainst Neptune and 'gainst Venus fair, and 'gainst Minerva's weal
tela tenent. saeuit medio in certamine Mauors 700
Put forth the spear; and Mavors' wrath was fashioned forth in steel caelatus ferro, tristesque ex aethere Dirae, Amidst the fight: the Dreadful Ones stooped evil-wrought from
heaven,
et scissa gaudens uadit Discordia palla,
And Discord stalked all glad at heart beneath her mantle riven;
quam cum sanguineo sequitur Bellona flagello.
And after her, red scourge in hand, did dire Bellona go.
Actius haec cernens arcum intendebat Apollo
All this Apollo, Actian-housed, beheld, and bent his bow
desuper; omnis eo terrore Aegyptus et Indi, 705
From high aloft, and with his fear all Egypt fell to wrack, omnis Arabs, omnes uertebant terga Sabaei.
And Ind and Araby; and all Sabæans turned the back.
ipsa uidebatur uentis regina uocatis
Then once again the Queen was wrought, who on the winds doth cry,
uela dare et laxos iam iamque immittere funis.
And spreadeth sail; and now, and now, the slackened sheet lets fly.
illam inter caedes pallentem morte futura

The Lord of Fire had wrought her there wan with the death to be,
fecerat ignipotens undis et Iapyge ferri, 710
 Borne on, amid the death of men, by wind and following sea.
contra autem magno maerentem corpore Nilum
 But Nile was wrought to meet them there, with body great to grieve, pandentemque sinus et tota ueste uocantem
 And in the folding of his cloak the vanquished to receive,
caeruleum in gremium latebrosaque flumina uictos.
 To take them to his bosom grey, his flood of hidden home.
 at Caesar, triplici inuectus Romana triumpho
 There Cæsar threefold triumphing, borne on amidst of Rome, moenia, dis Italis uotum immortale sacrat, 715
 Three hundred shrines was hallowing to Gods of Italy
maxima ter centum totam delubra per urbem.
 Through all the city; glorious gift that nevermore shall die;
laetitia ludisque uiae plausuque fremebant;
 The while all ways with joy and game and plenteous praising rang.
omnibus in templis matrum chorus, omnibus arae;
 In all the temples altars were; in all the mothers sang ante aras terram caesi strauere iuuenti.
 Before the altars; on the earth the steers' due slaughter lay.
ipse sedens niueo candentis limine Phoebi 720
 But on the snow-white threshold there of Phoebus bright as day
dona recognoscit populorum aptatque superbis
 He sat and took the nations' gifts, and on the glorious door
postibus; incedunt uictae longo ordine gentes,
 He hung them up: in long array the tamed folks went before,
quam uariae linguis, habitu tam uestis et armis.
 As diverse in their tongues as in their arms and garments' guise.
hic Nomadum genus et discinctos Mulciber Afros,
 The Nomads had he fashioned there, that Mulciber the wise,
hic Lelegas Carasque sagittiferosque Gelonos 725
 And Afric's all ungirded folk; Carians and Leleges, finxerat; Euphrates ibat iam mollior undis, Shafted Geloni: softlier there Euphrates rolled his seas;
extremique hominum Morini, Rhenusque bicornis,
 The Morini, the last of men, the hornèd Rhine, were there,

indomitique Dahae, et pontem indignatus Araxes.

Danæ untamed, Araxes loth the chaining bridge to bear.

Talia per clipeum Volcani, dona parentis,

So on the shield, his mother's gift by Vulcan fashioned fair,

miratur rerumque ignarus imagine gaudet 730

He wondereth, blind of things to come but glad the tale to see,

attollens umero famamque et fata nepotum.

And on his shoulder bears the fame and fate of sons to be.

LIBER IX

BOOK IX.

Atque ea diuersa penitus dum parte geruntur,
Now while a long way off therefrom do these and those such deed,
Irim de caelo misit Saturnia Iuno
Saturnian Juno Iris sends from heaven aloft to speed
audacem ad Turnum. luco tum forte parentis
To Turnus of the hardy heart, abiding, as doth hap,
Pilumni Turnus sacrata ualle sedebat.
Within his sire Pilumnus' grove in shady valley's lap;
ad quem sic roseo Thaumantias ore locuta est: 5
Whom Thamas' child from rosy mouth in suchwise doth bespeak:
'Turne, quod optanti diuum promittere nemo
"Turnus, what no one of the Gods might promise, didst thou seek,
auderet, uoluenda dies en attulit ultro.
The day of Fate undriven now hath borne about for thee:
Aeneas urbe et sociis et classe relictā
Æneas, he hath left his town, and ships, and company,
sceptra Palatini sedemque petit Euandri.
And sought the lordship Palatine and King Evander's house;
nec satis: extremas Corythi penetrauit ad urbes 10
Nay more, hath reached the utmost steads, the towns of Corythus
Lydorumque manum, collectos armat agrestis.
And host of Lydians, where he arms the gathered carles for war.
quid dubitas? nunc tempus equos, nunc poscere currus.
Why doubt'st thou? now is time to call for horse and battle-car.
 rumpe moras omnis et turbata arripe castra.'
Break tarrying off, and make thy stoop upon their camp's dismay."
dixit, et in caelum paribus se sustulit alis
She spake, and on her poisèd wings went up the heavenly way,
ingentemque fuga secuit sub nubibus arcum. 15
And in her flight with mighty bow cleft through the cloudy land.
agnouit iuuenis duplicisque ad sidera palmas
The warrior knew her, and to heaven he cast up either hand,

sustulit ac tali fugientem est uoce secutus:

And with such voice of spoken things he followed as she fled:

‘Iri, decus caeli, quis te mihi nubibus actam

“O Iris, glory of the skies, and who thy ways hath sped

detulit in terras? unde haec tam clara repente

Amidst the clouds to earth and me? Whence this so sudden clear
tempestas? medium uideo discedere caelum 20

Of weather? Lo, the midmost heaven I see departed shear,
palantisque polo stellas. sequor omina tanta,

And through the zenith stray the stars: such signs I follow on,
quisquis in arma uocas.’ et sic effatus ad undam

Whoso ye be that call to war.” And therewithal he won

processit summoque hausit de gurgite lymphas

Unto the stream, and from its face drew forth the water fair,
multa deos orans, oneravitque aethera uotis.

Praying the Gods, and laid a load of vows upon the air.

Iamque omnis campis exercitus ibat apertis 25

And now the host drew out to war amid the open meads,

diues equum, diues pictai uestis et auri;

With wealth of painted gear and gold, and wealth of noble steeds.

Messapus primas acies, postrema coercent

Messapus leads the first array, and Tyrrheus’ children ward

Tyrrhidae iuuenes, medio dux agmine Turnus:

The latter host, and in the midst is Turnus’ self the lord.

ceu septem surgens sedatis amnibus altus 30

Such is the host as Ganges deep, arising mid the hush

per tacitum Ganges aut pingui flumine Nilus

With sevenfold rivers’ solemn flow, or Nile-flood’s fruitful rush,
cum refluit campis et iam se condidit alueo.

When he hath ebbed from off the fields and hid him in his bed.

hic subitam nigro glomerari puluere nubem

But now the Teucrians see the cloud of black dust grow to head
prospiciunt Teucri ac tenebras insurgere campis.

From far away, and dusty-dark across the plain arise:

primus ab aduersa conclamat mole Caicus: 35

And first from off the mound in face aloud Caicus cries:

‘quis globus, o ciues, caligine uoluitur atra?’

“Ho! what is this that rolleth on, this misty, mirky ball?
ferte citi ferrum, date tela, ascendite muros,
Swords, townsmen, swords! Bring point and edge; haste up to climb the wall.

hostis adest, heia!’ ingenti clamore per omnis
Ho, for the foeman is at hand!” Then, with a mighty shout,
condunt se Teucri portas et moenia complent.
The Trojans swarm through all the gates and fill the walls about;
namque ita discedens praeceperat optimus armis 40

For so Æneas, war-lord wise, had bidden them abide

Aeneas: si qua interea fortuna fuisset,

At his departing; if meantime some new hap should betide,
neu struere auderent aciem neu credere campo;

They should not dare nor trust themselves to pitch the fight afield,
castra modo et tutos seruarent aggere muros.

But hold the camp and save the town beneath the ramparts’ shield.

ergo etsi conferre manum pudor iraque monstrat,

Therefore, though shame and anger bade go forth and join the play,
obiciunt portas tamen et praecepta facessunt, 45

They bolt and bar the gates no less and all his word obey;
armatique cauis exspectant turribus hostem.

And armed upon the hollow towers abide the coming foe.

Turnus, ut ante uolans tardum praecesserat agmen

But Turnus, flying forward fast, outwent the main host slow,
uiginti lectis equitum comitatus et urbi

And with a score of chosen knights is presently at hand
improvisus adest, maculis quem Thracius albis

Before the town: borne on he was on horse of Thracian land,
portat equus cristaque tegit galea aurea rubra, 50

White-flecked, and helmeted was he with ruddy-crested gold.
‘ecquis erit mecum, iuuenes, qui primus in hostem — ?

“Who will be first with me, O youths, play with the foe to hold?
en,’ ait et iaculum attorquens emittit in auras,

Lo, here!” he cried; and on the air a whirling shaft he sent,
principium pugnae, et campo sese arduus infert.

The first of fight, and borne aloft about the meadows went.
clamorem excipiunt socii fremituque sequuntur

His fellows take it up with shouts, and dreadful cry on rolls
horrisono; Teucrum mirantur inertia corda, 55

As fast they follow, wondering sore at sluggard Teucrian souls, —
non aequo dare se campo, non obuia ferre

That men should shun the battle pitched, nor dare the weapon-game,
arma uiros, sed castra fouere. huc turbidus atque huc

But hug their walls. So round the walls, high-horsed, with heart aflame,

lustrat equo muros aditumque per auia quaerit.

He rides about, and tries a way where never was a way:

ac ueluti pleno lupus insidiatus ouili

E'en as a wolf the sheep-fold full besetteth on a day,

cum fremit ad caulas uentos perpessus et imbris 60

And howleth round about the garth, by wind and rain-drift beat,
nocte super media; tuti sub matribus agni

About the middle of the night, while safe the lamb-folk bleat

balatum exercent, ille asper et improbus ira

Beneath their mothers: wicked-fierce against them safe and near
saeuit in absentis; collecta fatigat edendi

He rageth; hunger-madness long a-gathering him doth wear,

ex longo rabies et siccae sanguine fauces:

With yearning for that blood beloved to wet his parchèd jaws.

haud aliter Rutulo muros et castra tuenti 65

E'en so in that Rutulian duke to flame the anger draws,

ignescunt irae, duris dolor ossibus ardet.

As he beholdeth walls and camp: sore burnt his hardy heart

qua temptet ratione aditus, et quae uia clausos

For shifts to come at them; to shake those Teucrians shut apart

excutiat Teucros uallo atque effundat in aequum?

From out their walls and spread their host about the meadows wide.

classem, quae lateri castrorum adiuncta latebat,

So on the ships he falls, that lay the campment's fence beside,

aggeribus saeptam circum et fluuialibus undis, 70

Hedged all about with garth and mound and by the river's flood,

inuadit sociosque incendia poscit ouantis

And to the burning crieth on his folk of joyous mood,

atque manum pinu flagranti feruidus implet.

And eager fills his own right hand with branch of blazing fir:
 tum uero incumbunt (urget praesentia Turni),
 Then verily they fall to work whom Turnus' gaze doth stir,
 atque omnis facibus pubes accingitur atris.
 And all the host of them in haste hand to the black torch lays.
 diripuere focos: piceum fert fumida lumen 75
 They strip the hearths; the smoky brand sends forth pitch-laden blaze,
 taeda et commixtam Volcanus ad astra fauillam.
 And starward soot-bemingled flame drave Vulcan as he burned.
 Quis deus, o Musae, tam saeua incendia Teucris
 Say, Muse, what God from Teucrian folk such sore destruction turned?
 auertit? tantos ratibus quis depulit ignis?
 Who drave away from Trojan keels so mighty great a flame?
 dicite: prisca fides facto, sed fama perennis.
 Old is the troth in such a tale, but never dies its fame.
 tempore quo primum Phrygia formabat in Ida 80
 What time Æneas first began on Phrygian Ida's steep
 Aeneas classem et pelagi petere alta parabat,
 To frame his ships, and dight him there to ride upon the deep,
 ipsa deum fertur genetrix Berecynthia magnum
 The Berecynthian Mother-Queen spake, as the tale doth fare,
 uocibus his adfata Iouem: 'da, nate, petenti,
 Unto the Godhead of great Jove: "Son, grant unto my prayer
 quod tua cara parens domito te poscit Olympo.
 That which thy lovèd mother asks from heaven all tamed to peace:
 pinea silua mihi multos dilecta per annos, 85
 A wood of pines I have, beloved through many years' increase.
 lucus in arce fuit summa, quo sacra ferebant,
 There is a thicket on my height wherein men worship me,
 nigranti picea trabibusque obscurus acernis.
 Dim with the blackening of the firs and trunks of maple-tree:
 has ego Dardanio iuueni, cum classis egeret,
 These to the Dardan youth in need of ship-host grudged I nought,
 laeta dedi; nunc sollicitam timor anxius angit.
 But in my anxious soul as now is born a troubling thought.

solue metus atque hoc precibus sine posse parentem, 90
Do off my dread, and let, I pray, a mother's prayers avail,
ne cursu quassatae ullo neu turbine uenti
That these amid no shattering sea or whirling wind may fail;
uincantur: prosit nostris in montibus ortas.'
Let it avail them that my heights first brought them unto birth."
filius huic contra, torquet qui sidera mundi:
Answered her son, that swayeth still the stars that rule the earth:
'o genetrix, quo fata uocas? aut quid petis istis?
"O mother, whither call'st thou Fate? what wouldst thou have them be?

mortaline manu factae immortale carinae 95
Shall keels of mortal fashioning gain immortality?
fas habeant? certusque incerta pericula lustret
And shall Æneas well assured stray every peril through?
Aeneas? cui tanta deo permissa potestas?
Shall this be right? hath any God the power such things to do?
immo, ubi defunctae finem portusque tenebunt
No less when they have done their work, and safe in Italy
Ausonios olim, quaecumque euaserit undis
Lie in the haven, which soe'er have overpassed the sea,
Dardaniumque ducem Laurentia uexerit arua, 100
And borne the Duke of Dardan men to that Laurentine home,
mortalem eripiam formam magnique iubebo
From such will I take mortal shape, and bid them to become
aequoris esse deas, qualis Nereia Doto
Queens of the sea-plain, such as are Doto the Nereus child,
et Galatea secant spumantem pectore pontum.'
And Galatea, whose bosoms cleave the foaming waters wild."
dixerat idque ratum Stygii per flumina fratris,
He spake and swore it by the flood his Stygian Brother rules,
per pice torrentis atraque uoragine ripas 105
And by its banks that reek with pitch o'er its black whirling pools,
adnuat, et totum nutu tremefecit Olympum.
And with the bowing of his head did all Olympus shake.
Ergo aderat promissa dies et tempora Parcae
And now the promised day was come, nor will the Parcae break

debita complerant, cum Turni iniuria Matrem
 The time fulfilled; when Turnus' threat now bade the Mother heed
 admonuit ratibus sacris depellere taedas.
 That she from those her holy ships should turn the fire at need.
 hic primum noua lux oculis offulsit et ingens 110
 Strange light before the eyes of men shone forth; a mighty cloud
 uisus ab Aurora caelum transcurrere nimbus
 Ran from the dawning down the sky, and there was clashing loud
 Idaeique chori; tum uox horrenda per auras
 Of Ida's hosts, and from the heavens there fell a voice of fear,
 excidit et Troum Rutulorumque agmina complet:
 That through Rutulia's host and Troy's fulfilled every ear:
 'ne trepidate meas, Teucrici, defendere nauis
 "Make no great haste, O Teucrican men, these ships of mine to save!
 neue armate manus; maria ante exurere Turno 115
 Nor arm thereto! for Turnus here shall burn the salt sea wave
 quam sacras dabitur pinus. uos ite solutae,
 Sooner than these, my holy pines. But ye — depart, go free!
 ite deae pelagi; genetrix iubet.' et sua quaeque
 The Mother biddeth it: depart, Queens, Goddesses, of sea!"
 continuo puppes abrumpunt uincula ripis
 Straightway the ships brake each the chain that tied them to the bank,
 delphinumque modo demersis aequora rostris
 And, as the dolphins dive adown, with plunging beaks they sank
 ima petunt. hinc uirgineae (mirabile monstrum) 120
 Down to the deeps, from whence, O strange! they come aback once
 more;
 reddunt se totidem facies pontoque feruntur. 122
 As many brazen beaks as erst stood fast beside the shore,
 Obstipuerunt animis Rutuli, conterritus ipse
 So many shapes of maidens now seaward they wend their ways.
 turbatis Messapus equis, cunctatur et amnis
 Appalled were those Rutulian hearts; yea, feared with all amaze,
 rauca sonans reuocatque pedem Tiberinus ab alto. 125
 Messapus sat mid frightened steeds: the rough-voiced stream grew
 black;
 at non audaci Turno fiducia cessit;

Yea, Tiberinus from the deep his footsteps drew aback.
 ultro animos tollit dictis atque increpat ultro:
 But Turnus of the hardy heart, his courage nothing died;
 ‘Troianos haec monstra petunt, his Iuppiter ipse
 Unmoved he stirs their souls with speech, unmoved he falls to chide:
 auxilium solitum eripuit: non tela neque ignis
 “These portents seek the Teucrians home; the very Jupiter
 exspectant Rutulos. ergo maria inuia Teucris, 130
 Snatches their wonted aid from them, that might not bide to bear
 nec spes ulla fugae: rerum pars altera adempta est,
 Rutulian fire and sword: henceforth the sea-plain lacketh road
 terra autem in nostris manibus, tot milia gentes
 For Teucrian men: their flight is dead, and half the world’s abode
 arma ferunt Italiae. nil me fatalia terrent,
 Is reft from them: and earth, forsooth, upon our hands it waits,
 si qua Phryges prae se iactant, responsa deorum;
 With thousands of Italian swords. For me, I fear no Fates:
 sat fatis Venerique datum, tetigere quod arua 135
 For if the Phrygians boast them still of answering words of God,
 fertilis Ausoniae Troes. sunt et mea contra Enough for Venus and the Fates that Teucrian men have trod
 fata mihi, ferro sceleratam excindere gentem
 The fair Ausonia’s fruitful field: and answering fates have I:
 coniuge praerepta; nec solos tangit Atridas
 A wicked folk with edge of sword to root up utterly,
 iste dolor, solisque licet capere arma Mycenis.
 For stolen wife: this grief hath grieved others than Atreus’ sons,
 “sed periisse semel satis est”: peccare fuisset 140
 And other folk may run to arms than those Mycenian ones.
 ante satis, penitus modo non genus omne perosos
 — Enough one downfall is, say ye? — Enough had been one sin.
 femineum. quibus haec medii fiducia ualli
 Yea, I had deemed all womankind your hatred well might win.
 fossarumque morae, leti discrimina parua,
 — Lo, these are they to whom a wall betwixt the sword and sword,
 dant animos; at non uiderunt moenia Troiae
 The little tarrying of a ditch, — such toys the death to ward! —

Neptuni fabricata manu considerare in ignis? 145

Give hearts of men! What, saw they not the war-walls of Troy-town,
sed uos, o lecti, ferro qui scindere uallum

The fashioning of Neptune's hand, amid the flame sink down?
apparat et mecum inuadit trepidantia castra?

But ye, my chosen, who is dight with me to break the wall,
non armis mihi Volcani, non mille carinis

That we upon their quaking camp with point and edge may fall?
est opus in Teucros. addant se protinus omnes

No need I have of Vulcan's arms or thousand ships at sea
Etrusci socios. tenebras et inertia furta 150

Against these Teucrians; yea, though they should win them
presently,

Palladii caesis late custodibus arcis

The Tuscan friendship: deeds of dusk and deedless stolen gain
ne timeant, nec equi caeca condemur in aluo:

Of that Palladium, and the guards of topmost castle slain,
luce palam certum est igni circumdare muros.

Let them not fear: we shall not lurk in horse's dusky womb:
haud sibi cum Danaïs rem faxo et pube Pelasga

In open day to gird your walls with wildfire is the doom.
esse ferant, decimum quos distulit Hector in annum. 155

Let them not deem they have to put the Danaans to the proof,
nunc adeo, melior quoniam pars acta diei,

Pelasgian lads that Hector's hand for ten years held aloof.
quod superest, laeti bene gestis corpora rebus

— But come, since all the best of day is well-nigh worn to end,
procurate, uiri, et pugnam sperate parari.'

Joy in our good beginning, friends, and well your bodies tend,
interea uigilum excubiis obsidere portas

And bide in hope and readiness the coming of the fight.”
cura datur Messapo et moenia cingere flammis. 160

Therewith Messapus hath the charge with outguards of the night
bis septem Rutuli muros qui milite seruent

To keep the gates, and all the town with watch-fires round to ring:
delecti, ast illos centeni quemque sequuntur

Twice seven are chosen out to hold the town inleaguering

purpurei cristis iuuenes auroque corusci.

Of Rutuli: an hundred youths, they follow each of these;

discurrunt uariantque uices, fusique per herbam

A purple-crested folk that gleam with golden braveries:

indulgent uino et uertunt crateras aenos. 165

They pace the round, they shift the turn, or scattered o'er the grass

conluent ignes, noctem custodia ducit

Please heart and soul with wine, and turn the empty bowl of brass:

insomnem ludo.

The watch-fires shine around in ring; through sport and sleeplessness

Haec super e uallo prospectant Troes et armis

Their warding weareth night away. The Trojans from their walls of war look down on all these things;

alta tenent, nec non trepidi formidine portas

They hold the heights in arms, and search the great gate's fastenings

explorant pontisque et propugnacula iungunt, 170

With hurrying fear; or, spear in hand, gangway to battlement

tela gerunt. instat Mnestheus acerque Serestus,

They yoke. There Mnestheus urged the work; there hot Serestus went;

quos pater Aeneas, si quando aduersa uocarent,

They whom Æneas, if perchance the time should call thereto,

rectores iuuenum et rerum dedit esse magistros.

Had made first captains of the host, lords of all things to do.

omnis per muros legio sortita periculum

So all the host along the walls the peril shareth out,

excubat exercetque uices, quod cuique tuendum est. 175

Falling to watch, and plays its part in turn and turn about.

Nisus erat portae custos, acerrimus armis,

Nisus was warder of the gate, the eager under shield,

Hyrtacides, comitem Aeneae quem miserat Ida

The son of Hyrtacus, whom erst did huntress Ida yield

uenatrix iaculo celerem leuibusque sagittis,

Unto Æneas' fellowship, keen with the shaft and spear.

et iuxta comes Euryalus, quo pulchrior alter

Euryalus, his friend, stood by, than whom none goodlier

non fuit Aeneadum Troiana neque induit arma, 180

Went with Æneas or did on the battle-gear of Troy:
 ora puer prima signans intonsa iuuenta.
 Youth's bloom unshorn was on his cheek, scarce was he but a boy.
 his amor unus erat pariterque in bella ruebant;
 Like love the twain had each for each; in battle side by side
 tum quoque communi portam statione tenebant.
 They went; and now as gatewards twain together did abide.
 Nisus ait: 'dine hunc ardorem mentibus addunt,
 Now Nisus saith: "Doth very God so set the heart on fire,
 Euryale, an sua cuique deus fit dira cupido? 185
 Euryalus, or doth each man make God of his desire?
 aut pugnam aut aliquid iamdudum inuadere magnum
 My soul is driving me to dare the battle presently,
 mens agitat mihi, nec placida contenta quiete est.
 Or some great deed; nor pleased with peace at quiet will it be.
 cernis quae Rutulos habeat fiducia rerum:
 Thou seest how those Rutulian men trust in their warding keep;
 lumina rara micant, somno uinoque soluti
 How wide apart the watch-fires shine; how slack with wine and sleep
 procubuere, silent late loca. percipe porro 190
 Men lie along; how far and wide the hush o'er all things lies.
 quid dubitem et quae nunc animo sententia surgat.
 Note now what stirreth in my mind, what thoughts in me arise:
 Aenean acciri omnes, populusque patresque,
 They bid call back Æneas now, fathers, and folk, and all,
 exposcunt, mittique uiros qui certa reportent.
 And send out men to bear to him sure word of what doth fall.
 si tibi quae posco promittunt (nam mihi facti
 Now if the thing I ask for thee they promise, — for to me
 fama sat est), tumultu uideor reperire sub illo 195
 The deed's fame is enough, — meseems beneath yon mound I see
 posse uiam ad muros et moenia Pallantea.'
 A way whereby to Paliantheum in little space to come."
 obstipuit magno laudum percussus amore
 Euryalus, by mighty love of glory smitten home,
 Euryalus, simul his ardentem adfatur amicum:
 Stood all amazed, then answered thus his fiery-hearted friend:

'mene igitur socium summis adiungere rebus,
 "O Nisus, wilt thou yoke me not to such a noble end?
 Nise, fugis? solum te in tanta pericula mittam? 200
 And shall I send thee unto deeds so perilous alone?
 non ita me genitor, bellis adsuetus Opheltes,
 My sire Opheltes, wise in war, nourished no such an one,
 Argolicum terrorem inter Troiaequae labores Reared mid the terror of the Greeks and Troy-town's miseries;
 sublatum erudiit, nec tecum talia gessi
 Nor yet with thee have I been wont to deedless deeds like these,
 magnanimum Aenean et fata extrema secutus:
 Following Æneas' mighty heart through Fortune's furthest way.
 est hic, est animus lucis contemptor et istum 205
 Here is a soul that scorns the light, and deems it good to pay
 qui uita bene credat emi, quo tendis, honorem.'
 With very life for such a fame as thou art brought anear."
 Nisus ad haec: 'equidem de te nil tale uerebar,
 Saith Nisus: "Nay, I feared of thee no such a thing, I swear,
 nec fas; non ita me referat tibi magnus ouantem
 No such ill thought; so may he bring thy friend back with the prize,
 Iuppiter aut quicumque oculis haec aspicit aequis.
 Great Jove, or whosoe'er beholds these things with equal eyes.
 sed si quis (quae multa uides discrimine tali) 210
 But if some hap (thou seest herein how many such may fall),
 si quis in aduersum rapiat casusue deusue,
 If any hap, if any God bear me the end of all,
 te superesse uelim, tua uita dignior aetas.
 Fain were I thou wert left: thine age is worthier life-day's gain;
 sit qui me raptum pugna pretioe redemptum
 Let there be one to buy me back snatched from amidst the slain,
 mandat humo, solita aut si qua id Fortuna uetabit,
 And give me earth: or if e'en that our wonted fortune ban,
 absenti ferat inferias decoretque sepulcro. 215
 Do thou the rites, and raise the tomb unto the missing man;
 neu matri miserae tanti sim causa doloris,
 Nor make me of thy mother's woe the fashioner accurst:
 quae te sola, puer, multis e matribus ausa

She who, O friend, alone of all our many mothers durst
persequitur, magni nec moenia curat Acestae.'

To follow thee, nor heeded aught of great Acestes' town."

ille autem: 'causas nequiquam nectis inanis

He said: "For weaving of delay vain is thy shuttle thrown;
nec mea iam mutata loco sententia cedit. 220

Nor is my heart so turned about that I will leave the play:
acceleremus' ait, uigiles simul excitat. illi

Let us be doing!" Therewithal he stirs the guards, and they succedunt seruantque uices; statione relictā

Come up in turn, wherewith he leaves the warding-stead behind,
ipse comes Niso graditur regemque requirunt.

And goes with Nisus, and the twain set forth the prince to find.

Cetera per terras omnis animalia somno

All other creatures, laid asleep o'er all the earthly soil,
laxabant curas et corda oblita laborum: 225

Let slip the cares from off their hearts, forgetful of their toil,
ductores Teucrum primi, delecta iuuentus,

But still the dukes of Trojan men and chosen folk of war
consilium summis regni de rebus habebant,

Held counsel of that heavy tide that on the kingdom bore,
quid facerent quisue Aeneae iam nuntius esset.

What was to do, or who would go Æneas' messenger.

stant longis adnixa hastis et scuta tenentes

There shield on arm, and leaned upon the length of shafted spear,
castrorum et campi medio. tum Nisus et una 230

They stand amid their stronghold's mead: in eager haste the twain,
Euryalus confestim alacres admittier orant:

Nisus and young Euryalus, the presence crave to gain,

rem magnam pretiumque morae fore. primus Iulus

For matters great and worth the time: straight doth Iulus take
accepit trepidos ac Nisum dicere iussit.

Those hurried men to him, and bids that Nisus speech should wake.

tum sic Hyrtacides: 'audite o mentibus aequis

Then saith the son of Hyrtacus: "Just-hearted, hearken now,

Aeneadae, neue haec nostris spectentur ab annis 235

Folk of Æneas, neither look upon the things we show

Their fires are slaked, and black the smoke goes upward to the skies.

If ye will suffer us to use this fortune that doth fall
quaesitum Aenean et moenia Pallantea,
We will go seek Æneas now and Pallanteum's wall:

Ye shall behold him and his spoils from mighty victory wrought
adfore cernetis. nec nos uia fallit euntis:
Come hither presently: the way shall fail our feet in nought,

In daily hunt, whereby we learned the river's uplong brim."
hic annis grauis atque animi maturus Aletes:
Then spake Aletes weighty-wise, heart-ripe with plenteous eld:
'di patrii, quorum semper sub numine Troia est,
"Gods of our fathers, under whom the weal of Troy is held,
non tamen omnino Teucros delere paratis,
Ye have not doomed all utterly the Teucrian folk undone,
cum talis animos iuuenum et tam certa tulistis
When ye for us such souls of youth, such hardy hearts have won."
pectora.' sic memorans umeros dextrasque tenebat 250
So saying by shoulder and by hand he took the goodly twain,
amborum et uultum lacrimis atque ora rigabat.
While all his countenance and cheeks were wet with plenteous rain,
'quae uobis, quae digna, uiri, pro laudibus istis
"What gifts may I deem worthy, men, to pay such hearts athirst
praemia posse rear solui? pulcherrima primum
For utmost glory? certainly the fairest and the first
di moresque dabunt uestri: tum cetera reddet

The Gods and your own hearts shall grant: the rest your lord shall give,

actutum pius Aeneas atque integer aeui 255

Godly Æneas; and this man with all his life to live,

Ascanius meriti tanti non immemor umquam.’

Ascanius here, no memory of such desert shall lack.”

‘immo ego uos, cui sola salus genitore reducto,’

“But I,” Ascanius breaketh in, “whose father brought aback

Bring back my father! whatsoe’er is left with me today

in uestris pono gremiis. reuocate parentem,

Of Fate or Faith, into your breasts I give it all away.

O give me back the sight of him, and grief is all gone by.

Two tripods eke, two talents’ weight of fire-beproven gold;

cratera antiquum quem dat Sidonia Dido.

A beaker of the time agone, Sidonian Dido’s gift.

si uero capere Italiam sceptrisque potiri

But if we hap to win the day and spoil of battle shift,

If we lay hand on Italy and staff of kingship bear, —

Ye saw the horse that bore today gold Turnus and his gear,

aureus; ipsum illum, clipeum cristasque rubentis 270

That very same, the shield withal, and helm-crest ruddy dyed,

excipiam sorti, iam nunc tua praemia, Nise.

Thy gifts, O Nisus, from the spoil henceforth I set aside.

praeterea bis sex genitor lectissima matrum

Moreover of the mother-folk twice six most excellent
corpora captiuosque dabit suaque omnibus arma,
 My sire shall give, and captive men with all their armament,
 insuper his campi quod rex habet ipse Latinus.
 And therewithal the kingly field, Latinus' garden-place.
te uero, mea quem spatiis propioribus aetas 275
 But thou, O boy most worshipful, whom nigher in the race
insequitur, uenerande puer, iam pectore toto
 Mine own years follow, thee I take unto mine inmost heart,
accipio et comitem casus complector in omnis.
 Embracing thee my very friend in all to have a part;
nulla meis sine te quaeretur gloria rebus:
 Nor any glory of my days without thee shall I seek,
seu pacem seu bella geram, tibi maxima rerum
 Whether I fashion peace or war; all that I do or speak
uerborumque fides.' contra quem talia fatur 280
 I trust to thee." In answer thus Euryalus 'gan say:
 Euryalus: 'me nulla dies tam fortibus ausis
 "No day henceforth of all my life shall prove me fallen away
dissimilem arguerit; tantum fortuna secunda
 From this my deed: only may fate in kindly wise befall,
haud aduersa cadat. sed te super omnia dona
 Nor stand against me: now one gift I ask thee over all:
unum oro: genetrix Priami de gente uetusta
 I have a mother born on earth from Priam's ancient race,
est mihi, quam miseram tenuit non Ilia tellus 285
 Who wretched in the land of Troy had no abiding-place,
mecum excedentem, non moenia regis Acestae.
 Nor in Acesta's steadfast wall; with me she still must wend:
hanc ego nunc ignaram huius quodcumque pericli
 Her, who knows nought of this my risk, whatever may be the end
inque salutatam linquo (nox et tua testis
 Unto thy safeguard do I leave: Night and thy right hand there
dextera), quod nequeam lacrimas perferre parentis.
 Be witness that my mother's tears I had no heart to bear.
at tu, oro, solare inopem et succurre relictæ. 290
 But solace thou her lack, I pray; comfort her desert need;

hanc sine me spem ferre tui, audentior ibo
Yea let me bear this hope with me, and boldlier shall I speed
in casus omnis.' percussa mente dedere
Amid all haps." Touched to the heart the Dardans might not keep Dardanidae lacrimas, ante omnis pulcher Iulus,
Their tears aback, and chief of all did fair Iulus weep,
atque animum patriae strinxit pietatis imago.
The image of his father's love so flashed upon his soul:
tum sic effatur: 295

And therewithal he spake the word: "All things I duly answer for worthy thy deed of fame;
'sponde digna tuis ingentibus omnia coeptis.
Thy mother shall my mother be, nor lack but e'en the name
namque erit ista mihi genetrix nomenque Creusae
To be Creusa: store of thanks no little hath she won
solum defuerit, nec partum gratia talem
That bore thee. Whatsoever hap thy valorous deed bear on,
parua manet. casus factum quicumque sequentur,
By this my head, whereon my sire is wont the troth to plight,
per caput hoc iuro, per quod pater ante solebat: 300
Whatever I promised thee come back, with all things wrought aright,
quae tibi polliceor reduci rebusque secundis,
Thy mother and thy kin shall bide that very same reward."
haec eadem matrique tuae generique manebunt.'
So spake he, weeping, and did off his shoulder-girded sword
sic ait inlacrimans; umero simul exiit ensem
All golden, that with wondrous craft Lycaon out of Crete
auratum, mira quem fecerat arte Lycaon
Had fashioned, fitting it withal in ivory scabbard meet.
Cnosius atque habilem uagina aptarat eburna. 305
And Mnestheus unto Nisus gives a stripped-off lion's hide
dat Niso Mnestheus pellem horrentisque leonis
And shaggy coat; and helm for helm giveth Aletes tried.
exuuias, galeam fidus permutat Aletes.
Then forth they wend in weed of war, and they of first estate,
protinus armati incedunt; quos omnis euntis
Young men and old, went forth with them, and leave them at the gate

primorum manus ad portas, iuuenumque senumque,
 With following vows; and therewithal Iulus, goodly-wrought,
 prosequitur uotis. nec non et pulcher Iulus, ³¹⁰
 Who far beyond his tender years had mind of manly thought,
 ante annos animumque gerens curamque uirilem,
 Charged them with many messages unto his father's ear, —
 multa patri mandata dabat portanda; sed auræ
 Vain words the night-winds bore away and gave the clouds to bear.
 omnia discerpunt et nubibus inrita donant.
 Forth now they wend and pass the ditch, and through the mirk night gain
 Egressi superant fossas noctisque per umbram
 The baneful camp: yet ere their death they too shall be the bane
 castra inimica petunt, multis tamen ante futuri ³¹⁵
 Of many: bodies laid in sleep and wine they see strewed o'er
 exitio. passim somno uinoque per herbam
 The herbage, and the battle-cars upreared along the shore;
 corpora fusa uident, arrectos litore currus,
 And mid the reins and wheels thereof are men and weapons blent
 inter lora rotasque uiros, simul arma iacere,
 With wine-jars: so Hyrtacides such word from tooth-hedge sent:
 uina simul. prior Hyrtacides sic ore locutus:
 "Euryalus, the hand must dare, the time cries on the deed;
 'Euryale, audendum dextra: nunc ipsa uocat res. ³²⁰
 Here lies the way: do thou afar keep watch and have good heed,
 hac iter est. tu, ne qua manus se attollere nobis
 Lest any hand aback of us arise 'gainst thee and me:
 a tergo possit, custodi et consule longe;
 Here will I make a waste forsooth, and wide thy way shall be."
 haec ego uasta dabo et lato te limite ducam.'
 He speaks, and hushes all his voice, and so with naked blade
 sic memorat uocemque premit, simul ense superbum
 Falls on proud Rhamnes; who, as happed, on piled-up carpets laid,
 Rhamnetem adgreditur, qui forte tapetibus altis ³²⁵
 Amid his sleep was blowing forth great voice from inner breast.
 exstructus toto proflabat pectore somnum,
 A king he was; king Turnus' seer, of all belovèd best;

rex idem et regi Turno gratissimus augur,
Yet nought availed his wizardry to drive his bane away.
sed non augurio potuit depellere pestem.
Three thralls unware, as heeding nought amid the spears they lay,
tris iuxta famulos temere inter tela iacentis
He endeth: Remus' shield-bearer withal and charioteer,
armigerumque Remi premit aurigamque sub ipsis 330
Caught 'neath the very steeds: his sword their drooping necks doth shear;
nactus equis ferroque secat pendentia colla.
Then from their lord he takes the head, and leaves the trunk to spout
tum caput ipsi aufert domino truncumque relinquit
Gushes of blood: the earth is warm with black gore all about.
sanguine singultantem; atro tepefacta cruore
The beds are wet. There Lamyus and Lamus doth he slay,
terra torique madent. nec non Lamyrumque Lamumque
And young Serranus fair of face, who played the night away
et iuuenem Serranum, illa qui plurima nocte 335
For many an hour, until his limbs 'neath God's abundance failed,
luserat, insignis facie, multoque iacebat
And down he lay: ah! happier 'twere if he had still prevailed
membra deo uictus — felix, si protinus illum
To make the live-long night one game until the morning cold.
aequasset nocti ludum in lucemque tulisset:
As famished lion Nisus fares amid the sheep-filled fold,
impastus ceu plena leo per ouilia turbans
When ravening hunger driveth on; the soft things, dumb with dread, (suadet enim uesana fames) manditque trahitque 340
He draggeth off, devouring them, and foams from mouth blood-red.
molle pecus mutumque metu, fremit ore cruento.
Nor less the death Euryalus hath wrought; for all aflame
nec minor Euryali caedes; incensus et ipse
He wades in wrath, and on the way slays many lacking name:
perfurit ac multam in medio sine nomine plebem,
Fadus, Herbesus therewithal, Rhoetus and Abaris;
Fadumque Herbesumque subit Rhoetumque Abarimque
Unwary they: but Rhoetus waked, and looking on all this,

ignaros; Rhoetum uigilantem et cuncta uidentem, 345

Fulfilled of fear was hiding him behind a wine-jar pressed:
sed magnum metuens se post cratera tegebat.

The foe was on him as he rose; the sword-blade pierced his breast
pectore in aduerso totum cui comminus ensem

Up to the hilts, and drew aback abundant stream of death.
condidit adsurgenti et multa morte recepit.

His purple life he poureth forth, and, dying, vomiteth
purpuream uomit ille animam et cum sanguine mixta

Blent blood and wine. On death-stealth still onward the Trojan went,
uina refert moriens, hic furto feruidus instat. 350

And toward Messapus' leaguer drew, where watch-fires well-nigh spent

iamque ad Messapi socios tendebat; ibi ignem

He saw, and horses all about, tethered in order due,
deficere extremum et religatos rite uidebat

Cropping the grass: but Nisus spake in hasty words and few,
carpere gramen equos, breuiter cum talia Nisus

Seeing him borne away by lust of slaughter overmuch:
(sensit enim nimia caede atque cupidine ferri)

"Hold we our hands, for dawn our foe hasteth the world to touch:
'absistamus' ait, 'nam lux inimica propinquat. 355

Deep have we drunk of death, and cut a road amid the foe."
poenarum exhaustum satis est, uia facta per hostis.'

The gear of men full goodly-wrought of silver through and through
multa uirum solido argento perfecta relinquunt

They leave behind, and bowls therewith, and carpets fashioned fair.
armaque craterasque simul pulchrosque tapetas.

Natheless Euryalus caught up the prophet Rhamnes' gear
Euryalus phaleras Rhamnetis et aurea bullis

And gold-bossed belt, which Cædicus, the wealthy man of old,
cingula, Tiburti Remulo ditissimus olim 360

Sent to Tiburtine Remulus, that he his name might hold,
quae mittit dona, hospitio cum iungeret absens,

Though far he were; who, dying, gave his grandson their delight;
Caedicus; ille suo moriens dat habere nepoti;

And he being dead, Rutulian men won them in war and fight

post mortem bello Rutuli pugnaque potiti:

These now he takes, and all for nought does on his valorous breast,
haec rapit atque umeris nequiquam fortibus aptat.

And dons Messapus' handy helm with goodly-fashioned crest,
tum galeam Messapi habilem cristisque decoram 365

Wherewith they leave the camp and gain the road that safer lay.
induit. excedunt castris et tuta capessunt.

But horsemen from the Latin town meantime were on the way,
Interea praemissi equites ex urbe Latina,

Sent on before to carry word to Turnus, lord and king,
cetera dum legio campis instructa moratur,

While in array amid the fields the host was tarrying.

ibant et Turno regi responsa ferebant,

Three hundred knights, all shielded folk, 'neath Volscens do they fare.

ter centum, scutati omnes, Volcente magistro. 370

And now they drew anigh the camp and 'neath its rampart were,
iamque propinquabant castris murosque subibant

When from afar they saw the twain on left-hand footway lurk;
cum procul hos laeue flectentis limite cernunt,

Because Euryalus' fair helm mid glimmer of the mirk

et galea Euryalum sublustri noctis in umbra

Betrayed the heedless youth, and flashed the moonbeams back again.
prodidit immemorem radiisque aduersa refulsit.

Nor was the sight unheeded: straight cries Volscens midst his men:
haud temere est uisum. conclamat ab agmine Volcens: 375

"Stand ho! why thus afoot, and why in weapons do ye wend,
'state, uiri. quae causa uiae? quiue estis in armis?"

And whither go ye?" Nought had they an answer back to send,
quoue tenetis iter?" nihil illi tendere contra,

But speed their fleeing mid the brake, and trust them to the night;
sed celerare fugam in siluas et fidere nocti.

The horsemen cast themselves before each crossway known aright,
obiciunt equites sese ad diuortia nota

And every outgoing there is with guard they girdle round.

hinc atque hinc, omnemque aditum custode coronant. 380

Rough was the wood; a thicket-place where black holm-oaks abound,

silua fuit late dumis atque ilice nigra
And with the tanglement of thorns choked up on every side,
horrida, quam densi complerant undique sentes;
The road but glimmering faintly out from where the foot-tracks hide.
rara per occultos lucebat semita callis.
The blackness of overhanging boughs and heavy battle-prey
Euryalum tenebrae ramorum onerosaque praeda
Hinder Euryalus, and fear beguiles him of the way.
impediunt, fallitque timor regione uiarum. 385
Nisus comes out, and now had won unwitting from the foe,
Nisus abit; iamque imprudens euaserat hostis
And reached the place from Alba's name called Alban Meadows
now;
atque locos qui post Albae de nomine dicti
Where King Latinus had as then his high-built herd-houses.
Albani (tum rex stabula alta Latinus habebat),
So there he stands, and, looking round, his fellow nowhere sees:
ut stetit et frustra absentem respexit amicum:
"Hapless Euryalus! ah me, where have I left thy face?
'Euryale infelix, qua te regione reliqui? 390
Where shall I seek thee, gathering up that tangle of the ways
quaue sequar?' rursus perplexum iter omne reuoluens
Through the blind wood?" So therewithal he turns upon his track,
fallacis siluae simul et uestigia retro
Noting his footsteps, and amid the hushed brake strays aback,
obseruata legit dumisque silentibus errat.
Harkening the horse-hoofs and halloos and calls of following folk.
audit equos, audit strepitus et signa sequentum;
Nor had he long abided there, ere on his ears outbroke
nec longum in medio tempus, cum clamor ad auris 395
Great clamour, and Euryalus he sees, whom all the band
peruenit ac uidet Euryalum, quem iam manus omnis
Hath taken, overcome by night, and blindness of the land,
fraude loci et noctis, subito turbante tumultu,
And wildering tumult: there in vain he strives in battle-play.
oppressum rapit et conantem plurima frustra.
Ah, what to do? What force to dare, what stroke to snatch away

quid faciat? qua ui iuuenem, quibus audeat armis
 The youth? Or shall he cast himself amid the swords to die,
 eripere? an sese medios moriturus in enses 400
 And hasten down the way of wounds to lovely death anigh?
 inferat et pulchram properet per uulnera mortem?
 Then swiftly, with his arm drawn back and brandishing his spear,
 ocius adducto torquet hastile lacerto
 He looks up at the moon aloft, and thuswise poureth prayer:
 suspiciens altam Lunam et sic uoce precatur:
 "To aid, thou Goddess! Stay my toil, and let the end be good!
 'tu, dea, tu praesens nostro succurre labori,
 Latonian glory of the stars, fair watcher of the wood,
 astrorum decus et nemorum Latonia custos. 405
 If ever any gift for me upon thine altars gave
 si qua tuis umquam pro me pater Hyrtacus aris
 My father Hyrtacus; if I for thee the hunting drave;
 dona tulit, si qua ipse meis uenatibus auxi
 If aught I hung upon thy dome, or set upon thy roof,
 suspendiue tholo aut sacra ad fastigia fixi,
 Give me to break their gathered host, guide thou my steel aloof!"
 hunc sine me turbare globum et rege tela per auras.'
 He spake, and in the shafted steel set all his body's might,
 dixerat et toto conixus corpore ferrum 410
 And hurled it: flying forth the spear clave through the dusk of night,
 conicit. hasta uolans noctis diuerberat umbras
 And, reaching Sulmo turned away, amidst his back it flew,
 et uenit auersi in tergum Sulmonis ibique
 And brake there; but the splintering shaft his very heart pierced
 through,
 frangitur, ac fisso transit praecordia ligno.
 And o'er he rolleth, vomiting the hot stream from his breast:
 uoluitur ille uomens calidum de pectore flumen
 Then heave his flanks with long-drawn sobs and cold he lies at rest.
 frigidus et longis singultibus ilia pulsatur. 415
 On all sides then they peer about: but, whetted on thereby,
 diuersi circumspectiunt. hoc acrior idem
 The quivering shaft from o'er his ear again he letteth fly.

ecce aliud summa telum librabat ab aure.

Amid their wilderment the spear whistleth through either side
dum trepidant, it hasta Tago per tempus utrumque
Of Tagus' temples, and wet-hot amidst his brain doth bide.
stridens traiectoque haesit tepefacta cerebro.

Fierce Volscens rageth, seeing none who might the spear-shot send,
saeuit atrox Volcens nec teli conspicit usquam 420

Or any man on whom his wrath and heat of heart to spend.
auctorem nec quo se ardens immittere possit.

"But thou, at least, with thine hot blood shalt pay the due award
'tu tamen interea calido mihi sanguine poenas

For both," he cries; and therewithal, swift drawing forth the sword,
persolues amborum' inquit; simul ense recluso
He falleth on Euryalus. Then, wild with all affright,
ibat in Euryalum. tum uero exterritus, amens,

Nisus shrieks out, and cares no more to cloak himself with night, conclamat Nisus nec se celare tenebris 425

And hath no heart to bear against so great a misery.
amplius aut tantum potuit perferre dolorem:

"On me, me! Here — I did the deed! turn ye the sword on me,
'me, me, adsum qui feci, in me conuertite ferrum,

Rutulians! — all the guilt is mine: he might not do nor dare.

o Rutuli! mea fraus omnis, nihil iste nec ausus

May heaven and those all-knowing stars true witness of it bear!
nec potuit; caelum hoc et conscia sidera testor;

Only with too exceeding love he loved his hapless friend."

tantum infelicem nimium dilexit amicum.' 430

Such words he poured forth, but the sword no less its way doth wend,

talia dicta dabat, sed uiribus ensis adactus

Piercing the flank and rending through the goodly breast of him;
transadigit costas et candida pectora rumpit.

And rolls Euryalus in death: in plenteous blood they swim
uoluitur Euryalus leto, pulchrosque per artus

His lovely limbs, his drooping neck low on his shoulder lies:
it cruor inque umeros ceruix conlapsa recumbit:

As when the purple field-flower faints before the plough and dies,

purpureus ueluti cum flos succisus aratro 435

Or poppies when they hang their heads on wearied stems outworn,
languescit moriens, lassoue papauera collo

When haply by the rainy load their might is overborne.

demisere caput pluuiæ cum forte grauantur.

Then Nisus falls amidst of them, and Volscens seeks alone
at Nisus ruit in medios solumque per omnis

For aught that any man may do: save him he heedeth none.

Volcentem petit, in solo Volcente moratur.

About him throng the foe: all round the strokes on him are laid
quem circum glomerati hostes hinc comminus atque hinc 440

To thrust him off: but on he bears, whirling his lightning blade,
proturbant. instat non setius ac rotat ensem

Till full in Volscens' shouting mouth he burieth it at last,
fulmineum, donec Rutuli clamantis in ore

Tearing the life from out the foe, as forth his own life passed.

condidit aduerso et moriens animam abstulit hosti.

Then, ploughed with wounds, he cast him down upon his lifeless
friend,

tum super exanimum sese proiecit amicum

And so in quietness of death gat resting in the end.

confossus, placidaque ibi demum morte quieuit. 445

O happy twain, if anywise my song-craft may avail,

Fortunati ambo! si quid mea carmina possunt,

From out the memory of the world no day shall blot your tale,
nulla dies umquam memori uos eximet æuo,

While on the rock-fast Capitol Æneas' house abides,

dum domus Aeneae Capitoli immobile saxum

And while the Roman Father still the might of empire guides.

accolet imperiumque pater Romanus habebit.

The Rutuli, victorious now with spoils and prey of war,

Victores præda Rutuli spoliisque potiti 450

But sorrowing still, amid the camp the perished Volscens bore.

Volcentem exanimum flentes in castra ferebant.

Nor in the camp was grief the less, when they on Rhamnes came

nec minor in castris luctus Rhamnete reperto

Bloodless; and many a chief cut off by one death and the same;

exsanguī et primis una tot caede peremptis,
Serranus dead and Numa dead: a many then they swarm
Serranoque Numaque. ingens concursus ad ipsa
About the dead and dying men, and places wet and warm
corpora seminecisque uiros, tepidaque recentem 455
With new-wrought death, and runnels full with plenteous foaming blood.

caede locum et pleno spumantis sanguine riuos.
Then one by one the spoils they note; the glittering helm and good
agnoscunt spolia inter se galeamque nitentem
Messapus owned: the gear such toil had won back from the dead.
Messapi et multo phaleras sudore receptas.
But timely now Aurora left Tithonus' saffron bed,
Et iam prima nouo spargebat lumine terras
And over earth went scattering wide the light of new-born day:
Tithoni croceum linquens Aurora cubile. 460

The sun-flood flowed, and all the world unveiled by daylight lay.
iam sole infuso, iam rebus luce reiectis
Then Turnus, clad in arms himself, wakes up the host to arms,
Turnus in arma uiros armis circumdatus ipse
And every lord to war-array bids on his brazen swarms;
suscitat: aeratasque acies in proelia cogunt,
And men with diverse tidings told their battle-anger whet.
quisque suos, uariisque acunt rumoribus iras.

Moreover (miserable sight!) on upraised spears they set
quin ipsa arrectis (uisu miserabile) in hastis 465
Those heads, and follow them about with most abundant noise,
praefigunt capita et multo clamore sequuntur Euryalus and Nisus dead. Meanwhile Æneas' hardy sons upon their leftward wall
Euryali et Nisi.

Stand in array; for on the right the river girdeth all.
Aeneadae duri murorum in parte sinistra
In woe they ward the ditches deep, and on the towers on high
opposuere aciem (nam dextera cingitur amni),
Stand sorrowing; for those heads upreared touch all their hearts
anigh,

ingentisque tenent fossas et turribus altis 470

Known overwell to their sad eyes mid the black flow of gore.

stant maesti; simul ora uirum praefixa mouebant

Therewith in wingèd fluttering haste, the trembling city o'er
nota nimis miseris atroque fluentia tabo.

Goes tell-tale Fame, and swift amidst the mother's ears doth glide;

Interea pauidam uolitans pennata per urbem

And changed she was, nor in her bones the life-heat would abide:

nuntia Fama ruit matrisque adlabitur auris

The shuttle falls from out her hand, unrolled the web doth fall,

Euryali. at subitus miserae calor ossa reliquit, 475

And with a woman's hapless shrieks she flieth to the wall:

excussi manibus radii reuolutaque pensa.

Rending her hair, beside herself, she faced the front of fight,

euolat infelix et femineo ululatu

Heedless of men, and haps of death, and all the weapons' flight,

scissa comam muros amens atque agmina cursu

And there the very heavens she filled with wailing of her grief:

prima petit, non illa uirum, non illa pericli

"O son, and do I see thee so? Thou rest and last relief

telorumque memor, caelum dehinc questibus implet: 480

Of my old days! hadst thou the heart to leave me lone and spent?

'hunc ego te, Euryale, aspicio? tune ille senectae

O cruel! might I see thee not on such a peril sent?

sera meae requies, potuisti linquere solam,

Was there no time for one last word amid my misery?

crudelis? nec te sub tanta pericula missum

A prey for Latin fowl and dogs how doth thy body lie,

adfari extremum miserae data copia matri?

On lands uncouth! Not e'en may I, thy mother, streak thee, son,

heu, terra ignota canibus data praeda Latinis 485

Thy body dead; or close thine eyes, or wash thy wounds well won,

alitibusque iaces! nec te tua funere mater

Or shroud thee in the cloth I wrought for thee by night and day,

produxi pressius oculos aut uulnera laui,

When hastening on the weaving-task I kept eld's cares at bay?

ueste tegens tibi quam noctes festina diesque

Where shall I seek thee? What earth hides thy body, mangled sore,
urgebam, et tela curas solabar anilis.

And perished limbs? O son, to me bringest thou back no more
quo sequar? aut quae nunc artus auulsaque membra 490

Than this? and have I followed this o'er every land and sea?
et funus lacerum tellus habet? hoc mihi de te,

O pierce me through, if ye be kind; turn all your points on me,
nate, refers? hoc sum terraque marique secuta?

Rutulians! Let me first of all with battle-steel be sped!

figite me, si qua est pietas, in me omnia tela

Father of Gods, have mercy thou! Thrust down the hated head
conicite, o Rutuli, me primam absumite ferro;

Beneath the House of Tartarus with thine own weapon's stress,
aut tu, magne pater diuum, miserere, tuoque 495

Since otherwise I may not break my life-days' bitterness."

inuism hoc detrude caput sub Tartara telo,

Their hearts were shaken with her wail, and Sorrow fain will weep,
quando aliter nequeo crudelem abrupere uitam.'

And in all men their battle-might unbroken lay asleep.

hoc fletu concussi animi, maestusque per omnis

But Actor and Idæus take that flaming misery,

it gemitus, torpent infractae ad proelia uires.

As bade Ilioneus, and young Iulus, sore as he

illam incendentem luctus Idaeus et Actor 500

Went weeping: back in arms therewith they bear her 'neath the roof.

Ilionei monitu et multum lacrimantis Iuli

But now the trump with brazen song cast fearful sound aloof,
corripiunt interque manus sub tecta reponunt.

Chiding to war; and shouts rise up and belloweth back the heaven,

At tuba terribilem sonitum procul aere canoro

And forth the Volscians fare to speed the shield-roof timely driven.
increpuit, sequitur clamor caelumque remugit.

Some men fall on to fill the ditch and pluck the ramparts down;
accelerant acta pariter testudine Volsci 505

Some seek approach and ladders lay where daylight rends the crown
et fossas implere parant ac uellere uallum;

Of wall-wards, and would get them up where stands the hedge of war

quaerunt pars aditum et scalis ascendere muros, Thinner of men: against their way the Teucrian warders pour
qua rara est acies interlucetque corona
All weapon-shot: with hard-head pikes they thrust them down the steep.

non tam spissa uiris. telorum effundere contra
Long was the war wherein they learned the battle-wall to keep.
omne genus Teucris ac duris detrudere contis, 510
Stones, too, of deadly weight they roll, if haply they may break
adsueti longo muros defendere bello.

The shield-roof of the battle-rush; but sturdily those take
saxa quoque infesto uoluebant pondere, si qua
All chances of the play beneath their close and well-knit hold.
possent tectam aciem perrumpere, cum tamen omnis
Yet fail they; for when hard at hand their world of war was rolled,
ferre iuuat subter densa testudine casus.

A mighty mass by Teucrians moved rolls on and rushes o'er,
nec iam sufficiunt. nam qua globus imminet ingens, 515
And fells the host of Rutuli and breaks the tiles of war.

immanem Teucris molem uoluuntque ruuntque,
Nor longer now the Rutuli, the daring hearts, may bear
quae strauit Rutulos late armorumque resouit
To play with Mars amid the dark, but strive the walls to clear
tegmina. nec curant caeco contendere Marte

With storm of shaft and weapon shot.
amplius audaces Rutuli, sed pellere uallo
But now Mezentius otherwhere, a fearful sight to see,
missilibus certant. 520

Was tossing high the Tuscan pine with smoke-wreathed fiery heart:
parte alia horrendus uisu quassabat Etruscam

While Neptune's child, the horse-tamer Messapus, played his part,
pinum et fumiferos infert Mezentius ignis;

Rending the wall, and crying out for ladders to be laid.

at Messapus equum domitor, Neptunia proles,

Speak, Song-maids: thou, Calliope, give thou the singer aid
rescindit uallum et scalas in moenia poscit.

To tell what wise by Turnus' sword the field of fight was strown;

Vos, o Calliope, precor, aspirate canenti 525

What death he wrought; what man each man to Orcus sent adown.

quas ibi tum ferro strages, quae funera Turnus

Fall to with me to roll abroad the mighty skirts of war,

ediderit, quem quisque uirum demiserit Orco,

Ye, Goddesses, remember all, and ye may tell it o'er.

et mecum ingentis oras euoluite belli.

There was a tower built high overhead, with gangways up in air,

Turris erat uasto suspectu et pontibus altis, 530

Set well for fight, 'gainst which the foe their utmost war-might bear,

opportuna loco, summis quam uiribus omnes

And all Italians strive their most to work its overthrow:

expugnare Itali summaque euertere opum ui

Gainst whom the Trojans ward it well, casting the stones below,

certabant, Troes contra defendere saxis

And through the hollow windows speed the shot-storm thick and fast.

perque cauas densi tela intorquere fenestras.

There Turnus first of all his folk a flaming firebrand cast,

princeps ardentem coniecit lampada Turnus 535

And fixed it in the turret's flank: wind-nursed it caught great space

et flammam adfixit lateri, quae plurima uento

Of planking, and amid the doors, consuming, kept its place.

corripuit tabulas et postibus haesit adesis.

Then they within, bewildered sore, to flee their ills are fain,

turbati trepidare intus frustra malorum

But all for nought; for while therein they huddle from the bane,

uelle fugam. dum se glomerant retroque residunt

And draw aback to place yet free from ruin, suddenly

in partem quae peste caret, tum pondere turris 540

O'erweighted toppleth down the tower, and thundereth through the sky.

procubuit subito et caelum tonat omne fragore.

Half-dead the warders fall to earth by world of wrack o'erborne,

semineces ad terram immani mole secuta

Pierced with their own shafts, and their breasts with hardened splinters torn.

confixique suis telis et pectora duro
Yea, Lycus and Helenor came alone of all their peers
transfossi ligno ueniunt. uix unus Helenor
Alive to earth: Helenor, now in spring-tide of his years:
et Lycus elapsi; quorum primaevus Helenor, 545
Bond-maid Licymnia privily to that Mæonian king
Maeonio regi quem serua Licymnia furtim
Had borne the lad, and sent him forth to Troy's beleaguering
sustulerat uetitisque ad Troiam miserat armis,
With arms forbidden, sheathless sword and churl's unpainted shield.
ense leuis nudo parmaque inglorius alba.
But when he saw himself amidst the thousand-sworded field
isque ubi se Turni media inter milia uidit,
Of Turnus, Latins on each side, behind, and full in face,
hinc acies atque hinc acies astare Latinas, 550
E'en as a wild beast hedged about by girdle of the chase
ut fera, quae densa uenantum saepta corona
Rages against the point and edge, and, knowing death anear,
contra tela furit seseque haud nescia morti
Leaps forth, and far is borne away down on the hunter's spear;
inicit et saltu supra uenabula fertur —
Not otherwise the youth falls on where thickest spear-points lie,
haud aliter iuuenis medios moriturus in hostis
And in the middle of the foe he casts himself to die.
inruit et qua tela uidet densissima tendit. 555
But Lycus, nimbler far of foot, betwixt the foemen slipped,
at pedibus longe melior Lycus inter et hostis
Betwixt the swords, and gained the wall, and at the coping gripped,
inter et arma fuga muros tenet, altaque certat
And strove to draw him up with hand, the friendly hands to feel;
prendere tecta manu sociumque attingere dextras.
But Turnus both with foot and spear hath followed hard at heel,
quem Turnus pariter cursu teloque secutus
And mocks him thus in victory: "How was thy hope so grown
increpat his uictor: 'nostrasne euadere, demens, 560
Of 'scaping from my hand, O fool?'" Therewith he plucks him down
sperasti te posse manus?' simul arripit ipsum

From where he hung, and space of wall tears downward with the man.

pendentem et magna muri cum parte reuellit:

As when it chanceth that a hare or snowy-bodied swan

qualis ubi aut leporem aut candenti corpore cycnum

Jove's shield-bearer hath borne aloft in snatching hookèd feet;

sustulit alta petens pedibus Iouis armiger uncis,

Or lamb, whose mother seeketh him with most abundant bleat,

quaesitum aut matri multis balatibus agnum 565

Some wolf of Mars from fold hath caught. Goes up great cry around:

Martius a stabulis rapuit lupus. undique clamor

They set on, and the ditches filled with o'erturned garth and mound,

tollitur: inuadunt et fossas aggere complent,

While others cast the blazing brands on roof and battlement.

ardentis taedas alii ad fastigia iactant.

Ilioneus with mighty stone, a shard from hillside rent,

Ilioneus saxo atque ingenti fragmine montis

Lucetius felled, as fire in hand unto the gate he drew.

Lucetium portae subeuntem ignisque ferentem, 570

Then Liger felled Emathion, for craft of spear he knew;

Emathiona Liger, Corynaeum sternit Asilas,

Asylas Corynaeus, by dint of skill in bowshaft's ways,

hic iaculo bonus, hic longe fallente sagitta,

Cæneus Ortygius fells, and him, victorious, Turnus slays,

Ortygium Caeneus, uictorem Caenea Turnus,

And Itys, Clonius, Promolus, Dioxippus withal,

Turnus Ityn Cloniumque, Dioxippum Promolumque

And Sagaris, and Idas set on topmost turret-wall.

et Sagarim et summis stantem pro turribus Idan, 575

Then Capys slays Privernus; him Themilla's light-winged spear

Priuernum Capys. hunc primo leuis hasta Themillae

Had grazed, whereon he dropped his shield, and his left hand did bear

strinxerat, ille manum proiecto tegmine demens

Upon the hurt; when lo, thereto the wingèd shaft did win,

ad uulnus tulit; ergo alis adlapsa sagitta

And nailed the hand unto the side, and, buried deep within,

et laeua infixae est alte lateri, abditaque intus
Burst all the breathing-ways of life with deadly fatal sore.
spiramenta animae letali uulnere rupit. 580
But lo, where standeth Arcens' child in goodly weed of war,
stabat in egregiis Arcentis filius armis
Fair with his needle-painted cloak, with Spanish scarlet bright,
pictus acu chlamydem et ferrugine clarus Hibera,
Noble of face: Arcens, his sire, had sent him to the fight
insignis facie, genitor quem miserat Arcens
From nursing of his mother's grove about Symaethia's flood,
eductum Martis luco Symaethia circum
Whereby Palicus' altar stands, the wealthy and the good.
flumina, pinguis ubi et placabilis ara Palici: 585
Mezentius now laid by his spear, and took his whistling sling, stridentem fundam positus Mezentius hastis
And whirled it thrice about his head at length of tugging string,
ipse ter adducta circum caput egit habena
And with the flight of molten lead his midmost forehead clave,
et media aduersi liquefacto tempora plumbo
And to the deep abundant sand his outstretched body gave.
diffidit ac multa porrectum extendit harena.
Then first they say Ascanius aimed his speedy shafts in war,
Tum primum bello celerem intendisse sagittam 590
Wherewith but fleeing beasts afield he used to fright before:
dicitur ante feras solitus terrere fugacis
But now at last his own right hand the stark Numanus slays,
Ascanius, fortemque manu fudisse Numanum,
Who had to surname Remulus, and in these latter days
cui Remulo cognomen erat, Turnique minorem
King Turnus' sister, young of years, had taken to his bed:
germanam nuper thalamo sociatus habebat.
He in the forefront of the fight kept crying out, and said
is primam ante aciem digna atque indigna relatu 595
Things worthy and unworthy tale: puffed up with pride of place
uociferans tumidusque nouo praecordia regno
New-won he went, still clamouring out his greatness and his grace.
ibat et ingentem sese clamore ferebat:

“O twice-caught Phrygians, shames you nought thus twice amid the wars

‘non pudet obsidione iterum ualloque teneri,

To lie in bonds, and stretch out walls before the march of Mars?

bis capti Phryges, et morti praetendere muros?

Lo, these are they who woke the war the wives of us to wed!

en qui nostra sibi bello conubia poscunt! 600

What God sent you to Italy? what madness hither sped?

quis deus Italiam, quae uos dementia adegit?

Here are no Atreus’ sons, and no Ulysses word-weaver.

non hic Atridae nec fandi fictor Vlixes:

A people hard from earliest spring our new-born sons we bear

durum a stirpe genus natos ad flumina primum

Unto the stream, and harden us with bitter frost and flood.

deferimus saeuoque gelu duramus et undis;

Our lads, they wake the dawning-chase and wear the tangled wood;

uenatu inuigilant pueri siluasque fatigant, 605

Our sport is taming of the horse and drawing shafted bow;

flectere ludus equos et spicula tendere cornu.

Our carles, who bear a world of toil, and hunger-pinching know,

at patiens operum paruoque adsueta iuuentus

Tame earth with spade, or shake with war the cities of the folk.

aut rastris terram domat aut quatit oppida bello.

Yea, all our life with steel is worn; afield we drive the yoke

omne aeuum ferro teritur, uersaque iuuentum

With spear-shaft turned about: nor doth a halting eld of sloth

terga fatigamus hasta, nec tarda senectus 610

Weaken our mightiness of soul, or change our glory’s growth.

debilitat uiris animi mutatque uigorem:

We do the helm on hoary hairs, and ever deem it good

canitiem galea premimus, semperque recentis

To drive the foray day by day, and make the spoil our food.

comportare iuuat praedas et uiuere rapto.

But ye — the raiment saffron-stained, with purple glow tricked out

uobis picta croco et fulgenti murice uestis,

These are your heart-joys: ye are glad to lead the dance about.

desidiaē cordi, iuuat indulgere choreis, 615

Sleeve-coated folk, O ribbon-coifed, not even Phrygian men,
et tunicae manicas et habent redimicula mitrae.

But Phrygian wives, to Dindymus the high go get ye then!

o uere Phrygiae, neque enim Phryges, ite per alta

To hear the flute's twi-mouthèd song as ye are wont to do!

Dindyma, ubi adsuētis biformem dat tibia cantum.

The Berecynthian Mother's box and cymbals call to you

tympana uos buxusque uocat Berecynthia Matris

From Ida: let men deal with war, and drop adown your swords."

Idaeae; sinite arma uiris et cedite ferro.' 620

That singer of such wicked speech, that caster forth of words,

Talia iactantem dictis ac dira canentem

Ascanius brooked not: breasting now his horse-hair full at strain,

non tulit Ascanius, neruoque obuersus equino

He aimed the shaft, and therewithal drew either arm atwain,

contendit telum diuersaque bracchia ducens

And stood so; but to Jupiter first suppliant fell to pray:

constitit, ante Iouem supplex per uota precatus:

"O Jove Almighty, to my deeds, thus new-begun, nod yea,

'Iuppiter omnipotens, audacibus adnue coeptis. 625

And I myself unto thy fane the yearly gifts will bear,

ipse tibi ad tua templa feram sollemnia dona,

And bring before thine altar-stead a snow-white gilt-horned steer,

et statuam ante aras aurata fronte iuuenicum

Whose head unto his mother's head is evenly upborne,

candentem pariterque caput cum matre ferentem,

Of age to spurn the sand with hoof and battle with the horn."

iam cornu petat et pedibus qui spargat harenam.'

The Father heard, and out of heaven, wherein no cloud-fleck hung,

audiit et caeli genitor de parte serena 630

His leftward thunder fell, wherewith the fateful bow outrung,

intonuit laeuum, sonat una fatifer arcus.

The back-drawn shaft went whistling forth with dreadful sound, and sped

effugit horrendum stridens adducta sagitta

To pierce the skull of Remulus and hollow of his head:

perque caput Remuli uenit et caua tempora ferro
 “Go to, then, and thy mocking words upon men’s valour call,
 traicit. ‘i, uerbis uirtutem inlude superbis!
 The twice-caught Phrygians answer back Rutulians herewithal.”
 bis capti Phryges haec Rutulis responsa remittunt’: 635
 This only word Ascanius spake: the Teucrians raise their cry hoc tantum Ascanius. Teucri clamore sequuntur
 And shout for joy, and lift their heart aloft unto the sky.
 laetitiaque fremunt animosque ad sidera tollunt.
 Long-haired Apollo then by hap high-set in airy place,
 Aetheria tum forte plaga crinitus Apollo
 Looked down upon Ausonian host and leaguered city’s case,
 desuper Ausonias acies urbemque uidebat
 And thus the victor he bespeaks from lofty seat of cloud:
 nube sedens, atque his uictorem adfatur Iulum: 640
 “Speed on in new-born valour, child! this is the starward road, ‘macte noua uirtute, puer, sic itur ad astra,
 O son of Gods and sire of Gods! Well have the Fates ordained
 dis genite et geniture deos. iure omnia bella
 That ‘neath Assaracus one day all war shall be refrained.
 gente sub Assaraci fato uentura resident,
 No Troy shall hold thee.”
 nec te Troia capit.’ simul haec effatus ab alto
 With that word he stoops from heaven aloft
 aethere se mittit, spirantis dimouet auras 645
 And puts away on either side the wind that meets him soft,
 Ascaniumque petit; forma tum uertitur oris
 And seeks Ascanius: changed is he withal, and putteth on
 antiquum in Buten. hic Dardanio Anchisae
 The shape of Butes old of days, shield-bearer time ago
 armiger ante fuit fidusque ad limina custos;
 Unto Anchises, Dardan king, and door-ward true and tried;
 tum comitem Ascanio pater addidit. ibat Apollo
 But with Ascanius now his sire had bidden him abide.
 omnia longaeuo similis uocemque coloremque 650
 Like this old man in every wise, voice, hue, and hoary hair,
 et crinis albos et saeua sonoribus arma,

And arms that cried on cruel war, now did Apollo fare,
atque his ardentem dictis adfatur Iulum:
And to Iulus hot of heart in such wise went his speech:
'sit satis, Aenide, telis impune Numanum
"Enough, O child of Æneas, that thou with shaft didst reach
oppetiisse tuis. primam hanc tibi magnus Apollo Numanus' life unharmed thyself, great Phoebus grants thee this,
concedit laudem et paribus non inuidet armis; 655
Thy first-born praise, nor grudgeth thee like weapons unto his.
cetera parce, puer, bello.' sic orsus Apollo
But now refrain thy youth from war." So spake Apollo then,
mortalis medio aspectus sermone reliquit
And in the midmost of his speech fled sight of mortal men,
et procul in tenuem ex oculis euanuit auram.
And faded from their eyes away afar amid the air.
agnouere deum procures diuinaque tela
The Dardan dukes, they knew the God and holy shooting-gear,
Dardanidae pharetramque fuga sensere sonantem. 660
And as he fled away from them they heard his quiver shrill.
ergo audium pugnae dictis ac numine Phoebi
Therefore Ascanius, fain of fight, by Phoebus' word and will Ascanium prohibent, ipsi in certamina rursus
They hold aback: but they themselves fare to the fight again,
succedunt animasque in aperta pericula mittunt.
And cast their souls amidst of all the perils bare and plain.
it clamor totis per propugnacula muris,
Then goes the shout adown the wall, along the battlement;
intendunt acris arcus amentaque torquent. 665
The javelin-thongs are whirled about, the sharp-springed bows are bent,
sternitur omne solum telis, tum scuta cauaeque
And all the earth is strewn with shot: the shield, the helmet's cup,
dant sonitum flictu galeae, pugna aspera surgit:
Ring out again with weapon-dint, and fierce the fight springs up.
quantus ab occasu ueniens pluuias Haedis
As great as, when the watery kids are setting, beats the rain
uerberat imber humum, quam multa grandine nimbi

Upon the earth; as plentiful as when upon the main
 in uada praecipitant, cum Iuppiter horridus Austris 670
 The hail-clouds fall, when Jupiter, fierce with the southern blasts,
 torquet aquosam hiemem et caelo caua nubila rumpit.
 Breaks up the hollow clouds of heaven and watery whirl downcasts.
 Pandarus et Bitias, Idaeo Alcanore creti,
 Now Pandarus and Bitias stark, Idan Alcanor's seed.
 quos Iouis eduxit luco siluestris Iæra
 They whom Iæra of the woods in Jove's brake nursed with heed,
 abietibus iuuenes patriis et montibus aequos,
 Youths tall as firs or mountain-cliffs that in their country are,
 portam, quae ducis imperio commissa, recludunt 675
 The gate their lord hath bid them keep, these freely now unbar,
 freti armis, ultroque inuitant moenibus hostem.
 And freely bid the foeman in, trusting to stroke of hand;
 ipsi intus dextra ac laeua pro turribus astant
 But they themselves to right and left before the gate-towers stand,
 armati ferro et cristis capita alta corusci:
 Steel-clad, and with their lofty heads crested with glittering gleams;
 quales aerae liquentia flumina circum
 E'en as amid the air of heaven, beside the flowing streams
 siue Padi ripis Athesim seu propter amoenum 680
 On rim of Padus, or anigh soft Athesis and sweet,
 consurgunt geminae quercus intonsaque caelo
 Twin oak-trees spring, and tops unshorn uprear the skies to meet,
 attollunt capita et sublimi uertice nutant.
 And with their heads high over earth nod ever in the wind.
 inrumpunt aditus Rutuli ut uidere patentis:
 So now the Rutuli fall on when clear the way they find,
 continuo Quercens et pulcher Aquiculus armis
 But Quercens, and Æquiculus the lovely war-clad one,
 et praeceps animi Tmarus et Mauortius Haemon 685
 And Tmarus of the headlong soul, and Hæmon, Mavors' son,
 agminibus totis aut uersi terga dedere
 Must either turn their backs in flight, with all their men of war,
 aut ipso portae posuere in limine uitam.
 Or lay adown their lovèd lives on threshold of the door.

tum magis increscunt animis discordibus irae,
Then bitterer waxeth battle-rage in hate-fulfillèd hearts,
et iam collecti Troes glomerantur eodem
And there the Trojans draw to head and gather from all parts,
et conferre manum et procurrere longius audent. 690
Eager to deal in handy strokes, full fierce afield to fare.
Ductori Turno diuersa in parte furenti
But as duke Turnus through the fight was raging otherwhere,
turbantique uiros perfertur nuntius, hostem
Confounding folk, there came a man with tidings that the foe,
feruere caede noua et portas praeberè patentis.
Hot with new death, the door-leaves wide to all incomers throw.
deserit inceptum atque immani concitus ira
Therewith he leaves the work in hand, and, stirred by anger's goad,
Dardanium ruit ad portam fratresque superbos. 695
Against the Dardan gate goes forth, against the brethren proud:
et primum Antiphaten (is enim se primus agebat),
There first Antiphates he slew, who fought amid the first,
Thebana de matre nothum Sarpedonis alti,
The bastard of Sarpedon tall, by Theban mother nursed.
coniecto sternit iaculo: uolat Itala cornus
With javelin-cast he laid him low: the Italian cornel flies
aera per tenerum stomachoque infixà sub altum
Through the thin air, pierceth his maw, and 'neath his breast-bone lies
pectus abit; reddit specus atri uulneris undam 700
Deep down; the hollow wound-cave pours a flood of gore and foam,
spumantem, et fixo ferrum in pulmone tepescit.
And warm amid him lies the steel, amid his lung gone home.
tum Meropem atque Erymanta manu, tum sternit Aphidnum,
Then Meropes', and Erymas', Aphidnus' lives he spilled;
tum Bitian ardentem oculis animisque frementem,
Then Bitias of the flaming eyes and heart with ire fulfilled; —
non iaculo (neque enim iaculo uitam ille dedisset),
Not with the dart, for to no dart his life-breath had he given; —
sed magnum stridens contorta phalarica uenit 705
But whirled and whizzing mightily came on the sling-spear, driven

fulminis acta modo, quam nec duo taurea terga
Like lightning-flash; against whose dint two bull-hides nought availed,
nec duplici squama lorica fidelis et auro
Nor yet the golden faithful fence of war-coat double-scaled:
sustinuit; conlapsa ruunt immania membra,
His fainting limbs fell down afield, and earth gave out a groan,
dat tellus gemitum et clipeum super intonat ingens.
And rang the thunder of his shield huge on his body thrown:
talis in Euboico Baiarum litore quondam 710
E'en as upon Euboean shore of Baiaë falleth whiles
saxea pila cadit, magnis quam molibus ante
A stony pillar, which built up of mighty bonded piles
constructam ponto iaciunt, sic illa ruinam
They set amid the sea: suchwise it draggeth mighty wrack
prona trahit penitusque uadis inlisa recumbit;
Headlong adown, and deep in sea it lieth dashed aback:
miscent se maria et nigrae attolluntur harenae,
The seas are blent, black whirl of sand goes up confusedly;
tum sonitu Prochyta alta tremit durumque cubile 715
And with the noise quakes Prochyta, and quakes Inarimè,
Inarime Iouis imperiis imposta Typhoeo.
The unsoft bed by Jove's command upon Typhoeus laid.
Hic Mars armipotens animum uirisque Latinis
Then Mars, the mighty in the war, brings force and strength to aid
addidit et stimulos acris sub pectore uertit,
The Latin men, and in their hearts he stirs his bitter goads,
immisitque Fugam Teucris atrumque Timorem.
The while with fleeing and black fear the Teucrian heart he loads:
undique conueniunt, quoniam data copia pugnae, 720
From everywhither run the folk, since here is battle rich,
bellatorque animo deus incidit.
And in all hearts the war-god wakes.
Pandarus, ut fuso germanum corpore cernit
But Pandarus, beholding now his brother laid to earth,
et quo sit fortuna loco, qui casus agat res,
And whitherward wends Fortune now, and what Time brings to birth,

portam ui multa conuerso cardine torquet
Back-swinging on the hinge again with might the door-leaf sends,
obnixus latis umeris, multosque suorum 725
By struggle of his shoulders huge; and many of his friends
moenibus exclusos duro in certamine linquit;
Shut outward of the walls he leaves, amid the fierce debate;
ast alios secum includit recipitque ruentis,
While others, with himself shut in, poured backward through the gate.

demens, qui Rutulum in medio non agmine regem
Madman! who saw not how the king Rutulian mid the band
uiderit inrumpentem ultroque incluserit urbi,
Came rushing, but amidst the town now shut him with his hand,
immanem ueluti pecora inter inertia tigrim. 730
E'en as a tiger pent amidst a helpless flock of sheep.
continuo noua lux oculis effulsit et arma
Then dreadfully his armour rings, light from his eyes doth leap, —
horrendum sonuere, tremunt in uertice cristae
A strange new light: the blood-red crest upon his helm-top quakes,
sanguineae clipeoque micantia fulmina mittit.
And from the circle of his shield a glittering lightning breaks.
agnoscunt faciem inuisam atque immania membra
Sudden Æneas' frightened folk behold his hated face
turbati subito Aeneadae. tum Pandarus ingens 735
And mighty limbs: but Pandarus breaks forth amid the place
emicat et mortis fraternae feruidus ira
Huge, and his heart afire with rage for his lost brother's death.
effatur: 'non haec dotalis regia Amatae,
"Nay, this is not Amata's home, the dowry house," he saith,
nec muris cohibet patriis media Ardea Turnum.
"Nor yet doth Ardea's midmost wall hold kindred Turnus in:
castra inimica uides, nulla hinc exire potestas.'
The foeman's camp thou seest, wherefrom thou hast no might to win."

olli subridens sedato pectore Turnus: 740
But from his all untroubled breast laughed Turnus, as he said:
'incipe, si qua animo uirtus, et consere dextram,

“Begin, if thou hast heart thereto, let hand to hand be laid!

hic etiam inuentum Priamo narrabis Achillem.’

Thou shalt tell Priam how thou found’st a new Achilles here.”

dixerat. ille rudem nodis et cortice crudo

He spake: the other put all strength to hurling of his spear,

intorquet summis adnexus uiribus hastam;

A shaft all rough with knots, and still in its own tree-bark bound.

exceperae auras, uulnus Saturnia Iuno 745

Straightway the thin air caught it up, but that swift-speeding wound

detorsit ueniens, portaeque infigitur hasta.

Saturnian Juno turned aside and set it in the door.

‘at non hoc telum, mea quod ui dextera uersat,

— “But now thou ‘scapest not this steel mine own hand maketh sure,
effugies, neque enim is teli nec uulneris auctor’:

Nought such as thine the weapon-smith, the wound-smith — —”

With the word

sic ait, et sublatum alte consurgit in ensem

He riseth up unto the high uprising of the sword,

et mediam ferro gemina inter tempora frontem 750

Wherewith betwixt the temples twain he clave his midmost head,

diuidit impubisque immani uulnere malas.

And with a fearful wound apart the cheeks unbearded shred.

fit sonus, ingenti concussa est pondere tellus;

Then came a sound, and shook the earth ‘neath the huge weight of him:

conlapsos artus atque arma cruenta cerebro

With armour wet with blood and brain, with fainting, slackened limb,

sternit humi moriens, atque illi partibus aequis

He strewed the ground in death; his head, sheared clean and evenly,

huc caput atque illuc umero ex utroque pependit. 755

From either shoulder hanging down, this side and that did lie.

Diffugiunt uersi trepida formidine Troes,

Then turn and flee the Trojan folk, by quaking terror caught;

et si continuo uictorem ea cura subisset,

And if the conquering man as then one moment had had thought

rumpere claustra manu sociosque immittere portis,

To burst the bolts and let his folk in through the opened door,

ultimus ille dies bello gentique fuisset.

That day had been the last of days for Trojans and their war.

sed furor ardentem caedisque insana cupido 760

But utter wrath of heart and soul, and wildering lust of death
egit in aduersos.

Drave him afire amidst the foe.

principio Phalerim et succiso poplite Gygen

Then Phaleris he catcheth up, and ham-strung Gyges then,

excipit, hinc raptas fugientibus ingerit hastas

Whose spears, snatched up, he hurleth on against the backs of men;
in tergus, Iuno uiris animumque ministrat.

For Juno finds him might enough and heart wherewith to do,

addit Halyn comitem et confixa Phegea parma, 765

Halys he sendeth down with these, Phegeus with targe smit through;
ignaros deinde in muris Martemque cientis

Then, as they roused the war on wall, nor wotted aught of this,

Alcandrumque Haliumque Noemonaque Prytanimque.

Alcander stark, and Halius stout, Noëmon, Prytanis.

Lyncea tendentem contra sociosque uocantem

Then Lynceus, as he ran to aid and cheered his folk withal,

uibranti gladio conixus ab aggere dexter

He reacheth at with sweeping sword from right hand of the wall

occupat, huic uno deiectum cominus ictu 770

And smiteth; and his helm and head, struck off with that one blow,

cum galea longe iacuit caput. inde ferarum

Lie far away: Amycus then, the wood-deer's wasting foe,

uastatorem Amycum, quo non felicior alter

He slayeth: happier hand had none in smearing of the shaft

unguere tela manu ferrumque armare ueneno,

And arming of the iron head the poison-wound to waft.

et Clytium Aeoliden et amicum Crethea Musis,

Then Clytius, son of Æolus, and Cretheus Muse-beloved, —

Crethea Musarum comitem, cui carmina semper 775

Cretheus the Muses' fellow-friend, whose heart was ever moved

et citharae cordi numerosque intendere neruis,

By song and harp, and measured sound along the strained string;

semper equos atque arma uirum pugnasque caneabat.

Who still of steeds, and arms, and men, and battle-tide would sing.
 Tandem ductores audita caede suorum
 At last the Trojan dukes of men, Mnestheus, Serestus fierce, conueniunt Teucri, Mnestheus acerque Serestus,
 Draw to a head when all this death is borne unto their ears,
 palantisque uident socios hostemque receptum. 780
 And see their folk all scattering wide, the foe amidst them see.
 et Mnestheus: 'quo deinde fugam, quo tenditis?' inquit.
 Then Mnestheus cries: "And whither now, and whither will ye flee?
 'quos alios muros, quaeue ultra moenia habetis?
 What other walls, what other town have ye a hope to find?
 unus homo et uestris, o ciues, undique saeptus
 Hath one man, O my town-fellows, whom your own ramparts bind,
 aggeribus tantas strages impune per urbem
 Wrought such a death and unavenged amid your very town,
 ediderit? iuuenum primos tot miserit Orco? 785
 And sent so many lords of war by Orcus' road adown?
 non infelicis patriae ueterumque deorum
 O dastards, your unhappy land, your Gods of ancient days,
 et magni Aeneae, segnes, miseretque pudetque?'
 Your great Æneas — what! no shame, no pity do they raise?"
 talibus accensi firmantur et agmine denso
 Fired by such words, they gather heart and stand in close array,
 consistunt. Turnus paulatim excedere pugna
 Till step by step 'gins Turnus now to yield him from the play,
 et fluuium petere ac partem quae cingitur unda. 790
 And seek the river and the side the wet wave girds about.
 acrius hoc Teucri clamore incumbere magno
 Then fiercer fall the Teucrians on, and raise a mighty shout,
 et glomerare manum, ceu saeuum turba leonem
 And lock their ranks: as when a crowd of men-folk and of spears
 cum telis premit infensis; at territus ille,
 Falls on a lion hard of heart, and he, beset by fears,
 asper, acerba tuens, retro redit et neque terga
 But fierce and grim-eyed, yieldeth way, though anger and his worth
 ira dare aut uirtus patitur, nec tendere contra 795
 Forbid him turn his back about: no less to fare right forth

ille quidem hoc cupiens potis est per tela uirosque.
 Through spears and men avails him not, though ne'er so fain he be.
 haud aliter retro dubius uestigia Turnus
 Not otherwise unhasty feet drew Turnus doubtfully
 improperata refert et mens exaestuat ira.
 A backward, all his heart a-boil with anger's overflow.
 quin etiam bis tum medios inuaserat hostis,
 Yea, twice, indeed, he falls again amidmost of the foe,
 bis confusa fuga per muros agmina uertit; 800
 And twice more turns to huddled flight their folk along the walls;
 sed manus e castris propere coit omnis in unum
 But, gathered from the camp about, the whole host on him falls,
 nec contra uiris audet Saturnia Iuno
 Nor durst Saturnian Juno now his might against them stay;
 sufficere; aeriam caelo nam Iuppiter Irim
 For Jupiter from heaven hath sent Iris of airy way,
 demisit germanae haud mollia iussa ferentem,
 No soft commands of his high doom bearing his sister down,
 ni Turnus cedat Teucrorum moenibus altis. 805
 If Turnus get him not away from Troy's high-built town.
 ergo nec clipeo iuuenis subsistere tantum
 So now the warrior's shielded left the play endureth not,
 nec dextra ualet, iniectis sic undique telis
 Nought skills his right hand; wrapped around in drift of weapon shot
 obruitur. strepit adsiduo caua tempora circum
 About his temples' hollow rings his helm with ceaseless clink;
 tinnitu galea et saxis solida aera fatiscunt
 The starkly-fashioned brazen plates amid the stone-cast chink;
 discussaeque iubae, capiti nec sufficit umbo 810
 The crest is battered from his head; nor may the shield-boss hold
 ictibus; ingeminant hastis et Troes et ipse
 Against the strokes: the Trojans speed the spear-storm manifold,
 fulmineus Mnestheus. tum toto corpore sudor
 And lightning Mnestheus thickeneth it: then over all his limbs
 liquitur et piceum (nec respirare potestas)
 The sweat bursts out, and all adown a pitchy river swims:
 flumen agit, fessos quatit aeger anhelitus artus.

Hard grows his breath, and panting sharp shaketh his body spent.

tum demum praeceps saltu sese omnibus armis 815

Until at last, all clad in arms, he leapt adown, and sent

in fluuium dedit. ille suo cum gurgite flauo

His body to the river fair, who in his yellow flood

accepit uenientem ac mollibus extulit undis

Caught him, and bore him forth away on ripple soft and good,

et laetum sociis abluta caede remisit.

And gave him merry to his men, washed from the battle's blood.

LIBER X

BOOK X.

Panditur interea domus omnipotentis Olympi
Meanwhile is opened wide the door of dread Olympus' walls,
conciliumque uocat diuum pater atque hominum rex
And there the Sire of Gods and Men unto the council calls,
sideream in sedem, terras unde arduus omnis
Amid the starry place, wherefrom, high-throned, he looks adown
castraque Dardanidum aspectat populosque Latinos.
Upon the folk of Latin land and that beleaguered town.
considunt tectis bipatentibus, incipit ipse: 5
There in the open house they sit, and he himself begins:
'caelicolae magni, quianam sententia uobis
"O Dwellers in the House of Heaven, why backward thuswise wins
uersa retro tantumque animis certatis iniquis?
Your purpose? Why, with hearts unrul'd, raise ye the strife so sore?
abnueram bello Italiam concurrere Teucris.
I clean forbade that Italy should clash with Troy in war.
quae contra uetitum discordia? quis metus aut hos
Now why the war that I forbade? who egged on these or those aut hos arma sequi ferrumque lacessere suasit? 10
To fear or fight, or drave them on with edge of sword to close?
adueniet iustum pugnae (ne arcessite) tempus,
Be not o'reager in your haste: the hour of fight shall come,
cum fera Karthago Romanis arcibus olim
When dreadful Carthage on a day against the walls of Rome,
exitium magnum atque Alpīs immittet apertas:
Betwixt the opened doors of Alps, a mighty wrack shall send;
tum certare odiis, tum res rapuisse licebit.
Then may ye battle, hate to hate, and reach and grasp and rend:
nunc sinite et placitum laeti componite foedus.' 15
But now forbear, and joyfully knit fast the plighted peace."
Iuppiter haec paucis; at non Venus aurea contra Few words spake Jove; but not a few in answer unto these

pauca refert:

Gave golden Venus back again:

‘o pater, o hominum rerumque aeterna potestas

“O Father, O eternal might of men and deeds of earth —

(namque aliud quid sit quod iam implorare queamus?),

For what else may be left to me whereto to turn my prayers? —

cernis ut insultent Rutuli, Turnusque feratur 20

Thou seest the Rutuli in pride, and Turnus, how he fares?

per medios insignis equis tumidusque secundo

Amidst them, borne aloft by steeds, and, swelling, war-way sweeps

Marte ruat? non clausa tegunt iam moenia Teucros;

With Mars to aid: the fencèd place no more the Teucrians keeps,

quin intra portas atque ipsis proelia miscent

For now within the very gates and mound-heaped battlement

aggeribus murorum et inundant sanguine fossae.

They blend in fight, and flood of gore adown the ditch is sent,

Aeneas ignarus abest. numquamne leuari 25

Unware Æneas is away. — Must they be never free

obsidione sines? muris iterum imminet hostis

From bond of leaguer? lo, again the threatening enemy

nascentis Troiae nec non exercitus alter,

Hangs over Troy new-born! Behold new host arrayed again

atque iterum in Teucros Aetolis surgit ab Arpis

From Arpi, the Ætolian-built; against the Teucrian men

Tyrides. equidem credo, mea uulnera restant

Tyrides riseth. So for me belike new wounds in store,

et tua progenies mortalia demoror arma. 30

And I, thy child, must feel the edge of arms of mortal war.

si sine pace tua atque inuito numine Troes

Now if without thy peace, without thy Godhead’s will to speed,

Italiam petiere, luant peccata neque illos

The Trojans sought for Italy, let ill-hap pay ill deed,

iuueris auxilio; sin tot responsa secuti

Nor stay them with thine help: but if they followed many a word

quae superi manesque dabant, cur nunc tua quisquam

Given forth by Gods of Heaven and Hell, by whom canst thou be stirred

uertere iussa potest aut cur noua condere fata? 35

To turn thy doom, or who to forge new fate may e'er avail?

quid repetam exustas Erycino in litore classis,

Of ship-host burnt on Eryx shore why should I tell the tale?

quid tempestatum regem uentosque furentis

Or of the king of wind and storm, or wild and windy crowd

Aeolia excitos aut actam nubibus Irim?

Æolia bred, or Iris sent adown the space of cloud?

nunc etiam manis (haec intemptata manebat

But now withal the Gods of Hell, a world untried before,

sors rerum) mouet et superis immissa repente 40

She stirreth, and Alecto sent up to the earthly shore

Allecto medias Italum bacchata per urbes.

In sudden hurry raves about towns of Italian men.

nil super imperio moueor. sperauimus ista,

No whit for lordship do I yearn: I hoped such glories then

dum fortuna fuit. uincant, quos uincere mauis.

While Fortune was: let them be lords whom thou wilt doom for lords!

si nulla est regio Teucris quam det tua coniunx

But if no land thy hard-heart wife to Teucrian men awards,

dura, per euersae, genitor, fumantia Troiae 45

Yet, Father, by the smoking wrack of overwhelmèd Troy

excidia obtestor: liceat dimittere ab armis

I pray thee from the weapon-dint safe let me send a boy,

incolumem Ascanium, liceat superesse nepotem.

Yea, e'en Ascanius: let me keep my grandson safe for me!

Aeneas sane ignotis iactetur in undis

Yea, let Æneas toss about on many an unknown sea,

et quacumque uiam dederit Fortuna sequatur:

And let him follow wheresoe'er his fortune shall have led:

hunc tegere et dirae ualeam subducere pugnae. 50

But this one let me shield, and take safe from the battle's dread.

est Amathus, est celsa mihi Paphus atque Cythera

Paphus, Cythera, Amathus, are mine, and I abide

Idaliaeque domus: positus inglorius armis

Within Idalia's house: let him lay weed of war aside,

exigat hic æuū. magna dicione iubeto

And wear his life inglorious there: then shalt thou bid the hand
Karthago premat Ausoniam; nihil urbibus inde

Of Carthage weigh Ausonia down, and nothing shall withstand
obstabit Tyriis. quid pestem euadere belli 55

The towns of Tyre. — Ah, what availed to ‘scape the bane of war?
iuuit et Argolicos medium fugisse per ignis

Ah, what availed that through the midst of Argive flames they bore totque maris uastæque exhausta pericula terræ,

To wear down perils of wide lands, and perils of the main,
dum Latium Teucris recidiuaque Pergama quaerunt?

While Teucrian men sought Latin land and Troy new-born again?
non satius cineres patriæ insedissee supremos

Ah, better had it been for them by Troy’s cold ash to stay,
atque solum quo Troia fuit? Xanthum et Simoenta 60

To dwell on earth where Troy hath been. Father, give back, I pray,
redde, oro, miseris iterumque reuoluere casus

Their Xanthus and their Simoïs unto that wretched folk,
da, pater, Iliacos Teucris.’ tum regia Iuno

And let them toil and faint once more ‘neath Ilium’s woeful yoke!”
acta furore graui: ‘quid me alta silentia cogis

Then spake Queen Juno, heavy wroth: “Why driv’st thou me to part
rumpere et obductum uerbis uulgare dolorem?

My deep-set silence, and lay bare with words my grief of heart?
Aenean hominum quisquam diuumque subegit 65

What one of all the Gods or men Æneas drave to go
bella sequi aut hostem regi se inferre Latino?

On warring ways, or bear himself as King Latinus’ foe?
Italiam petiit fatis auctoribus (esto)

Fate-bidden he sought Italy? — Yea, soothly, or maybe
Cassandrae impulsus furiis: num linquere castra

Spurned by Cassandra’s wilderment — and how then counselled we
hortati sumus aut uitam committere uentis?

To leave his camp and give his life to make the winds a toy?
num puero summam belli, num credere muros, 70

To trust his walls and utmost point of war unto a boy?
Tyrrhenamque fidem aut gentis agitare quietas?

To trust the Tuscan faith, and stir the peaceful folk to fight?
 quis deus in fraudem, quae dura potentia nostra
 What God hath driven him to lie, what hardness of my might?
 egit? ubi hic Iuno demissaue nubibus Iris?
 Works Juno here, or Iris sent adown the cloudy way?
 indignum est Italos Troiam circumdare flammis
 'Tis wrong for Italy, forsooth, the ring of fire to lay
 nascentem et patria Turnum consistere terra, 75
 Round Troy new-born; for Turnus still to hold his fathers' earth! —
 cui Pilumnus auus, cui diua Venilia mater:
 Though him, Pilumnus' own son's son, Venilia brought to birth —
 quid face Troianos atra uim ferre Latinis,
 But what if Trojans fall with flame upon the Latin folk,
 arua aliena iugo premere atque auertere praedas?
 And drive the prey from off their fields oppressed by outland yoke?
 quid soceros legere et gremiis abducere pactas,
 Or choose them sons-in-law, or brides from mothers' bosoms tear?
 pacem orare manu, praefigere puppibus arma? 80
 Or, holding peace within their hands, lade ships with weapon-gear?
 tu potes Aenean manibus subducere Graium
 Thou erst hadst might from Greekish hands Æneas' self to draw,
 proque uiro nebulam et uentos obtendere inanis,
 To thrust a cloud and empty wind in stead of man of war,
 et potes in totidem classem conuertere nymphas:
 And unto sea-nymphs ship by ship the ship-host mayst thou change.
 nos aliquid Rutulos contra iuuisse nefandum est?
 But we to help the Rutuli, 'tis horrible and strange!
 "Aeneas ignarus abest": ignarus et absit. 85
 — Unware Æneas is away? — let him abide unware!
 est Paphus Idaliumque tibi, sunt alta Cythera:
 Paphus thou hast, Idalium, and high Cythera fair,
 quid grauidam bellis urbem et corda aspera temptas?
 Then why with cities big with war and hearts of warriors deal?
 nosne tibi fluxas Phrygiae res uertere fundo
 What! we it was who strove to wrack the fainting Trojan weal?
 conamur? nos? an miseros qui Troas Achiuis
 We! — or the one who thwart the Greeks the wretched Trojans dashed?

obiecit? quae causa fuit consurgere in arma 90

Yea, and what brought it all about that thus in arms they clashed,
Europamque Asiamque et foedera soluere furto?

Europe and Asia? that men brake the plighted peace by theft?

me duce Dardanius Spartam expugnauit adulter,

Did I the Dardan lecher lead, who Sparta's jewel reft?

aut ego tela dedi fouiue Cupidine bella?

Did I set weapons in his hand, breed lust to breed debate?

tum decuit metuuisse tuis: nunc sera querelis

Then had thy care for thine been meet, but now indeed o'erlate

haud iustis adsurgis et inrita iurgia iactas.' 95

With wrongful plaint thou risest up, and bickerest emptily."

Talibus orabat Iuno, cunctique fremebant

So pleaded Juno, and all they, the heavenly folk anigh,

caelicolae adsensu uario, ceu flamina prima

Murmured their doom in diverse wise; as when the first of wind

cum deprensa fremunt siluis et caeca uolutant

Caught in the woods is murmuring on, and rolleth moanings blind,

murmura uenturos nautis prodentia uentos.

Betraying to the mariners the onset of the gale.

tum pater omnipotens, rerum cui prima potestas, 100

Then spake the Almighty Sire, in whom is all the world's avail,

infit (eo dicente deum domus alta silescit

And as he spake the high-built house of God was quieted,

et tremefacta solo tellus, silet arduus aether,

And earth from her foundations shook, and heaven was hushed o'erhead,

tum Zephyri posuere, premit placida aequora pontus):

The winds fell down, the face of sea was laid in quiet fair:

'accipite ergo animis atque haec mea figite dicta.

"Take ye these matters to your hearts, and set my sayings there;

quandoquidem Ausonios coniungi foedere Teucris 105

Since nowise the Ausonian folk the plighted troth may blend

haud licitum, nec uestra capit discordia finem,

With Teucrians, and your contest seems a strife without an end;

quae cuique est fortuna hodie, quam quisque secat spem,

What fortune each may have today, what hope each one shears out,
 Tros Rutulusne fuat, nullo discrimine habebō,
 Trojan or Rutulan, will I hold all in balanced doubt,
 seu fatis Italum castra obsidione tenentur
 Whether the camp be so beset by fate of Italy,
 siue errore malo Troiae monitisque sinistris. 110
 Or hapless wanderings of Troy, and warnings dealt awry.
 nec Rutulos soluo. sua cuique exorsa laborem
 Nor loose I Rutulans the more; let each one's way-faring
 fortunamque ferent. rex Iuppiter omnibus idem.
 Bear its own hap and toil, for Jove to all alike is king;
 fata uiam inuenient.' Stygii per flumina fratris,
 The Fates will find a way to wend." He nodded oath withal
 per pice torrentis atraque uoragine ripas
 By his own Stygian brother's stream, the pitchy waters' fall,
 adnuat et totum nutu tremefecit Olympum. 115
 And blazing banks, and with his nod shook all Olympus' land.
 hic finis fandi. solio tum Iuppiter aureo
 Then fell the talk; from golden throne did Jupiter upstand,
 surgit, caelicolae medium quem ad limina ducunt.
 The heaven-abiders girt him round and brought him to the door.
 Interea Rutuli portis circum omnibus instant
 The Rutuli amid all this are pressing on in war,
 sternere caede uiros et moenia cingere flammis.
 Round all the gates to slay the men, the walls with fire to ring,
 at legio Aeneadam uallis obsessa tenetur 120
 And all Æneas' host is pent with fenced beleaguering.
 nec spes ulla fugae. miseri stant turribus altis
 Nor is there any hope of flight; upon the towers tall
 nequiquam et rara muros cinxere corona
 They stand, the hapless men in vain, thin garland for the wall;
 Asius Imbrasides Hicetaoniusque Thymoetes
 Asius, the son of Imbrasmus, Thymoetes, and the two Assaracique duo et senior cum Castore Thymbris, Assaraci, and Thymbris old, with Castor, deeds they do
 prima acies; hos germani Sarpedonis ambo 125
 In the forefront; Sarpedon's sons, twin brethren, with them bide,

et Clarus et Thaemon Lycia comitantur ab alta.
 Clarus and Themon, born erewhile in lofty Lycia's side.
 fert ingens toto conexus corpore saxum,
 And now Lyrnessian Acmon huge with strain of limbs strives hard,
 haud partem exiguam montis, Lyrnesius Acmon,
 And raises up a mighty stone, no little mountain shard;
 nec Clytio genitore minor nec fratre Menestheo.
 As great as father Clytius he, or brother Mnestheus' might:
 hi iaculis, illi certant defendere saxis 130
 So some with stones, with spear-cast some, they ward the walls in fight,
 molirique ignem neruoque aptare sagittas.
 They deal with fire or notch the shaft upon the strained string.
 ipse inter medios, Veneris iustissima cura,
 But lo amidst, most meetly wrought for Venus cherishing,
 Dardanius caput, ecce, puer detectus honestum,
 His goodly head the Dardan boy unhooded there doth hold,
 qualis gemma micat fuluum quae diuidit aurum,
 As shineth out some stone of price, cleaving the yellow gold,
 aut collo decus aut capiti, uel quale per artem 135
 Fair for the bosom or the head; or as the ivory shines,
 inclusum buxo aut Oricia terebintho
 That with Orician terebinth the art of man entwines,
 lucet ebur; fusos ceruix cui lactea crinis
 Or mid the boxwood; down along his milk-white neck they lie
 accipit et molli subnectens circulus auro.
 The streams of hair, which golden wire doth catch about and tie.
 te quoque magnanimae uiderunt, Ismare, gentes
 The mighty nations, Ismarus, there saw thee deft to speed
 uulnera derigere et calamos armare ueneno, 140
 The bane of men, envenoming the deadly flying reed;
 Maeonia generose domo, ubi pinguia culta
 Thou lord-born of Moeonian house, whereby the tiller tills
 exercentque uiri Pactolusque inrigat auro.
 Rich acres, where Pactolus' flood gold overflowing spills.
 adfuit et Mnestheus, quem pulsi pristina Turni
 There, too, was Mnestheus, whom his deed late done of thrusting

forth

aggere murorum sublimem gloria tollit,

King Turnus from the battlements hath raised to heavenly worth,

et Capys: hinc nomen Campanae ducitur urbi. 145

And Capys, he whose name is set upon Campania's town.

Illi inter sese duri certamina belli

But while the bitter play of war went bickering up and down,

contulerant: media Aeneas freta nocte secabat.

Æneas clave the seas with keel amidst the dead of night:

namque ut ab Euandro castris ingressus Etruscis

For when Evander he had left and reached the Tuscan might,

regem adit et regi memorat nomenque genusque

He met their king and told his name, and whence his race of old,

quidue petat quidue ipse ferat, Mezentius arma 150

And what he would and how he wrought: and of the host he told,

quae sibi conciliet, uiolentaque pectora Turni

Mezentius now had gotten him, and Turnus' wrothful heart;

edocet, humanis quae sit fiducia rebus

He warned him in affairs of men to trust not Fortune's part;

admonet immiscetque preces, haud fit mora, Tarchon

And therewithal he mingleth prayers: Tarchon no while doth wait,

iungit opes foedusque ferit; tum libera fati

But joineth hosts and plighteth troth; and so, set free by Fate,

classem conscendit iussis gens Lydia diuum 155

A-shipboard go the Lydian folk by God's command and grace,

externo commissa duci. Aeneia puppis

Yet 'neath the hand of outland duke: Æneas' ship hath place

prima tenet rostro Phrygios subiuncta leones,

In forefront: Phrygian lions hang above its armèd tyne

imminet Ida super, profugis gratissima Teucris.

O'ertopped by Ida, unto those Troy's outcasts happy sign:

hic magnus sedet Aeneas secumque uolutat

There great Æneas sits, and sends his mind a-wandering wide

euentus belli uarios, Pallasque sinistro 160

Through all the shifting chance of war; and by his left-hand side

adfixus lateri iam quaerit sidera, opacae

Is Pallas asking of the stars and night-tide's journey dim,

noctis iter, iam quae passus terraque marique.
Or whiles of haps by land or sea that fortun'd unto him.
Pandite nunc Helicon, deae, cantusque mouete,
Ye Goddesses, ope Helicon, and raise the song to say
quae manus interea Tuscis comitetur ab oris
What host from out the Tuscan land Æneas led away,
Aenean armetque rates pelagoque uehatur. 165
And how they dight their ships, and how across the sea they drave.
Massicus aerata princeps secat aequora Tigri,
In brazen Tiger Massicus first man the sea-plain clave;
sub quo mille manus iuuenum, qui moenia Clusi
A thousand youths beneath him are that Clusium's walls have left
quique urbem liquere Cosas, quis tela sagittae
And Cosæ's city: these in war with arrow-shot are deft,
gorytique leues umeris et letifer arcus.
And bear light quivers of the bark, and bear the deadly bow.
una toruus Abas: huic totum insignibus armis 170
Then comes grim Abas, all his host with glorious arms aglow,
agmen et aurato fulgebat Apolline puppis.
And on his stern Apollo gleams, well wrought in utter gold.
sescentos illi dederat Populonia mater
But Populonia's mother-land had given him there to hold
expertos belli iuuenes, ast Ilua trecentos
Six hundred of the battle-craft; three hundred Ilva sent,
insula inexhaustis Chalybum generosa metallis.
Rich isle, whose wealth of Chalyb ore wastes never nor is spent.
tertius ille hominum diuumque interpres Asilas, 175
The third is he, who carrieth men the words God hath to say,
cui pecudum fibrae, caeli cui sidera parent
Asylas, whom the hearts of beasts and stars of heaven obey,
et linguae uolucrum et praesagi fulminis ignes,
And tongues of birds, and thunder-fire that coming tidings bears.
mille rapit densos acie atque horrentibus hastis.
A thousand men he hurrieth on with bristling of the spears;
hos parere iubent Alpheae ab origine Pisae, Pisa, the town Alpheüs built amid the Tuscan land,
urbs Etrusca solo. sequitur pulcherrimus Astyr, 180

Bids them obey. Came Astur next, goodliest of all the band;
Astyr equo fidens et uersicoloribus armis.
Astur, who trusteth in his horse and shifty-coloured weed;
ter centum adiciunt (mens omnibus una sequendi)
Three hundred hath he, of one heart to wend as he shall lead:
qui Caerete domo, qui sunt Minionis in aruis,
And these are they in Cæres' home and Minios' lea that bide,
et Pyrgi ueteres intempestaeque Grauiscae.
The Pyrgi old, and they that feel Gravisca's heavy tide.
Non ego te, Ligurum ductor fortissime bello, 185
Nor thee, best war-duke, Cinyras, of that Ligurian crew,
transierim, Cunare, et paucis comitate Cupauo,
Leave I unsung: nor thee the more, Cupavo lord of few,
cuius olorinae surgunt de uertice pennae
Up from the cresting of whose helm the feathery swan-wings rise.
(crimen, Amor, uestrum) formaeque insigne paternae.
Love was thy guilt; thy battle-sign was thine own father's guise.
namque ferunt luctu Cycnum Phaethontis amati,
For Cycnus, say they, while for love of Phaëthon he grieves.
populeas inter frondes umbramque sororum 190
And sings beneath his sisters' shade, beneath the poplar-leaves;
dum canit et maestum Musa solatur amorem,
While with the Muse some solace sweet for woeful love he won,
canentem molli pluma duxisse senectam
A hoary eld of feathers soft about him doth he on,
linquentem terras et sidera uoce sequentem.
Leaving the earth and following the stars with tuneful wails;
filius aequalis comitatus classe cateruas
And now his son amid his peers with Tuscan ship-host sails,
ingentem remis Centaurum promouet: ille 195
Driving with oars the Centaur huge, who o'er the waters' face
instat aquae saxumque undis immane minatur
Hangs, threatening ocean with a rock, huge from his lofty place,
arduus, et longa sulcat maria alta carina.
And ever with his length of keel the deep sea furrows o'er.
Ille etiam patriis agmen ciet Ocnus ab oris,
Then he, e'en Ocnus, stirreth up folk from his father's shore,

fatidicae Mantus et Tusci filius amnis,
 Who from the love of Tuscan flood and fate-wise Manto came,
 qui muros matrisque dedit tibi, Mantua, nomen, 200
 And gave, O Mantua, walls to thee, and gave his mother's name:
 Mantua diues auis, sed non genus omnibus unum:
 Mantua, the rich in father-folk, though not one-stemmed her home.
 gens illi triplex, populi sub gente quaterni,
 Three stems are there, from each whereof four peoples forth are
 come,
 ipsa caput populis, Tusco de sanguine uires.
 While she herself, the head of all, from Tuscan blood hath might.
 hinc quoque quingentos in se Mezentius armat,
 Five hundred thence Mezentius arms against himself in fight,
 quos patre Benaco uelatus harundine glauca 205
 Whom Mincius' flood, Benacus' son, veiled in the sedges grey,
 Mincius infesta ducebat in aequora pinu.
 Was leading in the fir of fight across the watery way.
 it grauiss Aulestes centenaque arbore fluctum
 Then heavy-huge Aulestes goes; the oar-wood hundred-fold
 uerberat adsurgens, spumant uada marmore uerso.
 Rises for beating of the flood, as foam the seas uprolled.
 hunc uehit immanis Triton et caerula concha
 Huge Triton ferries him, whose shell the deep blue sea doth fright:
 exterrens freta, cui laterum tenuis hispida nanti 210
 Up from the shaggy naked waist manlike is he to sight
 frons hominem praefert, in pristinis desinit alui,
 As there he swims, but underneath whale-bellied is he grown;
 spumea semifero sub pectore murmurat unda.
 Beneath the half-beast breast of him the foaming waters moan.
 Tot lecti procures ter denis nauibus ibant
 So many chosen dukes of men in thrice ten keels they sail,
 subsidio Troiae et campos salis aere secabant.
 And cut with brass the meads of brine for Troy and its avail.
 Iamque dies caelo concesserat almae curru 215
 And now had day-tide failed the sky, and Phoebe, sweet and fair,
 noctuago Phoebe medium pulsabat Olympum:
 Amid her nightly-straying wain did mid Olympus wear.

Aeneas (neque enim membris dat cura quietem)
 Æneas, who might give his limbs no whit of peacefulness,
 ipse sedens clauumque regit uelisque ministrat.
 Was sitting with the helm in hand, heeding the sail-gear's stress,
 atque illi medio in spatio chorus, ecce, suarum
 When lo a company of friends his midmost course do meet:
 occurrit comitum: nymphae, quas alma Cybebe 220
 The Nymphs to wit, who Cybele, the goddess holy-sweet,
 numen habere maris nymphasque e nauibus esse
 Bade turn from ships to very nymphs, and ocean's godhead have.
 iusserat, innabant pariter fluctusque secabant,
 So evenly they swam the sea, and sundered wave and wave,
 quot prius aeratae steterant ad litora prorae.
 As many as the brazen beaks once by the sea-side lay;
 agnoscunt longe regem lustrantque choreis;
 Afar they know their king, and round in dancing-wise they play;
 quarum quae fandi doctissima Cymodocea 225
 But one of them, Cymodocea, who speech-lore knew the best,
 pone sequens dextra puppim tenet ipsaque dorso
 Drew nigh astern and laid thereon her right hand, with her breast eminent ac laeua tacitis subremigat undis.
 Above the flood, the while her left through quiet waves rowed on,
 tum sic ignarum adloquitur: 'uigilasne, deum gens,
 And thus bespoke him all unware: "Wak'st thou, O Godhead's son!
 Aenea? uigila et uelis immitte rudentis.
 Æneas, wake! and loose the sheets and let all canvas fill!
 nos sumus, Idaeae sacro de uertice pinus, 230
 We were the pine-trees on a time of Ida's holy hill,
 nunc pelagi nymphae, classis tua. perfidus ut nos
 Thy ship-host once, but sea-nymphs now: when that Rutulian lord
 praecipitis ferro Rutulus flammaque premebat,
 Fell faithless, headlong, on our lives with firebrand and the sword,
 rupimus inuitae tua uincula teque per aequor
 Unwillingly we brake our bonds and sought thee o'er the main.
 quaerimus. hanc genetrix faciem miserata refecit
 The Mother in her pity thus hath wrought our shape again,
 et dedit esse deas aeuumque agitare sub undis. 235

And given us gift of godhead's life in house of ocean's ground.
at puer Ascanius muro fossisque tenetur

Lo now, the boy Ascanius by dyke and wall is bound
tela inter media atque horrentis Marte Latinos.

Amid the spears, the battle-wood that Latins forth have sent.
iam loca iussa tenent forti permixtus Etrusco

And now the horse of Arcady, with stout Etruscans blent,
Arcas eques; medias illis opponere turmas,

Holdeth due tryst. Now is the mind of Turnus firmly set
ne castris iungant, certa est sententia Turno. 240

To thrust between them, lest thy camp they succour even yet.
surge age et Aurora socios ueniente uocari

Wherefore arise, and when the dawn first climbs the heavenly shore
primus in arma iube, et clipeum cape quem dedit ipse

Call on thy folk, and take thy shield unconquered evermore,
inuictum ignipotens atque oras ambiit auro.

The Fire-lord's gift, who wrought its lips with circling gold about:
crastina lux, mea si non inrita dicta putaris,

Tomorrow's light, unless thou deem'st my words are all to doubt,
ingentis Rutulae spectabit caedis aceruos.' 245

Shall see Rutulian death in heaps a-lying on the land."
dixerat et dextra discedens impulit altam

Therewith departing, forth she thrust the tall ship with her hand,
haud ignara modi puppim: fugit illa per undas

As one who had good skill therein, and then across the seas
ocior et iaculo et uentos aequante sagitta.

Swifter than dart she fled, or shaft that matcheth well the breeze,
inde aliae celerant cursus. stupet inscius ipse

And straight the others hastened on. All mazed was he of Troy,
Tros Anchisiades, animos tamen omine tollit. 250

Anchises' seed, but yet the sign upraised his heart with joy,
tum breuiter supera aspectans conuexa precatur:

And, looking to the hollow heaven, in few words prayed he thus
'alma parens Idaea deum, cui Dindyma cordi

"Kind Ida-Mother of the Gods, whose heart loves Dindymus
turrigeraeque urbes biuigique ad frena leones,

And towered towns, and lions yoked and tamed to bear the bit,

tu mihi nunc pugnae princeps, tu rite propinques
 Be thou my battle-leader now, and do thou further it,
 augurium Phrygibusque adsis pede, diua, secundo.' 255
 This omen, and with favouring foot the Trojan folk draw nigh."
 tantum effatus, et interea reuoluta ruebat
 But while he spake, Day, come again, had run adown the sky,
 matura iam luce dies noctemque fugarat;
 With light all utter perfect wrought, and driven away the night.
 principio sociis edicit signa sequantur
 Then folk he biddeth follow on the banners of the fight,
 atque animos aptent armis pugnaeque parent se.
 And make them ready for the play and shape their hearts for war.
 Iamque in conspectu Teucros habet et sua castra 260
 But he, aloft upon the poop, now sees them where they are,
 stans celsa in puppi, clipeum cum deinde sinistra
 His leaguered Teucrians, as his left uprears the blazing shield;
 extulit ardentem. clamorem ad sidera tollunt
 And then, the sons of Dardanus up to the starry field
 Dardanidae e muris, spes addita suscitatur iras,
 Send forth the cry, and hope is come to whet their battle-wrath.
 tela manu iaciunt, quales sub nubibus atris
 Thick flies their spear-storm: 'tis as when the Strymon cranes give
 forth
 Strymoniae dant signa grues atque aethera tranant 265
 Their war-sign on the mirky rack, and down the heavens they run
 cum sonitu, fugiuntque Notos clamore secundo.
 Sonorous, fleeing southern breeze with clamour following on.
 at Rutulo regi ducibusque ea mira uideri
 But wondrous to Rutulian king and dukes of Italy
 Ausoniis, donec uersas ad litora puppis
 That seemed, until they look about, and lo, the keels they see
 respiciunt totumque adlabi classibus aequor.
 Turned shoreward; yea, a sea of ships onsetting toward the shore.
 ardet apex capiti cristisque a uertice flamma 270
 Yea, and the helm is all ablaze, beams from the crest outpour,
 funditur et uastos umbo uomit aureus ignis:
 The golden shield-boss wide about a world of flame doth shed.

non secus ac liquida si quando nocte cometae
E'en so, amid the clear of night, the comets bloody-red
sanguinei lugubre rubent, aut Sirius ardor
Blush woeful bright; nor otherwise is Sirius' burning wrought,
ille sitim morbosque ferens mortalibus aegris
When drought and plagues for weary men the birth of him hath
wrought,

nascitur et laeue contristat lumine caelum. 275

And that unhappy light of his hath saddened all the heaven.

Haud tamen audaci Turno fiducia cessit

But nought from Turnus' hardy heart was high hope ever driven
litora praecipere et uenientis pellere terra.

To take the strand of them and thrust those comers from the shore:

[ultro animos tollit dictis atque increpat ultro:]

Eager he chid, hot-heart, with words men's courage he upbore:

'quod uotis optastis adest, perfringere dextra.

"Lo, now your prayers have come about, that hand meet hand in strife,

in manibus Mars ipse uiris. nunc coniugis esto 280

And Mars is in the brave man's hand: let each one's home and wife

quisque suae tectique memor, nunc magna referto

Be in his heart! Call ye to mind those mighty histories,

facta, patrum laudes. ultro occurramus ad undam

The praises of our father-folk! Come, meet them in the seas,

dum trepidi egressisque labant uestigia prima.

Amid their tangle, while their feet yet totter on the earth:

audentis Fortuna iuuat.'

For Fortune helpeth them that dare."

haec ait, et secum uersat quos ducere contra 285

So saying, he turneth in his mind with whom on these to fall,

uel quibus obsessos possit concredere muros.

And unto whom to leave meanwhile the leaguering of the wall.

Interea Aeneas socios de puppibus altis

Meanwhile Æneas from his ships high-built his folk doth speed

pontibus exponit. multi seruare recursus

Ashore by bridges: many men no less the back-draught heed

languentis pelagi et breuibus se credere saltu,

Of the spent seas, and, trusting shoals, they make the downward leap;
per remos alii. speculatus litora Tarchon, 290

And others slide adown the oars. Tarchon the shore doth sweep,
qua uada non sperat nec fracta remurmurat unda,

Espying where the waves break not, nor back the sea doth roar,
sed mare inoffensum crescenti adlabitur aestu,

But where the sea-flood harmlessly with full tide swims ashore,
aduertit subito proras sociosque precatur:

And thither straight he lays his keels, and prays unto his folk:

‘nunc, o lecta manus, ualidis incumbite remis;

“O chosen, on the stark oars lay! now up unto the stroke;

tollite, ferte rates, inimicam findite rostris 295

Bear on the ships, and with your beaks cleave ye this foeman’s earth;
hanc terram, sulcumque sibi premat ipsa carina.

And let the very keels themselves there furrow them their berth.
frangere nec tali puppim statione recuso

On such a haven nought I heed, though ship and all we break,
arrepta tellure semel.’ quae talia postquam

If once we gain the land.” Therewith, as such a word he spake,
effatus Tarchon, socii consurgere tonsis

His fellows rise together hard on every shaven tree,
spumantisque rates aruis inferre Latinis, 300

In mind to bear their ships befoamed up on the Latin lea,
donec rostra tenent siccum et sedere carinae

Until their tyne are high and dry, and fast is every keel
omnes innocuae. sed non puppis tua, Tarchon:

Unhurt: save, Tarchon, thine alone, that winneth no such weal;
namque inflicta uadis, dorso dum pendet iniquo

For on the shallows driven aground, on evil ridge unmeet,
anceps sustentata diu fluctusque fatigat,

She hangeth balanced a long while, and doth the waters beat;
soluitur atque uiros mediis exponit in undis, 305

Then, breaking, droppeth down her men amidmost of the waves,
fragmina remorum quos et fluitantia transtra

Entangled in the wreck of oars, and floating thwarts and staves;
impediunt retrahitque pedes simul unda relabens.

And in the back-draught of the seas their feet are caught withal.

Nec Turnum segnis retinet mora, sed rapit acer
 No dull delay holds Turnus back; but fiercely doth he fall,
 totam aciem in Teucros et contra in litore sistit.
 With all his host, on them of Troy, and meets them on the strand.
 signa canunt. primus turmas inuasit agrestis 310
 The war-horns sing. Æneas first breaks through the field-folk's band, Aeneas, omen pugnae, strauitque Latinos
 — Fair omen of the fight — and lays the Latin folk alow.
 occiso Therone, uirum qui maximus ultro
 Thero he slays, most huge of men, whose own heart bade him go
 Aenean petit. huic gladio perque aerea suta,
 Against Æneas: through the links of brass the sword doth fare,
 per tunicam squalentem auro latus haurit apertum.
 And through the kirtle's scaly gold, and wastes the side laid bare.
 inde Lichan ferit exsectum iam matre perempta 315
 Then Lichas smites he, ripped erewhile from out his mother dead,
 et tibi, Phoebe, sacrum: casus euadere ferri
 And hallowed, Phoebus, unto thee, because his baby head
 quo licuit paruo? nec longe Cissea durum
 Had 'scaped the steel: nor far from thence he casteth down to die
 immanemque Gyan sternentis agmina claua
 Hard Cisseus, Gyas huge, who there beat down his company
 deiecit leto; nihil illos Herculis arma
 With might of clubs; nought then availed that Herculean gear,
 nec ualidae iuuere manus genitorque Melampus, 320
 Nor their stark hands, nor yet their sire Melampus, though he were Alcidae comes usque grauis dum terra labores
 Alcides' friend so long as he on earth wrought heavy toil.
 praebuit. ecce Pharo, uoces dum iactat inertis,
 Lo Pharo! while a deedless word he flingeth mid the broil,
 intorquens iaculum clamanti sistit in ore.
 The whirring of the javelin stays within his shouting mouth.
 tu quoque, flauentem prima lanugine malas
 Thou, Cydon, following lucklessly thy new delight, the youth
 dum sequeris Clytium infelix, noua gaudia, Cydon, 325
 Clytius, whose first of fallow down about his cheeks is spread
 Dardania stratus dextra, securus amorum

Art well-nigh felled by Dardan hand, and there hadst thou lain dead,
qui iuuenum tibi semper erant, miserande iaceres,
At peace from all the many loves wherein thy life would stray,
ni fratrum stipata cohors foret obuia, Phorci
Had not thy brethren's serried band now thrust across the way
progenies, septem numero, septenaque tela
E'en Phorcus' seed: sevenfold of tale and sevenfold spears they wield:

coniciunt; partim galea clipeoque resultant 330

But some thereof fly harmless back from helm-side and from shield,
inrita, deflexit partim stringentia corpus

The rest kind Venus turned aside, that grazing past they flew;
alma Venus. fidum Aeneas adfatur Achaten:

But therewithal Æneas spake unto Achates true:

'suggere tela mihi, non ullum dextera frustra

"Reach me my shafts: not one in vain my right hand now shall speed
torserit in Rutulos, steterunt quae in corpore Graium

Against Rutulians, of all those that erst in Ilian mead

Iliacis campis.' tum magnam corripit hastam 335

Stood in the bodies of the Greeks." Then caught he a great spear
et iacit: illa uolans clipei transuerberat aera

And cast it, and it flew its ways the brazen shield to shear

Maeonis et thoraca simul cum pectore rumpit.

Of Mæon, breaking through his mail, breaking his breast withal:

huic frater subit Alcanor fratremque ruentem

Alcanor is at hand therewith, to catch his brother's fall

sustentat dextra: traiecto missa lacerto

With his right hand; but through his arm the spear without a stay

protinus hasta fugit seruatque cruenta tenorem, 340

Flew hurrying on, and held no less its straight and bloody way,
dexteraque ex umero neruis moribunda pendit.

And by the shoulder-nerves the hand hung down all dead and vain.

tum Numitor iaculo fratris de corpore raptio

Then Numitor, his brother's spear caught from his brother slain,

Aenean petiit: sed non et figere contra

Falls on Æneas; yet to smite the mighty one in face

est licitum, magnique femur perstrinxit Achatae.

No hap he had, but did the thigh of great Achates graze.

Hic Curibus fidens primaevuo corpore Clausus 345

Clausus of Cures, trusting well in his young body's might,

aduenit et rigida Dryopem ferit eminus hasta

Now cometh, and with stiff-wrought spear from far doth Dryops smite

sub mentum grauitur pressa, pariterque loquentis

Beneath the chin; home went its weight, and midst his shouting's birth

uocem animamque rapit traiecto gutture; at ille

From rent throat snatched both voice and life, and prone he smote the ear

fronte ferit terram et crassum uomit ore cruorem.

And from his mouth abundantly shed forth the flood of gore.

tris quoque Threicios Boreae de gente suprema 350

Three Thracians also, men whose stem from Boreas came of yore,

et tris quos Idas pater et patria Ismara mittit,

Three whom their father Idas sent, and Ismara their land,

per uarios sternit casus. accurrit Halaesus

In various wise he fells. And now Halesus comes to hand,

Auruncaeque manus, subit et Neptunia proles,

And his Aruncans: Neptune's seed now cometh thrusting in,

insignis Messapus equis. expellere tendunt

Messapus, excellent of horse. Hard strife the field to win!

nunc hi, nunc illi: certatur limine in ipso 355

On this side and on that they play about Ausonia's door.

Ausoniae. magno discordes aethere uenti

As whiles within the mighty heaven the winds are making war,

proelia ceu tollunt animis et uiribus aequis;

And equal heart they have thereto, and equal might they wield:

non ipsi inter se, non nubila, non mare cedit;

Yields none to none, nor yields the rack, nor aught the waters yield;

anceps pugna diu, stant obnixa omnia contra:

Long hangs the battle; locked they stand, all things are striving then:

haud aliter Troianae acies aciesque Latinae 360

Not otherwise the Trojan host and host of Latin men

concurrunt, haeret pede pes densusque uiro uir.

Meet foot to foot, and man to man, close pressing in the fray.
 At parte ex alia, qua saxa rotantia late
 But in another place, where erst the torrent in its way
 intulerat torrens arbustaque diruta ripis,
 Had driven the rolling rocks along and torn trees of the banks,
 Arcadas insuetos acies inferre pedestris
 Did Pallas see the Arcadian folk, unused to fight in ranks
 ut uidit Pallas Latio dare terga sequaci, 365
 Of footmen, turn their backs before the Latins in the chase,
 aspera aquis natura loci dimittere quando
 Since they forsooth had left their steeds for roughness of the place:
 suasit equos, unum quod rebus restat egenis,
 Wherefore he did the only deed that failing Fortune would,
 nunc prece, nunc dictis uirtutem accendit amaris;
 Striving with prayers and bitter words to make their valour good:
 ‘quo fugitis, socii? per uos et fortia facta,
 “Where flee ye, fellows? Ah, I pray, by deeds that once were bold,
 per ducis Euandri nomen deuictaque bella 370
 By name of King Evander dear, by glorious wars of old,
 spemque meam, patriae quae nunc subit aemula laudi,
 By my own hope of praise that springs to mate my father’s praise,
 fidite ne pedibus. ferro rumpenda per hostis
 Trust not your feet! with point and edge ye needs must cleave your ways
 est uia. qua globus ille uirum densissimus urget,
 Amidst the foe. Where yon array of men doth thickest wend,
 hac uos et Pallanta ducem patria alta reposcit.
 Thither our holy fatherland doth you and Pallas send:
 numina nulla premunt, mortali urgemur ab hoste 375
 No Gods weigh on us; mortal foes meet mortal men today;
 mortales; totidem nobis animaeque manusque.
 As many hands we have to use, as many lives to pay.
 ecce maris magna claudit nos obice pontus,
 Lo, how the ocean shuts us in with yonder watery wall!
 deest iam terra fugae: pelagus Troiamne petamus?’
 Earth fails for flight — what! seaward then, or Troyward shall we
 fall?”

haec ait, et medius densos prorumpit in hostis.
 Thus said, forthwith he breaketh in amid the foeman's press,
 Obuius huic primum fatis adductus iniquis 380
 Whom Lagus met the first of all, by Fate's unrighteousness
 fit Lagus. hunc, uellit magno dum pondere saxum,
 Drawn thitherward: him, while a stone huge weighted he upheaves,
 intorto figit telo, discrimina costis
 He pierceth with a whirling shaft just where the backbone cleaves
 per medium qua spina dabat, hastamque receptat
 The ribs atwain, and back again he wrencheth forth the spear
 ossibus haerentem. quem non super occupat Hisbo,
 Set mid the bones: nor him the more did Hisbo take unware,
 ille quidem hoc sperans; nam Pallas ante ruentem, 385
 Though that he hoped; for Pallas next withstood him, rushing on
 dum furit, incautum crudeli morte sodalis
 All heedless-wild at that ill death his fellow fair had won,
 excipit atque ensem tumido in pulmone recondit.
 And buried all his sword deep down amid his wind-swelled lung.
 hinc Sthenium petit et Rhoeti de gente uetusta
 Then Sthenelus he meets, and one from ancient Rhoetus sprung, Anchemolum thalamos ausum incestare nouercae.
 Anchemolus, who dared defile his own stepmother's bed.
 uos etiam, gemini, Rutulis cecidistis in aruis, 390
 Ye also on Rutulian lea twin Daucus' sons lay dead,
 Daucia, Laride Thymerque, simillima proles,
 Larides, Thymer; so alike, O children, that by nought
 indiscreta suis gratusque parentibus error;
 Your parents knew you each from each, and sweet the error thought.
 at nunc dura dedit uobis discrimina Pallas.
 But now to each did Pallas give a cruel marking-sign;
 nam tibi, Thymbre, caput Euandrius abstulit ensis;
 For, Thymer, the Evandrian sword smote off that head of thine:
 te decisa suum, Laride, dextera quaerit 395
 And thy lopped right, Larides, seeks for that which was its lord,
 semianimesque micant digiti ferrumque retractant.
 The half-dead fingers quiver still and grip unto the sword.
 Arcadas accensos monitu et praeclara tuentis

But now the Arcadians cheered by words, beholding his great deed,
facta uiri mixtus dolor et pudor armat in hostis.

The mingled shame and sorrow arm and 'gainst the foeman lead.

Tum Pallas biiugis fugientem Rhoetea praeter

Then Pallas thrusteth Rhoeteus through a-flitting by in wain;

traicit. hoc spatium tantumque morae fuit Ilo; 400

And so much space, so much delay, thereby did Ilus gain,

Ilo namque procul ualidam derexerat hastam,

For 'twas at Ilus from afar that he his spear had cast

quam medius Rhoeteus intercipit, optime Teuthra,

But Rhoeteus met it on the road fleeing from you full fast,

te fugiens fratremque Tyren, curruque uolutus

Best brethren, Teuthras, Tyres there: down from the car rolled he,

caedit semianimis Rutulorum calcibus arua.

And with the half-dead heel of him beat the Rutulian lea.

ac uelut optato uentis aestate coortis 405

As when amidst the summer-tide he gains the wished-for breeze,

dispersa immittit siluis incendia pastor,

The shepherd sets the sparkled flame amid the thicket trees,

correptis subito mediis extenditur una

The wood's heart catches suddenly, the flames spread into one,

horrida per latos acies Volcania campos,

And fearful o'er the meadows wide doth Vulcan's army run,

ille sedens uictor flammas despectat ouantis:

While o'er the flames the victor sits and on their joy looks down.

non aliter socium uirtus coit omnis in unum 410

No less the valour of thy folk unto a head was grown

teque iuuat, Palla. sed bellis acer Halaesus

To help thee, Pallas: but behold, Halesus, fierce in field,

tendit in aduersos seque in sua colligit arma.

Turns on the foe, and gathers him 'neath cover of his shield.

hic mactat Ladona Pheretaque Demodocumque,

Ladon, Pheres, Demodocus, all these he slaughtered there;

Strymonio dextram fulgenti deripit ense

With gleaming sword he lopped the hand Strymonius did uprear

elatam in iugulum, saxo ferit ora Thoantis 415

Against his throat: in Thoas' face withal a stone he sent,

ossaque dispersit cerebro permixta cruento.

And drave apart the riven bones with blood and brains all blent
fata canens siluis genitor celarat Halaesum;

Halesus' sire, the wise of Fate, in woods had hidden him;
ut senior leto canentia lumina soluit,

But when that elder's whitening eyes at last in death did swim,
iniecere manum Parcae telisque sacrarunt

Fate took Halesus, hallowing him to King Evander's blade:

Euandri. quem sic Pallas petit ante precatus: 420

For Pallas aimeth at him now, when such wise he had prayed:

'da nunc, Thybri pater, ferro, quod missile libro,

"O Father Tiber, grant this spear, that herewithal I shake,
fortunam atque uiam duri per pectus Halaesi.

Through hard Halesus' breast forthwith a happy way may take;
haec arma exuiuasque uiri tua quercus habebit.'

So shall thine oak-tree have the arms, the warrior's battle-spoil."

audiit illa deus; dum textit Imaona Halaesus,

The God heard: while Halesus shields Imaon in the broil,

Arcadio infelix telo dat pectus inermum. 425

To that Arcadian shaft he gives his luckless body bared.

At non caede uiri tanta perterrita Lausus,

But nought would Lausus, lord of war, let all his host be scared,

pars ingens belli, sinit agmina: primus Abantem

E'en at the death of such a man: first Abas doth he slay,

oppositum interimit, pugnae nodumque moramque.

Who faces him, the very knot and holdfast of the play.

sternitur Arcadiae proles, sternuntur Etrusci

Then fall Arcadia's sons to field; felled is Etruria's host,

et uos, o Graiis imperdita corpora, Teucri. 430

And ye, O Teucrian bodies, erst by Grecian death unlost.

agmina concurrunt ducibusque et uiribus aequis;

Then meet the hosts with lords well-matched and equal battle-might;

extremi addensent acies nec turba moueri

The outskirts of the battle close, nor 'mid the press of fight

tela manusque sinit. hinc Pallas instat et urget,

May hand or spear move: busy now is Pallas on this side,

hinc contra Lausus, nec multum discrepat aetas,

Lausus on that; nor is the space between their ages wide,
egregii forma, sed quis Fortuna negarat 435

Those noble bodies: and both they were clean forbid of Fate
in patriam reditus. ipsos concurrere passus

Return unto their lands: but he who rules Olympus great
haud tamen inter se magni regnator Olympi;

Would nowise suffer them to meet themselves to end the play,
mox illos sua fata manent maiore sub hoste.

The doom of each from mightier foe abideth each today.

Interea soror alma monet succedere Lauso

But Turnus' sister warneth him to succour Lausus' war,

Turnum, qui uolucris curru medium secat agmen. 440

The gracious Goddess: straight he cleaves the battle in his car,
ut uidit socios: 'tempus desistere pugnae;

And when he sees his folk, cries out: "'Tis time to leave the fight!
solus ego in Pallanta feror, soli mihi Pallas

Lone against Pallas do I fare, Pallas is mine of right;
debetur; cuperem ipse parens spectator adesset.'

I would his sire himself were here to look upon the field."

haec ait, et socii cesserunt aequore iusso.

He spake, and from the space forbid his fellow-folk did yield,
at Rutulum abscessu iuuenis tum iussa superba 445

But when the Rutuli were gone, at such a word of pride
miratus stupet in Turno corpusque per ingens

Amazed, the youth on Turnus stares, and lets his gaze go wide
lumina uoluit obitque truci procul omnia uisu,

O'er the huge frame, and from afar with stern eyes meets it all,
talibus et dictis it contra dicta tyranni:

And 'gainst the words the tyrant spake such words from him there
fall:

'aut spoliis ego iam raptis laudabor opimis

"Now shall I win me praise of men for spoiling of a King,
aut leto insigni: sorti pater aequus utrique est. 450

Or for a glorious death: my sire may outface either thing:
tolle minas.' fatus medium procedit in aequor;

Forbear thy threats." He spake, and straight amid the war-field drew;
frigidus Arcadibus coit in praecordia sanguis.

But cold in that Arcadian folk therewith the heart-blood grew;
desiluit Turnus biiugis, pedes apparat ire
While Turnus from his war-wain leapt to go afoot to fight:
comminus; utque leo, specula cum uidit ab alta
And as a lion sees afar from off his watch burg's height
stare procul campis meditantem in proelia taurum, 455
A bull at gaze amid the mead with battle in his thought,
aduolat, haud alia est Turni uenientis imago.
And flies thereto, so was the shape of coming Turnus wrought.
hunc ubi contiguum missae fore credidit hastae,
But now, when Pallas deemed him come within the cast of spear,
ire prior Pallas, si qua fors adiuuet ausum
He would be first, if Fate perchance should help him swift to dare,
uiribus imparibus, magnumque ita ad aethera fatur:
And his less might, and thus he speaks unto the boundless sky:
'per patris hospitium et mensas, quas aduena adisti, 460
"Now by my father's guesting-tide and board thou drew'st anigh,
te precor, Alcide, coeptis ingentibus adsis.
A stranger, O Alcides, help this great deed I begin!
cernat semineci sibi me rapere arma cruenta
His bloody gear from limbs half-dead let Turnus see me win;
uictoremque ferant morientia lumina Turni.'
And on the dying eyes of him be victor's image pressed."
audiit Alcides iuuenem magnumque sub imo
Alcides heard the youth, and 'neath the inmost of his breast
corde premit gemitum lacrimasque effundit inanis. 465
He thrust aback a heavy groan, and empty tears he shed:
tum genitor natum dictis adfatur amicis:
But to his son in kindly wise such words the Father said:
'stat sua cuique dies, breue et irreparabile tempus
"His own day bideth every man; short space that none may mend
omnibus est uitae; sed famam extendere factis,
Is each man's life: but yet by deeds wide-spreading fame to send,
hoc uirtutis opus. Troiae sub moenibus altis
Man's valour hath this work to do: 'neath Troy's high-builed wall
tot gnati cecidere deum, quin occidit una 470
How many sons of God there died: yea there he died withal,

Sarpedon, mea progenies; etiam sua Turnum
 Sarpedon my own progeny. Yea too and Turnus' Fates fata uocant metasque dati peruenit ad aeuī.
 Are calling him: he draweth nigh his life's departing-gates."
 sic ait, atque oculos Rutulorum reicit aruis.
 He spake and turned his eyes away from fields of Rutuli:
 At Pallas magnis emittit uiribus hastam
 But Pallas with great gathered strength the spear from him let fly, uaginae caua fulgentem deripit ensem. 475
 And drew therewith from hollow sheath his sword all eager-bright.
 illa uolans umeri surgunt qua tegmina summa
 The spear flew gleaming where the arms rise o'er the shoulder's
 height,
 incidit, atque uiam clipei molita per oras
 Smote home, and won its way at last through the shield's outer rim,
 tandem etiam magno strinxit de corpore Turni.
 And Turnus' mighty body reached and grazed the flesh of him.
 hic Turnus ferro praefixum robur acuto
 Long Turnus shook the oak that bore the bitter iron head,
 in Pallanta diu librans iacit atque ita fatur: 480
 Then cast at Pallas, and withal a word he cast and said:
 'aspice num mage sit nostrum penetrabile telum.'
 "Let see now if this shaft of mine may better win a pass!"
 dixerat; at clipeum, tot ferri terga, tot aeris,
 He spake; for all its iron skin and all its plates of brass,
 quem pellis totiens obeat circumdata tauri,
 For all the swathing of bull-hides that round about it went,
 uibranti cuspis medium transuerberat ictu
 The quivering spear smote through the shield and through its midmost rent
 loricaeque moras et pectus perforat ingens. 485
 And through the mailcoat's staying fence the mighty breast did gain.
 ille rapit calidum frustra de uulnere telum:
 Then at the spear his heart-blood warmed did Pallas clutch in vain;
 una eademque uia sanguis animusque sequuntur.
 By one way and the same his blood and life, away they fare;
 corruit in uulnus (sonitum super arma dedere)

But down upon the wound he rolled, and o'er him clashed his gear,
et terram hostilem moriens petit ore cruento.

And dying there his bloody mouth sought out the foeman's sod:
quem Turnus super adsistens: 490

Whom Turnus overstrides and says:

'Arcades, haec' inquit 'memores mea dicta referte

"Hearken Arcadians, bear ye back Evander words well learned:

Euandro: qualem meruit, Pallanta remitto.

Pallas I send him back again, dealt with as he hath earned,

quisquis honos tumuli, quidquid solamen humandi est,

If there be honour in a tomb, or solace in the earth,

largior. haud illi stabunt Aeneia paruo

I grudge it not — Ænean guests shall cost him things of worth."

hospitia.' et laeuo pressit pede talia fatus 495

So spake he, and his left foot then he set upon the dead,

exanimem rapiens immania pondera baltei

And tore the girdle thence away full heavy fashionèd,

impressumque nefas: una sub nocte iugali

And wrought with picture of a guilt; that youthful company

caesa manus iuuenum foede thalamique cruenti,

Slain foully on one wedding-night: bloody the bride-beds lie.

quae Clonus Eurytides multo caelauerat auro;

This Clonus son of Eurytus had wrought in plenteous gold,

quo nunc Turnus ouat spolio gaudetque potitus. 500

Now Turnus wears it triumphing, merry such spoil to hold. —

nescia mens hominum fati sortisque futurae

— O heart of man, unlearned in Fate and what the days may hide,

et seruare modum rebus sublata secundis!

Unlearned to be of measure still when swelled with happy tide!

Turno tempus erit magno cum optauerit emptum

The time shall come when Turnus wealth abundantly would pay

intactum Pallanta, et cum spolia ista diemque

For Pallas whole, when he shall loathe that spoil, that conquering day.

oderit. at socii multo gemitu lacrimisque 505

But Pallas' folk with plenteous groans and tears about him throng,

impositum scuto referunt Pallanta frequentes.

And laid upon his battle-shield they bear the dead along.
 o dolor atque decus magnum rediture parenti,
 O thou, returning to thy sire, great grief and glory great,
 haec te prima dies bello dedit, haec eadem aufert,
 Whom one same day gave unto war and swept away to fate,
 cum tamen ingentis Rutulorum linquis acervos!
 Huge heaps of death Rutulian thou leav'st the meadow still.
 Nec iam fama mali tanti, sed certior auctor 510
 And now no rumour, but sure word of such a mighty ill
 aduolat Aeneae tenui discrimine leti
 Flies to Æneas, how his folk within the deathgrip lie,
 esse suos, tempus uersis succurrere Teucris.
 And how time pressed that he should aid the Teucrians turned to fly.
 proxima quaeque metit gladio latumque per agmen
 So all things near with sword he reaps, and wide he drives the road
 ardens limitem agit ferro, te, Turne, superbum
 Amid the foe with fiery steel, seeking thee, Turnus proud,
 caede noua quaerens. Pallas, Euander, in ipsis 515
 Through death new wrought; and Pallas now, Evander, all things
 there
 omnia sunt oculis, mensae quas aduena primas
 Live in his eyes: the boards whereto that day he first drew near,
 tunc adiit, dextraeque datae. Sulmone creatos
 A stranger, and those plighted hands. Four youths of Sulmo wrought, quattuor hic iuuenes, totidem quos educat Vfens,
 And the like tale that Ufens erst into the world's life brought,
 uiuentis rapit, inferias quos immolet umbris
 He takes alive to slay them — gifts for that great ghost's avail,
 captiuoque rogi perfundat sanguine flammis. 520
 And with a shower of captive blood to slake the dead men's bale.
 inde Mago procul infensam contenderat hastam:
 Then next at Magus from afar the shaft of bane he sent;
 ille astu subit, at tremibunda superuolat hasta,
 Deftly he cowered, and on above the quivering weapon went,
 et genua amplectens effatur talia supplex:
 And clasping both Æneas' knees thus spake the suppliant one:
 'per patrios manis et spes surgentis Iuli

“O by thy father’s ghost, by hope Iulus hath begun,
 te precor, hanc animam serues gnatoque patrique. 525
 I pray thee for my sire and son my life yet let me win:
 est domus alta, iacent penitus defossa talenta
 I have a high house, silver wrought is dug adown therein,
 caelati argenti, sunt auri pondera facti
 A talent’s weight, and store therewith of wrought and unwrought
 gold:
 infectique mihi. non hic uictoria Teucrum
 This will not snatch the victory from out the Teucrian’s hold,
 uertitur aut anima una dabit discrimina tanta.’
 Nor can the life of one alone such mighty matter make.”
 dixerat. Aeneas contra cui talia reddit: 530
 So he, but answering thereunto this word Æneas spake:
 ‘argenti atque auri memoras quae multa talenta
 “Thy gold and silver talent’s weight, whereof thou tell’st such store,
 gnatis parce tuis. belli commercia Turnus
 Spare for thy sons! thy Turnus slew such chaffering of war
 sustulit ista prior iam tum Pallante perempto.
 When Pallas’ death he brought about a little while ago;
 hoc patris Anchisae manes, hoc sentit Iulus.’
 So deems my sire Anchises’ ghost, Iulus deemeth so.”
 sic fatus galeam laeua tenet atque reflexa 535
 Then with his left he caught the helm and hilt-deep thrust the blade
 ceruice orantis capulo tenuis applicat ensem.
 Into the back-bent throat of him e’en as the prayer he prayed.
 nec procul Haemonides, Phoebi Triuiaequae sacerdos,
 Not far hence was Hæmonides, Phoebus’ and Trivia’s priest,
 infula cui sacra redimibat tempora uitta,
 The holy fillets on his brow, his glory well increased
 totus conlucens ueste atque insignibus albis.
 With glorious arms, and glittering gear shining on every limb.
 quem congressus agit campo, lapsumque superstans 540
 Him the King chaseth o’er the field, and, standing over him,
 immolat ingentique umbra tegit, arma Serestus
 Hides him in mighty dusk of death; whose gleanèd battle-gear,
 lecta refert umeris tibi, rex Gradiue, tropaeum.

A gift to thee, O battle-god, back doth Serestus bear.
 Instaurant acies Volcani stirpe creatus
 Then Cæculus of Vulcan's stem the hedge of battle fills,
 Caeculus et ueniens Marsorum montibus Vmbro.
 And Umbro cometh unto fight down from the Marsian hills.
 Dardanides contra furit: Anxuris ense sinistram 545
 On them his rage the Dardan child let slip. But next his blade
 et totum clipei ferro deiecerat orbem
 Anxur's left hand and orbèd shield upon the meadow laid.
 (dixerat ille aliquid magnum uimque adfore uerbo
 Proud things had Anxur said, and deemed his word was matched by
 might,
 crediderat, caeloque animum fortasse ferebat
 And so perchance he raised his soul up to the heavenly height,
 canitiemque sibi et longos promiserat annos);
 And hoary eld he looked to see, and many a peaceful year.
 Tarquitus exsultans contra fulgentibus armis, 550
 Tarquitiu's, proud of heart and soul, in glittering battle-gear,
 siluicolae Fauno Dryope quem nympa crearat,
 Whom the nymph Dryope of yore to woodland Faunus gave,
 obuius ardenti sese obtulit. ille reducta
 Came thrusting thwart his fiery way; his back-drawn spear he drave,
 loricam clipeique ingens onus impedit hasta,
 Pinning his mail-coat unto him, and mighty mass of shield:
 tum caput orantis nequiquam et multa parantis
 His vainly-praying head, that strove with words, upon the field
 dicere deturbat terrae, truncumque tepentem 555
 He swept therewith, and rolling o'er his carcase warm with death,
 prouoluens super haec inimico pectore fatur:
 Above him from the heart of hate such words as this he saith:
 'istic nunc, metuende, iace. non te optima mater
 "Lie there, fear-giver! no more now thy mother most of worth
 condet humi patrioque onerabit membra sepulcro:
 Shall load thee with thy father's tomb, or lay thee in the earth:
 alitibus linquere feris, aut gurgite mersum
 Thou shalt be left to birds of prey, or deep adown the flood
 unda feret piscesque impasti uulnera lambent.' 560

The waves shall bear thee, and thy wounds be hungry fishes' food."
 protinus Antaeum et Lucam, prima agmina Turni,
 Next Lucas and Antæus stout, foremost of Turnus' men,
 persequitur, fortemque Numam fuluumque Camertem,
 He chaseth: Numa staunch of heart and yellow Camers then;
 magnanimo Volcente satum, ditissimus agri
 A man from high-souled Volscens sprung, field-wealthiest one of all
 qui fuit Ausonidum et tacitis regnauit Amyclis.
 Ausonian men, and lord within the hushed Amyclæ's wall.
 Aegæon qualis, centum cui bracchia dicunt 565
 E'en as Ægæon, who they say had arms an hundred-fold,
 centenasque manus, quinquaginta oribus ignem
 And hundred hands, from fifty mouths and maws the wildfire rolled,
 pectoribusque arsisse, Iouis cum fulmina contra
 What time in arms against the bolts from Jove of Heaven that flew
 tot paribus streperet clipeis, tot stringeret ensis:
 He clashed upon the fifty shields and fifty sword-points drew:
 sic toto Aeneas desaeuit in aequore uictor
 So conquering, over all the mead Æneas' fury burns
 ut semel intepuit mucro. quin ecce Niphaei 570
 When once his sword is warm with death: and now, behold, he turns
 quadriiugis in equos aduersaque pectora tendit.
 Upon Niphæus' four-yoked steeds, and breasts their very breath.
 atque illi longe gradientem et dira frementem
 But when they see him striding far, and threatening doom and death,
 ut uidere, metu uersi retroque ruentes
 In utter dread they turn about, and rushing back again,
 effunduntque ducem rapiuntque ad litora currus.
 They shed their master on the earth and shoreward drag the wain.
 Interea biiugis infert se Lucagus albis 575
 Meanwhile with twi-yoked horses white fares Lucagus midst men,
 in medios fraterque Liger; sed frater habenis
 His brother Liger by his side, who holdeth rein as then,
 flectit equos, strictum rotat acer Lucagus ensem.
 And turneth steed, while Lucagus the drawn sword whirlleth wide.
 haud tulit Aeneas tanto feruore furentis;
 Them and their war-rage in no wise Æneas might abide,

inruit aduersaque ingens apparuit hasta.

But on he rushes, showing huge with upheaved threatening shaft.

cui Liger: 580

Then Liger cast a word at him:

‘non Diomedis equos nec currum cernis Achilli

“No steeds of Diomede thou seest, and no Achilles’ car

aut Phrygiae campos: nunc belli finis et aevi

Or Phrygian fields: this hour shall end thy life-days and the war

his dabitur terris.’ uesano talia late

Here on this earth.” Such words as these from witless Liger stray,

dicta uolant Ligeri. sed non et Troius heros

But nought in bandying of words the man of Troy would play;

dicta parat contra, iaculum nam torquet in hostis. 585

Rather his mighty battle-shaft he hurled against the foe,

Lucagus ut pronus pendens in uerbera telo

While Lucagus his horses drives with spear-butt, bending low

admonuit biiugos, proiecto dum pede laeue

Over the lash, and setteth forth his left foot for the fight.

aptat se pugnae, subit oras hasta per imas

Beneath the bright shield’s nether rim the spear-shaft takes its flight,

fulgentis clipei, tum laeuum perforat inguen;

Piercing his groin upon the left: then shaken from his wain,

excussus curru moribundus uoluitur aruis. 590

He tumbleth down and rolleth o’er in death upon the plain.

quem pius Aeneas dictis adfatur amaris:

To whom a fierce and bitter word godly Æneas said:

‘Lucage, nulla tuos currus fuga segnis equorum

“Ho, Lucagus! no dastard flight of steeds thy car betrayed,

prodidit aut uanae uertere ex hostibus umbrae:

No empty shadow turned them back from facing of the foe,

ipse rotis saliens iuga deseris.’ haec ita fatus

But thou thyself hast leapt from wheel and let the yoke-beasts go.”

arripuit biiugos; frater tendebat inertis 595

He spake, and caught the reins withal; slipped down that wretched one

infelix palmas curru delapsus eodem:

His brother, and stretched forth the hands that little deed had done:

'per te, per qui te talem genuere parentes,
 "By thee, by those that brought thee forth so glorious unto day,
 uir Troiane, sine hanc animam et miserere precantis.'
 O Trojan hero, spare my life, and pity me that pray!"
 pluribus oranti Aeneas: 'haud talia dudum Æneas cut athwart his speech: "Not so erewhile ye spake.
 dicta dabas. morere et fratrem ne desere frater.' 600
 Die! ill it were for brother thus a brother to forsake."
 tum latebras animae pectus mucrone recludit.
 And in his breast the sword he drave home to the house of breath.
 talia per campos edebat funera ductor
 Thus through the meads the Dardan Duke set forth the tale of death,
 Dardanius torrentis aquae uel turbinis atri
 With rage as of the rushing flood, or whirl-storm of the wind.
 more furens. tandem erumpunt et castra relinquant
 At last they break forth into field and leave their camp behind,
 Ascanius puer et nequiquam obsessa iuuentus. 605
 Ascanius and the lads of war in vain beleaguereð.
 Iunonem interea compellat Iuppiter ultro:
 Meanwhile to Juno Jupiter set forth the speech and said:
 'o germana mihi atque eadem gratissima coniunx,
 "O thou who art my sister dear and sweetest wife in one,
 ut rebare, Venus (nec te sententia fallit)
 'Tis Venus as thou deemedst, (nought thy counsel is undone),
 Troianas sustentat opes, non uiuida bello
 Who upholds Trojan might forsooth: they lack fight-eager hand,
 dextra uiris animusque ferox patiensque pericli.' 610
 They lack fierce heart and steady soul the peril to withstand!"
 cui Iuno summissa: 'quid, o pulcherrime coniunx,
 To whom spake Juno, meek of mood: "And why, O fairest lord,
 sollicitas aegram et tua tristia dicta timentem?
 Dost thou so vex me sad at heart, fearing thy heavy word?
 si mihi, quae quondam fuerat quamque esse decebat,
 But in my soul were love as strong as once it used to be,
 uis in amore foret, non hoc mihi namque negares,
 And should be, thou though all of might wouldst ne'er deny it me,
 omnipotens, quin et pugnae subducere Turnum 615

That Turnus I should draw away from out the midst of fight,
 et Dauno possem incolumem seruare parenti.
 That I might keep him safe to bless his father Daunus' sight.
 nunc pereat Teucrisque pio det sanguine poenas.
 Now let him die, let hallowed blood the Teucrian hate atone:
 ille tamen nostra deducit origine nomen
 And yet indeed his name and race from blood of ours hath grown;
 Pilumnusque illi quartus pater, et tua larga
 He from Pilumnus is put forth: yea, good gifts furthermore
 saepe manu multisque oneravit limina donis.' 620
 His open hand full oft hath piled within thine holy door."
 cui rex aetherii breuiter sic fatur Olympi:
 To whom air-high Olympus' king short-worded answer made:
 'si mora praesentis leti tempusque caduco
 "If for the youth who soon must fall respite of death is prayed,
 oratur iuueni meque hoc ita ponere sentis,
 And tarrying-time, nor aught thou deem'st but that my doom must stand,
 tolle fuga Turnum atque instantibus eripe fati:
 Then carry Turnus off by flight, snatch him from fate at hand.
 hactenus indulsisse uacat. sin altior istis 625
 So far thy longing may I please: but if a greater grace
 sub precibus uenia ulla latet totumque moueri
 Lurk 'neath thy prayers, and thou hast hope to change the battle's face,
 mutariue putas bellum, spes pascis inanis.'
 And turmoil everything once more, thou feedest hope in vain."
 et Iuno adlacrimans: 'quid si, quae uoce grauaris,
 Then Juno weeping: "Ah, but if thy heart should give the gain
 mente dares atque haec Turno rata uita maneret?
 Thy voice begrudgeth! if 'twere doomed that he in life abide —
 nunc manet insontem grauis exitus, aut ego ueri 630
 But ill-end dogs the sackless man, unless I wander wide
 uana feror. quod ut o potius formidine falsa
 Away from sooth — Ah, yet may I be mocked of fear-wrought lies,
 ludar, et in melius tua, qui potes, orsa reflectas!'
 And may thy rede as thou hast might be turned to better wise."

Haec ubi dicta dedit, caelo se protinus alto
 She spake the word and cast herself adown from heaven the high,
 misit agens hiemem nimbo succincta per auras,
 Girt round with rain-cloud, driving on a storm amid the sky,
 Ilicamque aciem et Laurentia castra petiuit. 635
 And that Laurentian leaguer sought and Ilium's hedge of fight.
 tum dea nube caua tenuem sine uiribus umbram
 And there she fashioned of the cloud a shadow lacking might:
 in faciem Aeneae (uisu mirabile monstrum)
 With image of Æneas' shape the wondrous show is drest,
 Dardaniis ornat telis, clipeumque iubasque
 She decks it with the Dardan spear and shield, and mocks the crest
 diuini adsimulat capitis, dat inania uerba,
 Of that all-godlike head, and gives a speech that empty flows,
 dat sine mente sonum gressusque effingit euntis, 640
 Sound without soul, and counterfeits the gait wherewith he goes, —
 morte obita qualis fama est uolitare figuras
 As dead men's images they say about the air will sweep,
 aut quae sopitos deludunt somnia sensus.
 Or as the senses weary-drenched are mocked with dreams of sleep.
 at primas laeta ante acies exsultat imago
 But in the forefront of the fight war-merry goes the thing,
 inritatque uirum telis et uoce laccessit.
 And cries the warrior on with words and weapons brandishing:
 instat cui Turnus stridentemque eminus hastam 645
 On whom falls Turnus, and afar hurleth his whizzing spear:
 conicit; illa dato uertit uestigia tergo.
 Then turns the phantom back about and fleeth as in fear.
 tum uero Aenean auersum ut cedere Turnus
 Then verily when Turnus deemed he saw Æneas fled.
 credidit atque animo spem turbidus hausit inanem:
 With all the emptiness of hope his headlong heart he fed:
 'quo fugis, Aenea? thalamos ne desere pactos;
 "Where fleest thou, Æneas, then? why leave thy plighted bride?
 hac dabitur dextra tellus quaesita per undas.' 650
 This hand shall give thee earth thou sought'st so far across the tide."
 talia uociferans sequitur strictumque coruscat

So cries he following, brandishing his naked sword on high,
 mucronem, nec ferre uidet sua gaudia uentos.
 Nor sees what wise adown the wind his battle-bliss goes by.
 Forte ratis celsi coniuncta crepidine saxi
 By hap a ship was moored anear unto a ledgy stone,
 expositis stabat scalis et ponte parato,
 With ladders out and landing-bridge all ready to let down,
 qua rex Clusinis aduectus Osinius oris. 655
 That late the King Orsinus bore from Clusium o'er the sea;
 huc sese trepida Aeneae fugientis imago
 And thereinto the hurrying lie, Æneas' shape, did flee,
 conicit in latebras, nec Turnus segnior instat
 And down its lurking-places dived: but Turnus none the more
 exsuperatque moras et pontis transilit altos.
 Hangs back, but beating down delay swift runs the high bridge o'er.
 uix proram attigerat, rumpit Saturnia funem
 Scarce on the prow, ere Juno brake the mooring-rope atwain,
 auulsamque rapit reuoluta per aequora nauem. 660
 And rapt the sundered ship away o'er back-draught of the main.
 tum leuis haud ultra latebras iam quaerit imago, 663
 And there afar from fight is he on whom Æneas cries,
 sed sublime uolans nubi se immiscuit atrae,
 Still sending down to death's abode an host of enemies;
 illum autem Aeneas absentem in proelia poscit; 661
 Nor any more the image then will seek his shape to shroud,
 obuia multa uirum demittit corpora morti,
 But flying upward blendeth him amid the mirky cloud.
 cum Turnum medio interea fert aequore turbo. 665
 Meanwhile, as midmost of the sea the flood bore Turnus on,
 respicit ignarus rerum ingratusque salutis
 Blind to the deed that was in hand, thankless for safety won,
 et duplicis cum uoce manus ad sidera tendit:
 He looketh round, and hands and voice starward he reacheth forth:
 'omnipotens genitor, tanton me crimine dignum
 "Almighty Father, deemedst thou my guilt so much of worth?
 duxisti et talis uoluisti expendere poenas?
 And wouldst thou have me welter through such woeful tide of pain?

quo feror? unde abii? quae me fuga quemue reducit? 670
Whence? whither? why this flight? what man shall I come back again?

Laurentisne iterum muros aut castra uidebo?

Ah, shall I see Laurentum's walls, or see my camp once more?

quid manus illa uirum, qui me meaque arma secuti?

What shall betide the fellowship that followed me to war,

quosque (nefas) omnis infanda in morte reliqui

Whom I have left? O misery to die the death alone!

et nunc palantis uideo, gemitumque cadentum

I see them scattered even now, I hear the dying groan.

accipio? quid ago? aut quae iam satis ima dehiscat 675

What do I? what abyss of earth is deep enough to hide

terra mihi? uos o potius miserescite, uenti;

The wretched man? But ye, O winds, be merciful this tide,

in rupes, in saxa (uolens uos Turnus adoro)

On rocks, on stones — I, Turnus, thus adore you with good will —

ferte ratem saeuisque uadis immittite syrtis,

Drive ye the ship, or cast it up on Syrtes' shoals of ill,

quo nec me Rutuli nec conscia fama sequatur.'

Where Rutuli and tell-tale Fame shall never find me out!"

haec memorans animo nunc huc, nunc fluctuat illuc, 680

Hither and thither as he spake his spirit swam in doubt,

an sese mucrone ob tantum dedecus amens

Shall he now fall upon the point, whom shame hath witless made,

induat et crudum per costas exigit ensem,

Amid most of his very ribs driving the bitter blade;

fluctibus an iaciat mediis et litora nando

Or casting him amid the waves swim for the hollow strand,

curua petat Teucrumque iterum se reddat in arma.

And give his body back again to sworded Teucrian band?

ter conatus utramque uiam, ter maxima Iuno 685

Thrice either deed he fell to do, and thrice for very ruth

continuit iuuenemque animi miserata repressit.

The mightiest Juno stayed his hand and held aback his youth.

labitur alta secans fluctuque aestuque secundo

So 'neath a fair and following wind he glideth o'er the sea,

et patris antiquam Dauni defertur ad urbem.
 And to his father's ancient walls is ferried presently.
 At Iouis interea monitis Mezentius ardens
 Meanwhile, by Jupiter's command, Mezentius props the fight,
 succedit pugnae Teucrosque inuadit ouantis. 690
 And all ablaze he falleth on the gladdened Teucrian might:
 concurrunt Tyrrhenae acies atque omnibus uni,
 The Tuscan host rush up, and all upon one man alone
 uni odiisque uiro telisque frequentibus instant.
 Press on with hatred in their hearts and cloud of weapons thrown.
 ille (uelut rupes uastum quae prodit in aequor,
 Yet is he as a rock thrust out amid the mighty deep
 obuia uentorum furiis expostaque ponto,
 To meet the raging of the winds, bare to the water's sweep.
 uim cunctam atque minas perfert caelique marisque 695
 All threats of sea and sky it bears, all might that they may wield,
 ipsa immota manens) prolem Dolichaonis Hebrum Itself unmoved. Dolichaon's son he felleth unto field,
 sternit humi, cum quo Latagum Palmumque fugacem,
 One Hebrus; Latagus with him, and Palmus as he fled.
 sed Latagum saxo atque ingenti fragmine montis
 But Latagus with stone he smites, a mighty mountain-shred,
 occupat os faciemque aduersam, poplite Palmum
 Amid the face and front of him, and Palmus, slow to dare,
 succiso uolui segnem sinit, armaque Lauso 700
 Sends rolling ham-strung: but their arms he biddeth Lausus bear
 donat habere umeris et uertice figere cristas.
 Upon his back, and with their crests upon his helm to wend.
 nec non Euanthen Phrygium Paridisque Mimanta
 Phrygian Evanthes then he slays, and Mimas, whiles the friend
 aequalem comitemque, una quem nocte Theano
 Like-aged of Paris; unto day and Amycus his sire
 in lucem genitore Amyco dedit et face praegnas
 Theano gave him on the night that she who went with fire,
 Cisseis regina Parim; Paris urbe paterna 705
 E'en Cisseus' daughter, Paris bore: now Paris lies asleep
 occubat, ignarum Laurens habet ora Mimanta.

In ancient Troy; Laurentian land unknown doth Mimas keep.
ac uelut ille canum morsu de montibus altis
Tis as a boar by bite of hounds from the high mountains driven,
actus aper, multos Vesulus quem pinifer annos
Who on pine-nursing Vesulus a many years hath thriven,
defendit multosque palus Laurentia silua
Or safe in that Laurentian marsh long years hath had his home,
pascit harundinea, postquam inter retia uentum est, 710
And fed adown the reedy wood; now mid the toil-nets come
substitit infremuitque ferox et inhorruit armos,
He stands at bay, and foameth fierce, and bristleth up all o'er,
nec cuiquam irasci propiusue accedere uirtus,
And none hath heart to draw anigh and rouse the wrath of war,
sed iaculis tutisque procul clamoribus instant;
But with safe shouts and shafts aloof they press about the place;
ille autem impavidus partis cunctatur in omnis 717
While he, unhastening, unafear'd, doth everywhither face,
dentibus infrendens et tergo decutit hastas:
Gnashing his teeth and shaking off the spears from out his back.
haud aliter, iustae quibus est Mezentius irae, 714
So they, who 'gainst Mezentius there just wrath do nowise lack,
non ulli est animus stricto concurrere ferro,
Lack heart to meet him hand to hand with naked brandished blade,
missilibus longe et uasto clamore lacesunt.
But clamour huge and weapon-shot from far upon him laid.
Venerat antiquis Corythi de finibus Acron, 719
From that old land of Corythus erewhile had Acron come,
Graius homo, infectos linquens profugus hymenaeos.
A Grecian man; half-wed he passed the threshold of his home:
hunc ubi miscentem longe media agmina uidit,
Whom when Mezentius saw afar turmoiling the mid fight,
purpureum pennis et pactae coniugis ostro,
Purple with plumes and glorious web his love for him had dight;
impastus stabula alta leo ceu saepe peragrans
E'en as a lion hunger-pinched about the high-fenced fold,
(suadet enim uesana fames), si forte fugacem
When ravening famine driveth him, if he by chance behold

conspectu capream aut surgentem in cornua ceruum, 725
Some she-goat, or a hart that thrusts his antlers up in air,
gaudet hians immane comasque arrexit et haeret
Merry he waxeth, gaping fierce his mane doth he uprear,
uisceribus super incumbens; lauit improba taeter
And hugs the flesh he lies upon; a loathsome sea of blood
ora cruor —

Washes the horror of his mouth.

sic ruit in densos alacer Mezentius hostis.

So merry runs Mezentius forth amid the press of foes,
sternitur infelix Acron et calcibus atram 730

And hapless Acron falls, and pounds the black earth mid his throes tundit humum expirans infractaque tela cruentat.

With beat of heel; staining the shaft that splintered in the wound.
atque idem fugientem haud est dignatus Oroden

Scorn had he then Orodes swift to fell unto the ground
sternere nec iacta caecum dare cuspe uulnus;

Amidst his flight, or give blind bane with unknown cast afar;
obuius aduersoque occurrit seque uiro uir

He ran to meet him man to man, prevailing in the war
contulit, haud furto melior sed fortibus armis. 735

By nought of guile or ambushing, but by the dint of blade.
tum super abiectum posito pede nixus et hasta:

Foot on the fallen then he set, and strength to spear-shaft laid:
‘pars belli haud temnenda, uiri, iacet altus Orodes.’

“Fellows, here tall Orodes lies, no thrall in battle throng.”
conclamant socii laetum paeana secuti;

Then merrily his following folk shout forth their victory-song:
ille autem expirans: ‘non me, quicumque es, inulto,

Yet saith the dying: “Whosoe’er thou art, thou winnest me
uictor, nec longum laetabere; te quoque fata 740

Not unavenged: thy joy grows old: the like fate looks for thee,
prospectant paria atque eadem mox arua tenebis.’

And thou the self-same lea shalt hold within a little while!”
ad quem subridens mixta Mezentius ira:

To whom Mezentius spake, his wrath crossed by a gathering smile:
‘nunc morere. ast de me diuum pater atque hominum rex

“Die thou! the Father of the Gods, the earth-abider’s lord,
 uiderit.’ hoc dicens eduxit corpore telum.
 Will look to me.” He drew the spear from out him at the word,
 olli dura quies oculos et ferreus urget 745
 And iron slumber fell on him, hard rest weighed down his eyes,
 somnus, in aeternam clauduntur lumina noctem.
 And shut were they for evermore by night that never dies.
 Caedicus Alcathoum obtruncat, Sacrator Hydaspen
 Now Cædicus slays Alcathous; Sacrator ends outright
 partheniumque Rapo et praedurum uiribus Orsen,
 Hydaspes; then Parthenius stark and Orses fall in fight
 Messapus Cloniumque Lycaoniumque Erichaeten,
 By Rapo; and Messapus fells strong Clonius, and the son,
 illum infrenis equi lapsu tellure iacentem, 750
 Of Lycaon; one laid alow, by his own steeds cast down,
 hunc peditem. pedes et Lycius processerat Agis,
 One foot to foot. Lo Agis now, the Lycian, standeth forth,
 quem tamen haud expers Valerus uirtutis auitae
 Whom Valerus, that nothing lacked his grandsire’s might and worth,
 deicit; at Thronium Salius Saliumque Nealces
 O’erthroweth: Salius Thronius slays; Nealces, Salius;
 insidiis, iaculo et longe fallente sagitta.
 For skilled he was in dart and shaft, far-flying, perilous.
 Iam grauis aequabat luctus et mutua Mauors 755
 Now grief and death in Mavors’ scales even for each they lie;
 funera; caedebant pariter pariterque ruebant
 Victors and vanquished, here they slay, and here they fall and die,
 uictores uictique, neque his fuga nota neque illis.
 But neither these nor those forsooth had fleeing in their thought.
 di Iouis in tectis iram miserantur inanem
 But in Jove’s house the Gods had ruth of rage that nothing wrought,
 amborum et tantos mortalibus esse labores;
 And such a world of troubles sore for men of dying days;
 hinc Venus, hinc contra spectat Saturnia Iuno. 760
 On this side Venus, and on that Saturnian Juno gaze;
 pallida Tisiphone media inter milia saeuit.
 And wan Tisiphonè runs wild amid the thousands there.

At uero ingentem quatiens Mezentius hastam
But lo, Mezentius fierce and fell, shaking a mighty spear,
turbidus ingreditur campo. quam magnus Orion,
Stalks o'er the plain. — Lo now, how great doth great Orion sweep
cum pedes incedit medii per maxima Nerei
Afoot across the Nereus' field, the mid sea's mightiest deep,
stagna uiam scindens, umero supereminet undas, 765
Cleaving his way, raised shoulder-high above the billowy wash;
aut summis referens annosam montibus ornum
Or when from off the mountain-top he bears an ancient ash
ingrediturque solo et caput inter nubila condit,
His feet are on the soil of earth, the cloud-rack hides his head:
talis se uastis infert Mezentius armis.

— E'en so in mighty battle-gear afield Mezentius sped.
huic contra Aeneas speculatus in agmine longo
But now Æneas, noting him adown the battle-row,
obuius ire parat. manet imperterritus ille 770
Wendeth to meet him; undismayed he bideth for his foe,
hostem magnanimum opperiens, et mole sua stat;
Facing the great-souled man, and stands unmoved, a mighty mass:
atque oculis spatium emensus quantum satis hastae:
Then measuring the space between if spear thereby may pass:
'dextra mihi deus et telum, quod missile libro,
"Right hand," he cries, "my very God, and fleeing spear I shake,
nunc adsint! uoueo praedonis corpore raptis
To aid! Thee, Lausus, clad in arms that I today shall take indutum spoliis ipsum te, Lause, tropaeum 775
From body of the sea-thief here I vow for gift of war
Aeneae.' dixit, stridentemque eminus hastam
Over Æneas slain." He spake, and hurled the shaft afar
iecit. at illa uolans clipeo est excussa proculque
Loud whistling: from the shield it glanced, and flying far and wide
egregium Antoren latus inter et ilia figit,
Smit glory-great Antores down through bowels and through side:
Herculis Antoren comitem, qui missus ab Argis Antores friend of Hercules, who, erst from Argos come,
haeserat Euandro atque Italia consederat urbe. 780

Clung to Evander, and abode in that Italian home:
 sternitur infelix alieno uulnere, caelumque
 There laid to earth by straying wound he looketh on the sky,
 aspicit et dulcis moriens reminiscitur Argos.
 With lovely Argos in his heart, though death be come anigh.
 tum pius Aeneas hastam iacit; illa per orbem
 Then good Æneas cast his spear, and through the hollow round
 aere cauum triplici, per linea terga tribusque
 Of triple brass, through linen skin, through craftsmanship inwound, transiit intextum tauris opus, imaque sedit 785
 With threefold bull-hides, pierced the shaft, and in the groin did lie,
 inguine, sed uiris haud pertulit. ocius ensem
 Nor further could its might avail. Then swiftly from his thigh
 Aeneas uiso Tyrrheni sanguine laetus
 Æneas caught his glaive, and glad the Tyrrhene blood to see,
 eripit a femine et trepidanti feruidus instat.
 Set on upon his wildered foe hot-heart and eagerly.
 ingemuit cari grauius genitoris amore,
 But Lausus, by his father's love sore moved, did all behold,
 ut uidit, Lausus, lacrimaeque per ora uolutae — 790
 And groaned aloud, while o'er his cheeks a heavy tear-flood rolled
 hic mortis durae casum tuaque optima facta,
 — Ah, I will tell of thine ill-fate and deeds that thou hast done;
 si qua fidem tanto est operi latura uetustas,
 If any troth in stories told may reach from yore agoe,
 non equidem nec te, iuuenis memorande, silebo —
 My speech, O unforgotten youth, in nowise shalt thou lack —
 ille pedem referens et inutilis inque ligatus
 The father with a halting foot hampered and spent drew back,
 cedebat clipeoque inimicum hastile trahebat. 795
 Still dragging on the foeman's spear that hung amid his shield;
 proripuit iuuenis seseque immiscuit armis,
 But mingling him in battle-rush the son took up the field,
 iamque adsurgentis dextra plagamque ferentis
 And as Æneas' right hand rose well laden with the blow
 Aeneae subiit mucronem ipsumque morando
 He ran beneath, bore off the sword, and stayed the eager foe,

sustinuit; socii magno clamore sequuntur,
 And with a mighty shout behind his fellows follow on,
 dum genitor nati parma protectus abiret, 800
 While shielded by his son's defence the father gat him gone,
 telaque coniciunt perturbantque eminus hostem
 And shafts they cast and vex the foe with weapon shot afar.
 missilibus. furit Aeneas tectusque tenet se.
 Mad wroth Æneas grows, but bides well covered from the war;
 ac uelut effusa si quando grandine nimbi
 And as at whiles the clouds come down with furious pelt of hail,
 praecipitant, omnis campis diffugit arator
 And every driver of the plough the beaten lea doth fail,
 omnis et agricola, et tuta latet arce uiator 805
 And every one that works afield, while safe the traveller lurks
 aut amnis ripis aut alti fornice saxi,
 In castle of the river-bank or rock-wrought cloister-works,
 dum pluit in terris, ut possint sole reducto
 The while the rain is on the earth, that they may wear the day
 exercere diem: sic obrutus undique telis
 When once again the sun comes back; — so on Æneas lay
 Aeneas nubem belli, dum detonet omnis,
 The shaft-storm, so the hail of fight loud thundering he abode,
 sustinet et Lausum increpitat Lausoque minatur: 810
 And Lausus with the wrath of words, Lausus with threats did load.
 'quo moriture ruis maioraque uiribus audes?
 "Ah, whither rushest thou to die, and darest things o'ergreat?
 fallit te incautum pietas tua.' nec minus ille
 Thy love betrays thine heedless heart." No less, the fool of fate,
 exsultat demens, saeuae iamque altius irae
 He rusheth on, till high and fierce the tide of wrath doth win
 Dardanio surgunt ductori, extremaque Lauso
 O'er heart of that Dardanian duke, and now the Parcae spin
 Parcae fila legunt. ualidum namque exigit ensem 815
 Lausus' last thread: for his stark sword Æneas drives outright
 per medium Aeneas iuuenem totumque recondit;
 Through the young body, hiding it hilt-deep therein from light
 transiit et parmam mucro, leuia arma minacis,

It pierced the shield and glittering gear wherewith he threatened war,
 et tunicam molli mater quam neuerat auro,
 And kirtle that his mother erst with gold had broidered o'er,
 impleuitque sinum sanguis; tum uita per auras
 And flooded all his breast with blood; and woeful down the wind
 concessit maesta ad Manis corpusque reliquit. 820
 His spirit sought the under-world, and left his corpse behind.
 At uero ut uultum uidit morientis et ora,
 But when Anchises' son beheld the face of that dead man,
 ora modis Anchisiades pallentia miris,
 His face that in a wondrous wise grew faded out and wan,
 ingemuit miserans grauiter dextramque tetendit,
 Groaning for ruth his hand therewith down toward him did he move,
 et mentem patriae subiit pietatis imago.
 For o'er his soul the image came of his own father's love:
 'quid tibi nunc, miserande puer, pro laudibus istis, 825
 "O boy, whom all shall weep, what then for such a glorious deed,
 quid pius Aeneas tanta dabit indole dignum?
 What gift can good Æneas give, thy bounteous valour's meed?
 arma, quibus laetatus, habe tua; teque parentum
 Keep thou the arms thou joyedst in. I give thy body here
 manibus et cineri, si qua est ea cura, remitto.
 Unto thy father's buried ghosts, if thou thereof hast care.
 hoc tamen infelix miseram solabere mortem:
 But let this somewhat solace thee for thine unhappy death,
 Aeneae magni dextra cadis.' increpat ultro 830
 By great Æneas' hand thou diest." Then chiding words he saith
 cunctantis socios et terra subleuat ipsum
 Unto his fellows hanging back, and lifteth up the dead
 sanguine turpantem comptos de more capillos.
 From off the lea, where blood defiled the tresses of his head.
 Interea genitor Tiberini ad fluminis undam
 Meanwhile the father by the wave that ripples Tiber's breast
 uulnera siccat lymphis corpusque leuabat
 With water staunched his bleeding hurt and gave his body rest,
 arboris acclinis trunco. procul aerea ramis 835
 Leaning against a tree-trunk there: high up amid the tree

dependet galea et prato grauia arma quiescunt.
Hangeth his brazen helm; his arms lie heavy on the lea;
stant lecti circum iuuenes; ipse aeger anhelans
The chosen war-youths stand about: he, sick and panting now,
colla fouet fusus propexam in pectore barbam;
Nurseth his neck, and o'er his breast his combed-down beard lets flow.

multa super Lauso rogitat, multumque remittit
Much about Lausus did he ask, and sore to men he spake
qui reuocent maestique ferant mandata parentis. 840
To bid him back, or warning word from his sad sire to take.
at Lausum socii exanimem super arma ferebant
But Lausus dead his weeping folk were bearing on his shield;
flentes, ingentem atque ingenti uulnere uictum.
A mighty heart, to mighty hand the victory must he yield
agnouit longe gemitum praesaga mali mens.
The father's soul foretaught of ill, afar their wail he knew,
canitiem multo deformat puluere et ambas
And fouled his hoar hair with the dust, and both his hands upthrew
ad caelum tendit palmas et corpore inhaeret. 845
Toward heaven aloft; then clinging fast unto that lifeless one:
'tantane me tenuit uiuendi, nate, uoluptas,
"What lust," saith he, "of longer life so held my heart, O son,
ut pro me hostili paterer succedere dextrae,
That thee, my son, I suffered thus to bare thee to the bane
quem genui? tuane haec genitor per uulnera seruo
Instead of me; that I, thy sire, health of thy hurts I gain,
morte tua uiuens? heu, nunc misero mihi demum
Life of thy death! Ah now at last my exile is become
exitium infelix, nunc alte uulnus adactum! 850
A woe unto my weary heart; yea, now the wound goes home.
idem ego, nate, tuum maculaui crimine nomen,
For I am he who stained thy name, O son, with guilt of mine,
pulsus ob inuidiam solio sceptrisque paternis.
Thrust forth by Fate from fatherland and sceptre of my line:
debueram patriae poenas odiisque meorum:
I should have paid the penalty unto my country's hate,

omnis per mortis animam sontem ipse dedissem!
 And given up my guilty soul to death, my very fate.
 nunc uiuo neque adhuc homines lucemque relinquo. 855
 I live: I leave not sons of men, nor let the light go by —
 sed linquam.' simul hoc dicens attollit in aegrum
 — Yet will I leave them." So he spake, and on his halting thigh
 se femur et, quamquam uis alto uulnere tardat,
 Rose up, and, howsoe'er his hurt might drag his body down,
 haud deiectus equum duci iubet. hoc decus illi,
 Unvanquished yet, he called his horse, his very pleasures crown,
 hoc solamen erat, bellis hoc uictor abibat
 And glory; who had borne him forth victorious from all war;
 omnibus. adloquitur maerentem et talibus infit: 860
 And thus he spake unto the beast that seemed to sorrow sore:
 'Rhaebe, diu, res si qua diu mortalibus ulla est,
 "Rhoebus, o'erlong — if aught be long to men that pass away —
 uiximus. aut hodie uictor spolia illa cruenti
 Have we twain lived: those bloody spoils shalt thou bring home today,
 et caput Aeneae referes Lausique dolorum
 And carrying Æneas' head avenge my Lausus' woe.
 ultor eris mecum, aut, aperit si nulla uiam uis,
 Or if our might no more may make a road whereby to go,
 occumbes pariter; neque enim, fortissime, credo, 865
 Thou too shalt fall: I deem indeed thou, stout-heart, hast no will
 iussa aliena pati et dominos dignabere Teucros.'
 To suffer other men's commands, or Trojan joy fulfil."
 dixit, et exceptus tergo consueta locauit
 And therewithal he backeth him, and as he used of old
 membra manusque ambas iaculis onerauit acutis, Settleth his limbs: good store of shafts his either hand doth hold:
 aere caput fulgens cristaque hirsutus equina.
 His head is glittering o'er with brass, and horse-hair shags his crest.
 sic cursum in medios rapidus dedit. aestuat ingens 870
 So midmost of the fight he bears, and ever in his breast
 uno in corde pudor mixtoque insania luctu.
 Swelleth the mighty sea of shame and mingled miseries.

atque hic Aenean magna ter uoce uocauit. 873

And now across the fight his voice thrice on Æneas cries.

Aeneas agnouit enim laetusque precatur:

Æneas knew it well forsooth, and joyfully he prayed:

‘sic pater ille deum faciat, sic altus Apollo!

“So grant the Father of the Gods! So may Apollo aid
incipias conferre manum.’

That thou may’st fall on me in fight!”

tantum effatus et infesta subit obuius hasta.

So much he spake, and went his way to meet the foeman’s shaft;

ille autem: ‘quid me erepto, saeuissime, nato

But spake the other: “Bitter wretch, who took’st away my son,
terres? haec uia sola fuit qua perdere posses:

Why fright me now? by that one way my heart might be undone:
nec mortem horremus nec diuum parcimus ulli. 880

No death I dread, no God that is, in battle would I spare.

desine, nam uenio moriturus et haec tibi porto

Enough — I come to thee to die; but first these gifts I bear.”

dona prius.’ dixit, telumque intorsit in hostem;

He spake the word, and ‘gainst the foe a dart withal he cast,

inde aliud super atque aliud figitque uolatque

And shaft on shaft he lays on him about him flitting fast,

ingenti gyro, sed sustinet aureus umbo.

Wide circling; but the golden boss through all the storm bore out

ter circum astantem laeuos equitauit in orbis 885

Thrice while Æneas faceth him he rides the ring about,

tela manu iaciens, ter secum Troius heros

Casting the weapons from his hand; and thrice the Trojan lord

immanem aerato circumfert tegmine siluam.

Bears round a mighty thicket set in brazen battle-board.

inde ubi tot traxisse moras, tot spicula taedet

But when such tarrying wearieth him, such plucking forth of spears,

uellere, et urgetur pugna congressus iniqua,

And standing in such ill-matched fight the heart within him wears,

multa mouens animo iam tandem erumpit et inter 890

Turning the thing o’er manywise, he breaketh forth to speed

bellatoris equi caua tempora conicit hastam.

A shaft amid the hollow brow of that war-famous steed:
 tollit se arrectum quadripes et calcibus auras
 Then beating of the air with hoof uprears the four-foot thing
 uerberat, effusumque equitem super ipse secutus
 And with his fallen master falls, and 'neath his cumbering
 implicat eiectoque incumbit cernuus armo.
 Weighs down his shoulders brought to earth, and heavy on him lies.
 clamore incendunt caelum Troesque Latinique. 895
 Then Trojan men and Latin men with shouting burn the skies,
 aduolat Aeneas uaginaque eripit ensem
 And swift Æneas runneth up and pulleth forth his sword,
 et super haec: 'ubi nunc Mezentius acer et illa
 And crieth o'er him: "Where is now Mezentius, eager lord?
 effera uis animi?" contra Tyrrhenus, ut auras Where is the fierce heart?" Unto whom the Tuscan spake, when he
 suspiciens hausit caelum mentemque recepit:
 Got sense again, and breathed the air, and o'er him heaven did see:
 'hostis amare, quid increpitas mortemque minaris? 900
 "O bitter foe, why chidest thou? why slayest thou with words?
 nullum in caede nefas, nec sic ad proelia ueni,
 Slay me and do no wrong! death-safe I came not mid the swords;
 nec tecum meus haec pepigit mihi foedera Lausus.
 And no such covenant of war for us my Lausus bought:
 unum hoc per si qua est uictis uenia hostibus oro:
 One thing I pray, if vanquished men of grace may gain them aught,
 corpus humo patiari tegi. scio acerba meorum
 Let the earth hide me! well I know how bitter and how nigh
 circumstare odia: hunc, oro, defende furorem 905
 My people's wrath draws in on me: put thou their fury by,
 et me consortem nati concede sepulcro.'
 And in the tomb beside my son I pray thee let me lie."
 haec loquitur, iuguloque haud inscius accipit ensem
 He saith, and open-eyed receives the sword-point in his throat,
 undantique animam diffundit in arma cruore.
 And o'er his arms in waves of blood his life and soul doth float.

LIBER XI

BOOK XI.

Oceanum interea surgens Aurora reliquit:
Meanwhile Aurora risen up from bed of ocean wends,
Aeneas, quamquam et sociis dare tempus humanis
And King Æneas, though his grief bids him in burying friends
praecipitant curae turbataque funere mens est,
To wear the day, and though his heart the death of men dismays,
uota deum primo uictor soluebat Eoo.
Yet to the Gods of Dawning-tide the worship duly pays.
ingentem quercum decisis undique ramis 5
From a great oak on every side the branches doth he shear,
constituit tumulo fulgentiaque induit arma,
And setteth on a mound bedight in gleaming battle-gear
Mezenti ducis exuias, tibi magne tropaeum
The spoils of King Mezentius: a gift to thee it stood,
bellipotens; aptat rorantis sanguine cristas
O Might of War! Thereon he set the crest with blood bedewed,
telaque trunca uiri, et bis sex thoraca petitem
The broken shafts, the mail-coat pierced amid the foughten field
perfossumque locis, clipeumque ex aere sinistrae 10
With twice six dints: on the left arm he tied the brazen shield,
subligat atque ensem collo suspendit eburnum.
And round about the neck he hung the ivory-hilted sword.
tum socios (namque omnis eum stipata tegebat
Then to his friends, a mighty hedge of duke and battle-lord,
turba ducum) sic incipiens hortatur ouantis:
He turned, and to their joyous hearts these words withal he said:
‘maxima res effecta, uiri; timor omnis abesto,
“The most is done, and for the rest let all your fears lie dead:
quod superest; haec sunt spolia et de rege superbo 15
Lo here the first-fruits! battle-spoil won from a haughty king:
primitiae manibusque meis Mezentius hic est.
Lo this is all Mezentius now, mine own hands’ fashioning.

nunc iter ad regem nobis murosque Latinos.
Now toward the King and Latin walls all open lies the way;
arma parate, animis et spe praesumite bellum,
Up hearts, for war! and let your hope foregrip the battle-day,
ne qua mora ignaros, ubi primum uellere signa
That nought of sloth may hinder you, or take you unaware,
adnuerint superi pubemque educere castris, 20
When Gods shall bid the banners up, and forth with men ye fare
impediat segnisue metu sententia tardet.
From out of camp, — that craven dread clog not your spirits then:
interea socios inhumataque corpora terrae
Meanwhile give we unto the earth these our unburied men,
mandemus, qui solus honos Acheronte sub imo est.
The only honour they may have in nether Acheron.
ite,' ait 'egregias animas, quae sanguine nobis
Come, fellows, to those noble souls who with their blood have won
hanc patriam peperere suo, decorate supremis 25
A country for us, give those gifts, the last that they may spend.
muneribus, maestamque Euandri primus ad urbem
And first unto Evander's town of sorrow shall I send
mittatur Pallas, quem non uirtutis egentem
That Pallas, whom, in nowise poor of valour or renown,
abstulit atra dies et funere mersit acerbo.'
The black day reft away from us in bitter death to drown."
Sic ait inlacrimans, recipitque ad limina gressum
With weeping eyes he drew aback, e'en as the word he said,
corpus ubi exanimi positum Pallantis Acoetes 30
Unto the threshold of the place where Pallas, cold and dead,
seruabat senior, qui Parrhasio Euandro
The old Acoetes watched, who erst of that Parrhasian King,
armiger ante fuit, sed non felicibus aequae Evander, was the shield-bearer, but now was following tum comes auspiciis caro datus ibat alumno.
His well-belovèd foster-child in no such happy wise;
circum omnis famulumque manus Troianaque turba
But round him were the homemen's band and Trojan companies,
et maestum Iliades crinem de more solutae. 35

And Ilian wives with loosened locks in guise of sorrow sore.

ut uero Aeneas foribus sese intulit altis

But when Æneas entereth now beneath the lofty door

ingentem gemitum tunsis ad sidera tollunt

From beaten breast great moan they cast up to the starry heaven;

pectoribus, maestoque immugit regia luctu.

And wailing of their woeful cheer through all the house is driven.

ipse caput niuei fultum Pallantis et ora

The King himself when he beheld the pillowed head at rest,

ut uidit leuique patens in pectore uulnus 40

The snow-white face, the open wound wrought on the smooth young breast

cuspidis Ausoniae, lacrimis ita fatur abortis:

By that Ausonian spear, so spake amid his gathered tears:

‘tene,’ inquit ‘miserande puer, cum laeta ueniret,

“O boy bewept, despite the gifts my happy Fortune bears

inuidit Fortuna mihi, ne regna uideres

Doth she still grudge it thee to see my kingdom glorious,

nostra neque ad sedes uictor ueherere paternas?

Or come a victor back again unto thy father’s house?

non haec Euandro de te promissa parenti 45

Not such the promise that I gave on that departing day

discedens dederam, cum me complexus euntem

Unto thy father, whose embrace then sped me on my way

mitteret in magnum imperium metuensque moneret

To mighty lordship, while his fear gave forth the warning word

acris esse uiros, cum dura proelia gente.

That with fierce folk I had to do, hard people of the sword.

et nunc ille quidem spe multum captus inani

Now he, deceived by empty hope, belike pours forth the prayer,

fors et uota facit cumulatque altaria donis, 50

And pileth up the gifts for nought upon the altars fair,

nos iuuenem exanimum et nil iam caelestibus ullis

While we — in woe with honours vain — about his son we stand,

debentem uano maesti comitamur honore.

Dead now, and no more owing aught to any heavenly hand.

infelix, nati funus crudele uidebis!

Unhappy, thou shalt look upon thy dead unhappy son!
hi nostri reditus expectatique triumphi?
Is this the coming back again? is this the triumph won?
haec mea magna fides? at non, Euandre, pudendis 55
Is this my solemn troth? — Yet thee, Evander, bides no sight
uulneribus pulsum aspicias, nec sospite dirum
Of craven beat with shameful wounds, nor for the saved from fight
optabis nato funus pater. ei mihi quantum
Shalt thou but long for dreadful death. — Woe's me, Ausonian land!
praesidium, Ausonia, et quantum tu perdis, Iule!
Woe's me, Iulus, what a shield is perished from thine hand!"
Haec ubi defleuit, tolli miserabile corpus
Such wise he wept him, and bade raise the hapless body dead,
imperat, et toto lectos ex agmine mittit 60
And therewithal a thousand men, his war-hosts' flower, he sped
mille uiros qui supremum comitentur honorem
To wait upon him on the way with that last help of all,
intersintque patris lacrimis, solacia luctus
And be between his father's tears: forsooth a solace small
exigua ingentis, misero sed debita patri.
Of mighty grief; a debt no less to that sad father due.
haud segnes alii cratis et molle feretrum
But others speed a pliant bier weaving a wattle through,
arbutis texunt uirgis et uimine querno 65
Of limber twigs of berry-bush and boughs of oaken-tree,
exstructosque toros obtentu frondis inumbrant.
And shadow o'er the piled-up bed with leafy canopy.
hic iuuenem agresti sublimem stramine ponunt:
So there upon the wild-wood couch adown the youth is laid;
qualem uirgineo demessum pollice florem
E'en as a blossom dropped to earth from fingers of a maid —
seu mollis uiolae seu languentis hyacinthi,
The gilliflower's bloom maybe, or jacinth's hanging head,
cui neque fulgor adhuc nec dum sua forma recessit, 70
Whose lovely colour is not gone, nor shapely fashion fled,
non iam mater alit tellus uirisque ministrat.
Although its mother feedeth not, nor earth its life doth hold.

tum geminas uestis auroque ostroque ridentis
Thereon two woven webs, all stiff with purple dye and gold,
extulit Aeneas, quas illi laeta laborum
Æneas bringeth forth, which erst with her own fingers fair
ipsa suis quondam manibus Sidonia Dido
Sidonian Dido wrought for him, and, glad the toil to bear,
fecerat et tenui telas discreuerat auro. 75
Had shot across the web thereof with thin and golden thread:
harum unam iuueni supremum maestus honorem
In one of these the youth he wrapped, last honour of the dead,
induit arsurasque comas obnubit amictu,
And, woeful, covered up the locks that fire should burn away.
multaque praeterea Laurentis praemia pugnae
And furthermore a many things, Laurentum's battle-prey,
aggerat et longo praedam iubet ordine duci;
He pileth up, and bids the spoil in long array be borne:
addit equos et tela quibus spoliauerat hostem. 80
Horses and battle-gear he adds, late from the foemen torn:
uinxerat et post terga manus, quos mitteret umbris
And men's hands had he bound aback whom shortly should he send inferias, caeso sparsurus sanguine flammis,
Unto the ghosts; whose blood should slake the fire that ate his friend.
indutosque iubet truncos hostilibus armis
And trunks of trees with battle-gear from foemen's bodies won
ipsos ferre duces inimicaque nomina figi.
He bids the leaders carry forth, with foemen's names thereon.
ducitur infelix aevo confectus Acoetes, 85
Hapless Acoetes, spent with eld, is brought forth; whiles he wears
pectora nunc foedans pugnis, nunc unguibus ora,
His bosom with the beat of fists, and whiles his face he tears:
sternitur et toto proiectus corpore terrae;
Then forth he falls, and grovelling there upon the ground doth lie.
ducunt et Rutulo perfusos sanguine currus.
They bring the war-wain now, o'errained with blood of Rutuli:
post bellator equus positus insignibus Aethon
Æthon his war-horse comes behind, stripped of his gear of state,
it lacrimans guttisque umectat grandibus ora. 90

Mourning he goes, and wets his face with plenteous tear-drops great.
 hastam alii galeamque ferunt, nam cetera Turnus
 Some bring the dead man's spear and helm: victorious Turnus' hand
 uictor habet. tum maesta phalanx Teucrique sequuntur
 Hath all the rest: then follow on the woeful Teucrian band,
 Tyrrenique omnes et uersis Arcades armis.
 All Tuscans, and Arcadian folk with weapons turned about.
 postquam omnis longe comitum praecesserat ordo,
 But now, when all the following folk were got a long way out,
 substitit Aeneas gemituque haec addidit alto: 95
 Æneas stood and groaned aloud, and spake these words withal:
 'nos alias hinc ad lacrimas eadem horrida belli
 "Us otherwhere to other tears the same dread war-fates call;
 fata uocant: salue aeternum mihi, maxime Palla,
 Undying greetings go with thee! farewell for evermore,
 aeternumque uale.' nec plura effatus ad altos
 O mightiest Pallas!" Ending so, to those high walls of war tendebat muros gressumque in castra ferebat.
 He turned about, and went his ways unto his war-folks' home.
 Iamque oratores aderant ex urbe Latina 100
 But from the Latin city now were fair speech-masters come,
 uelati ramis oleae ueniamque rogantes:
 Half-hidden by the olive-boughs, and praying for a grace,
 corpora, per campos ferro quae fusa iacebant,
 That he would give them back their men who lay about the place
 redderet ac tumulo sineret succedere terrae;
 O'erthrown by steel, and let them lie in earth-mound duly dight;
 nullum cum uictis certamen et aethere cassis;
 Since war was not for men o'ercome, or those that lack the light —
 parceret hospitibus quondam socerisque uocatis. 105
 That he would spare his whileome hosts, the kinsmen of his bride.
 quos bonus Aeneas haud aspernanda precantis
 But good Æneas, since their prayer might not be put aside,
 prosequitur uenia et uerbis haec insuper addit:
 Let all his pardon fall on them, and sayeth furthermore:
 'quaenam uos tanto fortuna indigna, Latini,
 "O Latin folk, what hapless fate hath tangled you in war

implicuit bello, qui nos fugiatis amicos?

So great and ill? From us, your friends, why must ye flee away?

pacem me exanimis et Martis sorte peremptis 110

For perished men, dead thralls of Mars, a little peace ye pray,
oratis? equidem et uiuis concedere uellem.

But to your living folk indeed fain would I grant the grace.

nec ueni, nisi fata locum sedemque dedissent,

I had not come here, save that Fate here gave me home and place:

nec bellum cum gente gero; rex nostra reliquit

No battle with your folk I wage; nay, rather 'twas your lord

hospitia et Turni potius se credidit armis.

Who left my friendship, trusting him to Turnus' shield and sword.

aequius huic Turnum fuerat se opponere morti. 115

For Turnus to have faced the death were deed of better worth:

si bellum finire manu, si pellere Teucros

If he deems hands should end the war and thrust the Teucrians forth,

apparat, his mecum decuit concurrere telis:

'Twere lovely deed to meet my hand amid the rain of strife;

uixet cui uitam deus aut sua dextra dedisset.

Then let him live to whom the Gods have given the gift of life.

nunc ite et miseris supponite ciuibus ignem.'

Go ye, and 'neath your hapless ones lay ye the bale-fire's blaze."

dixerat Aeneas. illi obstipuerunt silentes 120

He made an end; but still they stood and hushed them in amaze,

conuersique oculos inter se atque ora tenebant.

And each on each they turned their eyes, and every tongue refrained,

Tum senior semperque odiis et crimine Drances

Till elder Drances, whom for foe child Turnus well had gained

infensus iuueni Turno sic ore uicissim

By hate-filled charges, took the word, and in such wise began:

orsa refert: 'o fama ingens, ingentior armis,

"O great in fame, in dint of war yet greater, Trojan man!

uir Troiane, quibus caelo te laudibus aequem? 125

What praise of words is left to me to raise thee to the sky?

iustitiaene prius mirer belline laborum?

For justice shall I praise thee most, or battle's mastery?

nos uero haec patriam grati referemus ad urbem

Now happy, to our fathers' town this answer back we bear,
 et te, si qua uiam dederit Fortuna, Latino
 And if good-hap a way thereto may open anywhere,
 iungemus regi. quaerat sibi foedera Turnus.
 Thee to Latinus will we knit — let Turnus seek his own! —
 quin et fatalis murorum attollere moles 130
 Yea, we shall deem it joy forsooth about your fateful town:
 saxaque subuectare umeris Troiana iuuabit.'
 To raise the walls, and Trojan stones upon our backs to lay."
 dixerat haec unoque omnes eadem ore fremebant.
 Such words he spake, and with one mouth did all men murmur yea.
 bis senos pepigere dies, et pace sequestra
 For twice six days they covenant; and in war-sundering peace
 per siluas Teucri mixtique impune Latini
 The Teucrians and the Latins blent about the woods increase,
 errauere iugis. ferro sonat alta bipenni 135
 About the hill-sides wander safe; the smitten ash doth know
 fraxinus, euertunt actas ad sidera pinus,
 The ring of steel; the pines that thrust heaven-high they overthrow;
 robora nec cuneis et olentem scindere cedrum
 Nor cease with wedge to cleave the oak and cedar shedding scent,
 nec plaustris cessant uectare gementibus ornos.
 Or on the wains to lead away the rowan's last lament.
 Et iam Fama uolans, tanti praenuntia luctus,
 And now the very Wingèd Fame, with that great grief she bears,
 Euandrum Euandrique domos et moenia replet, 140
 Filleth Evander's town and house, filleth Evander's ears;
 quae modo uictorem Latio Pallanta ferebat.
 Yea, Fame, who erst of Pallas' deeds in conquered Latium told:
 Arcades ad portas ruere et de more uetusto
 Rush the Arcadians to the gates, and as they used of old,
 funereas rapuere faces; lucet uia longo
 Snatch up the torches of the dead, and with the long array
 ordine flammarum et late discriminat agros.
 Of flames the acre-cleaving road gleams litten far away:
 contra turba Phrygum ueniens plangentia iungit 145
 Then meeteth them the Phrygian crowd, and swells the wailing band;

agmina. quae postquam matres succedere tectis
And when the mothers saw them come amid the house-built land,
uiderunt, maestam incendunt clamoribus urbem.
The woeful town they set afire with clamour of their ill.
at non Euandrum potis est uis ulla tenere,
But naught there is hath any might to hold Evander still;
sed uenit in medios. feretro Pallante reposto
He comes amidst, and on the bier where Pallas lies alow
procubuit super atque haeret lacrimansque gemensque, 150
He grovels, and with weeping sore and groaning clings thereto;
et uia uix tandem uoci laxata dolore est:
And scarce from sorrow at the last his speech might win a way:
'non haec, o Palla, dederas promissa parenti,
"Pallas, this holdeth not the word thou gavest me that day,
cautius ut saeuo uelles te credere Marti.
That thou wouldst ward thee warily in game of bitter Mars:
haud ignarus eram quantum noua gloria in armis
Though sooth I knew how strong it is, that first fame of the wars;
et praedulce decus primo certamine posset. 155
How strong is that o'er-sweet delight of earliest battle won.
primitiae iuuenis miserae bellique propinqui
O wretched schooling of my child! O seeds of war begun,
dura rudimenta, et nulli exaudita deorum
How bitter hard! O prayers of mine, O vows that none would hear
uota precesque meae! tuque, o sanctissima coniunx,
Of all the Gods! O holiest wife, thy death at least was dear,
felix morte tua neque in hunc seruata dolorem!
And thou art happy to be gone, not kept for such a tide.
contra ego uiuendo uici mea fata, superstes 160
But I — my life hath conquered Fate, that here I might abide
restarem ut genitor. Troum socia arma secutum
A lonely father. Ah, had I gone with the Trojan host,
obruerent Rutuli telis! animam ipse dedissem
To fall amid Rutulian spears! were mine the life-days lost;
atque haec pompa domum me, non Pallanta, referret!
If me, not Pallas, this sad pomp were bringing home today! —
nec uos arguerim, Teucrici, nec foedera nec quas

Yet, Teucrians, on your troth and you no blaming would I lay,
iunximus hospitio dextras: sors ista senectae 165

Nor on our hands in friendship joined: 'twas a foreordered load
debita erat nostrae. quod si immatura manebat

For mine old age: and if my son untimely death abode,
mors gnatum, caesis Volscorum milibus ante

'Tis sweet to think he fell amidst the thousand Volscians slain,
ducentem in Latium Teucros cecidisse iuuabit.

And leading on the men of Troy the Latin lands to gain.

quin ego non alio digner te funere, Palla,

Pallas, no better funeral rites mine heart to thee awards

quam pius Aeneas et quam magni Phryges et quam 170

Than good Æneas giveth thee, and these great Phrygian lords,

Tyrrhenique duces, Tyrrhenum exercitus omnis.

The Tyrrhene dukes, the Tyrrhene host, a mighty company;

magna tropaea ferunt quos dat tua dextera leto;

While they whom thine own hand hath slain great trophies bear for thee.

tu quoque nunc stares immanis truncus in aruis,

Yea, Turnus, thou wert standing there, a huge trunk weapon-clad,

esset par aetas et idem si robur ab annis,

If equal age, if equal strength from lapse of years ye had.

Turne. sed infelix Teucros quid demoror armis? 175

— But out! — why should a hapless man thus stay the Teucrian swords?

uadite et haec memores regi mandata referte:

Go, and be mindful to your king to carry these my words:

quod uitam moror inuisam Pallante preempto

If here by loathèd life I bide, with Pallas dead and gone,

dextera causa tua est, Turnum gnatoque patrique

Thy right hand is the cause thereof, which unto sire and son

quam debere uides. meritis uacat hic tibi solus

Owes Turnus, as thou wottest well: no other place there is

fortunaque locus. non uitae gaudia quaero, 180

Thy worth and fate may fill. God wot I seek no life-days' bliss,

nec fas, sed gnato manis perferre sub imos.'

But might I bear my son this tale amid the ghosts of earth!"

Aurora interea miseris mortalibus almam
 Meanwhile the loveliness of light Aurora brought to birth
 extulerat lucem referens opera atque labores:
 For heartsick men, and brought aback the toil of heart and hand:
 iam pater Aeneas, iam curuo in litore Tarchon
 Father Æneas therewithal down on the hollow strand,
 constituere pyras. huc corpora quisque suorum 185
 And Tarchon with him, rear the bales; and each man thither bears
 more tulere patrum, subiectisque ignibus atris
 His dead friend in the ancient guise: beneath the black flame flares,
 conditur in tenebras altum caligine caelum.
 The heaven aloft for reek thereof with night is overlaid:
 ter circum accensos cincti fulgentibus armis
 Three times about the litten bales in glittering arms arrayed
 decurrere rogos, ter maestum funeris ignem
 They run the course; three times on steed they beat the earth about
 lustrauere in equis ululatusque ore dedere. 190
 Those woeful candles of the dead and sing their wailing out;
 spargitur et tellus lacrimis, sparguntur et arma,
 The earth is strewn with tears of men, and arms of men forlorn,
 it caelo clamorque uirum clangorque tubarum.
 And heavenward goes the shout of men and blaring of the horn:
 hic alii spolia occisis derepta Latinis
 But some upon the bale-fires cast gear stripped from Latins slain:
 coniciunt igni, galeas ensisque decoros
 War-helms, and well-adornèd swords, and harness of the rein,
 frenaque feruentisque rotas; pars munera nota, 195
 And glowing wheels: but overwell some knew the gifts they brought,
 ipsorum clipeos et non felicia tela.
 The very shields of their dead friends and weapons sped for nought.
 multa boum circa mactantur corpora Morti,
 Then oxen manifold to Death all round about they slay,
 saetigerosque sues raptasque ex omnibus agris
 And bristled boars, and sheep they snatch from meadows wide away,
 in flammam iugulant pecudes. tum litore toto
 And hew them down upon the flame; then all the shore about
 ardentis spectant socios semustaque seruant 200

They gaze upon their burning friends, and watch the bale-fires out.
busta, neque auelli possunt, nox umida donec
Nor may they tear themselves away until the dewy night
inuertit caelum stellis ardentibus aptum.
Hath turned the heavens about again with gleaming stars bedight.
Nec minus et miseri diuersa in parte Latini
Nor less the unhappy Latins build upon another stead
innumeras struxere pyras, et corpora partim
The bale-fires numberless of tale: but of their warriors dead,
multa uirum terrae infodiunt, auectaue partim 205
A many bodies there they dig into the earth adown,
finitimos tollunt in agros urbique remittunt.
And bear them into neighbouring lands, or back into the town:
cetera confusaeque ingentem caedis acruum
The rest, a mighty heap of death piled up confusedly,
nec numero nec honore cremant; tunc undique uasti
Untold, unhonoured, there they burn: then that wide-lying lea
certatim crebris conlucent ignibus agri.
Glareth with fires that thick and fast keep rising high and high.
tertia lux gelidam caelo dimouerat umbram: 210
But when the third dawn drew away cold shadows from the sky,
maerentes altum cinerem et confusa ruebant
Weeping, great heaps of ashes there and blended bones they made,
ossa focus tepidoque onerabant aggere terrae.
And over them the weight of earth yet warm with fire they laid.
iam uero in tectis, praediuitis urbe Latini,
But in the houses, in the town of that rich Latin king
praecipuus fragor et longi pars maxima luctus.
More heavy was the wail, more sore the long-drawn sorrowing:
hic matres miseraeque nurus, hic cara sororum 215
Here mothers, wretched fosterers here, here sisters loved and lorn,
pectora maerentum puerique parentibus orbi
And sorrowing sore, and lads whose lives from fathers' care were torn,
dirum exsecrantur bellum Turnique hymenaeos;
Were cursing of the cruel war, and Turnus and his bride,
ipsum armis ipsumque iubent decernere ferro,

“He, he, in arms, he with the sword should play it out,” they cried,
qui regnum Italiae et primos sibi poscat honores.

“Who claims the realm of Italy and foremost lordship there.”

ingrauat haec saeuus Drances solumque uocari 220

And bitter Drances weights the scale, and witnessing doth bear
testatur, solum posci in certamina Turnum.

That Turnus only is called forth, the battle-bidden man.

multa simul contra uariis sententia dictis

But divers words of many folk on Turnus’ side yet ran,

pro Turno, et magnum reginae nomen obumbrat,

And he was cloaked about withal by great Amata’s name,

multa uirum meritis sustentat fama tropaeis.

And plenteous signs of battle won upheld his fair-won fame.

Hos inter motus, medio in flagrante tumultu, 225

Now midst these stirs and flaming broils the messengers are here

ecce super maesti magna Diomedis ab urbe

From Diomedes’ mighty walls; and little is the cheer

legati responsa ferunt: nihil omnibus actum

Wherewith they bring the tidings back that every whit hath failed

tantorum impensis operum, nil dona neque aurum

Their toil and pains: that not a whit hath gold or gifts availed,

nec magnas ualuisse preces, alia arma Latinis

Or mighty prayers, that Latin folk some other stay in war

quaerenda, aut pacem Troiano ab rege petendum. 230

Must seek, or from the Trojan king a craven peace implore.

deficit ingenti luctu rex ipse Latinus:

Then e’en Latinus’ counsel failed amid such miseries:

fatalem Aenean manifesto numine ferri

The wrath of God, the tombs new-wrought that lay before their eyes,

admonet ira deum tumulique ante ora recentes.

Made manifest Æneas come by will of God and Fate.

ergo concilium magnum primosque suorum

Therefore a mighty parliament, the firstlings of estate,

imperio accitos alta intra limina cogit. 235

By his commandment summoned there, unto his house he brings.

olli conuenere fluuntque ad regia plenis

Wherefore they gather, streaming forth unto that house of kings

tecta uiis. sedet in mediis et maximus aeuo
 By the thronged ways: there in the midst Latinus sitteth now,
 et primus sceptris haud laeta fronte Latinus.
 First-born of years, first lord of rule, with little joyful brow.
 atque hic legatos Aetola ex urbe remissos
 Hereon the men come back again from that Ætolian wall
 quae referant fari iubet, et responsa reposcit 240
 He biddeth tell their errand's speed, what answers did befall,
 ordine cuncta suo. tum facta silentia linguis,
 Each in their order: thereupon for speech was silence made,
 et Venulus dicto parens ita farier infit:
 And Venulus, obeying him, suchwise began and said:
 'Vidimus, o ciues, Diomedem Argiuaque castra,
 "Friends, we have looked on Diomede and on the Argive home,
 atque iter emensi casus superauimus omnis,
 And all the road and every hap thereby have overcome:
 contigimusque manum qua concidit Ilia tellus. 245
 Yea, soothly, we have touched the hand that wracked the Ilian earth:
 ille urbem Argyripam patriae cognomine gentis
 Argyripa he buildeth there, named from his land of birth,
 uictor Gargani condebat Iapygis agris.
 In Iapygian Garganus, where he hath conquered place.
 postquam introgressi et coram data copia fandi,
 Where, entered in, and leave being given to speak before his face,
 munera praeferimus, nomen patriamque docemus,
 We gave our gifts, and told our names, and whence of lands we were,
 qui bellum intulerint, quae causa attraxerit Arpos. 250
 Who waged us war, and for what cause to Arpi we must fare.
 auditis ille haec placido sic reddidit ore:
 He hearkened and from quiet mouth gave answer thus again:
 "o fortunatae gentes, Saturnia regna,
 "'O happy folk of Saturn's land, time-old Ausonian men,
 antiqui Ausonii, quae uos fortuna quietos
 What evil hap hath turmoiled you amid your peaceful life,
 sollicitat suadetque ignota lacescere bella?
 Beguiling you to stir abroad the doubtfulness of strife?
 quicumque Iliacos ferro uiolauimus agros 255

All we who on the Ilian fields with sword-edge compassed guilt, (mitto ea quae muris bellando exhausta sub altis,
 — Let be the war-ills we abode before the wall high built;
 quos Simois premat ille uiros) infanda per orbem
 Let be the men whom Simois hides — we o'er the wide world driven,
 supplicia et scelerum poenas expendimus omnes,
 Have wrought out pain and punishment for ill deed unforgiven,
 uel Priamo miseranda manus; scit triste Mineruae
 Till Priam's self might pity us. Witness the star of bane
 sidus et Euboicae cautes ultorque Caphereus. 260
 Minerva sent; Euboea's cliffs, Caphereus' vengeful gain!
 militia ex illa diuersum ad litus abacti
 'Scaped from that war, and driven away to countries sundered wide,
 Atrides Protei Menelaus adusque columnas
 By Proteus' Pillars exiled now, must Menelaüs bide;
 exsulat, Aetnaeos uidit Cyclopas Vlixes.
 And those Ætnæan Cyclop-folk Ulysses look upon:
 regna Neoptolemi referam uersosque penatis
 Of Pyrrhus's land why tell, or of Idomeneus, that won Idomenei? Libycone habitantis litore Locros? 265
 To ruined house; of Locrian men cast on the Libyan shore?
 ipse Mycenæus magnorum ductor Achium Mycenæ's lord, the duke and king of all the Argive war,
 coniugis infandae prima inter limina dextra
 There, on the threshold of his house, his wicked wife doth slay.
 oppetiit, deuictam Asiam subsedit adulter.
 — Asia o'ercome — and in its stead Adultery thwart the way! —
 inuidisse deos, patriis ut redditus aris
 Ah, the Gods' hate, that so begrudged my yearning eyes to meet
 coniugium optatum et pulchram Calydon auidem? 270
 My father's hearth, my longed-for wife, and Calydon the sweet!
 nunc etiam horribili uisu portenta sequuntur
 Yea, and e'en now there followeth me dread sight of woeful things:
 et socii amissi petierunt aethera pennis
 My lost companions wend the air with feathery beat of wings,
 fluminibusque uagantur aues (heu, dira meorum

Or wander, fowl on river-floods: O woe's me for their woe!
 supplicia!) et scopulos lacrimosis uocibus implent.
 The voices of their weeping wail about the sea-cliffs go.
 haec adeo ex illo mihi iam speranda fuerunt 275
 But all these things might I have seen full surely for me stored
 tempore cum ferro caelestia corpora demens
 Since then, when on the flesh of God I fell with maddened sword,
 appetii et Veneris uiolauit uulnere dextram.
 And on the very Venus' hand a wicked wound I won.
 ne uero, ne me ad talis impellite pugnas.
 Nay, nay, to no such battles more I pray you drive me on!
 nec mihi cum Teucris ullum post eruta bellum
 No war for me with Teucrian men since Pergamus lies low;
 Pergama nec ueterum memini laetorue malorum. 280
 Nor do I think or joy at all in ills of long ago.
 munera quae patriis ad me portatis ab oris
 The gifts, that from your fatherland unto my throne ye bear,
 uertite ad Aenean. stetimus tela aspera contra
 Turn toward Æneas. We have stood, time was, spear meeting spear,
 contulimusque manus: experto credite quantus
 Hand against hand: trust me, who tried, how starkly to the shield
 in clipeum adsurgat, quo turbine torqueat hastam.
 He riseth up, how blows the wind when he his spear doth wield.
 si duo praeterea talis Idaea tulisset 285
 If two such other men had sprung from that Idæan home,
 terra uiros, ultro Inachias uenisset ad urbes
 Then Dardanus with none to drive to Inachus had come,
 Dardanus, et uersis lugeret Graecia fatis.
 And seen our walls, and Greece had mourned reversal of her day.
 quidquid apud durae cessatum est moenia Troiae,
 About the walls of stubborn Troy, whatso we found of stay,
 Hectoris Aeneaeque manu uictoria Graium
 By Hector's and Æneas' hands the Greekish victory
 haesit et in decimum uestigia rettulit annum. 290
 Was tarried, and its feet held back through ten years wearing by.
 ambo animis, ambo insignes praestantibus armis,
 Both these in heart and weapon-skill were full of fame's increase,

hic pietate prior. coeant in foedera dextrae,
But this one godlier: let your hands meet in the plighted peace
qua datur; ast armis concurrant arma cauete.”
E’en as ye may: but look to it if sword to sword ye bring.’
et responsa simul quae sint, rex optime, regis
“Thus have ye heard, most gracious one, the answer of the King,
audisti et quae sit magno sententia bello.’ 295
And therewithal what thought he had about this heavy war.”
Vix ea legati, uariusque per ora cucurrit
Scarce had he said, when diverse voice of murmuring ran all o’er
Ausonidum turbata fremor, ceu saxa morantur
Those troubled mouths of Italy: as when the rocks refrain
cum rapidos amnis, fit clauso gurgite murmur
The rapid streams, and sounds arise within the eddies’ chain,
uicinaeque fremunt ripae crepitantibus undis.
And with the chatter of the waves the neighbouring banks are filled.
ut primum placati animi et trepida ora quierunt, 300
But when their minds were soothed and all the wildering voices stilled,
praefatus diuos solio rex infit ab alto:
The King spake first unto the Gods, then thus began to say:
‘Ante equidem summa de re statuisset, Latini,
“Latins, that ye had counselled you hereon before today
et uellem et fuerat melius, non tempore tali
Was both my will, and had been good: no time is this to fall
cogere concilium, cum muros adsidet hostis.
To counsel now, when as we speak the foe besets the wall.
bellum importunum, ciues, cum gente deorum 305
With folk of God ill war we wage, lords of the Latin town,
inuictisque uiris gerimus, quos nulla fatigant
With all-unconquerable folk; no battles wear them down;
proelia nec uicti possunt absistere ferro.
Yea, beaten never have they heart to cast the sword away.
spem si quam ascitis Aetolum habuistis in armis,
Lay down the hope ye had to gain Ætolian war-array;
ponite. spes sibi quisque; sed haec quam angusta uidetis.
Let each man be his proper hope. Lo ye, the straits are sore.

cetera qua rerum iaceant perculsa ruina, 310

How all things lie about us now by ruin all toppled o'er,
ante oculos interque manus sunt omnia uestras.

Witness of this the eyes of you, the hands of you have won.

nec quemquam incuso: potuit quae plurima uirtus

No man I blame, what valour could hath verily been done:

esse, fuit; toto certatum est corpore regni.

With all the manhood of our land the battle hath been fought:

nunc adeo quae sit dubiae sententia menti,

But now what better way herein my doubtful mind hath thought

expediam et paucis (animos adhibete) docebo. 315

Will I set forth, and shortly tell the rede that is in me:

est antiquus ager Tusco mihi proximus amni,

Hearken! beside the Tuscan stream I own an ancient lea,

longus in occasum, finis super usque Sicanos;

Which, toward the sunset stretching far, yea o'er Sicanian bounds,

Aurunci Rutulique serunt, et uomere duros

Aruncans and Rutulians sow, working the rough hill grounds

exercent collis atque horum asperrima pascunt.

With draught of plough, but feeding down the roughest with their sheep.

haec omnis regio et celsi plaga pinea montis 320

Let all this land, and piny place upon the mountain-steep,

cedat amicitiae Teucrorum, et foederis aequas

Be yielded for the Teucrian peace: the laws let us declare

dicamus leges sociosque in regna uocemus:

For plighted troth, and bid the men as friends our realm to share.

considant, si tantus amor, et moenia condant.

There let them settle and build walls, if thitherward they yearn;

sin alios finis aliamque capessere gentem

But if unto another land their minds are set to turn,

est animus possuntque solo decedere nostro, 325

And other folk, and all they ask is from our shore to flee,

bis denas Italo texamus robore nauis;

Then let us build them twice ten ships from oak of Italy,

seu pluris complere ualent, iacet omnis ad undam

Or more if they have men thereto: good store of ship-stuff lies

materies: ipsi numerumque modumque carinis
 Hard by the waves; and they shall show their number and their guise;
 praecipiant, nos aera, manus, naualia demus.
 But toil of men, and brass and gear we for their needs will find.
 praeterea, qui dicta ferant et foedera firment 330
 And now to carry these our words, and fast the troth-plight bind,
 centum oratores prima de gente Latinos
 Send we an hundred speech-masters, the best of Latin land,
 ire placet pacisque manu praetendere ramos,
 To seek them thither, stretching forth the peace-bough in the hand,
 munera portantis aurique eborisque talenta
 And bearing gifts; a talent's weight of gold and ivory,
 et sellam regni trabeamque insignia nostri.
 The throne therewith and welted gown, signs of my lordship high.
 consulite in medium et rebus succurrite fessis.' 335
 Take open counsel; stay the State so faint and weary grown."
 Tum Drances idem infensus, quem gloria Turni
 Then Drances, ever full of hate, whom Turnus' great renown obliqua invidia stimulisque agitabat amaris,
 With bitter stings of envy thwart goaded for evermore;
 largus opum et lingua melior, sed frigida bello
 Lavish of wealth and fair of speech, but cold-hand in the war;
 dextera, consiliis habitus non futilis auctor,
 Held for no unwise man of redes, a make-bate keen enow;
 seditione potens (genus huic materna superbum 340
 The lordship of whose life, forsooth, from well-born dam did flow,
 nobilitas dabat, incertum de patre ferebat),
 His father being of no account — upriseth now this man,
 surgit et his onerat dictis atque aggerat iras:
 And piles a grievous weight of words with all the wrath he can.
 'rem nulli obscuram nostrae nec uocis egentem
 "A matter dark to none, and which no voice of mine doth need,
 consulis, o bone rex: cuncti se scire fatentur
 Thou counsellest on, sweet King: for all confess in very deed
 quid fortuna ferat populi, sed dicere mussant. 345
 They wot whereto our fortune drives; but fear their speech doth hide:
 det libertatem fandi flatusque remittat,

Let him give liberty of speech, and sink his windy pride,
cuius ob auspiciū infaustum moresque sinistros
 Because of whose unhappy fate, and evil life and will —
(dicam equidem, licet arma mihi mortemque minetur)
 Yea, I will speak, despite his threats to smite me and to kill —
lumina tot cecidisse ducum totamque uidemus
 So many days of dukes are done, and all the city lies consedissee urbem luctu, dum Troia temptat 350 O'erwhelmed with grief, the while his luck round camps of Troy he tries,
castra fugae fidens et caelum territāt armis.
 Trusting to flight, and scaring heaven with clashing of his sword.
unum etiam donis istis, quae plurima mitti
 One gift meseems thou shouldest add, most gracious king and lord,
Dardanidis dicique iubēs, unum, optime regum,
 Unto the many gifts thou bid'st bear to the Dardan folk,
adicias, nec te ullius uiolentia uincat
 Nor bow thyself to violence, nor lie beneath its yoke.
quin natam egregio genero dignisque hymenaeis 355
 Father, thy daughter nobly wed unto a glorious son,
des pater, et pacem hanc aeterno foedere iungas.
 And knit the bonds of peace thereby in troth-pledge never done.
quod si tantus habet mentes et pectora terror,
 Or if such terror and so great upon our hearts doth lie,
ipsum obtestemur ueniamque oremus ab ipso:
 Let us adjure the man himself, and pray him earnestly
cedat, ius proprium regi patriaeque remittat.
 To yield up this his proper right to country and to king: —
quid miseros totiēns in aperta pericula ciuis 360
 — O why into the jaws of death wilt thou so often fling
proicis, o Latio caput horum et causa malorum?
 Thine hapless folk, O head and fount of all the Latin ill?
nulla salus bello, pacem te poscimus omnes,
 No safety is in war; all we, for peace we pray thee still,
Turne, simul pacis solum inuiolabile pignus.
 O Turnus, — for the only pledge of peace that may abide.
primus ego, inuisum quem tu tibi fingis (et esse

I first, whom thou call'st foe (and nought that name I thrust aside),
nil moror), en supplex uenio. miserere tuorum, 365

Lo, suppliant to thy feet I come! Pity thy people then!

pone animos et pulsus abi. sat funera fusi

Sink thine high heart, and, beaten, yield; surely we broken men
uidimus ingentis et desolauimus agros.

Have seen enough of deaths, laid waste enough of field and fold.
aut, si fama mouet, si tantum pectore robur

But if fame stir thee, if thine heart such dauntless valour hold,
concupis et si adeo dotalis regia cordi est,

If such a longing of thy soul a kingly dowry be,

aude atque aduersum fidens fer pectus in hostem. 370

Dare then, and trust thee in thy might, and breast the enemy.

scilicet ut Turno contingat regia coniunx,

Forsooth all we, that Turnus here a queenly wife might gain —
nos animae uiles, inhumata infletaque turba,

We common souls — a heap unwept, unburied, strew the plain.
sternamur campis. etiam tu, si qua tibi uis,

And now for thy part, if in thee some valour hath a place

si patrii quid Martis habes, illum aspice contra

Or memory of the ancient wars, go look him in the face
qui uocat.' 375

Who calleth thee to come afield.”

Talibus exarsit dictis uiolentia Turni.

But Turnus' fury at the word outbrake in sudden flame.

dat gemitum rumpitque has imo pectore uoces:

He groaned, and from his inmost soul this speech of his outpoured:

‘larga quidem semper, Drance, tibi copia fandi

“O Drances, when the battle-day calleth for hand and sword,

tum cum bella manus poscunt, patribusque uocatis

Great words good store thou givest still, and first thou comest still
primus ades. sed non replenda est curia uerbis, 380

When so the Sires are called: but why with words the council fill?

quae tuto tibi magna uolant, dum distinet hostem

Big words aflying from thee safe, while yet the walls hold good
agger murorum nec inundant sanguine fossae.

Against the foe, nor yet the ditch is swimming with our blood.

proinde tona eloquio (solitum tibi) meque timoris
 Go, thunder out thy wonted words! lay craven fear on me, argue tu, Drance, quando tot stragis aceruos
 O Drances, thou, whose hand has heaped the Teucrian enemy
 Teucrorum tua dextra dedit, passimque tropaeis 385
 Dead all about, and everywhere has glorified the meads
 insignis agros. possit quid uiuida uirtus
 With war-spoil! Thou thyself may'st try how lively valour speeds!
 experiare licet, nec longe scilicet hostes
 'Tis well the time: forsooth the road lieth no long way out
 quaerendi nobis; circumstant undique muros.
 To find the foe! on every side they hedge the wall about
 imus in aduersos — quid cessas? an tibi Mauors
 Go we against them! — tarriest thou? and is thy Mars indeed
 uentosa in lingua pedibusque fugacibus istis 390
 A dweller in the windy tongue and feet well learned in speed,
 semper erit?
 The same today as yesterday?
 pulsus ego? aut quisquam merito, foedissime, pulsum
 — I beaten! who of right, O beast! shall brand me beaten man,
 arguet, Iliaco tumidum qui crescere Thybrim
 That seeth the stream of Ilian blood swelling the Tiber's flow,
 sanguine et Euandri totam cum stirpe uidebit
 Who seeth all Evander's house uprooted, laid alow;
 procubuisse domum atque exutos Arcadas armis? 395
 Who seeth those Arcadian men stripped of their battle-gear?
 haud ita me experti Bitias et Pandarus ingens
 Big Pandarus, stout Bitias, found me no craven there,
 et quos mille die uictor sub Tartara misi,
 Or all the thousand whom that day to Tartarus I sent,
 inclusus muris hostile aggere saeptus.
 When I was hedged by foeman's wall and mound's beleaguerment
 nulla salus bello? capiti cane talia, demens,
 No health in war? Fool, sing such song to that Dardanian head,
 Dardanio rebusque tuis. proinde omnia magno 400
 And thine own day! cease not to fright all things with mighty dread.
 ne cessa turbare metu atque extollere uiris

Cease not to puff up with thy pride the poor twice-conquered folk,
gentis bis uictae, contra premere arma Latini.

And lay upon the Latin arms the weight of wordy yoke.
nunc et Myrmidonum proceres Phrygia arma tremescunt,
Yea, sure the chiefs of Myrmidons quake at the Phrygian sword,
nunc et Tydides et Larisaeus Achilles,

Tydides and Achilles great, the Larissæan lord;
amnis et Hadriacas retro fugit Aufidus undas. 405

And Aufidus the flood flees back unto the Hadriac sea.

uel cum se pauidum contra mea iurgia fingit,
But now whereas this guile-smith fains to dread mine enmity,
artificis scelus, et formidine crimen acerbat.

And whetteth with a fashioned fear the bitter point of strife —
numquam animam talem dextra hac (absiste moueri)

Nay, quake no more! for this mine hand shall spill no such a life;
amittes: habitet tecum et sit pectore in isto.

But it shall dwell within thy breast and have thee for a mate. —
nunc ad te et tua magna, pater, consulta reuertor. 410

Now, Father, unto thee I turn, and all thy words of weight;
si nullam nostris ultra spem ponis in armis,

If every hope of mending war thou verily lay'st down;
si tam deserti sumus et semel agmine uerso

If we are utterly laid waste, and, being once overthrown,
funditus occidimus neque habet Fortuna regressum,
Have fallen dead; if Fate no more may turn her feet about,
oremus pacem et dextras tendamus inertis.

Then pray we peace, and deedless hands, e'en as we may, stretch out.
quamquam o si solitae quicquam uirtutis adesset! 415

Yet if of all our ancient worth some little yet abide,
ille mihi ante alios fortunatusque laborum

I deem him excellent of men, craftsman of his tide,
egregiusque animi, qui, ne quid tale uideret,

A noble heart, who, lest his eyes should see such things befall,
procubuit moriens et humum semel ore momordit.

Hath laid him down in death, and bit the earth's face once for all.
sin et opes nobis et adhuc intacta iuuentus

And if we still have store of force, and crop of youth unladen,

auxilioque urbes Italae populiue supersunt, 420
 And many a town, and many a folk of Italy to aid;
 sin et Troianis cum multo gloria uenit
 And if across a sea of blood the Trojan glory came,
 sanguine (sunt illis sua funera, parque per omnis
 And they too died, and over all with one blast and the same tempestas), cur indecores in limine primo
 The tempest swept; why shameless thus do our first footsteps fail?
 deficimus? cur ante tubam tremor occupat artus?
 Why quake our limbs, yea e'en before they feel the trumpet's gale?
 multa dies uariique labor mutabilis aevi 425
 A many things the shifting time, the long laborious days,
 rettulit in melius, multos alterna reuisens
 Have mended oft: a many men hath Fortune's wavering ways
 lusit et in solido rursus Fortuna locauit.
 Made sport of, and brought back again to set on moveless rock.
 non erit auxilio nobis Aetolus et Arpi:
 The Ætolian and his Arpi host help not our battle-shock.
 at Messapus erit felixque Tolumnius et quos
 Yet is Messapus ours, and ours Tolumnius fortunate,
 tot populi misere duces, nec parua sequetur 430
 And many a duke and many a folk; nor yet shall tarry late
 gloria delectos Latio et Laurentibus agris.
 The glory of our Latin lords and this Laurentian lea.
 est et Volscorum egregia de gente Camilla
 Here too Camilla, nobly born of Volscian stock, shall be,
 agmen agens equitum et florentis aere cateruas.
 Leading her companies of horse that blossom brass all o'er.
 quod si me solum Teucris in certamina poscunt
 But if the Teucrians me alone are calling to the war,
 idque placet tantumque bonis communibus obsto, 435
 And thus 'tis doomed, and I so much the common good withstand —
 non adeo has exosa manus Victoria fugit
 Well, victory hath not heretofore so fled my hated hand
 ut tanta quicquam pro spe temptare recusem.
 That I should falter from the play with such a prize in sight:
 ibo animis contra, uel magnum praestet Achillem

Fain shall I face him, yea, though he outgo Achilles' might,
 factaque Volcani manibus paria induat arma
 And carry battle-gear as good of Vulcan's fashioning,
 ille licet. uobis animam hanc soceroque Latino 440
 For you, and for Latinus here, my father and my king,
 Turnus ego, haud ulli ueterum uirtute secundus,
 I, Turnus, second unto none in valour of old years,
 deuoui. solum Aeneas uocat? et uocet oro;
 Devote my life. Æneas calls me only of the peers?
 nec Drances potius, siue est haec ira deorum,
 — O that he may! — not Drances here — the debt of death to pay
 morte luat, siue est uirtus et gloria, tollat.
 If God be wroth, or if Fame win, to bear the prize away.”
 Illi haec inter se dubiis de rebus agebant 445
 But while amid their doubtful fate the ball of speech they tossed,
 certantes: castra Aeneas aciemque mouebat.
 Contending sore, Æneas moved his camp and battle-host;
 nuntius ingenti per regia tecta tumultu
 And lo, amid the kingly house there runs a messenger
 ecce ruit magnisque urbem terroribus implet:
 Mid tumult huge, who all the town to mighty dread doth stir,
 instructos acie Tiberino a flumine Teucros
 With tidings how the Teucrian host and Tuscan men of war
 Tyrrhenamque manum totis descendere campis. 450
 Were marching from the Tiber flood, the meadows covering o'er.
 extemplo turbati animi concussaue uulgi
 Amazèd are the minds of men; their hearts with tremor shake,
 pectora et arrectae stimulis haud mollibus irae.
 And anger stirred by bitter stings is presently awake:
 arma manu trepidi poscunt, fremit arma iuuentus,
 In haste and heat they crave for arms; the youth cries on the sword,
 flent maesti mussantque patres. hic undique clamor
 The Fathers mutter sad and weep: with many a wrangling word
 dissensu uario magnus se tollit in auras, 455
 A mighty tumult goeth up, and toward the sky doth sweep:
 haud secus atque alto in luco cum forte cateruae
 Not otherwise than when the fowl amid the thicket deep

consedere auium, piscosoue amne Padusae
Sit down in hosts; or when the swans send forth their shrilling song
dant sonitum rauci per stagna loquacia cycni.
About Padusa's fishy flood, the noisy pools among.
'immo,' ait 'o ciues,' arrepto tempore Turnus,
"Come, fellow-folk," cries Turnus then, for he the time doth seize,
'cogite concilium et pacem laudate sedentes; 460
"Call ye to council even now, and sit and praise the peace,
illi armis in regna ruunt.' nec plura locutus
And let the armed foe wrack the realm!" Nor more he said withal,
corripuit sese et tectis citus extulit altis.
But turned about and went his ways from that high-builed hall.
'tu, Voluse, armari Volscorum edice maniplis,
Said he: "Volusus, lead away the Volscian ranks to fight,
duc' ait 'et Rutulos. equitem Messapus in armis,
And Rutuli! Messapus, thou, afield with horse and knight!
et cum fratre Coras latis diffundite campis. 465
Thou, Coras, with thy brother duke sweep down the level mead.
pars aditus urbis firment turrisque capessant;
Let some make breaches good, and some man the high towers with heed;
cetera, qua iusso, mecum manus inferat arma.'
And let the rest bear arms with me whereso my bidding sends."
Ilicet in muros tota discurritur urbe.
Then straightway, running in all haste, to wall the city wends.
concilium ipse pater et magna incepta Latinus
Sore shaken in his very heart, by that ill tide undone,
deserit ac tristi turbatus tempore differt, 470
His council Sire Latinus leaves and those great redes begun:
multaque se incusat qui non acceperit ultro
Blaming himself that he took not Æneas of free will,
Dardanium Aenean generumque ascuerit urbi.
Nor gave the town that Dardan lord the place of son to fill.
praefodiunt alii portas aut saxa sudesque
Now some dig dykes before the gate, or carry stones and stakes,
subuectant. bello dat signum rauca cruentum
And bloody token of the war the shattering trump awakes.

bucina. tum muros uaria cinxere corona 475

Mothers and lads, a motley guard, they crown the threatened wall,
matronae puerique, uocat labor ultimus omnis.

For this last tide of grief and care hath voice to cry for all.

nec non ad templum summasque ad Palladis arces

Moreover to the temple-stead, to Pallas' house on high,
subuehitur magna matrum regina caterua

The Queen goes forth hedged all about by matron company,

dona ferens, iuxtaque comes Lauinia uirgo,

And bearing gifts: next unto whom, the cause of all this woe,

causa mali tanti, oculos deiecta decoros. 480

With lovely eyes cast down to earth, doth maid Lavinia go.

succedunt matres et templum ture uaporant

They enter and with frankincense becloud the temple o'er,

et maestas alto fundunt de limine uoces:

And cast their woeful voices forth from out the high-built door:

'armipotens, praeses belli, Tritonia uirgo,

"O Weapon-great Tritonian Maid, O front of war-array,

frange manu telum Phrygii praedonis, et ipsum

Break thou the Phrygian robber's sword, and prone his body lay

pronus sterne solo portisque effunde sub altis.' 485

On this our earth; cast him adown beneath our gates high-reared!"

cingitur ipse furens certatim in proelia Turnus.

Now eager Turnus for the war his body did begird:

iamque adeo rutilum thoraca indutus aenis

The ruddy-gleaming coat of mail upon his breast he did,

horrebat squamis surasque incluserat auro,

And roughened him with brazen scales; with gold his legs he hid;

tempora nudus adhuc, laterique accinxerat ensem,

With brow yet bare, unto his side he girt the sword of fight,

fulgebatque alta decurrens aureus arce 490

And all a glittering golden man ran down the castle's height.

exultatque animis et spe iam praecipit hostem:

High leaps his heart, his hope runs forth the foeman's host to face:

qualis ubi abruptis fugit praesepia uinclis

As steed, when broken are the bonds, fleeth the stabling place,

tandem liber equus, campoque potitus aperto

Set free at last, and, having won the unfenced open mead,
 aut ille in pastus armentaque tendit equarum
 Now runneth to the grassy grounds wherein the mare-kind feed;
 aut adsuetus aquae perfundi flumine noto 495
 Or, wont to water, speedeth him in well-known stream to wash,
 emicat, arrectisque fremit ceruicibus alte
 And, wantoning, with uptossed head about the world doth dash,
 luxurians luduntque iubae per colla, per armos.
 While wave his mane-locks o'er his neck, and o'er his shoulders
 play.
 Obuia cui Volscorum acie comitante Camilla
 But, leading on the Volscian host, there comes across his way
 occurrit portisque ab equo regina sub ipsis
 Camilla now, who by the gate leapt from her steed adown,
 desiluit, quam tota cohors imitata relictis 500
 And in likewise her company, who left their horses lone,
 ad terram defluxit equis; tum talia fatur:
 And earthward streamed: therewith the Queen such words as this gave forth:
 'Turne, sui merito si qua est fiducia forti,
 "Turnus, if any heart may trust in manly might and worth,
 audeo et Aeneadum promitto occurrere turmae
 I dare to promise I will meet Æneas' war array,
 solaque Tyrrhenos equites ire obuia contra.
 And face the Tyrrhene knights alone, and deal them battle-play.
 me sine prima manu temptare pericula belli, 505
 Let my hand be the first to try the perils of the fight,
 tu pedes ad muros subsiste et moenia serua.'
 The while the foot-men townward bide, and hold the walls aright."
 Turnus ad haec oculos horrenda in uirgine fixus:
 Then Turnus answered, with his eyes fixed on the awful maid:
 'o decus Italiae uirgo, quas dicere grates
 "O glory of Italian land, how shall the thanks be paid
 quasue referre parem? sed nunc, est omnia quando
 Worthy thy part? but since all this thy great soul overflies,
 iste animus supra, mecum partire laborem. 510
 To portion out our work today with me indeed it lies.

Aeneas, ut fama fidem missique reportant
 Æneas, as our spies sent out and rumour saith for sure,
 exploratores, equitum leuia improbus arma
 The guileful one, his light-armed horse hath now sent on before
 praemisit, quaterent campos; ipse ardua montis
 To sweep the lea-land, while himself, high on the hilly ground,
 per deserta iugo superans aduentat ad urbem.
 Across the desert mountain-necks on for our walls is bound.
 furta paro belli conuexo in tramite siluae, 515
 But I a snare now dight for him in woodland hollow way
 ut biuias armato obsidam milite fauces.
 Besetting so the straitened pass with weaponed war-array.
 tu Tyrrhenum equitem conlatis excipe signis;
 But bear thy banners forth afield to meet the Tyrrhene horse,
 tecum acer Messapus erit turmaeque Latinae
 With fierce Messapus joined to thee, the Latin battle-force,
 Tiburtique manus, ducis et tu concipe curam.’
 Yea, and Tiburtus: thou thyself the leader’s care shalt take.”
 sic ait, et paribus Messapum in proelia dictis 520
 So saith he, and with such-like words unto the war doth wake
 hortatur sociosque duces et pergit in hostem.
 Messapus and his brother-lords; then ‘gainst the foeman fares.
 Est curuo anfractu ualles, accommoda fraudi
 There was a dale of winding ways, most meet for warlike snares
 armorumque dolis, quam densis frondibus atrum
 And lurking swords: with press of leaves the mountain bent is black
 urget utrimque latus, tenuis quo semita ducit
 That shutteth it on either side: thence leads a scanty track;
 angustaeque ferunt fauces aditusque maligni. 525
 By strait-jawed pass men come thereto, a very evil road:
 hanc super in speculis summoque in uertice montis
 But thereabove, upon the height, lieth a plain abode,
 planities ignota iacet tutique receptus,
 A mountain-heath scarce known of men, a most safe lurking-place,
 seu dextra laeuaue uelis occurrere pugnae
 Whether to right hand or to left the battle ye will face,
 siue instare iugis et grandia uoluere saxa.

Or hold the heights, and roll a storm of mighty rocks adown.

huc iuuenis nota fertur regione uiarum 530

Thither the war-lord wends his way by country road well known,
arripuitque locum et siluis insedit iniquis.

And takes the place, and bideth there within the wood accursed.

Velocem interea superis in sedibus Opim,

Meanwhile within the heavenly house Diana speaketh first

unam ex uirginibus sociis sacraque caterua,

To Opis of the holy band, the maiden fellowship,

compellabat et has tristis Latonia uoces

And words of grief most sorrowful Latonia's mouth let slip:

ore dabat: 'graditur bellum ad crudele Camilla, 535

"Unto the bitter-cruel war the maid Camilla wends,

o uirgo, et nostris nequiquam cingitur armis,

O maid: and all for nought indeed that dearest of my friends

cara mihi ante alias. neque enim nouus iste Dianae

Is girding her with arms of mine." Nought new-born was the love uenit amor subitaque animum dulcedine mouit.

Diana owned, nor sudden-sweet the soul in her did move:

pulsus ob inuidiam regno uirisque superbas

When Metabus, by hatred driven, and his o'erweening pride,

Priuerni antiqua Metabus cum excederet urbe, 540

Fled from Privernum's ancient town, his fathers' country-side,

infantem fugiens media inter proelia belli

Companion of his exile there, amid the weapon-game,

sustulit exsilio comitem, matrisque uocauit

A babe he had with him, whom he called from her mother's name
nomine Casmillae mutata parte Camillam.

Casmilla, but a little changed, and now Camilla grown.

ipse sinu prae se portans iuga longa petebat

He, bearing her upon his breast, the woody ridges lone

solorum nemorum: tela undique saeua premebant 545

Went seeking, while on every side the sword-edge was about,

et circumfuso uolitabant milite Volsci.

And all around were scouring wide the weaponed Volscian rout.

ecce fugae medio summis Amasenus abundans

But big lay Amasenus now athwart his very road,

spumabat ripis, tantus se nubibus imber
Foaming bank-high, such mighty rain from out of heaven had flowed.

ruperat. ille innare parans infantis amore
There, as he dight him to swim o'er, love of his babe, and fear
tardatur caroque oneri timet. omnia secum 550

For burden borne so well-beloved, his footsteps back did bear.
uersanti subito uix haec sententia sedit:

At last, as all things o'er he turned, this sudden rede he took:
telum immane manu ualida quod forte gerebat

The huge spear that in mighty hand by hap the warrior shook,
bellator, solidum nodis et robore cocto,

A close-knit shaft of seasoned oak with many a knot therein,
huic natam libro et siluestri subere clausam

Thereto did he his daughter bind, wrapped in the cork-tree's skin, implicat atque habilem mediae circumligat hastae; 555

And to the middle of the beam he tied her craftily;
quam dextra ingenti librans ita ad aethera fatur:

Then, shaking it in mighty hand, thus spoke unto the sky:

“alma, tibi hanc, nemorum cultrix, Latonia uirgo,

“O kind, O dweller in the woods, Latonian Virgin fair,

ipse pater famulam uoueo; tua prima per auras

A father giveth thee a maid, who holds thine arms in air

tela tenens supplex hostem fugit. accipe, testor,

As from the foe she flees to thee: O Goddess, take thine own,

diua tuam, quae nunc dubiis committitur auris.” 560

That now upon the doubtful winds by this mine arm is thrown!”

dixit, et adducto contortum hastile lacerto

He spake, and from his drawn-back arm cast forth the brandished wood;

immittit: sonuere undae, rapidum super amnem

Sounded the waves; Camilla flew across the hurrying flood,

infelix fugit in iaculo stridente Camilla.

A lorn thing bound to whistling shaft, and o'er the river won.

at Metabus magna propius iam urgente caterua

But Metabus, with all the band of chasers pressing on,

dat sese fluuio, atque hastam cum uirgine uictor 565

Unto the river gives himself, and reaches maid and spear,
 gramineo, donum Triuiæ, de caespite uellit.
 And, conquering, from the grassy bank Diana's gift doth tear.
 non illum tectis ullæ, non moenibus urbes
 To roof and wall there took him thence no city of the land,
 acceperè (neque ipse manus feritate dedisset),
 Nay, he himself, a wild-wood thing, to none had given the hand;
 pastorum et solis exegit montibus æuam.
 Upon the shepherd's lonely hills his life thenceforth he led;
 hic natam in dumis interque horrentia lustra 570
 His daughter mid the forest-brake, and wild deers' thicket-stead,
 armentalis equæ mammis et lacte ferino
 He nourished on the milk that flowed from herd-mare's untamed
 breast,
 nutribat teneris immulgens ubera labris.
 And to the maiden's tender lips the wild thing's udder pressed;
 utque pedum primis infans uestigia plantis
 Then from the first of days when she might go upon her feet,
 institerat, iaculo palmas armauit acuto
 The heft of heavy sharpened dart her hand must learn to meet,
 spiculaque ex umero paruæ suspendit et arcum. 575
 And from the little maiden's back he hung the shaft and bow;
 pro crinali auro, pro longæ tegmine pallæ
 While for the golden hair-clasp fine and long-drawn mantle's flow
 tigridis exuuiæ per dorsum a uertice pendent.
 Down from her head, along her back, a tiger's fell there hung.
 tela manu iam tum tenera puerilia torsit
 E'en then too from her tender hand a childish shot she flung,
 et fundam tereti circum caput egit habena
 The sling with slender smoothened thong she drave about her head
 Strymoniamque gruem aut album deiecit olorem. 580
 To bring the crane of Strymon down, or lay the white swan dead.
 multæ illam frustra Tyrrhena per oppida matres
 Then many a mother all about the Tyrrhene towns in vain
 optauere nurum; sola contenta Diana
 Would wed her to their sons; but she, a maid without a stain,
 æternum telorum et uirginitatis amorem

Alone in Dian's happiness the spear for ever loved,
intemerata colit. uellem haud correpta fuisset
For ever loved the maiden life.— "O had she ne'er been moved militia tali conata lacescere Teucros: 585
By such a war, nor dared to cross the Teucrian folk in fight!
cara mihi comitumque foret nunc una mearum.
Then had she been a maid of mine, my fellow and delight.
uerum age, quandoquidem fatis urgetur acerbis,
But since the bitterness of fate lies round her life and me,
labere, nympha, polo finisque inuise Latinos,
Glide down, O maiden, from the pole, and find the Latin lea,
tristis ubi infausto committitur omine pugna.
Where now, with evil tokens toward, sad battle they awake;
haec cape et ultricem pharetra deprome sagittam: 590
Take these, and that avenging shaft from out the quiver take,
hac, quicumque sacrum uiolarit uulnere corpus,
Wherewith whoso shall wrong with wound my holy-bodied may,
Tros Italusque, mihi pariter det sanguine poenas.
Be he of Troy or Italy, see thou his blood doth pay:
post ego nube caua miserandae corpus et arma
And then will I her limbs bewept, unspoiled of any gear,
inspoliata feram tumulo patriaeque reponam.'
Wrap in a hollow cloud, and lay in kindred sepulchre."
dixit, at illa leuis caeli delapsa per auras 595
She spoke; the other slipped adown the lightsome air of heaven,
insonuit nigro circumdata turbine corpus.
With wrapping cloak of mirky cloud about her body driven.
At manus interea muris Troiana propinquat,
But in meanwhile the Trojan folk the city draw anigh,
Etrusque duces equitumque exercitus omnis
The Tuscan dukes and all their horse in many a company
compositi numero in turmas. fremit aequore toto
Well ordered: over all the plain neighing the steed doth fare,
insultans sonipes et pressis pugnat habenis 600
Prancing, and champing on the bit that turns him here and there,
huc conuersus et huc; tum late ferreus hastis
And far and wide the lea is rough with iron harvest now.

horret ager campique armis sublimibus ardent.
And with the weapons tossed aloft the level meadows glow.
nec non Messapus contra celeresque Latini Messapus and the Latins swift, lo, on the other hand;
et cum fratre Coras et uirginis ala Camillae
And Coras with his brother-lord, and maid Camilla's band,
aduersi campo apparent, hastasque reductis 605
Against them in the field; and lo, far back their arms they fling
protendunt longe dextris et spicula uibrant,
In couching of the level spears, and shot spears' brandishing.
aduentusque uirum fremitusque ardescit equorum.
All is afire with neigh of steeds and onfall of the men.
iamque intra iactum teli progressus uterque
And now, within a spear-shot come, short up they rein, and then
substitat: subito erumpunt clamore furentisque
They break out with a mighty cry, and spur the maddened steeds;
exhortantur equos, fundunt simul undique tela 610
And all at once from every side the storm of spear-shot speeds,
crebra niuis ritu, caelumque obtexitur umbra.
As thick as very snowing is, and darkens down the sun.
continuo aduersis Tyrrhenus et acer Aconteus
And thereon with their levelled spears each against each they run,
conixi incurrunt hastis primique ruinam
Tyrrhenus and Aconteus fierce: in forefront of the fight
dant sonitu ingenti perfractaque quadripedantum
They meet and crash with thundering sound; wracked are the steeds outright,
pectora pectoribus rumpunt; excussus Aconteus 615
Breast beating in each breast of them: far is Aconteus flung
fulminis in morem aut tormento ponderis acti
In manner of the lightning bolt, or stone from engine slung;
praecipitat longe et uitam dispergit in auras.
Far off he falls, and on the air pours all his life-breath out.
Extemplo turbatae acies, uersique Latini
Then wildered is the war array; the Latins wheel about
reiciunt parmas et equos ad moenia uertunt;
And sling their targets all aback, and townward turn their steeds.

Troes agunt, princeps turmas inducit Asilas. 620

The Trojans follow; first of whom the ranks Asylas leads.

iamque propinquabant portis rursusque Latini

But when they draw anigh the gates once more the Latin men

clamorem tollunt et mollia colla reflectunt;

Raise up the cry, and turn about the limber necks again;

hi fugiunt penitusque datis referuntur habenis.

Then flee their foes, and far afield with loosened reins they ride;

qualis ubi alterno procurrens gurgite pontus

As when the sea-flood setting on with flowing, ebbing tide,

nunc ruit ad terram scopulosque superiacit unda 625

Now earthward rolling, overlays the rocks with foaming sea,

spumeus extremamque sinu perfundit harenam,

And with its bosom overwhelms the sand's extremity,

nunc rapidus retro atque aestu reuoluta resorbens

Now swiftly fleeing back again, sucks back into its deep

saxa fugit litusque uado labente relinquit:

The rolling stones, and leaves the shore with softly-gliding sweep.

bis Tusci Rutulos egere ad moenia uersos,

Twice did the Tuscans townward drive the host of Rutuli;

bis reiecti armis respectant terga tegentes. 630

Twice, looking o'er their shielded backs, afield they needs must fly;

tertia sed postquam congressi in proelia totas

But when they joined the battle thrice knit up was all array

implicuere inter se acies legitque uirum uir,

In one great knot, and man sought man wherewith to play the play.

tum uero et gemitus morientum et sanguine in alto

Then verily the dying groans up to the heavens went;

armaque corporaque et permixti caede uirorum

Bodies and arms lie deep in blood, and with the men-folk blent, semianimes uoluntur equi, pugna aspera surgit. 635

The dying horses wallow there, and fearful fight arose.

Orsilochus Remuli, quando ipsum horrebat adire,

Orsilochus with Remulus had scant the heart to close,

hastam intorsit equo ferrumque sub aure reliquit;

But hurled his shaft against the horse, and smote him 'neath the ear;

quo sonipes ictu furit arduus altaque iactat

The smitten beast bears not the wound, but, maddened, high doth rear
 uulneris impatiens arrecto pectore crura,
 The legs of him and breast aloft: his master flung away,
 uoluitur ille excussus humi. Catillus Iollan 640
 Rolls on the earth: Catillus there doth swift Iolas slay;
 ingentemque animis, ingentem corpore et armis
 Yea, and Herminius, big of soul, and big of limbs and gear,
 deicit Herminium, nudo cui uertice fulua
 Who went with head by nothing helmed save locks of yellow hair,
 caesaries nudique umeri nec uulnera terrent;
 Who went with shoulders all unarmed, as one without a dread,
 tantus in arma patet. latos huic hasta per amos
 So open unto fight was he; but through his shoulders sped
 acta tremit duplicatque uirum transfixa dolore. 645
 The quivering spear, and knit him up twi-folded in his pain.
 funditur ater ubique cruor; dant funera ferro
 So black blood floweth everywhere; men deal out iron bane,
 certantes pulchramque petunt per uulnera mortem.
 And, struggling, seek out lovely death amid the wounds and woe.
 At medias inter caedes exsultat Amazon
 But through the middle of the wrack doth glad Camilla go,
 unum exserta latus pugnae, pharetrata Camilla,
 The quivered war-maid, all one side stripped naked for the play;
 et nunc lenta manu spargens hastilia denset, 650
 And now a cloud of limber shafts she scattereth wide away,
 nunc ualidam dextra rapit indefessa bipennem;
 And now with all unwearied hand catcheth the twi-bill strong.
 aureus ex umero sonat arcus et arma Dianae.
 The golden bow is at her back, and Dian's arrow-song.
 illa etiam, si quando in tergum pulsa recessit,
 Yea, e'en and if she yielded whiles, and showed her back in flight,
 spicula conuerso fugientia derigit arcu.
 From back-turned bow the hurrying shaft she yet would aim aright.
 at circum lectae comites, Larinaque uirgo 655
 About her were her chosen maids, daughters of Italy,
 Tullaque et aeratam quatians Tarpeia securim,

Larina, Tulla, and Tarpeia, with brazen axe on high,
 Italides, quas ipsa decus sibi dia Camilla
 Whom that divine Camilla chose for joy and fame's increase,
 delegit pacisque bonas bellicue ministras:
 Full sweet and goodly hand-maidens in battle and in peace:
 quales Threiciae cum flumina Thermodontis
 E'en as the Thracian Amazons thresh through Thermodon's flood,
 pulsant et pictis bellantur Amazones armis, 660
 When they in painted war-gear wend to battle and to blood:
 seu circum Hippolyten seu cum se Martia curru
 Or those about Hippolyta, or round the wain of Mars
 Penthesilea refert, magnoque ululante tumultu
 Wherein Panthesilea wends, when hubbub of the wars
 feminea exsultant lunatis agmina peltis.
 The maiden-folk exulting raise, and moony shields uprear.
 Quem telo primum, quem postremum, aspera uirgo,
 Whom first, whom last, O bitter Maid, didst thou overthrow with spear?
 deicis? aut quot humi morientia corpora fundis? 665
 How many bodies of the slain laidst thou upon the field?
 Eunaeum Clytio primum patre, cuius apertum
 Eunæus, Clytius' son, was first, whose breast for lack of shield
 aduersi longa transuerberat abiete pectus.
 The fir-tree long smit through and through, as there he stood in face;
 sanguinis ille uomens riuos cadit atque cruentam
 He poureth forth a sea of blood, and, falling in his place,
 mandit humum moriensque suo se in uulnere uersat.
 Bites the red earth, and dying writhes about the bitter bane.
 tum Lirim Pagasumque super, quorum alter habenas 670
 Liris and Pagasus she slays; one, catching at the rein
 suffuso reuolutus equo dum colligit, alter
 Of his embowelled steed rolls o'er, the other as he ran
 dum subit ac dextram labenti tendit inermem,
 To aid, and stretched his swordless hand unto the fallen man,
 praecipites pariterque ruunt. his addit Amastrum
 Fell headlong too, and there they lie: with these Amastus wends,
 Hippotaden, sequiturque incumbens eminus hasta

The son of Hippotas; her spear in chase of men she sends,
 Tereaue Harpalycumque et Demophoonta Chromimque; 675
 Harpalycus, Demophoön, Tereus, and Chromis stout
 quotque emissa manu contorsit spicula uirgo,
 As many as her maiden hand the whirling darts send out
 tot Phrygii cecidere uiri. procul Ornytus armis
 So many Phrygian falls there are. Far off, in uncouth gear,
 ignotis et equo uenator Iapyge fertur,
 The hunter Ornytus upon Apulian steed doth fare,
 cui pellis latos umeros erepta iuuenco
 Whose warring shoulders bigly wrought with stripped-off bullock's
 hide
 pugnatori operit, caput ingens oris hiatus 680
 Are covered; but his head is helmed with wood-wolf's gaping wide,
 et malae texere lupi cum dentibus albis,
 A monstrous mouth, wherein are left the teeth all gleaming white:
 agrestisque manus armat sparus; ipse cateruis
 A wood-spear arms the hand of him, he wheels amid the fight,
 uertitur in mediis et toto uertice supra est.
 And by the head he overtops all other men about.
 hunc illa exceptum (neque enim labor agmine uerso)
 Him she o'ertakes, no troublous deed amid the fleeing rout,
 traicit et super haec inimico pectore fatur: 685
 And, slaying him, from bitter heart this word withal she spake:
 'siluis te, Tyrrhene, feras agitare putasti?
 "Tuscan, thou deem'st thee hunting still the deer amid the brake;
 aduenit qui uestra dies muliebribus armis
 The day has come when women's arms have cast thy boasting back:
 uerba redargueret. nomen tamen haud leue patrum
 Yet going to thy fathers' ghosts a word thou shalt not lack
 manibus hoc referes, telo cecidisse Camillae.'
 To praise thy life; for thou mayst say, Camilla was my bane."
 Protinus Orsilochem et Buten, duo maxima Teucrum 690
 Orsilochem and Butes next, two huge-wrought Trojans, gain
 corpora, sed Buten auersum cuspidē fixit
 Death at her hands: Butes aback she smit through with the spear
 loricam galeamque inter, qua colla sedentis

Betwixt the mail-coat and the helm, wherethrough the neck doth peer lucent et laeue dependet parma lacerto;
 As there he sits, and on his left hangs down the target round;
 Orsilochum fugiens magnumque agitata per orbem
 But from Orsilochus she flees, wide circling o'er the ground,
 eludit gyro interior sequiturque sequentem; 695
 Then, slipping inward of the ring, chaseth the chaser there,
 tum ualidam perque arma uiro perque ossa securim
 And, rising high, her mighty axe driveth through bones and gear.
 altior exsurgens oranti et multa precanti
 With blow on blow, mid all his prayers and crying out for grace,
 congeminat; uulnus calido rigat ora cerebro.
 Until his hot and bloody brain is flooding all his face.
 incidit huic subitoque aspectu territus haesit
 A man haps on her now, and stands afeard such sight to see;
 Appenninicolae bellator filius Auni, 700
 Of Aunus of the Apennines the warring son was he,
 haud Ligurum extremus, dum fallere fata sinebant.
 Great of Ligurians, while the Fates his guile would yet allow:
 isque ubi se nullo iam cursu euadere pugnae
 But he, since fleeing out of fight, would nought avail him now,
 posse neque instantem reginam auertere cernit,
 Nor knew he how in any wise to turn the Queen away,
 consilio uersare dolos ingressus et astu
 With rede of guile and cunning words began to play the play:
 incipit haec: 'quid tam egregium, si femina forti 705
 "What deed of fame, for woman's heart to trust a horse's might?
 fidis equo? dimitte fugam et te comminus aequo
 Wilt thou not set thy speed aside, and 'gainst me dare the fight
 mecum crede solo pugnaeque accinge pedestri:
 On equal ground, and gird thyself for foot-fight face to face?
 iam nosces uentosa ferat cui gloria fraudem.'
 See then to whom the windy fame shall bring the victory's grace!"
 dixit, at illa furens acrique accensa dolore
 He spake; but she, in bitter rage, and stung to her heart's root,
 tradit equum comiti paribusque resistit in armis 710
 Unto her fellow gave her steed and faced him there afoot,

ense pedes nudo puraque interrita parma.

Most unafear'd, with naked glaive and target bare and white.

at iuuenis uicisse dolo ratus auolat ipse

Thereat the youth deemed guile had won, and turned at once to flight;

(haud mora), conuersisque fugax aufertur habenis

Nought tarrying but to turn the reins, he fleeth on his road,

quadripedemque citum ferrata calce fatigat.

And ever with his iron heel the four-foot thing doth goad.

'uane Ligus frustra que animis elate superbis, 715

"Empty Ligurian, all in vain thine high heart dost thou raise,

nequiquam patrias temptasti lubricus artis,

And all in vain thou triest today thy father's crafty ways.

nec fraus te incolumem fallaci perferet Auno.'

Nor shall thy lying bring thee safe to lying Aunus' head."

haec fatur uirgo, et pernicibus ignea plantis

So spake the maid, and all afire on flying feet she sped,

transit equum cursu frenisque aduersa prehensis

Outwent the horse and crossed his road, and catching at the rein, congregitur poenasque inimico ex sanguine sumit: 720

There made her foeman pay for all with bloody steel-wrought bane,

quam facile accipiter saxo sacer ales ab alto

As easily the holy hawk from craggy place on high

consequitur pennis sublimem in nube columbam

In winged chase follows on the dove aloft along the sky,

compremsamque tenet pedibusque euiscerat uncis;

And taketh her in hookèd hold with bitter feet to tear,

tum cruor et uulsae labuntur ab aethere plumae.

While blood and riven feathers fall from out the upper air.

At non haec nullis hominum sator atque deorum 725

Nathless the Sower of manfolk and all the Godly Kind,

obseruans oculis summo sedet altus Olympo.

Upon Olympus set aloft, to this was nothing blind,

Tyrrhenum genitor Tarchonem in proelia saeua

And Tarchon of the Tyrrhene folk he stirreth up to war,

suscitat et stimulis haud mollibus inicit iras.

And stingeth all the heart of him with anger bitter-sore;

ergo inter caedes cedentiaque agmina Tarchon
 Who, borne on horse 'twixt death of men and faltering war-array,
 fertur equo uariisque instigat uocibus alas 730
 Goads on his bands unto the fight, and many a word doth say,
 nomine quemque uocans, reficitque in proelia pulsos.
 And calleth each man by his name, and bids the beaten stand:
 'quis metus, o numquam dolituri, o semper inertes
 "What fear, O hearts that nought may shame, O folk of deedless hand,
 Tyrrheni, quae tanta animis ignauia uenit?
 What dastardy, O Tyrrhene folk, hath now so caught your souls?
 femina palantis agit atque haec agmina uertit!
 A woman drives us scattering wide, and back our war-wall rolls.
 quo ferrum quidue haec gerimus tela inrita dextris? 735
 Why bear our hands these useless spears, this steel not made for
 fight?
 at non in Venerem segnes nocturnaque bella,
 Ye are not slack in Venus' play or battle of the night,
 aut ubi curua choros indixit tibia Bacchi.
 Or when the crookèd fife gives sign that Bacchus' dance is toward
 exspectate dapes et plenae pocula mensae
 Well wait ye onset of the feast and cups of plenteous board:
 (hic amor, hoc studium) dum sacra secundus haruspex
 Your love, your hearts, are there, whereas the lucky priest doth bid
 nuntiet ac lucos uocet hostia pinguis in altos!' 740
 The holy words, and victims fat call to the thickets hid."
 haec effatus equum in medios moriturus et ipse
 He spake, and, fain of death himself, against the foemen spurs, concitat, et Venulo aduersum se turbidus infert
 And full in face of Venulus his eager body bears,
 dereptumque ab equo dextra complectitur hostem
 And catcheth him by arm about, and tears him from his horse,
 et gremium ante suum multa ui concitus aufert.
 And bears him off on saddle-bow in grip of mighty force:
 tollitur in caelum clamor cunctique Latini 745
 Then goes the clamour up to heaven, and all the Latin eyes
 conuertere oculos. uolat igneus aequore Tarchon

Turn thitherward: but fiery-swift across the field he flies,
 arma uirumque ferens; tum summa ipsius ab hasta
 Bearing the weapons and the man; then from his foeman's spear
 defringit ferrum et partis rimatur apertas,
 Breaks off the head, and searches close for opening here and there
 qua uulnus letale ferat; contra ille repugnans
 Whereby to give the deadly wound: the foe doth ever fight,
 sustinet a iugulo dextram et uim uiribus exit. 750
 Thrusting the hand from threatened throat, and puts back might with
 might.
 utque uolans alte raptum cum fulua draconem
 As when a yellow erne aloft skyward a dragon draws,
 fert aquila implicitque pedes atque unguibus haesit,
 And knits him up within her feet and gripping of her claws:
 saucius at serpens sinuosa uolumina uersat
 But still the wounded serpent turns in many a winding fold,
 arrectisque horret squamis et sibilat ore
 And bristles all his spiky scales, and hissing mouth doth hold
 arduus insurgens, illa haud minus urget obunco 755
 Aloft against her; she no less through all his struggles vain
 luctantem rostro, simul aethera uerberat alis:
 Drives hookèd beak, and still with wings beats through the airy plain;
 haud aliter praedam Tiburtum ex agmine Tarchon
 E'en so from those Tiburtine ranks glad Tarchon bears the prey:
 portat ouans. ducis exemplum euentumque secuti
 And, following on their captain's deed, fall on amid the fray
 Maeonidae incurrunt. tum fatis debitus Arruns Mæonia's sons. But Arruns now, the foredoomed man of fate,
 uelocem iaculo et multa prior arte Camillam 760
 Encompassing Camilla's ways with spear and guile, doth wait
 circuit, et quae sit fortuna facillima temptat.
 On all her goings; spying out what hap is easiest.
 qua se cumque furens medio tulit agmine uirgo,
 Now, wheresoe'er the hot-heart maid amid the battle pressed,
 hac Arruns subit et tacitus uestigia lustrat;
 There Arruns winds, and silently holds watch on all her ways:
 qua uictrix redit illa pedemque ex hoste reportat,

And when from forth the foe she comes, bearing the victory's praise,
hac iuuenis furtim celeris detorquet habenas. 765

Still speedily in privy wise the rein he turns about:

hos aditus iamque hos aditus omnemque pererrat

This way he tries, that way he tries, still wandering in and out
undique circuitum et certam quatit improbus hastam.

On all sides; shaking spear of doom with evil heart of guile.

Forte sacer Cybelo Chloreus olimque sacerdos

Now Chloreus, bond of Cybele and priest upon a while,

insignis longe Phrygiis fulgebat in armis

Afar as happed in Phrygian gear gleamed out upon his steed,

spumantemque agitabat equum, quem pellis aenis 770

Foaming and goodly: clad was he in skin-wrought battle-weed,
in plumam squamis auro conserta tegebat.

With brazen scales done feather-wise, and riveted with gold,
ipse peregrina ferrugine clarus et ostro

And grand was he in outland red and many a purple fold;

spicula torquebat Lycio Gortynia cornu;

Gortynian arrows from afar with Lycian horn he sped;

aureus ex umeris erat arcus et aurea uati

Gold rang the bow upon his back; gold-mitred was his head

cassida; tum croceam chlamydemque sinusque crepantis 775

In priestly wise; his saffron scarf, the crackling folds of it

carbasseos fuluo in nodum collegerat auro

Of linen fine, in knot about a red-gold buckle knit;

pictus acu tunicas et barbara tegmina crurum.

His kirtle was embroidered fair, his hosen outland-wrought.

hunc uirgo, siue ut templis praefigeret arma

The maiden, whether Trojan gear for temple-gate she sought,

Troia, captiuo siue ut se ferret in auro

Or whether she herself would wend, glorious in war-got gold,

uenatrix, unum ex omni certamine pugnae 780

Amidst of all the press of arms this man in chase must hold

caeca sequebatur totumque incauta per agmen

Blind as a hunter; all unware amidst the war-array

femineo praedae et spoliolum ardebat amore,

She burned with all a woman's lust for spoil of men and prey:

telum ex insidiis cum tandem tempore capto
 When now, the time at last being seized, from out its lurking-place
 concitat et superos Arruns sic uoce precatur:
 Arruns drew forth his spear, and prayed the Gods above for grace:
 ‘summe deum, sancti custos Soractis Apollo, 785
 “Highest of Gods, Apollo, ward of dear Soracte’s stead,
 quem primi colimus, cui pineus ardor aceruo
 Whom we first honour, unto whom the piny blaze is fed;
 pascitur, et medium freti pietate per ignem
 Whom worshipping, we, waxen strong in might of godliness,
 cultores multa premimus uestigia pruna,
 The very midmost of the fire with eager foot-soles press —
 da, pater, hoc nostris aboleri dedecus armis,
 Almighty Father, give me grace to do away our shame!
 omnipotens. non exuias pulsaeue tropaeum 790
 No battle-gear, no trophies won from vanquished maid I claim,
 uirginis aut spolia ulla peto, mihi cetera laudem
 No spoils I seek; my other deeds shall bring me praise of folk;
 facta ferent; haec dira meo dum uulnere pestis
 Let but this dreadful pest of men but fall beneath my stroke,
 pulsa cadat, patrias remeabo inglorius urbes.’
 And me wend back without renown unto my father’s place!”
 Audiit et uoti Phoebus succedere partem
 Apollo heard, and half the prayer he turned his heart to grace,
 mente dedit, partem uolucris dispersit in auras: 795
 The other half he flung away adown the wind to go.
 sterneret ut subita turbatam morte Camillam
 That he by sudden stroke of death should lay Camilla low, —
 adnuit oranti; reducem ut patria alta uideret
 He granted this: that his high house should see his safe return,
 non dedit, inque Notos uocem uertere procellae.
 He granted not: the hurrying gusts that word to breezes turn.
 ergo ut missa manu sonitum dedit hasta per auras,
 So when the shaft hurled from his hand gave sound upon the air,
 conuertere animos acris oculosque tulere 800
 All Volscians turn their hardy hearts, and all men’s eyen bear
 cuncti ad reginam Volsci. nihil ipsa nec aurae

Upon the Queen: but she no whit had any breeze in mind,
nec sonitus memor aut uenientis ab aethere teli,
Or whistle of the spear that sped from out the house of wind,
hasta sub exsertam donec perlata papillam
Until the hurrying shaft beneath her naked bosom stood,
haesit uirgineumque alte bibit acta cruorem.
And clung there, deeply driven home, drinking her virgin blood.
concurrunt trepidae comites dominamque ruentem 805
Her frightened damsels run to her and catch the falling maid,
suscipiunt. fugit ante omnis exterritus Arruns
But Arruns fleeth fast, forsooth more than all they afraid —
laetitia mixtoque metu, nec iam amplius hastae
Afraid and glad — nor durst he more to trust him to the spear,
credere nec telis occurrere uirginis audet.
Or ‘neath the hail of maiden darts his body forth to bear.
ac uelut ille, prius quam tela inimica sequantur,
And as the murder-wolf, ere yet the avenging spear-points bite,
continuo in montis sese auisus abdidit altos 810
Straight hideth him in pathless place amid the mountain-height,
occiso pastore lupus magnouo iuueno,
When he hath slain some shepherd-lad or bullock of the fold;
consciis audacis facti, caudamque remulcens
Down goes his tail, when once he knows his deed so overbold,
subiecit pauitantem utero siluasque petiuit:
Along his belly close it clings as he the woodland seeks.
haud secus ex oculis se turbidus abstulit Arruns
Not otherwise from sight of men the wildered Arruns sneaks,
contentusque fuga mediis se immiscuit armis. 815
And mingles in the middle fight, glad to be clear away.
illa manu moriens telum trahit, ossa sed inter
Death-smitten, at the spear she plucks; amidst her bones it lay,
ferreus ad costas alto stat uulnere mucro.
About the ribs, that iron point in baneful wound and deep:
labitur exsanguis, labuntur frigida leto
She droopeth bloodless, droop her eyes acold in deadly sleep;
lumina, purpureus quondam color ora reliquit.
From out her cheeks the colour flees that once therewith were clear.

tum sic exspirans Accam ex aequalibus unam 820

Then, passing, Acca she bespeaks, her very maiden peer,
adloquitur, fida ante alias quae sola Camillae

Her who alone of all the rest might share Camilla's rede,
quicum partiri curas, atque haec ita fatur:

A trusted friend: such words to her the dying mouth doth speed:
'hactenus, Acca soror, potui: nunc uulnus acerbum

"Sister, thus far my might hath gone; but now this bitter wound
conficit, et tenebris nigrescunt omnia circum.

Maketh an end, and misty dark are grown all things around:
effuge et haec Turno mandata nouissima perfer: 825

Fly forth, and unto Turnus bear my very latest words;
succedat pugnae Troianosque arceat urbe.

Let him to fight, and from the town thrust off the Trojan swords —
iamque uale.' simul his dictis linquebat habenas

Farewell, farewell!" — And with the word the bridle failed her hold,
ad terram non sponte fluens. tum frigida toto

And unto earth unwilling now she flowed, and waxen cold
paulatim exsoluit se corpore, lentaque colla

Slowly she slipped her body's bonds; her languid neck she bent,
et captum leto posuit caput, arma relinquens, 830

Laid down the head that death had seized, and left her armament;
uitaque cum gemitu fugit indignata sub umbras.

And with a groan her life flew forth disdainful into night.
tum uero immensus surgens ferit aurea clamor

Then rose the cry and smote aloft the starry golden height,
sidera: deiecta crudescit pugna Camilla;

And with the Queen so felled to field the fight grew young again,
incurrunt densi simul omnis copia Teucrum

And thronged and serried falleth on the Teucrian might and main,
Tyrrenique duces Euandrique Arcades alae. 835

The Tuscan Dukes, Evander's host, the wings of Arcady.
At Triuiæ custos iamdudum in montibus Opis

But Opis, Dian's watch of war, set on the mountain high,
alta sedet summis spectatque interrita pugnas.

A long while now all unafear'd had eyed the battle o'er,
utque procul medio iuuenum in clamore furentum

And when far off, amid the cries of maddened men of war,
prospexit tristi mulcatam morte Camillam,
She saw Camilla win the death by bitter ill award,
ingemitque deditque has imo pectore uoces: 840
She groaned, and from her inmost heart such words as these she poured:

‘heu nimium, uirgo, nimium crudele luisti
“Alas, O maid, thou payest it o’ermuch and bitterly, supplicium Teucros conata lacescere bello!
That thou unto the Teucrian folk the challenge needs must cry.
nec tibi desertae in dumis coluisse Dianam

Ah, nothing it availed thee, maid, through deserts of the deer
profuit aut nostras umero gessisse pharetras.

To worship Dian, or our shafts upon thy back to bear.
non tamen indecorem tua te regina reliquit 845

And yet the Queen hath left thee not alone amidst of shame
extrema iam in morte, neque hoc sine nomine letum

In grip of death; nor shalt thou die a death without a name per gentis erit aut famam patieris inultae.

In people’s ears; nor yet as one all unavenged be told:
nam quicumque tuum uiolauit uulnere corpus

For whosoever wronged thy flesh with wounding overbold
morte luet merita.’ fuit ingens monte sub alto

Shall pay the penalty well earned.” Now ‘neath the mountains high,
regis Dercenni terreno ex aggere bustum 850

All clad with shady holm-oaks o’er, a mighty mound doth lie,
antiqui Laurentis opacae ilice tectum;

The tomb of King Dercennus called, Laurentum’s lord of yore;
hic dea se primum rapido pulcherrima nisu

And thitherward her speedy feet that loveliest Goddess bore,
sistit et Arruntem tumulo speculatur ab alto.

And there abiding, Arruns spied from off the high-heaped mound
ut uidit fulgentem armis ac uana tumentem,

But when the wretch in gleaming arms puffed up with pride she
found,

‘cur’ inquit ‘diuersus abis? huc derige gressum, 855

“Why,” quoth she, “dost thou turn away? Here, hither wend thy feet;

huc periture ueni, capias ut digna Camillae
Come here and perish; take reward for slain Camilla meet!
praemia. tune etiam telis moriere Dianae?
But ah, for death of such an one is Dian's arrow due?"
dixit, et aurata uolucrum Threissa sagittam
Then from the Thracian quiver gilt a wingèd shaft she drew,
deprompsit pharetra cornuque infensa tetendit
And bent the horn-wrought bow withal with heart on slaying set:
et duxit longe, donec curuata coirent 860
Far drew she, till the curving horns each with the other met:
inter se capita et manibus iam tangeret aequis,
Alike she strained her hands to shoot; the left hand felt the steel,
laeua aciem ferri, dextra neruoque papillam.
The right that drew the string aback her very breast did feel.
extemplo teli stridorem aurasque sonantis
Then straightway Arruns heard in one the bow-string how it rung,
audiit una Arruns haesitque in corpore ferrum.
And whistle of the wind; and there the shaft within him clung:
illum expirantem socii atque extrema gementem 865
His fellows leave him dying there and groaning out his last,
obliti ignoto camporum in puluere linquunt;
Forgotten in an unknown field, amid the sand downcast;
Opis ad aetherium pennis aufertur Olympum.
While to Olympus on the wing straightway is Opis borne.
Prima fugit domina amissa leuis ala Camillae,
But now first flees Camilla's band, their Queen and mistress lorn,
turbati fugiunt Rutuli, fugit acer Atinas,
And flee the beaten Rutuli, and fierce Atinas flees;
disiectique duces desolatique manipuli 870
The Dukes of men in disarray, the broken companies
tuta petunt et equis auersi ad moenia tendunt.
Now turn their faces to the town, and seek a sheltering place,
nec quisquam instantis Teucros letumque ferentis
Nor yet may any turn with spear upon the Teucrian chase,
sustentare ualet telis aut sistere contra,
That beareth death of men in hand, or bar the homeward road:
sed laxos referunt umeris languentibus arcus,

Cast back on fainting shoulders now the loose bow hangs a load;
quadripedumque putrem cursu quatit ungula campum. 875
The horny hoofs of four-foot things shake down the dusty mead,
uoluitur ad muros caligine turbidus atra
The mirky cloud of rolling dust doth ever townward speed;
pulis, et e speculis percussae pectora matres
And mothers beating of their breasts stand on the watch-towers high,
femineum clamorem ad caeli sidera tollunt.
And cast abroad their woman's wail up to the starry sky.
qui cursu portas primi inrupere patentis,
But they who in their fleeing first break through the open doors,
hos inimica super mixto premit agmine turba, 880
In mingled tumult on their backs a crowd of foemen pours;
nec miseram effugiunt mortem, sed limine in ipso,
Nor do they 'scape a wretched death: there, on the threshold-stead,
moenibus in patriis atque inter tuta domorum
Within their fathers' walls, amidst the peace of home, they shed
confixi exspirant animas. pars claudere portas,
The lives from out their bodies pierced: then some men shut the gate,
nec sociis aperire uiam nec moenibus audent
Nor durst they open to their friends, or take in them that wait
accipere orantis, oriturque miserrima caedes 885
Praying without; and there indeed is woeful slaughter towards
defendentum armis aditus inque arma ruentum.
Of them that fence the wall with swords, and rushers on the swords.
exclusi ante oculos lacrimantumque ora parentum
Those shut out 'neath the very eyes of weeping kith and kin,
pars in praecipitis fossas urgente ruina
Some headlong down the ditches roll, by fleeing rout thrust in;
uoluitur, immissis pars caeca et concita frenis
Some blindly and with loosened rein spur on their steeds to meet
arietat in portas et duros obice postis. 890
As battering-rams the very gates, the ruthless door-leaves beat
ipsae de muris summo certamine matres
And now, in agony of fight, the mothers on the walls,
(monstrat amor uerus patriae, ut uidere Camillam)
E'en as they saw Camilla do, (so love of country calls),

tela manu trepidae iaciunt ac robore duro
With hurrying hands the javelins cast, and in the iron's stead
stipitibus ferrum sudibusque imitantur obustis
Make shift of hardened pale of oak and stake with half-burned head.
praecipites, primaeque mori pro moenibus ardent. 895
Hot-heart they are, afire to die the first their town to save.
Interea Turnum in siluis saeuissimus implet
Meanwhile to Turnus in the woods sweeps in that cruel wave
nuntius et iuueni ingentem fert Acca tumultum:
Of tidings: trouble measureless doth Acca to him bring, —
deletas Volscorum acies, cecidisse Camillam,
The wasting of the Volscian host, Camilla's murdering,
ingruere infensos hostis et Marte secundo
The onset of the baneful foe with favouring Mars to aid;
omnia corripuisse, metum iam ad moenia ferri. 900
The ruin of all things; present fear e'en on the city laid,
ille furens (et saeua Iouis sic numina poscunt)
He, madly wroth, (for even so Jove's dreadful might deemed good),
deserit obsessos collis, nemora aspera linquit.
Leaveth the hills' beleaguerment and mirky rugged wood.
uix e conspectu exierat campumque tenebat,
Scarce was he out of sight thereof, and nigh his camp to win,
cum pater Aeneas saltus ingressus apertos
When mid the opened pass and bare Æneas entereth in,
exsuperatque iugum siluaque euadit opaca. 905
Climbeth the ridge, and slippeth through the thicket's shadowy night.
sic ambo ad muros rapidi totoque feruntur
So either toward the city fares with all their battle-might,
agmine nec longis inter se passibus absunt;
And no long space of way indeed there was betwixt the twain,
ac simul Aeneas fumantis puluere campos
For e'en so soon as far away Æneas saw the plain
prospexit longe Laurentiaque agmina uidit,
Through dusty reek, and saw withal Laurentum's host afar,
et saeuum Aenean agnouit Turnus in armis 910
Turnus the fierce Æneas knew in all array of war,
aduentumque pedum flatusque audiuit equorum.

And heard the marching footmen tramp, and coming horses neigh.
continuoque ineant pugnas et proelia temptent,
Then had they fallen to fight forthwith and tried the battle-play,
ni roseus fessos iam gurgite Phoebus Hiberno
But rosy Phoebus sank adown amidst Iberian flood
tingat equos noctemque die labente reducat.
His weary steeds, and brought back Night upon the failing day.
considunt castris ante urbem et moenia uallant.
So there they pitch before the town and make their ramparts good.

LIBER XII

BOOK XII.

Turnus ut infractos aduerso Marte Latinos
When Turnus sees the Latin men all failing from the sword,
defecisse uidet, sua nunc promissa reposci,
Broken by Mars, and that all folk bethink them of his word.
se signari oculis, ultro implacabilis ardet
And fall to mark him with their eyes, then fell he burns indeed,
attollitque animos. Poenorum qualis in aruis
And raises up his heart aloft; e'en as in Punic mead
saucius ille graui uenantum uulnere pectus 5
The smitten lion, hurt in breast by steel from hunters' ring,
tum demum mouet arma leo, gaudetque comantis
Setteth the battle in array, and joyfully doth fling
excutiens ceruice toros fixumque latronis
The mane from off his brawny neck, and fearless of his mood
impavidus frangit telum et fremit ore cruento:
Breaks off the clinging robber-spear, and roars from mouth of blood;
haud secus accenso gliscit uiolentia Turno.
E'en so o'er Turnus' fiery heart the tide of fury wins,
tum sic adfatur regem atque ita turbidus infit: 10
And thus he speaketh to the King, and hasty speech begins:
'nulla mora in Turno; nihil est quod dicta retractent
"No hanging back in Turnus is, and no Ænean thrall
ignauī Aeneadae, nec quae pepigere recusent:
Hath aught to do to break his word or plighted troth recall:
congregior. fer sacra, pater, et concipe foedus.
I will go meet him: Father, bring the Gods, the peace-troth plight;
aut hac Dardanum dextra sub Tartara mittam
Then either I this Dardan thing will send adown to night, —
desertorem Asiae (sedeant spectentque Latini), 15
This rag of Asia, — Latin men a-looking on the play,
et solus ferro crimen commune refellam,
And all alone the people's guilt my sword shall wipe away;

aut habeat uictos, cedat Lauinia coniunx.’
Or let him take us beaten folk, and wed Lavinia then!”
Olli sedato respondit corde Latinus:
But unto him from quiet soul Latinus spake again:
‘o praestans animi iuuenis, quantum ipse feroci
“Great-hearted youth, by e’en so much as thou in valorous might
uirtute exsuperas, tanto me impensius aequum est 20
Dost more excel, by so much I must counsel me aright,
consulere atque omnis metuentem expendere casus.
And hang all haps that may betide in those sad scales of mine.
sunt tibi regna patris Dauni, sunt oppida capta
Thine are thy father Daunus’ realms, a many towns are thine,
multa manu, nec non aurumque animusque Latino est;
Won by thine hand: Latinus too his gold and goodwill yields;
sunt aliae innuptae Latio et Laurentibus aruis
But other high-born maids unwed dwell in Laurentine fields
nec genus indecores. sine me haec haud mollia fatu 25
Or Latin land, — nay, suffer me to set all guile apart,
sublatis aperire dolis, simul hoc animo hauri:
And say a hard thing — do thou take this also to thine heart:
me natam nulli ueterum sociare procorum
To none of all her wooers of old my daughter may I wed;
fas erat, idque omnes diuique hominesque canebant.
This warning word of prophecy all men and Gods have sped.
uictus amore tui, cognato sanguine uictus
But by thy kindred blood o’ercome, and by the love of thee,
coniugis et maestae lacrimis, uincla omnia rupi; 30
And by my sad wife’s tears, I broke all bonds and set me free.
promissam eripui genero, arma impia sumpsi.
From son-in-law I rapt his bride, I drew a godless sword.
ex illo qui me casus, quae, Turne, sequantur
What mishaps and what wrack of peace have been my due reward
bella, uides, quantos primus patiare labores.
Thou seest, Turnus, and what grief I was the first to bear.
bis magna uicti pugna uix urbe tuemur
Twice beaten in a woeful fight, scarce is our city here
spes Italas; recalent nostro Thybrina fluenta 35

Held by the hope of Italy: still Tiber-flood rolls by,
sanguine adhuc campique ingentes ossibus al bent.
Warm with our blood, and 'neath our bones wide meadows
whitening lie.

quo referor totiens? quae mentem insania mutat?
But whither waver I so oft? what folly shifts my mind?

si Turno extincto socios sum ascire paratus,
If I am ready, Turnus dead, peace with these men to bind,
cur non incolumi potius certamina tollo?

Shall I not rather while thou liv'st cast all the war away?
quid consanguinei Rutuli, quid cetera dicet 40

What shall my kindred Rutuli, what shall Italia say,
Italia, ad mortem si te (fors dicta refutet!)

If I deliver thee to death, (Fate thrust the words aside!)
prodiderim, natam et conubia nostra petentem?

Thee, who hast wooed me for thy sire, my daughter for thy bride?
respice res bello uarias, miserere parentis

Look on the wavering hap of war, pity thy father's eld,
longaevi, quem nunc maestum patria Ardea longe
Now far from thee in sorrow sore by ancient Ardea held."
diuidit.' haudquaquam dictis uiolentia Turni 45

But not a whit might all these words the wrath of Turnus bend.
flectitur; exsuperat magis aegrescitque medendo.

Nay, worsed waxed he, sickening more by medicine meant to mend:
ut primum fari potuit, sic institit ore:

And e'en so soon as he might speak, such words were in his mouth:
'quam pro me curam geris, hanc precor, optime, pro me
"Thy trouble for my sake, best lord, e'en for my sake forsooth,
deponas letumque sinas pro laude pacisci.

Lay down, I prithee; let me buy a little praise with death.
et nos tela, pater, ferrumque haud debile dextra 50

I too, O father, sow the spear, nor weak hand scattereth
spargimus, et nostro sequitur de uulnere sanguis.

The iron seed, with me afield: the blood-springs know my stroke.
longe illi dea mater erit, quae nube fugacem

Nor here shall be his Goddess-dame with woman's cloud to cloak
feminea tegat et uanis sese occulat umbris.'

A craven king, and hide herself in empty mirky shade."
 At regina noua pugnae conterrita sorte
 But now the Queen, by this new chance of battle sore afraid,
 flebat et ardentem generum moritura tenebat: 55
 Fell weeping, as her fiery son she held with dying eyes:
 'Turne, per has ego te lacrimas, per si quis Amatae
 "O Turnus, by these tears, by what of worship for me lies
 tangit honos animum: spes tu nunc una, senectae
 Anigh thy heart; O, only hope of this my latter tide,
 tu requies miserae, decus imperiumque Latini
 Sole rest from sorrow! thou, in whom all worship doth abide,
 te penes, in te omnis domus inclinata recumbit.
 All glory of the Latin name, our falling house-wall stay!
 unum oro: desiste manum committere Teucris. 60
 Set not thine hand to Teucrian war; this thing alone I pray.
 qui te cumque manent isto certamine casus
 Whatever lot abideth thee, O Turnus, mid the fight,
 et me, Turne, manent; simul haec inuisa relinquam
 Abideth me, and I with thee will leave the loathed light;
 lumina nec generum Aenean captiua uidebo.'
 Nor will I, made Æneas' thrall, behold him made my son."
 accepit uocem lacrimis Lauinia matris
 Lavinia heard her mother's words with burning cheeks, whereon
 flagrantis perfusa genas, cui plurimus ignem 65
 Lay rain of tears, for thereunto exceeding ruddy flush
 subiecit rubor et calefacta per ora cucurrit.
 Had brought the fire that now along her litten face did rush:
 Indum sanguineo ueluti uiolauerit ostro
 As when the Indian ivory they wrong with blood-red dye,
 si quis ebur, aut mixta rubent ubi lilia multa
 Or when mid many lilies white the ruddy roses lie,
 alba rosa, talis uirgo dabat ore colores.
 E'en such a mingled colour showed upon the maiden's face.
 illum turbat amor figitque in uirgine uultus; 70
 Sore stirred by love upon the maid he fixed his constant gaze,
 ardet in arma magis paucisque adfatur Amatam:
 And, all the more afire for fight, thus to Amata said:

‘ne, quaeso, ne me lacrimis neue omine tanto
“I prithee, mother, with these tears, such sign of coming dread,
prosequere in duri certamina Martis euntem,
Dog not my feet as forth I wend to Mavors’ bitter play;
o mater; neque enim Turno mora libera mortis.
For Turnus is not free to thrust the hour of death away.
nuntius haec, Idmon, Phrygio mea dicta tyranno 75
Go, Idmon, bear the Phrygian lord these very words of mine,
haud placitura refer. cum primum crastina caelo
Nought for his pleasure: When the dawn tomorrow first shall shine,
puniceis inuecta rotis Aurora rubebit,
And from her purple wheels aloft shall redden all the sky,
non Teucros agat in Rutulos, Teucrum arma quiescant
Lead not thy Teucrians to the fight: Teucrians and Rutuli
et Rutuli; nostro dirimamus sanguine bellum, Shall let their swords be; and we twain, our blood shall quench the
strife,
illo quaeratur coniunx Lauinia campo.’ 80
And we upon that field shall woo Lavinia for a wife.”
Haec ubi dicta dedit rapidusque in tecta recessit, He spake, and to the roofed place now swiftly wending home,
poscit equos gaudetque tuens ante ora frementis,
Called for his steeds, and merrily stood there before their foam,
Pilumno quos ipsa decus dedit Orithyia,
E’en those that Orithyia gave Pilumnus, gift most fair,
qui candore niues anteirent, cursibus auras.
Whose whiteness overpassed the snow, whose speed the wingèd air.
circumstant properi aurigae manibusque lacesunt 85
The busy horse-boys stand about, and lay upon their breasts
pectora plausa cauis et colla comantia pectunt.
The clapping of their hollow hands, and comb their manèd crests.
ipse dehinc auro squalentem alboque orichalco
But he the mail-coat doth on him well-wrought with golden scale
circumdat loricam umeris, simul aptat habendo
And latten white; he fits the sword unto his hand’s avail:
ensemque clipeumque et rubrae cornua cristae,
His shield therewith, and hornèd helm with ruddy crest o’erlaid:

ensem quem Dauno ignipotens deus ipse parenti 90
That sword, the very Might of Fire for father Daunus made,
fecerat et Stygia candentem tinxerat unda.
And quenched the white-hot edge thereof amidst the Stygian flood.
exim quae mediis ingenti adnixa columnae
Then the strong spear he took in hand that 'gainst the pillar stood,
aedibus astabat, ualidam ui corripit hastam,
Amidmost of the house: that spear his hand won mightily
Actoris Aurunci spoliū, quassatque trementem
From Actor of Auruncum erst; he shakes the quivering tree
uociferans: 'nunc, o numquam frustrata uocatus 95
Loud crying: "Now, O spear of mine, who never heretofore
hasta meos, nunc tempus adest: te maximus Actor,
Hast failed my call, the day draws on: thee the huge Actor bore,
te Turni nunc dextra gerit; da sternere corpus
Now Turnus' right hand wieldeth thee: to aid, that I prevail
loricamque manu ualida lacerare reuulsam
To lay the Phrygian gelding low, and strip his rended mail
semiuri Phrygis et foedare in puluere crinis
By might of hand; to foul with dust the ringlets of his hair,
uibatos calido ferro murraque madentis.' 100
Becrisped with curling-irons hot and drenched with plenteous myrrh!"
his agitur furiis, totoque ardentis ab ore
By such a fury is he driven; from all his countenance
scintillae absistunt, oculis micat acribus ignis,
The fiery flashes leap, the flames in his fierce eyeballs dance:
mugitus ueluti cum prima in proelia taurus
As when a bull in first of fight raiseth a fearful roar,
terrificos ciet aut irasci in cornua temptat
And teacheth wrath unto his horns and whets them for the war,
arboris obnixus trunco, uentosque lacessit 105
And 'gainst the tree-trunks pusheth them, and thrusts the breezes home,
ictibus aut sparsa ad pugnam proludit harena.
And with the scattering of the sand preludeth fight to come.
Nec minus interea maternis saeuus in armis

Nor less Æneas, terrible, in Venus' armour dight,
 Aeneas acuit Martem et se suscitāt ira,
 Now whetteth war; and in his heart stirreth the wrath of fight,
 oblato gaudens componi foedere bellum.
 That plighted peace shall lay the war fain is his heart and glad;
 tum socios maestique metum solatur Iuli 110
 His fellows' minds and bitter fear that makes Iulus sad
 fata docens, regique iubet responsa Latino
 He solaceth with fate-wise words; then bids his folk to bear
 certa referre uiros et pacis dicere leges.
 His answer to the Latin king and peace-laws to declare.
 Postera uix summos spargebat lumine montis
 But scarce the morrow's dawn of day had lit the mountain steeps,
 orta dies, cum primum alto se gurgite tollunt
 And scarce the horses of the Sun drew upward from the deeps,
 Solis equi lucemque elatis naribus efflant: 115
 And from their nostrils raised aloft blew forth the morning clear,
 campum ad certamen magnae sub moenibus urbis
 When Trojans and Rutulian men the field of fight prepare,
 dimensi Rutulique uiri Teucrique parabant
 And measure out a space beneath the mighty city's wall.
 in medioque focos et dis communibus aras
 Midmost the hearths they hallow there to common Gods of all,
 gramineas. alii fontemque ignemque ferebant
 And grassy altars: other some bear fire, and fountain's flow,
 uelati limo et uerbena tempora uincti. 120
 All linen clad, and vervain leaves are crowning every brow.
 procedit legio Ausonidum, pilataque plenis
 Forth comes the host of Italy, the men that wield the spear
 agmina se fundunt portis. hinc Troius omnis
 Pour outward from the crowded gate; the Trojan host is there,
 Tyrrhenusque ruit uariis exercitus armis,
 And all the Tyrrhene company in battle-gear diverse,
 haud secus instructi ferro quam si aspera Martis
 Nor otherwise in iron clad, than if the War-god fierce
 pugna uocet. nec non mediis in milibus ipsi 125
 Cried on to arms: and in the midst of war-ranks thousandfold

ductores auro uolitant ostroque superbi,
 The dukes are flitting, well beseen in purple dye and gold,
 et genus Assaraci Mnestheus et fortis Asilas
 E'en Mnestheus of Assaracus, Asylas huge of force,
 et Messapus equum domitor, Neptunia proles;
 Messapus, Neptune's very son, the tamer of the horse.
 utque dato signo spatia in sua quisque recessit,
 But when the sign was given abroad each to his own place won,
 defigunt tellure hastas et scuta reclinant. 130
 And set his spear-shaft in the earth and leaned his shield thereon.
 tum studio effusae matres et uulgu inermum
 Then streamed forth mothers fain to see and elders feeble grown;
 inualidique senes turris ac tecta domorum
 The unarmed crowd beset the towers and houses of the town,
 obsedere, alii portis sublimibus astant.
 And others of the people throng the high-built gates around.
 At Iuno ex summo (qui nunc Albanus habetur;
 But Juno from the steep that men now call the Alban mound
 tum neque nomen erat neque honos aut gloria monti) 135
 (Though neither worship, name, nor fame it bore upon that day),
 prospiciens tumulo campum aspectabat et ambas
 Was looking down upon the lists and either war-array
 Laurentum Troumque acies urbemque Latini.
 Of Trojan and Laurentine men, and King Latinus' wall,
 extemplo Turni sic est adfata sororem
 Then upon Turnus' sister's ear her words of God did fall:
 diua deam, stagnis quae fluminibusque sonoris
 A goddess she, the queen of mere and sounding river-wave;
 praesidet (hunc illi rex aetheris altus honorem 140
 Which worship Jupiter the King, the Heaven-Abider gave Iuppiter erepta pro uirginitate sacrauit):
 A hallowed gift to pay her back for ravished maidenhood:
 'nympha, decus fluuiorum, animo gratissima nostro,
 "O Nymph, the glory of the streams, heart well-beloved and good,
 scis ut te cunctis unam, quaecumque Latinae
 Thee only, as thou know'st, I love of all who e'er have come
 magnanimi Iouis ingratum ascendere cubile,

Into the unkind bed of Jove from out a Latin home,
 praetulerim caelique libens in parte locarim: 145
 With goodwill have I granted thee the heavenly house to share;
 disce tuum, ne me incuses, Iuturna, dolorem.
 Therefore, Juturna, know thy grief lest I the blame should bear:
 qua uisa est Fortuna pati Parcaeque sinebant
 While Fortune would, and while the Fates allowed the Latin folk
 cedere res Latio, Turnum et tua moenia texi;
 A happy day, so long did I thy town and Turnus cloak;
 nunc iuuenem imparibus uideo concurrere fatis,
 But now I see him hastening on to meet the fated ill:
 Parcarumque dies et uis inimica propinquat. 150
 His doomsday comes, the foeman's hand shall soon his hour fulfil.
 non pugnam aspicere hanc oculis, non foedera possum.
 I may not look upon the fight, or see the waged field;
 tu pro germano si quid praesentius audes,
 But thou, if any present help thou durst thy brother yield,
 perge; decet. forsan miseros meliora sequentur.'
 Haste, it behoves thee! — happier days on wretches yet may rise."
 uix ea, cum lacrimas oculis Iuturna profundit
 Scarce spake she ere Juturna poured the tear-flood from her eyes,
 terque quaterque manu pectus percussit honestum. 155
 And thrice and four times smote with hand her bosom well beseen.
 'non lacrimis hoc tempus' ait Saturnia Iuno:
 "Nay, this is now no weeping-time," saith that Saturnian Queen,
 'accelera et fratrem, si quis modus, eripe morti;
 "Haste; snatch thy brother from the death if all be not undone,
 aut tu bella cie conceptumque excute foedus.
 Or wake up war and rend apart the treaty scarce begun;
 auctor ego audendi.' sic exhortata reliquit
 And I am she that bids thee dare." She urged her, and she left
 incertam et tristi turbatam uulnere mentis. 160
 Her wavering mind and turmoiled heart with sorrow's torment cleft.
 Interea reges ingenti mole Latinus
 Meantime the Kings — Latinus there, a world of state around,
 quadriiugo uehitur curru (cui tempora circum
 Is borne upon the fourfold car, his gleaming temples bound

aurati bis sex radii fulgentia cingunt,
 With twice six golden rays, the sign of his own grandsire's light,
 Solis aui specimen), bigis it Turnus in albis,
 The heavenly Sun; and Turnus wends with twi-yoked horses white,
 bina manu lato crispans hastilia ferro. 165
 Tossing in hand two shafts of war with broad-beat points of steel.
 hinc pater Aeneas, Romanae stirpis origo,
 And hither Father Æneas, spring of the Roman weal,
 sidereo flagrans clipeo et caelestibus armis
 Flaming with starry shield and arms wrought in the heavenly home,
 et iuxta Ascanius, magnae spes altera Romae,
 And next to him Ascanius young, the second hope of Rome,
 procedunt castris, puraque in ueste sacerdos
 Fare from the camp: the priest thereon, in unstained raiment due,
 saetigeri fetum suis intonsamque bidentem 170
 Offereth a son of bristly sow and unshorn yearling ewe,
 attulit admouitque pecus flagrantibus aris.
 And bringeth up the four-foot hosts unto the flaming place.
 illi ad surgentem conuersi lumina solem
 But they, with all eyes turned about the rising sun to face,
 dant fruges manibus salsas et tempora ferro
 Give forth the salt meal from the hand, and with the iron sign
 summa notant pecudum, paterisque altaria libant.
 The victims' brows, and mid the flame pour out the bowls of wine:
 Tum pius Aeneas stricto sic ense precatur: 175
 Then good Æneas draws his sword, and thuswise prays the prayer:
 'esto nunc Sol testis et haec mihi terra uocanti,
 "Bear witness, Sun, and thou, O Land, who dost my crying hear!
 quam propter tantos potui perferre labores,
 Land, for whose sake I waxed in might, sustaining toils enow;
 et pater omnipotens et tu Saturnia coniunx
 And Thou, Almighty Father, hear! Saturnian Juno thou,
 (iam melior, iam, diua, precor), tuque inclute Mauors,
 Grown kinder, Goddess, I beseech; and thou, most glorious Mars,
 cuncta tuo qui bella, pater, sub numine torques; 180
 Father, whose hand of utter might is master of all wars;
 fontisque fluuiosque uoco, quaeque aetheris alti

Ye Springs, and River-floods I call, and whatsoever God
 religio et quae caeruleo sunt numina ponto:
 Is in the air, or whatso rules the blue sea with its rod —
 cesserit Ausonio si fors uictoria Turno,
 If to Ausonian Turnus here Fortune shall give the day,
 conuenit Euandri uictos discedere ad urbem,
 The conquered to Evander's town shall straightly wend their way;
 cedet Iulus agris, nec post arma ulla rebelles 185
 Iulus shall depart the land, nor shall Æneas' folk
 Aeneadae referent ferroue haec regna lacescent.
 Stir war hereafter, or with sword the Latin wrath provoke.
 sin nostrum adnuerit nobis uictoria Martem
 But if the grace of victory here bow down upon our fight;
 (ut potius reor et potius di numine firment),
 — (As I believe, as may the Gods make certain with their might!) —
 non ego nec Teucris Italos parere iubebo
 I will not bid the Italian men to serve the Teucrian's will;
 nec mihi regna peto: paribus se legibus ambae 190
 Nor for myself seek I the realm; but all unconquered still
 inuictae gentes aeterna in foedera mittant.
 Let either folk with equal laws plight peace for evermore:
 sacra deosque dabo; socer arma Latinus habeto,
 The Gods and worship I will give, Latinus see to war;
 imperium sollemne socer; mihi moenia Teucri
 My father lawful rule shall have; for me my Teucrians here
 constituent urbique dabit Lauinia nomen.
 Shall build a city, and that home Lavinia's name shall bear."
 Sic prior Aeneas, sequitur sic deinde Latinus 195
 So first Æneas: after whom Latinus swears and says,
 suspiciens caelum, tenditque ad sidera dextram:
 Looking aloft, and stretching hands up towards the starry ways:
 'haec eadem, Aenea, terram, mare, sidera, iuro
 "E'en so, Æneas, do I swear by Stars, and Sea, and Earth, Latonaque genus duplex Ianumque bifrontem,
 By twi-faced Janus, and the twins Latona brought to birth,
 uimque deum infernam et duri sacraria Ditis;
 And by the nether Might of God and shrine of unmoved Dis;

audiat haec genitor qui foedera fulmine sancit. 200

And may the Sire who halloweth in all troth-plight hearken this:
tango aras, medios ignis et numina testor:

I hold the altars, and these Gods and fires to witness take,

nulla dies pacem hanc Italiam nec foedera rumpet,

That, as for Italy, no day the peace and troth shall break,

quo res cumque cadent; nec me vis ulla uolentem

What thing soever shall befall; no might shall conquer me.

auertet, non, si tellurem effundat in undas

Not such as with the wrack of flood shall mingle earth and sea,

diluuium miscens caelumque in Tartara soluat, 205

Nor such as into nether Hell shall melt the heavenly land.

ut sceptrum hoc' (dextra sceptrum nam forte gerebat)

E'en as this sceptre" — (for by chance he bore a staff in hand) —

'numquam fronde leui fundet uirgulta nec umbras,

"Shall never more to leafage light and twig and shadow shoot,

cum semel in siluis imo de stirpe recisum

Since when amid the thicket-place, cut off from lowest root,

matre caret posuitque comas et brachia ferro,

It lost its mother, and the knife hath lopped it, leaf and bough, —

olim arbor, nunc artificis manus aere decoro 210

A tree once, but the craftsman's hand hath wrapped it seemly now
inclusit patribusque dedit gestare Latinis.'

With brass about, and made it meet for hands of Latin lords."

talibus inter se firmabant foedera dictis

So in the sight of all the chiefs with such abundant words

conspectu in medio procerum. tum rite sacratas

They bound the troth-plight fast and sure: then folk in due wise slay

in flammam iugulant pecudes et uiscera uiuis

The victims on the altar-flame, and draw the hearts away

eripiunt, cumulantque oneratis lancibus aras. 215

Yet living, and with platters full the holy altars pile.

At uero Rutulis impar ea pugna uideri

But unto those Rutulian men unequal this long while

iamdudum et uario misceri pectora motu,

The fight had seemed, and in their hearts the mingled trouble rose;

tum magis ut propius cernunt non uiribus aequos.

And all the more, as nigher now they note the ill-matched foes,
 adiuuat incessu tacito progressus et aram
 This helpeth Turnus' silent step, and suppliant worshipping
 suppliciter uenerans demisso lumine Turnus 220
 About the altars, and his eyes that unto earth do cling,
 pubentesque genae et iuuenali in corpore pallor.
 His faded cheeks, his youthful frame that wonted colour lacks.
 quem simul ac Iuturna soror crebrescere uidit
 Wherefore Iaturna, when she hears the talk of people wax,
 sermonem et uulgi uariare labantia corda,
 And how the wavering hearts of men in diverse manner sway,
 in medias acies formam adsimulata Camerti,
 Like unto Camers wendeth now amidst of that array;
 cui genus a proauis ingens clarumque paternae 225
 — A mighty man, from mighty blood, his father well renowned
 nomen erat uirtutis, et ipse acerrimus armis,
 For valorous worth, and he himself keen in the battle found.
 in medias dat sese acies haud nescia rerum
 So through the mid array she speeds, well knowing what is toward,
 rumoresque serit uarios ac talia fatur:
 And soweth rumour on the wind and speaketh such a word:
 'non pudet, o Rutuli, pro cunctis talibus unam
 "O shame ye not, Rutulian men, to offer up one soul
 obiectare animam? numerone an uiribus aequi 230
 For all your warriors? lack we aught in might or muster-roll
 non sumus? en, omnes et Troes et Arcades hi sunt,
 To match them? Here is all they have — Trojans, Arcadian peers,
 fatalisque manus, infensa Etruria Turno:
 And that Etruscan Turnus' bane, the fateful band of spears:
 uix hostem, alterni si congregiamur, habemus.
 Why, if we meet, each second man shall scantily find a foe.
 ille quidem ad superos, quorum se deuouet aris,
 And now their king, upborne by fame, unto the Gods shall go,
 succedet fama uiuusque per ora feretur; 235
 Upon whose shrines he vows himself; his name shall live in tale.
 nos patria amissa dominis parere superbis
 But we shall lose our fatherland and 'neath proud lords shall fail,

cogemur, qui nunc lenti consedimus aruis.'

E'en those that sit there heavy-slow upon our fields today."

Talibus incensa est iuuenum sententia dictis

So with such words she lit the hearts of all that young array;

iam magis atque magis, serpitque per agmina murmur:

Yet more and more a murmur creeps about the ranks of men;

ipsi Laurentes mutati ipsique Latini. 240

Changed even are Laurentine folk; changed are the Latins then;

qui sibi iam requiem pugnae rebusque salutem

They who had hoped that rest from fight and peaceful days were won,

sperabant, nunc arma uolunt foedusque precantur

Are now but fain of battle-gear, and wish the troth undone,

infectum et Turni sortem miserantur iniquam.

For ruth that such a cruel fate on Turnus' head should fall.

his aliud maius Iuturna adiungit et alto

But unto these a greater thing Iaturna adds withal,

dat signum caelo, quo non praesentius ullum 245

A sign from heaven; and nought so much stirred Italy that day,

turbauit mentes Italas monstroque fefellit.

As this whose prodigy beguiled men's hearts to go astray:

namque uolans rubra fuluus Iouis ales in aethra

For now the yellow bird of Jove amid the ruddy light

litoreas agitabat auis turbamque sonantem

Was chasing of the river-fowl, and drave in hurried flight

agminis aligeri, subito cum lapsus ad undas

The noisy throng; when suddenly down to the waves he ran,

cycnum excellentem pedibus rapit improbus uncis. 250

And caught in greedy hookèd claws a goodly-bodied swan:

arrexere animos Itali, cunctaeque uolucres

Uprose the hearts of Italy, for all the fowl cry out,

conuertunt clamore fugam (mirabile uisu),

And, wonderful for eyes to see, from fleeing turn about,

aetheraque obscurant pennis hostemque per auras

Darken the air with cloud of wings, and fall upon the foe;

facta nube premunt, donec ui uictus et ipso

Till he, oppressed by might of them and by his prey held low,

pondere defecit praedamque ex unguibus ales 255

Gives way, and casts the quarry down from out his hookéd claws
proiecit fluuio, penitusque in nubila fugit.

Into the river, and aback to inner cloud-land draws.

Tum uero augurium Rutuli clamore salutant

Then to the sign the Rutuli shout greeting with one breath,
expediuntque manus, primusque Tolumnius augur

And spread their hands abroad; but first the seer Tolumnius saith:

‘hoc erat, hoc uotis’ inquit ‘quod saepe petiui.

“This, this is that, which still my prayers sought oft and o’er again.

accipio agnoscoque deos; me, me duce ferrum 260

I take the sign, I know the God! to arms with me, O men!

corripite, o miseri, quos improbus aduena bello

Poor people, whom the stranger-thief hath terrified with war.

terrítat inualidas ut auis, et litora uestra

E’en like these feeble fowl; who wastes the acres of your shore,

ui populat. petet ille fugam penitusque profundo

Yet shall he fly, and give his sails unto the outer sea:

uela dabit. uos unanimi densete cateruas

But ye, your ranks with heart and mind now serry manfully,

et regem uobis pugna defendite raptum.’ 265

And ward your ravished King and Duke with all your battle-world!”

dixit, et aduersos telum contorsit in hostis

He spake, and, running forth, a shaft against the foe he hurled.

procurrens; sonitum dat stridula cornus et auras

Forth whizzed the cornel through the air, cleaving its way aright,

certa secat. simul hoc, simul ingens clamor et omnes

And therewithal great noise outbreaks, and every wedge of fight

turbati cunei calefactaque corda tumultu.

Is turmoiled, and the hearts of men are kindled for the fray.

hasta uolans, ut forte nouem pulcherrima fratrum 270

On sped the shaft to where there stood across its baneful way

corpora constiterant contra, quos fida crearat

Nine fair-shaped brethren, whom whilom one faithful Tuscan wife

una tot Arcadio coniunx Tyrrhena Gylippo,

Amid Gylippus’ Arcad house brought forth to light and life:

horum unum ad medium, teritur qua utilis aluo

Now one of these, e'en where the belt of knitted stitches wrought
 balteus et laterum iuncturas fibula mordet,
 Chafed on the belly, and the clasp the joining edges caught,
 egregium forma iuuenem et fulgentibus armis, 275
 A youth most excellent of frame and clad in glittering gear —
 transadigit costas fulvaeque effundit harena.
 It pierced his ribs; on yellow sand it stretched him dying there.
 at fratres, animosa phalanx accensaque luctu,
 Thereat his brethren, a fierce folk, with grief and rage alight,
 pars gladios stringunt manibus, pars missile ferrum
 Some draw their swords and some catch up the steel of speedy flight, corripunt caecique ruunt. quos agmina contra
 And rush on blind: Laurentum's ranks, against them swift they go, procurrant Laurentum, hinc densi rursus inundant 280
 And thick the Trojans from their side the meadows overflow,
 Troes Agyllinique et pictis Arcades armis:
 Agyllans and Arcadian men with painted war array;
 sic omnis amor unus habet decernere ferro.
 And one lust winneth over all with point and edge to play.
 diripere aras, it toto turbida caelo
 They strip the altars; drifting storm of weapon-shot doth gain
 tempestas telorum ac ferreus ingruit imber,
 O'er all the heavens, and ever grows the iron battle-rain.
 craterasque focosque ferunt. fugit ipse Latinus 285
 The bowls and hearths they bear away: Latinus gets him gone,
 pulsatos referens infecto foedere diuos.
 Bearing aback the beaten Gods and troth-plight all undone,
 infrenant alii currus aut corpora saltu
 But other men rein in the car and leap upon the steed,
 subiciunt in equos et strictis ensibus adsunt.
 And there with naked swords they sit, all ready for the need.
 Messapus regem regisque insigne gerentem
 Messapus, fain to rend the troth, on hostile horse down-bears
 Tyrrhenum Aulesten, auidus confundere foedus, 290
 Upon Aulestes, Tuscan king, who kingly raiment wears:
 aduerso proterret equo; ruit ille recedens
 He fled, but as abackward there away from him he went,

et miser oppositis a tergo inuoluitur aris
 Came on the altars at his back in hapless tanglement
 in caput inque umeros. at feruidus aduolat hasta
 Of head and shoulders: thitherward doth hot Messapus fly
 Messapus teloque orantem multa trabali
 With spear in hand, and from his steed he smites him heavily
 desuper altus equo grauiter ferit atque ita fatur: 295
 With the great beam amid his prayers, and word withal doth say:
 ‘hoc habet, haec melior magnis data uictima diuis.’
 “He hath it, and the Gods have got a better host today!”
 concurrunt Itali spoliantque calentia membra.
 Therewith to strip his body warm up runs the Italian band;
 obuius ambustum torrem Corynaeus ab ara
 But Corynaeus from the hearth catches a half-burnt brand,
 corripit et uenienti Ebyso plagamque ferenti
 And e’en as Ebusus comes up, and stroke in hand doth bear,
 occupat os flammis: olli ingens barba reluxit 300
 He filleth all his face with flame; out doth his great beard flare,
 nidoremque ambusta dedit. super ipse secutus
 And sendeth stink of burning forth: the Trojan followed on
 caesariem laeua turbati corripit hostis
 The wildered man, and with his left grip of his tresses won,
 impressoque genu nitens terrae applicat ipsum;
 And, straining hard with weight of knee, to earth he pinned his foe,
 sic rigido latus ense ferit. Podalirius Alsum
 And drave the stark sword through his side. See Podalirius go,
 pastorem primaque acie per tela ruentem 305
 Chasing the shepherd Alsus through the front of weapon-wrack;
 ense sequens nudo superimminet; ille securi
 O’er him he hangs with naked sword; but he, with bill swung back, aduersi frontem mediam mentumque reducta
 Cleaveth the foeman facing him through midmost brow and chin,
 dissicit et sparso late rigat arma cruore.
 And all about his battle-gear the bloody rain doth win:
 olli dura quies oculos et ferreus urget
 Then iron slumber fell on him, hard rest weighed down his eyes,
 somnus, in aeternam conduntur lumina noctem. 310

And shut were they for evermore in night that never dies.
 At pius Aeneas dextram tendebat inermem
 Then good Æneas stretched forth hands all empty of the sword,
 nudato capite atque suos clamore uocabat:
 And called bare-headed on his folk, with eager shouted word:
 ‘quo ruitis? quaeue ista repens discordia surgit?
 “Where rush ye on, and whither now doth creeping discord rise?
 o cohibete iras! ictum iam foedus et omnes
 Refrain your wrath; the troth is struck; its laws in equal wise
 compositae leges. mihi ius concurrere soli; ³¹⁵
 Are doomed; and ’tis for me alone the battle to endure.
 me sinite atque auferte metus. ego foedera faxo
 Nay, let me be! cast fear away; my hand shall make it sure.
 firma manu; Turnum debent haec iam mihi sacra.’
 This troth-pledge, all these holy things, owe Turnus to my sword.”
 has inter uoces, media inter talia uerba
 But while his voice was sounding, lo, amidmost of his word,
 ecce uiro stridens alis adlapsa sagitta est,
 A whistling speedy-wingèd shaft unto the hero won;
 incertum qua pulsa manu, quo turbine adacta, ³²⁰
 Unknown what hand hath sped it forth, what whirlwind bore it on;
 quis tantam Rutulis laudem, casusne deusne,
 What God, what hap, such glory gave to hands of Rutuli;
 attulerit; pressa est insignis gloria facti,
 Beneath the weight of things unknown dead doth the honour lie,
 nec sese Aeneae iactauit uulnere quisquam.
 Nor boasted any of the hurt Æneas had that day.
 Turnus ut Aenean cedentem ex agmine uidit
 But Turnus, when he saw the King give back from that array,
 turbatosque duces, subita spe feruidus ardet; ³²⁵
 And all the turmoil of the Dukes, with hope his heart grew fain;
 poscit equos atque arma simul, saltuque superbus
 He cried for horse and arms, and leapt aloft to battle-wain,
 emicat in currum et manibus molitur habenas.
 And high of heart set on apace, the bridle in his hand;
 multa uirum uolitans dat fortia corpora leto.
 And many a brave man there he gave unto the deadly land,

seminecis uoluit multos: aut agmina curru

And rolled o'er wounded men in heaps, and high in car wore down
proterit aut raptas fugientibus ingerit hastas. 330

The ranks of men; and fleers' spears from out his hand were thrown:
qualis apud gelidi cum flumina concitus Hebrī

E'en as when litten up to war by Hebrus' chilly flood
sanguineus Mauors clipeo increpat atque furentis

Red Mavors beateth on his shield, and rouseth fightful mood
bella mouens immittit equos, illi aequore aperto

Amid the fury of his steeds, who o'er the level lea
ante Notos Zephyrumque uolant, gemit ultima pulsu

In uttermost hoof-smitten Thrace the south and west outflee.
Thraca pedum circumque atrae Formidinis ora 335

And lo, the fellows of the God, the black Fear's bitter face,
Iraeque Insidiaequae, dei comitatus, aguntur:

The Rage of men, the Guile of War anigh him wend apace:
talis equos alacer media inter proelia Turnus

E'en so amid the battle-field his horses Turnus sped,
fumantis sudore quatit, miserabile caesis

Reeking with sweat: there tramples he the woeful heaps of dead,
hostibus insultans; spargit rapida ungula rores

The hurrying hoofs go scattering wide a drift of bloody rain;
sanguineos mixtaque cruor calcatur harena. 340

The gore, all blent with sandy dust, is pounded o'er the plain.
iamque neci Sthenelumque dedit Thamyrumque Pholumque,

To death he casteth Sthenelus, Pholus, and Thamyris;
hunc congressus et hunc, illum eminus; eminus ambo

Those twain anigh, but him afar; from far the bane he is Imbrasidas, Glaucum atque Laden, quos Imbrasus ipse

Of Glaucus and of Lades, sons of Imbrasus, whom he
nutrierat Lycia paribusque ornauerat armis

In Lycia bred a while agone, and armed them equally
uel conferre manum uel equo praeuertere uentos. 345

To fight anigh, or on their steeds the winds to overrun.
Parte alia media Eumedes in proelia fertur,

But otherwhere amidst the fight Eumedes fareth on,
antiqui proles bello praeclara Dolonis,

The son of Dolon of old time, most well-renowned in fight,
 nomine aum referens, animo manibusque parentem,
 And bringing back his father's name in courage and in might:
 qui quondam, castra ut Danaum speculator adiret,
 For that was he who while agone the Danaan camp espied,
 ausus Pelidae pretium sibi poscere currus; 350
 And chose Achilles' car for spoil in his abundant pride:
 illum Tydides alio pro talibus ausis
 But otherwise Tydides paid for such a deed o'erbold,
 adfecit pretio nec equis aspirat Achilli.
 And no more had he any hope Achilles' steeds to hold.
 hunc procul ut campo Turnus prospexit aperto,
 So Turnus, when adown the lea this warrior he had seen,
 ante leui iaculo longum per inane secutus
 First a light spear he sent in chase across the void between,
 sistit equos biugis et curru desilit atque 355
 Then stayed his steeds, and leaping down unto the fallen ran,
 semianimi lapsoque superuenit, et pede collo
 And set his foot upon the neck of that scarce-breathing man,
 impresso dextrae mucronem extorquet et alto
 And from his right hand wrenched the sword and bathed its glittering blade
 fulgentem tingit iugulo atque haec insuper addit:
 Deep in his throat, and therewithal such spoken chiding said:
 'en agros et, quam bello, Troiane, petisti,
 "Down, Trojan! measure out the mead, and that Hesperean land
 Hesperiam metire iacens: haec praemia, qui me 360
 Thou sought'st in war: such are the gifts that fall unto the hand
 ferro ausi temptare, ferunt, sic moenia condunt.'
 Of those that dare the sword with me; such city-walls they raise!"
 huic comitem Asbyten coniecta cuspide mittit
 Asbutes wends 'neath spear-cast then, a fellow of his ways;
 Chloreaque Sybarimque Daretaque Thersilochumque
 Chloreus, Dares, Thersilochus, and Sybaris, withal;
 et sternacis equi lapsum ceruice Thymoeten.
 Thymoetes, who from rearing horse had hap to catch a fall;
 ac uelut Edoni Boreae cum spiritus alto 365

And e'en as when the breathing forth of Thracian Boreas roars
 insonat Aegaeo sequiturque ad litora fluctus,
 O'er deep Ægean, driving on the wave-press to the shores,
 qua uenti incubuere, fugam dant nubila caelo:
 Then wheresoe'er the wind stoops down the clouds flee heaven
 apace;
 sic Turno, quacumque uiam secat, agmina cedunt
 So wheresoe'er cleaves Turnus way all battle giveth place,
 conuersaeque ruunt acies; fert impetus ipsum
 All war-array is turned to wrack: his onrush beareth him,
 et cristam aduerso curru quatit aura uolantem. 370
 And in the breeze that meets his car his tossing crest doth swim.
 non tulit instantem Phegeus animisque frementem
 This onset of the maddened heart nought Phegeus might abide,
 obiecit sese ad currum et spumantia frenis
 But cast himself before the steeds, and caught and wrenched aside
 ora citatorum dextra detorsit equorum.
 The bit-befoaming mouths of them, the heart-stung hurrying steeds.
 dum trahitur pendetque iugis, hunc lata reiectum
 But while he hangeth dragged along, the spear broad-headed speeds
 lancea consequitur rumpitque infixam bilicem 375
 Unto his shieldless side, and rends the twinkled coat of mail,
 lorica et summum degustat uulnere corpus.
 And for the razing of his flesh a little doth avail:
 ille tamen clipeo obiecto conuersus in hostem
 But he turned round about his shield and at the foemen made,
 ibat et auxilium ducto mucrone petebat,
 And from his naked sword drawn forth sought most well-needed aid;
 cum rota praecipitem et procursu concitus axis
 When now the axle-tree and wheel, unto fresh speeding won,
 impulit effunditque solo, Turnusque secutus 380
 Cast him down headlong unto earth, and Turnus following on,
 imam inter galeam summi thoracis et oras
 Betwixt the lowest of the helm and haubert's upper lip
 abstulit ense caput truncumque reliquit harenae.
 Sheared off his head, and left the trunk upon the sand to slip.
 Atque ea dum campis uictor dat funera Turnus,

But while victorious Turnus gives these deaths unto the plain,
interea Aenean Mnestheus et fidus Achates

Mnestheus and that Achates leal, Ascanius with the twain,
Ascaniusque comes castris statuere cruentum 385

Bring great Æneas to the camp all covered with his blood;
alternos longa nitentem cuspidē gressus.

There, propping up his halting steps with spear-shaft long, he stood:
saeuit et infracta luctatur harundine telum

Mad wroth he is, and strives to pluck the broken reed away,
eripere auxilioque uiam, quae proxima, poscit:

And bids them help by any road, the swiftest that they may,
ense secant lato uulnus telique latebram

To cut away the wound with sword, cut to the hiding-place
rescindant penitus, seseque in bella remittant. 390

Where lies the steel, and send him back to meet the battle's face.
iamque aderat Phoebō ante alios dilectus Iapyx

Iapis, son of Iasus, by Phoebus best beloved,
Iasides, acri quondam cui captus amore

Draws nigh now: Phoebus on a time, by mighty longing moved,
ipse suas artis, sua munera, laetus Apollo

Was fain to give him gifts of God, his very heavenly craft —
augurium citharamque dabat celerisque sagittas.

Foresight, or skill of harp-playing, or mastery of the shaft:
ille, ut depositi proferret fata parentis, 395

But he, that from his bed-rid sire the death he yet might stave,
scire potestates herbarum usumque medendi

Would liefer know the might of herbs, and how men heal and save,
maluit et mutas agitare inglorius artis.

And, speeding of a silent craft, inglorious life would wear.
stabat acerba fremens ingentem nixus in hastam

Æneas, fretting bitterly, stood leaning on his spear
Aeneas magno iuuenum et maerentis Iuli

Midst a great concourse of the lords, with sad Iulus by,
concurso, lacrimis immobilis. ille retorto 400

Unmoved amid their many tears: the elder, girded high
Paeonium in morem senior succinctus amictu

In folded gown, in e'en such wise as Pæon erst was dight,

multa manu medica Phoebique potentibus herbis
 With hurrying hand speeds many a salve of Phoebus' herbs of might;
 nequiquam trepidat, nequiquam spicula dextra
 But all in vain: his right hand woos the arrow-head in vain;
 sollicitat prensatque tenaci forcipe ferrum.
 For nought the teeth of pincers grip the iron of the bane;
 nulla uiam Fortuna regit, nihil auctor Apollo 405
 No happy road will Fortune show, no help Apollo yields:
 subuenit, et saeuus campis magis ac magis horror
 And grimly terror more and more prevaileth o'er the fields,
 crebrescit propiusque malum est. iam puluere caelum
 And nigher draws the evil hour: they see the dusty pall
 stare uident: subeunt equites et spicula castris
 Spread o'er the heaven; draw horsemen nigh, and shafts begin to fall
 densa cadunt mediis. ita tristis ad aethera clamor Thick in the midmost of the camp: grim clamour smites the stars,
 bellantum iuuenum et duro sub Marte cadentum. 410
 The shouts of men, the cries of men that fall in game of Mars.
 Hic Venus indigno nati concussa dolore
 Now Mother Venus, sore at heart for her sore-wounded son,
 dictamnum genetrix Cretaea carpit ab Ida,
 Plucketh a stalk of dittany from Cretan Ida won,
 puberibus caulem foliis et flore comantem
 That with a downy leaf of grey and purple head doth grow,
 purpureo; non illa feris incognita capris
 And well enough the mountain-goats the herbage of it know
 gramina, cum tergo uolucres haesere sagittae. 415
 What time the winged shaft of man within them clingeth sore.
 hoc Venus obscuro faciem circumdata nimbo
 This Venus brought, with cloudy cloak her body covered o'er,
 detulit, hoc fustum labris splendentibus amnem
 This in the waves of glittering rims she steepeth privily,
 inficit occulte medicans, spargitque salubris
 Drugging the cup, and wholesome juice withal there blendeth she,
 ambrosiae sucos et odoriferam panaceam.
 Wrought of ambrosia; heal-all too most sweet of heavenly smell.
 fouit ea uulnus lymphae longaeuus Iapyx 420

So with that stream Iapis old the shaft-wound cherished well
 ignorans, subitoque omnis de corpore fugit
 Unwitting: sudden from the flesh all grievance doth depart,
 quippe dolor, omnis stetit imo uulnere sanguis.
 And all the blood is staunch'd at once up from the wound's deep heart,
 iamque secuta manum nullo cogente sagitta
 And comes the shaft unto the hand with nought to force it forth,
 excidit, atque nouae rediere in pristina uires.
 And freshly to the king returns his ancient might and worth.
 'arma citi properate uiro! quid statis?' Iapyx 425
 Then cries Iapis: "Loiter ye? arms for the hero then!"
 conclamat primusque animos accendit in hostem.
 And he is first against the foe to whet the hearts of men.
 'non haec humanis opibus, non arte magistra
 "Lo, not from any help of man, nor from art's mastery
 proueniunt, neque te, Aenea, mea dextera seruat:
 These things have happed, nor hath mine hand, Æneas, holpen thee.
 maior agit deus atque opera ad maiora remittit.'
 A great God wrought to send thee back great deeds of fame to win."
 ille audius pugnae suras incluserat auro 430
 Then, fain of fight, on either side the king his legs shuts in
 hinc atque hinc oditque moras hastamque coruscat.
 With ruddy gold: he loathes delay, and high his war-shaft shakes;
 postquam habilis lateri clipeus loricaque tergo est,
 And then his left side meets the shield, his back the hauberk takes,
 Ascanium fuis circum complectitur armis
 And round Iulus casteth he a steel-clad man's embrace,
 summaque per galeam delibans oscula fatur:
 And saith, but lightly kissing him from midst the helmet's space:
 'disce, puer, uirtutem ex me uerumque laborem, 435
 "Child, the bare valour learn of me and very earthly toil,
 fortunam ex aliis. nunc te mea dextera bello
 Good-hap of others; my right hand shall ward thee in the broil defensum dabit et magna inter praemia ducet.
 These days that are, and gain for thee exceeding great rewards;
 tu facito, mox cum matura adoleuerit aetas,

But thou, when ripe thine age shall grow, remember well the swords;
sis memor et te animo repetentem exempla tuorum

Then as thine heart seeks through the past for kin to show the road,
et pater Aeneas et auunculus excitet Hector.’ 440

Well shall thy sire Æneas stir, thine uncle Hector goad.”

Haec ubi dicta dedit, portis sese extulit ingens

But when these words are cast abroad, huge through the gate he goes,
telum immane manu quatiens; simul agmine denso

Shaking in hand a mighty spear; then in arrayment close

Antheusque Mnestheusque ruunt, omnisque relictis

Antheus and Mnestheus rush to war: the camp is left behind,

turba fluit castris. tum caeco puluere campus

And all the host flows forth; the fields are blent with dust-cloud blind,

miscetur pulsuque pedum tremit excita tellus. 445

And, stirred by trample of the feet, the earth’s face trembleth sore.

uidit ab aduerso uenientis aggere Turnus,

But Turnus from a facing mound beheld that coming war.

uidere Ausonii, gelidusque per ima cucurrit

The Ausonians looked, and through their hearts swift ran the chilly
fear:

ossa tremor; prima ante omnis Iuturna Latinos

And now before all other men first doth Juturna hear,

audiit agnouitque sonum et tremefacta refugit.

And know the sound, and, quaking sore, she fleeth back again.

ille uolat campoque atrum rapit agmen aperto. 450

On comes he, hurrying on the host black o’er the open plain:

qualis ubi ad terras abrupto sidere nimbus

As when a storm cast on the world from heaven asunder rent,

it mare per medium (miseris, heu, praescia longe

Wendeth across the middle sea: out! how the dread is sent

horrescunt corda agricolis: dabit ille ruinas

Deep to the field-folks’ boding hearts: — here comes the orchards’
bane,

arboribus stragemque satis, ruet omnia late),

Here comes the acres’ utter wrack, the ruin of all the plain!

ante uolant sonitumque ferunt ad litora uenti: 455

The gale that goes before its face brings tidings to the shore:
talis in aduersos ductor Rhoeteius hostis
So 'gainst the foe the Trojan Duke led on his hosts of war;
agmen agit, densi cuneis se quisque coactis
And gathering in the wedge-array all knit them close around.
adglomerant. ferit ense grauem Thymbraeus Osirim,
Now hath Thymbraeus' battle-blade the huge Osiris found,
Arcetium Mnestheus, Epulonem obtruncat Achates
And Mnestheus slays Archetius, Achates Epulo,
Vfentemque Gyas; cadit ipse Tolumnius augur, 460
And Gyas Ufens: yea, the seer Tolumnius lieth low,
primus in aduersos telum qui torserat hostis.
He who was first against the foe to hurl the war-shaft out.
tollitur in caelum clamor, uersique uicissim
The cry goes up unto the heaven; the war-tide turns about,
puluerulenta fuga Rutuli dant terga per agros.
Dust-cloud of flight the Rutuli raise up across the field:
ipse neque auersos dignatur sternere morti
But he, the King, thinks scorn of it to smite the backs that yield;
nec pede congressos aequo nec tela ferentis 465
Nay, those that meet him foot to foot, the wielders of the spear,
insequitur: solum densa in caligine Turnum
He followeth not: Turnus alone his eyes track everywhere
uestigat lustrans, solum in certamina poscit.
Amid the dust-cloud, him alone he crieth unto fight.
Hoc concussa metu mentem Iuturna uirago
Hereby Juturna's manly mind is shaken with affright;
aurigam Turni media inter lora Metiscum
Metiscus, Turnus' charioteer, she plucketh from the rein,
excutit et longe lapsum temone reliquit; 470
And leaveth him fallen down afar from yoking pole and wain:
ipsa subit manibusque undantis flectit habenas
But she mounts up, and with her hand the waving bridle guides,
cuncta gerens, uocemque et corpus et arma Metisci.
The while Metiscus' voice, and limbs, and war-gear with her bides:
nigra uelut magnas domini cum diuitis aedes
As when amid a lordling's house there flits a swallow black,

peruolat et pennis alta atria lustrat hirundo

On skimming wings she seeks to still her noisy nestlings' lack,
pabula parua legens nidisque loquacibus escas, 475

And wandering through the lofty halls but little feast doth get,
et nunc porticibus uacuis, nunc umida circum

Then soundeth through the empty porch, and round the fish-pools wet,

stagna sonat: similis medius Iuturna per hostis

So is Jaterna borne on wheels amidmost of the foe,

fertur equis rapidoque uolans obit omnia curru,

And flying on in hurrying chase by everything doth go,

iamque hic germanum iamque hic ostentat ouantem

Now here, now there, her brother shows all flushed with victory,

nec conferre manum patitur, uolat auia longe. 480

But still refrains him from the press; far o'er the waste they fly.

haud minus Aeneas tortos legit obuius orbis,

No less Æneas picks his way amid the winding road,

uestigatque uirum et disiecta per agmina magna

Tracking the man, and through the rout cries ever high and loud;

uoce uocat. quotiens oculos coniecit in hostem

But e'en as oftentimes as he his foeman caught with eye,

alipedumque fugam cursu temptauit equorum,

And 'gainst the flight of wingèd steeds his running feet would try,

auersos totiens currus Iuturna retorsit. 485

So oft the speedy wain of war Jaterna turned aside.

heu, quid agat? uario nequiquam fluctuat aestu,

Ah, what to do? In vain he went, borne on a shifting tide,

diuersaeque uocant animum in contraria curae.

While diverse cares to clashing ways the soul within him drave.

huic Messapus, uti laeua duo forte gerebat

But lo, Messapus, speedy-light, who chanced in hand to have

lenta, leuis cursu, praefixa hastilia ferro,

Two light and limber shafts of tree, each with its iron head,

horum unum certo contorquens derigit ictu. 490

Now whirling one, a shot well aimed unto the hero sped:

substitit Aeneas et se collegit in arma

Ænesis stayed, and gathered him behind his shielding-gear,

poplite subsidens; apicem tamen incita summum
And sank upon his knee; no less the eager-driven spear
hasta tulit summasque excussit uertice cristas.
Smote on his helm, and shore away the topmost of his crest
tum uero adsurgunt irae, insidiisque subactus,
Then verily his wrath arose; by all that guile oppressed,
diuersos ubi sensit equos currumque referri, ⁴⁹⁵
When he beheld the steeds and car far from his battle borne,
multa Iouem et laesi testatus foederis aras
He bade Jove witness, and the hearths of troth-plight wronged and
torn:

iam tandem inuadit medios et Marte secundo
He breaks at last amidst of them with Mars to help him on,
terribilis saeuam nullo discrimine caedem
And fearful speedeth work of death wherein he spareth none,
suscitat, irarumque omnis effundit habenas.
And casteth every rein aside that held his anger in.
Quis mihi nunc tot acerba deus, quis carmine caedes ⁵⁰⁰
What God shall tell me all the woe, what God the song shall win
diuersas obitumque ducum, quos aequore toto
Of shifting death and Dukes undone, and all those many dead,
inque uicem nunc Turnus agit, nunc Troius heros,
By Turnus and by him of Troy about the fight-field spread?
expediat? tanton placuit concurrere motu,
O Jupiter, was this thy will, that nations doomed to live
Iuppiter, aeterna gentis in pace futuras?
In peace hereafter, on that day in such a broil should strive?
Aeneas Rutulum Sucronem (ea prima ruentis ⁵⁰⁵ Rutulian Sucro was the first that Trojan onset stayed;
pugna loco statuit Teucros) haud multa morantem
Æneas met him, and forsooth no long delay he made,
excipit in latus et, qua fata celerrima, crudum
But smote his side, and through his ribs and fencing of the breast transadigit costas et cratis pectoris ensem.
Drave on his bitter naked sword where way was easiest.
Turnus equo deiectum Amycum fratremque Dioren,
Turnus afoot met Amycus, cast down from off his horse,

congressus pedes, hunc uenientem cuspidē longa, 510
 His brother, swift Diores, too: the first amidst his course
 hunc mucrone ferit, curruque abscisa duorum
 The long spear smote, the sword the last; the heads of both the twain
 suspendit capita et rorantia sanguine portat.
 He hangeth up and beareth on shedding a bloody rain.
 ille Talon Tanaimque neci fortemque Cethegum,
 Talon and Tanais therewith, Cethegus stout to do,
 tris uno congressu, et maestum mittit Oniten,
 All three at once the Trojan sped, and sad Onytes slew,
 nomen Echionium matrisque genus Peridiaē; 515
 Whom to the name of Echion Peridia's womb did yield.
 hic fratres Lycia missos et Apollinis agris
 Then Turnus slew the brethren sent from Phoebus' Lycian field:
 et iuuenem exosum nequiquam bella Menoeten,
 Menates, too, of Arcady, who loathed the war in vain;
 Arcada, piscosae cui circum flumina Lernae
 By fruitful fishy Lerna's flood was once his life and gain,
 ars fuerat pauperque domus nec nota potentum
 And unrich house, and nought he knew of mighty men's abode,
 munera, conductaque pater tellure serebat. 520
 And hired for a price of men the earth his father sowed.
 ac uelut immissi diuersis partibus ignes
 As when two fires, that on a while are sped from diverse ways,
 arentem in siluam et uirgulta sonantia lauro,
 Run through the dry and tinder wood, and crackling twigs of bays;
 aut ubi decursu rapido de montibus altis
 As when from off the mountain-tops two hurrying rivers speed,
 dant sonitum spumosi amnes et in aequora currunt
 And foaming, roaring, as they rush, drive down to ocean's mead,
 quisque suum populatus iter: non segnus ambo 525
 And each one wastes his proper road; no slothfuller than these,
 Aeneas Turnusque ruunt per proelia; nunc, nunc
 Æneas, Turnus, fare afield; swell up the anger-seas
 fluctuat ira intus, rumpuntur nescia uinci
 In both their hearts; torn are their breasts that know not how to yield,
 pectora, nunc totis in uulnera uiribus itur.

In speeding of the wounding-craft their utter might they wield.
 Murranum hic, ataus et auorum antiqua sonantem
 Murranus, as his sires of sires and ancient name he sings,
 nomina per regesque actum genus omne Latinos, 530
 And boasts his blood come far adown the line of Latin kings,
 praecipitem scopulo atque ingentis turbine saxi
 Æneas, with a mighty rock and whirlwind of a stone,
 excutit effunditque solo; hunc lora et iuga subter
 O'erthrows, and stretches on the earth; the wain-wheels roll him on,
 prouoluere rotæ, crebro super ungula pulsu
 Amid the bridle and the yoke, whom there upon the sward
 incita nec domini memorum proculcat equorum.
 The hurrying hoofs of horses pound, remembering not their lord.
 ille ruenti Hyllō animisque immane frementi 535
 Then Hyllus' onset, and his heart with fury all aglow,
 occurrit telumque aurata ad tempora torquet:
 Doth Turnus meet; who hurls a shaft against his golden brow,
 olli per galeam fixo stetit hasta cerebro.
 And through the helm the war-spear flies, and in the brain is stayed.
 dextera nec tua te, Graium fortissime Cretheu,
 Thee, Cretheus, bravest of the Greeks, thine hands did nothing aid
 eripuit Turno, nec di texere Cupencum
 To snatch from Turnus. Nought his Gods did their Cupencus cloak
 Aenea ueniente sui: dedit obuia ferro 540
 Against Æneas' rush of war; breast-on he met the stroke,
 pectora, nec misero clipei mora profuit aerei.
 And nought availed that hapless one the tarrying golden shield.
 te quoque Laurentes uiderunt, Aeole, campi
 Thee also, warring Æolus, did that Laurentine field
 oppetere et late terram consternere tergo.
 See fallen, and cumbering the earth with body laid alow;
 occidis, Argiuae quem non potuere phalanges
 Thou diest, whom the Argive hosts might never overthrow,
 sternere nec Priami regnorum euersor Achilles; 545
 Nor that Achilles' hand that wrought the Priam's realm its wrack.
 hic tibi mortis erant metae, domus alta sub Ida,
 Here was thy meted mortal doom; high house 'neath Ida's back,

Lyrnesi domus alta, solo Laurente sepulcrum.
High house within Lyrnessus' garth, grave in Laurentine lea.
totae adeo conuersae acies omnesque Latini,
Now all the hosts to fight are turned, and blent in battle's sea,
omnes Dardanidae, Mnestheus acerque Serestus
All Latin folk, all Dardan sons, Mnestheus, Serestus keen,
et Messapus equum domitor et fortis Asilas 550
Messapus tamer of the horse, Asylas fame-beseen,
Tuscorumque phalanx Euandrique Arcades alae,
The Tuscan host, Evander's men, the Arcadian wings of fight,
pro se quisque uiri summa nituntur opum ui;
Each for himself the warriors play, and strive with utter might;
nec mora nec requies, uasto certamine tendunt.
No tarrying, no rest, they strain in contest measureless.
Hic mentem Aeneae genetrix pulcherrima misit
But now a thought his mother sent Æneas' mind to bless.
iret ut ad muros urbique aduerteret agmen 555
That he should wend unto the walls, and townward turn his host,
ocius et subita turbaret clade Latinos.
And blend amid destruction swift the Latin people lost.
ille ut uestigans diuersa per agmina Turnum
For he, now marking Turnus' ways through many a company,
huc atque huc acies circumtulit, aspicit urbem
Hither and thither turns his eyes, and sees the city lie
immunem tanti belli atque impune quietam.
At peace amid the mighty stir, unharmed amid the fight,
continuo pugnae accendit maioris imago: 560
And image of a greater war set all his soul alight.
Mnesthea Sergestumque uocat fortemque Serestum Mnestheus, Sergestus then he calls, Serestus battle-strong,
ductores, tumulumque capit quo cetera Teucrum
The Dukes of war; he mounts a knoll; thither the Teucrians throng
concurrit legio, nec scuta aut spicula densi
In serried ranks, yet lay not by the battle-spear and shield:
deponunt. celso medius stans aggere fatur:
So there from off the mound he speaks amidmost of the field:
'ne qua meis esto dictis mora, Iuppiter hac stat, 565

"Let none hang back from these my words, for Jove is standing by;
 neu quis ob inceptum subitum mihi segnior ito.
 Let none be dull herein because it cometh suddenly:
 urbem hodie, causam belli, regna ipsa Latini,
 Today the town, the cause of war, the king Latinus' home,
 ni frenum accipere et uicti parere fatentur,
 Unless they cry them craven men, and 'neath the yoke they come,
 eruam et aequa solo fumantia culmina ponam.
 Will I o'erthrow; the smoking towers upon the ground will lay.
 scilicet exspectem libeat dum proelia Turno 570
 What! must I wait till Turnus grows fain of the battle-play?
 nostra pati rursusque uelit concurrere uictus?
 And shall he, conquered, take his ease to fight me o'er and o'er?
 hoc caput, o ciues, haec belli summa nefandi.
 O fellows, this is head and well of all the wicked war.
 ferte faces prope foedusque repositae flammis.'
 Haste with the torches, set we forth the troth with fire to find!"
 dixerat, atque animis pariter certantibus omnes
 He spake; but all they set to work, and striving with one mind
 dant cuneum densaque ad muros mole feruntur; 575
 Knit close their ranks, and on the town a world of battle bear:
 scalae improviso subitusque apparuit ignis.
 Unlooked-for ladders are at hand, and sudden fires appear;
 discurrunt alii ad portas primosque trucidant,
 While some they run unto the gates, and there the out-guards slay,
 ferrum alii torquent et obumbrant aethera telis.
 Or hurl the spears, and with their cloud dim down the light of day.
 ipse inter primos dextram sub moenia tendit
 Æneas, in the front of men, lifts hand unto the walls,
 Aeneas, magnaue incusat uoce Latinum 580
 And in a great and mighty voice guilt on Latinus calls,
 testaturque deos iterum se ad proelia cogi,
 And bids the Gods to witness him twice to the battle driven,
 bis iam Italos hostis, haec altera foedera rumpi.
 Italians twice become his foes, and twice the treaty riven.
 exoritur trepidos inter discordia ciuis:
 But mid the turmoiled city-folk arose the bickering then,

urbem alii reserare iubent et pandere portas
Some bade unbar and open gates unto the Dardan men;
Dardanidis ipsumque trahunt in moenia regem; 585
Yea, some unto the walls would drag their very king and lord;
arma ferunt alii et pergunt defendere muros,
But some bear arms and go their ways the walls of war to ward:
inclusas ut cum latebroso in pumice pastor
E'en as the shepherd finds the bees shut in, a fencèd folk,
uestigauit apes fumoque impleuit amaro;
In chinky pumice rock, and fills their house with bitter smoke;
illae intus trepidae rerum per cerea castra
But they, all busy-fearful grown within their waxen wall,
discurrunt magnisque acuunt stridoribus iras; 590
Run here and there and whet their wrath with mighty humming call:
uoluitur ater odor tectis, tum murmure caeco
The black stink rolleth through their house, and with a murmuring
blind
intus saxa sonant, uacuas it fumus ad auras.
The stony hollows moan: the reek the empty air doth find.
Accidit haec fessis etiam fortuna Latinis,
Here on the weary Latins fell another stroke of fate,
quae totam luctu concussit funditus urbem.
That moved the city deep adown with sorrow sore and great;
regina ut tectis uenientem prospicit hostem, 595
For when the Queen from house aloft beheld the foe draw nigh,
incessi muros, ignis ad tecta uolare,
The walls beset, the flaming brands unto the house-roofs fly,
nusquam acies contra Rutulas, nulla agmina Turni,
And nowhere the Rutulian ranks or Turnus' warring host,
infelix pugnae iuuenem in certamine credit
The hapless woman deems the youth in stress of battle lost,
extinctum et subito mentem turbata dolore
And, all bewildered in her mind by these so sudden woes,
se causam clamat crimenque caputque malorum, 600
Curses herself for head and spring whence all the evil flows;
multaque per maestum demens effata furorem
And crying many a bitter word, and mad with sorrow grown,

purpureos moritura manu discindit amictus
She riveth with her dying hand the queenly purple gown,
et nodum informis leti trabe nectit ab alta.
And knits the knot of loathly death from lofty beam on high.
quam cladem miserae postquam acceperere Latinae,
But when the wretched Latin wives know all this misery,
filia prima manu flauos Lauinia crinis 605
Her daughter first, Lavinia, wastes the blossom of her hair,
et roseas laniata genas, tum cetera circum
And wounds her rosy cheeks; then they that stood about her there
turba furit, resonant late plangoribus aedes.
Run wild about, and all the house resoundeth with their wail.
hinc totam infelix uulgatur fama per urbem:
Thence through the city flies the sound of that unhappy tale,
demittunt mentes, it scissa ueste Latinus
And all hearts sink: Latinus goes with raiment rent and torn,
coniugis attonitus fatis urbisque ruina, 610
Stunned by his wife's unhappy lot, and city lost and lorn,
canitiem immundo perfusam puluere turpans.
And scattering o'er his hoariness defilement of the dust;
Multaque se incusat, qui non acceperit ante
And often he upbraids himself that he took not to trust
Dardanium Aenean generumque adsciuerit ultro.
That Dardan lord, nor willingly had hallowed him his son.
Interea extremo bellator in aequore Turnus 614
Meanwhile across the outer plain war-Turnus followeth on
palantis sequitur paucos iam segnior atque
The last few stragglers, duller grown, and less and less his heart
iam minus atque minus successu laetus equorum.
Rejoices in his hurrying steed and their victorious part.
attulit hunc illi caecis terroribus aura
The air bore to him noise of men with doubtful terror blent,
commixtum clamorem, arrectasque impulit auris
And round about his hearkening ears confusèd murmur sent;
confusae sonus urbis et inlaetabile murmur.
The noise of that turmoiled town, a sound of nought but woe:
'ei mihi! quid tanto turbantur moenia luctu? 620

“Ah, me!” he cried, “what mighty grief stirs up the city so?
quisue ruit tantus diuersa clamor ab urbe?”

Why from the walls now goeth up this cry and noise afar?”
sic ait, adductisque amens subsistit habenis.

He spake, and, wildered, drew the rein and stayed the battle-car:
atque huic, in faciem soror ut conuersa Metisci

His sister met his questioning, as she in seeming clad
aurigae currumque et equos et lora regebat,

Of that Metiscus, all the rule of battle-chariot had,
talibus occurrit dictis: ‘hac, Turne, sequamur 625

And steeds and bridle: “Hereaway, O Turnus, drive we on Troiuigenas, qua prima uiam uictoria pandit;

The sons of Troy; where victory shows a road that may be won:
sunt alii qui tecta manu defendere possint.

For other hands there are, belike, the houses to defend.
ingruit Aeneas Italis et proelia miscet,

Æneas falls on Italy, and there doth battle blend;
et nos saeua manu mittamus funera Teucris.

So let our hands give cruel death to Teucrian men this day,
nec numero inferior pugnae neque honore recedes.’ 630

No less in tale: so shalt thou hold thine honour in the fray.”
Turnus ad haec:

But Turnus sayeth thereunto:

‘o soror, et dudum agnoui, cum prima per artem

“Sister, I knew thee long ago, when first by art and craft
foedera turbasti teque haec in bella dedisti,

Thou brok’st the troth-plight, and therewith amidst the battle went;
et nunc nequiquam fallis dea. sed quis Olympo

And now thou hidest God in vain. But whose will thee hath sent demissam tantos uoluit te ferre labores? 635

From high Olympus’ house to bear such troubles, and so great?
an fratris miseri letum ut crudele uideres?

Was it to see thy brother’s end and most unhappy fate?

nam quid ago? aut quae iam spondet Fortuna salutem?

For what do I? What heal is left in aught that may befall?

uidi oculos ante ipse meos me uoce uocantem

Mine eyes beheld Murranus die, on me I heard him call:

Murranum, quo non superat mihi carior alter,
No dearer man in all the world is left me for a friend:
oppetere ingentem atque ingenti uulnere uictum. 640
Woe's me I that mighty man of men a mighty death must end.
occidit infelix ne nostrum dedecus Vfers
Ufers is dead, unhappy too lest he our shame behold;
aspiceret; Teucri potiuntur corpore et armis.
E'en as I speak the Teucrians ward his arms and body cold.
exscindine domos (id rebus defuit unum)
And now — the one shame wanting yet — shall I stand deedless by
perpetiar, dextra nec Drancis dicta refellam?
Their houses' wrack, nor let my sword cast back that Drances' lie?
terga dabo et Turnum fugientem haec terra uidebit? 645
Shall I give back, and shall this land see craven Turnus fled?
usque adeone mori miserum est? uos o mihi, Manes,
Is death, then, such a misery? O rulers of the dead,
este boni, quoniam superis auersa uoluntas.
Be kind! since now the high God's heart is turned away from me;
sancta ad uos anima atque istius inscia culpae
A hallowed soul I go adown, guiltless of infamy,
descendam magnorum haud umquam indignus auorum.'
Not all unworthy of the great, my sires of long ago."
Vix ea fatus erat: medios uolat ecce per hostis 650
Scarce had he said when, here behold, from midmost of the foe,
uectus equo spumante Saces, aduersa sagitta
Comes Saces on his foaming steed, an arrow in his face,
saucius ora, ruitque implorans nomine Turnum:
Who, crying prayers on Turnus' name, onrusheth to the place:
'Turne, in te suprema salus, miserere tuorum.
"Turnus, in thee our last hope lies! pity thy wretched folk!
fulminat Aeneas armis summasque minatur
Æneas thundereth battle there, and threateneth with his stroke
deiecturum arces Italum excidioque daturum, 655
The overthrow of tower and town, and wrack of Italy.
iamque faces ad tecta uolant. in te ora Latini,
The flames are flying toward the roofs; all mouths of Latins cry
in te oculos referunt; mussat rex ipse Latinus

On thee; all eyes are turned to thee: yea, the king wavereth there,
quos generos uocet aut quae sese ad foedera flectat.

Whom shall he call his son-in-law, to whom for friendship fare.
praeterea regina, tui fidissima, dextra

The Queen to wit, thy faithfullest, is dead by her own hand,
occidit ipsa sua lucemque exterrita fugit. 660

And, fearful of the things to come, hath left the daylight land.
soli pro portis Messapus et acer Atinas

Messapus and Atinas keen alone upbear our might sustenant acies. circum hos utrimque phalanges

Before the gates: round each of them are gathered hosts of fight
stant densae strictisque seges mucronibus horret

Thick-thronging, and a harvest-tide that bristles with the sword;
ferrea; tu currum deserto in gramine uersas.’

While here thou wendest car about the man-deserted sward.”
obstupuit uaria confusus imagine rerum 665

Bewildered then with images of diverse things he stood
Turnus et obtutu tacito stetit; aestuat ingens

In silent stare; and in his heart upswelled a mighty flood
uno in corde pudor mixtoque insania luctu

Of mingled shame and maddening grief: the Furies goaded sore
et furiis agitatus amor et conscia uirtus.

With bitter love and valour tried and known from time of yore.
ut primum discussae umbrae et lux reddita menti,

But when the cloud was shaken off and light relit his soul,
ardentis oculorum orbis ad moenia torsit 670

His burning eyeballs toward the town, fierce-hearted, did he roll,
turbidus eque rotis magnam respexit ad urbem.

And from the wheels of war looked back unto the mighty town;
Ecce autem flammis inter tabulata uolutus

And lo, behold, a wave of flame into a tongue-shape grown
ad caelum undabat uertex turrimque tenebat,

Licked round a tower, and ‘twixt its floors rolled upward unto
heaven:

turrim compactis trabibus quam eduxerat ipse

A tower that he himself had reared with timbers closely driven,
subdideratque rotas pontisque instrauerat altos. 675

And set beneath it rolling-gear, and dight the bridges high.
'iam iam fata, soror, superant, absiste morari;
"Now, sister, now the Fates prevail! no more for tarrying try.
quo deus et quo dura uocat Fortuna sequamur.
Nay, let us follow where the God, where hard Fate calleth me!
stat conferre manum Aeneae, stat, quidquid acerbi est,
Doomed am I to Æneas' hand; doomed, howso sore it be,
morte pati, neque me indecorem, germana, uidebis
To die the death; ah, sister, now thou seest me shamed no more:
amplius. hunc, oro, sine me furere ante furorem.' 680
Now let me wear the fury through ere yet my time is o'er."
dixit, et e curru saltum dedit ocus aruis
He spake, and from the chariot leapt adown upon the mead,
perque hostis, per tela ruit maestamque sororem
And left his sister lone in grief amidst the foe to speed,
deserit ac rapido cursu media agmina rumpit.
Amidst the spears, and breaketh through the midmost press of fight,
ac ueluti montis saxum de uertice praeceps
E'en as a headlong stone sweeps down from off the mountain-height,
cum ruit auulsum uento, seu turbidus imber 685
Torn by the wind; or drifting rain hath washed it from its hold,
proluit aut annis soluit sublapsa uetustas;
Or loosed, maybe, it slippeth down because the years grow old:
fertur in abruptum magno mons improbus actu
Wild o'er the cliffs with mighty leap goes down that world of stone, exsultatque solo, siluas armenta uirosque
And bounds o'er earth, and woods and herds and men-folk rolleth on inuoluens secum: disiecta per agmina Turnus
Amidst its wrack: so Turnus through the broken battle broke
sic urbis ruit ad muros, ubi plurima fuso 690
Unto the very city-walls, where earth was all a-soak
sanguine terra madet striduntque hastilibus aerae,
With plenteous blood, and air beset with whistling of the shafts;
significatque manu et magno simul incipit ore:
There with his hand he maketh sign, and mighty speech he wafts:
'parcite iam, Rutuli, et uos tela inhibete, Latini.
"Forbear, Rutulians! Latin men, withhold the points of fight!

quaecumque est fortuna, mea est; me uerius unum
Whatever haps, the hap is mine; I, I alone, of right
pro uobis foedus luere et decernere ferro.' 695
Should cleanse you of the broken troth, and doom of sword-edge
face."

discessere omnes medii spatiumque dedere.
So from the midst all men depart, and leave an empty space;
At pater Aeneas audito nomine Turni
But now the Father Æneas hath hearkened Turnus' name,
deserit et muros et summas deserit arces
And backward from the walls of war and those high towers he came.
praecipitatque moras omnis, opera omnia rumpit
He casts away all tarrying, sets every deed aside,
laetitia exsultans horrendumque intonat armis: 700
And thundering in his battle-gear rejoicing doth he stride:
quantus Athos aut quantus Eryx aut ipse coruscis
As Athos great, as Eryx great, great as when roaring goes
cum fremit ilicibus quantus gaudetque niuali
Amid the quaking oaken woods and glory lights the snows,
uertice se attollens pater Appenninus ad auras.
And Father Apennine uprears his head amidst the skies.
iam uero et Rutuli certatim et Troes et omnes
Then Trojan and Rutulian men turn thither all their eyes,
conuertere oculos Itali, quique alta tenebant 705
And all the folk of Italy, and they that hold the wall,
moenia quique imos pulsabant ariete muros,
And they that drive against its feet the battering engines' fall
armaque deposuere umeris. stupet ipse Latinus
All men do off their armour then. Amazed Latinus stands
ingentis, genitos diuersis partibus orbis,
To see two mighty heroes, born in such wide-sundered lands.
inter se coiisse uiros et cernere ferro.
Meet thus to try what deed of doom in meeting swords may be.
atque illi, ut uacuo patuerunt aequore campi, 710
But they, when empty space is cleared amid the open lea,
procursu rapido coniectis eminus hastis
Set each on each in speedy wise, and with their war-spears hurled

inuadunt Martem clipeis atque aere sonoro.

Amid the clash of shield and brass break into Mavors' world;
dat gemitum tellus; tum crebros ensibus ictus

Then groaneth earth; then comes the hail of sword-strokes thick and fast,

congeminant, fors et uirtus miscetur in unum.

And in one blended tangle now are luck and valour cast:

ac uelut ingenti Sila summoue Taburno 715

As when on mighty Sila's side, or on Taburnus height,

cum duo conuersis inimica in proelia tauri

Two bulls with pushing horny brows are mingled in the fight:

frontibus incurrunt, pauidi cessere magistri,

The frightened herdsmen draw aback, and all the beasts are dumb

stat pecus omne metu mutum, mussantque iuuencae

For utter fear; the heifers too misdoubt them what shall come,

quis nemori imperitet, quem tota armenta sequantur;

Who shall be master of the grove and leader of the flock;

illi inter sese multa ui uulnera miscent 720

But each on each they mingle wounds with fearful might of shock,

cornuaque obnixa infigunt et sanguine largo

And gore and push home fencing horns, and with abundant blood

colla armosque lauant, gemitu nemus omne remugit:

Bathe neck and shoulder, till the noise goes bellowing through the wood;

non aliter Tros Aeneas et Daunius heros

E'en so Æneas out of Troy, and he, the Daunian man,

concurrunt clipeis, ingens fragor aethera complet.

Smite shield on shield; and mighty clash through all the heavens there ran.

Iuppiter ipse duas aequato examine lances 725

'Tis Jupiter who holds the scales 'twixt even-poised tongue;

sustinet et fata imponit diuersa duorum,

There in the balance needfully their sundered fates he hung,

quem damnet labor et quo uergat pondere letum.

Which one the battle-pain shall doom, in which the death shall lie.

Emicat hic impune putans et corpore toto

Now Turnus deems him safe, and forth with sword upreared on high,

alte sublatum consurgit Turnus in ensem
 He springs, and all his body strains, and rises to the stroke,
 et ferit; exclamant Troes trepidique Latini, 730
 And smites: the Trojans cry aloud, and eager Latin folk,
 arrectaeque amborum acies. at perfidus ensis
 And both hosts hang 'twixt hope and fear: but lo, the treacherous
 sword
 frangitur in medioque ardentem deserit ictu,
 Breaks in the middle of the blow and leaves its fiery lord: —
 ni fuga subsidio subeat. fugit ocior Euro
 And if the flight shall fail him now! — Swift as the East he flees
 ut capulum ignotum dextramque aspexit inermem.
 When in his right hand weaponless an unknown hilt he sees.
 fama est praecipitem, cum prima in proelia iunctos 735
 They say, that when all eager-hot he clomb his yokèd car
 conscendebat equos, patrio mucrone relicto,
 In first of fight, that then he left his father's blade of war,
 dum trepidat, ferrum aurigae rapuisse Metisci;
 And caught in hand his charioteer Metiscus' battle-glaive;
 idque diu, dum terga dabant palantia Teucri,
 And that was well while Trojan fleers backs to the smiting gave,
 suffecit; postquam arma dei ad Volcania umentum est,
 But when they meet Vulcanian arms, the very God's device,
 mortalis mucro glacies ceu futilis ictu 740
 Then shivereth all the mortal blade e'en as the foolish ice;
 dissiluit, fulua resplendent fragmina harena.
 And there upon the yellow sand the glittering splinters lie.
 ergo amens diuersa fuga petit aequora Turnus
 So diversely about the field doth wildered Turnus fly,
 et nunc huc, inde huc incertos implicat orbis;
 And here and there in winding ways he doubleth up and down,
 undique enim densa Teucri includere corona
 For thick all round about the lists was drawn the Teucrian crown:
 atque hinc uasta palus, hinc ardua moenia cingunt. 745
 By wide marsh here, by high walls there, his fleeing was begirt.
 Nec minus Aeneas, quamquam tardata sagitta
 Nor less Æneas, howsoe'er, hampered by arrow-hurt,

interdum genua impediunt cursumque recusant,
His knees might hinder him at whiles and fail him as he ran,
insequitur trepidique pedem pede feruidus urget:
Yet foot for foot all eagerly followed the hurrying man;
inclusum ueluti si quando flumine nactus
As when a hound hath caught a hart hemmed by the river's ring,
ceruum aut puniceae saeptum formidine pennae 750
Or hedged about by empty fear of crimson-feathered string,
uenator cursu canis et latratibus instat;
And swift of foot and baying loud goes following up the flight;
ille autem insidiis et ripa territus alta
But he, all fearful of the snare and of the flood-bank's height,
mille fugit refugitque uias, at uiuidus Vmber
Doubles and turns a thousand ways, while open-mouthed and staunch
haeret hians, iam iamque tenet similisque tenenti
The Umbrian keen sticks hard at heel, and now, now hath his haunch,
increpuit malis morsuque elusus inani est; 755
Snapping his jaws as though he gripped, and, mocked, but biteth air.
tum uero exoritur clamor ripaeque lacusque
Then verily the cry arose; the bank, the spreading mere,
responsant circa et caelum tonat omne tumultu.
Rang back about, and tumult huge ran shattering through the sky.
ille simul fugiens Rutulos simul increpat omnis
But Turnus as he fled cried out on all his Rutuli,
nomine quemque uocans notumque efflagitat ensem.
And, calling each man by his name, craved his familiar blade.
Aeneas mortem contra praesensque minatur 760
Meanwhile Æneas threateneth death if any come to aid,
exitium, si quisquam adeat, terretque trementis
And swift destruction: and their souls with fearful threats doth fill
excisurum urbem minitans et saucius instat.
Of city ruined root and branch; and, halting, followeth still.
quinque orbis explent cursu totidemque retexunt
Five rings of flight their running fills, and back the like they wend:
huc illuc; neque enim leuia aut ludicra petuntur

Nought light nor gamesome is the prize for which their feet contend,
 praemia, sed Turni de uita et sanguine certant. 765
 For there they strive in running-game for Turnus' life and blood.
 Forte sacer Fauno foliis oleaster amaris
 By hap hard by an olive wild of bitter leaves there stood,
 hic steterat, nautis olim uenerabile lignum,
 Hallowed to Faunus, while agone a most well-worshipped tree,
 seruati ex undis ubi figere dona solebant
 Whereon to that Laurentian God the sailors saved from sea
 Laurenti diuo et uotas suspendere uestis;
 Would set their gifts, and hang therefrom their garments vowed at
 need.
 sed stirpem Teucris nullo discrimine sacrum 770
 But now the Teucrian men of late had lopped with little heed
 sustulerant, puro ut possent concurrere campo.
 That holy stem, that they might make the lists of battle clear:
 hic hasta Aeneae stabat, huc impetus illam
 And there Æneas' war-spear stood; his might had driven it there,
 detulerat fixam et lenta radice tenebat.
 And held it now, set hard and fast in stubborn root and stout:
 incubuit uoluitque manu conuellere ferrum
 The Dardan son bent o'er it now to pluck the weapon out,
 Dardanides, teloque sequi quem prendere cursu 775
 That he might follow him with shot whom running might not take.
 non poterat. tum uero amens formidine Turnus
 But Turnus, wildered with his fear, cried out aloud and spake:
 'Faune, precor, miserere' inquit 'tuque optima ferrum
 "O Faunus, pity me, I pray! and thou, O kindest Earth,
 Terra tene, colui uestros si semper honores,
 Hold thou the steel for me, who still have worshipped well thy worth,
 quos contra Aeneadae bello fecere profanos.'
 Which ever those Ænean folk with battle would profane!"
 dixit, opemque dei non cassa in uota uocauit. 780
 He spake, and called the God to aid with vows not made in vain;
 namque diu luctans lentoque in stirpe moratus
 For o'er the tough tree tarrying long, struggling with utter might,
 uiribus haud ullis ualuit discludere morsus

No whit Æneas could undo the gripping woody bite.
 roboris Aeneas. dum nititur acer et instat,
 But while he struggleth hot and hard, and hangeth o'er the spear,
 rursus in aurigae faciem mutata Metisci
 Again the Daunian Goddess, clad in shape of charioteer procurrit fratrique ensem dea Daunia reddit. 785
 Metiscus, Turnus' trusty sword unto his hand doth speed.
 quod Venus audaci nymphae indignata licere
 But Venus, wrathful that the Nymph might dare so bold a deed,
 accessit telumque alta ab radice reuellit.
 Came nigh, and from the deep-set root the shaft of battle drew.
 olli sublimes armis animisque refecti,
 So they, high-hearted, stored with hope and battle-gear anew,
 hic gladio fidens, hic acer et arduus hasta,
 One trusting in his sword, and one fierce with his spear on high,
 adsistunt contra certamina Martis anhelii. 790
 Stand face to face, the glorious game of panting Mars to try.
 Iunonem interea rex omnipotentis Olympi
 Meanwhile the King of Heaven the great thus unto Juno saith, adloquitur fulua pugnas de nube tuentem:
 As from a ruddy cloud she looked upon the game of death:
 'quae iam finis erit, coniunx? quid denique restat?
 "What then shall end it, O my wife? what deed is left thine hand?
 indigetem Aenean scis ipsa et scire fateris
 That Heaven shall gain Æneas yet, a Godhead of the land,
 deberi caelo fatisque ad sidera tolli. 795
 That Fate shall bear him to the stars thou know'st and hast allowed:
 quid struis? aut qua spe gelidis in nubibus haeres?
 What dost thou then, or hoping what hang'st thou in chilly cloud?
 mortalin decuit uiolari uulnere diuum?
 What! was it right that mortal wound a God's own flesh should wrong?
 aut ensem (quid enim sine te Iuturna ualeret?)
 Right to give Turnus — but for thee how was Iuturna strong? —
 ereptum reddi Turno et uim crescere uictis?
 The sword he lost? or vanquished men, to give their might increase?
 desine iam tandem precibusque inflectere nostris, 800

I prithee yield unto my prayers, and from thy troubling cease.
 ne te tantus edit tacitam dolor et mihi curae
 Let not thine hushed grief eat thine heart, or bitter words of care
 saepe tuo dulci tristes ex ore recursent.
 So often from thy sweetest mouth the soul within me wear.
 uentum ad supremum est. terris agitare uel undis
 The goal is reached: thou hast availed o'er earth and sea to drive
 Troianos potuisti, infandum accendere bellum,
 The Trojan men; to strike the spark of wicked war alive;
 deformare domum et luctu miscere hymenaeos: 805
 To foul their house, and woe and grief mid wedding-feast to bear,
 ulterius temptare ueto.' sic Iuppiter orsus;
 And now I bid thee hold thine hand." Thuswise said Jupiter,
 sic dea summisso contra Saturnia uultu:
 And with a downcast countenance spake that Satumian Queen:
 'ista quidem quia nota mihi tua, magne, uoluntas,
 "Well have I known, great Jupiter, all that thy will hath been,
 Iuppiter, et Turnum et terras inuita reliqui;
 And Turnus and the worldly land loth have I left alone,
 nec tu me aeria solam nunc sede uideres 810
 Else nowise should'st thou see me bear, sole on this airy throne,
 digna indigna pati, sed flammis cincta sub ipsa
 Things meet and unmeet: flame-begirt the war-ranks would I gain,
 starem acie traheremque inimica in proelia Teucros.
 And drag the host of Trojans on to battle and their bane.
 Iuturnam misero (fateor) succurrere fratri
 Iuturna! — yes, I pitied her, and bade her help to bear
 suasi et pro uita maiora audere probaui,
 Unto her brother; good, methought, for life great things to dare;
 non ut tela tamen, non ut contenderet arcum; 815
 But nought I bade her to the shaft or bending of the bow,
 adiuro Stygii caput implacabile fontis,
 This swear I by the ruthless well, the Stygian overflow,
 una superstitio superis quae reddita diuis.
 The only holy thing there is that weighs on Godhead's oath.
 et nunc cedo equidem pugnasque exosa relinquo.
 And now indeed I yield the place, and leave the fight I loathe.

illud te, nulla fati quod lege tenetur,
 But one thing yet I ask of thee, held in no fateful yoke;
 pro Latio obtestor, pro maiestate tuorum: 820
 For Latium's sake I pray therefore, and glory of thy folk:
 cum iam conubiis pacem felicibus (esto)
 When they at last — so be it now! — pledge peace mid bridal kind,
 component, cum iam leges et foedera iungent,
 When they at last join law to law, and loving treaty bind,
 ne uetus indigenas nomen mutare Latinos
 Let them not change their ancient name, those earth-born Latin men,
 neu Troas fieri iubeas Teucrosque uocari
 Nor turn them into Trojan folk, or call them Teucrians then:
 aut uocem mutare uiros aut uertere uestem. 825
 Let not that manfolk shift their tongue, or cast their garb aside;
 sit Latium, sint Albani per saecula reges,
 Let Latium and the Alban kings through many an age abide,
 sit Romana potens Italia uirtute propago:
 And cherish thou the Roman stem with worth of Italy:
 occidit, occideritque sinas cum nomine Troia.'
 Troy-town is dead: Troy and its name for ever let them die!"
 olli subridens hominum rerumque repertor:
 The Fashioner of men and things spake, smiling in her face:
 'es germana Iouis Saturnique altera proles, 830
 "Yea, Jove's own sister; second branch forsooth, of Saturn's race!
 irarum tantos uoluis sub pectore fluctus.
 Such are the mighty floods of wrath thou rollest in thy breast.
 uerum age et inceptum frustra summitte furorem:
 But this thine anger born for nought, I prithee let it rest:
 do quod uis, et me uictusque uolensque remitto.
 I give thine asking; conquered now I yield me, and am glad:
 sermonem Ausonii patrium moresque tenebunt,
 The Ausonian men shall keep the tongue and ways their fathers had,
 utque est nomen erit; commixti corpore tantum 835
 And as their name is shall it be: only in body blent
 subsident Teucri. morem ritusque sacrorum
 Amidst them shall the Teucrians sink; from me shall rites be sent,
 adiciam faciamque omnis uno ore Latinos.

And holy things, and they shall be all Latins of one tongue.
 hinc genus Ausonio mixtum quod sanguine surget,
 Hence shalt thou see a blended race from blood Ausonian sprung,
 supra homines, supra ire deos pietate uidebis,
 Whose godliness shall outgo men, outgo the Gods above;
 nec gens ulla tuos aequae celebrabit honores.' 840
 Nor any folk of all the world so well thy worth shall love."
 adnuat his Iuno et mentem laetata retorsit;
 So gladdened Juno's heart was turned, and yea-saying she bowed,
 interea excedit caelo nubemque relinquit.
 And so departed from the sky and left her watching-cloud.
 His actis aliud genitor secum ipse uoluit
 Another thing the Father now within him turneth o'er,
 Iuturnamque parat fratris dimittere ab armis.
 What wise Juturna he shall part from her lost brother's war:
 dicuntur geminae pestes cognomine Dirae, 845
 Two horrors are there that are called the Dreadful Ones by name,
 quas et Tartaream Nox intempesta Megaeram
 Whom with Megæra of the Pit at one birth and the same
 uno eodemque tulit partu, paribusque reuinxit
 Untimely Night brought forth of yore, and round about them twined
 serpentum spiris uentosasque addidit alas.
 Like coils of serpents, giving them great wings to hold the wind:
 hae Iouis ad solium saeuique in limine regis
 About Jove's throne, and close anigh the Stern King's threshold-stead,
 apparent acuuntque metum mortalibus aegris, 850
 Do these attend, in sick-heart men to whet the mortal dread,
 si quando letum horrificum morbosque deum rex
 Whenso the King-God fashions forth fell death and dire disease,
 molitur, meritas aut bello territat urbes.
 Or smites the guilty cities doomed with battle miseries.
 harum unam celerem demisit ab aethere summo
 Now one of these sent Jupiter swift from the heavenly place,
 Iuppiter inque omen Iuturnae occurrere iussit:
 And bade her for a sign of doom to cross Juturna's face.
 illa uolat celerique ad terram turbine fertur. 855

So borne upon a whirl of wind to earth the swift one flies,
 non secus ac neruo per nubem impulsa sagitta,
 E'en as an arrow from the string is driven amid the skies,
 armatam saeui Parthus quam felle ueneni,
 Which headed with the venom fell a Parthian man hath shot, —
 Parthus siue Cydon, telum immedicabile, torsit, Parthian, Cydonian, it may be, — the hurt that healeth not;
 stridens et celeris incognita transilit umbras:
 Its hidden whirring sweepeth through the drifting misty flow:
 talis se sata Nocte tulit terrasque petiuit. 860
 So fared the Daughter of the Night, and sought the earth below.
 postquam acies uidet Iliacas atque agmina Turni,
 But when she saw the Ilian hosts and Turnus' battle-rank,
 alitis in paruae subitam collecta figuram,
 Then sudden into puny shape her body huge she shrank,
 quae quondam in bustis aut culminibus desertis
 A fowl that sits on sepulchres, and desert roofs alone
 nocte sedens serum canit importuna per umbras —
 In the dead night, and through the mirk singeth her ceaseless moan;
 hanc uersa in faciem Turni se pestis ob ora 865
 In such a shape this bane of men met Turnus' face in field,
 fertque refertque sonans clipeumque euerberat alis.
 And, screeching, hovered to and fro, and flapped upon his shield:
 illi membra nouus soluit formidine torpor,
 Strange heaviness his body seized, consuming him with dread,
 arrectaeque horrore comae et uox faucibus haesit.
 His hair stood up, and in his jaws his voice lay hushed and dead.
 At procul ut Dirae stridorem agnouit et alas,
 But when afar Iuturna knew the Dread One's whirring wings,
 infelix crinis scindit Iuturna solutos 870
 The hapless sister tears her hair and loose its tresses flings,
 unguibus ora soror foedans et pectora pugnīs:
 Fouling her face with tearing nails, her breast with beat of hand.
 'quid nunc te tua, Turne, potest germana iuuare?
 "How may my help, O Turnus, now beside my brother stand?
 aut quid iam durae superat mihi? qua tibi lucem
 How may I harden me 'gainst this? by what craft shall I stay

arte morer? talin possum me opponere monstro?
Thy light of life? how cast myself in such a monster's way?
iam iam linquo acies. ne me terrete timentem, 875
Now, now I leave the battle-field; fright not the filled with fear,
obscae uolucres: alarum uerbera nosco
O birds of ill! full well I know your flapping wings in air,
letalemque sonum, nec fallunt iussa superba
And baneful sound. Thy mastering will I know it holdeth good,
magnanimi Iouis. haec pro uirginitate reponit?
O Jove the great! — was this the gift thou gav'st for maidenhood?
quo uitam dedit aeternam? cur mortis adempta est
Why give me everlasting life, and death-doom take away?
condicio? possem tantos finire dolores 880
O, but for that my sorrows sore now surely might I slay,
nunc certe, et misero fratri comes ire per umbras!
And wend beside my brother now amid the nether Night.
immortalis ego? aut quicquam mihi dulce meorum
Am I undying? ah, can aught of all my good delight
te sine, frater, erit? o quae satis ima dehiscat
Without thee, O my brother lost! O Earth, gape wide and well,
terra mihi, Manisque deam demittat ad imos?"
And let a Goddess sink adown into the deeps of hell!"
tantum effata caput glauco contexit amictu 885
So much she said, and wrapped her round with mantle dusky-grey,
multa gemens et se fluuio dea condidit alto.
And, groaning sore, she hid herself within the watery way.
Aeneas instat contra telumque coruscat
But forth Æneas goes, and high his spear he brandisheth,
ingens arboreum, et saeuo sic pectore fatur:
A mighty tree, and from his heart grown fell a word he saith:
'quae nunc deinde mora est? aut quid iam, Turne, retractas?
"And wherewith wilt thou tarry me? hangs Turnus back again?
non cursu, saeuis certandum est comminus armis. 890
No foot-strife but the armed hand must doom betwixt us twain.
uerte omnis tete in facies et contrahe quidquid
Yea, turn thyself to every shape, and, gathering everything
siue animis siue arte uales; opta ardua pennis

Wherewith thine heart, thy craft is strong, go soaring on the wing,
astra sequi clausumque caua te condere terra.'

And chase the stars; or deep adown in hollow earth lie stored."

ille caput quassans: 'non me tua feruida terrent

But Turnus shakes his head and saith: "'Tis not thy bitter word
dicta, ferox; di me terrent et Iuppiter hostis.' 895

That frights me, fierce one; but the Gods, but Jove my foeman grown."

nec plura effatus saxum circumspicit ingens,

No more he said, but, looking round, espied a weighty stone,

saxum antiquum ingens, campo quod forte iacebat,

An ancient mighty rock indeed, that lay upon the lea,

limes agro positus litem ut discerneret aruis.

Set for a landmark, judge and end of acre-strife to be,

uix illum lecti bis sex ceruice subirent,

Which scarce twice six of chosen men upon their backs might raise,

qualia nunc hominum producit corpora tellus; 900

Of bodies such as earth brings forth amid the latter days:

ille manu raptum trepida torquebat in hostem

But this in hurrying hand he caught, and rising to the cast,

altior insurgens et cursu concitus heros.

He hurled it forth against the foe, and followed on it fast;

sed neque currentem se nec cognoscit euntem

Yet while he raised the mighty stone, and flung it to its fall.

tollentemue manu saxumue immane mouentem;

Knew nought that he was running there, or that he moved at all:

genua labant, gelidus concreuit frigore sanguis. 905

Totter his knees, his chilly blood freezes with deadly frost,

tum lapis ipse uiri uacuum per inane uolutus

And e'en the hero-gathered stone, through desert distance tossed,

nec spatium euasit totum neque pertulit ictum.

O'ercame not all the space betwixt, nor home its blow might bring:

ac uelut in somnis, oculos ubi languida pressit

E'en as in dreaming-tide of night, when sleep, the heavy thing,

nocte quies, nequiquam auidos extendere cursus

Weights on the eyes, and all for nought we seem so helpless-fain

uelle uidemur et in mediis conatibus aegri 910

Of eager speed, and faint and fail amidmost of the strain;
succidimus; non lingua ualet, non corpore notae
The tongue avails not; all our limbs of their familiar skill
sufficiunt uires nec uox aut uerba sequuntur:
Are cheated; neither voice nor words may follow from our will:
sic Turno, quacumque uiam uirtute petiuit,
So Turnus, by whatever might he strives to win a way,
successum dea dira negat. tum pectore sensus
The Dread One bans his hope; strange thoughts about his heartstrings play;
uertuntur uarii; Rutulos aspectat et urbem 915
He stareth on his Rutuli, and on the Latin town
cunctaturque metu letumque instare tremescit,
Lingering for dread, trembling to meet the spear this instant thrown:
nec quo se eripiat, nec qua ui tendat in hostem,
No road he hath to flee, no might against the foe to bear;
nec currus usquam uidet aurigamue sororem.
Nowhither may he see his car, or sister charioteer.
Cunctanti telum Aeneas fatale coruscat,
Æneas, as he lingereth there, shaketh the fateful shaft,
sortitus fortunam oculis, et corpore toto 920
And, following up its fate with eyes, afar the steel doth waft
eminus intorquet. murali concita numquam
With all the might his body hath: no stone the wall-sling bears
tormento sic saxa fremunt nec fulmine tanti
E'er roars so loud: no thunderclap with such a crashing tears
dissultant crepitus. uolat atri turbinis instar
Amid the heaven: on flew the spear, huge as the whirlwind black,
exitium dirum hasta ferens orasque recludit
And speeding on the dreadful death: it brings to utter wrack
loricae et clipei extremos septemplicis orbis; 925
The hauberk's skirt and outer rim of that seven-folded shield,
per medium stridens transit femur. incidit ictus
And goeth grating through the thigh: then falleth unto field
ingens ad terram duplicato poplite Turnus.
Huge Turnus, with his hampered knee twi-folded with the wound:
consurgunt gemitu Rutuli totusque remugit

Then with a groan the Rutuli rise up, and all around
 mons circum et uocem late nemora alta remittunt.
 Roar back the hill-sides, and afar the groves cast back the cry:
 ille humilis supplex oculos dextramque precantem 930
 But he, downcast and suppliant saith, with praying hand and eye:
 protendens 'equidem merui nec deprecor' inquit;
 "Due doom it is; I pray no ruth; use what hath chanced to fall.
 'utere sorte tua. miseri te si qua parentis
 Yet, if a wretched father's woe may touch thine heart at all,
 tangere cura potest, oro (fuit et tibi talis
 I pray thee — since Anchises once was even such to thee, —
 Anchises genitor) Dauni miserere senectae
 Pity my father Daunus' eld, and send me, or, maybe,
 et me, seu corpus spoliatum lumine mauis, 935
 My body stripped of light and life, back to my kin and land.
 redde meis. uicisti et uictum tendere palmas
 Thou, thou hast conquered: Italy has seen my craven hand
 Ausonii uidere; tua est Lauinia coniunx,
 Stretched forth to pray a grace of thee; Lavinia is thy wife:
 ulterius ne tende odiis.' stetit acer in armis
 Strain not thine hatred further now!" Fierce in the gear of strife
 Aeneas uoluens oculos dextramque repressit;
 Æneas stood with rolling eyes, and held back hand and sword,
 et iam iamque magis cunctantem flectere sermo 940
 And more and more his wavering heart was softening 'neath the word —
 coeperat, infelix umero cum apparuit alto
 When lo, upon the shoulder showed that hapless thong of war!
 balteus et notis fulserunt cingula bullis
 Lo, glittering with familiar boss the belt child Pallas bore,
 Pallantis pueri, uictum quem uulnere Turnus
 Whom Turnus with a wound overcame and laid on earth alow,
 strauerat atque umeris inimicum insigne gerebat.
 And on his body bore thenceforth those ensigns of his foe.
 ille, oculis postquam saeui monimenta doloris 945
 But he, when he awhile had glared upon that spoil of fight,
 exuiasque hausit, furiis accensus et ira

That monument of bitter grief, with utter wrath alight,
terribilis: 'tune hinc spoliis indute meorum
Cried terrible: "And shalt thou, clad in my beloved one's prey,
eripiare mihi? Pallas te hoc uulnere, Pallas
Be snatched from me? — Tis Pallas yet, 'tis Pallas thus doth slay,
immolat et poenam scelerato ex sanguine sumit.'
And taketh of thy guilty blood atonement for his death!"
hoc dicens ferrum aduerso sub pectore condit 950
Deep in that breast he driveth sword e'en as the word he saith:
feruidus; ast illi soluuntur frigore membra
But Turnus, — waxen cold and spent, the body of him lies,
uitaque cum gemitu fugit indignata sub umbras.
And with a groan through dusk and dark the scornful spirit flies.

Brindisi harbour, Apulia region of Italy — having left Greece and crossed back to Italy by ship, while weakened with disease, Virgil died in Brundisium harbour on September 21, 19 BC.

LIFE OF VIRGIL by H. R. Fairclough

Publius Vergilius Maro was born October 15, 70 B.C., at Andes, a district near Mantua. He was "of rustic parentage, and brought up in the bush and forest," but his father gave him a careful education, first at Cremona, then at Milan, and lastly at Rome. In the capital he studied especially under Epidius the rhetorician, and Siro, a distinguished Epicurean.

To his student-days must belong the short poems known as Catalepton (Kara Acttov, i.e. "small"), if indeed any of these are genuine. To the same period would belong the rest of the minor poems — the Culex, Ciris, Copa, Dirae, Priapea, Aetna, and Moretum—though it is very doubtful whether any of these are authentic.

Virgil's second period begins with 43 e.g., when, after Caesar's assassination, we find the poet again in Mantua. In that year the second triumvirate was formed, and in the year following Brutus and Cassius were defeated at Philippi. In the subsequent allotment of lands to the victorious veterans Cremona and Mantua suffered severely. The poet was dispossessed of his farm and, attempting resistance, barely escaped with his life. However, he found a friend in C. Asinius Pollio, governor of Cisalpine Gaul, and in Pollio's successor (41 B.C.), L. Alfenus Varus. Through Pollio he was introduced to Octavius, and either recovered his farm or received in compensation an estate in Campania.

The poems in which Virgil records his experience at this time are the ten Eclogues, or Bucolics, which were published in their present order in 37 b.c. The two that are mainly concerned with the poet's expulsion from his farm are the first and ninth, but at least three, viz. the second, third, and fifth (with probably the seventh as well), preceded the first in point of time and, like it, were written in the poet's native district. The sixth and ninth were composed at Siro's villa; the remainder, viz. the fourth, eighth, and tenth, were written in Rome. The first doubtless won its place in the series because of the tribute it pays to Octavius, who before 37 b.c. had become sole ruler in Italy.

Seven years were devoted to the Georgics, the four books of which were published in 29 b.c, two years after the battle of Actium. The work was undertaken at the request of Maecenas, to whom it is dedicated. Though a didactic poem, being a treatise on agriculture, the Georgics are perhaps the most carefully finished production of Roman literature.

The rest of Virgil's life was devoted to the Aeneid, the greatest of Roman epics. Before it was ready for publication Virgil set out in 19 b.c. for Greece and Asia, where he intended to spend the next three years in revising his work. At Athens, however, meeting Augustus on his homeward journey from the East, he was induced to return with the Emperor to Italy. A fever, contracted at Megara, grew worse during the voyage, and ended in his death at Brundisium, a few days after landing, in the fifty-first year of his age, September 22, 19 b.c. He was buried at Naples, and on his tomb was inscribed the epitaph :

MANTUA ME GENUIT, CALABRI RAPUERERE, TENET NUNC
PARTHENOPE ; CECINI PASCUA, RURA, DUCES.

Conscious of many imperfections in the Aeneid, Virgil had begged Varius (who along with Tucca was Virgil's literary executor), in the event of his death, to burn the epic. It was published, however, by order of Augustus, who directed the executors to edit it, removing all superfluities, but making no additions. Examples of passages removed are furnished by the prooemium of four lines at the beginning of the Aeneid, and by the Helen episode in the second book (11. 567-588). In both cases Virgil's dissatisfaction with the passages may have been known to his literary friends.

LIFE AND PERSONAL CHARACTERISTICS OF VIRGIL by W. Y. Sellar

I.

The most trustworthy sources for our personal knowledge of the great writers of antiquity are their own writings, and accidental notices in the works of contemporaries and writers of a succeeding generation. But besides these sources of information some short biographies of eminent Latin writers, written long after their deaths, have reached modern times. In cases where their actual biographies have been lost, fragments or summaries of them have been preserved in Jerome's continuation of the Eusebian Chronicle, and occasionally in commentaries or scholia appended to their own works. Roman literature from a comparatively early period produced a large number of grammarians, commentators, and rhetoricians. In the Ciceronian Age, Varro wrote several books on literary history and the earlier poets; and Cornelius Nepos included in his Biographies the lives of men of letters, among others of his own contemporary, Atticus. Jerome, in the prefatory letter to his own work 'De Viris Illustribus,' mentions the names of Varro, Santra, Nepos, Hyginus, and Suetonius as authors of literary biography, and proposes to follow in his own work the precedent set by the last of these authors. Of the work of Suetonius 'De Viris Illustribus,' written in the second century, and containing the lives of eminent poets, orators, historians, philosophers, grammarians, and rhetoricians, considerable portions have been preserved; among others complete biographies of Terence and Horace. This work became the chief authority to later commentators for the facts recorded about the earlier Roman poets, and was the source from which Jerome himself drew the materials for the continuation of the Eusebian Chronicle. The question remains as to how far Suetonius himself writing under the rule of Hadrian, is a trustworthy authority for the lives of poets who lived nearly two centuries before his own era. The answer to this question will depend on the access which he may have had to contemporary sources, transmitted to his time through an uninterrupted channel, and on the evidence of credulity or trustworthiness in accepting or rejecting gossip and scandalous anecdotes which his other writings afford. He appears to have been diligent in his examination of original authorities. On the other hand, his 'Lives of the Caesars' indicate a vein of credulity in regard to the details of unverifiable charges at which Tacitus only hints by general innuendo. But the main question in regard to the life of each particular poet is, whether there was in existence written evidence dating from contemporary sources on which Suetonius could have based his narrative. In the case of some poets, notably of Virgil, it is quite certain that there was such evidence. In the case of others, notably of Lucretius, there is no hint whatever of the existence of any such evidence. The poets who immediately succeeded him and who were diligent students of his poem concur in absolute silence as to the story of that poet's unhappy fate, told in the continuation of the Eusebian Chronicle, and now received by the most competent critics as resting on the authority of Suetonius. But even when we substitute Suetonius for Jerome as the original voucher for the facts stated, the uncertainty as to any contemporary evidence available to the former, and the sensational character of the story itself, justify at least a suspense of judgment in accepting or rejecting this meagre fragment of personal history; while on the other hand there is no ground for distrusting the main features, whatever may be said of some details, of the ancient life of Virgil, equally acknowledged to rest ultimately on the authority of Suetonius.

In addition to these materials for the biography of Latin writers, in some few cases the imagination is assisted in realising their character and genius by the preservation from ancient times of their statues, busts, images impressed on gems, or other kinds of portraiture. But in the case of men of letters, it is not often that reliance can be placed on the authenticity of such memorials, except in such instances as that of Cicero, where a great name in literature was combined with prominence in public life.

The data for a knowledge of the life, circumstances, and personal characteristics of Virgil are supplied partly by direct statements contained in his poems or inferences founded on them; partly by the indirect impression of himself stamped on these poems; partly by casual notices in the works of other poets, and especially of Horace; and partly by statements in the Life of the poet originally prefixed to the Commentary of Aelius Donatus,—a grammarian who flourished in the fourth century A.D.,—and founded on, if not an actual reproduction of, the Life originally contained in the work of Suetonius.

The directest record of his tastes and feelings is contained in one or two of the minor poems published among the Catalepton, which may without hesitation be treated as genuine. A fragment of a prose letter to Augustus has been preserved by Macrobius, which confirms the traditional account of the poet's estimate of the Aeneid and of his devotion in later life to philosophical studies. The Eclogues and Georgics add something to our information, but as the representation in the first of these works is for the most part dramatic, and as the purpose of the second is purely didactic, the evidence they supply is much less vivid and direct than that supplied by Horace, Catullus, and the elegiac poets in regard to their lives and pursuits; and even where the allusions to matters personal to himself are unmistakeable, they require to be interpreted by knowledge derived from other sources.

The Georgics and those parts of the Aeneid which are specially ethical and didactic, as that part of Book VI. from line 264 to 751, throw most light on Virgil's spiritual nature and on his convictions on the questions of most vital interest to man. But in these parts of his works Virgil has not revealed himself with such distinctness and consistency as Lucretius has done in his great philosophical poem. The personality of Lucretius was simpler and more forcible: the passion to utter his strong convictions prevailed in him over all considerations of art. The colouring of his own heart and spirit, of his enthusiasm or melancholy, appears in Virgil rather as a pervading and subtly interpenetrating influence, than as the direct indication of his true self. His artistic taste enforced on him reserve in expressing what was personal to himself; his nature was apparently more open to varied influences of books and men than that of Lucretius; he was endowed with the many-sided susceptibility of a poet, rather than with the simpler, more energetic, but narrower consistency of a philosophical partisan. Equally with Lucretius he throws his whole heart and being into the treatment of his subject; but in Lucretius the two streams of what is personal to himself and what is inherent in his subject are still distinguishable. In Virgil the imaginative sentiment of the poet and the strong tender heart of the man seem to be inseparably united. It would be impossible to distinguish them by analysis,—to abstract from the bloom of his poetry the delicate sweetness which may have pervaded his performance of the common duties and his share in the common intercourse of life.

Of the contemporary poets and critics whose works are extant, much the most important witness of the impression produced by Virgil on those with whom he lived is the poet Horace. And he is an admirable witness, from the clearness of his judgment, the calmness of his temperament, and the intimate terms of friendship on which he lived with the older poet. Unlike Virgil, who from reasons of health, or natural inclination, or devotion to his art had chosen

Secretum iter et fallentis semita vitae,

and cherished few, but close, intimacies, Horace lived in the world, enjoyed all that was illustrious, brilliant or genial, in the society of his time, and while still constant to the attachments of his earlier years, continued through all his life to form new friendships with younger men who gave promise of distinction. His Odes and Epistles are addressed to a great variety of men, to those of highest social or political position, such as Agrippa, Pollio, Munatius Plancus, Sallustius Crispus, Lollius, etc.; to old comrades of his youth or brother poets, such as Pompeius Grosphus, Septimius, Aristius Fuscus, Tibullus; to the men of a younger generation, such as Iulus Antonius, Julius Florus, and the younger Lollius: and to all of them he applies language of discriminating, but not of excessive appreciation. To the men of eminence in the State he uses expressions of courteous and delicate compliment, never of flattery or exaggeration. His old comrades and intimate associates he greets with hearty friendliness or genial irony: to younger men, without assuming the airs of a Mentor, he addresses words of sympathetic encouragement or paternal advice. But among all those whom he addresses there are only two—unless from one or two words implying strong attachment, we add one more to the number, Aelius Lamia—in connexion with whom he uses the language of warm and admiring affection. These are Maecenas and Virgil. Whatever may have been the date or circumstances connected with the composition of the third Ode of Book I., the simple words ‘animae dimidium meae’ establish the futility of the notion, that the subject of this Ode is not the poet but only the same merchant or physician whom Horace in the twelfth Ode of Book IV. invites, in his most Epicurean style, to sacrifice for a time his pursuit of wealth to the more seasonable claims of the wine of Cales.

Two short Lives of Virgil written in prose have reached our time, one originally prefixed to the Commentary by Valerius Probus, a grammarian of the first century A.D., the other, much longer and more important, prefixed to that of Donatus. There is also a Life in hexameter verse, written by a grammarian named Phocas, about one half of which is devoted to an account of the marvellous portents that were alleged to have accompanied the birth of the poet. The Life of Donatus was in the later MSS. of Virgil so much corrupted by the intermixture of mediaeval fictions, that it is only in recent times that modern criticism has successfully removed the interpolations, and restored the original Life based on that of Suetonius. What then were the materials available to Suetonius? The earliest source of his information was a work referred to by Quintilian (x. 3. 8), written by the older contemporary and life-long friend of Virgil, the poet Varius, entitled ‘De ingenio moribusque Vergilii.’ Aulus Gellius (xvii. 10) speaks of the ‘memorials which the friends and intimates of Virgil have left of his genius and character.’ Among those who contributed to the knowledge of his habits, etc., the name of C. Melissus, a freedman of Maecenas, is quoted as an authority for a statement that ‘in ordinary speech he was very slow and almost like an uneducated man’—a trait which calls to mind what is recorded of Addison. Melissus could not fail to be an authority as to the relations of Virgil to Maecenas, and it is probably on his evidence that the statement rests of the direction given to the poet’s genius in the choice of the subject of the Georgics.

A still more important work was that of the grammarian Asconius Pedianus, born at the commencement of our era, who wrote ‘Contra obtrectatores Vergilii.’ These ‘maligners,’ beginning with those whose names have been condemned to everlasting fame, as Bavius and Maeвиus, had assailed the art of Virgil by flippant parodies, or had traduced his character by imputations, which, though they might have called for no remark if made against any other poet of the time, were believed by those who had the best means of knowing the truth to be incompatible with the finer nature of Virgil. In regard to one of these charges Asconius was able to procure the evidence of an emphatic denial from the only surviving person who could have known anything about the matter.

The certainty that the biographical notices of Virgil and the accounts transmitted of his personal characteristics can be traced to contemporary sources and to information derived from contemporaries, gives to the main statements of Donatus a value which does not attach to the meagre notice of Lucretius preserved in the writings of Jerome. On the other hand, while it is believed by his English Editor that the actual features of Lucretius have been transmitted, engraved on a gem, no reliance can be placed on the authenticity either of the busts, such as that shown in the Capitoline Museum, or of the portraits prefixed to various MSS., and all different from one another, which profess to transmit the likeness of Virgil.

II.

The testimony of inscriptions, of the earliest MSS., and of the Greek rendering of the word, has led to the general adoption in recent times of the name P. Vergilius Maro, as that by which the poet should be known. Yet it is an unnecessary disturbance of old associations to change the abbreviation so long established in all European literature into the unfamiliar Vergil. He was born on the 15th of October in the year 70 B.C., the first consulate of Pompey and Crassus. The Romans attached a peculiar sacredness to their own birth-days and to those of their friends; and the birth-day of Virgil

continued long after his death to be regarded with the sanctity of a day of festival. The year of his birth is the first year of that decade in which many of the men most eminent in the Augustan era were born. Virgil was a little younger than Pollio and Varius; a little older than Gallus, Agrippa, Horace, and Augustus, and perhaps Maecenas. All of these men obtained high distinction, and took their place as leaders of their age in action or literature in early youth. The distinction of Virgil was acquired at a somewhat later period of life than that of any of his illustrious contemporaries.

This year is also important as marking the close of the wars and disturbances which arose out of the first great Civil War, and the commencement of a short interval of repose, though hardly of order or security. Lucretius in his childhood and early youth had witnessed the Social War, the bloody strife of Marius and Sulla, and the prolongation of these troubles in the wars of Sertorius and Spartacus; and the memory of the first Civil War seems to have impressed itself indelibly on his imagination and powerfully to have affected his whole view of human life, as the horrors of the first French Revolution imprinted themselves indelibly on the imagination of those whose childhood had been agitated or made desolate by them. Virgil's childhood and early youth were passed in the shelter of a quieter time. He had reached manhood before the second of the great storms which overwhelmed the State passed over the Roman world. The alarm and insecurity felt at Rome during the interval may have caused some agitation of the calmer atmosphere which surrounded his childhood; but the peace of his earliest and most impressible years was marred by no scenes of horror, such as the massacre at the Colline Gate, the memory of which perhaps survives in those lines of Lucretius in which the miseries of a savage life are contrasted with those of times of refinement:—

At non multa virum sub signis milia ducta
Una dies dabat exitio.

His birth-place was in the 'pagus,' or 'township,' of Andes in the neighbourhood of Mantua. The exact situation of Andes is unknown, though a tradition, as old as the time of Dante, identifies it with the village of Pietola, about three miles lower down the Mincio than Mantua. But it is only in the Life by Probus that Andes is described as a 'vicus,' and there it is said to be distant from Mantua 'xxx milia passuum.' The word pagus, which is generally used in reference to Andes, never seems to be used as equivalent to vicus, but as a 'country-district,' which might include several villages. The tradition which identifies Andes with any particular village in the neighbourhood of Mantua does not therefore carry with it any guarantee of its truth. In the Eclogues the conventional scenery of pastoral poetry is blended so inseparably with the reproduction from actual scenes, that it is impossible to determine with certainty the characteristic features of Virgil's early home. The immediate neighbourhood of Mantua presents no features to which the lines of the first Eclogue,

Maioresque cadunt altis de montibus umbrae,

or

Hinc alta sub rupe canet frondator ad auras,

can apply.

The most characteristic objects familiar to Virgil's early years appear to have been the green banks and slow windings of the Mincio, which he recalls with affectionate memory in passages of the Eclogues and Georgics. From the fact that the farm on which he lived formed part of the Mantuan land added to the confiscated territory of Cremona, the inference seems obvious that it was on the right bank of the Mincio, i.e. on the side nearest Cremona. The use of the word 'depellere' (Ecl. i. 21) might perhaps justify the inference that it was either on higher ground, or was situated higher up the river than Mantua, though the other interpretation of 'driving our weaned lambs' forbids our attaching much force to this problematical inference. But the lines which produce more than any other the impression of describing the actual features of some familiar place are those of the ninth Eclogue, 7-10:—

Certe equidem audieram qua se subducere colles

Incipiunt mollique iugum demittere clivo,

Usque ad aquam et veteres, iam fracta cacumina, fagos,

Omnia carminibus vestrum servasse Menalcan.

There seems no motive, certainly none suggested by the Sicilian idyl, for introducing the hills gradually sinking into the plain, unless to mark the actual position of the place referred to. The only hills in the neighbourhood of the Mincio to which these lines can apply are those which for a time accompany the flow of the river from the foot of the Lago di Guarda, and gradually sink into the plain a little beyond 'the picturesque hill and castle of Vallegio,' about fifteen miles higher up the river than Mantua. Eustace, in his Classical Tour, finds many of the features introduced into the first and ninth Eclogues in this neighbourhood, though the wish to find them may have contributed to the success of his search. A walk of fifteen miles seems not too long for young and active shepherds, like Moeris and Lycidas, while such expressions as

Tamen veniemus in urbem;

Aut si nox pluviam ne colligat ante veremur,—

seem inapplicable to the shorter distance between Pietola and Mantua.

The 'sacri fontes' which are spoken of in Eclogue I., the existence of which is further confirmed by the

Non liquidi gregibus fontes, non gramina deerunt

in the description from the Georgics (ii. 200), of the pastoral land which Mantua lost, are more naturally to be sought in the more picturesque environment of the upper reaches of the river than in the level plain in the midst of which Mantua stands. The accurate description of the lake out of which the Mincio flows—

Fluctibus et fremitu adsurgens Benace marino,—

the truth of which is attested by many modern travellers, Goethe among others—may well be the reproduction of some actual impression made in some of Virgil's early wanderings not far distant from the home of his youth. The passage in the Georgics just referred to, in which, speaking of the land most suitable for rearing herds and flocks, he introduces the lines

Et qualem infelix amisit Mantua campum,

Pascentem niveos herboso flumine cynos,

proves the tender affection with which he recalled in later life the memory of his early home.

Some analogy has been suggested between the quiet beauty of the scenery which first sank into his soul, and the tranquil meditative cast of his genius. And though it is easy to push such considerations too far, and to expect a closer correspondence than ever exists between the development of genius and the earliest impression of outward nature on the soul, in a poet like Virgil, unusually receptive and retentive of such impressions, whose days from childhood to death were closely bound 'each to each by natural piety,' in whom all elements of feeling were finely and delicately blended with one another, such influences may have been more powerful than in the case of men of a less impressionable and more self-determining type.

The district north of the Po, of which Virgil was a native, had enjoyed the 'ius Latii' since the end of the Social War, but did not obtain the full rights of Roman citizenship till the year 49 B.C., when Virgil was in his twenty-first year. The national poet of the early Empire, like the national poet of the Republic, had thus in all probability no claim by birth to be a member of the State of whose character and destiny his voice has been the truest exponent. It may be doubted whether Virgil belonged by birth to the purely Italian stock. He claims for Mantua a Tuscan origin; but the Etruscan race in the region north of the Po had for a long time previously given way before the settlements of the Gauls; and, although Roman conquest had established several important colonies north of the Po, the main stock between that river and the Alps must have been of Celtic blood, although assimilated in manner of life and culture to the purely Italian inhabitants of the Peninsula. Zeuss, in his Celtic Grammar, recognises the presence of a Celtic root, which appears in other Gallic names, and which he supposes to be the root also of virgo, and virga, and Vergiliae, in the name Vergilius. Some elements in Virgil's nature and genius which seem to anticipate the developments of modern feeling, as, for instance, his vague melancholy, his imaginative sense of the mystery of the unseen world, his sympathy with the sentiment, as distinct from the passion, of love, the modes in which his delight in nature manifests itself, the vein of romance which runs through his treatment of early times may perhaps be explained by some subtle intermixture of Celtic blood with the firmer temperament of the old Italian race. Appreciated as his genius has been by all the cultivated nations of Europe, it is by the nation in whom the impressible Celtic nature has been refined and strengthened by the discipline of Latin studies that his pre-eminence has been most generally acknowledged.

It is to be noticed that, while in the Ciceronian Age the names of the men eminent in literature belong, with one or two exceptions, either to the pure Roman stock or to the races of central Italy which had been longest incorporated with Rome, in the last years of the Republic and in the Augustan Age Northern Italy contributed among other names those of Catullus, Cornelius Gallus, Quintilius Varus, Aemilius Macer, Virgil, and the historian Livy to the roll of Latin literature. Since the concessions which followed the Social War the whole people inhabiting the Peninsula had become thoroughly united in spirit with the Imperial city, and Latin literature as well as the service of the State thus received a great impulse from the liberality with which Rome, at different stages in her history, extended the privileges of her citizenship. The culture of which Rome had been for two generations the centre became now much more widely diffused; and as the privilege of citizenship, or of that modified citizenship conferred by the 'ius Latii,' was more prized from its novelty, so the attractions of literary studies and the impulses of literary ambition were felt more strongly from coming fresh and unhackneyed to a vigorous race. It was a happier position for Virgil and for Horace, it fitted them not only to be truer poets of the natural beauty of Italy, but also to feel in imagination all the wonder associated with the idea of the great city, to have spent their earliest and most impressible years among scenes of peace and beauty, remote from contact with the excitement, the vices, the routine of city life, than if, with the friend of Juvenal, they could have applied to themselves the words—'our childhood drank in the air of the Aventine.'

There is still one point to be noticed in connexion with the district in which Virgil was born and passed his early youth. It was from Julius Caesar that Gallia Transpadana received the full Roman citizenship. But before he established this claim on their gratitude, the 'Transpadani,' as we learn from Cicero's letters, were thoroughly devoted to his cause, and it was among them that his legions were mainly recruited. One of the spiteful acts by which the aristocratic party showed its animosity to Caesar was the scourging of one of the inhabitants of the colony of Novum Comum (Como) by order of the Consul Marcellus,—an act condemned by Cicero on the ground that the victim of this outrage was a ‘Transpadanus.’ Caesar was in the habit of passing the winters of his proconsulate in this part of his province, especially at Verona, where he was the guest of the father of Catullus. The name of Caesar must thus have become a household word among this people. They must have soon recognised his greatness as a soldier, and felt the fascination of his gracious presence. They must have been grateful for his championship of the provinces against the oppressive rule of the Senate, and for the protection afforded by his army from dangers similar to those from which their fathers had been saved, after many disasters, by his great kinsman, Marius. They did not share the sentiments of distrust excited among the aristocracy at Rome by Caesar’s early career, and had no reason to regard the permanent ascendancy of one man as a heavier burden than the caprices of their temporary governors. From the favour which Virgil received from leaders of the Caesarean cause before his fame was established, and from his intimacy with Varius the panegyrist of Julius Caesar, it may be inferred that in adhering to the cause of the Empire he was true to the early impressions of his boyhood. He was one of the first to feel and make others feel the spell which the name of Caesar was destined henceforth to exercise over the world.

Latin literature in the Augustan Age drew its representatives not only from a wider district than the preceding age, but also from a different social class. The men eminent as poets, orators, and historians in the last years of the Republic were for the most part members of the great Roman or Italian families. They were either themselves actively engaged in political life, or living in intimacy with those who were so engaged. Whatever tincture of letters was found in any other class was confined to freedmen or learned Greeks, such as Archias and Theophanes, attached to the houses of the nobility. The fortunes of the two great poets of the Augustan Age prove that no barrier of class-prejudice and no necessary inferiority of early education prevented free-born men of very humble origin from attaining the highest distinction, and living as the trusted friends of the foremost men in the State. Virgil and Horace were the sons of men who by the thrift and industry of a humble occupation had been able to buy small farms in their native district. Virgil's father had not indeed, like the father of Horace, risen from a servile position. He is said to have begun life as a hired assistant to one Magius, who, according to one account, was a potter, according to another a 'viator' (or officer whose duty it was to summon prisoners before magistrates). He married the daughter of his master, being recommended to him, as is said by his biographer, by his industry (ob industriam). The name of Virgil's mother was Magia Polla. His father is said to have increased his substance among other things by keeping bees (silvis coemendis et apibus curandis),—a fact which perhaps explains the importance given to this branch of rural industry in the Georgics. Virgil thus springs from that class whose condition he represents as the happiest allotted to man, and as affording the best field for the exercise of virtue and piety. He and Horace, after living in the most refined society of Rome, are entirely at one in their appreciation of the qualities of the old Italian husbandmen or small landowners,—a class long before their time reduced in numbers and influence, but still producing men of modest worth and strong common sense like the 'abnormis sapiens' of the Satires, and like those country neighbours whose lively talk and homely wisdom Horace contrasts with the fashionable folly of Rome; and true and virtuous women, such as may have suggested to the one poet the lines—

Quod si pudica mulier in partem iuvet

Domum atque dulces liberos,

Sabina qualis aut perusta solibus

Pernicis uxor Appuli,

and to the other—

Interea longum cantu solata laborem

Arguto coniunx percurrit pectine telas.

These poets themselves probably owe that stronger grain of character, their large share of the old Italian seriousness of spirit (gravitas), which distinguishes them from the other poets of their time, to the traditions of virtue which the men of this class had not yet unlearned. It is remarked by M. Sainte-Beuve how strong the attachment of such men usually is to their homes and lands, inherited from their fathers or acquired and enriched by their own industry. He characterises happily 'cette médiocrité de fortune et de condition morale dans laquelle était né Virgile, médiocrité, ai-je dit, qui rend tout mieux senti et plus cher, parcequ'on y touche à chaque instant la limite, parcequ'on y a toujours présent le moment où l'on a acquis et celui où l'on peut tout perdre.' The truest human feeling expressed in the Eclogues is the love which the old settlers had for their lands, and the sorrow which they felt when forced to quit them. The Georgics bear witness to the strong Italian passion for the soil, and the pride in the varied results of his skill which made a life of unceasing labour one of contentment and happiness to the husbandman.

As has happened in the case of other poets and men of poetic genius, tradition recorded some marvellous circumstances attending his birth, which were believed to have portended his future distinction. These stories may have originated early in his career from the promise of genius afforded by his childhood: or, like the mediaeval belief in his magical powers, they may be a kind of mythological reflection of the veneration and affection with which his memory was cherished. The character of these reported presages implies the impression produced by the gentleness and sweetness of his disposition, as well as by the rapid growth and development of his poetic faculty.

A more trustworthy indication of his early promise is afforded by the care with which he was educated. Like Horace, he was fortunate in having parents who, themselves of humble origin, considered him worthy of receiving the best instruction which the world could give; and, like Horace, he repaid their tender solicitude with affectionate gratitude. By his father's care he was from boyhood dedicated to the high calling which he faithfully followed through all his life. At the age of twelve he was taken to Cremona, an old Latin colony; and, from the lines in one of his earliest authentic poems (the address to the villa of Siron)—

Tu nunc eris illi

Mantua quod fuerat, quodque Cremona prius—

implying a residence at Cremona, it seems probable that his father may have accompanied him thither, as Horace's father accompanied him to Rome for the same purpose. On his sixteenth birth-day—the day on which, according to Donatus, Lucretius died—Virgil assumed the 'toga virilis,' and about the same time went to Milan, and continued there, engaged in study, till he removed to Rome in the year 53 B.C., when he was between sixteen and seventeen years of age. It was in this year of his life that he is said to have written the 'Culex.' There are many difficulties which prevent the belief that Virgil is the author of the poem which has come down to us under that name. But the consideration of these must be reserved for a later examination of the poem.

At Rome he studied rhetoric under Epidius, who was also the teacher of the young Octavianus. As the future Emperor made his first public appearance at the age of twelve, by delivering the funeral oration over his grandmother Julia, it may have happened that he and Virgil were pupils of Epidius at the same time, and were not unknown to each other even before the meeting of ten years later which decisively affected Virgil's fortunes and determined his career. The time of his arrival at Rome was of critical importance in literature. The recent publication of the poem of Lucretius, the most important event in Latin literature since the appearance of the Annals of Ennius, must have stimulated the enthusiasm of the younger generation, among whom poetry and oratory were at that time conjointly cultivated. Mr. Munro has shown the influence exercised by this poem on the later style of Catullus, who collected and edited his own poems about the time when Virgil came to Rome, and died shortly afterwards. One or two of the minor poems among the Catalepton, attributed to Virgil with more probability than the Culex, are parodies or close imitations of the style of Catullus, and are written in a freer and more satiric spirit than anything published by him in later years. But it is a little remarkable that, while reproducing the language and cadences of both these poets in his first acknowledged work, Virgil never mentions the name either of Lucretius or Catullus. The poets mentioned by him with admiration in the Eclogues are his living contemporaries, Varius and Cinna, Pollio and Gallus. Is it on account of the Senatorian and anti-Caesarean sympathies of the older poets that the poets of the new era thus separate themselves abruptly from those of the previous epoch? If it was owing to the jealousy of the new régime that the two great Augustan poets, while paying a passing tribute to the impracticable virtue of Cato, never mention the greater name or allude to the fate of Cicero, there seems to have been nothing in the political action or expressed opinions of Lucretius to call for a similar reticence. If, on the other hand, the boldness of his attack on the strongholds of all religious belief had the effect of cutting him off for a time from personal sympathy, as similar opposition to received opinions had in modern times in the case of Spinoza and Shelley, it did not interfere with the immediate influence exercised by his genius on the thought and art of Virgil.

The most interesting of the minor poems among the Catalepton is one written at the time when the young poet entered on the study of philosophy under Siron the Epicurean. This poem expresses the joy felt by him in exchanging the empty pretension and dull pedantry of rhetorical and grammatical studies for the real enquiries of philosophy:—

Ite hinc, inanes rhetorum ampullae,
Inflata rore non Achaico verba,
Et vos, Stiloque, Tarquitique, Varroque,
Scholasticorum natio madens pingui,
Ite hinc, inanis cymbalon iuventutis.

* * * * *

Nos ad beatos vela mittimus portus,
Magni petentes docta dicta Sironis,
Vitamque ab omni vindicabimus cura.

These lines are the earliest expression of that philosophical longing which haunted Virgil through all his life as a hope and aspiration, but never found its realisation in speculative result. The motive which he professes for entering on the study,

Vitamque ab omni vindicabimus cura,

is the same as that which acted on Lucretius—the wish to secure an ideal serenity of life. The same trust in the calming influence of the Epicurean philosophy appears in the Felix qui potuit rerum cognoscere causas, etc.

of the second Georgic. But in different ways, by the deep feeling of melancholy in the one, by the revolt and spiritual reaction in the other, Lucretius and Virgil both show that these tenets could not secure to ‘the passionate heart of the poet’ that calmness and serenity of spirit which they gave to men of the stamp of Atticus, Velleius, or Torquatus. The final lines of the poem express the lingering regret with which he bids a temporary farewell to the Muses. These few lines, more than any other poem attributed to Virgil, seem to bring him in his personal feelings nearer to us. There is a touch of the graciousness of his nature, recalling the cordial feeling of Catullus to all his young comrades, in the passing notice of those who had shared his studies:—

Iam valete, formosi.

At a time when the poetry of the younger generation was universally free and licentious in tone, the purity of Virgil's nature reveals itself in the prayer to the Muses to revisit his writings 'pudenter et raro,' chastely and seldom. The whole poem is the sincere expression of the scholar and poet, even in youth idealising the austere charm of philosophy, while feeling in his heart the more powerful attraction of poetry. In the

Nam, fatebimur verum,

Dulces fuistis,

is the literal expression of that deep joy which afterwards moved him in uttering the lines—

Me vero primum dulces ante omnia Musae, etc.

and

Sed me Parnassi deserta per ardua dulcis

Raptat amor;

and which sustained him steadfastly in the noble harmony of all his later life.

Of the next ten years of his career nothing is known with certainty; but the outbreak of the Civil War is likely to have interrupted his residence at Rome, and he is next heard of living in his native district and engaged in the composition of the Eclogues. He took no part in the war, nor ever served as a soldier; and he seems to have appeared only once in the other field of practical distinction open to a young Roman who had received so elaborate an education—that of forensic pleading. He is said to have wanted the readiness of speech and self-possession necessary for success in such a career; and he was thus fortunate in escaping all temptation to sacrifice his genius to the ambition of practical life, or to divide his allegiance, as Licinius Calvus did, between the claims of poetry and of oratory. His first literary impulse was to write an historical epic on the early Roman or Alban history, and to this impulse, he himself alludes in the lines of the sixth Eclogue,—

Cum canerem reges et proelia, Cynthus aurem Vellit et admonuit.

He gave up the idea, feeling the unsuitable nature of the material for poetic treatment,—‘offensus materia,’ as the Life of Donatus expresses it; and he resolutely resisted the projects often urged upon him of giving a poetical account of contemporary events, in celebration of the glory of Pollio, Varus, or Caesar. But it is noticeable as a proof of the persistence with which his mind continued to dwell on ideas once projected, till they finally assumed appropriate shape, that in the Aeneid he really combines these two purposes of vivifying the ancient traditions of Rome and Alba, and of glorifying the great results of his own era. It is by this capacity of forecasting some great work, and dwelling on the idea till it clears itself of all alien matter and assimilates to itself the impressions and interests of a life-time, that the vastest and most enduring monuments of genius are produced.

In the year of the battle of Philippi, Virgil was living in his native district, engaged in the composition of his pastoral poems. Of his mode of life, taste, and feelings about this time we perceive only that he continued to be a student of the Alexandrine literature, that he had, by natural gift and assiduous culture, brought the technical part of his art—the diction and rhythm of poetry—to the highest perfection hitherto attained, that he enjoyed the favour and patronage of the Governor of the province, Asinius Pollio, and that he was united by strong ties of affection and warm admiration to Cornelius Gallus, who, while still in early youth, had obtained high distinction in poetry and a prominent position in public life. There are in the Eclogues notices of other poets of the district, whose friendship he enjoyed or whose jealousy he excited. The Mopsus of the fifth is said to be the didactic poet, Aemilius Macer. The mention of Bavus and Maevius, the ‘iurgia Codri,’ and the allusion in a later poem to Anser the panegyrist of Antony, are the nearest approaches to anything like resentment or personal satire that Virgil has shown. It may be that in the lines where Amaryllis and Galatea and other personages of the poems are introduced he refers to some personal experiences; but as compared with all the poets of this era, Virgil either observed a great reticence, or enjoyed an exceptional immunity from the passions of youth. The whole tone of the earlier poems, and numerous expressions in all of them, such as 'tu, Tityre, lentus in umbra,' are suggestive of a somewhat indolent enjoyment of the charm of books, of poetry, and of the softer beauties of Nature.

The following year was the turning-point in his career, and gave a more definite aim to his genius and sympathies. In that year his own fortunes became involved in the affairs which were determining the fate of the world. The Triumvirs, in assigning grants of land to their soldiers, had confiscated the territory of Cremona, which had shown sympathy with the Senatorian cause, and when this proved insufficient, an addition was made from the adjoining Mantuan territory, in which the farm of Virgil's father was situated. The Commissioners appointed to distribute the land were Pollio, Varus, and Gallus, all friendly to Virgil, and by their advice he went to Rome, and obtained the restitution of his land by personal application to Octavianus. On his return to his native district he found that Varus had succeeded Pollio as Governor of the province. He appears to have been unfriendly to the Mantuans, and was either unable or unwilling to protect Virgil, who was forced at the imminent peril of his life to escape, by swimming the river, from the violence of the soldier who had entered on the possession of the land. Two of the Eclogues, the first and the ninth, are written in connexion with these events. Though he still adheres to an indirect and allusive treatment of his subject, these poems possess the interest of being based on real experience. They give expression to the sense of disorder, insecurity, and distress, which we learn from other sources accompanied these forced divisions and alienations of land. The first expresses also the gratitude of the poet to 'the god-like youth' to whom he owed the exceptional indulgence of being, though only for a short time, reinstated in the possession of his land. It is characteristic either of some weakness in Virgil's nature, or of a great depression among the peaceful inhabitants of Italy, that he had no thought of resisting violence by violence, that he does not even express resentment against the intruder, but only a feeling of wonder that any man could be capable of such wickedness. To most readers the vehemence with which the author of the 'Dirae,' under similar circumstances, curses the land and its new owners, appears, if less sweet and musical, more natural than this mild submission to superior force expressed by Virgil. But in these personal experiences that strong sympathy with the national fortunes, which henceforward animates his poetry, originates. Virgil may thus in a sense be numbered among the poets who 'are cradled into poetry by wrong.'

After this second forcible expulsion from his old home, he took refuge, along with his family, in a small country-house which had belonged to his old teacher Siron. The poem numbered X. in the Catalepta,

Villula quae Sironis eras, et pauper agelle,

Verum illi domino tu quoque divitiae,

was written at this time. It expresses anxiety and distress about the state of his native district, to which, as in Eclogue i., he applies the word patria, and affectionate solicitude for those along with him, 'those with me whom I have ever loved,' and especially for his father. His own experience at this time may have suggested to him the feelings which he afterwards reproduced in describing the flight of Aeneas from the ruins of Troy.

He seems never after this time to have returned to his native district. The liberality of Octavianus compensated him for his loss, nor was the even tenor of his life henceforward broken by any new dangers or hardships. Through the gift of friends and patrons he acquired a fortune, which at his death amounted to 10,000,000 sesterces (about £90,000); he possessed a house on the Esquiline near the gardens of Maecenas, a villa at Naples, and a country-house near Nola in Campania; and he seems to have lived from time to time in Sicily and the South of Italy.

The Eclogues, commenced in his native district in the year 42 B.C., were completed and published at Rome probably in the year 37 B.C. They were at once received with great favour, and recited amid much applause upon the stage. They established the author's fame as the poet of Nature and of rural life, as Varius was accepted as the poet of epic, Pollio of tragic poetry:—

Molle atque facetum

Vergilio annuerunt gaudentes rure Camenae.

For a short time afterwards Virgil lived chiefly at Rome, as one of the circle of which Maecenas was the centre, consisting of those poets and men eminent in the State whom Horace (Sat. i. 10) mentions as the critics and friends whose approval he valued. Our knowledge of Virgil at this time is derived from the first Book of the Satires of Horace. It was by Virgil and Varius that Horace himself was introduced to Maecenas. They were all three of the party who made the famous journey to Brundisium in 37 B.C. While Horace starts alone from Rome, Virgil and Varius join him at Sinuessa. Virgil may already have begun to withdraw from habitual residence in Rome to his retirement in Campania, where he principally lived from this time till his death. One line in this Satire confirms the account of the weakness of his health which is given by his biographer,—the line, namely, in which Horace describes himself and Virgil as going to sleep, while Maecenas went to enjoy the exercise of the ‘pila’:—

Lusum it Maecenas, dormitum ego Vergiliusque,

Namque pila lippis inimicum et ludere crudis.

There is no notice of Virgil in the second Book of the Satires, written between the years 35 and 30 B.C., at which time he had withdrawn altogether from Rome, and was living at Naples, engaged in the composition of the Georgics. Two of the Odes of Book I., however, the third and the twenty-fourth, throw some light on his circumstances and character, and on the relations of friendship subsisting between him and Horace. There is some difficulty in determining the occasion that gave rise to the first of these Odes. It is addressed to the ship which was to bear Virgil to Attica. As we only know of one voyage of Virgil to Attica, that immediately preceding his death, and as the first three Books of the Odes were originally published some years before that date, we must suppose either that this Ode refers to an earlier voyage contemplated or actually accomplished by Virgil; or that the Virgil here spoken of is a different person; or that the publication of the edition of the Odes which we possess was of a later date than that generally accepted.

The reason for rejecting the second of these alternatives has been already given. Two reasons may be given for rejecting the third,—first, the improbability that one of the latest, if not the latest, in point of time among all the Odes in the three Books should be placed third in order in the first Book, among Odes that all refer to a much earlier period; and secondly, that this Ode, in respect of the somewhat conventional nature of the thought and the character of the mythological allusions, is clearly written in Horace's earlier manner. There is no improbability in accepting the first alternative, that as Virgil travelled to and resided in Sicily, so he may have made, or at least contemplated, an earlier voyage to Greece. One object for such a voyage may have been the desire of seeing the localities which he represents Aeneas as passing or visiting in the course of his adventures between the time of leaving Troy and settling in Latium. The Aeneid indicates in many places the tastes of a cultivated traveller; and parts of the sea-voyage of Aeneas look as if they were founded on personal reminiscences.

It may be noticed in several of the Odes of Horace how he adapts the vein of thought running through them to the character or position of the person to whom they refer. The revival of the old Hesiodic and theological idea of the sin and impiety of that spirit of enterprise which led men first to brave the dangers of the sea, and to baffle the purpose of the Deity in separating nations from one another by the ocean,—an idea to which Virgil himself gives expression in the fourth Eclogue,—

*Pauca tamen suberunt priscae vestigia fraudis,
Quae temptare Thetim ratibus, etc.,—*

is not unsuited to the unadventurous disposition of the older poet.

The twenty-fourth Ode is addressed to him on the occasion of the death of their common friend Quintilius Varus, probably the Varus of the tenth poem of Catullus, and thus one of the last survivors of the friendly circle of poets and wits of a former generation. While a high tribute to the pure character of their lost friend, it is at the same time a tribute to the pious and affectionate character of Virgil.

It is a delicate touch of appreciation that Horace dwells more on the thought of the depth of Virgil's sorrow for their common friend than on his own. Both of these Odes give evidence of the strong affection which Virgil inspired; the second affords further evidence of the qualities in virtue of which he inspired that feeling. Similar proof of affection and appreciation is afforded by the words in which Horace in the fifth Satire of Book I. characterises Virgil ('Vergilius optimus,' as he elsewhere calls him), and his two friends Plotius and Varius,—

Animae quales neque candiores

Terra tulit, neque queis me sit devinctior alter.

The word 'candiores' suggests the same qualities of a beautiful nature,—the unworldly simplicity and sincerity, which are ascribed to Quintilius in the words 'pudor, incorrupta fides, nudaque veritas.'

The seven years from 37 B.C. to 30 B.C. were devoted by Virgil to the composition of the Georgics, a poem scarcely exceeding 2000 lines in length. His chief residence at this time was Naples:—

Me dulcis alebat

Parthenope, studiis florentem ignobilis oti.

He possessed also at this time a country-house or estate in the neighbourhood of Nola; and the fourth Book affords evidence of some time spent at or in the neighbourhood of Tarentum which is confirmed by the lines in Propertius,—

Tu canis umbrosi subter pineta Galaesi

Thyrsin et attritis Daphnin harundinibus,—

the region prized by Horace as second only to his beloved Tibur. In the year 29 B.C. he read the whole poem to Augustus, on his return from Asia, at the town of Atella. The reading occupied four days. Maecenas was of the party, and relieved the poet in the task of reading.

The remaining years of his life were spent in the composition of the Aeneid. One of the poems of the Catalepta (vi.) gives expression to a vow binding the poet to sacrifice a bull to Venus if he succeeded in accomplishing the task which he had imposed on himself. So early as the year 26 B.C., Augustus while engaged in the Cantabrian war, had desired to see some part of the poem. It was in answer to that request that Virgil wrote the letter of which the fragment, quoted in the previous chapter, has been preserved by Macrobius. At a later time, after the death of the young Marcellus (23 B.C.), he read three Books to Augustus and the other members of his family.

After spending eleven years on the composition of his great epic, he set aside three more for its final correction. In the year 19 B.C. he set out with the view of travelling in Greece and Asia. Meeting Augustus at Athens, he was persuaded to abandon his purpose and return with him to Italy. While visiting Megara under a burning sun he was seized with illness. Continuing his voyage without interruption, he became worse, and on the 21st of September, a few days after landing at Brundisium, he died in the fifty-first year of his age. In his last illness he showed the ruling passion of his life—the craving perfection—by calling for the cases which held his MSS., with the intention of burning the Aeneid. It is in keeping with the absence of self-assertion in his writings that his final hours were clouded by this sad sense of failure, rather than brightened by such confident assurances of immortality as other Roman poets have expressed. In the same spirit of dissatisfaction with all imperfect accomplishment, he left directions in his will that his executors, Varius and Tucca, should publish nothing but what had been already edited by him. This direction, which would have deprived the world of the Aeneid, was disregarded by them in compliance with the commands of Augustus.

He was buried at Naples, where his tomb was long regarded with religious veneration and visited as a temple; and tradition has associated his name, as that of a magician, with the construction of the great tunnel of Posilippo, in its immediate neighbourhood.

III.

The interest of the life of Virgil lies in the bearing of his circumstances on the development of his genius, in the view which it affords of his whole nature as a man, and in the relation of that nature to the work accomplished by him as a poet. The biography of Horace has an independent value as affording insight into social life and character, irrespective of the light which it reflects on the art of the poet. But no separate line of action, adventure, or enjoyment runs through and intermingles with the even course of Virgil's poetic career. And this may have been a drawback to him as the poet of political action, of heroic adventure, and of human character. His career in this respect is unlike that of other great poets who have been endowed with the epic or dramatic faculty, who either took part in the serious action of their age, or gave proof in their lives of some share of the adventurous spirit or of the rich social nature which they have delineated in their works. In the same way the life of Livy was that merely of a man of letters, and thus different from that of the other great historians of antiquity, who had either passed through a career of adventure, like Herodotus and Xenophon, or had been actively engaged in public affairs, like Thucydides and Polybius, Sallust and Tacitus. The 'inscitia Reipublicae ut alienae' thus betrays itself in Livy more than in any of those historians who have been named. Virgil's life was as much one of pure contemplation or absorption in his art, as that of Lucretius or Wordsworth. The first half of his career, from childhood to maturity, was an education, passive and active, for the position he was destined to fill as the greatest literary artist and greatest national poet of Rome. His later career, from the age of twenty-eight till his too early death, was the fulfilment of the office to which he had dedicated himself. With the exception of one troubled year of his early manhood, which proved the turning-point of his fortunes, he lived, undistracted by business or pleasure, the life of a scholar and poet, combining the concentrated industry of the first with the sense of joyful activity and ever-ripening faculty which sustains and cheers the second. In youth his means of living must have been moderate, yet sufficient to enable him to forsake everything else for his art: in later life, through the munificence of Augustus, he was rich enough to enjoy exemption from the cares of life, and to gratify freely the one taste by which his poetical gifts were fostered—that of living and varying his residence among the fairest scenes of Southern Italy. The one drawback to his happiness, viz. that he suffered during all his life from delicate or variable health, was not unfavourable to the concentration of his whole nature on his self-appointed task. It saved him from ever sacrificing the high aim of his existence to the pleasures in which his contemporaries indulged, and to which the imaginative temperament of the poets and artists of a southern land is powerfully attracted. The abstemious regimen which from necessity or inclination he observed, the fact recorded of him that he ‘took very little food and wine,’ must have quickened the finer sources of emotion by which his genius was nourished. Had he received from nature a robuster fibre and more hardihood of spirit, or had his character been more tempered by collision with the active forces of life, his epic poem might have shown a more original energy, and greater power in delineating varied types of character: but in combination with a robuster or more energetic temper, much of the peculiar charm of Virgil would have been lost.

He is said to have been of a tall and awkward figure, of dark complexion, and to have preserved through all his life a look of rusticity. He wanted readiness in ordinary conversation, and never overcame the shyness of his rustic origin or studious habits. It is reported that in his rare visits to Rome he avoided observation, and took refuge in the nearest house from the crowds of people who recognised or followed him. The ‘monstrari digito praetereuntium’ was to him a source of embarrassment rather than of that gratification which Horace derived from it.

Both his parents lived till after the loss of his farm, when the poet was in his twenty-ninth year. Two brothers died before him, one while still a boy, the other after reaching manhood. To his half-brother Valerius Proculus he left one half of his estate. Augustus, Maecenas, and his two friends Varius and Tucca also received legacies. He was never married, nor is there any record in connexion with him of any of those temporary liaisons which the other poets of the Augustan Age formed and celebrated in their verse. Some modern critics arguing from a single expression in the Life by Donatus, and giving to a tradition connected with the subject of the second Eclogue a meaning which, even if the tradition was trustworthy, need not apply to it, have written of Virgil as if throughout his whole life he yielded to a laxity of morals from which perhaps some of his eminent contemporaries were not free, but which was condemned by the manlier instincts of Romans, as of all modern nations. The expression of Donatus is probably a mere survival of the calumnies against which Asconius vindicated Virgil’s character. The statement of the same biographer, that on account of his purity of speech and life he was known in Naples by the name 'Parthenias,' is at least as trustworthy evidence as that on which the imputations on his character have been revived. The levity and mendacity with which such calumnies were invented, and the attractions which they have for the baser nature of men in all times, sufficiently explain both the original existence and the later revival of these imputations. We are called upon not merely to disregard them as unproved, or irrelevant to our estimate of the poet's art, but to reject them as incompatible with the singular purity and transparent sincerity of nature revealed in all the maturer works of his genius.

The cordial and discriminating language both of the Satires and the Odes of Horace confirms the impression of delicacy and simplicity of character suggested by the general tone of Virgil's writings. The appreciation of Horace for Virgil reminds us of the touching tribute which the great comic poet of Athens pays to her greatest tragic poet, where he speaks of him as showing the same disposition among the Shades as he had shown in the world above—and of that similar tribute paid by his friend and fellow-dramatist to our own great poet, in the words 'my gentle Shakespeare.' The affection and admiration of the greatest of his contemporaries, surviving in the tradition handed on to future times, testify to Virgil's exemption from the personal frailties and asperities to which the impressible and mobile temperament of genius is peculiarly liable.

Ὅ δ' εὐκόλος μὲν ἐνθάδ', εὐκόλος δ' ἔκεῖ—

His works do not present any single distinct impression of the poet himself, in his own character and convictions, separable from his artistic representation. Yet from the study of these works we are able to form a general conception of the disposition, affections, and moral sympathies which distinguish him from the other great writers of his country. We might perhaps without undue fancifulness express the dominant ethical or social characteristic—the ideal virtue or grace—of some of the great Roman writers by some word peculiarly expressive of Roman character or culture, and of frequent use in these writers themselves. Thus, in regard to Cicero, the man of quick susceptibility to praise and blame, to sympathy and coldness, who, except where his personal or political antagonism was roused, had the liveliest sense of the claims of kind offices and kind feeling which men have on one another, the word humanitas seems to sum up those qualities of heart and intellect which, in spite of the transparent weaknesses of his character, gained for him so much affection, and which, through the sympathy they enabled him to feel and arouse in others, were the secret of his unparalleled success as an advocate. To Lucretius we might apply the word sanctitas, in the sense in which he applies the word sanctus to the old philosophers, as expressive of that glow of reverential emotion which animates him in his search after truth and in his contemplation of Nature. His own words 'lepor' and 'lepidus' express the graceful vivacity, artistic and social rather than ethical, which we associate with the thought of Catullus. The quality, mainly intellectual and social, but still not devoid of ethical content, of which Horace is the most perfect type, is 'urbanitas.' The full meaning of the great Roman word 'gravitas'—the vital force of ethical feeling as well as the strength of character connoted by it, and by its sister-qualities 'dignity and authority'—is only completely realised in the pages of Tacitus. And so it is only in Virgil, and especially in that poem in which he deals with types of human character and motives originating in human affection, that we understand all the feelings of love to family and country, and of fidelity to the dead, and that sense of dependence on a higher Power, sanctioning and sanctifying these feelings and the duties demanded by them, which the Romans comprehended in their use of the word 'pietas.'

With this recognition of man's dependence on a wise and beneficent Power above him, is perhaps connected another moral characteristic strongly indicated in many passages of the Aeneid, and mentioned among the personal attributes of Virgil in some of the editions of Donatus's Life, though it does not appear in that accepted by the latest critics as resting on the best MS. authority. This quality is the stoical power of endurance which he attributes to his hero, but which in him is combined with nothing either of the austerity or pedantry of Stoicism. The passage in the biography, which, if an interpolation in the original Life, is one that is at least 'well invented,' is to the following effect:—'He was in the habit of saying that there was no virtue of more use to a man than patience, and that there was no fortune so harsh, that a brave man cannot triumph over it by wisely enduring it.' Mr. Wickham, in his edition of Horace, refers to this passage as illustrating the maxims of consolation addressed by Horace to Virgil on the death of their friend Quintilius. Many lines in the Aeneid, such as the

Disce, puer, virtutem ex me verumque laborem,

Fortunam ex aliis—

indicate that the gentleness of Virgil, if combined with a peace-loving disposition, was not incompatible with Roman fortitude and resolute endurance.

The reproach from which it is impossible entirely to clear his memory is that of undue subservience to power. It was in the qualities of independence and self-assertion that his character was deficient. It is to the excess of his feeling of deference to power, and not to any insincerity of nature, that we attribute the language occasionally—as in the Invocation to the Georgics—transcending the limits of truth and sobriety, in which the position of Augustus is magnified. It is for ever to be regretted that he was induced to sacrifice not only the tribute of admiration originally offered to the friend of his youth, but even the symmetrical conception of his greatest poem, to the jealousy which Augustus entertained of the memory of Gallus. Virgil, again, has no sympathy with political life, as it realised itself in the ancient republics, or with the energetic types of character which the conflicts of political life develope. His own somewhat submissive disposition, his personal attachments and admirations, his hatred of strife, his yearning after peace and reconciliation, made him a sincere supporter of the idea of the Empire in opposition to that of the Republic. To a character of a more combative energy and power of resistance it would have been scarcely possible to have been unmoved by the spectacle of the final overthrow of ancient freedom, though that freedom had for a long time previously contributed little to human happiness. But the nobleness of Virgil's nature is not the nobleness of those qualities which make men great in resistance to wrong, but the nobleness of a gentle and gracious spirit.

By no poet in any time has he been surpassed in devotion to his art. Into this channel all the currents of his being, all fresh sources of feeling, all the streams of his meditation and research were poured. The delight in poetry and the kindred delight in the beauty of Nature were the main springs of his happiness. With the high ambition of genius and the unceasing aim at perfection he combined a remarkable modesty and a generous appreciation of all poets who had gone before him. But distrust in himself never led to any flagging of energy. The stories told of his habits of composition confirm the impression of his assiduous industry. In writing the Georgics he is said to have dictated many lines early in the morning, under the first impulse of his inspiration, and to have employed the remainder of the day in concentrating their force within the smallest compass. Of no poem of equal length can it be said that there is so little that is superfluous. He himself described this mode of composition by the phrase ‘parere se versus modo atque ritu ursino’—‘that he produced verses by licking them into shape as a bear did with her cubs.’ The Aeneid was first arranged and written out in prose: when the structure of the story was distinct to his mind, he proceeded to work on different parts of it, as his fancy moved him. Another statement in regard to his manner of reading is worth mentioning, as indicating the powerful inspiration of the true αοιδός, which he added to the patient industry of the conscientious artist. It is recorded on the authority of a contemporary poet, that he read his own poems with such a wonderful sweetness and charm (‘suavitate tum lenociniis miris’), that verses which would have sounded commonplace when read by another, produced a marvellous effect when ‘chanted to their own music’ by the poet himself. Similar testimony is given of the effect produced by the reading or recitation of their own works by some among our own poets, Wordsworth, Scott, and Byron among others. This large, musical, and impassioned utterance—the ‘os magna sonaturum’—is a sure note of that access of emotion which forces the poet to find a rhythmical expression for his thought.

It was through the union of a strong and delicate vein of original genius with a great receptive capacity and an unwearied love of his art that Virgil established and for a long time retained his ascendancy as one of the two whom the world honoured as its greatest poets. Though his supremacy has been shaken, and is not likely ever again to be fully re-established, the examination of his various works will show that it was not through accident or caprice that one of the highest places in the dynasty of genius was allotted to him, and that his still remains one of the few great names which belong, not to any particular age or nation, but to all time and to every people.

CHAPTER IV.

The Eclogues.

I.

The name by which the earliest of Virgil's recognised works is known tells us nothing of the subject of which it treats. The word 'Eclogae' simply means selections. As applied to the poems of Virgil, it designates a collection of short unconnected poems. The other name by which these poems were known in antiquity, 'bucolica,' indicates the form of Greek art in which they were cast and the pastoral nature of their subjects. Neither word is used by Virgil himself; but the expressions by which he characterises his art, such as 'Sicelides Musae,' 'versus Syracosius,' 'Musa agrestis' and 'silvestris,' show that he writes in a pastoral strain, and that he considered the pastoral poetry of Greece as his model. He invokes not only the 'Sicilian Muses,' but the 'fountain of Arethusa.' He speaks too of Pan, and Arcadia, and the 'Song of Maenalus.' His shepherd-poets are described as 'Arcadians.' The poets whom he introduces as his prototypes are the 'sage of Ascrea,' and the mythical Linus, Orpheus, and Amphion. He alludes also to Theocritus under the name of the 'Syracusan shepherd.' The names of the shepherds who are introduced as contending in song or uttering their feelings in monologue—Corydon, Thyrsis, Menalcas, Meliboeus, Tityrus, etc.—are Greek, and for the most part taken from the pastoral idyls of Theocritus. There is also frequent mention of the shepherd's pipe, and of the musical accompaniment to which some of the songs chanted by the shepherds are set.

The general character of the poems is further indicated by the frequent use of the word 'ludere,' a word applied by Catullus, Horace, Propertius, Ovid, and others to the poems of youth, of a light and playful character, and, for the most part, expressive of various moods of the passion of love. Thus at the end of the Georgics Virgil speaks of himself thus:—

Carmina qui lusi pastorum, audaxque iuventa,
Tityre, te patulae cecini sub tegmine fagi.

This reference shows further that the poem which stands first in order was placed there when the edition of the Eclogues was given to the world. But other references (at v. 86–87 and vi. 12) seem to imply that the separate poems were known either by distinct titles, such as Varus, the title of the sixth, or from their opening lines, as the 'Formosum Corydon ardebat Alexim,' and the 'Cuicum pecus? an Meliboei?' It has been also suggested, from lines quoted in the ninth, which profess to be the opening lines of other pastoral poems, that the ten finally collected together were actual 'selections' from a larger number, commenced if not completed ('necdum perfecta canebat') by Virgil. But these passages seem more like the lines attributed to the contending poets in the third and seventh Eclogues, i.e. short unconnected specimens of pastoral song.

Nearly all the poems afford indications of the time of their composition and of the order in which they followed one another; and that order is different from the order in which they now appear. It is said, on the authority of Asconius, that three years, from 42 B.C. to 39 B.C., were given to the composition of the Eclogues. But an allusion in the tenth (line 47) to the expedition of Agrippa across the Alps in the early part of 37 B.C. proves that a later date must be assigned to that poem. The probable explanation is that Virgil had intended to end the series with the eighth, which celebrated the triumph of Pollio over the Parthini in 39 B.C.,—

A te principium, tibi desinet,—

but that his friendship for Gallus induced him to add the tenth, two years later, either before the poems were finally collected for publication, or in preparing a new edition of them. They were written at various places and at various stages of the poet's fortunes. They appear to have obtained great success when first published, and some of them were recited with applause upon the stage. The earliest in point of time were the second and third, and these, along with the fifth, may be ascribed to the year 42 B.C. The seventh, which has no allusion to contemporary events and is a mere imitative reproduction of the Greek idyl, may also belong to this earlier period, although some editors rank it as one of the latest. The first, which is founded on the loss of the poet's farm, belongs to the next year, and the ninth and sixth probably may be assigned to the same year, or to the early part of the following year. The date of the fourth is fixed by the Consulship of Pollio to the year 40 B.C.; that of the eighth to the year 39 B.C. by the triumph of Pollio over the Parthini. The opening words of the tenth show that it was the last of the series; and the reference to the expedition of Agrippa implies that it could not have been written earlier than the end of 38 B.C. or the beginning of 37 B.C. The first, second, third, and fifth, were in all probability written by the poet in his native district, the sixth, ninth, and perhaps the seventh, at the villa which had formerly belonged to Siron ('villula quae Sironis eras'), the rest at Rome. The principle on which the poems are arranged seems to be that of alternating dialogue with monologue. The eighth, though not in dialogue, yet resembles the latter part of the fifth, in presenting two continuous songs, chanted by different shepherds. The poem first in order may have occupied its place from its greater interest in connexion with the poet's fortunes, or from the honour which it assigns to Octavianus, whose pre-eminence over the other competitors for supreme power had sufficiently declared itself before the first collected edition of the poems was published.

In the earliest poems of the series the art of Virgil, like the lyrical art of Horace in his earlier Odes, is more imitative and conventional than in those written later. He seems satisfied with reproducing the form, rhythm, and diction of Theocritus, and mingling some vague expression of personal or national feeling with the sentiment of the Greek idyl. That the fifth was written after the second and third appears from the lines v. 86–87, in which Menalcas, under which name Virgil introduces himself in the Eclogues, presents his pipe to Mopsus:—

Haec nos 'Formosum Corydon ardebat Alexin,'

Haec eadem docuit 'Cuium pecus? an Meliboei?'

From these lines also it may be inferred as probable that the second poem, 'Formosum pastor Corydon,' was written before the third, 'Dic mihi, Damoeta, cuium pecus? an Meliboei?'

A tradition, quoted by Servius and referred to (though inaccurately) by Martial, attributes the composition of the second Eclogue to the admiration excited in Virgil by the beauty of a young slave, Alexander, who was presented to him by Pollio and carefully educated by him. A similar story is told of his having received from Maecenas another slave, named Cebes, who also obtained from him a liberal education and acquired some distinction as a poet. It is not improbable that Virgil may have been warmly attached to these youths, and that there was nothing blameable in his attachment. Even Cicero, a man as far removed as possible from any sentimental weakness, writes to Atticus of the death of a favourite slave, a young Greek, and evidently, from the position he filled in Cicero's household, a boy of liberal accomplishments, in these words: 'And, I assure you, I am a good deal distressed. For my reader, Sositheus, a charming boy, is just dead; and it has affected me more than I should have thought the death of a slave ought to affect one.' It remains true however that in one or two of those Eclogues in which he most closely imitates Theocritus, Virgil uses the language of serious sentiment, and once of bantering raillery, in a way which justly offends modern feeling. And this is all that can be said against him.

There are more imitations of the Greek in this and in the next poem than in any of the other Eclogues. The scenery of the piece, in so far as it is at all definite, combines the mountains and the sea-landscape of Sicily with Italian woods and vineyards. Corydon seems to combine the features of an Italian vinedresser with the conventional character of a Sicilian shepherd. The line

Aspice aratra iugo referunt suspensa iuveni

applies rather to an Italian scene than to the pastoral district of Sicily; and this reference to ploughing seems inconsistent with the description of the fierce midsummer heat, and with the introduction of the 'fessi messorēs' in the opening lines of the poem. These inconsistencies show how little thought Virgil had for the objective consistency of his representation. The poem however, in many places, gives powerful expression to the feelings of a despairing lover. There are here, as in the Gallus, besides that vein of feeling which the Latin poet shares with Theocritus, some traces of that 'wayward modern mood' of longing to escape from the world and to return to some vague ideal of Nature, and to sacrifice all the gains of civilisation in exchange for the homeliest dwelling shared with the object of affection:—

O tantum libeat mecum tibi sordida rura
Atque humiles habitare casas, et figere cervos;
and again,
Habitarunt di quoque silvas
Dardaniusque Paris. Pallas quas condidit arces
Ipsa colat, nobis placeant ante omnia silvae.

The third Eclogue, which is in dialogue, and reproduces two features of the Greek idyl, the natural banter of the shepherds and the more artificial contest in song, is still more imitative and composite in character. It shows several close imitations, especially of the fourth, fifth, and eighth Idyls of Theocritus. In this poem only Virgil, whose muse even in the Eclogues is almost always serious or plaintive, endeavours to reproduce the playfulness and vivacity of his original. Both in the bantering dialogue and in the more formal contest of the shepherds, the subjects introduced are for the most part of a conventional pastoral character, but with these topics are combined occasional references to the tastes and circumstances of the poet himself. Thus in lines 40–42,

In medio duo signa ... curvus arator haberet, allusion is made to the astronomical studies of which Virgil made fuller use in the Georgics. In the line Pollio amat nostram quamvis est rustica Musam,
and again,
Pollio et ipse facit nova carmina,

he makes acknowledgment of the favour and pays honour to the poetical tastes of his earliest patron, whom he celebrates also in the fourth and eighth Eclogues. The line

Qui Bavium non odit amet tua carmina, Maevi

has condemned to everlasting notoriety the unfortunate pair, who have served modern satirists as types of spiteful critics and ineffectual authors. At lines 10–11 there is, as in Eclogue ii., an apparent blending of the occupations of the Italian vinedresser with those of the Sicilian shepherd. In the contest of song there is no sustained connexion of thought, as indeed there is not in similar contests in Theocritus. These contests are supposed to reproduce the utterances of improvisatori, of whom the second speaker is called to say something, either in continuation of or in contrast to the thought of the first. The shepherds in these strains seek to glorify their own prowess, boast of their successes in love, or call attention to some picturesque aspect of their rustic life.

The fifth Eclogue is also in dialogue. It brings before us a friendly interchange of song between two pastoral poets, Mopsus and Menalcas. Servius mentions that Menalcas (here, as in the ninth Eclogue) stands for Virgil himself, while Mopsus stands for his friend Aemilius Macer of Verona. Mopsus laments the cruel death of Daphnis, the legendary shepherd of Sicilian song, and Menalcas celebrates his apotheosis. Various accounts were given in antiquity of the meaning which was to be attached to this poem. One account was that Virgil here expressed his sorrow for the death of his brother Flaccus. Though the time of his death may have coincided with that of the composition of this poem, the language of the lament and of the song celebrating the ascent of Daphnis to heaven is quite unlike the expression of a private or personal sorrow. There seems no reason to doubt another explanation which has come down from ancient times, that under this pastoral allegory Virgil laments the death and proclaims the apotheosis of Julius Caesar. It is probable that the poem was composed for his birthday, the 4th of July, which for the first time was celebrated with religious rites in the year 42 B.C., when the name of the month Quintilis was changed into that which it has retained ever since. The lines 25–26,

Nulla neque amnem

Libavit quadrupes nec graminis attigit herbam,

are supposed to refer to a belief which had become traditional in the time of Suetonius, that the horses which had been consecrated after crossing the Rubicon had refused to feed immediately before the death of their master. In the lines expressing the sorrow for his loss, and in those which mark out the divine office which he was destined to fulfil after death,—

Ut Baccho Cererique, tibi sic vota quotannis

Agricolae facient, damnabis tu quoque votis,—

as in the lines of the ninth, referring to the Julium Sidus,—

Astrum quo segetes gauderent frugibus, et quo

Duceret apricis in collibus uva colorem,—

allusion is made to the encouragement Caesar gave to the husbandman and vine-planter in his lifetime, and to the honour due to him as their tutelary god in heaven. And these allusions help us to understand the ‘votis iam nunc adsuesce vocari’ of the invocation in the first Georgic.

Nothing illustrates more clearly the unreal conceptions of the pastoral allegory than a comparison of the language in the ‘Lament for Daphnis,’ with the strong Roman realism of the lines at the end of the first Georgic, in which the omens portending the death of Caesar are described. Nor can anything show more clearly the want of individuality with which Virgil uses the names of the Theocritean shepherds than the fact that while the Daphnis of the fifth Eclogue represents the departed and deified soldier and statesman, the Daphnis of the ninth is a living husbandman whose fortunes were secured by the protecting star of Caesar,—

Insere, Daphni, piros, carpent tua poma nepotes.

The peace and tranquillity restored to the land under this protecting influence are foreshadowed in the lines 58–61—

Ergo alacris ... amat bonus otia Daphnis;

and the earliest reference to the divine honours assigned in life and death to the later representatives of the name of Caesar, is heard in the jubilant shout of wild mountains, rocks, and groves to the poet

Deus, deus ille, Menalca.

Although the treatment of the subject may be vague and conventional, yet this poem possesses the interest of being Virgil’s earliest effort, directed to a subject of living and national interest; and many of the lines in the poem are unsurpassed for grace and sweetness of musical cadence by anything in Latin poetry.

There is no allusion to contemporary events by which the date of the seventh can be determined; but the absence of such allusion and the 'purely Theocritean' character of the poem suggest the inference that it is a specimen of Virgil's earlier manner. Two shepherds, Corydon and Thyrsis, are introduced as joining Daphnis, who is seated under a whispering ilex; they engage in a friendly contest of song, which is listened to also by the poet himself, who here calls himself Meliboeus. They assert in alternate strains their claims to poetic honours, offer prayers and vows to Diana as the goddess of the chase and to Priapus as the god of gardens, draw rival pictures of cool retreat from the heat of summer and of cheerfulness by the winter fire, and connect the story of their loves with the varying aspect of the seasons, and with the beauty of trees sacred to different deities or native to different localities. Though the shepherds are Arcadian, the scenery is Mantuan:—

Hic viridis tenera praetexit harundine ripam

Mincius, eque sacra resonant examina quercu.

Meliboeus decides the contest in favour of Corydon:—

Haec memini, et victum frustra contendere Thyrsin.

Ex illo Corydon Corydon est tempore nobis.

These poems, in which the conventional shepherds of pastoral poetry sing of their loves, their flocks and herds, of the beauty of the seasons and of outward nature, in tones caught from Theocritus, or revive and give a new meaning to the old Sicilian dirge over 'the woes of Daphnis,' may be assigned to the eventful year in which the forces of the Republic finally shattered themselves against the forces of the new Empire. There is a strange contrast between these peaceful and somewhat unreal strains of Virgil and the drama which was at the same time enacted on the real stage of human affairs. No sound of the 'storms that raged outside his happy ground' disturbs the security with which Virgil cultivates his art. But the following year brought the trouble and unhappiness of the times home to the peaceful dwellers around Mantua, and to Virgil among the rest. Of the misery caused by the confiscations and allotments of land to the soldiers of Octavianus, the first Eclogue is a lasting record. Yet even in this poem, based as it is on genuine feeling and a real experience, Virgil seems to care only for the truth of feeling with which Tityrus and Meliboeus express themselves, without regard for consistency in the conception of the situation, the scenery, or the personages of the poem. Tityrus is at once the slave who goes to Rome to purchase his freedom, and the owner of the land and of the flocks and herds belonging to it. He is advanced in years, and at the same time a poet lying indolently in the shade, and making the woods ring with the sounds of 'beautiful Amaryllis,' like the young shepherds in Theocritus. The scenery apparently combines some actual features of the farm in the Mantuan district—

Quamvis lapis omnia nudus

Limosoque palus obducatur pascua iunco,
with the ideal mountain-land of pastoral song—

Maioresque cadunt altis de montibus umbrae.

A further inconsistency has been suggested between the time of year indicated by the 'shade of the spreading beech' in the first line, and that indicated by the ripe chestnuts at line 81. The truth of the poem consists in the expression of the feelings of love which the old possessors entertained for their homes, and the sense of dismay caused by this barbarous irruption on their ancient domains:—

Impius haec tam culta novalia miles habebit?

Barbarus has segetes? En quo discordia civis

Produxit miseros!

Virgil's feeling for the movement of his age, which henceforth becomes one of the main sources of his inspiration, has its origin in the effect which these events had on his personal fortunes, and in the sympathy awakened within him by the sorrows of his native district.

The ninth Eclogue, written most probably in the same year, and in form imitated from the seventh Idyl—the famous Thalysia—of Theocritus, repeats the tale of dejection and alarm among the old inhabitants of the Mantuan district,—

Nunc victi, tristes, quoniam fors omnia versat,—

and touches allusively on the story of the personal danger which Virgil encountered from the violence of the centurion who claimed possession of his land. The speakers in the dialogue are Moeris, a shepherd of Menalcas,—the pastoral poet, who sings of the nymphs, of the wild flowers spread over the ground, and of the brooks shaded with trees,—and Lycidas, who, like the Lycidas of the Thalysia, is also a poet:—

Me quoque dicunt

Vatem pastores, sed non ego credulus illis.

Nam neque adhuc Vario videor nec dicere Cinna

Digna, sed argutos inter strepere anser olores.

After the account of the fray, given by Moeris, and the comments of Lycidas, in which he introduces the lines referred to in the previous chapter, as having all the signs of being a real description of the situation of Virgil's farms—

qua se subducere colles incipiunt—

Moeris sings the opening lines of certain other pastoral poems, some his own, some the songs of Menalcas. Two of these—'Tityre dum redeo' and 'Huc ades O Galatea'—are purely Theocritean. Two others—

Vare tuum nomen, superet modo Mantua nobis,
and

Daphni quid antiquos signorum suspicis ortus—

indicate the new path which Virgil's art was striking out for itself. There is certainly more real substance in this poem than in most of the earlier Eclogues. Lycidas and Moeris speak about what interests them personally. The scene of the poem is apparently the road between Virgil's farm and Mantua. There seem to be no conventional and inconsistent features introduced from the scenery of Sicily or Arcadia, unless it be the 'aequor' of line 57—

Et nunc omne tibi stratum silet aequor.

But may not that be either the lake, formed by the overflow of the river, some distance above Mantua, or even the great level plain, with its long grass and corn-fields and trees, hushed in the stillness of the late afternoon?

The sixth Eclogue was written probably about the same time and at the same place, the villa of Siron, in which Virgil had taken refuge with his family. It is inscribed with the name of Varus, who is said to have been a fellow-student of Virgil under the tuition of Siron. But, with the exception of the dedicatory lines, there is no reference to the circumstances of the time. Though abounding with rich pastoral illustrations, the poem is rather a mythological and semi-philosophical idyl than a pure pastoral poem. It consists mainly of a song of Silenus, in which an account is given of the creation of the world in accordance with the Lucretian philosophy; and, in connexion with this theme (as is done also by Ovid in his Metamorphoses), some of the oldest mythological traditions, such as the tale of Pyrrha and Deucalion, the reign of Saturn on earth, the theft and punishment of Prometheus, etc., are introduced. The opening lines—Namque canebat uti—are imitated from the song of Orpheus in the first book of the Argonautics, but they bear unmistakable traces also of the study of Lucretius. There seems no trace of the language of Theocritus in the poem.

Three points of interest may be noted in this song: (1) Virgil here, as in Georgic ii. 475, etc., regards the revelation of physical knowledge as a fitting theme for poetic treatment. So in the first Aeneid, the ‘Song of Iopas’ is said to be about ‘the wandering moon and the toils of the sun; the origin of man and beast, water and fire,’ etc. The revelation of the secrets of Nature seems to float before the imagination of Virgil as the highest consummation of his poetic faculty. (2) We note here how, as afterwards in the Georgics, he accepts the philosophical ideas of creation, side by side with the supernatural tales of mythology. He seems to regard such tales as those here introduced as part of the religious traditions of the human race, and as a link which connects man with the gods. In the Georgics we find also the same effort to reconcile, or at least to combine, the conceptions of science with mythological fancies. In this effort we recognise the influence of other Alexandrine poets rather than of Theocritus. (3) The introduction of Gallus in the midst of the mythological figures of the poem, and the account of the honour paid to him by the Muses and of the office assigned to him by Linus, are characteristic of the art of the Eclogues, which is not so much allegorical as composite. It brings together in the same representation facts, personages, and places from actual life and the figures and scenes of a kind of fairy-land. In the tenth Eclogue Gallus is thus identified with the Daphnis of Sicilian song, and is represented as the object of care to the Naiads and Pan and Apollo. While Pollio is the patron whose protection and encouragement Virgil most cordially acknowledges in his earlier poems, Gallus is the man among his contemporaries who has most powerfully touched his imagination and gained his affections.

The Eclogue composed next in order of time is the 'Pollio.' It was written in the consulship of Pollio, B.C. 40, immediately after the reconciliation between Antony and Octavianus effected by the treaty of Brundisium, and gives expression to that vague hope of a new era of peace and prosperity which recurs so often in the poetry of this age. In consequence of the interpretation given to it in a later age, this poem has acquired an importance connected with Virgil's religious belief second only to the importance of the sixth Aeneid. Early Christian writers, perceiving a parallel between expressions and ideas in this poem and those in the Messianic prophecies, believed that Virgil was here the unconscious vehicle of Divine inspiration, and that he prophesies of the new era which was to begin with the birth of Christ. And though, as Conington and others have pointed out, the picture of the Golden Age given in the poem is drawn immediately from Classical and not from Hebrew sources, yet there is no parallel in Classical poetry to that which is the leading idea of the poem, the coincidence of the commencement of this new era with the birth of a child whom a marvellous career awaited.

The poem begins with an invocation to the Sicilian Muses and with the declaration that, though the strain is still pastoral, yet it is to be in a higher mood, and worthy of the Consul to whom it is addressed. Then follows the announcement of the birth of a new era. The world after passing through a cycle of ages, each presided over by a special deity, had reached the last of the cycle, presided over by Apollo, and was about to return back to the Golden or Saturnian Age of peace and innocence, into which the human race was originally born. A new race of men was to spring from heaven. The first-born of this new stock was destined hereafter to be a partaker of the life of the gods and to 'rule over a world in peace with the virtues of his father.' Then follow the rural and pastoral images of the Golden Age, like those given in the first Georgic in the description of the early world before the reign of Jove. The full glory of the age should not be reached till this child should attain the maturity of manhood. In the meantime some traces of 'man's original sin' ('priscae vestigia fraudis') should still urge him to brave the dangers of the sea, to surround his cities with walls, and to plough the earth into furrows. There should be a second expedition of the Argonauts, and a new Achilles should be sent against another Troy. The romantic adventures of the heroic age were to precede the rest, innocence, and spontaneous abundance of the age of Saturn. Next the child is called upon to prepare himself for the 'magni honores'—the great offices of state which awaited him; and the poet prays that his own life and inspiration may be prolonged so far as to enable him to celebrate his career.

There seem to be no traces of imitation of Theocritus in this poem. The rhythm which in the other Eclogues reproduces the Theocritean cadences is in this more stately and uniform, recalling those of Catullus in his longest poem. The substance of the poem is quite unlike anything in the Sicilian idyl. Though this substance does not stand out in the clear light of reality, but is partially revealed through a haze of pastoral images and legendary associations, yet it is not altogether unmeaning. The anticipation of a new era was widely spread and vividly felt over the world; and this anticipation—the state of men's minds at and subsequent to the time when this poem was written—probably contributed to the acceptance of the great political and spiritual changes which awaited the world.

Two questions which have been much discussed in connexion with this poem remain to be noticed; (1) who is the child born in the consulship of Pollio of whom this marvellous career is predicted? (2) is it at all probable that Virgil, directly or indirectly, had any knowledge of the Messianic prophecies or ideas?

In answer to the first we may put aside at once the supposition that the prediction is made of the child who was born in that year to Octavianus and Scribonia. The words 'nascenti puero' are altogether inapplicable to the notorious and unfortunate Julia, who was the child of that marriage. If Virgil was sanguine enough to predict the sex of the child, we can hardly imagine him allowing the words to stand after his prediction had been falsified. We may equally dismiss the supposition that the child spoken of was the offspring of the marriage of Antony and Octavia. Not to mention other considerations adverse to this supposition, it would have been impossible for Virgil, the devoted partisan of Caesar, to pay this special compliment to

Antony, even after he became so closely connected with his rival. There remains a third supposition, that the child spoken of is the son of Pollio, Asinius Gallus, who plays an important part in the reign of Tiberius. This last interpretation is supported by the authority of Asconius, who professed to have heard it from Asinius Gallus himself. The objection to this interpretation is that Virgil was not likely to assign to the child of one who, as compared with Octavianus and Antony, was only a secondary personage in public affairs, the position of 'future ruler of the world' and the function of being 'the regenerator of his age.' Still less could a poem bearing this meaning have been allowed to retain its place among Virgil's works after the ascendancy of Augustus became undisputed. Further, the line

(whatever may be its exact meaning) appears an extreme exaggeration when specially applied to the actual son of a mortal father and mother. These difficulties have led some interpreters to suppose that the child spoken of is an ideal or imaginary representative of the future race. But if we look more closely at the poem, we find that the child is not really spoken of as the future regenerator of the age; he is merely the first-born of the new race, which was to be nearer to the gods both in origin and in actual communion with them. Again, the words

Pacatumque reget patriis virtutibus orbem

would not convey the same idea in the year 40 B.C. as they would ten or twenty years later. At the time when the poem was written the consulship was still the highest recognised position in the State. The Consuls for the year, nominally at least, wielded the whole power of the Empire. The words 'reget orbem' remain as a token that the Republic was not yet entirely extinct. The child is called upon to prepare himself for the great offices of State in the hope that he should in time hold the high place which was now held by his father. The words 'patriis virtutibus' imply that he is no ideal being, but the actual son of a well-known father. Virgil takes occasion in this poem to commemorate the attainment of the highest office by his patron, to celebrate the birth of the son born in the year of his consulship, and at the same time to express, by mystical and obscure allusions, the trust that the peace of Brundisium was the inauguration of that new era for which the hearts of men all over the world were longing.

In turning to the second question, discussed in connexion with this Eclogue, the great amount and recondite character of Virgil's learning, especially of that derived from Alexandrine sources, must be kept in view. Macrobius testifies to this in several places. Thus he writes, 'for this poet was learned with not only a minute conscientiousness, but even with a kind of reserve and mystery, so that he introduced into his works much knowledge the sources of which are difficult to discover.' In another place he speaks of those things, 'what he had introduced from the most recondite learning of the Greeks.' And again he says, 'this story Virgil has dug out from the most recondite Greek literature.' It is indeed most improbable that Virgil had a direct knowledge of the Septuagint. If he had this knowledge it would have shown itself by other allusions in other parts of his works. But it is quite possible that, through other channels of Alexandrine learning, the ideas and the language of Hebrew prophecy may have become indirectly known to him. One channel by which this may have reached him would be the new Sibylline prophecies, manufactured in the East and probably reflecting Jewish as well as other Oriental ideas, which poured into Rome after the old Sibylline books had perished in the burning of the Capitol during the first Civil War.

Still, admitting these possibilities, we are not called upon to go beyond classical sources for the general substance and idea of this poem. It has more in common with the myth in the Politicus of Plato than with the Prophecies of Isaiah. The state of the world at the time when the poem was written produced the longing for an era of restoration and a return to a lost ideal of innocence and happiness, and the wish became father to the thought.

There still remain the eighth and tenth Eclogues to be examined. The first, like the fourth, is associated with the name of Pollio, the second with that of Gallus. The date of the eighth is fixed to 39 B.C. by the victory of Pollio in Illyria and by his subsequent triumph over the Parthini. The words

Accipe iussis

Carmina coepta tuis

testify to the personal influence under which Virgil wrote these poems. The title of 'Pharmaceutria,' by which the poem is known, indicates that Virgil professes to reproduce, in an Italian form, that passionate tale of city life which forms the object of the second idyl of Theocritus. But while the subject and burden of the second of the two songs contained in this Eclogue are suggested by that idyl, the poem is very far from being a mere imitative reproduction of it.

Two shepherds, Damon and Alpheisiboeus, meet in the early dawn

Cum ros in tenera pecori gratissimus herba,

(one of those touches of truthful description which reappear in the account of the pastoral occupations in Georgic iii). They each sing of incidents which may have been taken from actual life, or may have formed the subject of popular songs traditional among the peasantry of the district. In the first of these songs Damon gives vent to his despair in consequence of the marriage of his old love Nysa with his rival Mopsus. Though the shepherds who sing together bear the Greek names of Damon and Alpheisiboeus, though they speak of Rhodope and Tmaros and Maenalus, of Orpheus and Arion, though expressions and lines are close translations, and one a mistranslation, from the Greek (πάντα δ' ἑναλλα γένοιτο being rendered 'omnia vel medium fiant mare'), and though the mode by which the lover determines to end his sorrows,

Praeceptis aerii specula de montis in undas

is more appropriate to a shepherd inhabiting the rocks overhanging the Sicilian seas than to one dwelling in the plain of Mantua, yet both this song and the accompanying one sung by Alpheisiboeus approach more nearly to the impersonal and dramatic representation of the Greek idyl than any of those already examined. The lines of most exquisite grace and tenderness in the poem,—lines which have been pronounced the finest in Virgil and the finest in Latin literature by Voltaire and Macaulay,—

Saepibus in nostris parvam te roscida mala,

Dux ego vester eram, vidi cum matre legentem:

Alter ab undecimo tum me iam acceperat annus,

Iam fragiles poteram ab terra contingere ramos:

Ut vidi, ut perii, ut me malus abstulit error—

are indeed close imitations of lines of similar beauty from the song of the Cyclops to Galatea:—

ἡράσθην μὲν ἔγωγα τεοῦς, κόρα, ἀνίκα πρᾶτον
ἦνθες ἐμᾶ σὺν ματρὶ θέλοισ' ὑακίνθινα φύλλα
ἐξ ὄρεος δρέψασθαι, ἐγὼ δ' ὁδὸν ἀγεμόνευον·
πάσασθαι δ' ἐσιδὼν τυ καὶ ὕστερον οὐδ' ἔτι πα νῦν
ἐκ τήνῳ δύναι· τιν' δ' οὐ μέλει, οὐ μὰ Δί' οὐδέν.

But they are so varied as to suggest a picture of ease and abundance among the orchards and rich cultivated land of Italy, instead of the free life and natural beauties of the Sicilian mountains. The descriptive touches suggesting the picture of the innocent romance of boyhood are also all Virgil's own.

The song of Alpheisiboeus represents a wife endeavouring to recall her truant, though still faithful, Daphnis from the city to his home. Though some of the illustrations in this song also are Greek, yet it contains several natural references to rustic superstitions which were probably common to Greek and Italian peasants; and the fine simile at line 85 (of which the first hint is to be found in Lucretius) suggests purely Italian associations. The final incident in the poem, 'Hylax in limine latrat' (though the name given to the dog is Greek), is a touch of natural life, such as does not often occur in the Eclogues. On the whole, Virgil seems here to have struck on a vein which it may be regretted that he did not work more thoroughly. If, as has been suggested by Mr. Symonds, in his account and translations of popular Tuscan poems, any of the Eclogues of Virgil are founded on primitive love-songs current among the peasantry of Italy, the songs of Damon and Alpheisiboeus are those which we should fix on as being the artistic development of these native germs.

The tenth Eclogue was the last in order of composition, probably an after-thought written immediately before the final publication, or perhaps before the second edition, of the nine other poems. In this poem Virgil abandons the more realistic path on which he had entered in the eighth, and returns again to the vague fancies of the old pastoral lament for Daphnis, as it is sung in the first idyl of Theocritus. Nothing can be more remote from actual fact than the representation of Gallus—the active and ambitious soldier and man of affairs, at that time engaged in the defence of the coasts of Italy—dying among the mountains of Arcadia, in consequence of his desertion by Lycoris (a dancing-girl, and former mistress of Antony, whose real name was Cytheris), and wept for by the rocks and pine-woods of Maenalus and Lycaeus. Yet none of the poems is more rich in beauty, and grace, and happy turns of phrase. As the idealised expression of unfortunate love, this poem is of the same class as the second, and as the song of Damon in the eighth. That vein of modern romantic sentiment, already noticed in the second, the longing to escape from the ways of civilised life to the wild and lonely places of Nature, and to follow in imagination ‘the homely, slighted shepherd’s trade,’ meets us also in the lines,

Atque utinam ex vobis unus vestrique fuisset
Aut custos gregis aut maturaе vinitor uvae,—
and again in these,
Certum est in silvis, inter spelaea ferarum
Malle pati, tenerisque meos incidere amores
Arboribus.

II.

Relation of the Eclogues to the Greek Pastoral.

The review of the Eclogues in the order of their composition shows that the early art of Virgil, like the lyrical art of Horace, begins in imitation, and, after attaining command over the form, rhythm, and diction of the type of poetry which it reproduces, gradually assumes greater independence in the choice of subject and the mode of treatment. The susceptibility of Virgil’s mind to the grace and musical sweetness of Theocritus gave the first impulse to the composition of the Eclogues; but this susceptibility was itself the result of a natural sympathy with the sentiment and motives of the Greek idyl, especially with the love of Nature and the passion of love. He found this province of art unappropriated. He revealed a new vein of Greek feeling unwrought by any of his countrymen. He gave another life to the beings, natural and supernatural, of ancient pastoral song, and awoke in his native land the sound of a strain hitherto unheard by Italian ears. The form of the Greek idyl, whether in dialogue or monologue, suited his genius, as a vehicle for the lighter fancies of youth, and for half-revealing, half-concealing the pleasures and pains personal to himself, better than the forms of lyrical and elegiac poetry adopted by Catullus and his compeers. In the opening lines of the sixth Eclogue,

Prima Syracosio dignata est ludere versu

Nostra, neque erubuit silvas habitare Thalia,

Virgil acknowledges at once the source of his inspiration and the lowly position which his genius was willing to assume. He may have consoled himself for this abnegation of a higher ambition by the thought suggested in the lines addressed to the ideal poet and hero of his imagination—

Nec te paeniteat pecoris, divine poeta,

Et formosus ovis ad flumina pavit Adonis.

In order to understand the pastoral poetry of Virgil, both in its relation to a Greek ideal and in its original truth of feeling, it is necessary to remember the chief characteristics of its prototype in the age of Ptolemy Philadelphus of Alexandria and in the early years of the reign of Hiero of Syracuse. The pastoral poetry of Sicily was the latest creation of Greek genius, born after the nobler phases of religious and political life, and the epic, lyric, and dramatic poetry which arose out of them, had passed away. In ancient, as in modern times, the pastoral idyl, as an artistic branch of literature, has arisen, not in a simple age, living in unconscious harmony with Nature, but from the midst of a refined and luxurious, generally, too, a learned or rather bookish society, and has tried to give vent to the feelings of men weary of an artificial life and vaguely longing to breathe a freer air. But there was in ancient times a primitive and popular, as well as a late and artistic pastoral. Of the primitive pastoral, springing out of rustic gatherings and festivals, or from lonely communion with Nature,

Per loca pastorum deserta atque otia dia, and transmitted, from generation to generation, in the mouth of the people, no fragment has been preserved. Yet traces of the existence of this kind of pastoral song, and of the music accompanying it, at a time antecedent to the composition of the Homeric poems, may be seen in the representation, on the Shield of Achilles, of the boy in the vineyard ‘singing the beautiful song Linus,’—a representation which is purely idyllic,—and of the shepherds, in the Ambuscade, who appear τερπόμενοι σύριγξι, as they accompany their flocks. The author of the Iliad absorbed the spirit of this primitive poetry in the greater compass of his epic creation, as Shakspeare has absorbed the Elizabethan pastoral within the all-embracing compass of his representation. Much of the imagery of the Iliad, several incidents casually introduced in connexion with the names of obscure persons perishing in battle, some of the supernatural events glanced at, as of the meeting of Aphrodite with Anchises while tending his herds on the spurs of Ida,—a subject of allusion also in the Sicilian idyl,—are of a pastoral character and origin. In the lines which spring up with a tender grace in the midst of the stern grandeur of the final conflict between Hector and Achilles—

οὐ μέν πως νῦν ἔστιν ἀπὸ δρυὸς οὐδ’ ἀπὸ πέτρης
τῷ ὀαριζέμεναι, ἅ τε παρθένος ἥϊθεός τε, παρθένος ἥϊθεός τ’ ὀαρίζετον ἀλλήλουν—

the familiar cadences as well as the sweetest sentiment of pastoral song may be recognised.

This primitive pastoral poetry may have been spread over all Greece and the islands of the Aegean, from the earliest settlements of the Hellenic race, or of that older branch of the family to which the name Pelasgic has been vaguely given, and may have lingered on the same in spirit, though with many variations in form and expression, among the peasantry and herdsmen of the mountain districts till a late period. But the earliest writer who is said to have adopted this native plant of the mountains and the woods, and to have trained it to assume some form of art, was Stesichorus of Himera, who flourished about the beginning of the sixth century B.C. But nothing more is heard of it till it revived again at Syracuse in the early part of the third century.

Some of the primitive modes of feeling which gave birth to the earliest pastoral song still survive, though in altered form, in this later Sicilian poetry. The song of the βουκόλοι, or herdsmen, like the song of the masked worshippers of Bacchus (τραγωδία), may be traced to that stage in the development of the higher races in which Nature was the chief object of worship and religious sympathy. Under the symbols of Linus, Daphnis, or Adonis, the country people of early times lamented the decay of the fresh beauty of spring, under the burning midsummer heat. This primitive germ of serious feeling has perpetuated itself in that melancholy mood which runs through the pastoral poetry of all countries. From that tendency of the Greek imagination to give a human meaning to all that interested it, this dirge over the fading beauty of the early year soon assumed the form of a lament over the death of a young shepherd-poet, dear to gods and men, to the flocks, herds, and wild animals, to the rocks and mountains, among which he had lived. In the Daphnis of Theocritus, the human passion of love produces that blighting influence on the life of the shepherd which in the original myth was produced by the fierce heat of summer on the tender life of the year. A still later development of the myth appears in the lament over the extinction of youthful genius by early death. It is not in any poem of Theocritus, but in the 'Lament of Bion,'—the work of a later writer, apparently an Italian-Greek,—

αὐτὰρ ἐγὼ τοι

Αὔσονικᾶς ὀδύνας μέλπω μέλος,—

that we find the finest ancient specimen of this later development. It is from this new form of the old dirge of Linus or Daphnis that the fancies and feelings of the ancient pastoral have been most happily adapted to modern poetry, as in the Lycidas, the Adonais, and the Thyrsis of English literature.

Another traditional theme of 'pastoral melancholy,' of which Theocritus makes use, is the unrequited love of the Cyclops for Galatea. This too had its origin in the personification of natural objects. But, unlike the song of Daphnis, the myth of which it was the expression was purely local, and confined to the shores of Sicily. It also illustrates the tendency of all pastoral song to find its chief human motive in the passion of love. While the original motive of the primitive lament for Daphnis or Linus was the unconscious sympathy of the human heart with Nature, the most prominent motive of artistic pastoral or idyllic poetry, from the 'Song of Songs' to the 'Hermann and Dorothea' and 'The Long Vacation Pastoral' of these later times, has been the passion of the human heart for the human object of its affection, blending with either an unconscious absorption in outward scenes or a refined contemplation of them.

But there is another very distinct mode of primitive feeling traceable in Theocritus, which dictates the good-humoured, often licentious, banter with which the shepherds encounter one another. As the pastoral monologue continued to betray the serious character of the Lament out of which it sprung, so this natural dialogue continued to bear traces of that old licence of the harvest-home and the vintage-season, which

Versibus alternis opprobria rustica fudit.

The 'lusit amabiliter' of Horace's lines, which soon became inapplicable to the biting and censorious Italian spirit, expresses happily the tone of the dialogue in the fourth and fifth Idyls of Theocritus, which Virgil attempts to reproduce in his third Eclogue. This source of rural poetry was known to the 'Ausonian husbandmen' as well as to the country people of Greece and Sicily: and its native force passed not only into the Greek pastoral idyl, but into the Sicilian comedy of Epicharmus and the old comedy of Athens, and, through a totally different channel, into Roman satire. There is, however, another form in which the pastoral dialogue appears both in Theocritus and Virgil, namely, of extemporaneous contests in song. Probably these more artistic contests and the award of prizes to the successful competitor had their origin in the bantering dialogue of the shepherds; as the tragic contests at the Dionysian festivals had their origin in the rivalry with which the masked votaries of Dionysus poured forth their extemporaneous verses, in sympathy with the sufferings of their god.

Such were the first rude utterances of the deeper as well as the gayer emotions of men, living in the happy security of the country districts or the 'otia dia' of the mountains in Greece, Sicily, and perhaps Southern Italy, which the art of Theocritus and his successors cast into artistic forms and measures suited to the taste of educated readers. How far, in the manner in which he accomplished this, Theocritus had been anticipated by 'the grave muse of Stesichorus,' and whether this wild product of the mountains was of a native Sicilian or an Hellenic stock, it is not possible to determine. A citizen of Syracuse, in the palmy days of Hiero, before there was any dream of Roman conquest; deeply susceptible of the beauty of his native island, but, like a Greek, seeing this beauty in relation to human associations; familiar with the songs and old traditions of the land, as well as with the fancies of earlier poets; living his life in friendly association with his literary compeers, such as the Alexandrine Aratus and Nicias, the physician and poet,—he sought to people the familiar scenery of mountain, wood, brook, and sea-shore with an ideal race of shepherds, in whom the natural emotions and grotesque superstitions of actual herdsmen should be found in union with the refinement, the mythological lore, the keen sense of the beauty, not unmixed with the melancholy, of life, characteristic of a circle of poets and scholars enjoying their youth in untroubled and uneventful times. All his materials, old and new, assumed the shape of pictures from human life in combination with the representations of the sounds, sights, and living movement of Nature. The essential characteristic both of his pastoral Idyls and of those drawn from city-life, such as the second, fourteenth, and fifteenth, is what has been well called the 'disinterested objectivity' of Greek art: and this is the chief note of their difference from Virgil's pastorals. Even where, as in the seventh, the poet introduces himself on the scene, he appears as one, and not the most important, of the personages on it. He does not draw attention to his own feelings or fortunes, only to his playful converse and rivalry in song with the young shepherd-poet Lycidas, 'with the bright laughing eye and the smile ever playing on his lip.'

It may be urged against these Idyls that, as compared with the best modern Idyls, in prose or verse, they are, for the most part, wanting in incident or adventure; and this charge is equally applicable to Virgil's pastorals. But there is always dramatic vivacity and consistency in the personages of Theocritus, and this cannot equally be said of those introduced into the Eclogues. It might be urged also against the representations of Theocritus, and still more against those of Virgil, that the 'vestigia ruris' have been too carefully obliterated. Yet, though not drawn immediately from life, this picture of Sicilian shepherds and peasants, possessed with the vivid belief in Pan and the Nymphs, singing the old dirge of the herdsman Daphnis among the mountain pastures, or the love-song of the Cyclops and Galatea on the rocks overhanging the Sicilian sea, or the song of Lityrses among the ripe corn-fields, challenging each other to compete in song or plying each other with careless tending their flocks rather as a picturesque pastime than as a toilsome occupation, and living a life of free social enjoyment in the open air, was a genuine ideal of the Greek imagination, not perhaps, too far removed from the actual reality.

Before the time of Virgil there had been no attempt to introduce this form of art into Italy. Though the germ of a rude rustic poetry existed in the 'Fescennine verses,' no connexion can be traced between them and the highly artificial pastoral of the Augustan Age. The Eclogues of Virgil are in form and even in substance a closer reproduction of a Greek original than any other branch of Latin literature, with the exception of the comedy of Terence. The 'Lament of Daphnis,' the song of unrequited love, the bantering dialogues of the shepherds and their more formal contests in song, reappear in Latin tones and with some new associations of individual and national life, but in such a manner as to recall the memory of the Sicilian idyl rather than to suggest a new experience from life. And yet Virgil is not satisfied, like the authors of Latin comedy, with presenting to the imagination types of Greek life, Greek sentiment and manners, and Greek scenes. He desires not only to reproduce in new words and music the charm which had fascinated him in Theocritus, but to blend the actual feeling and experience of an Italian living in the Augustan Age with this ideal restored from a by-gone time. The result is something composite, neither purely Greek nor purely Italian; not altogether of the present time nor yet of a mythical foretime; but a blending of various elements of poetic association and actual experience, as in those landscapes of the Renaissance which combine aspects of real scenes with the suggestions of classical poetry, and introduce figures of the day in modern dress along with the fantastic shapes of mythological invention. The scenes and personages of the Eclogues are thus one stage further removed from actuality than those of the Greek pastoral. They do not reproduce, as Keats has done, the Greek ideal of rural life, and they do not create a purely Italian ideal. There was, indeed, latent in the Italian imagination an ideal of a homely rustic life, finding its happiness in the annual round of labour and in the blessing of a virtuous home, and that ideal Virgil loved to draw with 'magic hand;' but that was altogether unlike the ideal of the Greek imagination. The life of industry and happiness which Virgil glorifies in the Georgics,—that of the 'primitive, stout-hearted, and thrifty husbandmen' of Horace,—whose pride was in their 'glad harvests,' their 'trim fields,' their 'vineyards,' and in the use which they derived from their flocks, herds, and beehives, had nothing in common with that of the 'well-trimmed sunburnt shepherds' whom Greek fancy first created, and whom Keats has made live for us again, enjoying the fulness of actual existence in union with the dreams of an 'Elysian idleness.' Least of all could the pastoral life of Arcadia or Sicily have been like the habitual ways of men in the rich plains of Mantua. The district of Italy most like the scenes of the Greek idyl was Calabria, where, among the desolate forest-glades, the herds and flocks of some rich senator or eques were now tended by barbarous slaves, with whose daily existence the ideal glories of pastoral song were not likely to intermingle.

III.

It is easy for those who wish to depreciate the art of Virgil to point out very many instances of imitation and artificial treatment in the Eclogues, and to establish their manifest inferiority to the Greek idyl in direct truth and vividness of representation. They are not purely objective, like the Greek idyl, nor purely subjective as the Latin elegy generally is. They are very much inferior to the Greek originals in dramatic power; and the idyl is really a branch of dramatic poetry. Like the pure drama, it depends on the power of living in the thoughts, situations, and feelings of beings quite distinct from the poet himself. Some of the Eclogues, those in which the passion of love and the Italian passion for the land are the motives, are dramatic in spirit, though the conception of the situation is not consistently maintained. But in most cases, where he is not merely imitative, the dramatic form is to Virgil as a kind of veil under which he may partially reveal what moved him most in connexion with his own personal fortunes, and may express his sympathies with literature, with outward nature, and with certain moods and sentiments of the human heart. It is not in virtue of the originality and consistency of their conception, but of their general truth of feeling and the perfection of the medium through which that feeling is conveyed, that those who admire the Eclogues must vindicate their claim to poetic honour.

The reserve with which all his personal relations are indicated, and the allusive way in which the story of his fortunes is told, are in keeping with the delicacy and modesty of Virgil's nature. He tells us nothing directly of his home-life or occupations, though his attachment to the scenes familiar to him from childhood is felt in the language with which Meliboeus felicitates Tityrus on the restitution of his land, and in that in which Moeris and Lycidas discourse together. We know of no actual Galatea or Amaryllis associated with the joy or the pain of his youth; though his subtle perception of the various moods of the passion of love can hardly be a mere poetic intuition, unenlightened by personal experience. The eminent men with whom he was brought into contact, Octavianus, Pollio, Varus, and Gallus, are not individualised; though the different feelings of reverential or loyal respect, of colder deference, or admiring enthusiasm, which they severally excited in him, can be clearly distinguished. In the undesigned revelation of himself, which every author makes in his writings, there are few indications of the religious and moral feeling and of the national sentiment which are among the principal elements in Virgil's maturer poems: but we find abundantly the evidence of a mind open to all tender and refined influences, free from every taint of envy or malice, serious and pensive, and finding its chief happiness in making the charm, which fascinated him in books, in Nature, and in life, heard in the deep and rich music of the language, of which he first drew out the full capabilities:—

Saepe ego longos

Cantando puerum memini me condere soles.

The Eclogues also present Virgil to us as not only a poet, but, as what he continued to be through all his life, a student of the writings of the past. Like Milton he was eminently a learned poet, and, like Milton, he knew the subtle alchemy by which the duller ore of learned allusion is transmuted into gold. The tales of the Greek mythology and the names of places famous in song or story act on his imagination, not so much through their own intrinsic interest, as through the associations of literature. It is under this reflex action that he recalls to memory the tales of Pasiphae, of Scylla and Nisus, of Tereus and Philomela; introduces Orpheus, Amphion, and Linus as the ideal poets of pastoral song; and alludes to Hesiod, Euphorion, and Theocritus in the phrases 'the sage of Ascrea,' 'the verse of Chalcis,' 'the Sicilian Shepherd.' It is in this spirit that he associates the musical accompaniment of his song with the names of Maenalus and Eurotas, of Rhodope and Ismarus; and that he speaks of bees and thyme as 'the bees and thyme of Hybla,' of doves as 'the Chaonian doves,' of vultures as 'the birds of Caucasus.' He also characterises objects by local epithets, suggestive rather of the associations of geographical science than of poetry. Thus he speaks of 'Ariusian wine,' of 'Cydonian arrows,' 'Cyrnean yews,' 'Assyrian spikenard,' and the like. The interest in physical enquiries appears in the allusion in Ecl. iii. 40,

In medio duo signa Conon, etc., and in the rapid summary of the Epicurean theory of creation at vi. 31, etc.,

Namque canebat uti magnum per inane coacta, etc.

In these last passages it is not so much by the scientific or philosophical speculations themselves, as by their literary treatment by former writers, that Virgil appears to be attracted. Perhaps the frequent recurrence of these localising epithets, where there is nothing in the context to call up any thought of the locality indicated, may appear to a modern reader an unfortunate result of his Alexandrine studies; yet the grace with which old poetic associations are evoked and new associations created by such lines as these,

Tum canit, errantem Permessi ad flumina Gallum

Aonas in montis ut duxerit una sororum,

or these,

Omnia quae Phoebus quondam meditante beatus

Audiit Eurotas, iussitque ediscere laurus,

Ille canit,

attests the cumulative force which ancient names, identified with the poetic life of the world, gather in their transmission through the literatures of different ages and nations.

In the Georgics and Aeneid, as well as in the Eclogues, Virgil shows a great susceptibility to the beauty and power of Nature. But Nature presents different aspects and awakens a different class of feelings in these poems. In the Eclogues he shows a great openness and receptivity of mind, through which all the softer and more delicate influences of the outward world enter into and become part of his being. The 'molle atque facetum' of Horace denotes the yielding susceptibility to outward influences, and the vivacity which gives them back in graceful forms. In the Georgics, the sense of the relation of Nature to human energy imparts greater nobleness to the conception. She appears there, not only in her majesty and beauty, but as endowed with a soul and will. She stands to man at first in the relation of an antagonist: but, by compliance with her conditions, he subdues her to his will, and finds in her at last a just and beneficent helpmate. In the Eclogues she takes rather the form of an enchantress, who, by the charm of her outward mien and her freely-offered gifts, fascinates him into a life of indolent repose. If the one poem may in a sense be described as the 'glorification of labour,' the other might be described as the 'glorification of the dolce far niente' of Italian life. The natural objects described by Virgil are often indeed the same as those out of which the representation of Theocritus is composed; but in Theocritus the human figures are, after all, the prominent objects in the picture: the speakers in his dialogue, though not unconscious of the charm proceeding from the scenes in which they are placed, yet are not possessed by it; they do not lose their own being in the larger life of Nature environing them. Theocritus shows everywhere the social temperament of the Greeks. It is an Italian, not perhaps without something of the Celtic fibre in his composition, who utters his natural feelings in the lines,

ibi haec incondita solus

Montibus et silvis studio iactabat inani.

In Virgil's representation neither the scenes nor the human figures are so distinctly present to the eye; but there is diffused through it a subtle influence from the outward world, bringing man's nature into conformity with itself. The genius in modern times, which shows most of this yielding susceptibility to the softer aspects and motions of Nature, is that of Rousseau; but in the manner in which he gives way to this sentiment there is a want of restraint, a strain of excited feeling, suggestive of the contrast between this transient intoxication of happiness and the abiding unrest and misery of all his human relations. In reading Virgil there is no sense of any such jarring discord; yet it is rather as a pensive emotion, not unallied to melancholy, than as the joy of a sanguine temperament, that his susceptibility to outward impressions is made manifest.

The objects through which Nature exercises this spell are, as was said, much the same as those out of which the landscape of Theocritus is composed. Virgil, like Theocritus, enables us to feel the charm of 'the sparkling stream of fresh water,' of 'mossy fountains and grass softer than sleep,' of 'the cool shade of trees,' and of caves 'with the gadding vine o'ergrown.' The grace and tender hues of wild flowers—violets, poppies, narcissus, and hyacinth—and of fruits, such as the 'cerea pruna' and the 'tenera lanugine mala,'—the luxuriant vegetation clothing the rocks and the ideal mountain glades,—

Ille latus niveum molli fultus hyacintho,—

the plants and trees,—osiers and hazels, ilex and beech,—the woods, and meadow-pastures, and rich orchards of his native district, have communicated the soul and secret of their being to the mellow tones of his language and the musical cadences of his verse. He makes us hear again, with a strange delight, the murmur of bees feeding on the willow hedge, the moan of turtle-doves from the high elm tree, the sound of the whispering south wind, of waves breaking on the shore, of rivers flowing down through rocky valleys, the song of the woodman plying his work, the voice of the divine poet chanting his strain. By a few simple words he calls up before our minds the genial luxuriance of spring, the freshness of early morning, the rest of all living things in the burning heat of noon, the stillness of evening, the gentle imperceptible motions of Nature, in the shooting up of the young alder-tree and in the gradual colouring of the grapes on the sunny hill-sides. If the labour of man is mentioned at all, it is in the form of some elegant accomplishment or picturesque task—pruning the vine or grafting the pear-tree, closing the streams that water the pastures, watching the flocks and herds feeding at their own will. The new era on which the world was about to enter is seen by his imagination, like the vision of some pastoral valley, half hidden, half glorified through a golden haze. The peculiar blessings anticipated in that era are the rest from labour, the spontaneous bounty of Nature, the peace that is to reign among the old enemies of the animal kingdom.

The human affections which mingle with these representations of Nature are the love of home, and the romantic sentiment, rather than the passion, of love. The common human feeling of the love of home Virgil realises more intensely from his love of the beauty associated with his own home. Many of the sayings of Tityrus and Meliboeus bear witness to the strong hold which their lands and flocks had on men of their class:—

nos dulcia linquimus arva—
ergo tua rura manebunt, Et tibi magna satis—
Ille meas errare boves ut cernis—
Spem gregis a, silice in nuda conixa reliquit—
Ite meae, quondam felix pecus, ite capellae.

In the passage of the same Eclogue, from 68–79,
En unquam patrios ... salices carpetis amaras,

Virgil tells, in language of natural pathos and exquisite grace, of the poor man's sorrow in yielding his thatched hut, his well-trimmed fields, his corn crops, his pear-trees and his vines, the familiar sight of his goats feeding high up among the thickets of the rocks, to some rude soldier, incapable either of enjoying the charm or profiting by the richness of the land.

The three poems—the second, eighth, and tenth—of which love is the theme are all of a serious and plaintive cast. There are few touches in Virgil's art descriptive either of the happier or the lighter and more playful experiences of the passion, which are the common theme of Horace's Odes. Still less does he treat the subject in the style of Propertius and Ovid. The sentiment of Virgil is more like that of Tibullus; only Virgil gives utterance, though always in a dramatic form, to the real despair of unrequited affection (indigni amoris), while the tone of Tibullus is rather that of one yielding to the luxury of melancholy when in possession of all that his heart desires. They each give expression to that modern mood of passion, in which the heart longs to exchange the familiar life of civilisation for the rougher life of the fields, and to share some humble cottage and the daily occupations of peasant life with the beloved object. In Virgil also there appears some anticipation of that longing for lonely communing with Nature in her wilder and more desolate aspects which we associate with romantic rather than with classical poetry.

Though, unlike all other Latin poets, Virgil avoids all reference to the sensual side of this passion, there is no ancient poet who has analysed and expressed, with equal truth and beauty and with such a chivalrous devotion, the fluctuations between hope and despair, the sense of personal unworthiness, the sweet memories, the heart-felt longings, the self-forgotten consideration and anxieties of an idealising affection. In such lines as these, expressing at once the sense of unworthiness and the rapid sinking of the heart from hope to despair—

Rusticus es Corydon, nec munera curat Alexis,
and again—

Tanquam haec sint nostri medicina furoris;
in the lines in which Damon traces back his love to its ideal source in early boyhood—

Saepibus in nostris, etc.;
in the fine simile at viii. 85—

Talis amor Daphnim, qualis cum fessa iuvenum, etc.;
in the tender thought of the dying Gallus for the mistress who had forsaken him—

A, tibi ne teneras glacies secet aspera plantas,—
there is a delicate and subtle power of touch not unworthy of the master-hand which, with maturer art, delineated the queenly passion and despair of Dido.

The supreme excellence of Virgil's art consists in the perfect harmony between his feeling and the medium through which it is conveyed. The style of his longer poems has many varied excellences, in accordance with the varied character of the thought and sentiment which it is called on to express. But the strong and full volume of diction and rhythm and the complex harmonies of the Georgics would have been an inappropriate vehicle for the luxurious sentiment of the Eclogues. The attitude of the poet's mind in the composition of these earlier poems was that of a genial passiveness rather than that of creative activity. There are few poems of equal excellence in which so little use is made of that force of words which imparts new life to things. A few such expressions might be quoted, like that given by Wordsworth as 'an instance of a slight exertion of the faculty of imagination in the use of a single word'—

Dumosa pendere procul de rupe videbo;
and we notice a similar exertion of the faculty in the line—
Hic viridis tenera praetexit harundine ripam
Mincius.

But this actively imaginative use of language seldom occurs in these poems. The general effect of the style is produced by the fulness of feeling, the sweetness or sonorousness of cadence, with which words, used in their familiar sense, are selected and combined. Such epithets as 'mollis,' 'lentus,' 'tener' are of frequent recurrence, yet the impression left by their use is not one of weakness, or of a satiating luxury of sentiment. The soft outlines and delicate bloom of Virgil's youthful style are as true emblems of health as the firmer fibre and richer colouring of his later diction. What an affluence of feeling, what a deep sense of the happiness of life, of the beauty of the world, of the glory of genius, is conveyed by the simple use of the words fortunatus, formosus, divinus in the lines—

Fortunate senex, ergo tua rura manebunt—
Nunc frondent silvae, nunc formosissimus annus—
Formosi pecoris custos, formosior ipse—
Tale tuum carmen nobis, divine poeta—
Ut Linus haec illi divino carmine pastor.

The effect he produces by the sound and associations of proper names is like that produced by Milton through the same instrument.

Thus, to take one instance out of many, how suggestive of some golden age of pastoral song are the following lines, vague and conventional though their actual application appears to be in the passage where they occur:—

Non me carminibus vincet nec Thracius Orpheus,
Nec Linus, huic mater quamvis atque huic pater adsit,
Orphei Calliopea, Lino formosus Apollo.
Pan etiam Arcadia mecum si iudice certet,
Pan etiam Arcadia dicat se iudice victum.

More even in his rhythm than in his diction does Virgil's superiority appear, not only over all the poets of his country, but perhaps over all other poets of past times, except Homer, Milton, and Shakspeare, in those passages in which his dramatic art admits of a richly musical cadence. Our ignorance of the exact pronunciation of Greek in the Alexandrian Age makes a comparison between the effect that would have been produced by the rhythm of Theocritus and the rhythm of the Eclogues in ancient times difficult or impossible. Yet it may be allowed to say this much, that if the rhythm of the Eclogues does not seem to us to attain to the natural and liquid flow of the Greek idyl, yet its tones are deeper, they seem to come from a stronger and richer source, than any which we can elicit from the Doric reed. Rarely has the soothing and reviving charm of the musical sounds of Nature and of the softer and grander harmonies of poetry been described and reproduced more effectively than in these lines:—

Hinc tibi, quae semper, vicino ab limite saepes
Hyblaeis apibus florem depasta salicti
Saepe levi somnum suadebit inire susurro;
Hinc alta sub rupe canet frondator ad auras;
Nec tamen interea raucae, tua cura, palumbes,
Nec gemere aeria cessabit turtur ab ulmo:

and in these which suggest the thought of that restorative power of genius which a poet of the present day has happily ascribed to Wordsworth:—

Tale tuum carmen nobis, divine poeta,
Quale sopor fessis in gramine, quale per aestum

Dulcis aquae saliente sitim restinguere rivo:

and in these again, which give both true symbols and a true example of the 'deep-chested music' in which the poet gives utterance to the thought which has taken shape within his mind:—

Quae tibi, quae tali reddam pro carmine dona?

Nam neque me tantum venientis sibilus austri,

Nec percussa iuvant fluctu tam litora, nec quae

Saxosas inter decurrunt flumina valles.

The objections often urged against the poetical value of the Eclogues may be admitted. They are imitative in form. They do not reproduce scenes and characters from actual life, nor are they consistent creations of the imagination. They do not possess the interest arising from a contemplative insight into the hidden workings of Nature, nor from reflection on the problems of life. Their originality, their claim to be a representative work of genius, consists in their truth and unity of sentiment and tone. If it be said that the sentiment which they embody is but a languid and effeminate sentiment, the admiration of two great poets, of the most masculine type of genius that modern times have produced, is a sufficient answer to this reproach. The admiration of Milton is proved by the conception and workmanship of his 'Lycidas,' the most richly and continuously musical even among his creations. Of Wordsworth's admiration there is more than one testimony,—this, from the recently published Memoir of the daughter of his early friend and associate in poetry, perhaps the most direct: 'I am much pleased to see (writes S. Coleridge) how highly Mr. Wordsworth speaks of Virgil's style, and of his Bucolics which I have ever thought most graceful and tender. They are quite another thing from Theocritus, however they may be based on Theocritus.' The criticism which the same writer applies to 'Lycidas' suggests the true answer also to the objections urged against Virgil's originality. 'The best defence of Lycidas is not to defend the design of it at all, but to allege that the execution of it is perfect, the diction the ne plus ultra of grace and loveliness, and that the spirit of the whole is as original as if the poem contained no traces of the author's acquaintance with ancient pastoral poetry from Theocritus downwards.' To the names of these two poets we can now add the name of one of the most illustrious, and certainly one of the least effeminate, among the critics and men of letters whom this century has produced—Macaulay; who, after speaking of the Aeneid in one of his letters, adds this sentence, ‘The Georgics pleased me better; the Eclogues best,—the second and tenth above all.’

The appreciation of Wordsworth is a certain touchstone of the genuineness of Virgil’s feeling for Nature. It is true that the sentiment to which he gives expression in the Eclogues is only one, and not the most elevated, of the many modes in which the spirit of man responds to the forms and movement of the outward world. But the mood of the Eclogues is one most natural to man’s spirit in the beautiful lands of Southern Europe. The freshness and softness of Italian scenes are present in the Eclogues, in the rich music of the Italian language, while it still retained the strength, fulness, and majesty of its tones. These poems are truly representative of Italy, not as a land of old civilisation, of historic renown, of great cities, of corn-crops, and vineyards,—‘the mighty mother of fruits and men;’—but as a land of a soft and genial air, beautiful with the tender foliage and fresh flowers and blossoms of spring, and with the rich colouring of autumn; a land which has most attuned man’s nature to the influences of music and of pictorial art. As a true and exquisite symbol of this vein of sentiment associated with Italy, the Eclogues hold a not unworthy place beside the greater work—the ‘temple of solid marble’—which the maturer art of Virgil dedicated to the genius of his country, and beside the more composite but stately and massive monument which perpetuates the national glory of Rome.

CHAPTER V.

Motives, Form, National Interest, and Sources of the Georgics.

I.

The appearance of the Eclogues marked Virgil out among his contemporaries as the poet of Nature and rural life. That province was assigned to him, as epic poetry was to Varius and tragedy to Pollio. It is to the Eclogues only that the lines in which Horace characterises his art can with propriety be applied. These lines were written before the appearance of the Georgics, and probably before any considerable part of the poem had been composed. The epithets which admirably characterise the receptive attitude of Virgil's mind in the composition of his pastoral poems are quite inapplicable to the solid and severe workmanship and the earnest feeling of his didactic poem. The Eclogues are the poems of youth, and of a youth passed in study and in contact with Nature rather than with the serious interests of life. Though Virgil indicates in them the ambition which was moving him to vaster undertakings, yet he shows at the same time his consciousness of the comparative triviality of his art. The class of poem to which the word ludere is applied was, even when not of a licentious character, regarded by the more serious minds of Rome, such as Cicero for instance, with a certain degree of contempt, as being among the 'leviora studia,' partaking more of the 'Graeca levitas' than of the 'Roman gravitas.' The genuine Roman spirit demanded of its highest literature, as of its native architecture, that it should either have some direct practical use, or contribute in some way to enhance the sense of national greatness.

The literary impulse directing Virgil to the composition of the Georgics was probably the wish to be the Hesiod, as he had already been the Theocritus, of Rome. The poets of the Augustan Age selected some Greek prototype whose manner they professed to reproduce and make the vehicle for the expression of their own thought and experience. Thus Horace chose Alcaeus, Propertius chose Callimachus as his model. Virgil assigns to Pollio the praise of alone composing poems 'worthy of the buskin of Sophocles.' In the Georgics he professes to find his own prototype in Hesiod:—

Ascraeumque cano Romana per oppida carmen.

Propertius also recognises him as the disciple of the sage of Ascra:—

Tu canis Ascraei veteris praecepta poetae,

Quo seges in campo, quo viret uva iugo.

Though Hesiod can scarcely have taken the highest rank as a poet, yet a peculiar reverence attached to his name from his great antiquity, and from the ethical and theological spirit of his writings.

As Virgil chose the mould of Theocritus into which to cast the lighter feelings and fancies of his youth, he naturally turned to 'The Works and Days of Hesiod' as a more suitable model for a poem on rural life, undertaken with a more serious purpose, and demanding a severer treatment.

The change in Virgil's life between the composition of the Eclogues and the Georgics had however much more influence in determining the difference in the character of the two poems, than the mere artistic desire to enter on a new path of poetry. During the composition of the earlier poems Virgil was living in a remote district of Italy, associating with the country-people or with a few young poets like himself, and coming in contact with the great world of action and national interests only through the medium of his intercourse with the temporary governors of the province. Rome and its ruler and the powerful stream of events in which his own fortunes were finally absorbed affect his imagination as they might do that of one who heard of them from a distance, but who in his ordinary thoughts and sympathies was living quite apart from them;

Urbum quam dicunt Romam Meliboeë putavi

Stultus ego huic nostrae similem.

But before undertaking the task of writing the Georgics he had become an honoured member of the circle of Maecenas, the intimate friend of Varius and of Horace (who himself owed his introduction to that circle to the kindly offices of the two older poets) and of others distinguished in literature and public affairs. He had lived for a time near the centre of the world's movement, in close relations to the minds by which that movement was directed. As the most genuine of his Eclogues had been inspired by his personal share in the calamities of his country, it was natural that he should, now when his own fortunes were restored through the favour of those at the head of affairs, feel a stronger and more disinterested sympathy with the public condition, at a crisis to which no one capable of understanding its gravity could feel indifferent. It was natural that his new relations and the impulse of the new ideas which came to him through them should move him to undertake some work of art more suited to his maturer faculty, his graver temperament, and the firmer fibre of his genius. Nor is there any difficulty in believing that Maecenas may have had some influence in determining him to the choice of a subject which enabled him to range over the whole of that field of which he had already appropriated a part, which would afford scope to the literary ambition urging him to write a poem on a greater scale and of more enduring substance, and which, at the same time, might serve indirectly to advance the policy of reconciliation and national and social reorganisation which Caesar and his minister were anxious to promote. Among 'the ancient arts by which the Latin name and the strength of Italy had waxed great,' none had fallen more into abeyance, through the insecurity of the times, than the cultivation of the land. The restoration of the old 'Coloni' of Italy and the revival of the great forms of national industry, associated with the older and happier memories of Rome, had been a leading feature in the policy of the great popular leaders from the Gracchi down to Julius Caesar. Among the completed glories of the Augustan Age, Horace, some twenty years later, specially notes the restoration of security and abundance to the land:—

Tutus bos etenim rura perambulat, Nutrit rura Ceres almaque faustitas,
and in the same Ode:—
Condit quisque diem collibus in suis,
Et vitem viduas ducit ad arbores.

And in the brief summing up of the whole glories of the Augustan reign contained in his latest Ode he begins with the words,—

Tua, Caesar, aetas
Fruges et agris rettulit uberes.

All Virgil's early associations and sympathies would lead him to identify himself with this object and with the interests and happiness of such representatives of the old rural life of Italy as might still be found, or might arise again under a secure administration. In proposing to himself some serious aim for the exercise of his poetic gift, it was natural that he should have fixed on that of representing this life in such a way as to create an aspiration for it, and to secure for it the sympathy of the world. The language in which he speaks of the poem as a task imposed on him by Maecenas need not be taken literally: but it is no detraction from Virgil's originality to suppose that he, like Horace, was encouraged by the minister to devote his genius to a purpose which would appeal equally to the sympathies of the statesman and of the poet. The testimony of Virgil's biographer on this subject, which may probably be traced to the original testimony of Melissus, the freedman of Maecenas, is neither to be disregarded nor unduly pressed, any more than the language in which Virgil himself makes acknowledgment of his indebtedness. It is impossible to say what chance seed of casual conversation may have been the original germ of what ultimately became so large and goodly a creation. If, in the composition of the Georgics, Virgil employed his art as an instrument of government, we cannot doubt that he did so not only because he recognised in the subject of the poem one suited to his own genius, but because his past life and early associations brought home to him the desolation caused in the rural districts by the Civil Wars, the moral worth of that old class of husbandmen who had suffered from them, and the public loss arising from the diminution in their number and influence. To idealise the life of that class by describing, with realistic fidelity and in the language of purest poetry, the annual round of labour in which it was passed; to suggest the ever-present charm arising from the intimate contact with the manifold processes and aspects of Nature into which man is brought in this life of labour; to contrast the simplicity and sanctity of such life with the luxury and lawless passions of the great world; and to associate this ideal with the varied beauty of Italy and the historic memories of Rome, were objects worthy of one who aspired to fulfil the office of a national poet. It is no detraction from the originality of his idea to suppose that some such suggestion as that attributed to Maecenas gave the original impulse to the poem. Not only the art, genius, and learning, but the religious faith and feeling, the moral and national sympathies, which give to it its peculiar meaning and value, are all the poet's own. His strong feeling for his subject was as little capable of being communicated from without, as the genius with which he adorns it.

With such feelings as those which were moving the imagination of Virgil, a modern poet might have shaped his subject into the form of a poetic idyl, in which the joys and sorrows of men and women living during this national crisis might have been represented in union with the varied aspects of the scenery and the chief modes of rural industry in Italy. Such a form of art would have enabled the poet to add the interest of individual character and action to his abstract delineation of the 'acer rusticus' or the 'duri agrestes' engaged in a hard struggle with the forces of Nature. And one or two passages, containing some sketch drawn directly from peasant life, as for instance i. 291–296,

Et quidam seros hiberni ad luminis ignes, etc.,

and iv. 125–146,

Namque sub Oebaliae memini me turribus arcis, etc., make us regret that the conditions of his art, as conceived by him, did not encourage him to blend something more of idyllic representation with the didactic and descriptive treatment of his subject. But the idyl which treats the incidents of human life in the form either of a continuous poem or of a tale in prose was unknown to the early art of Greece; and Roman imagination was incapable of inventing a perfectly new mould into which to cast its poetic fancies and feelings. Nor is it probable that a poem so truly representative of Italy in all its aspects could have been produced in the form of an idyl, of which the interest would have been concentrated on some family or group of personages.

II.

There was only one form of literary art known to the Greeks or Romans of the Augustan Age which was at all suitable for the treatment on a large scale of such a subject as that which now filled the mind of Virgil. Next after the epic poem of heroic action, the didactic epos was regarded at Rome as the most serious and elaborate form of poetic art. It was more suited than any other form to the Roman mind. It is the only form in which the genius of Rome has produced master-pieces superior not only to anything of the kind produced by Greece but to all similar attempts in modern times. As Roman invention, stimulated by the practical sense of utility, by the passion for vast and massive undertakings, and by the strong perception of order and unity of design, devised a new kind of architecture for the ordinary wants of life, so in accordance with the national bent to reduce all things to rule, to impose the will of a master on obedient subjects, to use the constructive and artistic faculties for some practical end, if it did not create, it gave ampler compass, more solid and massive workmanship, and the associations of great ideas to that form of poetic art which had been the most meagre and unsubstantial of all those invented by the genius of Greece.

Moreover, a new form, or rather a form of more ample capacity, was required to embody the new poetical feelings and experience which now moved the Roman and Italian mind. If less interest was felt at Rome in following the course of individual destiny, the interest felt in contemplating the outward aspect and secret movement of Nature was now stronger than it had been in the great ages of Greek literature. Though the vivid enjoyment of the outward world had unconsciously shaped the tales of the early Greek mythology, and though this enjoyment had entered directly, as a subordinate element, into the epic, lyric, and dramatic poetry of Greece, and, more prominently, into the later poetry of Alexandria, and although the phenomena and laws of Nature had aroused the speculative curiosity of the early Greek philosophers, no poet before Lucretius had treated of Nature, in the immensity of her range, in the primal elements and living forces of her constitution, and, at the same time, in her manifold aspects of beneficence and beauty, and of destructive energy, as the subject of a great poem. The forms adopted by the great masters of Greek poetry,—the epic, lyric, and dramatic writers,—whose essential business it was to represent the actions and passions of men, were inapplicable to the treatment of this new subject of man's environment. Lucretius accordingly had to take the outline of his form from the early physiological writers, whom the Greeks scarcely ranked among their poets at all, and who, though animated by the speculative passion to penetrate to the secret of Nature, were not specially interested in her aspects of beauty or power, or in her relation to the life of man. If he cannot claim the title of an inventor in art, yet by adding volume and majesty to the rudimentary type of these early writers, he gave to the ancient world the unique specimen of a great philosophical poem.

So too Virgil, penetrated with the feeling of Nature in her relation to human wants and enjoyment, and desirous to give an adequate expression to this feeling, could derive no guidance from the nobler genius of Greece. To find a suitable vehicle, he had to turn to the earliest and latest periods of her literature. The didactic, as distinct from the philosophic or contemplative poem, was the invention of a time prior to the existence of prose composition. It seems to have arisen out of the impulse to convey instruction and advice on the management of life generally, and especially on the best means of securing a livelihood from the cultivation of the soil. The use of the language of poetry for a purpose essentially practical and prosaic was justified, in that primitive time, not only by the absence of any other organ of literary expression, but also by the fact that, in such a time, all literary effort was the result of animated feeling, and that the most common aspects of Nature, such as the changes of the seasons or of night and day, and what seem now the most familiar occupations of life, were apprehended by the lively mind of the Greek with a fresh sense of wonder, which use deadens in eras of more advanced civilisation. But while this sense of wonder imparts a poetical colouring to the language of early didactic poetry, and while sufficient harmony was secured for it by the training of the ear during centuries of epic song, the form and structure of this kind of art was, as compared with the other forms of Greek poetry, essentially rudimentary. The sole specimen which has reached our times appears in the form of a personal address, treating of a number of subjects not closely connected with one another, interspersed with various episodes, and producing the impression of a connected whole solely through the vivid personality of the writer. Didactic poetry was absolutely rejected in the maturity of Greek genius, after the rise of a prose literature had marked off clearly the separate provinces of prose and poetry, and after Greek taste had become more exacting in its demand of unity of impression and symmetry of form in every work of art. It was revived again in the Alexandrian epoch, when the creative impulse was lost, and life and its interests had become tamer, while at the same time knowledge had greatly increased, and a kind of literary dilettanteism was one of the chief elements in refined enjoyment. By the Alexandrine writers the irregular and desultory treatment of Hesiod was abandoned. The didactic poem was treated by them as one of the recognised branches of poetical art. It still retained the general character of a personal address, which accident may have first suggested to Hesiod, and which either his example or their own taste had imposed on the early philosophic poets. The Alexandrine type of poem differed from that of Hesiod by professing to convey systematic instruction on some definite branch of knowledge, instead of offering practical directions on the best method of carrying on some occupation, combined with a medley of precepts, moral, religious, and ceremonial. The change may be compared to that which the Roman satire underwent, from the inartistic medley of Ennius and Lucilius to the systematic treatment of some special subject in the satire of Persius and Juvenal. The primary aim of such writers as Aratus and Nicander was not to communicate ideas capable of affecting the imagination, but to satisfy intellectual curiosity by communicating interesting information. So soon as this information ceased to be interesting, the value of their work was gone. Thus although accident has handed down several specimens of the Alexandrine type of didactic poetry, their chief literary use is to enable us, by contrast, better to appreciate the genius which, by interfusing with the materials used by them other elements deeply affecting the heart, the imagination, and the moral sympathies, has given the world, instead of the temporary gift of a little useful information, the κτῆμα ἔς ἅει which it possesses in the Georgics.

In that poem Virgil combines something of the spirit of the older or primitive type of didactic poetry with the systematic treatment of their subject employed by the Alexandrine Metaphrastae. He retains the old form of a personal address, not only in the dedication of the poem to Maecenas, but in the manner in which he inculcates his precepts on the husbandman, or indicates what he himself would do in particular circumstances. Yet he bears more resemblance to the poets of Alexandria in his systematic treatment and arrangement of his materials. He aims, like them, at communicating a large body of unfamiliar knowledge, as well as conveying practical precepts founded on experience. By combining these two aims, but much more by making the aims of conveying precept and instruction

altogether subsidiary to that of moving the imagination and the affections, Virgil, if he has not created a new type of didactic poetry, has at least produced almost the only specimen of it which the world cares to read. He is apparently conscious of the difficulty of imparting to a poem of this type a continuous poetical charm; as Lucretius, with more reason, is conscious of the difficulty of securing a sustained poetical interest for his argumentative processes and his investigations into the first principles of things. Virgil's difficulty is to maintain his subject on the level of poetical feeling, while at the same time adhering to the necessities of practical instruction. And this difficulty attaches to every kind of didactic poetry. He had to associate with a poetic charm, not only the fair results of the husbandman's labour, the 'heavy harvests and the Massic juice of the vine,' but the processes and mechanical appliances through which these fair results were obtained. Although his idea of his art did not demand an exhaustive treatment of all the operations of rural industry, such as was demanded of the prose writers on the subject, yet it did demand that, in making his selection, he should regard the importance of each topic in connexion with the work of the farm as well as its adaptation to poetic treatment. It cannot be denied that this necessary infusion of prosaic matter deprives even the most perfect specimen of didactic poetry of that purity of imaginative interest which pervades the masterpieces of epic, lyrical, and dramatic genius: but it is, on the other hand, a great triumph of art to have redeemed so much as Virgil has done from the homely realities of life into the more sacred ground of poetry, and that without sacrifice either of the truth of fact or of the dignity and sobriety of expression.

III.

While the title 'Georgica' reminds us that the form of the poem, like the form of the 'Bucolica' and the 'Aeneis,' was derived from the Greeks, the subject of which it treats was one of peculiarly national interest. As the Aeneid may be said to be inspired by the idea of Rome and her destiny, and as the practical purpose of that poem was to confirm the faith of the Romans in their Empire and in the ruler in whom that Empire was vested, so the Georgics may be said to be inspired by the idea of Italy; and the true aim of the poem was to revive and extend the love of the land, and to restore the fading ideal of a life of virtue and happiness, passed in the labours of a country life. But while much of the materials and of the workmanship of the Aeneid is originally due to Greek invention, the general substance of the Georgics and the most essentially poetical passages are of native origin.

The chief modes of rural industry treated in the various books are those which flourished in Italy,—the tillage of the land for various crops, the cultivation of the vine and the olive, the breeding and rearing of cattle, sheep, and horses, and the tending of bees. It is noticed by Servius that the agricultural precepts of the poem apply only to Italy and not to other lands: ‘Sane agriculturae huius praecepta non ad omnes pertinent terras, sed ad solum situm Italiae.’ The frequent references to the products of other lands serve to suggest by contrast the superiority of Italy in those which are the special subject of the poem and which are most essential to human well-being. Cato also is represented by Cicero as resting the charm of a country life in the contemplation of the same operations of Nature as those indicated in the opening lines of the Georgics:—

Quid faciat laetas segetes, quo sidere terram
Vertere, Maecenas, ulmisque adiungere vites Conveniat,—

The number of Roman writers who treated in prose of this subject, both before and after Virgil, testifies further to the strong national interest attaching to it. Among these writers, Varro, the immediate predecessor of Virgil, associates the subject directly with the pride which the Romans felt in their country. He introduces the speakers in his Dialogue as holding their conversation in the Temple of Tellus, and examining a map or painting of Italy on the wall. One of the speakers addresses the others in these words, ‘You who have travelled over many lands, have you ever seen any more richly cultivated than Italy? I, indeed, have never seen any so richly cultivated.’ He especially characterises the excellence of its corn-crops, its vines, olives, and fruit-trees: ‘What spelt shall I compare to the Campanian? what wheat to the Apulian? what wine to the Falernian? what oil to that of Venafrum? is not Italy planted with trees, so that the whole of it seems an orchard?' Other authors, Virgil himself among them, and Columella in the Introduction to his treatise, testify to the pride which the Italians took in their breed of horses and herds of cattle. And though the Italian bees and their product were not so famous in poetry as the bees of Hymettus and 'the honey of Hybla,' yet Horace speaks of the country near Tarentum as one 'where the honey yields not to the honey of Hymettus;' and in another Ode, in which he contrasts his own moderate estate with the resources of richer men, he mentions Calabrian honey along with the wine of Formiae and the fleeces of Gallic pastures among the chief sources of wealth:—

Quanquam nec Calabriae mella ferunt apes
Nec Laestrygonia Bacchus in amphora
Languescit mihi, nec pinguis Gallicis
Crescunt vellera pascuis.

This branch of his subject moreover enables Virgil to celebrate the floral beauties of Italy, and to exhibit on a small scale a picture of a community at once warlike, politic, and industrious, such as had been realised on the soil of Italy, and especially in the old Roman Commonwealth, more completely than among any other people.

The subject was moreover intimately associated with the national history. Several of the early legends, such as those of Cincinnatus, and, in more historical times, of Atilius Regulus and Curius Dentatus, attest the prominence which agriculture enjoyed among the pursuits of the foremost men in the Republic. The surnames of many noble families, patrician and plebeian, such as the Lentuli, Stolones, Bubulci, Piones, Dolabellae, and the name of the great Fabian Gens, are connected etymologically with agricultural occupations, products, or implements, and afford evidence of a time when the men who filled the great offices of the State lived on their own lands, and were known for the success with which they improved their farms. The passion to possess and subdue the land was, in the early history of the Republic, the main motive power both of the political and military history of Rome. Even down to the establishment of the Empire there was no question which more divided the two great parties in the State than that of the Agrarian laws. And though, after the conquest of Italy, Roman wars were fought for dominion rather than for new territory, yet the hope of owning land, if not on Italian yet on some foreign soil, which he should hold by his sword as well as cultivate by his plough, supported the Roman soldier, even under the Empire, through the long years of his service. The Roman 'colonies,' the origin of so many famous European cities, were settlements of 'Coloni' or cultivators of the soil.

Thus in the selection of his subject Virgil appealed to old national associations and living tastes in a way in which no Greek poet could have done in choosing any mode of practical industry for poetic treatment. Even the details of direct instruction would attract a Roman reader by reminding him of labours which he may often have watched and perhaps have shared. Though Virgil found new sources of attraction by references to Greek mythology and science, and though he availed himself of the diction of Greek poets much inferior to himself in their perception of beauty and their power over language, yet his materials are mainly drawn either from personal observation, or from Italian writers who had put on record the results of what they had seen and done. There is a thoroughly Roman character in the technical execution of the poem, in the command over details, in the power of orderly arrangement with a view to convenience rather than logical symmetry, and in the combined sobriety and dignity of the workmanship. But it is in the longer episodes, in which the deeper meaning of the poem is most brought out, that the intimate connexion between the various topics treated in it and the national character and fortunes becomes most apparent. There is indeed one marked exception to the maintenance of this unity of impression. The long episode in Book iv, from line 315 to 558, has no national significance. And this is an undoubted blot on the artistic perfection of the work. This episode not only adds nothing to its representative character, but it suggests fancies and associations utterly alien from the Italy of the Augustan Age. The space given to such a theme is opposed to the truer taste of the poet, expressed in such lines as these—

Non hic te carmine ficto

Atque per ambages et longa exorsa tenebo.

and

Cetera quae vacuas tenuissent carmina mentes,
Omnia iam volgata.

But it is not the judgement of the poet, but the despotic will of the Emperor, that is responsible for this imperfection. The fourth Book originally ended with an episode which afforded scope for the expression of personal feeling, for awakening an interest in that land which was now of vast importance to the State, and which affected the imagination of cultivated Romans as it does that of cultivated men in modern times, and for illustrating the national greatness and the recent history of Rome. In the first edition the mention of Egypt at line 287 had led Virgil to celebrate the administration of that province under his early friend Cornelius Gallus. When Gallus fell into disgrace and was forced to commit suicide in 26 B.C., Virgil was required to re-edit the poem with a new concluding episode. The subject treated in the earlier edition of the poem would have enabled Virgil to give renewed expression to his admiration and affection for the Gallus of the Eclogues, to tell the tale of the downfall of Cleopatra, and to magnify the greatness of Rome in the conquest and government of her provinces. The episode as it now stands is a finished piece of metrical execution; it illustrates the attraction which the Greek mythological stories had for educated Romans; it is expressed in those tones of tender pathos of which Virgil was a master; but it is at the same time a standing proof of the malign influence which the Imperial despotism already exercised on the spontaneous inspiration of genius, as well as on all sincere expression of feeling.

IV.

If the idea of the poem and of the national interests associated with it arose in Virgil's mind during his life in Rome, it was in his retirement in Campania that he prepared himself for and executed his task. Like the Aeneid it was a work of slow growth, the result of careful study and meditation. Besides the great change of the concluding episode, there are some slight indications that the poem was retouched in later editions; and perhaps a very few lines added to the original work may have been either left finally unadjusted to their proper place, or may have been transposed in the copying of the manuscript. Although regard for his art was a more prominent consideration in the mind of Virgil than of Lucretius, yet he did not, any more than his predecessor, wish to separate the office of a teacher from that of a poet. How far the experience of his early years in the farm in the district of Andes or of his later residence on his land near Nola may have contributed to his knowledge of his subject, we have no means of knowing; but probably the delicacy of his health as well as his devotion to study may have limited his experience to the observation of the labours of others. But the power of vividly realising and enjoying the familiar sights and work of the farm,—the life which he gives to the notices of seed-time and harvest, of the growth of trees and ripening of fruits, of the habits of flocks, herds, and bees, etc.,—the deep love for his subject in all its details—

Singula dum capti circumvectamur amore—

were gifts which could not come from any study of books. The poetry of manhood is, more often perhaps than we know, the conscious reproduction of the unconscious impressions of early years, received in a susceptible and retentive mind. Virgil, in common with all great poets, retained through life the ‘child’s heart within the man’s.’ Through this geniality of nature he was able—

angustis hunc addere rebus honorem—

to glorify trite and familiar things by the light reflected from the healthy memories and the idealising fancies of boyhood and early youth.

But while his feeling is all his own,—the happy survival probably of the childhood and youth passed in his home in the district of Andes,—he largely avails himself of the observation, the thought, and the language of earlier writers, both Greek and Roman. His poem is eminently a work of learning as well as of native feeling. He combines in its varied and firm texture the homely wisdom embodied in the precepts and proverbs of Italian peasants (‘veterum praecepta’),—the quaint and oracular dicta of Hesiod,—the scientific knowledge and mythological lore of Alexandrine writers,—the philosophic and imaginative conceptions of Lucretius,—with the knowledge of natural history contained in the treatises of Aristotle and Theophrastus, and the systematic practical directions of the old prose writers on rural economy, such as the Carthaginian Mago, whose work had been translated into Latin,—Democritus and Xenophon among Greek prose writers,—Cato, the two Sasernae, Licinius Stolo, Tremellius, and Varro among Latin authors. The purely practical precepts of the Georgics were apparently selected and condensed from these writers. But no literary inspiration or ideas were likely to have come from any of these last-named authors, unless the Invocation in the first Book may have been suggested by the example of Varro, who begins his treatise with an invocation to the XII Di consentes. The proverbial sayings or rustic songs embodying the traditional peasant lore, such as the ‘Quid vesper serus vehit?’ and the ‘hiberno pulvere, verno luto, grandia farra, Camille, metes,’ which add an antique and homely charm to the poem, may have become known to Virgil from the book of the Sasernae, who are quoted by Varro as authorities for many of the old charms used by the primitive husbandmen, such as ‘Terra pestem teneto, salus hic maneto,’ which is to be repeated ‘ter novies.’ Servius notes that the words ‘sulco attritus splendescere vomer’ recall an old saying of Cato, ‘Vir bonus est, mi fili, colendi peritus, cuius ferramenta splendent.’ The notices of ceremonial observances, such as the account of the Ambarvalia, and the enumeration of things that might lawfully be done on holy days, were probably derived from the pontifical books and the sacred books of the other priestly colleges, of which Virgil made large use also in the Aeneid. In all the writers on practical farming, from Cato to Varro, he found that strong appreciation of the supreme worth of rural industry and that strong interest in its processes and results which justified him in identifying his subject with the thought of the national life.

Among the sources of literary inspiration from which Virgil drew in the Georgics, the oldest, and not the least abundant, was the ‘Works and Days’ of Hesiod. Yet a comparison of the two poems shows immediately that the Georgics do not, either in form or substance, stand in that close relation to their prototype, in which the Eclogues on the one hand, and the Aeneid on the other, stand to the idyls of Theocritus and to the epic poems of Homer. The immediate influence of Hesiod is most apparent in the first Book of the Georgics, in which the subject is treated in connexion with theological ideas; while in the second Book and in the later Books, in which the philosophical conception of Nature, though in subordination to the conception of a supreme Spiritual power, becomes more prominent, the spirit of Hesiod gives place to the spirit of Lucretius. There is, however, a real affinity between the primitive piety of the old Boeotian bard and the attitude in which Virgil contemplated the world, though the faith of Virgil has become more rational under the speculative teaching and enquiry which had taken the place of earlier modes of thought among the Greeks. Virgil is ever seeking to produce a poetical reconciliation between primitive tradition and more enlightened views both of moral and physical truth. Thus he introduces the old fable of the creation of the present race of men in immediate juxtaposition with the assertion of the 'laws and eternal conditions imposed by Nature on certain places.' He accepts the belief in a Golden Age and in the blight which fell on the world under the dispensation of Jove; but he regards this blight as sent, not in anger, but as a discipline and incentive to exertion. He describes the natural progress of the various arts of life under this stimulus, but still leaves room for divine intervention in the more important discoveries:—

Prima Ceres ferro mortalis vertere terram

Instituit.

Again, the teleological view of Nature, which appears in the Georgics in antagonism to the teaching of Lucretius, in such passages as i. 231—

Idcirco certis dimensum partibus orbem, etc.,

and i. 351—

Atque haec ut certis possemus discere signis—

is in the spirit of Hesiod, though in advance of his conception of Zeus, who appears in him not as a beneficent Providence, but rather as a jealous task-master. So too the constant inculcation of prayer and ceremonial observances—

Umida solstitia atque hiemes orate serenas,

Agricolae—

Votisque vocaveris imbrem—

In primis venerare deos, atque annua magnae

Sacra refer Cereri—

the specification of lucky and unlucky days, the reference to the old Greek fables of Coeus, Iapetus, and Typhoeus, are, though not directly imitated from Hesiod, yet conceived in his spirit.

But, besides appealing to primitive religious and mythological associations, the poet of Andes aims at reproducing some flavour of the sentiment of a remote antiquity and of the quaint naïveté characteristic of the sage of Ascrea. The very use of such an expression as ‘quo sidere terram Vertere,’—the thought of the husbandman’s labours as being regulated not by the Roman Calendar, with its prosaic divisions of the month by kalends, nones, and ides, but by the rise and setting of the constellations,—the picturesque signs of the change of the seasons, as in the line

Candida venit avis longis invisâ colubris,—

the use of such quaint expressions as ‘nudus ara, sere nudus,’—seem all intended to remind the reader that the subject is one ‘antiquae laudis et artis,’—the most ancient and unchanging of the great arts of life,—that too in which man’s dependence on Nature and the Spiritual power above Nature is most vividly realised. This infusion into the practical realities and prosaic details of his subject of something of the wonder and ‘freshness of the early world’ Virgil derives from the relation which he establishes between himself and his Boeotian prototype.

Though in spirit and poetical inspiration Virgil’s debt to Hesiod is greater, yet the Georgics present more direct traces of imitation of the Alexandrine poets. It is in accordance with the learning and science of Alexandria that the subject is illustrated by local epithets, such as ‘Strymoniae grues,’ by reference to the products of distant lands—

nonne vides croceos ut Tmolus odores, etc.,—

by recondite mythological and astronomical allusions and by the substitution of the names of various deities, such as Liber and Ceres, for the natural products which were supposed to be their gifts. But to several special authors his debt is more direct. Thus the passage, i.

Quinque tenent caelum zonae, etc.,— is copied from Eratosthenes. The account of the signs of the weather, from i. 355 to 465, is taken from the Διοσημεῖα of Aratus, a work so popular at Rome, that it was not only imitated and almost incorporated in his poem by Virgil, but had been translated by Cicero in his youth, and was subsequently translated by Germanicus. Again, the description at iii. 425, of the dangerous serpent that haunts the Calabrian pastures, is closely imitated from the extant Θηριακά of Nicander; nor can we doubt that there were in the fourth Book imitations of the lost Μελισσουργικά of the same author, who probably anticipated Virgil in the use which he made of Aristotle's observations on the habits of bees.

A comparison of the passages in the Georgics with those of which they are imitations produces the impression not only of Virgil's immense superiority as a poet over the Alexandrine Metaphrastae, but of the immense superiority of the Latin hexameter, as an organ for expressing the beauty and power of Nature, over the exotic jargon and unmusical jingle which those writers compounded out of their epic studies and their scientific nomenclature. To take one or two instances of Virgil's imitations from these writers:—in the passage Georg. i. 233–246, Virgil reproduces very closely scientific statements of Eratosthenes and Aratus. But of the five lines which follow—

Illic, ut perhibent, aut intempesta silet nox
Semper et obtenta densentur nocte tenebrae,
Aut redit a nobis Aurora diemque reducit;
Nosque ubi primus equis Oriens adflavit anhelis,
Illic sera rubens accendit lumina Vesper,—

where through the evanescent mists of early science we discern the enduring substance of poetic creation, there is no trace in either of the Greek writers. Again, in the passage at i. 410, imitated from Aratus—

Tum liquidas corvi presso ter gutture voces, etc.,—
the mere natural phenomenon is given in greater detail in the original passage; but the lines which communicate to it the touch of tender sympathy—

iuvat imbris actis

Progeniem parvam dulcesque revisere nidos,—

and the following lines—

Haud equidem credo quia sit divinitus illis, etc.,—

which elevate the whole description into the higher air of imaginative contemplation, are entirely Virgil's own. So too in nearly all the indications of stormy or bright weather, whether taken from natural phenomena or the habits of animals, we find in the Latin poet some suggestion of poetical analogy giving new life to the thing described, or some touch of tender feeling, of which his original supplied him with no hint whatever.

For the true poetry of the Georgics—the colour of human and sympathetic feeling, the atmosphere of contemplative ideas, the ethical and national associations with which the subject is surrounded—Virgil owes very little to Greek inspiration. Much of this poetry is the mode in which his own spirit interprets Nature and human life. But much also is due to the genius of his great predecessor in Latin poetry, who, though ‘unnamed,’ is ‘not unowned,’ but felt to be a pervading presence in the thought and feeling, the creative diction and the grander cadences, of the Georgics. Yet this influence is perhaps as potent in the antagonism as in the sympathy which it evokes. Virgil is no mere disciple of Lucretius, either as regards his philosophy or his art. Though his imagination pays homage to that of the older poet; though he acknowledges his contemplative elevation; though he has a strong affinity with the deep humanity of his nature; yet in his profoundest convictions and aspirations he proclaims his revolt from him. The key to the secret of much in the composition of the Georgics,—of the condition of mind out of which this work of genius assumed the shape it has as a great literary possession,—is to be sought in the collision between the force of thought, imagination, and feeling which the active spirit of Lucretius stored up and left behind him as his legacy to the world, and the nature, strongly susceptible indeed, but, at the same time, firm in its own convictions, which first felt the shock of that force, in its attractive, stimulating, and repellent power.
